| Rulings of— | | | Bills— | |
| Amendments— | |
| A member may vary his motion but it must not go beyond the notice of motion originally given .. .. .. | 963 |
| —are allowed to be moved even at the last moment .. | 1171 |
| Difference between the existing conditions of local governments is sufficient ground for an exception in allowing an amendment in favour of a particular part of the country .. .. | 918 |
| That no amendment inconsistent with a decision passed shall be allowed is not and should not be made a hard and fast rule .. | 862, 863 |
| If the same arguments apply to both — then it would be one amendment, but if the merits of the two are different they would be two separate amendments and shall have to be put separately | 84 |
| The rule of the principle of diminishing amendments is that it is not possible to defeat a bill by a series of diminishing proposals in the form of a series of amendments .. .. .. | 186 |
| First Reading— | |
| Question of imposition of a burden on the subject whether as a tax or a cess should be raised at the— .. .. .. .. | 1065 |
| Particular clauses cannot be discussed at the— .. .. | 806 |
| Adoption of the — is equivalent to affirmation of the principle and scope of the bill .. .. .. .. | 186 |
| In deciding the scope and principle of a bill as affirmed at the — the Chair both in the House itself and in select committee should pay due regard to the title of the bill, the conditions of the debate, the points raised at that reading and the suggestions then made and dealt with by the Chair .. .. .. | 186 |
| A new clause cannot be added to a bill on the— .. .. | 324 |
| Council can limit the powers of Government even if the bill passes the —, and the select committee sends it back as it is .. .. | 122 |
| Council having settled the main principle of a bill at—, cannot go beyond that principle but can limit it in select committee and at second reading .. .. .. .. .. | 139, 140 |
| Matters of opinion cannot go into an Act .. .. .. | 1039 |
| No clause can be embodied in—, affecting revenues unless there is a recommendation from the Crown .. .. .. .. | 140 |
| Recommittal— | |
| Reference to merits of a bill or particular clause or clauses not permissible on the motion for—to select committee .. .. | 904 |
| Second reading— | |
| Amendments— | |
| Whether an amendment is one raising a question of principle and therefore not admissible at the second reading is a point of order which it is for the Chair alone to decide .. .. .. | 1089 |
| New principle cannot be attached to a bill at the— .. .. | 140 |
| Select Committee— | |
| A bill cannot be referred back to—, with instructions to publish it in any particular language, nor can the Council impose upon the— an obligation to do so .. .. .. .. .. | 818 |
| ....cannot go any further than the authority which is given by the recommendation of the Crown .. .. .. .. | 857, 858 |
| ....cannot take into consideration any bill other than the one placed before the Council at the first reading .. .. .. | 818 |
| Members when appointed to— cannot resign in favour of others unless they move an amendment to that effect .. .. .. | 547 |
| It is not competent for the—to introduce a preamble which does not exist in the bill as introduced .. .. .. .. | 481 |
| Preamble is governed by the enacting parts of a bill and may be amended in the—accordingly .. .. .. .. | 481 |

VI.—DISCUSSION OF MATTERS OF GENERAL PUBLIC INTEREST.

Resolutions by Rao Bahadur S. D. Garud, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that a committee be appointed to consider the question of readjusting the existing division of Khandesh for revenue and judicial purposes."

2. "This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that toll bars on all provincial roads be abolished."

Resolutions by Sardar V. N. Mutalik, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends to Government to be pleased to take steps to finish the work of introducing revision survey settlements in alienated villages which are due for such settlements but in which such settlements are not yet introduced within two years."

2. "This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council to be pleased to issue orders under section 135-A of the Bombay Land Revenue Code exempting all unsurveyed alienated villages from the introduction of record of rights and to issue orders to stop the introduction and to stop the operations where they have been begun, except where the holders of the villages so desire."

3. "This Council recommends to Government to be pleased to introduce legislation, as early as possible, for the amelioration of the condition of the inamdars in the Deccan and in the Karnatic, and for their relief from debts, on the lines of the legislation enacted for the benefit of the Sind Zamindars."

Resolutions by Mr. S. T. Kambli, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends that steps be taken to appoint three probationers to the posts of mamlatdars in the Southern Division of the Bombay Presidency this year from qualified non-Brahmins.

2. "This Council recommends that the sub-inspectors of police in this Presidency should be given an annual increment of Rs. 5 instead of the triennial increment of Rs. 10."

Resolutions by Mr. C. M. Gandhi, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends to Government the desirability of making the Jail Manual and other departmental manuals available to the general public for purchase at reasonable rates."

2. "This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor acting with his Ministers that early steps be taken to establish in Surat a demonstration factory fitted with the most up-to-date machinery and conducted on scientific methods to familiarise the people engaged in the gold thread industry with the use of the up-to-date machinery and of the improved scientific methods by which the industry is carried on in France and other countries of Europe, and that a sum of Rs. 1,00,000 be set apart in the next year's budget for the purpose."

3. "This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that all estimates with regard to expenditure on the Development Scheme should be placed before the Finance Committee at least seven days before any demand is made to the Council for a grant for the same."

Resolutions by Mr. M. A. Havelivala, M.L.C.

1. "That this Council recommends to Government that a committee should be appointed to inquire into the present status of the share bazaar of Bombay and into the alleged huge gambling transactions recently reported and to recommend to Government what action, if any, is necessary that the stock exchange may be put upon such a basis as will effectually stop all further so-called "Corners" resulting as they do in effectually curtailing the flow of investors' capital into the industries of Bombay and tarnishing the fair fame of this great city."

2. "That this Council recommends that Government direct the Dean of the Grant Medical College to admit as second year students of that college all the students who passed the Preliminary Scientific examination of the Bombay University in May 1922 and sought admission into that college and for the purpose of enabling the students to be recommended by the Principal to the university that they may be excused the number of lectures which they have failed to attend owing to their non-admission as such students in June 1922."

Resolution by Mr. G. C. Bhate, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends that the Government should see its way to introduce the following rule in Grant-in-aid Code that in all schools and colleges which receive Government aid in any form whatsoever the attendance by students to any class of special religious instruction, which the parents or guardians of such students shall not have sanctioned, would be perfectly voluntary and that no payment in grant-in-aid should be made to any institution which will contravene the provisions of this rule."

Resolutions by Mr. S. K. Bole, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends that a committee be appointed by Government to make enquiries into the grievances of the tenants holding lands under the khoti system in the Ratnagiri and Kolaba districts."

2. "This Council recommends that members of non-Brahmin backward and depressed classes, and those of Lingayat, Jain and Mahomedan communities who have passed the test for qualifying themselves for the post of mamlatdars shall preferably and in the first instance be appointed when such are available in filling up vacancies occurring hereafter in each of the Central and Southern Divisions of this Presidency until the number of such non-Brahmin mamlatdars in each of the divisions reaches the proportion of 60 per cent. of the total number of mamlatdars for each of the divisions."

3. "This Council recommends that members of the non-Brahmin backward and depressed classes and those of Lingayat, Jain and Mahomedan communities who hold third year Government vernacular training college certificate and have put in a service in the teaching line for a period of not less than five years shall be preferably in the first instance when available appointed to the post of assistant deputy educational inspector while filling up vacancies occurring hereafter in the Central and Southern Divisions until the number of such non-Brahmin assistant deputies reaches the proportion of 75 per cent. of the total number or cadre of assistant deputies in each of these divisions."

Resolution by Dr. K. E. Dadachanji, M.L.C.

1. "That in view of the heavy mortality from epidemic diseases in the province, this Council recommends the Government to appoint a committee to inquire into the sanitary conditions of the municipal and rural areas, and to draw up a comprehensive scheme of sanitation and medical relief in both the areas, so as to reduce the heavy mortality from plague, cholera, influenza, malaria and other epidemics in the province."

Resolutions by Mr. A. N. Surve, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends to Government to appoint a committee, consisting of officials and non-officials, with a majority of the latter, to inquire into the grievances of the prisoners in the Visapur Jail, and to suggest ways and means to remove them."

2. "This Council recommends to Government to popularise the use of Brunton's lancet and to make it easily accessible in the districts and to adopt such other measures as may be necessary to check the alarming mortality due to snake-bites."

3. "This Council recommends to Government to adopt effective measures to prevent destruction of human life and damage to crops caused by wild animals, by making adequate provision to give rewards for their destruction and deputing police parties to shoot them."

Resolutions by Rao Bahadur R. M. Nilkanth, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends to Government that the practice of touring officers hiring carts and buying provisions through officers and servants of Government be discontinued."

2. "This Council recommends to Government that the rates for hire of carts and prices of provisions to be paid by touring officers should not be fixed by Government but should be settled by contract in each case."

Resolutions by Mr. B. V. Jadhav, M.L.C.

1. "That in order to give special encouragement to the non-Brahmin backward communities, including the Marathas and the depressed classes, this Council recommends to Government to appoint every year in the Central and Southern Divisions ten probationary mamlatdars from the graduates and under-graduates of these communities as was done in the case of the Mahomedans of Sind."

2. "That for the purpose of reducing the excessively high proportion of the advanced communities among the trained vernacular teachers in the Central and Southern Divisions, this Council recommends to Government to pass an order to give, during the next ten years, preference to the duly qualified candidates belonging to the non-Brahmin backward communities including the Marathas and the depressed classes at the time of admitting students to the various classes of the training institutions for vernacular teachers in the two divisions."

3. "That for the purpose of reducing the excessively high proportion of the advanced communities among the untrained vernacular teachers in the Central and Southern Divisions, this Council requests Government to pass an order to give, during the next ten years, preference to the duly qualified candidates belonging to the non-Brahmin backward communities including the Marathas and the depressed classes at the time of making temporary and permanent appointments in the two divisions."

Resolution by Rao Saheb P. G. Halkatti, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends that the Government of Bombay should every year make provision in the budget for a sufficient amount for giving at least fifty scholarships to students going to receive education in agricultural, industrial and such other subjects in and out of British India."

Resolution by Mr. J. Addyman, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that, in view of the new Factory Act which came into force on July 1st, 1922, immediate steps be taken to establish an efficient Factory Inspectors Department, separate from the Boiler and Smoke Nuisances Department; and that the staff should include, in addition to a chief factory inspector, superintending inspectors, inspectors and inspectors' assistants, both men and women, European and Indian."

Resolution by Dr. S. S. Batliwala, M.L.C.

1. "That this Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that all proposals for increasing the assessment of land revenue brought up before the Governor in Council be subject in future to a discussion of the same by the Legislative Council and the recommendations of the Council as a result of the discussion be the guiding factor in the revision of the asessment of the land revenue."

Resolutions by Mr. G. B. Trivedi, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends to the Government that they should not remove the name of any Indian manufacturer or firm from the list of their suppliers on account of political views or for reasons unconnected with the intrinsic merit of the goods supplied such as quality, prices or delivery."

2. "This Council recommends to the Government that they should not reduce the present rate of grant-in-aid to secondary schools."

3. "This Council recommends to the Government that they should increase their grant-in-aid to secondary schools for girls from one-third to one-half of the expenditure."

4. "This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that a committee of two officials and four non-official members of this Council be appointed to inquire into the complaints recently made by Messrs. Bhojraj, Werhomal and others regarding the administration of the Visapur Jail."

5. "This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that the rules regarding the treatment of political prisoners which are now being considered by Government, be placed on the Council table before they are finally adopted."

Resolutions by Mr. Kanji Dwarkadas, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends to Government to appoint a committee of officials and non-officials with a non-official majority, to enquire into the condition of labourers working in docks, as regards their condition of services, housing accommodation, education and their general economic position."

2. "This Council recommends to the Governor in Council that a committee be appointed to enquire into and report on the facilities that at present exist for the recreation—including open air and indoor—for the working classes in the city of Bombay and what steps should be taken to make adequate provision for them."

Resolutions by Mr. Ibrahim S. Haji, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends to Government that the principle of communal representation as prevailing in Sind be extended to the Mahomedans and the Marathas and the depressed classes in the municipalities and the district local boards of the Presidency proper."

2. "This Council recommends to Government that those officers of the Educational Department whose services were confirmed prior to the 21st August 1921 be exempted from the provisions of paragraph 3 of Government Order No. 4673, dated the 21st August 1921."

Resolution by Rao Saheb Dadubhai P. Desai, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends to the Government to undertake the construction of big irrigation works in Gujarat."

Resolutions by Mr. S. P. Ligade, M.L.C.

1. "That for the purpose of reducing the excessively high proportion of the advanced communities among the trained vernacular teachers in the Central and Southern Divisions, this Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor acting with his Ministers to pass an order to give, during the next ten years, preference to the duly qualified candidates belonging to the non-Brahmin backward communities including the Marathas and the depressed classes at the time of admitting students to the various classes of the training institutes for vernacular teachers in the two divisions."

2. "That for the purpose of reducing the excessively high proportion of the advanced communities among the untrained vernacular teachers in the Central and Southern Divisions, this Council requests His Excellency the Governor acting with his Ministers to pass an order to give, during the next ten years, preference to the duly qualified candidates belonging to the non-Brahmin backward communities including the Marathas and the Depressed classes at the time of making temporary and permanent appointments in the two divisions."

3. "That this Council recommends the Government to fix a proper and definite proportion of admission to the vernacular training schools and colleges in the case of the Maratha and other backward class students."

Resolutions by Rao Bahadur R. R. Kale, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends to the Government that in view of the uncertain and unsettled state of law relating to public charitable and religious trusts and endowments (existing and future) in this Presidency and in view of the need of ensuring proper and necessary safeguards to protect such trusts and endowments, the Government should at an early date introduce legislation making provision for :—

(a) the registration of existing and future endowments and trusts declared for public charitable and religious purposes ;

(b) the submission of audited accounts of such trusts ;

(c) making the trustees or managers of such trusts liable in the same manner as trustees under the Trust Act of 1882 ;

(d) securing the trust properties and incomes thereof to the objects of the trusts ;

(e) the creation of district or other boards for the control and supervision of such trusts and endowments ;

(f) and for such other matters as may be necessary for preventing the alienations and misapplication of such properties."

2. "This Council recommends to the Government that it will be pleased to appoint a standing committee of the members of this Council consisting of officials and non-officials for the purpose of scrutinising and approving the rules and regulations made from time to time under the rule-making powers conferred upon the Governor in Council by the legislature in the various enactments passed by it, before they are finally sanctioned and have the force of law."

3. "This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor of Bombay acting with Ministers that none of the existing grants-in-aid to secondary schools be reduced on any account."

4. "In view of the hardship caused to the cultivating classes and the increase in the revenue courts of the work which properly belongs to the civil courts, this Council recommends to Government that the provisions of section 86 of the Land Revenue Code be so amended as to make it discretionary with the Collector to grant assistance for the recovery of land revenue only."

Resolutions by Rao Saheb Harilal D. Desai, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends that Government be pleased to rule that in municipal districts where by-laws have been framed with the sanction of Government under section 48, clauses (n), (o), (p), (r) and (s) of the Bombay District Municipal Act III of 1901, the control of the revenue authorities under the Land Revenue Code and the rules thereunder in so far as building operations are concerned should be withdrawn as superfluous."

2. "This Council recommends to Government that immediate effect be given to the orders of the Government of India in respect of appointing the requisite proportion of Indians to superior posts ordinarily held by members of the Indian Civil Service."

Resolution by Rao Bahadur D. A. Vichare, M.L.C.

1. "This Council recommends to Government that the right of ownership of reserved trees such as teak, sandal, etc., that are situated on the land for which the owner pays assessment shall be conceded to the owner unconditionally even if such trees be situated within the forest demarcation."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. Are any new members desirous of taking their seats?

The following members then made the prescribed oath of allegiance to His Majesty the King Emperor and took their seats in the Council:—

Major-General W. E. Jennings.
Mr. O. Rothfeld.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Questions.

PROFESSOR OF CLINICAL MEDICINE.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA (Bombay City, North): (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to a leading article in the "British Medical Journal" of 3rd June 1922, pages 892-893, entitled "A Broken Undertaking" and commented on in the Pioneer of the 28th June 1922, copies of which are attached herein?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that Professor Hamilton Fairley who was brought out from Australia to Bombay as a special Professor in Clinical Medicine in the Tropical School of Medicine which was contemplated to be started in Bombay and for which a yearly donation of one lac was promised by Sir D. J. Tata, has been served with a notice dispensing with his services from 31st October 1922?

(c) If so, will Government be pleased to give reasons for the same?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Yes. Owing to the financial situation it is not possible for Government to proceed with the School of Tropical Medicine as was originally contemplated. Formal notice in accordance with the terms of employment laid down by this Government has been given to Professor Fairley as stated in the question. Whilst this Government can accept no legal liability for the action they have been reluctantly compelled to take, they fully recognise that hardship has been caused to Professor Fairley and his further employment is at present under consideration.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA: Are Government aware that the advertisement given in foreign papers by the agents of the Government of Bombay in London gave the applicants for the post to understand that the post was for five years certain?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: That is not according to the communication of this Government.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA: If it is not in accordance with the communication from this Government, and if the agent of the Government had advertised in the manner I have said, are not Government liable?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The question is under consideration.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA: Have Government decided by this time to employ Professor Fairley for certain?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Not yet.

INDOOR PATIENTS IN THE J. J. HOSPITAL.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA (Bombay City, North): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the J. J. Hospital authorities with a view to retrench their expenses on account of financial stringency, have reduced the number of patients in the hospital and have asked a very large number to leave the hospital ? If so, how many patients were asked to go, and whether two of the number died in the compound of the hospital ?

(b) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table any orders they may have issued to the J. J. Hospital authorities regarding the above matter ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : Attention is invited to the Press Note* issued on the subject on 19th August 1922, a copy of which is placed on the table.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA : Is it not a fact that Colonel Carter began discharging the patients from the hospital long before the reply from the Government was due to him ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : I cannot give any further information than what is contained in the answer given.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA : Has Colonel Carter given any explanation about his premature action ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : I want notice of that question.

Mr. KANJI DWARKADAS : Are Government satisfied with the action taken by Colonel Carter in the matter ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : The honourable member asks Government to express an opinion and not information.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Anything may be an opinion ; but this is a question of fact. You may say " I decline to answer " because the honourable member is in your view asking for an opinion ; but you cannot say that the question is inadmissible ; so far as I am concerned I cannot say that it is inadmissible.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : This is practically asking for opinion and I decline to answer.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District) : Was a memorandum from the Finance Department sent to the Senior Medical Officer of the J. J. Hospital saying that he will be personally held responsible for exceeding the budget grant ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : A supplementary question must arise out of the original question and the answer. Now the answer refers to the Government Press Note. I do not know what that Press Note contains. But if the Press Note does contain something relating to the matter to which you refer, then your question will be in order.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : Yes, Sir, it does relate to the original matter. I want to know whether it is not a fact that a memorandum from the Finance Department was sent to the Senior Medical Officer of the J. J. Hospital saying that he will be personally held responsible if he exceeds the budget grant.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : I want notice of the question.

Mr. S. K. BOLE (Bombay City, North) : May I know who is responsible for sending the retrenchment order to the hospital authorities ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : The order was meant for all senior medical officers and it was sent by the office.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District) : Did not Government say in the Press Note that the order was not meant for the J. J. Hospital authorities ?

( Mr. Bole rose at the same time. )

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : One at a time, please.

---

* Kept in Secretary's office.

Mr. S. K. BOLE : Who is responsible for sending the order of retrenchment which was not meant for the J. J. Hospital authorities ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : That has been already answered.

Mr. S. K. BOLE : No, Sir. That was in regard to some other point, and it was not a direct answer to this question.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Some answer has been given. If you are not satisfied with it you have got your remedy by raising a debate on the proper occasion.

Mr. KANJI DWARKADAS : Did the authorities of the J. J. Hospital write back to the Government saying that there was a mistake in sending them the circular ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : No.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA (Karachi City) : Was there any consultation in the Government House, before this order was sent, between the Ministers and Members of the Executive Council concerned ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That question is out of order. It is trying to peep into domestic matters.

CHIPLUN-ULWA RAILWAY.

Mr. G. C. BHATE (Kolaba District) : Will Government be pleased to state the progress of the survey of the Chiplun-Ulwa in the Kolaba District ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : The Agent, Madras and Southern Maratha Railway Company, reports that the field work of the survey is completed and that the plans, estimates and reports relating thereto will be completed by the end of October next.

DHARAMTAR-MAHABLESHWAR ROAD.

* Mr. G. C. BHATE (Kolaba District) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that there are no culverts and irrigation drains on the Dharamtar-Mahableshwar road between 15 and 25 miles ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : (a) There are no culverts but there are 18 slab drains, one bridge and one causeway.

PAY OF TEACHERS IN THE SUBORDINATE EDUCATIONAL SERVICE.

* Sardar M. M. BIRADAR (Southern Division) : Will Government be pleased to state the net amount spent in 1914 on the item of pay of the teachers in the subordinate educational service and what will be the expenditure on the same item in 1922 after the revision of their pay has been granted ?

| | Rs. |
|---|---|
| 1913-1914 .. .. .. | 4,09,000 |
| 1921-1922 .. .. .. | 7,63,000 |

The figures of personnel for the same years are also given below :—

| 1913-1914 .. .. .. | 433 |
| 1921-1922 .. .. .. | 529 |

* This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

LEASING OF CHAWLS TO MILLOWNERS.

Mr. S. K. BOLE (Bombay City, North): Will the Government be pleased to state whether they have been informed of the desire of certain millowners that chawls built by the Development Directorate should be leased to the millowners ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL H. SETALVAD : Yes, in one case.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North) : Is it the intention of Government to lease these chawls to millowners ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD : It is suggesting action.

INFANT CLASSES IN MUNICIPAL AND LOCAL BOARD SCHOOLS.

* Rao Bahadur G. K. CHITALE (Ahmednagar District): Will Government be pleased to supply the following information :—

(1) Number of boys and girls in the infant classes in every municipal town (in the Presidency proper) on 31st March 1915.

Number promoted to :—
1st standard in 1916.
2nd standard in 1917.
3rd standard in 1918.
4th standard in 1919.

(2) Number of boys and girls in the local board vernacular schools in every district (in the Presidency proper) on 31st March 1915.

Number promoted to :—
1st standard in 1916.
2nd standard in 1917.
3rd standard in 1918.
4th standard in 1919.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : Statements† furnishing the information required are laid on the Table.

BOMBAY MEDICAL SERVICE.

*Khan Bahadur D. B. COOPER (Satara District) : Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that some of the 1st grade men of the Bombay Medical Service who had to revert from acting Civil Surgeoncies and who had been sub. pro-tem. senior Assistant Surgeons drawing Rs. 360 per mensem according to the old scale of pay, after reversion are given only Rs. 280 as their present starting pay, when the new revision of pay, meant to give relief to the Civil Assistant Surgeons, came into force, and if so whether the Government intend to take any action to remove the hardship ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : Certain Provincial Medical Officers were temporarily drawing higher pay than that of their permanent grades as Acting Civil Surgeons or sub. pro-tem. senior Assistant Surgeons solely owing to the absence of Indian Medical Service Officers on war service. Their starting pay on reversion in the revised scale has been fixed in accordance with the pay of their permanent grades in the service. Government do not therefore propose to take any action in the matter.

* This question was asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

† Kept in Secretary's office.

ROAD SIDE TREES.

*Khan Bahadur D. B. COOPER (Satara District): Is Government aware of the fact that during the recent years branches of the road-side trees giving shade to the users of the provincial roads in the districts of Poona and Satara are annually being cut off for the supply of fuel to the steam rollers working on these roads, thereby greatly decreasing the value and utility of these trees, which have been brought up with great care during the past several decades, and if so, do they intend to take any action to stop the trees being further damaged ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Yes. Fuel obtained from lopping branches of trees overhanging the roads and from felling of dead and withered trees is being used for working steam road rollers in the Satara District. Such cutting off is, however, required to remove branches overhanging the road and adjoining fields as they would otherwise obstruct traffic and be a source of danger to vehicles, etc., or would retard cultivation where they overhang cultivated fields. In the Poona District the branches are sold and are not made use of as fuel for steam road rollers. Government do not intend to stop this practice as the disfigurement of the road-side trees is purely temporary since new growth rapidly replaces the loppings.

BOMBAY EDUCATIONAL SERVICE.

* Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI (Bombay City, South): Will the Government be pleased to state :—

(a) If the Bombay Educational Service scheme was sanctioned by the Secretary of State in November 1919 ?

(b) If the officers concerned had an understanding from the Director of Public Instruction that effect will be given to the Indian Educational Service scheme from 1st December 1919 ?

(c) Whether the reorganisation of the deputy collectors took effect from the 1st December 1919, Public Works Department Provincial Service from 1st February 1920, and that of the mamlatdars though promised from 1st March 1921, took effect from 1st March 1920 ?

(d) If such be the case, why is the Provincial Service of the Educational Department treated differently and given effect to from 1st April 1921, though the Government of India announced in 1917 their intention to consider the recommendations of the Public Services Commission in connection with the Educational Department prior to their recommendations in connection with other departments ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) No. The Secretary of State for India merely sanctioned the minimum and maximum pay suggested by the Government of India for the Provincial Educational Service and left it to each local Government to settle the details of the scheme including the fixing of the date of introduction of the new scale that might be sanctioned by it.

(b) If, as is presumed, the question refers to the Bombay Educational Service, the answer is in the negative.

(c) Yes. It is observed that in the case of mamlatdars there was no intention to sanction the revision from 1st March 1921.

* This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

(d) Attention is invited to the reply given to part (a) of the question asked by Rao Saheb P. G. Halkatti (Bijapur District) at the meeting of the Legislative Council held on 10th March 1922.

CASES TRIED BY HONORARY MAGISTRATES IN BOMBAY.

*Mr. D. B. DALAL (Panch Mahals District): Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement of the cases with their results instituted during the quinquennium ending 1920 before the stipendiary and honorary magistrates in the city of Bombay under the Bombay C. P. C. A. Act ? Will Government be pleased to state whether the provisions of the Act are being enforced systematically in the other parts of the Presidency and, if so, with what results ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : A statement ‡ showing the number of cases dealt with under the Act in all places in the Presidency to which the Act has been extended, is placed on the table.

BROACH-JAMBUSAR RAILWAY.

† Sardar Khan Bahadur ADARJEE M. DALAL (Broach District) : Are Government aware that on the Broach-Jambusar Railway the passengers are put to great hardship for want of accommodation of waiting sheds on all the stations on the line and especially at Vejalpore, Amod and Jambusar stations on which there is a large rush of passengers and the passenger traffic is very considerable ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : The Agent, Bombay Baroda and Central India Railway Company, reports that there are 3rd class waiting sheds at stations on the Broach-Jambusar Railway, their size being 23′ × 14′. The daily average number of outward passengers by each train is—

|---|---|
| Vejalpore .. .. .. .. | 72 |
| Amod .. .. .. .. | 92 |
| Jambusar .. .. .. .. | 92 |

The Agent also states that there are many more important stations than the ones on this railway that need larger waiting sheds and which have to wait until funds permit their extension.

TANKS OF TATA HYDRO-ELECTRIC COMPANY.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the tanks of the Tata-Hydro-Electric Company, near Lonavla and Khandala are leaky ?

(b) that either owing to the existence of the tanks or owing to the leakage of water therefrom the above two towns and the surrounding locality have become malarious and unhealthy, and

(c) that the medical aid at the above two places is quite insufficient to cope with the increased number of cases.

(d) If the reply to the above be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state what steps they have taken or intend to take to remove the general unhealthiness in the area affected ?

* This question was asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

† This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

‡ Kept in Secretary's office.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : (a) Yes.

(b) The Khandala-Lonavla area has not become malarious as a result of the hydro-electric works. But leakage has caused an extension of the malaria season in that area.

(c) No such complaint has been received by Government.

(d) When the prevalence of malaria at Lonavla and Khandala was brought to the notice of Government a committee with the Director of Public Health and the Sanitary Engineer to Government as members was appointed to investigate the whole question. This committee submitted to Government with their opinions ten drainage schemes prepared by the Engineer of the Tata Hydro-Electric Power Supply Company, Limited, with the object of preventing the formation of swamps and carrying of all surplus water through natural nullahs to the edge of the ghats. The committee also made certain recommendations. The schemes with the suggestions and recommendations of the committee have been approved, and the Collector of Poona has been directed to see that they are carried out as early as possible by the Tata Company in consultation with the Sanitary Engineer to Government.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : May I know how many tanks are leaky ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : I want notice of that question.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : May I know the increased amount of malaria cases due to leakage ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : It is hardly possible for me to carry all these figures in my head.

TEMPORARY AND PROVISIONAL ALLOWANCES.

*Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District) : Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) Whether in the last budget a provision was made for temporary and provisional allowances to assistant masters and assistant deputy educational inspectors ?

(b) If so, how much of this amount was spent in giving these allowances and how much of it was saved ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : (a) A provision of Rs. 1,16,000 was made in 1920-1921 for the purpose referred to.

(b) The amount spent was Rs. 91,000 the balance being saved.

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.

† Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI (Ahmedabad City) : Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) the regulation distance which a broad gauge railway is bound to maintain between two railway lines in order to prevent accidents during the crossing of trains ?

(b) whether the distance between the double lines between Ahmedabad and Barejdi is according to the regulation or less ? If less, by how much ?

(c) whether there are other sections of the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway which offend against this regulation ? If so, which ?

(d) whether they are aware that very serious accidents to human life have occurred lately between Ahmedabad and Barejdi during the crossing of trains at night ?

* This question was asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

† This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

(e) whether any steps have been taken to enforce the regulation about distance between two rail roads on railway administrations in the Presidency wherever there are double lines ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : (a) Minimum distance apart of two parallel lines of railway is 14 feet—centre to centre of track. This distance is increased on curves as required according to the radius of the curve by distances varying from 9 inches for a 1 deg. (5,730 feet radius) curve, 13 inches for a 2 deg. (2,865 feet radius) curve and so on—up to 36 inches for a 10 deg. (573 feet radius) curve. Allowance is also made for water columns, signal posts and columns of overbridges so that the outermost edge on portion is not within 7 feet distance of centre of track. (Track is 5' 6" from inner edge to inner edge of rail heads).

(b) The distance between the double line Ahmedabad to Barejdi is in places less than this standard distance and varies from 13 feet 2 inches to 12 feet—the infringement therefore varies from 10 inches to 2 feet. It may be mentioned here that when the line was built the standard distance at the time was laid down as 12 feet and several lines in India should have this 12 feet distance in old station yards.

(c) There are small lengths of infringements between :—

Colaba and Marine Lines.
Charni Road and Santa Cruz.
Vile-Parle and Malad.
Kandivlee and Bassein Road.
Nalla-Sopara and Virar.

(d) The following is a list of accidents :—

| Date. | Between or at Stations. | Accident. | Slight, serious or fatal. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 5th April 1922 .. | Barejdi .. | Two passengers injured .. | 1 Fatal.1 Serious. |
| 16th April 1922 .. | Barejdi .. | One passenger injured .. | Slight. |
| 27th April 1922 .. | Ahmedabad and Barejdi . | One III Class passenger injured. | Slight. |
| 7th June 1922 .. | Ahmedabad and Barejdi . | Three III Class passengers injured. | 2 Serious.1 Slight. |
| 13th June 1922 .. | Barejdi Yard .. | Three III Class passengers injured. | 2 Serious.1 Slight. |
| 15th June 1922 .. | Vatva and Barejdi .. | Four III Class passengers injured. | Serious. |

(e) Steps are taken by the Railway on their own initiative as opportunities arise and funds permit to remedy these infringements. Notice is also taken of them by the Senior Government Inspectors at their periodical and annual inspections and the special attention of the railway administrations drawn to such as are the more dangerous and the more immediately remediable.

No new works are passed for public traffic unless the regulation distance between tracks is observed. It should be understood that the work of respacing tracks involves the entire rearrangement of lines, the rebuilding to a large extent of platforms and adjacent buildings in station yards and between stations the extension or widening of bridges. Therefore the opportunities afforded by the work of relaying rails, regirdering bridges, remodelling and enlarging stations, have to be awaited and in cases where heavy work is involved the expense of rebuilding for the sake of respacing tracks only would of course be prohibitive.

MAHOMEDAN SCHOLARS IN GOVERNMENT SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

*Mr. KANJI DWARKADAS: Will the Government be pleased to give the number of Mahomedan students receiving scholarships from the Government in the—

(a) Primary Schools,

(b) Secondary and High Schools and in different parts of the Presidency ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The accompanying statement ‡ gives the information required.

PROBATIONERS IN THE BOMBAY PORT TRUST.

†Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) How many probationers in the docks and in the Secretary's office of the Bombay Port Trust have been recently brought out from England ?

(b) What are their qualifications ?

(c) What qualifications are required for Indian probationers of the same class ?

(d) Is there any difference in the qualifications of Indian and non-Indian probationers ?

(e) Are there any printed regulations laying down the qualifications of these Indian and European officers ? If yes, will a copy thereof be made available for the information of the Council ?

(f) If not, will Government be pleased to state what the difference is ? and (g) Will Government be pleased to state why is such a difference kept ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: (a) One European probationer for the docks department and one for the Secretary's office have been engaged in England during the past year. One Indian probationer with English university education has been engaged in the same year for the Secretary's office.

(b) Good educational qualifications, supported (in the case of European probationers) by approved service in the war.

(c) English university or technical training.

(d), (f) and (g) No.

(e) No. The qualifications are decided by the trustees when applications are invited, having regard to the duties for which the probationer is required.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: You say, there is no difference between the qualifications for Indian probationers and non-Indian probationers. In your answer to question (d) you say "Good educational qualifications". Does it mean university education or something different ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: Good educational qualifications include university qualifications.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: Have these probationers who have been appointed had any good university training ?

* This question was asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

† This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

‡ Vide Appendix A.

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD : I require notice of that question.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : There is the question, " Is there any difference in the qualifications of Indian and non-Indian probationers ? "

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD : The answer is there. The answer is in the negative.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : My question is, is there any difference in the qualifications of Indian and European probationers ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD : The answer has been given, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The original questions on the subject are (d), (f) and (g) of Mr. Gandhi, and the Honourable the General Member's answer is " No ".

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : But, Sir, (b) and (c) of the reply show that there is a difference.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That is an argument. You may draw any inference you like and, on a proper occasion, raise a debate. But there is the answer. It is no use repeating a question when an answer is given.

FREE QUARTERS TO OFFICERS OF BOMBAY PORT TRUST.

* Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City) : Will Government be pleased to state if—

(a) Any officers of the Bombay Port Trust drawing Rs. 500 or more are supplied with quarters ?

(b) If so, how many ?

(c) How many of them are Indians ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD : Yes.

(b) 49, of whom 23 are provided with free quarters and 26 pay rent at 10 per cent. of salary and lose their house allowance.

(c) One provided with free quarters.

FREE QUARTERS TO CLERKS IN THE BOMBAY PORT TRUST.

* Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City) : Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) The total number of clerks in the employ of the Bombay Port Trust drawing salaries between Rs. 50 and Rs. 250 per mensem ?

(b) Have any of these been given quarters, or given house rent allowance ? if so, how many ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD : (a) 1,581.

(b) Yes ; 49 have been provided with quarters and 286 are drawing house allowance.

FREE QUARTERS TO MENIAL SERVANTS AND LABOURERS OF THE BOMBAY PORT TRUST.

* Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City) : Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) The total number of menial servants and labourers employed by the Bombay Port Trust ?

(b) Have any of these been provided with quarters ? If, so, how many ; if not, why not ?

* These questions were asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when ad interm replies were given.

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: (a) Approximately 11,700.

(b) 5,100.

UP-KEEP OF MOTOR CARS SUPPLIED TO OFFICERS OF THE BOMBAY PORT TRUST.

* Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) The total expense of the up-keep of 17 motor cars supplied by the Bombay Port Trust to its several officers ?

(b) Do Government pay for the up-keep of the motor cars used for official purposes by their officers of other departments ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: (a) The total expenditure during the year 1921-22 amounted to Rs. 61,094-14-11.

(b) This has already been replied to.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. V. R. GUPTE (Poona City): (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if they have considered the question of attaching standing committees to Government departments as recommended by the Joint Select Parliamentary Committee on the Government of India Bill, 1919, in paragraph 10 of their report ?

(b) If so, with what result ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: The Joint Committee recommended the desirability of attaching standing committees to various departments for the consideration of His Excellency the Governor. His Excellency the Governor came to the conclusion that it was undesirable to create such standing committees for the present.

CONFERENCE OF LIBERALS.

Mr. V. R. GUPTE (Poona City): (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if the Indian members of the Executive Council took part in the proceedings of the recent conference of Liberals held in Bombay early in May last with the express consent of the Government ?

(b) If not, is it intended to extend the same latitude to all Government servants without distinction ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: (a) Individual Members of the Executive Council are bound by the accepted principle of joint responsibility.

(b) The question does not arise.

MOVE TO MAHABLESHWAR.

Mr. V. R. GUPTE (Poona City): Will the Government be pleased to state the amount of expenditure out of public revenues on account of their last move to Mahableshwar ?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: A reference is requested to the answer to the question by Mr. B. G. Pahalajani.

RETRENCHMENT COMMITTEE.

Mr. V. R. GUPTE (Poona City): Will the Government be pleased to state the progress which the Retrenchment Committee has made with its work and when its report is expected ?

* This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: The committee has already submitted proposals to Government regarding the Bombay Secretariat, the Police, Revenue, Judicial and Educational Departments and travelling and other allowances. Government are unable to say when the committee will send its final report as this must depend on the committee itself.

EDUCATIONAL GRANTS TO MUNICIPALITIES.

Mr. V. R. GUPTE (Poona City): (a) Will the Government be pleased to mention the names of municipalities that have so far come forward to avail themselves of their offer of a two-thirds grant for the purpose of introducing compulsory primary education within their limits?

(b) If the answer to (a) is in the negative, will they be pleased to state if they have enquired into the reasons of their unwillingness to do so?

(c) If so, with what results?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) to (c) Enquiries are being made.

AYURVEDIC MEDICINES.

Mr. V. R. GUPTE (Poona City): Will the Government be pleased to state if a member of the Indian Medical Service has been placed on special duty for the purpose of investigating the possibilities of the Ayurvedic and other indigenous systems of medicine, as promised in the last September session of the Council?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: No.

ADMISSION TO GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI (Bombay City): Is Government aware that about 40 students, who have passed the Preliminary Scientific Examination, have been refused admission to the second year in the Grant Medical College? If so, will Government be pleased to state whether students were informed in due time regarding restriction of admission to the college? If so, when; if not, why?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Yes. The difficulty about admissions to the Grant Medical College has been generally known to the students for the last two years.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI: Was the difficulty made known by some authoritative letters sent by the principal of the college?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: It has been published in the press for a long time.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI: What press?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The public press.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI: In how many papers was it published?

The Honousable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: I believe it was published in all the papers.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI: Was it after the refusal of admission or before?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Before.

ANGLO-URDU SCOOL AT NASIK.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI (Bombay City): Is Government aware of the urgent demand of an Anglo-Urdu School at Nasik? If so, will Government be pleased to explain why the Anglo-Marathi middle school for girls was opened when there was already an aided girls' school?

The Honourable Mr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Government are aware of the demand for an Anglo-Urdu school but on account of financial stringency the matter has had to be postponed. Enquiries are being made with regard to the Anglo-Marathi middle school for girls.

HEAD MASTER: URDU CLASS.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI (Bombay City): Will Government be pleased to state —

(a) whether or not the principal P. R. Training College, Ahmedabad, had proposed to have the post of the head master. Urdu class, as belonging to the Bombay Educational Service essentially, when he submitted the proposals for the opening of the third year class in 1920 ?

(b) whether the Educational Inspector, Northern Division, while forwarding this proposal had suggested the inclusion of the post in subordinate Educational Service as a temporary measure being fully apprehensive of its early development into an independent college as no retrenchment policy was then foreshadowed by him ?

(c) Is it not that the retrenchment policy has set in and in view of the recent Government Resolution on the Urdu class at Poona and Ahmedabad the development of the classes into colleges will be abnormally delayed for a decade at least ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) and (b) The answer to these parts is in the affirmative.

(c) From the Government Resolution referred to it will be seen that Government have decided that there is no need at present for more than one full Urdu Training College and that such a college should be located at Poona which is more convenient and central, and the possibility of hiring suitable buildings in Poona for the proposed college is being considered. It is not possible, however, to say when the college can be started.

URDU TRAINING CLASSES.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI (Bombay City): (a) Will Government be pleased to state if the pay of some of the members of the Urdu staff of Urdu training classes had been revised as per Government Resolution, Educational Department, No. 737 of 15th November 1921 ?

(b) If so, then why the pay of the remaining members of the staff was not revised ?

(c) Did the said resolution suggest any exclusion of any of these posts directly or indirectly ?

(d) Is it not expressly put that men getting certain amount before March 1921 should get such and such an amount after 1st March 1921 ?

(e) What members of the Urdu staff would have been benefited under this ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) to (e) The Government Resolution quoted does not apply to the graduate and undergraduate staff of the training classes referred to, which has hitherto been treated as special and outside the cadre of secondary teachers. The question of bringing the staff under the operation of the resolution is under consideration.

DUTY ALLOWANCE TO HEAD MASTERS.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI (Bombay City): (a) Is it a fact that duty allowance is granted to the head masters of the training schools and classes ?

(b) Is this granted to the head master, Urdu training class, Hubli ?

(c) If so, why are the head masters of the Urdu training class at Poona and Ahmedabad only not given the benefit of this allowance ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : (a), (b) and (c) A duty allowance of 20 per cent. of pay and not exceeding Rs. 30 per mensem has recently been sanctioned for the posts of headmasters of the District Training Schools. The question of the grant of a similar allowance to headmasters of the Urdu training classes in Hubli, Poona and Ahmedabad is under consideration.

HEADS OF VERNACULAR TRAINING INSTITUTIONS.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI (Bombay City) : Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) whether the posts of the heads of the vernacular training institutions teaching the full three years' course are considered superior to the posts of the district deputy educational inspectors by the Educational Department ?

(b) If so, why the same principle is not applied in the case of the head master, Urdu training class; Ahmedabad, and the divisional deputy inspectors for Urdu schools who are all now classed in the Bombay Educational Service ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : Attention is invited to the reply given at the last session to a similar question put by Khan Saheb A. M. Mansuri.

MAHOMEDANS IN THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION'S OFFICE.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI (Bombay City) : Is Government aware that there is not a single Mahomedan officer in the office of the Director of Public Instruction either as a superintendent or assistant director ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : Yes. None of the three posts (two of Superintendent and one of Assistant Director of Public Instruction) referred to is at present held by a Mahomedan.

SCHOLARSHIPS FROM SIR MAHOMED YUSUF'S CHARITABLE ENDOWMENT FUND.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI (Bombay City) : Will Government be pleased to state whether 22 scholarships from the Sir Mahomed Yusuf's Charitable Endowment Fund are to be awarded to students for studies in Arts only ?

(b) If so, will Government state whether they have considered the claims of students for scholarships for studies in medicine, engineering, commerce, economics, veterinary and law ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : (a) Yes.

(b) No.

GRANT TO BHANDARKAR INSTITUTE.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI (Bombay City) : Will Government be pleased to state the following—

(a) the terms and conditions on which Rs. 6,000 were given to the Bhandarkar Institute, Poona, for the projected edition of the Mahabharata ?

(b) for how many years this work has been going on, and how long it is likely to go on ?

(c) for how many years past Government have paid such amount ?

(d) Do Govenrment intend to continue giving this grant of Rs. 6,000 every year till the work is completed ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : (a) An annual grant equal to one-third of the expenditure but not exceeding Rs. 6,000 has been sanctioned. No conditions have been attached to the grant.

(b) The work has been going on since 1919 and is expected to take about 13 years more.

(c) The grant was paid for the first time last year.

(d) Yes.

CHARLOTTE LAKE AT MATHERAN.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA (Bombay City): Is it a fact that this year there was a shortage of water in Charlotte lake at Matheran owing to the dam not having been closed till the 12th of October last thus preventing the water from flowing over the dam and keeping it 6 or 7 feet lower than it ought to have been, and what precaution do Government intend to take to avoid such an occurrence in future ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIK GHULAM HUSSAIN: Yes. There was some shortage of water, but it was unavoidable with the present risky and defective arrangement of the cumbrous wooden sluice gate which could not be opened as usual in the latter half of June last year on account of early rain. This year the gate has already been opened and the bed will be flushed and cleaned and the gate refixed in good time in September. It is also proposed to provide a proper iron sluice gate, with a screw gear arrangement to operate it from the top of the dam, for which plans and estimates are being prepared by the Sanitary Engineer.

NAVALGUND MUNICIPALITY.

Mr. C. C. HULKOTI (Dharwar District): (a) Is it a fact that four municipal councillors at Navalgund resigned their seats by reason of the arrest of a brother councillor ? If so, who are the four members that resigned, and what are the grounds as stated in the resignation ?

(b) Is it a fact that the collection work of license fees was stopped as a protest by other municipal councillors against the action of the sub-inspector ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : The answer is in the negative.

GRANT TO MUNICIPALITIES FOR FREE AND COMPULSORY EDUCATION.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: (a) Will Government be pleased to give the names of the municipalities who have resolved to introduce free and compulsory education within their area and have applied for a grant equal to two-thirds of their expenditure on primary education ?

(b) Will Government be pleased to say whether the municipality of Talegaon in the district of Poona has applied for the grant ?

(c) When was the application first made ?

(d) How is the application disposed of ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) Bandra, Byadgi, Satara City, Dhulia and Islampur.

(b) Yes.

(c) The information has been called for.

(d) It was rejected.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Will Government be pleased to state why the application of the Talegaon municipality was refused ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : If the municipality will make out a case, the matter will be gone into.

DEPUTY COLLECTORS AND MAMLATDARS OF BACKWARD CLASSES IN CENTRAL DIVISION AND SOUTHERN DIVISION.

*Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Will Government be pleased to state the number of deputy collectors and mamlatdars belonging to the Maratha and other backward communities in the Central and Southern Divisions ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: A statement † furnishing the information is put up on the Council table.

ADMISSION TO COLLEGE OF ENGINEERING.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: (a) Will Government be pleased to state how many candidates belonging to the Mahomedan and backward communities including the Marathas were admitted into the College of Engineering this term ?

(b) Will Government be pleased to give the number of candidates from these communities who applied for admission and the reason for their rejection ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) and (b) Sixteen Mahomedan candidates and 34 candidates from the backward Hindu communities, including Marathas, applied for admission, and of these 7 and 9 respectively were admitted. The total number of students admitted was 60. Applications of other candidates were rejected as the other candidates belonging to these communities were better qualified, and the number of places reserved for each of these communities was six.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: May I know when orders will be passed in this matter ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Orders are being issued.

POSTS OF DEPUTY SUPERINTENDENTS OF POLICE.

‡Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District): Will the Government be pleased to state—

(a) the total number of deputy superintendents of police in the Presidency of Bombay ;

(b) the year or years when these posts were created ;

(c) the total pay and allowance for the years 1920-21 and 1921-22 of these officers ?

(d) When were separate establishments given to these officers ?

(e) What is the annual amount of expenditure for the establishments created or given to these officers ?

(f) Does the Superintendent of Police do any criminal investigation work in those districts where there are deputy superintendents of police ?

(g) If not, since when has the Superintendent of Police ceased to do any criminal work in such districts ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: (a) and (b) Already answered.

*This question was asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

† Vide Appendix B.

‡This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

(c) The Accountant General is unable to give the figures for 1920-21 as they have not been separately recorded, but the total pay for 1921-22 was Rs. 2,01,000 in round numbers.

(d), (e), (f) and (g) Already answered.

RECRUIT AND WAR FUND IN DHARWAR.

* Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District): Is it a fact that a large amount out of (a) recruit funds and (b) war funds remains unspent in Dharwar District ?

(b) If so, what are the said amounts and where are they invested ? or with whom are the unspent balances lying now and for what purpose does the Government intend to use or utilise the said amount or amounts ?

The Honourable Mr. IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: (a) There is a balance of Rs. 62,157-2-10 from the District Recruit Fund. There is no such fund as the "War Fund".

(b) The balance at the credit of the District Recruit Fund is at present deposited in the Huzur Treasury and it is proposed to withdraw this amount and invest it in a bank where it can earn interest. Government cannot utilise the amount, but the subscribers of the fund intend utilising it for the building of a War Memorial Technical Institute at Dharwar.

SUPERIOR SCHEDULED POSTS FOR I.C.S.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI on behalf of Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City): (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the total number of superior (as defined in the Government of India Act, 1919) scheduled posts for the I.C.S. in Bombay Presidency on (1) the executive side and (2) judicial side ?

(b) How many of these superior posts are listed as open to the members of the Provincial Service on (1) the executive side and (2) the judicial side ?

(c) What proportion do these superior listed posts form of the total superior posts on (1) the executive side and (2) the judicial side ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: (a) 52 executive and 34 judicial including the 4 District Judgeships recently sanctioned by the Secretary of State.

(b) 2 executive and 3 judicial; but it is proposed eventually to include the 4 District Judgeships recently sanctioned by the Secretary of State.

(c) 26 to 1 on the executive and 34 to 7 on the judicial, including the 4 District Judgeships recently sanctioned by the Secretary of State.

LOCAL ALLOWANCE TO DRAFTSMEN AND SUB-OVERSEERS OF THE PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT IN KARACHI.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI on behalf of Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City): (a) Is it a fact that local allowance is drawn by draftsmen and sub-overseers of the Public Works Department in Karachi ?

(b) If so, to state the special circumstances justifying the special treatment in their cases ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: (a) The reply is in the affirmative.

* This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

(b) As the revised scales of pay sanctioned for the classes of establishment referred to were framed so as to be made applicable to men at all places in the Presidency, those stationed at Karachi have been allowed to draw the local allowance sanctioned for that place in pre-war times owing to the high cost of living there.

C. I. D. POLICE, SIND.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI on behalf of Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state what qualifications are necessary for the appointment to the post of the head clerk to the Superintendent of Police, Sind C. I. D., created in November 1921 ?

(b) Was the present incumbent of the above post a permanent sub-inspector before his appointment to the said new created post ?

(c) What examination has the present incumbent passed ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : (a) A good general education, especially in English, experience and knowledge of office routine and absolute trustworthiness.

(b) Yes.

(c) The Matriculation Examination of the Bombay University and all the departmental tests for sub-inspectors of police in Sind.

POLICE, SIND.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI on behalf of Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that Mr. Jeoosingh Hemansingh, head clerk to the District Superintendent of Police, Karachi, was granted two advance increments by the Commissioner in Sind owing to which he was permitted to draw Rs. 135 instead of Rs. 125 per month ?

(b) Whether he drew his increased rate of pay from 20th July 1920 and Rs. 145 on 20th July 1921 ?

(c) Whether under the orders of Government he should have continued to draw Rs. 135 up to 20th July 1922 and thereafter Rs. 140 ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : The Commissioner in Sind has been requested to report. I think the Commissioner's reply has been received and I hope to give a definite answer during the course of this session.

SIND RAILWAY POLICE.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI on behalf of Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City) : Are Government aware that the offices of the Superintendent of Police, Karachi and Sind Railways, have not been inspected since 1918 ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : The Commissioner in Sind has been requested to report. In this case also a reply has been received and I will give a definite answer during the course of this session.

INSUFFICIENCY OF BEDS IN THE J. J. AND G. T. HOSPITALS.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state the number of beds for Indian indoor patients in the J. J. and G. T. Hospitals, Bombay, existing in 1900 and 1921 ?

(b) Is it a fact that several patients are refused admission in consequence of insufficiency of number of beds ?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state whether in the wards of indoor patients in the J. J. Hospital several cases of diarrhœa and dysentery occur owing to the building being wet and leaky in the monsoon and thereby causing fatality amongst the patients ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE :

|---|---|---|
| (a) (1) J. J. Hospital .. .. .. | 352 | 296 |
| (2) G. T. Hospital .. .. .. | 120 | 120 |

(b) Admission has to be refused at times for want of accommodation.

(c) There have been no cases of diarrhœa or dysentery in the hospital other than those admitted with these diseases.

FIREWORKS ACCIDENTS IN AHMEDABAD.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): (a) Will Government be pleased to state how many accidents to persons and property occurred in Ahmedabad in the years 1920, 1921 and 1922 owing to sparks rising from fireworks known as 'Golas' discharged in marriage processions ?

(b) Are any licenses issued for such fireworks ?

(c) Is any notice taken by the police of such accidents ?

(d) What steps do Government propose to take in the matter ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : (a) During the years 1920, 1921 and 1922, only one such accident was reported, which was on 21st May 1922, when two persons were slightly burnt through sparks from a rocket (Gola) falling on their clothes at Saraspur village.

(b) Permission is given by the city magistrate and city police inspector and occasionally by the District Magistrate and the District Superintendent of Police.

(c) The only accident which has occurred was enquired into but no further action taken.

(d) The city police inspector has always excluded rockets, whenever permission was granted by him. After the accident referred to above, the city magistrate was requested by the District Superintendent of Police not to give permission for rockets in the city, as they were liable to cause a serious conflagration in a congested city like Ahmedabad. No further steps are proposed by Government.

GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.

* Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): (a) Is it a fact that owing to large increase in the number of students in the Grant Medical College, students do not get sufficient opportunities for clinics in the wards ?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state if any proposals have been made to allow students opportunities for clinics in the G. T. Hospital as has been done in the case o the Cama Hospital ?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state if any honorary surgeons are attached to the G. T. Hospital ? If not, why not ?

* This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) Yes.

(b) Yes.

(c) No. This hospital treats cases of accidents mainly and is not suited for teaching students. No need for appointing honorary surgeons to it has therefore been felt.

HONORARY MAGISTRATES IN AHMEDABAD.

* Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): Will Government be pleased to give the following information regarding the working of the honorary magistrates in the city of Ahmedabad during 1921 :—

(a) the names of magistrates;

(b) the number of days of work in court during the year in actually trying cases;

(c) the average hours of work per day;

(d) the number of cases tried and disposed of during the year?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: (a) Already answered at the February 1922 session.

(b) All working days of the year.

(c) 3 to 5 hours a day.

(d) 3,726.

The replies refer to the work of two out of the six magistrates.

MOTOR ACCIDENTS IN AHMEDABAD.

† Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): How many accidents occurred in Ahmedabad by motors and motor trucks during the years 1921 and 1922 up to the end of June?

(a) The number of offenders who are prosecuted;

(b) Who are acquitted;

(c) Discharged, and (d) Sentenced?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD:

| | 1921. | 1922 upto the end of June. |
|---|---|---|
| By motors .. .. .. | 26 | 8 |
| By motor trucks .. .. .. | 18 | 15 |
| (a) .. .. .. | 8 ‡ | 7 § |
| (b) .. .. .. | .. | .. |
| (c) .. .. .. | 4 | 2 |
| (d) .. .. .. | 4 | 2 |

LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN POONA.

* Sardar V. N. MUTALIK (Deccan Sardars and Inamdars): Are Government aware of the recommendations made by the Local Advisory Committee of Poona regarding the liquor traffic in Poona and if so, what steps do Government intend to take on them?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: The action taken on the resolutions of the Local Advisory Committee is indicated in Government Resolution || No. 4309, dated 24th July 1922 of which a copy is laid on the Council table.

* These questions were asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when ad interim replies were given.

† This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

‡ One driver absconded after the accident and has not been traced.

§ 3 under trial.

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.

Rao Bahadur R. M. NILKANTH (Ahmedabad District): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) how many accidents to passengers travelling by railway trains occurred between the stations of Ahmedabad and Barejdi in 1921 in consequence of being struck by open doors of passenger trains or by protruding articles loaded in goods trains coming from the opposite direction ?

(b) what is the minimum distance prescribed to be kept between up and down railway lines running parrallel to each other ?

(c) by how much and up to what length does the distance between the up and down main lines from Ahmedabad to Barejdi fall short of the prescribed minimum ?

(d) when do the railway authorities expect to bring the distance between the two lines to the prescribed limit ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: (a) One.

(b) 14′ 0″.

(c) From 10″ to 2′ from Miles 229 to 303½, 304¾ to 308 and 308¾ to 309½.

(d) Probably within the next six months.

DEPUTATION OF CIVIL CLERKS TO MILITARY DEPARTMENT.

* Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA (Karachi City): (a) Is Government aware that at the outbreak of the war when civil clerks were being deputed to the Military Accounts Department peremptory orders were issued by the Commissioner in Sind to the effect that those clerks who refused to accept the posts in the Military Department were given choice between acceptance of the deputation and dismissal from Government service; on the other hand a promise was held out to those who volunteered and served in the Military Department to the satisfaction of their superiors that they would on reversion to their respective districts be noted for special promotions ?

(b) Will Government kindly state how many and which clerks were so deputed from the province of Sind and also give in detail the permanent promotions given to them after reversion purely in consideration of their such deputation ? This information may kindly be specified for each district in Sind separately.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: (a) No peremptory orders of the kind were issued by the Commissioner in Sind nor were any such promises made.

(b) A statement † is placed on the table.

COST OF MAHABLESHWAR EXODUS.

* Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Will the Government state the total cost of the Mahableshwar exodus including allowances drawn by the officers and the establishment ?

* These questions were asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when ad interim replies were given.

† Kept in Secretary's office.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: The total cost in round figures was:—

| | Rs. |
|---|---|
| (1) Travelling allowances of Members of Council, Ministers and Officers .. .. .. .. | 6,000 |
| (2) Other allowances to Honourable Members, Ministers and Officers .. .. .. .. | Nil. |
| (3) Travelling allowances of establishments .. .. | 5,000 |
| (4) Allowances to clerks and peons .. .. | 13,000 |
| (5) Contingencies .. .. .. .. | 10,000 |
| | 34,000 |
| 2. The cost of moving to Poona must however be excluded as Government would proceed there in any case; this comes to .. .. .. .. | 20,000 |
| 3. The net cost of the move to Mahableshwar is therefore | 14,000 |

INFORMATION REGARDING MULLAS ATTACHED TO SCHOOLS IN SIND.

*2. Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Will the Government supply the following information:—

(a) Names of schools in Sind local board to which a Mulla has been attached.

(b) The date of his appointment.

(c) Date of his discontinuance and the reason.

(d) The number of boys at the time of his appointment and the number of boys brought by him.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a), (b), (c) and (d) A statement † furnishing the information required is placed on the table.

PIER IN THE RATNAGIRI BUNDAR.

Rao Saheb L. V. PARULEKAR (Ratnagiri District): (a) Will the Government be pleased to state about what time the work of erecting a pier in the Ratnagiri Bundar is likely to be commenced and in what stage the matter stands to-day?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state what is the exact spot at which the pier is to be erected in the Bundar?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: (a) and (b) The Landing and Wharfage Fees Fund Committee has resolved that the proposed pier should not be constructed.

WHARFAGE FUND ACCOUNT.

Rao Saheb L. V. PARULEKAR (Ratnagiri District): Will the Government be pleased to state what is the amount of the Wharfage Fund to-day and what is the state of its accounts? Will the Government be pleased to lay on the Council table full up-to-date accounts of the Fund?

* This question was asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

† Vide Appendix D.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: The receipts and expenditure of the Landing and Wharfage Fees Fund, since its inception, are as under :—

| Year. | Receipts. | Expenditure. |
|---|---|---|
| | Rs. | Rs. |
| 1916-17 .. .. .. | 3 | .. |
| 1917-18 .. .. .. | 75,444 | .. |
| 1918-19 .. .. .. | 90,847 | 19,958 |
| 1919-20 .. .. .. | 99,216 | 13,415 |
| 1920-21 .. .. .. | 1,04,641 | 83,478 |
| 1921-22 .. .. .. | 1,31,060 | 61,804 |
| Total .. | 5,01,211 | 1,78,655 |
| 1922-23 Estimates .. .. | 1,07,654 | 1,06,217 |
| Grand total .. | 6,08,865 | 2,84,872 |

The balance is invested in Government securities from time to time in order to finance large works such as landing places, etc., in the near future in accordance with the decision of the Landing and Wharfage Fees Fund Committee. The fund had an invested balance on 1st July 1922 of the face value of Rs. 3,40,600, exclusive of the loan of rupees one lakh granted by Government.

The details of the expenditure incurred during the years 1918-19 to 1920-21 are contained in Statement II (Appendix N) printed on page 589 of Volume III, Part I, of the official report of the Bombay Legislative Council for the year 1921, with reference to a question on the subject put by Mr. A. N. Surve, printed on page 164 of the same report. A similar statement showing the expenditure from the fund for the year 1921-22 is placed on the Council table. A copy of the budget estimates of the fund for the current year is also placed on the Council table. Appendix IV to the budget estimates gives details of the proposed expenditure for the current year.

WATER TAPS AT PANDHARPUR.

Mr. R. G. SALGAR (Sholapur City): Are Government aware that no water taps have been fitted on the bank of river Bhima at Pandharpur for the use of pilgrims to avoid them from drinking river water? What steps does the Government intend to take in this matter?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: This is a matter that concerns Pandharpur municipality.

COW KILLING.

Mr. R. G. SALGAR (Sholapur City): Will Government be pleased to state what municipalities in this Presidency have resolved not to give permission to kill cows and which of them have obtained sanction from Government to such resolution?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: The information is being collected.

SHOLAPUR CRIMINAL TRIBES SETTLEMENT.

Mr. R. G. SALGAR (Sholapur City): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) Since how many years the Government is in possession of the Sholapur Criminal Tribes Settlement ?

(b) How many boys and girls are taught and what education is given? To what castes do the teachers belong ? By whom they are examined every year and with what result ?

(c) Is the whole Settlement given in charge of the American Mission and, if so, from how many years ?

(d) What sort of religious teaching is given to Kaikadis and Bhamtas ?

(e) Are they provided with separate water pipes as per their religion ?

(f) All the young boys and girls are separated from their parents and sent to Bijapur and Hubli, for education. In what schools they are taught and by what class of teachers ?

(g) Is it a fact that the boys and girls having reached the marriageable time are refused by the officers in charge to be handed over to their parents ?

(h) Whether the rights of Settlement people in respect to their land before they were kept in the Settlement are infringed ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: (a) The old Settlement was established in 1914 and the new Settlement in 1917.

(b) The annual administration reports give the details as to education. The teachers are Christian and the examiner is the deputy educational inspector.

(c) Since 1917.

(d) They attend voluntarily occasional Christian services.

(e) There are water pipes at the old settlement and a well at the new settlement.

(f) Three children have been sent to the Children's Home at Bijapur, six to that at Hubli and six to that at Baramati. They attend the same schools as the other settlement children at those places.

(g) Some children are retained in the Children's Homes for a year or two after puberty.

(h) No, Sir.

REVISION SETTLEMENT IN MALSIRAS AND KARMALA TALUKAS.

* Mr. R. G. SALGAR (Sholapur District): (a) Will Government be pleased to state the scale of revision settlement in the Malsiras and Karmala talukas of the Sholapur district ?

(b) Are the new rates higher than the other talukas of the district ?

(c) Are the Government aware that the Karmala and Malsiras talukas are famine-stricken talukas of the district ?

(d) What is the average annewari of Karmala and Malsiras talukas comparing the same with Sholapur and Barsi talukas during the last ten years ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA replied: (a) A statement† showing the rates of revision settlement is herewith appended.

* This question was asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when an ad interim reply was given † Vide Appendix F.

(b) Yes. New rates of Malsiras are higher than those of Madha, Karmala, Pandharpur and Sangola talukas (vide statement).

(c) Yes.

(d) A comparative annevari statement* is appended.

CONVICTION IN CONNECTION WITH MULSHIPETHA SCHEME.

† Mr R. G. SALGAR (Sholapur City): What is the number of persons that are convicted for different number of offences in April and May 1922 at Mulshipetha? How many of them are Mavlas (male and female) and what was the number of khatedars if there be any and how many of the company's servants were in them?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: A statement‡ is now laid on the table.

WATER SUPPLY TO DEPRESSED CLASSES.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): (a) Are Government aware that the depressed classes in the village "Ghoday", taluka Khed, district Poona, have to depend for their water supply on the lower end of the stream in the village, which gets dried up in summer and in other seasons is insufficient?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state if they intend to adopt any measure to afford relief to the said depressed classes with reference to that grievance?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) The river runs for the greater part of the year; in the hot weather the requisite water is obtained by digging "hels" in the bed of the river.

(b) The matter is one for the local board concerned.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: With reference to the answer to clause (a), am I to understand that the members of the depressed classes are not inconvenienced in the hot weather to get adequate water supply?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: If the honourable member will refer to the answer to (b), he will see that it is a matter for the local board concerned.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Have Government considered the advisability of drawing the attention of the local board concerned to the matter?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Has the honourable member first of all drawn the attention of the local board to the matter?

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: I will do it now, but have not Government considered the advisability of doing so?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: What is the use of putting your question in that form, in a round about way? You may ask "Have Government called upon the local board to remedy the grievance?"

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: Have Government drawn the attention of the local board concerned to this matter?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: No.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: Is it not the duty of the Government to draw the attention of the local board to the matter?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You may ask "Why not?"

* Vide Appendix G.

† This question was asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

‡ Vide Appendix E.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: Why not?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The honourable member who asks the question should do it first of all.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: But is not Government responsible for that?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Government are responsible; you ought to know it, everybody knows it. It is no use wasting time over a thing which every one of us knows. Government are responsible, and if they have not fulfilled their responsibility, you may adopt measures for bringing a vote of censure against them. It is no use asking questions.

Mr. S. K. BOLE (Bombay City, North): Will Government do it now?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You ought to know that it is quite out of order as directing a particular action. Government have not done it before now, and Government are not going to do it now. That is what they say. The matter is one for the local board concerned.

PIER AT RATNAGIRI.

2. Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Will Government be pleased to lay on the table copies of plans of the pier to be built in the port of Ratnagiri by the Wharfage Fund Committee, and to state if they are aware that the proposed site will prove inconvenient to the passengers?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: The Landing and Wharfage Fees Fund Committee has resolved that the proposed pier should not be constructed.

MALEGAON SHOPKEEPERS' REPRESENTATION.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Have Government received any representations from Hindu and Mahomedan shopkeepers of Malegaon dealing with Momin weavers against Notification No. 152, Home Department?

(b) What is their justification in making these shopkeepers responsible for payments on past dealings?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: I am precluded from replying to this question at present as some of the shopkeepers have made similar enquiries in the civil court.

SITTING OF THE APPEAL COURT IN THE HIGH COURT.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) The total number of days on which there was only one appeal court sitting in the Bombay High Court during 1921-22?

(b) The total number of days on which there were two such appeal courts sitting during the same period?

(c) Have they any information as to the decrease of work in the office of the Registrar, Appellate Side, of the Bombay High Court?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: (a) 135.

(b) 49.

(c) The statement* laid on the table does not indicate any decrease in the work in the office of the Registrar.

---

* Kept in Secretary's office.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I appoint the following honourable members to form the panel of chairmen for the current session :—

Dr. K. E. Dadachanji, Mr. A. Greville Bullocke, Rao Bahadur R. R. Kale and Mr. M. A. Havelivala.

A BILL FURTHER TO AMEND THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS ACT, 1890 (BILL No. XIII OF 1921).

(As amended by the Select Committee.)

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : Mr. President, I present the report of the select committee on the Bill further to amend the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act, 1890. I observe that the select committee was ordered to report within a month ; that order was on the 21st of July, and the select committee had to report by the 21st of August, but the report is dated the 29th of August. I therefore formally request that an extension of eight days from the 21st to the 29th of August may be granted by this Council.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Under what Standing Order you ask for that extension ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : Under Standing Order VIII, 7 (1). It is a formal matter.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Does the Council condone the delay ?

Question put and agreed to.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : I rise, therefore, to move the second reading of the bill, and I will briefly remind the Council of the purposes of this bill. Clause 2 amends section 3 of the Act in order to make cruelty in private an offence equally with cruelty in public : also it is so amended as to make cruelty an offence when a man abandons or turns loose any animal to starve. The only objection which was raised to this provision when the bill was last discussed was that the definition of this was rather wide and that it would be dangerous to apply these provisions straight away to rural areas. These objections were considered by the select committee, and they have suggested amendments in the bill which, I think, would probably remove or meet those objections. They have provided that the cruelty should be thus defined :

Second reading.

> " Without sufficient excuse neglect to supply any animal under his control with sufficient food or drink ; "

The objection was that a man would otherwise be punishable if he permitted his animal to starve because he was starving himself, or if he abandoned or turned loose an animal because he was not physically strong enough to retain it. The select committee have therefore added the words " without sufficient excuse ", and I hope this amendment will meet that objection raised in the Council. The other objection has been met by the provision that the new offences should not be applied to any place without a notification extending it to that place, such as the city of Bombay. I hope, therefore, that clause 2 amending section 3, as now modified by the select committee, will meet with the approval of the members of this House.

Clause 3 amends section 6 of the Act. The amendments are intended to provide that the cost of treatment of an animal in hospital should in certain circumstances be borne entirely by the owner. Members of this House will remember that this arose from the protest of the Charitable Hospital in Bombay that owners who ill-treated their animals left the animal in the hospital indefinitely without taking the trouble to enquire whether the animal was getting better, and eventually refused to have anything to do with it. The hospital would expend a great deal of money on it, but had no means of recovering the cost. It was thought only fair that the owner should be made liable for the cost of the treatment. An objection was raised at the last meeting that this was rather hard on some poor men who would not be able to pay anything at all, beyond the value of the animal. This had been partly met already by giving the magistrate power if he should find the animal to be incurable to order it to be sent to the Pinjrapole or to have the animal destroyed. The magistrate could not do this before and the animal had to stay in the hospital until it was cured and then had to be sold for what it was worth. This amendment had provided a remedy to a great extent, because a magistrate would readily make an order sending an incurable animal to the Pinjrapole or directing it to be destroyed. The objection has been further met by the select committee by making it clear that the owner should not necessarily have to bear the extra expenses in all circumstances, and that it should be left to the discretion of the magistrate to take into consideration all the circumstances and decide whether the owner should pay any of the expenses over and above the cost of the animal. If the animal was unreasonably detained in the hospital, the magistrate would have power to decide that the expense shall be borne in part by the hospital. So if the owner were practically a pauper the magistrate would have power to excuse payment or make him pay according to his means towards the expenses in hospital. The select committee have made their modification by inserting words in sub-clause (8) to provide that the excess " to such extent as shall seem reasonable " shall be recoverable from the owner as a fine on the order of a magistrate. A proviso is further put in to make sure that the magistrate will consider the objections of the owner : " provided that no such order shall be made without the owner being given a reasonable opportunity of urging his objections, if any, before the magistrate. " These modifications should remove the objections previously felt by some members of the House.

These are the only two amendments proposed by the bill, the one to make cruelty to an animal in a private place an offence as in public and to make it cruelty to turn loose or neglect an animal by not supplying it with food or starving it, and the second to provide that the owner who is guilty of ill-treatment shall pay such part of the expenses of treatment in the hospital as may be ordered by the magistrate.

I think, Sir, that the bill as now modified by the select committee meets practically the objections previously raised to the bill. There are some minor amendments I see moved by my honourable friend opposite, which are matters of minor importance which can be disposed of when we deal with the bill clause by clause. For the present, therefore, I move that the bill be now read a second time.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I now adjourn the meeting of this Council until His Excellency's arrival at 3-30.

His Excellency the Governor was met by the President on arrival and a procession was formed. His Excellency then took his seat upon the dais.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR'S SPEECH.

Rising to address the Council His Excellency said :—

Gentlemen,

During the session which is about to commence you will be invited to consider proposals of far-reaching importance to this Presidency, but before you commence your labours I desire to call your attention to some aspects of the general situation, a situation moreover which it is possible now to review with greater precision and with finer judgment than would have been possible a year or even a few months ago.

Ever since the inauguration of the Reform Scheme this Presidency, in common with the rest of India, has passed through some periods of acute agitation and disturbance, during some stages of which movements gravely prejudicial to public peace and to the trade of the country had to be met and disposed of. A movement avowedly revolutionary in its aims and in its methods, designed grotesquely enough to shatter by all means in its power the first step towards that responsible government which all parties had hitherto united in asking for, was set on foot and made some considerable appeal to the imagination, though only in rare cases to the reason, of some section of the general public. An appeal made by popular leaders, especially when intended to exploit such fine qualities as national feeling and patriotism, has seldom in any country failed to get a response, but if such an appeal is made when food is scarce and prices high, when in fact the economic sores consequent upon the stress of a prolonged war are still open, no one can be surprised that it should have a disturbing effect upon the public mind. In the attempt therefore which I and my Government have made rightly to appraise during the last two years the situation which confronted us, we have done our utmost to deal with the situation very calmly and to judge it chiefly in terms relative to the responsibility of its leaders than to the youthful folly of some of its followers. My Government were, as you know, determined that the leaders responsible for these lawless activities should be brought to justice, once patience and tolerance had been given the fullest trial; but I am glad to say that we were enabled to vindicate the law without putting into force any other machinery than the ordinary tribunals of the land, and without inflicting penalties in any large degree upon those who, owing to youth and ignorance rather than to criminal or revolutionary tendencies, had been misled into breaches of public order. Whilst I am glad that this should have been possible I cannot in any way minimise the ill-effects of the non-co-operation propaganda which has done much harm not only to administrative progress but has also had an inevitable reaction on the opinion outside this country as to the capacity of India for early self-government: at the same time I desire most cordially to acknowledge the steady judgment and sound political sense not only of this Council but of the public at large in all parts of this Presidency which has given unmistakeable proofs of its loyal support to my Government in the task of restoring order. It is not the first time that I have had occasion to pay my tribute to the soundness of public opinion in this Presidency. In all moments of public excitement I and my colleagues have always relied firmly on that support and that support has never failed us.

Not the least encouraging sign of the present situation is the fact that in several parts of the country some of these political groups who were once adherents of the non-co-operation programme and of the boycott of the machinery of responsible government are now, if rumour speaks truly, coming round to a view favourable to entry into the Councils, and have decided in future to prosecute their political aims through the constitutional machinery expressly set up for that purpose. This is a distinct step in advance and in itself a valuable testimony to the ever-increasing prestige of the reformed councils. I look forward with confidence to the time when all sections of political thought who are bent on constructive work will seek election to the councils and thereby enhance their value not only as a legislative but as an educational machine in the art of self-government for the people at large.

In this connection I should wish to refer to some criticisms which I have seen voiced in the press regarding the appearance upon public platform of the Ministers and Members of my Executive Council. I understand that this criticism is less directed to the Ministers who are directly responsible to their electors, than to the Members of Council, but even in regard to the latter it appears to me that the more members of Government, be they Ministers or Members of Council, can come into touch with the public, the more they can explain Government policy and inform the public of what Government is doing, the better for all concerned. It is, I believe, argued by some that as public servants they are not entitled to do so, but this is an entire misconception, for in the first place a Member of the Executive Council even where he is a Member of the Services, is also a member of Government, and as such is I venture to think fully entitled with the concurrence of his colleagues to reply to criticism wherever and whenever it may seem advisable. More than this, any public servant may make public utterances provided only that before doing so he received the special sanction of Government to do so.

I turn now to refer to some of the main administrative activities of Government during the last two years. I have already referred to my Government's action in regard to law and order, which are the first duties of any Government, but no Government can expect to retain the support and confidence of the public on a negative issue : we have to show to you and to the public at large what positive steps we have taken in education, in social reform, and in the improvement of trade and labour conditions generally for the improvement of the lot of the people committed to our charge. Let me speak first of finance. This Council has imposed upon Government an extremely onerous task of drastic retrenchment, and at the wish of the Council we have agreed, over and above the heavy reduction we had effected before presenting our last budget, to make a further reduction of no less than 60 lakhs of rupees. I am not of opinion that such sudden and wholesale reductions are really sound policy or true economy in the long run, for they bring a very serious dislocation in the whole administration. We agreed to meet Council's wishes because we were convinced that the policy actuating members was sound in intention and actuated by the best motive. I am afraid that we shall only be able to carry out our promise to this Council by continuing for the remaining six months the most rigorous economy in every branch of the administration, but our officers in all areas are giving Government their keenest co-operation in this matter and I have every hope of success. I recognise moreover that in the case of a Government such as this, whose borrowing operations are larger, the maintenance of the credit of Government is of the first importance, and that that credit cannot be maintained in deficit budgets. The confidence of the public in the credit of this Government is however amply demonstrated by the high values of its first loan issue, and the recent splendid contributions of the public to the Government of India loan, in the proceeds of which it was known that Bombay was to benefit, are another testimony to the same confidence. I believe I am correct in stating that this Presidency's contribution was more than twice that of Calcutta, and more than half of the total Indian subscription. I desire therefore to express on behalf of my Government my thanks to the public who have given us this fine support and encouragement. I have only two other urban matters to refer to, the first relates to the development schemes regarding whose detailed progress I hope to speak further a few weeks hence, and I confine myself to saying that in every branch the works are proceeding at fully their anticipated rate of progress, and that every sign available to us, both financial and constructive, confirms the confidence that we have from the beginning placed in the schemes. Let me repeat that the whole object of these great schemes has been to put the great port and city of Bombay in a position to handle its trade in the cheapest and most efficient manner so as to attract on account of its cheap facilities the maximum of trade possible, to provide through this trade an ever increasing quantity of work and wages for its labouring classes, and to secure that all classes and particularly the working classes shall have, as a result of them, healthier and happier surroundings. I can think, gentlemen, of no more beneficent acitivities for any Government to be engaged upon than these. We have however not been content with this aspect of the urban problem alone. We have inaugurated the first Labour Office as such in India, designed to examine in a scientific and exact manner the real condition of work and wages in the city. Reliable deductions cannot in my opinion be fully drawn from the statistics compiled for some little time, but already the Labour Office under the able guidance of its director, Mr. Shirras, has gained a great deal of public confidence and support. Over 3,000 working class budgets have already been analysed and a detailed enquiry into the wage rates of some 250 occupations in the Presidency have been completed. We have further investigated through the medium of an impartial and energetic committee various means by which the disorganisation consequent upon dispute between employer and employee can be avoided, and the disputes themselves settled quickly and fairly without serious economic dislocation. In the sphere of labour legislation we have had under consideration legislative proposals in regard to factories, trade unions, employment agencies, workmen's compensation and workmen's breach of contract. My general view is that legislation on these matters requires extreme prudence and caution until we have more relevant statistical data upon which safely to form a mature and considered judgment, lest injury be done to trades on which the workmen themselves rely for their livelihood.

So far I have spoken of our work in the large cities and industrial centres. But we have not neglected the rural areas, but have been careful of their material and their moral interests. It will be unnecessary for me to describe in detail the great chain of the Deccan irrigation works which are as rapidly as possible being brought to completion over the whole of that area of the Presidency which is liable to be impoverished by famine. The mighty reservoirs of Chankapur and Lake Beale have been completed. The works at Bhandardara and Bhatgar are progressing fast and are nearing completion—and yet I doubt if this Council or the public at large at all fully realise the huge nature of these enterprises which have scientifically but quietly matured under the beneficent auspices of Government. The Bhandardara dam is actually the highest in the world and at a cost of a million and a half of rupees will command and give absolute immunity from famine to no less than 200,000 acres. The Bhatgar dam is even more important; in size it is considerably larger than the world famous Assouan dam in Egypt, and will irrigate three lakhs of acres in what was once the most famine-stricken part of the Presidency. What does the completion of these great works mean for this Presidency? It means just this, that the revenue we have drawn from agriculture is being invested in large sums for the agriculturist, so that in vast tracts where for years—generations and centuries past—his livelihood has been yearly at the mercy of an adverse climate and a precarious rainfall, in the near future there will be assured to him that regular supply of water which is all that is necessary to ensure the richest and most profitable crops. Previous generations have been impoverished and their capital resources sapped by bad seasons: the great immigrations, too, of whole villages into famine camps and labour works produced a special shock to the whole countryside. Not only will this evil be averted but we have done all that we could to restore these capital resources and put them on a sound footing by encouraging and fostering the growth of co-operative societies and banks.

So much for irrigation in the Deccan, but it is right that I should also refer to the needs of Sind in reference to the great project of the Sukkur Barrage. Let me preface my remarks by saying that this scheme, the largest ever yet undertaken in India, has preoccupied my Government for a long time past for the finance of so large an undertaking is of the greatest complexity and difficulty. We have however come to the conclusion that in view of the inception of the Sutlej Barrage project it is now impossible to delay this scheme any further if the agriculture of Sind is to be given that protection and assistance that it looks for from this Government. We are, I hope, on the point of solving the financial problem involved. We believe that the capital sums required can be found, but we do not think it just to the rest of the Presidency that the interest charges upon so large a work should be paid to any large extent out of the normal revenues of the Presidency lest the due balance of progress in other branches of administration should be interfered with. We are sanguine that we shall be able to put proposals before you before the close of this year which will command your approval and that of the public whom you represent.

The Agricultural Department also under the direction of my honourable colleague, the Minister for Agriculture, has achieved much. In regard to cotton it has been ascertained by exhaustive tests the types of seed which are most suitable to the various areas, and has produced large quantities of that seed for distribution. In Surat district alone 200,000 acres are planted with such seed, giving an increased return on the district cotton crop of 20 lakhs of rupees; and the same procedure is being developed all over the Presidency.

In regard to sugarcane, it has investigated and almost perfected methods which will reduce the high cost of cultivation by 40 or 50 per cent. and have introduced and imported cane now in general use in water-logged areas which gives a yield of 7,000 lbs. of gul per acre as against 2,000 lbs. from local cane. It has introduced in the Konkan an improved rice seed which has increased the return in production to the rayot by 29 per cent. In addition to these special activities the department has successfully endeavoured to raise the general standard of cultivation by such measures as the popularisation of the iron plough, the increase of the supply of artificial manure, the investigation of the sub-soil water supply by boring experiments carried out at cost price, or free of charge if unsuccessful. And lastly a determined campaign has been carried on against the more deadly and widespread of the crop diseases, a campaign which is meeting with considerable success and if completely successful may increase the total value of the jowar crop of the Presidency by some two crores of rupees.

I have only to refer in conclusion to the fact that my Government proposes to ask your assent to a measure introducing free and compulsory education into this Presidency. This momentous step has not been decided upon hastily or without the most careful consideration of the situation, but we are so firmly convinced of the importance of giving this privilege at an early date to those who most need it that we have little doubt that this Council will not only pass the bill but also those financial proposals, commencing now and to be continued as need demands over the next ten years, in order to make our proposals effective. If you decide to adopt our proposals this Presidency will not only be the first part of India to adopt this policy but will once more be leading the way in the cause of educational and social reform. One word of caution must however be said and this is that the speed at which primary education can increase can only be in proportion as this Council and the municipal and local authorities are prepared to find new sources of revenue for the furtherance of this great reform.

Lastly you will be asked to pass into law a bill framed by my Government to give to local boards certain increased powers which they have for long been urgently in need of in order to carry out their responsibilities to the general public.

Gentlemen, I have alluded to only some of the activities of the Government designed to promote the real welfare of the people of this Presidency, but I have said enough I hope to demonstrate that whether it be in the protection of public order—that first ingredient of trade and prosperity,—or in the cause of education, of labour problems, of housing, of agriculture or of local self-government, this administration is forging ahead on steady, prudent, but definitely progressive lines, consonant not only with the high traditions of this great Presidency but also, as I believe, in true sympathy with the high aims and ideals of this Legislative Council.

On the conclusion of His Excellency's speech the Council was adjourned by the President till 4-30 p.m.

After recess.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS BILL.

(Motion for second reading further considered.)

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): Sir, in speaking on the second reading of this bill, I must acknowledge that the select committee has tried to meet the objection which was raised at the first reading thereof with regard to clause 2 by adding the words "without sufficient excuse." But I think it does not remove all cause for anxiety which one feels that the section, when put into operation, is likely to be misconstrued or construed in such a way as to cause unnecessary hardship to the poor owner of the animal who may find himself in a predicament of not being able to supply food to the animal. The words used are "without sufficient excuse neglects," and I am afraid when a person is charged under that section, the burden of showing that he had sufficient excuse would be thrown on the accused, and cases might arise in which he may not be able to convince the magistrate that he had a sufficient excuse.

[Mr. C. M. Gandhi]

I think the section ought to be so worded as to leave no possibility of doubt that the burden is on the prosecution to show that this was a neglect, a wilful neglect, or that the failing to supply the animal with food was with the intention to starve the animal.

I think the Honourable the Home Member will consider whether it will not be proper to have the clause so amended as to carry out the desired object. It is no doubt true that the operation of this section is not going to be automatically applied to districts to which the Act has not been made applicable now, but it depends upon a notification to be issued by Government. It would be a very good thing if Government were to define its policy and let us know at this stage as to what would be the circumstances which Government would consider as justifying them to issue a notification for the extension of this clause to particular areas.

Then, in another part of this bill no doubt the power is given to a magistrate to direct the animal to be sold when the owner refuses or neglects to pay the cost of its treatment, but I think even after that, an option ought to be reserved to the owner to be able to retain his animal if he is willing to offer the price of the animal that the animal would fetch at a public auction.

These are some of the suggestions which I venture to make and which I hope the Council will take into consideration.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA (Bombay City, North): Mr. President, my honourable friend Mr. Gandhi says that the onus of proof will be left on the accused when he will be called upon to prove that he had sufficient excuse for the neglect to supply any animal under his control with sufficient food and drink. Mr. Gandhi wants that that onus should be transferred to the prosecution side. I think it is but fair that any one, who neglects an animal for some particular reason which is best known to himself, that is, it may be his extreme poverty or that he may not be earning enough to make both his ends meet, who may be starving his animal to a certain extent, in which case I say, Sir, nobody could be a better person to give his reason than the accused himself. I do not think that the prosecution side should be burdened with the onus of proving that it was a neglect without sufficient excuse.

The same thing would apply when the accused abandons or turns loose any animal without making due provision for its sustenance. We know in Bombay as a matter of fact that animals have been let loose or thrown on the streets after the best work has been taken from them by their owners and the identity of the owners is not disclosed. Therefore if the owner has been found out and if he is charged for culpable neglect on his part towards dumb creatures, I think it is but meet that the onus of proof must lie on his head.

Then, Sir, there is one more suggestion which I would like to see incorporated in the bill, and that is a suggestion of my honourable friend Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas who is not here to-day. He says that the trying magistrate should be a person not connected with the infirmary where the animal is treated and to which infirmary the amount recovered is payable. I may say that perhaps Mr. Purshotamdas holds this view because in Bombay the Veterinary College or Institute has its principal medical officer acting as the trying magistrate holding his court in his own institution and my honourable friend perhaps fears that the principal being directly connected with the infirmary may be unconsciously prejudiced against the accused, and in his anxiety to see that the funds may be recouped from the owners, may perhaps be influenced to inflict heavier punishment on the accused. I think this suggestion that the magistrate should be a person not connected with the infirmary where the animal is treated, is a wholesome suggestion. With these words, I beg to support the second reading of the bill with the modification I have suggested.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA (Karachi City): Mr. President, I strongly support the argument put forward by my honourable friend Mr. Gandhi. The general principle of law is.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I take leave to point out that at present the motion is for the second reading of the bill as a whole? Mr. Gandhi confined himself to one particular section. I allowed him latitude because I wanted to see where he was going to end. Now, that speech I think would have been more appropriate, if and after the bill has passed the second reading, to the merits of that particular section. At present the question is, is the bill to be read a second time or not? That would economise a good deal of time.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: I beg your pardon, Sir.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE (Poona District): Mr. President, I want to address the Council as regards the second reading of this bill. The point I made at the first reading was that the provisions of this bill are quite unsuited to rural areas and anyone that is acquainted with the condition of cattle in rural areas of this Presidency will bear me out—half the cattle, I should say 75 per cent. of the cattle, in rural areas are half-starved and are let out almost every day to graze on the commons without any adequate provision being made for their food and drink. I think, therefore, that the provisions of this bill are quite unsuited to rural areas and in my opinion the bill ought to be confined strictly to urban areas, i.e., big cities or even small cities later on, Government reserving the power of extending the provisions of the bill to smaller cities, but to rural areas it should certainly never be extended. I think that the bill should go back to the select committee for revision in the light of the remarks I have made, namely, that the bill should be made applicable to urban areas only and that the rural areas should be excluded from its operation. I therefore move:—

That the bill be referred back to the select committee for the purpose of considering further the question whether it is not inexpedient to apply its provisions to the rural areas.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District): Mr. President, I was one of the members of the select committee to which this bill was referred, and the point raised now was considered very fully in the discussion which we had. It will be seen that the original Act is the Government of India Act, and that Act says that the provisions of the Act shall be applied by notification to such areas as the Government might think fit, and certain of the talukas of this Presidency have already been brought under the operation of that Act. The present bill seeks to make an amendment in the Government of India Act, and it was feared that, by the passing of the bill, the amended Act would ipso facto apply to those areas to which it was already extended by notification, and, in order to prevent such a result, provision has been made in the bill by which the amended Act will not apply to any area, although the original Act does apply to it by a previous notification, the intention being that if it is intended to extend the amended Act to any area, it will have to be done by a separate notification. I was one of the persons who had opposed the bill when it was introduced at the first reading, and my opposition was based upon the fact that rural areas should be excluded from its operation, especially as I found that in my own district, there were four talukas to which the Act had been extended. Therefore, I had put forward the case of the rural areas in the select committee. It was fully considered, and, in order to prevent any hardship, it has been provided in the present bill, as it has emerged from the select committee, that these provisions shall not apply ipso facto to rural areas, but that Government will have to issue a separate notification making the amended provisions applicable to such local areas, even though the general provisions of the Act are already in force in those local areas under the old notification. Therefore, no doubt, as the Act stands at present, there is the power given to Government to extend the amended provisions to rural areas, but unless and until Government decide to extend these amended provisions, there need be no fear that they will apply to those areas where there is already a notification extending the original Act. I therefore think that no good purpose will be served by re-committing the bill to the select committee, and therefore I oppose the motion which has been proposed, namely that the matter should be recommitted to the select committee. The point was fully considered, and I think we may safely leave it to Government that unless a strong case is made out for the application of the amended Act to the rural areas, Government will not issue a notification. Therefore, it seems to me that the motion for recommittal to select committee should not be accepted by the Council.

Mr. J. CRERAR : Sir, I move that the question be now put.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I accept the closure, and call upon Dewan Bahadur Godbole to reply.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE : Mr President, the point that I placed before the Council in moving my motion to recommit the bill to the select committee is important. I think that it should not be left to the discretion of Government to extend the provisions of this Act to rural areas, even by special notification. I know that it is provided in sub-clauses (d) and (e) of clause 2 that the provisions of the Act will not be extended to the areas to which I am referring, except after a notification issued by Government after due consideration. But I want to take away altogether from Government the power of considering the question of extending the provisions of this bill to the rural areas, and therefore I think the Council will do well to accept the motion that I have proposed.

Amendment negatived.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The discussion on the original question will now proceed.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : I had given a series of amendments to this bill, but they were all disallowed as time-barred. If you will allow me, Sir.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The amendments may be mentioned and if allowed moved, if and after the motion for second reading has been carried. The question now before the House is whether we ought to read it a second time. I see no one rises to speak, and so I will call upon the Honourable Member in charge to reply.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : I have nothing further to add, Sir.

Bill read a second time. Question put and agreed to.

Clause 2 (Amendment of section 3 of XI of 1890).

In section 3 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act, 1890, hereinafter called the said Act,

(a) the words "in any street or in any other place, whether open or closed, to which the public have access, or within sight of any person in any street or in any such other place" shall be repealed: and

(b) After clause (c) the following two clauses shall be added, namely :—

"or (d) in any area to which this clause is by special notification as aforesaid extended, without sufficient excuse neglects to supply any animal under his control with sufficient food or drink; or (e) in any area to which this clause is by special notification as aforesaid extended, without sufficient excuse abandons or turns loose any animal without making due provision for its sustenance"

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: In clause (2)....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The amendments of which the honourable member had given notice were disallowed as beyond time. He came and represented the matter. I told him that I would consider the question.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: Sir, I want to move an amendment, if the Honourable the Home Member accepts it.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: I cannot accept an amendment which is put in at the last moment.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: If honourable members look into the Standing Orders, they will find that although notice of amendments was time-barred the President has the discretionary power to allow it.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: In clause 2, line 7, I want to add the word 'urban' before the word 'area'.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You want to confine it to the rural area. That will be against the principle of the bill. In an amendment of that kind I think the Honourable the Home Member was perfectly right in saying that he could not accept. I cannot exercise my discretion in favour of a question like that.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: In line 9....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Mr. Surve's amendment is in line 8.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Sir, I move my amendment to clause 2, line 8. The clause as amended by the select committee reads as follows; I am reading clause (d):

"in any area to which this clause is by special notification as aforesaid extended, without sufficient excuse neglects to supply any animal under his control with sufficient food or drink."

My amendment is:

"After the words 'as aforesaid extended' substitute the following for lines 8 and 9:— 'with intent to cause starvation of any animal under his control, voluntarily neglects to supply it with food or drink: or'"

According to the clause as amended by the select committee, the burden of proving innocence is thrown on the accused person. That is what the addition of the words "sufficient excuse" means. As a matter of fact, the guilt of the accused person must be proved by the prosecution, and it is not that the accused should prove his innocence. The clause practically means to lay down that the accused is guilty unless he proves his innocence. The second point is that this clause does not take into account the criminal intention of the accused person. Neglect to supply food to animals can be divided into two classes. The first class comprises of those unconscionable people who try to get off their hands unserviceable cattle by some means or other. The other class consists of poor agriculturists who never wish that their cattle should go out of their hands but are handicapped by other circumstances beyond their control. The clause as amended by the select committee does not make any distinction between these two classes. My submission is that the intention of the accused person must be taken into consideration. Now, I will refer to the words which are added to this clause. They are "without sufficient excuse". As to these words I have seen the English statute, and I find that they do not refer to the definition of cruelty at all. The section from which these words appear to have been borrowed refers to the poisoning of cattle. Where an animal is poisoned, where a healthy animal is poisoned, of course it is the duty of the man who poisoned it to explain why he poisoned it. In such a case the practice of throwing the onus of proof on him can be justified. Here you borrow these particular words from that context and throw the burden of proving the innocence on the poor agriculturist. You say he shall prove his innocence and state why he has failed to give sufficient food to his animal, without taking into account the conditions prevailing in this Presidency. I will just read what I have read only very recently in a newspaper from Belgaum.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : I rise to a point of order, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Do not throttle him unless he is out of order. What is it ?

Mr. A. N. SURVE : It is said there :

"The grass being discontinued to be supplied to the public from the Government store, the merchants of Belgaum have raised their rates of fodder all at once."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Order, order. The honourable member ought not to refer to and quote from statements in newspapers. The honourable member ought to make statements on his own responsibility and not rely on any newspaper statements.

Mr. A. N. SURVE : I shall not do it then, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : It is second-hand information not tested by the honourable member's responsibility.

Mr. A. N. SURVE : I might state the effect of a single famine on the cattle population. I am reading from the Season and Crop Report for the year 1919-20 at page 8. It refers to agricultural stock. There the effect of a single famine on cattle is given.

"Being taken within six months of the close of the famine of 1918-19, the result indicates clearly the losses due to famine. The total number of cattle is now returned at 81·84 lakhs in he Presidency showing a net loss of".....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The honourable member is surely wasting the time of the Council by reading long extracts from these reports, and that on a matter with which we are all acquainted, viz., that during a famine time there is very little of fodder left and ryots are in a very hopeless condition. I think the Council does not require quotations and extracts from voluminous reports for that.

Mr. A. N. SURVE : I will only give the effect of a single famine on the cattle population. Our Presidency is suffering from famine once in every three years. So, in this particular Presidency where the Act is applied to urban areas in the mofussil, you should not enforce this particular clause. Though it may be preceded by a special notification, still it will act harshly against the owners of cattle.

Then I shall refer to the second group of words which has been added in this clause and it is "sufficient food". Now the English Act. . . . .

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. Mr. Surve, these will be two separate amendments. Is it not so? Or do they stand upon the same level?

Mr. A. N. SURVE: I am referring to sub-clause (d) . . . .

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: It is not a question of sub-clause (d). It is a question of the meaning and effect of your amendment. If the same arguments apply to both, then it would be one amendment. If the merits of the two are different, then they would be two separate amendments, and I shall have to put them separately.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: My amendment is this:

"Omit the words 'without sufficient excuse neglects to supply any animal under his control with sufficient food or drink, or': and insert instead 'with intent to cause starvation of any animal under his control, voluntarily neglects to supply it with food or drink, or'"

Now the objections which I raise do relate to this amendment which is one only. I have one more remark to make and that is, the English Act though it has the experience of 100 years and more does not definitely make the omission of giving food an offence. The definition that is given there is a very short one. It is to this effect:

"If any person shall by wantonly or unreasonably doing or omitting to do any act, or causing or procuring the commission or omission of any act, cause any unnecessary suffering to any animal, such person shall be guilty" of cruelty to animals.

So this English definition, which has the experience of 100 years behind it, does not make the omission to give food an offence in definite words, but here though our situation is so very precarious, still, we rush into this very definite definition. Therefore, my submission is that the clause as amended by the select committee deserves the very serious consideration of this House and we should consider whether my amendment is not preferable.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): Sir, I support the amendment. The words "sufficient excuse" I think will give sufficient excuse to the police to harass the poor, and that is what is objectionable. The police are always on the look-out for such an opportunity in the villages. And again, Sir, when we remember that the villagers or the people in the rural areas have not sufficient food to give to their own children and wives, how can they have sufficient food for their cattle? They are half starved during a scarcity year and in famine their condition is pitiable. Under these conditions it will be a regular hardship if the villagers are compelled to give sufficient food to their cattle. Generally the whole year round the cattle in the villages are fed on grass. Supposing a revenue officer or a veterinary officer takes into his head that grass is not sufficient food and that some grain should be given to the cattle he would just ask the police patel or the police officer to haul up the people who did not give grain to their animals before a magistrate. In that case, Sir, the police would unnecessarily harass the villagers and some of them would make money out of it; and when we look to the action of Government during famine times, namely that Government themselves allow about twelve pounds of grass as sufficient food for cattle, we will see the reason of the argument that the cultivator who feeds his animals on grass, should be placed outside the scope of this bill and should not be at the mercy of a revenue or police officer. So the amendment of my honourable friend Mr. Surve may be accepted by the Council. I have given notice of a similar amendment but as my honourable friend Mr. Surve's amendment is rather comprehensive and better worded than mine, I would rather not move mine but support Mr. Surve's amendment.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI (Ahmedabad City): Sir, I support the amendment of my honourable friend Mr. Surve because it helps to make clear the object of this bill. The object of this bill is to penalize deliberate starvation of animals and that object ought to be made clear so that there may be no mishandling of the provisions of the bill, when it is passed into an Act. Mere neglect to supply food or water ought not to be an offence unless it is done with an intent and a deliberate intent for the purpose of starving an animal, and I think by accepting the amendment of my honourable friend Mr. Surve you would be making clear the object for which we undertook this amending legislation, and I therefore hope that the House would accept the amendment.

Rao Bahadur S. D. GARUD (West Khandesh District): Mr. President, now that the rural areas are not to be excluded from the operation of this Act, I beg to support this amendment to the penalizing provisions of this bill so as to make them the least troublesome to rural areas. This bill is mainly intended to affect the hard-hearted owners who live in cities who deliberately starve their animals because perhaps they do not give sufficient return. In the urban areas when a horse or a cow or a buffalo fails to give a sufficient return to the owner, the owner deliberately cuts down its ration, and the animal is allowed to die by starvation which is not the case in the mofussil. In the mofussil the ryots love their animals and they do all they possibly can to keep them alive even when they know they are not paying a sufficient return to the owner. The difficulty in fact in rural areas is to persuade a ryot to give up animals which cease to give a sufficient return. Under these circumstances, I think the sheer inability of the ryot to properly feed his animals should not be penalised. Therefore, Sir, the application of this measure to the same extent in rural areas as it is in urban areas would hardly be justified. I think, Sir, that the amendment which has been moved by my honourable friend Mr. Surve is a reasonable one, and where it is not a question of penalizing a hard-hearted owner, the law should extend as much latitude as it is possible to extend. I, therefore, Sir, support the amendment.

Mr. J. CRERAR: Mr. President, while I have some sympathy with the motives which actuated my honourable friend to move this amendment, I must oppose it on two grounds, firstly, in regard to the principle of the bill, and secondly, in regard to its practical application. I must venture to take a similar objection to what was said by my honourable friends Rao Bahadur Garud and the Deputy President in their exposition of the scope and purpose of the bill which have already been accepted in principle by this Council. My honourable friend the Deputy President said the bill was intended solely to penalize deliberate cruelty. I venture to point out to the House that it is a very incorrect statement. The bill is intended to provide for the better care of animals and to penalize not only deliberate cruelty but also neglect resulting in the same consequences. My honourable friend the mover made two statements. He said the effect of this section will be to throw the burden of proof upon the accused in violation of a well known principle of criminal law. To that proposition I venture to demur. The section of the bill makes it clear that the facts establishing ill-treatment have got to be proved as clearly under this law as under any other law. The difference is that the select committee in considering this section have made very special and careful provision that any reasonable excuse on the part of an owner of the animal will receive consideration. My honourable friend the mover said that in any criminal act there must be a criminal intent and he used that argument as it appears to me to infer that the actual consequences of a criminal act must be necessarily and in all cases be part of the intention, which is a proposition that is not quite correct. There are several crimes known to the law, the necessary element of which is criminal negligence, and one of the main objects of this Act is to penalize not only deliberate cruelty but also criminal neglect.

My honourable friend Rao Bahadur Garud said that it is absurd to penalize any neglect of an animal in a village, but surely, Sir, the Act provides for that. If the owner is able to show that his failure to provide his aminal with food is, e.g., due to famine, that would be a complete answer and a sufficient excuse within the provisions of new clause (d) of section 3. Now, Sir, I venture to contend that the section as it stands is not framed in such a way as to be against the well-known provisions of the criminal law. On the contrary, it is entirely in pursuance of the principles of the bill and in consonance with the provisions of the criminal law. What, I think, the Council has to consider is that they have already accepted the principles of the bill and, therefore, they might give effect to such subsidiary provisions as are necessary to apply them. After all, the main point is this. We have to depend to a very large extent on the discretion of the magistrates in dealing with cases of this kind, and I think that honourable members who have supported this amendment show a rather unwarranted distrust of the competency of the magistrates to exercise their discretion in dealing with these cases. I oppose the amendment.

Rao Bahadur R. M. NILKANTH (Ahmedabad District): Sir, it appears to me that if this amendment is adopted, the section will be very difficult to work. The intention to starve an animal will be very difficult to prove. It may not be difficult to prove that an animal has been starved, but to prove that the owner intended to starve the animal is nothing but an attempt to examine the mind of the owner, and I think the effort will be futile, if the intention to starve is to be made an essential part of the offence. Again, if the word "sufficient" is taken away, the section will be futile, as even giving a single blade of grass may be said to be giving food to an animal and nobody could be convicted of starving an animal. If, therefore, the objections urged are cogent the best thing is not to adopt this section at all. But to make it utterly futile would not be advisable in my opinion.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Mr. President, I have to support the amendment, especially after my honourable friend Mr. Crerar has spoken on this matter, because we have got a clear admission from the assistant to the Honourable the Home Member that, "if the owner has been able to show sufficient cause, he can get off." That is to say, the burden in a case of this kind, though the context does not show it, lies, according to the Secretary,

[Mr. B. G. Pahalajani]

Home Department, upon the owner to show that he had sufficient cause. I would submit that if these words "without sufficient excuse" had not been there, the ordinary interpretation of the criminal law would have thrown the burden of proving neglect upon the prosecution. But, when these words "without sufficient excuse" are put in, the liability to interpret the word "neglect" will be to throw the burden of proof on the accused, and that is the way in which the Honourable the Home Secretary actually now interpreted the clause. I would submit, Sir, that I am not going to rely upon the arguments advanced by my honourable friends from the rural areas, whose arguments are strong enough to accept this amendment, but I will only place the practical way in which this Act is worked in the mofussil areas. And even in cities it is not the police that usually bring these cases—they rarely bring them—to court. But there are especial agencies created for the purpose of preventing cruelty to animals and they employ certain kind of men. In the mofussil, these are offences cognisable by even third class magistrates. The punishment prescribed is less than one month and therefore any magistrate can take cognisance of them. Now, if any animal is seen straying and if the person who chooses to bring that animal into court, as they did often even when the other sections were not proposed, then the poor man who comes in the court is never willing to take trouble to give the defence and usually admits his guilt in order to prevent his having to come to the court many times and to prevent the worry of the prosecution. That is the way in which the Act is worked. Now, Sir, if in addition to this, the burden is thrown upon any person to prove that there was sufficient excuse, what is the meaning of that "sufficient excuse"? You give the acceptance of the degree of excuse to a magistrate of any class, be he a third class or a second class magistrate, and, after all, Sir, we leave that term "sufficient excuse," an indefinite term, in a legal enactment like this. What is sufficient excuse to that particular person, to the cultivator, or any other poor accused may not appear and will not appear. Under those circumstances, when by putting in these words "sufficient excuse" you throw the burden of proof on the accused, then, Sir, the whole object of the clause is altogether defeated, because the man, then, with these words against him will be far more helpless than if these words "without sufficient excuse" did not occur there. Therefore, I submit, Sir, that as in a case of this kind, as in any criminal action, as this Act, as the Home Secretary said, is more to prevent culpable neglect and to prevent deliberate starvation, I think the burden in the case of culpable neglect must lie on the prosecution and not upon the accused, which consequence the words "sufficient excuse" involve. I therefore submit that the words "with intention to starve" are necessary there, especially when this Act, Sir, is not confined to particular areas where people can afford to prove sufficient cause.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI (Bombay City): Mr. President, I rise to oppose this amendment moved by my friend from Bombay. Sir, in consideration of this amendment we must see what the bill is providing, for the purpose of preventing cruelty to animals. As was in plain words and clear language expressed by my honourable friend Mr. Crerar, this bill has originated from certain instances of crimes of cruelty to animals which have taken place in the city of Bombay, for instance, cruelty to horses which were found and were abandoned and were allowed to be starved. Such sorts of cruelties are not necessarily practised only in the city of Bombay, but they could easily be practised in the mofussil areas. In the city of Bombay, we might hear of horses, but in the mofussil areas we might hear of other animals. But, all the same, we must prevent cruelty. Now, this amendment is introduced in order that the rural people should have more latitude to practise cruelty on their animals, and the urban people should have less latitude. That is one view with which this proposition is to be considered. Another view with which this amendment is moved is that the bill as it is presented to us shifts the burden of proof from the prosecution to the defence.

I beg to submit that these two considerations will not help rural areas at all. Another point is that the burden or onus of proof is now sought to be shifted from the prosecution to the accused and this could only be averted by the amendment which says " with intent to cause starvation of any animal under his control ". The intention the prosecution will have to infer from the conduct and from the circumstances and the condition of the animals, and from this inference the prosecution can arrest and prosecute the accused, and it is now the accused who has to clear himself from this charge or this offence. All the same the prosecution must gather certain information before the person is accused of the offence of cruelty to animals. In gathering this information, the prosecution will not go to the court without a case against the accused, there must be some burden of proof ; and I think it is absolutely wrong to argue that the bill is revolutionising the fundamental principle of criminal practice and of the Criminal Procedure Code, in other words, is shifting the burden of proof from the prosecution down to the accused. The present amendment, as it is in the bill, by adding the words " without sufficient excuse neglects to supply any animal under his control with sufficient food or drink " does not seek to throw the burden of proof on the accused, but on the contrary it indicates that the prosecution will feel the necessity of thinking twice before arresting a person and charging him with neglect and asking the court that the accused should show cause why he should not be tried. That is the intention of this amendment as put in the bill. No prosecution under this bill could be started unless and until the prosecuting parties have proof that the accused has not sufficient excuse. Then, after ascertaining that, they must see that the accused purposely or with intent neglected the animal. The word " neglect " indicates the intention on the part of the accused though it is not explicitly mentioned—it suggests that there must be some action which indicates the intention on the part of the accused. The amendment proposed by my friend from Bombay was very nicely criticised by my honourable friend from Ahmedabad, Rao Bahadur Ramanbhai Nilkanth, that if the amendment is carried, the exactness of that legislation will not be understood by the trying magistrate. For example, he made it quite clear that giving of straw hay to an animal might be construed as not giving food. The bill, as it is presented by the select committee, mentions quite clearly the intention of the legislature, what sort of food and what amount of food should be given. Therefore, the insertion of the words " without sufficier t excuse and with sufficient food " at once indicates what it means. It also indicates that sufficient food means food—hay and straw or anything else, which is enough or practically enough to keep the animal alive. The legislature must make it quite clear what its intentions are, and I submit that the amendment as presented by the select committee is quite clear and without ambiguous words as to what the intentions of the legislature are.

I think I must deprecate the idea of discrediting the magistrates, whether they are first class or second class or third class. The magistrates are experienced men and as presidents of advisory committees they have to use great discretion and their discretion, as explained by my honourable friend Mr. Crerar, will always be on the side of the rural people rather than on the side of the police.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District): Mr. President, I wish to remove a misapprehension which seems to me to be in the minds of the honourable mover and other honourable members of this House. The words "without sufficient excuse" were not originally there at all. The bill lays down that whoever neglects to feed an animal without sufficient excuse shall be punished and so on. So, it is in the interests of the neglector that the words in question were put in by the select committee. It was proposed at one time to add the word "wilfully" but it was thought that in order to give a wide scope to the clause that the words "without sufficient excuse" were better and therefore they were inserted in the bill.

Now, about the burden of proof, I think my legal friends know very well that in similar cases under the Abkari Act or the Forest Act it has been stated in express terms that the burden of proof will lie on the accused. Here it is not so stated. Therefore here I think it is not correct to say that the burden lies upon the accused. It is the complainant when he puts a case before the court who will have to prove that the accused has neglected without any sufficient excuse, that the man had no excuse, that he had enough fodder and yet he neglected to feed his animal and so on, so that in fact it will be difficult for the prosecution to secure a conviction unless and until the prosecutor proves to the hilt that the man was capable and possessed of means and had deliberately neglected to feed his animal. So under those circumstances I think the clause as it stands is really unnecessarily causing a misapprehension as regards the burden of proof being thrown on the accused and other fears, and on these grounds therefore I think the bill as it is should be passed and the amendment should not be accepted.

Khan Bahadur S. N. BHUTTO (Larkana District): Mr. President, I rise to assure my honourable friend Mr. Pahalajani that his fears regarding the people of rural areas being ignorant of law are groundless. The rural population is not now as ignorant as it was thought to be in days gone by. In my experience as a magistrate, I know rural people are getting well familiar with the law of the country, particularly when no small number of pleaders is available all over the country and cheap too. I therefore oppose the amendment.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA (Karachi City): Mr. President, I also support the amendment. We have heard a good deal on both sides of the question—some of the honourable members are of the opinion that the bill as presented should be passed and others are of opinion that sufficient safeguards should be provided in order that owners of cattle may not be unnecessarily harassed. It appears that the honourable mover and the supporters are also of opinion that some provision should be made to prevent deliberate cruelty to animals, whether in rural or in urban areas. The only question seems to me, how should the Act be worded? Do the honourable members mean to say that by putting in an amendment the working of the Act will tell less harshly on the people or that the bill as it is presented will be beneficial to the general public?

Now, if it is contended by the supporters of the bill, as presented, that the burden of proof shall be on the prosecution, I fail to see how the amendment means the contrary. On the contrary, the amendment provides sufficient safeguards, and if those safeguards are provided in the interests of the general public, who are going to be affected by the Act, I do not see why there should be so much opposition to the amendment that is placed before the Council. My honourable friend Mr. Haji is a Barrister-at-Law; so is my friend Khan Bahadur Bhutto. I am a legal man. We know from our experience how criminal cases are worked in the Presidency by the third class, second class, and first class magistrates. It is a mistake to think, as Khan Bahadur Bhutto does, that the people in the mofussil have now become conversant with law. If that be so, they would not stand in need of help from lawyers. My experience is that if they do know a little of the law, it is on the instruction of the police themselves.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I am afraid we are going beyond the necessities of this case. I do not want to interfere with any honourable member attacking the police, provided he keeps to the point. The question is whether the original clause puts the burden of proof upon the accused and whether the amendment puts the burden of proof upon the prosecution, and whether there is any radical difference between the language of the one and the other. If the lawyers in the Council will help the laymen in the elucidation of that point, instead of indulging in vague generalities about the burden of proof, I think we shall advance a good deal forward.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: Could you not give your opinion, Mr. President?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: No, I cannot, I can only rule what is relevant and what is not.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: My suggestion was that if you gave your opinion, a good deal of the time of the Council would be saved.

The wording of the bill as it is is very vague, and we find that there is a good deal of difference of opinion with regard to the wordings, the wording of the amendment and that of the bill. I say, as I submitted before, that in order to be on the safe side the wording should be such as to leave no loophole to anybody to construe the law in a different way.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Everybody agrees there. The whole House is with you. But how to bell the cat? Has Mr. Surve belled the cat?

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: The solution, Sir, is that we should all unanimously accept the amendment, so that there may be no doubt about it. That is why I asked you how to bell the cat. The only course to take is, without any dissentient voice, to say 'ayes' to the amendment of Mr. Surve. But, so far as the shifting of the burden of proof is concerned, I will only say that according to the law of evidence the burden always lies on the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused, because every law presumes an accused person to be innocent till he is proved guilty. My friend Mr. Haji said that the prosecution must bring a primâ facie case before the court. I would not go to that extent. I might simply ask the court to have the animal produced before the court, in order to have ocular proof whether it has been starved or not, and if I produced no further proof, the result will be that I am bound to be convicted at the sweet will of the magistrate. In this case, in order to protect the interests of the poor people in the mofussil, who cannot plead for themselves, and who cannot be expected to know all the provisions of the law, the more necessity is there for the legislature to see that the people are not worried, or harassed, or sentenced by officials, in charge of the cases. Even in civil cases, it is the experience of lawyers.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: We are not dealing with civil cases; we are dealing with the language of the amendment.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: Supposing a plaintiff brings a civil action for liability in the case of negligence, it is still incumbent on the plaintiff to prove.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. Negligence in civil cases is different from criminal negligence. Therefore, civil cases have no application here.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: I want to point out that even in civil cases of negligence the burden of proof lies on the opposite side. He may not succeed if he does not prove want of resonable and probable cause and if he once makes out a primâ facie case then the burden shifts on to the defendant to prove that there was no negligence on his part. In the first instance, the plaintiff has to proceed with his case. Therefore, in criminal cases, when we drag a man to court, and sentence him to imprisonment in default of fine, we must be careful to see that it leaves the magistrate in no doubt as to how he is to exercise his discretion. I may tell him that the law ought to be interpreted in a particular way, but he may reply " I do not want your interpretation, because the wording of the law leaves it to me to interpret it. Why has not the legislature made the wording of the section quite clear ? I have got a loophole to interpret it in my own way, and my view is that a particular clause in the bill does not place the burden on the prosecution, but shifts it on to the accused to prove his innocence, and he must produce evidence to prove his poor condition. There is primâ facie evidence for me to convict him, and he is guilty to my satisfaction." The result will be that the poor man will have to suffer, though there may be so much evidence before the magistrate, and so these are the circumstances under which an innocent man may be proved guilty. But if the prosecution, in the first instance, is asked to prove a primâ facie case against the accused, the prosecution shall be obliged to go into all the circumstances of the case, and it will not be possible for the prosecution to drag any person into a court of law and get him sentenced. Therefore, the burden of proof will be on the accused. I therefore, submit that, in order to see that we are not abused by poor ryots, we should not he a party to such an enactment, which will work harshly on them. It is up to every councillor to see that he is not criticised for being a party to an enactment which will work against his own constituency. I am therefore strongly in support of this amendment.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): Mr. President, now that the provisions are to be applied not only to the urban areas but also to rural areas, it becomes all the more necessary to see how the bill will be worked in the mofussil. The section says " without sufficient excuse neglects to supply any animal, etc." Knowing as I do the magistrates, as soon as a famished or starved animal is produced before them, they will start with the presumption that the animal has been neglected. The question which will arise then is whether there is sufficient excuse for such neglect, and then it will be argued that the man has no excuse to neglect to supply food to his cattle, unless he proves to the contrary. his is what exactly happens even in city magistrates' courts. As this clause is going to be applied to rural areas, it is much better to make it absolutely clear. The section as it is worded throws the burden of proof on the defence. The Home Secretary and my honourable friend Mr. Haji pointed out that the burden of proof will be on the defence. If those honourable gentlemen, who are well versed in law, hold that opinion, the magistrates also will be forced to hold the same view. I beg to submit that the House will be well-advised in accepting the amendment.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): There are three cases in which guilty intention is not required to be proved. (The honourable member was at this point for sometime inaudible). Therefore, in this case the criminal intention of the accused person must be proved.

Second point is about neglect. I do not say that neglect should not be made criminal. I am certainly for making deliberate neglect criminal, but in our province the question is not about neglect. Owners of cattle might not get fodder. Owing to railway difficulty, the Government itself may not be in a position to supply grass to the famine affected areas. In such cases this Act would work very hard against the poor agriculturists. As the High Court has ruled that the present provision in the bill is inadequate we must make some sort of provision. Otherwise, if we neglect that duty, there will be unconscionable persons who will take advantage of the situation. What I suggest is that we should make our provision wide enough to include all those persons who are deliberately cruel to animals, and yet we must exclude the innocent agriculturists who have no intention of starving their cattle, but who cannot help doing so in the circumstances in which they find themselves and be lenient to them. My amendment fulfils these conditions.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Mr. President, the Council has accepted the proposition that we ought to add cruelty of the nature of neglect. There are provisions already for dealing with cases of deliberate cruelty. The House came to that conclusion, because it was pointed out that there was not sufficient provision in the Act to deal with neglect of animals. That was pointed out in a case which came before the High Court.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI: Will the honourable member state the case.....

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: If the honourable member is not rising to a point of order, is he in order.....

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI: I want an explanation on the particular point.....

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: The honourable member is not entitled to ask for an explanation.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: It is not a personal explanation: it is a matter of argument and that cannot be raised now.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: I know from personal knowledge that it was a bad case, having been a member of that Bench of the High Court. The Council.....

(An honourable member at this point interrupted.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I hope honourable members will not interrupt a speaker in the midst of an argument.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: The Council, Sir, has accepted the position that neglect of that kind ought to be penalised. The honourable mover of this amendment has given his whole case away in his reply. He has admitted that the object of his amendment is to make futile this proposed alteration in the Act. He has admitted that his amendment will make it impracticable to punish neglect. And I put it to members whether the honourable mover is not perfectly right. I entirely agree with him that if his amendment is accepted it will make absolutely futile this amending bill. It will require the prosecution to prove that the person who has neglected to feed his animal did so with the intent all along, with the actual intent, to cause starvation of the animal—that will be the effect of the words of my honourable friend 'with intent to cause starvation'—to prove that he withheld the necessary water thinking all the while "I am going to cause starvation of the animal;" that he refused to put grass before it: why? because he was thinking "I am going to cause starvation: I am going to allow that animal to die of starvation." I submit that it is ridiculous. What is required is to punish negligence: It is to teach people to look after their animals better. It is not really to punish a man who sits down like an ordinary criminal saying "I will see that animal starve; I won't give him water; I won't give him food." That is not the sort of thing aimed at by this bill. That would be punished under the existing Act. I am sure the honourable members will agree with me that we ought to go beyond that and that we ought to punish ordinary negligence. We want to teach people to be kind to their animals. That is the principle which has been accepted, and I submit, Sir, that the amendment proposed will entirely do away with that principle. Therefore, I submit, Sir, that the draft as proposed after very careful deliberation by the select committee ought to be accepted by this House. The select committee recognises that there might be cases of hardship: they recognise that there might be famine conditions, that the man might be too poor, that there might be a hundred reasons why it was not a case in which he ought to be punished, and for that purpose the select committee have put in those words "without sufficient excuse" in order to make it possible for the man to lay all the facts before the court, to say "This unfortunate animal has been starved, but it was not really my fault; I really did my best and I did not mean to starve it." And if these facts are laid before the court,—the magistrates are reasonable—the magistrate will say: "I understand you are not to blame."

With regard to the point raised as regards the burden of proof, well, this does not come under the ordinary rule of evidence as to an exception. It comes under an entirely different rule: it comes under the ordinary rule of commonsense, that facts which are particularly within the knowledge of a man must be proved by that man. Now, this is a commonsense rule which has been laid down in the law of evidence, because it is the only practical way of getting at the truth. And this amendment which has been made by the select committee brings into force that commonsense rule, that if there are exceptional circumstances the man who knows about them should be the man who should prove them. If there are sufficient excuses, then let the man come forward and say so, and if he says so they will be accepted by the magistrate. I submit, Sir, that it is a very reasonable provision, a provision which appears in many other sections of law, and I submit that it is a provision which can safely be accepted by the members of this House.

There is only one other matter to note and that is that a greater part of the argument has been based upon the agriculturist. It is said the unfortunate agriculturist in the districts does not know law and has not the help of any pleader, it seems there must now be a dearth or scarcity of pleaders not only in the presidency but also in Sind; the unfortunate agriculturist is smitten by famine and is therefore unable to save his animals from starvation; he will be punished for lack of pleaders for the animals he will lose in the serious famines which scourge this Presidency! We do not have famines fortunately in Sind, so, it applies not so much to Sind. My reply to that is, in the first place these provisions won't apply to the agriculturist, because they have got to be specially notified to rural areas, and it is not the agriculturist that we want to get at at all. It is not the agriculturist who does these things. It is the man in the towns, in the cities, the man who is trying to make money out of his animals and who in order to make more money starves them; the man who makes money by employing animals to drive tongas, but won't spend one pie to buy sufficient grass or any other kind of food for them. That is the man we want to get at, and the provisions of this bill sufficiently provide that we shall get at him. We have no intention of extending it to the poor agriculturist; we do not want to get hold of him when he is smitten by famine, and thus unfortunately allows his animal to starve.

Thus there are two points to be urged against this amendment. The first is that if this amendment is passed it will make futile the provisions of the bill and the second is that the bill is not aimed at the agriculturist: it won't affect him if there is a famine, which would surely be a reasonable excuse. The magistrates are reasonable and if they are not reasonable they have the sessions courts over them and over the sessions courts the High Court. I submit, Sir, that this amendment ought to be rejected by the Council.

Question put that the words " without sufficient excuse neglects to supply any animal under his control with sufficient " do stand part of the clause.

Motion carried.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Now, we go on to clause 2, line 12. Mr. Surve will move his amendment.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: Sir, may I be permitted to move an amendment?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. We cannot go back: we have to go forward.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: We dealt with Mr. Surve's amendment.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I am sorry. It is no use going back. The Standing Order says that you must move forward and you cannot go back. If we do not stick to that rule, we shall be always revolving in a circle.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: May I move, Sir,.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I am afraid you cannot. You have already said in your speech that you accepted Mr. Surve's amendment and you would abide by the decision on it.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: I am moving another amendment, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: We ought to have had notice of it.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: I gave notice, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You gave notice which is time-barred under the Standing Orders.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: It is under your discretionary power.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I would not allow that. I would have considered that point but you have foreclosed your speech by supporting Mr. Surve's amendment and you have merged your amendment in that of Mr. Surve.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Sir, my second amendment runs as follows:—

> "In clause 2 line 12 after the word 'sustenance' add the following words:—
> 'excepting the dedication of an animal in a manner required by the religion or religious rites and usages of any race, sect, tribe or class.'"

Sir, the amendment refers to sub-clause (e) of clause 2. It is an addition at the end of the word 'sustenance' and the reason for this amendment is that in this country of many religions and faiths under certain religious customs animals are dedicated to certain deities. Personally I know cases of fowls and goats being dedicated to certain deities and I am told that even bulls are dedicated. So in order not to interfere with the religious susceptibilities of any person, it is better to be on the safe side and make an exception about such cases in which the animals are dedicated under the peculiar religious customs. The condition of performance of rites would be a safeguard that no man will take undue advantage of the privilege conferred by my amendment.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Mr. President, I think, I can cut this matter short if I refer the honourable member to section 11. That section provides for the exemptions to which he refers and I should be quite prepared to put in a couple of words in section 11 to provide for this necessary exemption.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: I think section 11 relates to the killing of an animal.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Therefore I propose to put in the words, "abandon or turn loose". I hope that will meet the wishes of the honourable member.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: If the Honourable the Home Member undertakes to make that exception I am quite prepared to withdraw my amendment.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I want to know whether section 11 is a part of this bill.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: It is the proper place to put in this amendment. It is the right place to put it in in the general exemption of section 11. It may be taken as a consequential amendment, Sir. I submit that as such it will be perfectly proper to put it before the Council. I suggest, instead of the amendment as proposed, inserting before the words "offence to" the words "abandon or turn loose or" to bring it in the right place, namely, section 11.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I am afraid the Honourable the Home Member does not see my point so far as the point of order is concerned. On second reading when we are considering a bill clause by clause the rule is that we must deal with the bill within its four corners. Now the four corners here do not include section 11 of the Act. Therefore, if an amendment of this kind is to be accepted it must come in here only and not in any section of the Act outside the bill.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: I submit, Sir, that section 11 is an exception which applies to the whole of the Act, that you cannot read any one section of the Act without reading section 11 into it, and therefore as we are amending this clause 3, we must read section 11 into it. It is within your power, Sir, to rule.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I am merely dealing with the point according to the Standing Orders and practice. The Standing Orders expressly say I must deal with the bill clause by clause as it is, i.e., that is my difficulty.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : I will then put it in another way and undertake, Sir, to bring in a special bill to put in these words in section 11.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : What is the objection to accepting this as an addition to the section of the bill by way of amendment ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : Because it is not the right place to put it in and if the honourable member consents and if you think fit, I am prepared myself to give notice of the amendment in section 11.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : If I make a precedent of this, I shall be going beyond the established rules, and the rule is—and it is a rule invariably observed in the House of Commons, on the third reading of a bill which is equivalent to our second reading—you are confined to the four corners of the bill as it is and you cannot go outside it. I must deal with the bill clause by clause and not the Act.

Mr. A. N. SURVE : As the Honourable the Home Member has consented to bring in a special bill embodying the amendment of which I have given notice.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Honourable member, Mr. Surve, consents to withdraw the amendment on the distinct understanding that Government will introduce a special bill for this purpose.

Amendment withdrawn by leave.

Clause 2 ordered to stand part of the bill.

Clause 3 (Amendment of section 6 of XI of 1890).

For section 6 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely :—

"6. (1) If any person employs in any work or labour any animal which by reason of any disease, infirmity, wound, sore or other cause is unfit to be so employed, or permits any such unfit animal in his possession or under his control to be so employed, he shall be punished with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees.

Penalty for employing animal unfit for labour.

(2) The Local Government may, by general or special order, appoint places to be infirmaries for the treatment and care of animals in respect of which offences against sub-section (1) have been committed.

(3) The Magistrate before whom a prosecution for such an offence has been instituted may direct that the animal in respect of which the offence is alleged or proved to have been committed shall be sent for treatment and care to an infirmary and be there detained until, except as provided for in sub-section (4), it is in his opinion, or in the opinion of some other Magistrate, again fit for the work or labour on which it has been ordinarily employed. If however the Magistrate decides that the animal will never again be fit he may direct that it shall be destroyed or sent to a pinjrapole.

(4) Within any specified area the Local Government may, when any animal has been sent to an infirmary under sub-section (3), authorize any veterinary officer to issue a certificate that in his opinion such animal is fit for the work or labour on which it has been ordinarily employed and such animal shall not be released from detention unless and until such certificate shall have been issued or the Magistrate directs that it shall be destroyed or sent to a pinjrapole.

(5) The cost of the transport to the infirmary and the treatment, feeding and watering of the animal in the infirmary shall be payable by the owner of the animal according to such scale of rates as the District Magistrate or, in the case of an infirmary in a Presidency town, the Commissioner of Police may from time to time prescribe.

(6) If the owner refuses or neglects to pay such cost and to remove the animal within such time as a Magistrate may prescribe, the Magistrate may direct that the animal be sold and that the proceeds of the sale be applied to the payment of such cost.

(7) The surplus, if any, of the proceeds of the sale shall, on application made by the owner within two months after the date of the sale, be paid to him.

(8) If the cost incurred under sub-section (5) shall exceed the proceeds of the sale, the excess to such extent as shall seem reasonable shall be recoverable from the owner as a fine on the order of a Magistrate, provided that no such order shall be made without the owner being given a reasonable opportunity of urging his objections, if any, before the Magistrate."

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): The next amendment that stands in my name is an addition to sub-clause (3) of clause 3 after the last word "pinjrapole". The amendment reads as follows:—

"In clause 3, line 16, after the word 'pinjrapole' add the words 'provided that unless the owner of the animal assents no direction under the latter part of the sub-section shall be given except upon the evidence of a veterinary officer'."

My object in proposing this amendment is that a magistrate cannot have the technical knowledge to decide whether an animal will ever recover or not. If the owner assents, there will be no objection to the magistrate passing the order, but if he says that his animal should not be destroyed or sent to the pinjrapole, unless some man having the knowledge of the diseases of animals comes forward and says that the animal is incurable, then a veterinary officer must certify that the animal is incurable; otherwise there would be no reasonable guarantee to hold that an animal having a chance of recovery might not be destroyed. To safeguard that contingency, I have added this clause. With these remarks I will leave my amendment in the hands of the Council.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Mr. President, I regret I cannot accept this amendment, because.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: As no one else has spoken on the amendment, if you speak now, it will be your final reply. The mover of the amendment may ask for a reply.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: I have no reply to make, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You have no reply to make, as there is no one to reply to.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: I cannot accept the amendment, Mr. President, because in the first place it is rather vague, and.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is it necessary for the Honourable the Home Member to reply? From the way the House has treated the amendment, I think it requires no powder and shot.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Well, Sir, I merely say that I cannot accept the amendment.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Sir, the next amendment which I have to move is to sub-clause (5) of the same clause (clause 3), by adding a few words after the word "cost" in line 23. The amendment will read as follows:—

"In clause 3, sub-clause (5), after the word 'cost' add the words 'not exceeding the price that the animal would fetch if it is sold'."

In this bill the owner of an animal is made liable to pay for the cost of treatment and of transport to the infirmary and certain other matters, and the owner is liable even if the cost of treatment exceeds the value of the animal. The original Act makes a specific provision in clause (7) to section 6 that the owner shall in no case be liable to make any payment in excess of the price realised by the sale of the animal. So in this case the amending bill is trying to go beyond the limit which is placed by the principal Act. The principal

[Mr. A. N. Surve]

Act definitely states that the owner in no case shall be liable for the payment of extra money that will have to be paid after the animal is sold.

(At this stage the Honourable the President withdrew and the Deputy President occupied the chair.)

Supposing the animal is sold for Rs. 100 and the cost of treatment comes to Rs. 125, in that case, according to the amending bill, the owner will have to pay Rs. 25 more and under the original Act he will be liable to pay nothing; he will only lose his animal. Therefore I submit the amending bill should not exceed the principle which is laid down by the original Act. For that reason I have brought this amendment before this House.

(At this stage the Honourable the President resumed the chair.)

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE (Poona District): Sir, I wish to support the amendment that has been brought forward by my honourable friend Mr. Surve. The position that he has taken up is that the owner of an animal should not be made to pay more than the cost of the animal itself. The clause as it stands at present will make him liable to pay for cost in excess of the price that the animal will fetch. That will be a distinct hardship upon the owner of the animal and I think therefore that the Council will do well to accept the amendment that has been proposed.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Mr. President, I support the amendment in view of the existence of another clause—sub-clause (8) of clause 3 of the same bill—because if this is allowed to remain, sub-clause (8) will be somewhat inconsistent. This sub-clause (5) creates only a liability:—

> The cost of the transport to the infirmary and the treatment, feeding and watering of the animal in the infirmary shall be payable by the owner of the animal according to such scale of rates as the District Magistrate or, in the case of an infirmary in a Presidency town, the Commissioner of Police, may from time to time prescribe.

Therefore sub-clause (5), line 60, creates the liability to pay by the words "shall be payable" and once there is a liability to pay, the whole cost is to be determined and, according to the last sub-clause (8), it is recoverable not only from the sale-proceeds of the animal but from all other property of the person owning that animal like a fine. I therefore ask the House to consider sub-clause (5) and the amendment that is proposed by my honourable friend Mr. Surve. In this case I find notice of amendment has been given by many members of the House with respect to sub-clause (8). Sub-clause (5) creates a liability to pay the cost which may and will exceed the price of the animal. The Honourable the Home Member states that this is intended more or less to penalise the action of many owners in large cities who neglect or deliberately throw their animals out on the streets, but, as the clause stands, I submit that in areas outside cities where any poor man may neglect to maintain his animal, and that animal is sent to the pinjrapole for treatment, and if that animal is sold or if it is kept a long time, the owner of that animal will have to pay at the usual rates fixed by a District Magistrate or a Commissioner of Police. It is very likely that in these days of high prices the cost of treatment will not exceed the cost of the animal itself. When the cost of the treatment of the animal has to be recovered from the owner, the animal will be sold by public auction and should the sale-proceeds fall short of the amount due from the owner, his other property which shall usually include other animals will be liable to distress under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. In such cases the owners of the cattle not only lose the animal sent to the pinjrapole but their other cattle and are liable to lose their other property as well. I, therefore, submit that even if in large cities sub-clause (5) may be used well, outside the large cities it will engender considerable hardship and the House may well consider, in considering the case of pinjrapoles which need money for treatment of animals, the case also of the owners of cattle and allow the amendment to be passed.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District): Mr. President, perhaps the honourable mover of the amendment assumes that the cost, even though it exceeds the price of the animals, will be recoverable in all cases from the owner. It was to make the provisions of the bill quite clear that sub-clause (8) was added, and therefore the operation of sub-clause (5) has been limited by sub-clause (8), and therefore I submit that this sub-clause (8) acts as a necessary safeguard, and, therefore, it is not that in every case where the cost exceeds the sale-proceeds that the excess shall be recoverable. Sub-clause (8) goes on to say,

"If the cost incurred under sub-section 5 shall exceed the proceeds of the sale, the excess to such extent as shall seem reasonable shall be recoverable from the owner, as a fine on the order of a magistrate, provided also that no such order shall be made without the owner being given a reasonable opportunity of urging his objections, if any, before the magistrate."

So you will find, Sir, that there are two safeguards already laid down. The honourable mover of the amendment wants to do away with these excesses in all cases. Sub-clause (8) says that if there is an excess, then the limit is to be put by the magistrate and only such excess as shall seem reasonable under the circumstances shall be recoverable, and also an opportunity is given to the person affected to put forward his side of the case which may perhaps enable him to induce the magistrate to come to a conclusion that no excess should be paid. Therefore I submit that there are sufficient safeguards already provided in sub-clause (8) which renders the present amendment unnecessary, and, therefore, I think, sub-clause (5), as it stands, is not an absolute clause but, as I have said, that it is limited in its operation by sub-clause (6), and that limitation is a safeguard to drive away the fears which are entertained about the owners of cattle being held liable to pay excess. The magistrate has to consider whether a man has acted in any way to make himself liable to pay excess. Therefore I say that the amendment is unnecessary and should be rejected.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Mr. President, my honourable friend Rao Bahadur Kale assumes that it is not possible that the bill for treating an animal will ever exceed the value of that animal, but the framers of the original Act had that view before them when they enacted clause (7) to section 6. It distinctly lays down that if the cost of treatment should exceed, then the owner of the animal was not liable for that excess. He points out that there is a safeguard in sub-clause 8, but after all it is in the discretion of the magistrate. Why not leave the poor agriculturists quite free ? That is the question. The first thing is, he has been fined ; the second thing is, he has been made to pay the cost of treatment and even perhaps after the treatment, he may find that the animal is not serviceable to him for the work which he wants to exact from that animal. In that case, he will have to buy a new animal, and, at the same time, feed the animal which is unserviceable to him. The difficult position of the agriculturist in these circumstances may well be conceived. Again, supposing the man is made to pay the excess, how is that to be recovered ? It will be recovered as a fine. That would mean that, if the man is not able to pay it, his movables will be liable to be sold. On behalf of the agriculturists, I say that it would be very hard on them. Therefore, I hope that the amendment which I have proposed will be accepted by the House.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Mr. President, the Council has already accepted the principle that the owner who ill-treats his animal and consequently causes the expense of treating it in hospital should, in certain instances, be liable for the whole cost of the treatment incurred by the hospital. If the honourable member had desired to go back upon this question of principle, it seems to me that it would have been more appropriate to have argued it at the time of the second reading. The honourable member ought to have moved an amendment to restore the words which have been deliberately omitted from sub-section (7). The bill omitted these words from sub-section (7):

"The owner shall not be liable to make any payment in excess of the proceeds of the sale."

The honourable member ought to have brought a definite amendment to put those words back in sub-section (7). It is not the right place to put them in sub-section (5). Apart from that technical objection, it seems to me the principle has been accepted that the owner who has been guilty of ill-treating his animal ought reasonably to be called upon to pay the expense of treating that animal in the hospital. The select committee carefully considered the question, realised that there might be occasions when the owner of the animal might not be able to pay the whole cost, and provided in the following sub-section (8) that the man should be given an opportunity of putting forward his special case in which the cost ought not to fall upon him, but on the hospital. If the man should go to the authorities and say in vain "Here is a sick animal, which I cannot afford to feed and which I do not want to make use of; let it be removed to the pinjrapole", that would be a perfectly good case for saying that the man ought not to pay anything in excess of what the animal would fetch, and the balance should fall on the hospital. Therefore, the select committee put those words in sub-section (8), to enable all the circumstances of each particular case to be carefully considered. The magistrate would carefully consider all the circumstances, and only where there was a clear case in which the liability ought to be placed on the owner would there be a decision against him by the magistrate.

I have only this to add, that it is not really the rural agriculturist that we are trying to get at; it is such persons as cattle and tonga owners, who want to make money out of their animals, and yet not spend a pie to treat them in hospital after they have suffered from overwork or ill-treatment. I submit that this amendment ought not to be accepted by the House.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Mr. President, my next amendment relates to the same clause, and it is:

"In line 23, clause 3, omit the words 'transport to the infirmary and the.'"

The reason of my amendment is that the animal, being a material piece of evidence, is brought by the prosecution to the court, and the cost of bringing the animal from the place of the owner to the court is always borne by the the prosecution. What the clause in the bill seeks to do is to throw the cost of transport from the court house to the infirmary on the accused person. Now, we are told that the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Act is applicable only in urban areas and in cantonments, where there are infirmaries. So, the cost of transporting the animal from the court house to the infirmary will be small.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : It is not the transport of the animal to the court house, but the transport to the infirmary. If the animal is so ill that it cannot walk, it is necessary to have a cart to carry it to the infirmary.

Mr. A. N. SURVE : The second thing is that there are no motor ambulances for animals to be found in the mofussil. The animal will have to be carried, perhaps in a cart, or on foot, or some men will have to carry it. So, the relief to the animal is not obtained, and, at the same time, the owner of the animal is saddled with the cost. So, I beg to propose that the accused person be free from this liability of the cost of transport of the animal from the court house to the infirmary.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District) : Mr. President, I think the bill was referred to the select committee to soothe it down and not to make it stricter by the addition of the words " cost of transport to the infirmary, etc. " But that appears to have been done, and it is attempted to put the cost of transport to the infirmary on the owner. I should think that the revenue already given by the passage of the previous clauses of the bill should be enough to the Honourable the Home Member, and we should now try not to place any further burden on the agriculturists or the owners of animals. On the contrary, why should not the doctor go to the animal at its place and treat it there ? It would not cost Government anything, it might only cause the absence of the doctor in the veterinary hospital for some time ; it would cost him little if anything to journey say six miles to where the sick animal was being kept. So, I should rather wish that these words might be dropped.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK (Deccan Sardars and Inamdars) : Mr. President, I strongly support the amendment which is now put forward. I appeal to the Honourable the Home Member to accept the amendment in the light of the conditions that now exist in the districts. The Honourable the Home Member, perhaps, might be aware that in the rural areas, there are no infirmaries or even veterinary hospitals to which animals could be sent very easily. If this Act is extended in rural areas, and if an animal is to be sent either to Bombay or to Poona, the cost of transport will be so heavy that perhaps the poor agriculturist will be deprived of two other cattle or even his house. I think that, when the bill was before the House for the first time this was dropped, and the select committee has not made out a sufficiently strong case for inserting this new clause. I hope the Honourable the Home Member will accept the amendment.

Mr. S. K. BOLE (Bombay City, North) : Mr. President, I rise to support the amendment. In Bombay ambulance cars are used when animals are taken to the infirmary. The Honourable the Home Member said that it was for the purpose of taking lame animals to the infirmary. It has not been expressly stated so here in the bill. This provision might be abused and every animal might be taken in ambulance cars. The agents of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals will engage an ambulance car and have a joyful ride with the animals, but it is the poor owner that will have to bear the charges. Under these circumstances, I think it would be better if these words are omitted.

Mr. F. C. GRIFFITHS : Addressed the House, but was not audible.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA (Bombay City, North): Mr. President, I do not agree with my friend, Mr. Bole, who, I believe, has some practical experience of the working of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. I am quite sure he will not be in a position to point out a single instance, where the police have engaged motor ambulance for the transport of animals, and enjoyed a drive in it, except in extreme cases where the animals could not walk or were incapacitated. What we have to consider is whether the owner ought to be made to pay for the transport or not. Sir, on the face of it, it is evident that the Act is more to be applied in the city than in rural areas, and if that be so I do not see why the owner should be permitted to go scot-free, when he has been convicted for the neglect of his animal. It is but fair that he should pay the charges for the transport of the animal. Mr. Bole said that the police will have a pleasant ride in the ambulance car, and with a view to have a ride they will engage an ambulance car and make the owner pay for it. I beg to differ from him as I have not come across any such instance in my capacity as Honorary Presidency Magistrate, and I am sure Mr. Bole has more to quote.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Sir, the difficulty arises from the fact that this Act which is primarily for the city of Bombay is not restricted to urban areas only. From the amendments and opposition it is quite clear that there is on one side the fear of the honourable members coming from rural areas, and on the other the explanation of the honourable members coming from city which relates to the conditions prevailing there. It is therefore natural that honourable members coming from rural areas fear that they will not be able to bear the burden that is intended for people living in cities. Therefore, it is incumbent on the Government and the Honourable the Home Member to take into consideration the fact that the bill as it is passed by the select committee is not satisfactory and that there is a cross purpose running through the bill as it is amended. It is still for the Honourable the Home Member to see whether he could not at this stage consider how to meet the objections of the honourable members coming from rural areas. As it has been put by the honourable members from rural areas this amendment is quite necessary in rural areas. It may not be necessary in the conditions prevailing in cities. It is quite apparent that if an animal is in a village 25 miles away from the dispensary, the cost of transport will be very heavy. The Act is not restricted to urban areas, and according to it the owner will have to bear the charges. Why not accept the amendment or try to mend it in some way to satisfy the conditions prevailing in cities, and to satisfy the members coming from rural areas?

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Sir, I beg to support this amendment. A just apprehension has been caused in the minds of honourable members from rural areas. This legislation may be quite good for conditions prevailing in Bombay. The Act has been introduced into some taluka areas, and we all know what it means for the ryots to be at the mercy of the police peons and subordinate magistrates. This legislation may be very good for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, but it is very bad for the ryots. I, therefore, pray that this amendment be adopted and the provision that is now threatening the ryots be removed.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Mr. President, I regret I cannot support this amendment. The honourable mover seems to be under a misapprehension. He apparently would leave the sick animal to remain sick where it falls: he would not remove it to the infirmary at all. But it seems to me that if the animal is being ill-treated, so ill-treated that it cannot walk to the dispensary, surely it is only right that means should be taken to transport it there. It is not very often that it will be necessary to move it by special transport, but where it is necessary owing to the ill-treatment the owner has caused it, it seems to me only fair that the owner should be called upon to pay the expenses of the transport. That will happen not very often, but occasionally, in Bombay: it will probably happen scarcely if at all in any other town or mofussil, but if it does happen it means merely transporting it to the local dispensary; it does not mean transporting it right down to Bombay. The incident happens only rarely in mofussil or rural areas. The animal will be transported to the local dispensary and the cost of transport will be small. Therefore, I think that the members from the mofussil need have no fear that they will be running into the large cost of transporting animals from the mofussil to Bombay. I submit, Sir, that this amendment ought to be rejected by this House.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I now rule the last two amendments of which notice has been given by Mr. Surve to be out of order, viz.:

New clauses 4 and 5.—Add the following two clauses at the end:

"4. Any person convinced on a trial held by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate, may appeal to the District Magistrate.

"5. Any person convicted on a trial held by a District Magisrate or a Presidency Magistrate may appeal to the High Court."

[The President]

I rule them to be out of order on the ground, which I hope will be borne in mind by honourable members for future guidance, that new clauses cannot be added to a bill on the second reading because on the second reading we must confine ourselves within the four corners of the bill, and that is in accordance with our Standing Orders which are distinct:

"When a motion has been agreed to by the Council that a Bill be read a second time, the President shall submit the Bill to the Council clause by clause....."

My duty is only to submit to the Council the clauses in the bill. There may be an exception to that rule, for instance new clauses may be inserted as consequential clauses. We had to deal with that question in connection with the Bombay Municipal Bill, but special circumstances apart, the general rule must be rigidly adhered to on the second reading. The amendments now concerned raise a new question altogether about penalties, and are an amendment of the criminal law. That would require very careful consideration on the ground of principle. The honourable member ought to have brought forward this point of the amendments at the first reading. I have, therefore, no hesitation in ruling these amendments out of order.

The Council is adjourned to 2 p.m. on Friday, the 22nd September 1922.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. Are there any new members desirous of taking their seats?

The following member then made the prescribed affirmation of allegiance to His Majesty the King-Emperor and took his seat in the Council:—

Khan Bahadur Haji Amirali Lahori.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS BILL.

(Consideration of clause 3 resumed).

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Sir, I beg to move—

"Omit sub-clause (8) of clause 3 of the bill."

This sub-clause, Sir, refers to the excess charge which is to be recovered from the owner of the animal. In the select committee this sub-clause has undergone an amendment. The change effected by that committee is that the excess to such extent only as seems reasonable may be recovered. Sir, this shows that there are likely to be cases in which the cost of treatment is likely to exceed the value of the animal, and to be not harsh upon the owner, I beg to move that the excess should not be recovered from him at all.

The sub-clause as amended by the select committee says that the owner may, if he has any objections to urge, do so before the magistrate. But, Sir, what reason or excuse an illiterate agriculturist can have to offer but his poverty? And poverty or poor condition may not satisfy a magistrate. He will say, if you own cattle it is your duty that you shall not come under the operation of this Act. It is not that the agriculturist comes under it voluntarily, but there are cases in which the matter is beyond his control. Sir, I belong to the Ratnagiri district though I do not represent it, and it is my experience of that district that many animals while they are out for grazing fall down from cliffs when they are fighting with each other and have their legs broken. Now anybody who is on bad terms with the owner of that animal may complain and bring that man into trouble and get him fined. The animal whose leg is broken will be sent to an infirmary and he will have to pay the cost of its treatment and if it exceeds the price realised on the sale of the animal he will be liable to pay the excess and that, too, not for his fault. If the animals have fought with each other and one of them comes down the cliff and gets its leg broken, is the owner of the animal in any way blamable? Sir, for this reason I beg to say that this sub-clause must not remain in the bill. As I have already stated, the original bill does not contain a clause to this effect, but on the contrary contains a clause that the owner shall not at all be liable for any excess. If we keep this sub-clause, we will be inflicting double punishment upon the owner of that animal. He is losing the animal and yet he is liable to pay the excess, and if he is not in a position to pay that excess, what is the result? In order to recover that excess steps will be taken against him so as to recover a fine. Perhaps his moveables will be sold and his homestead will be ruined. For these reasons I beg to move that sub-clause (8) be omitted.

Mr. G. C. BHATE (Kolaba District): Sir, I rise to support the omission of this clause, because I have given notice of an amendment to this effect and it has been circulated. The principal point under this clause is that.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: With reference to your notice of amendment, may I ask you hereafter to be very precise in mentioning the clauses? You say "clause 8." It is not clause 8.

Mr. G. C. BHATE: Paragraph 8 of clause 3.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Well, that you did not say. On that ground alone, I might have omitted your amendment; however, I thought it probably was merely a clerical mistake.

Mr. G. C. BHATE: The underlying principle of this paragraph is that the owner should be liable not only to the extent for the loss of the animal, but he should be liable also for the extra cost that will be incurred over and above the price of the animal. This paragraph 8 will form part of section 6 of the original Act. Now, if you look to the several parts of this section, then it will be found that paragraph 1 deals with the principal offence, while paragraphs 2, 3, 4 and so on, deal with another object altogether. Paragraph 1 deals with only the offence, and the offence mentioned in this paragraph has nothing to do with the offence that is mentioned in clause 2 of this bill. That is original section 3 of the original Act. Section 3 of the Act as amended by this bill deals with particular kinds of offences, while this section 6 of the old Act deals with penalty for employing an animal unfit for labour. So the offence under this section is different from the offence under section 3. Now, we have to see how far the owner should be liable under this section 6. The first paragraph deals with the manner in which an owner should be dealt with if he offends against the provisions of that paragraph. It reads thus:

"If any person employs in any work or labour any animal which by reason of any disease, infirmity, wound, sore or other cause is unfit to be so employed, or permits any such unfit animal in his possession or under his control to be so employed, he shall be punished with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees."

That is the principal offence, and the fine is to extend to one hundred rupees for that offence.

Now, the other paragraphs deal with the manner in which the cost of the treatment of the animal, as regards which the owner has committed offence, is to be recovered. Now, the question is how far the owner should be made liable, whether, over and above the loss which he suffers by losing the animal, he should be made to spend out of his pocket for the treatment. Paragraph 5 deals with the infirmary bill if the animal is sent to an infirmary. So all these clauses deal with the cost of treatment. Now, the utmost that can be said about this cost of treatment of the animal would be that the man should lose his animal, and not more. He should not lose anything over and above the price of the animal. And the difficulty is still more enhanced if we look at the provisions of paragraph 3. Paragraph (3) says:

That means if the animal is so unfit that it would never recover, the owner will lose the animal and nothing more. But if the animal is found to be such that by some treatment it would be a good animal and fit for use, then, of course, it could be sent to the infirmary. Then, what would be the result? The animal would be sent to the infirmary and the cost of the treatment would perhaps exceed the cost of the animal. If that be the case, the owner would be put to unnecessary loss. So this paragraph (8) is quite unnecessary if you look to the spirit of the section and the paragraphs that follow the first paragraph.

Then again, another point is that if this paragraph is retained, nobody would take care to see whether the cost of the treatment exceeds the price of the animal, because they will know that anyhow the price can be recovered from the owner. The infirmary people also may not take care in the matter. They will do anything they like and ultimately they will recover the cost from the owner though the price of the animal on sale would be only a few rupees. So there will be no check over the cost of the treatment of this animal. So, with this view also, this paragraph seems unnecessary and I strongly support the omission of this paragraph.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Mr. President, I am afraid I cannot accept this amendment for deleting this clause. The Council has already agreed to the general principle that the owner should be liable for the cost of the treatment of his animal if it is improperly worked when it is too ill to work. This clause simply provides the machinery for recovering that cost. If this clause is cut out, the result would be this, that the owner would still be liable for the amount and the amount would have to be recovered from him by the more expensive process, both to him and to others, of a civil suit. He would still remain liable and he would have to pay the cost of the civil suit in addition; so that, if this paragraph is cut out, as proposed by my honourable friend, he would be inflicting a greater injury on the people that he is endeavouring to protect. The clause as amended by the select committee has taken into consideration the possibilities he has referred to, of hardship on the owner, and it provides that the whole cost shall not necessarily be recovered from the owner. Under the clause, as originally drafted, it would have probably resulted in the magistrate not considering at all whether the whole of the cost or part should be recovered. He would, as a matter of routine, have ordered the recovery of the whole cost. Therefore, the select committee put in these words "to such extent as shall seem reasonable". That puts the magistrate on his guard. When he orders the recovery of the cost, he has to think and consider what are the circumstances, requiring this unfortunate fellow to pay more than the proceeds of the sale, whether the expenses have been entirely the fault of the owner or in part the fault of the hospital, and so on. And in order that the owner might have an opportunity to point out that he was not to blame for all the expenses, it is specially provided that no such order shall be made without the owner being given a reasonable opportunity of urging his objections. He might come forward and say "It is not fair that I should be made to pay all this cost. I went to the veterinary officer and told him it was useless expense and told him not to expend anything more on the animal. So, why should I pay? Make the hospital pay." This also meets the argument that the cost of treatment under this new procedure will necessarily and always exceed the value of the animal. If the owner is a sensible fellow, he will go to the hospital and say "Don't spend any more money on this animal; it is useless." And then, if he is told "Oh, you must pay the cost," he can urge the objection that he did tell the hospital not to spend any more money on the animal but the hospital would not listen to him. I submit, therefore, Sir, that this clause ought to be retained, as it is merely consequential on the general principle that has already been accepted by this Council.

Clause ordered to stand part of the bill.

Clause 1 (short title) ordered to stand part of the bill.

Preamble ordered to stand part of the bill.

Third reading.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: I now move that the bill be read a third time, as there are no amendments.

Bill read a third time.

Question put and agreed to.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I now declare the bill passed.

A BILL TO MAKE PROVISION FOR THE MANAGEMENT AND CONTROL OF CERTAIN OPEN SPACES IN THE CITY OF BOMBAY (BILL No. XV OF 1921.)

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Mr. President, under Standing Order 15 of Part VIII, I beg to withdraw Bill No. XV of 1921, a bill to make provision for the management and control of certain open spaces in the city of Bombay.

Bill withdrawn.

A BILL FURTHER TO AMEND THE PRINCE OF WALES MUSEUM ACT, 1909 (BILL No. VIII OF 1922).

(As amended by the Select Committee).

Second reading.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : Mr. President, I beg to propose that Bill No. VIII of 1922 be read a second time. I might mention that .....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The proposal should be that the bill be now read a second time. The emphasis must be laid on the word 'now'. Otherwise, complications might arise.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : I beg to propose that the bill be now read a second time. I might mention that, at the last session, I introduced two bills relating to the same subject, and these two bills have been amalgamated into one. The second bill was only a very small bill with only one clause. You will find that the last clause, clause 4, of the bill is in fact the second bill.

The report of the select committee has been unanimous, and there have been no dissentient minutes. One point was raised by my honourable friend, the member for Kolaba district, about giving power to the trustees to sell some exhibits. However, he has agreed to retain this clause, in view of the fact that the exhibits.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I beg your pardon. You have, first of all, to present the report of the select committee.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : Sir, I beg to present the report the select committee on the Prince of Wales Museum Bill.

As I was saying before, there was only one point raised by my honourable friend Mr. Bhate about giving the power to the trustees of this museum to sell or exchange the exhibits in the museum. However, he has agreed to retain the clause as it is, seeing that this power can be exercised only according to rules framed with the sanction of Government. All museums in fact have to have this power, in order that the work of the museum may be properly carried out. There may be duplicates, or there may be exchanges. I do not think there is anything further for me to say, except that an amendment on the same point has been proposed to be moved by an honourable member. I think all his objections would really be met by the conditions that I have mentioned, namely, " Subject to the provisions of any rules made by Government in this behalf, the board may, from time to time, etc. " So that, the rules will be made by Government, and therefore there is no danger of the board of trustees abusing this power. Any museum must obviously have this power, because some exhibits may get out of date and some other exhibits may be useless. Of course, it will be understood that any exhibit which has been presented to the museum and has to be sold will be sold only in accordance with the conditions of such a present to the museum. In fact, the board of trustees will necessarily make a condition, in the case of any such presents, to retain the power of selling or exchanging any such exhibits that they may think proper. That will be provided under the rules. Otherwise, the board will have no power to exchange or sell any exhibit if the amendment is passed. I do not think, therefore, that there should be any difficulty in the way of accepting the provisions of this bill, and I propose that it be read a second time.

Bill read a second time.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill read clause by clause.

Clause 2 (Amendment of section 3 of Bom. III of 1909) ordered to stand part of the bill.

Clause 3. (New Sections 3A, 3B and 3C of Bom. III of 1909).

3. After section 3 of the said Act, the following sections shall be inserted, namely :—

Term of office : election and appointment of new members if a vacancy.

"3A. (1) Members of the Board other than ex-officio members shall, save as herein otherwise provided, hold office for a period of three years.

(2) If a member, other than an ex-officio member

(a) dies, or

(b) is absent from the meetings of the Board for more than six consecutive months, or

(c) leaves the Presidency of Bombay with the intention of being absent therefrom for more than six consecutive months, or

(d) desires to be discharged, or

(e) refuses to act or becomes incapable of acting,

a new member may be elected or nominated, as the case may be, in the same manner as was the member in whose place he is to be elected or nominated and he shall hold office for so long only as such member would have held it if the vacancy had not occurred.

Power of Board to lend, exchange, sell or destroy articles in collections.

3B. Subject to the provisions of any rules made by the Government in this behalf the Board may, from time to time,

(a) deliver by way of loan to any person the whole or any portion of, or any article contained in, any collection vested in them under this Act,

(b) exchange or sell articles contained in any such collection and take or purchase in the place of such articles, such articles as may in their opinion be worthy of preservation in the museum,

(c) present articles contained in any such collection to other museums in India or elsewhere, and

(d) remove and destroy any article contained in any such collection."

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North) : Mr. President, the amendment which I beg to move is :

"In sub-clause (b) of New Section 3B, clause 3, line 21, after the words 'sell articles' add 'other than those presented'."

The honourable mover of the bill has stated that the donor will be informed that the trustees have the power of exchanging or selling the articles which he presents. But I ask, why accept those articles which are to be sold later on ? The museum first accepts the articles, and the trustees, in common civility, thank the donor, and later on they quietly sell them. This can be avoided by not accepting articles which are not worthy of a place in the museum. If we accept any article, I think, according to our notions of gratitude, those articles must not be sold. For this reason I move this amendment.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : It is not my business nor my province to interfere with the merits, but on the point of order, in order to put honourable members on the right track, I should point out that the suggestion made by the honourable mover of the bill does not meet the difficulty raised by the amendment now moved. The difficulty is this. Take the case of a donor who presents articles to the museum, and the latter accepts on the distinct understanding and under an agreement that they are not to be exchanged or sold. Under this bill, if it becomes law, that contract will not be valid, because notwithstanding that contract, this law gives them the power to sell those articles. Has that difficulty suggested itself to the select committee or to the legal advisers of the Government ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: So far as I understand, the trustees of the museum have already got the rule of not accepting any presents without this express power reserved to them.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That is another matter. That may be so. But when you are legislating, you are doing it in such a way as to make all contracts not to sell void. The provision "Subject to the provisions of any rules made by Government the trustees may exchange or sell any articles" does not quite meet the difficulty. So that, I am not entering into the merits of the question, but it is my duty to see that the Council addresses itself to the difficulty in this bill. I have put the Council on what I think is the relevant track, and now it is for the Council to pursue it as they like.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The rules that will be made will make it clear that no articles will be accepted which cannot be sold.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The difficulty is that rules are made by the Executive Government, and Government becomes then the master of the situation. It is for the Council to decide whether it will leave the question to rules or deal with it in the enactment itself.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: If you want to lay down that an article presented to the museum should for all eternity be in the museum, it will handicap the proper conduct of the museum. For this certain rules must be made, and they must be in this manner. First of all, the article should be accepted on this understanding. If the donor does not want it to be sold, it should be returned to the donor.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I suggest to the Honourable Member to put himself in consultation with the Advocate General who has been good enough to give the benefit of his rare presence. To me it seems so. Also there is the Honourable the General Member whose legal erudition is well known. It may be that there is nothing in the point; but it seems to me that the point requires careful handling. Mr. Advocate General, have you understood that point? My point is that when a present is made and accepted, the museum authorities become the owners. Suppose that entering into a contract not to exchange or sell, the museum authorities accept an article conditionally. What is the legal result?

Mr. J. B. KANGA: The legislation prevails and the private contract would go.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The contract becomes void. Are you going to legislate to that effect?

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: Lawyers do err, but laymen consider themselves always on the safe side.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: I would add the following words:

"Except in cases where by the terms of a gift such exchange or sales are precluded."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I would then suggest to the honourable mover of the amendment to withdraw it by leave of the Council.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: I beg to withdraw my amendment, Sir.

Amendment withdrawn by leave.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : Sir, I now move the following amendment :

"At the end of new section 3 B, contained in clause 3 of the bill, add 'Provided that nothing herein contained shall authorise the trustees to lend, exchange, sell, present, remove or destroy any article when such lending, exchange, sale, presentation, removal or destruction, as the case may be, is precluded by the terms on which the Trustees may have received any such article.'"

Amendment carried.

Clause as amended ordered to stand part of the bill.

Clause 4 (Amendment of section 8 of Bom. III of 1909) ordered to stand part of the bill.

Clause 1 (short title) ordered to stand part of the bill.

Preamble ordered to stand part of the bill.

Third reading.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : Mr. President, I beg leave to ask for suspension of Standing Order 11, of Part VIII, in order to enable me to move that the bill be read a third time.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I suspend the provision.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : I now move, Sir, that the bill be read a third time.

A BILL FURTHER TO AMEND THE INDENTIFICATION OF PRISONERS ACT, 1920 (BILL No. XIV OF 1922).

First reading.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : Sir, I now rise to move the first reading of a bill to further amend the Identification of Prisoners Act, 1920. It is a purely formal bill and I do not think it will give much trouble to the House. The Act to authorise the taking of measurements and photographs of convicts and others is commonly known as the Identification of Prisoners Act, 1920. It is a Government of India Act. It might not generally be realized that you cannot go and photograph a man and measure him without his leave ; if you do, he may take certain steps against you which would be unpleasant. It was therefore necessary in the case of convicts and under-trial prisoners to have some legal provision authorising the authorities to take photographs and measurements of them so as to be able if necessary to identify them afterwards. Certain powers for that purpose were then given to the police and magistrates under the Identification of Prisoners Act, 1920, by the Government of India. But unfortunately they overlooked the particular needs of the city of Bombay. It was overlooked that the city of Bombay has a special criminal procedure of its own and has magistrates who have a special designation of their own. It was overlooked that the criminal procedure of that city was as laid down by the Bombay City Police Act, 1902, and that the magistrates in the city of Bombay are not called District Magistrates or sub-divisional magistrates, but that they are called Presidency Magistrates. It was accordingly found when it came to working this Act that there were practical difficulties in the way owing to this unfortunate overlooking of the city of Bombay by the Government of India. This short bill is prepared in order to remove those difficulties and make it clear that even in the city of Bombay it shall be lawful for the police or magistrate to order the photographing and measurement of convicts or of under-trial prisoners. I think that principle will be accepted by the House. Therefore I move that this bill be now read a first time.

Bill read a first time. Question put and agreed to.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : Sir, I now rise to move that Second reading. the bill be read a second time.

A BILL FURTHER TO AMEND THE BOMBAY SALT ACT, 1890 (BILL No. XVIII OF 1922).

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Sir, I beg to move that
First reading. a Bill further to amend the Bombay Salt Act, 1890, (Bill No. XVIII of 1922), be now read a first time. Sir, this is merely a formal piece of legislation which is required to put the employees of the Salt Department on the same footing as the employees of the Abkari Department. As pointed out in the statement of objects and reasons, desertions have been noticed among the employees of the Salt Department in the Northern Frontier and it is necessary to bring them under discipline on the same lines as provided in section 49A of the Bombay Abkari Act, 1878. The bill merely provides uniform discipline for the employees of both the departments, and I trust the Council will pass it.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District) : Sir, I oppose the first reading of this bill. When I read the clauses of this bill, I thought that it was directed against the officials of the Salt Department. But when I read the statement of objects and reasons, I found that it was an indenture bill, that the labourers and employees who were to work on the salt works were to be tied down to certain agreements and proceeded against for breach of the agreements. Perhaps there may be some valid reasons for the breaches of the agreements on the part of employees, and since we find that similar breaches in the case of mill hands and employees are not taken cognizance of by the State, I do not understand why the poor men working on the salt works should be punished in this way if they break the agreements. Government may come forward and set right any grievances that there may be of these workers and come to a sort of compromise. Again, Sir, what I do not approve is that this Government should go out of its way to compel our people to do forced labour for the benefit of India Government, and so we should set our faces against any measure of this sort. With these remarks I oppose the first reading of this bill.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District) : Mr. President, I also oppose the first reading of this bill. When I read about the bill, I made enquiries from people who stay near about Kharaghoda and I understand that the conditions prevailing there are not the same as those prevailing in Thana and other districts. The conditions prevailing at the Kharaghoda salt-pans, where this bill is to operate, are different from conditions prevailing elsewhere. My information goes to show that the pits in which these labourers have to work are so bad that their legs are affected and their health is affected by working in those pits. That is my information, and that the Government have done nothing in the way of providing good medical relief ; and there is another complaint that there is no good housing accommodation there and therefore the labourers are not attracted to this spot.....

Mr. O. ROTHFELD : No. no.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : That is my information ; you may disprove it. And the third information which I have got is that the condition of these poor labourers is so bad that some people working for co-operative societies try to do something to ameliorate their conditions and the officials do not encourage that sort of thing. So that, it seems that the officials are against anybody improving the condition of these labourers and these labourers are to be treated as if they were indentured labourers. Therefore, I hope the Council will ask for more proof of the necessity for the bill and ask Government to defer the consideration of this bill and ask for more enquiries, unofficial enquiries, into the condition of labour there before they give their assent to the principle of the bill even. I therefore hope that the Council will oppose the first reading of the bill.

Mr. KANJI DWARKADAS : Sir, this bill was published in the Government Gazette on the 11th September and as yet the Presidency of Bombay has had very little time to form an opinion and to follow it through the public press and through other sources. I, therefore, request Government that they should postpone the first reading of this bill, so that, when we meet here again at the next session, there will be some public opinion formed regarding the bill. Yesterday, Sir, His Excellency the Governor referred to the legislation that is undertaken on behalf of labour. This is a legislation which is anti-labour and, before this Council is asked to give its approval to it, I only say that we should have more time to consider it.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA (Karachi City) : Mr. President, I rise to support the first reading of this bill. The principles laid down are in my opinion very commendable for the simple reason that we should not look to one side of the question only, i.e., the labour class, but we must look to the side of the employers also. Of course, I have very little experience of the facts brought to notice by my honourable friend Mr. Trivedi so far as these salt pits are concerned, but from the little experience that I have had of the province of Sind, I know the labour class there is more of a nuisance than anything else... (Honourable Members : Order, order. No, no.) I am sorry to see that some of the Honourable members who say " order, order " and " no, no " have never seen Sind and yet they have the audacity to say that what I say is not true. I do not know whether my friends are aware of the Act which is called the Workmen's Act. Under that Act if any workmen receive any advances for doing work ; for instance on irrigation canals or elsewhere, they enter into an agreement with the employers, they receive money in advance and when the time to do work comes they clear off, with the result that the employers have to take legal proceedings in courts of law to get back the money from them. That is not all. The difficulty is further aggravated for the employers because they lose money, work is stopped, no further progress is made and the labourers absent themselves from the work and go and get themselves employed elsewhere. Now, according to the contentions of Mr. Trivedi, the salt pits become injurious to the health of these labourers. If that is so of course, relief ought to be given. I quite agreee with him there that some medical measures should be taken whereby people working in salt pits may have no excuse to abandon work or to go away. In the case of other contracts such a contingency does not arise and yet we find labourers taking monies in advance and absenting themselves from doing their legitimate work. I therefore submit, having regard to these circumstances, that the principle of the bill is good. If there be any hard cases, we cannot judge of any enactment by one or two cases alone, we must look to the principle of law from a broad point of view and decide whether or not on the whole in the generality of cases such a principle will be good or bad. We cannot dispose of a bill or any principle of a bill by some stray cases and say that an enactment of the legislature proposed should be altogether done away with.

I subm t, therefore, that I am in favour of such legislation being enacted and that the bill as presented by the Honourable Member in charge of it should be read a first time and that any objections honourable members may wish to urge may be urged and considered in the select committee who will then be glad to say what they think should be recommended to the Council.

Mr. S. K BOLE (Bombay City), North : Mr. President, I rise to oppose the first reading of the bil . I think no case has been made out and no facts laid before the Council. Under those circumstances, the first read ng may be deferred to the next session. When we are raising a hue and cry against indentured and forced labour in countries outside India such as Africa and other countries, then in our own Presidency we should not allow these sorts of things. If they want to take any action, they may take action against these defaulters in civil courts; they should not go to criminal courts and have imprisonment for poor labourers. Under those circumstances, I oppose the first reading of the bill.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District) : Mr. President, it appears that some of the honourable members of this Council seem anxious that they have not had sufficient time to consider this bill and that enough publicity has not been given to it, but I do not think that that is a reason for opposing the first reading of the bill. The bill may be read for the first time and if there is any necessity for its being published for the purpose of eliciting information thereon within a particular period, I think there is enough to be done at the subsequent stages of the bill and it will then be open to this Council to move that the bill may be published for eliciting opinion thereon under Standing Order VIII, 5, (c). So I think that, so far as the first reading of the bill is concerned, that may be allowed at this stage. I therefore submit, Sir, that there will be enough time for eliciting public opinion, although the time that may be now allowed to pass is somewhat short. Therefore, the proper course to adopt for the Council is to pass the first reading and then the Council will be well advised in asking it to be published for eliciting public opinion if necessary.

Mr. O. ROTHFELD : Mr. President, the honourable members who have opposed the first reading of this bill are, I think, under a misapprehension ; and I feel sure that the honourable member from Thana, who is against the very principle of the bill, will admit that the extreme cases which he has quoted (whether correct or incorrect) do not apply to this bill at all, as what is sought to do is to provide for penalties and punishment of the officers of the Salt Department on the same lines as in the Abkari Department. The misapprehensions have been caused.....

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : There are a large number of Bhils.

Mr. O. ROTHFELD : The misapprehensions have been caused by misreading the statement of objects and reasons, which runs as follows :—

> "As considerable difficulty has been caused by the desertion of employees in the Salt Department on the Northern Frontier where a large number of Bhils are employed, the necessity for a provision analogous to section 49A of the Bombay Abkari Act, 1878, has been felt....."

The meaning is that the necessity has been felt for maintaining in full strength the employees of the Salt Department, that is the officers referred to in the bill on works where a large number of Bhils have been always engaged as workmen. The bill itself does not refer to "workmen" as described by my honourable friend from Thana—had it been otherwise, I should have been quite at one with him.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : A statement by the honourable member in charge of the bill as to whether that statement is correct, I think will solve the whole difficulty.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : The bill itself states it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I think that solves the difficulty. Is it necessary to pursue the question about workmen and labourers, and fight with a shadow ? All reference to labourers is out of place as the bill does not apply to workmen.

Mr. O. ROTHFELD : I only want further to deny the allegations made as to the conditions of the workmen at Kharaghoda. That, I may assure honourable members, is not the case. The housing of the workmen there is excellent. I have had the pleasure of reporting to Government more than a year ago when I visited the place, that I have never been to a place where the housing of the workmen was so good as at Kharaghoda.

(The honourable member, at this stage, was inaudible.)

Orders of Government have been passed, and I hope and trust that we shall have co-operative societies working there soon.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind) : Sir, I rise to a point of order. In the statement of objects and reasons the word "employees" occurs.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : It is not a point of order. After the explanation which has been given by the Honourable Member, the Leader of the House, in charge of the bill and after Mr. Rothfeld's lucid explanation and the language of the bill itself, I put it to the Council whether it is worth while pursuing that point. The language of the statement of objects and reasons is perhaps misleading, but the honourable the mover of the bill has pointed out that if you only read the clause, it is quite clear. It only applies to revenue officers, and it is not pretended that any workman is a revenue officer. We must now look to the language of the bill. I do not think the matter need be pursued further.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : The principle of the bill is being discussed, but the statement of objects and reasons is conflicting therewith.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The principle concerns the revenue officer, not workmen and the question of the oppression of the labourers. That is clear from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: The Honourable the Revenue Member has not said that it does not apply to employees.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. May I appeal to the Honourable the Revenue Member to make the point clear once more?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: I was going to make that point clear in my reply. I have already said that it does not apply to workmen. It applies only to the salt officers. If necessary, I will explain the point once more.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I am trying to facilitate the discussion on the right lines. There is already an assurance given by the Honourable the Revenue Member that it does not raise the question of labourers—indentured labourers or otherwise. To whom else does it apply? The discussion so far went on the basis that the bill applied to labourers. That, I think, is out of the question now. Am I not right?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Yes, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Let the debate proceed upon that basis. The mover of a bill is entitled to two speeches, first in moving the bill, and in replying. But, with the assent of the House and the Chair, the mover may be allowed to speak as often as he likes, in order to explain the merits and to remove misunderstandings. Does the House give its assent to the mover to speak now?

Honourable MEMBERS: Yes.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Sir, I well recognise, in view of the debate that has taken place, that the public has not had sufficient time—only eleven days—to consider a single section. I can quite understand that because I find that honourable members do not seem to have had time to study that one section. I will readily admit that the statement of objects and reasons does lead to misapprehension, and the debate that has taken place is probably due to the wording of the statement of objects and reasons. But, I would invite the attention of honourable members to the only section in the bill. It says:

> "Any salt-revenue officer—
> (a) who ceases or refuses to perform or withdraws himself from the duties of his office, unless he has obtained the express written permission of the Commissioner, or has given to his superior officer two months' notice in writing of his intention or has other lawful excuse, or
> (b) who is guilty of cowardice, shall on conviction before a magistrate be punished with imprisonment which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to three months' pay, or with both."

It will be apparent that the bill definitely applies to salt-revenue officers only. Even assuming that it did apply to the labouring classes, what possible connection can such a provision have with indentured labour and all the criticism that was applied to it? I want to deal with the whole of the criticism. Even assuming that the bill applies to the labourer, what is he expected to do? He is expected to obtain written permission of the Commissioner, or give to his superior officer two months' notice, or have some lawful excuse before he can cease to work. Now, is there anything unreasonable in that? I thought that this bill was so non-controversial that I expected to have all the three readings passed to-day. After all, who is going to be penalised under the Act? A man who ceases or refuses to perform or withdraws himself from his duties which he has voluntarily undertaken to do, without written permission of the

[Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola]

Commissioner, or without lawful excuse, or without giving, instead of the ordinary one month's notice before he can leave, two months' notice. If he does any of these things, he is quite at liberty to go away. I fail to see what possible objection there could be to a provision of this kind.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALLA: What about cowardice?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Surely, the men, when they are employed, know that they have to live in outside districts. Government have taken adequate precautions to give them police protection, and then, if in an emergency—that emergency is very remote—the man shows the white feather, then he is liable to be brought before a magistrate for enquiry whether he proved a coward at the time when he was expected to discharge his duties.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: Is there now any difficulty?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: There should be disciplinary measures in regard to employees in any important organisation. After all, the only difference between this law and the ordinary law is that this man will accept employment on the distinct understanding that he has to give two months' notice, instead of one month's notice. They are not indentured.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have read the section, and I see that it is not necessary for your purposes to go into the question of labourers. It is strictly confined to the salt-revenue officers.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: I was justifying the attitude of Government, and it is my duty to point out that Government have not brought forward any legislation which can even be remotely criticised on these lines.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The discussion must proceed on this basis. It does not at all apply to labourers, and it applies to a revenue officer only. Upon that basis the debate should proceed.

Mr. V. R. GUPTE (Poona City): Mr. President with due deference to the Honourable the Revenue Member, I do not understand why this legislation is wanted by the Bombay Government, that one months' notice is not sufficient and that two months' notice is necessary.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That is a matter which can be brought forward at the second reading. That is a matter of detail. You can only discuss the principle now.

Mr. V. R. GUPTE: Ordinary law requires that one months' notice should be given by the employers, while this bill requires two months' notice. The other difficulty is this: that a man is to be punished for cowardice, which has not been defined in the legislation. I fail to understand why this sort of legislation is necessary, especially when the present difficulties are not mentioned. The explanation twice given by the Honourable the Revenue Member is most unconvincing and, as a strong case has not been made out for the enactment, I think we should oppose it.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, I oppose the first reading of the bill. The whole principle of the bill is involved in one section. The House will remember that in regard to a single section in a previous legislation it was stated that the Government experienced a new difficulty and that it was necessary to insert that section to tide over that difficulty. Such statement was then made in explaining the objects and reasons. In the first year of this Council, a small Act was brought forward, the Land Revenue Code amendment, in which a case arising in the High Court was brought forward as a reason for amending the section. Usually we see that the statement of objects and reasons that accompanies the bill supplies the information necessitating the bringing up of the bill. The statement that accompanies the bill to-day is unfortunately not correct. We do not receive from the statement of objects and reasons the slightest guidance as to the direction in which the Honourable the President has laid down that the discussion should proceed. The statement of objects and reasons is quite essential for the first reading of a bill. It is hardly fair to this Council that the bill should be based on the objects and reasons presented to us. When the Honourable Member in charge opened the first reading of the bill, and stated that the bill was necessary, he ought to have enlightened the House on the reasons that necessitated the passing of the bill. Those reasons are not placed before the Council. Under these circumstances, I think we are entitled to defer or not to read the bill for the first time, until the Council is placed in a position to know the reasons.

As regards the principle of the bill, I am unable to understand what is meant by "cowardice" and why two months' notice is necessary. I do not know whether the House is in a position to understand whether "cowardice" in the case of salt officers can be easily defined. Cowardice in the case of police officers who leave their post to which they are deputed, I can easily understand. The cowardice of a magistrate in hiding from a mob I can understand. But cowardice in the case of a salt officer I am unable to understand. The word 'cowardice' has to be defined. The word 'cowardice' and the words 'two months' notice' the failure of which does not only make him liable to forfeiture of pay, but also makes him liable for conviction for three months as is put down in the bill, I am unable to unsderstand: and I do not think that these drastic measures should be included in this bill. I submit, Sir, that the Government has not been fair to us in not giving us the exact reasons for which they seek to introduce this bill. I say the Government should come prepared next time to give us the exact reasons.

Rao Bahadur S. D. GARUD (West Khandesh District): Sir, I beg to oppose the first reading of this bill. I do not know, Sir, why this legislation is necessary, and why Government cannot by a modification of their executive rules, even drastic modifications, attain their object. According to the Fundamental Rules one month's notice has to be given. Government can order their officers to give two months' notice, or even three months' notice, as is done by local bodies. We do not know the reasons for this provision for three months' imprisonment, and we do not know whether it is to be simple imprisonment, rigorous imprisonment or solitary imprisonment. The person affected by this bill must at least have this point made clear. The object of the Commissioner is to get a certain amount of information. Well, I think, Sir, that even under the present rules, which are not made by the legislature but by executive order, Government do require their subordinates to give sufficient information before they are allowed to withdraw from service. I do not know then why this kind of drastic legislation should be required for the officers of the Salt Department. No one is willing to give up his service without any reasonable cause. The bill says that permission should be taken. This permission will be given after sufficient cause is shown. It will be left for the Government or its superior officers to decide whether a particular cause is a reasonable one or not. I do submit, Sir, that for these simple things it is not necessary that the legislature should be moved to lay down a statute or enactment like this. It is not necessary to provide any rigorous or simple imprisonment. All that is necessary can be done by the department and the superior officers even without a legislation of this kind. If a man is punished by having his pay withheld or by dismissal, that would be quite ample. I do think, Sir, that Government ought not to come to the legislature for these simple provisions.

[Rao Bahadur S. D. Garud]

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): Before I make up my mind to vote for the first reading of this bill, I think, Sir, the Council is entitled to know from the Honourable Member in charge of this bill why such a drastic section is required. The Salt Act has been in operation for 32 years—the Salt Act was inaugurated in 1890 and now it is 1922—and we do not find the necessity for such a measure on account of the desertion of any employees. If there have been frequent desertions of late, either there must be something wrong in the way the service is now taken or there must be some other reason. Therefore, the Council is entitled to know from the Leader of the House as to what has happened now which has induced Government to come forward with this legislation. I think it is rather unfortunate that when a bill deals only with one section, and has a statement of objects and reasons extending only to six or seven lines, that that statement should have been so unfortunately worded. Therefore, the Council ought to be placed in a position to judge as to whether any circumstances have now arisen which lead to constant or frequent desertion of employees and therefore legislation is necessary.

Mr. F. C. GRIFFITH: Mr. President, the salt officials concerned in this bill are a quasi-police force. They are well trained and they perform a very important service. I may refer to one incident. During the riots at Belgaum in 1909 these men performed an extremely important and very valuable service. It is, therefore, I think of very great importance that it should be recognised that they are a quasi-police force. As the police are required to give two months' notice before they submit their resignations, I think it is in the interests of Government that these persons also should be required to do the same. They are giving great assistance now in connection with dacoities in northern Gujarat. We have been told that we can rely upon them for assistance if necessity should arise. I submit, Sir, that if these men can quit at a moment's notice, then none of us knows where we are. It seems to me that the only sound way of dealing with the situation is to render such a desertion quite impossible.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Sir, the wages which are given to the Salt Department servants are not adequate. I have not the last report of the Salt Department here, but I remember to have read in it that the revision of salary is overdue and it has not been sanctioned by Government. I have had a talk with many servants of the Salt Department, and they have told me that it is the Cinderella of the Government services; that the pay is very inadequate and the men are practically banished from society. Another point is that all these salt works, where these servants are expected to work, are insalubrious and unhealthy. The Honourable the Leader of the House has told us that these Government servants are not indentured servants and they can give two months' notice and get out of the service. With great respect I beg to say that if a man falls ill, then he will have only two alternatives before him, either he must be where he is and go to the grave or he must desert his post and go to the prison. It may be urged that if a man is suffering from illness he can obtain leave, but it is my experience that the Government servants, when there is great pressure of work, even if they are actually suffering, do not get the medical certificate to go on leave. So, for these reasons I beg to say that the power which is sought by this particular clause is not necessary. It would just mean a sort of refined slavery. We know that the men are not adequately paid and still.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member will not, I hope, repeat an argument. He has already referred previously to this question of the inadequacy of pay.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: Then, another thing is that the servants of the Salt Department are expected to do various duties and some of them are to detect illicit manufacture and smuggling of salt. Where there is a case of smuggling a Government servant has to take the odds against very dangerous and desperate people. These watchmen at the outposts, I think, are not supplied with arms and, if I am correct there, then I think they must not be held guilty of cowardice if they fail to face the smugglers, because for such small salaries they must not be expected to risk their lives.

Then, I think the sentence of imprisonment is too harsh a thing and the sentence of imprisonment should not form part of the clause. When a man deserts his post he actually incurs forfeiture of the pension or other privileges which he has earned in the service. Such forfeiture is sufficient punishment. If for the sake of discipline certain powers are required I suggest that some small fines not exceeding three months' pay would be adequate and that power Government may possess.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: We will now adjourn for half an hour and resume at half past four.

After recess.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK (Deccan Sardars and Inamdars): Sir, the bill before us, short as it is, is really very comprehensive in its nature. When we refer to the definition of 'salt revenue officer' as is given in the Act, we find that it includes any person. The amendment as proposed in this bill may affect any person who is an officer of the Salt Department either personally or in virtue of his office, or any Government officer of any other department either personally or in virtue of his office, or any other person with or without any of the powers prescribed or contemplated under sections 30, 35, 40, 44. That is, all persons who are entrusted with any duties as prescribed in these sections may be called officers, and the duties prescribed in these sections are so multifarious that any person having a few men under him to work may be called an officer in this respect. Whether he is really an officer in the sense in which we use the word in other departments would be open to question. Considering the position from this point of view, I think the power now contemplated to be given to Government under this bill is rather vicious in principle. This power should not be given to Government, when under the ordinary rules, the Fundamental Rules, Government wield ample powers. I, therefore, oppose the first reading of this bill on these grounds.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): Sir, I rise to support the bill before this House. I had occasion to go on this frontier line when I had been to Kharagoda and one night I travelled on horseback from Kharagoda to Viramgaum. I started about 11 o'clock at night and reached Viramgaum at 5 o'clock the next morning. I learnt from a friend of mine there that people in the dead of night bring opium and other articles which are smuggled, and when they get a scent of it the watchmen have to trace them and have to catch them. Many a time it happens—though when I travelled on horseback there I found to the credit of the Salt Department all the watchmen were very alert, though it was very cold in the night—that, when such a case has to be traced, these linesmen, not always but occasionally desert their officers out of cowardice and the result is that the case is lost. So it is in the interest of justice that such cases may not occur and such an Act, if passed, will give protection to Government and enable them to take steps against such coward people, and therefore I support this bill.

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL (Broach District): Mr. President, I think the Council is not yet convinced about the necessity of this bill. I quite admit that Government may have got very good grounds to show why this bill is necessary. One point which strikes me is whether Government is not able to do without legislation. Why differential treatment in the different services, especially in this Salt Department and the Excise Department? There must be something wrong why this proposal is not attractive. Cannot Government arrange to secure their object by other means, such as departmental rules? Legislation is very risky and sometimes it may endanger public safety. Therefore, I would request, that the whole question should be made quite clear and all the grounds made quite clear by Government before the first reading is accepted by the Council.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Mr. President, perhaps I may say a word to remove some of the evidently serious misapprehensions that exist in the minds of some members in regard to this bill, and perhaps it would be useful if I state what this force is to which this bill is intended to apply. There is, as most members are aware, a very long frontier line to be guarded against smuggling. This line extends to the south of Bombay all along the border of Goa and to the north of Bombay it extends along the northern frontier. It protects the salt revenue and customs revenue of the Government of India, and the financial interests at stake are exceedingly important. If at any time the officials so employed desert their employments suddenly and leave large tracts on the frontier unguarded, smugglers would take immediate advantage of this apportunity and very serious loss of Imperial revenue would be the result. And if once the smugglers learn that the frontier is insufficiently guarded, you may be perfectly certain that organised bands will arise and that we should have serious disturbances in putting them down again.

Now, Sir, the proposed legislation is nothing new in principle to this province. It is exactly on a par with the provisions which apply to the whole of the police force and also it has been enacted ten years ago in regard to the Abkari force. But for the reason probably that the salt force has for many years been in a very high degree of discipline, the fact that this particular provision had never been enacted in regard to officers of the Salt Department had escaped notice. Quite recently cases of indiscipline have occurred in the Salt Department, and particularly on the Northern Frontier a section of the salt employees—(as mentioned in the statement of objects and reasons) a certain section of the salt force recruited from the Bhils—became disaffected. They quitted employment and threw the administration of that part of the frontier line into serious disorder. Then only the necessity of this provision became evident and the proposal is simply to enact a section in precisely the same wording as has already been enacted in regard to the Abkari Act and the section is extremely similar—I do not know whether it is exactly the same—to that which applies to the whole of the police force. Now there you have this section already in force in regard to 30,000 men and we have heard of no complaint of hardship or injustice. The same section applies to the Abkari Department employing many hundreds of men and we have heard no complaints of hardship or injustice. I submit, Sir, that it is a matter that should not cause this Council any serious searching of heart if they apply to this other department those provisions which already exist and have never caused any trouble in regard to services which have contained many thousands of men and in which we have had no complaints of hardship or injustice.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Mr. President, I have not got much to add to the observations of my honourable friend Mr. Lawrence. I should like, however, to clear one or two points which have been raised in the course of the debate. The duties of the men who are proposed to be brought within the purview of this section are on many occasions akin to the duties of the police—that they have got to resist raiders and to pursue smugglers. It will, therefore, be obvious that duties of that character should be brought under discipline on the same lines as the police officers. Those men who are actually employed in the production of salt will not be affected by this bill.

Then there is one further point. The special occasion for bringing forward this measure at present has been explained by my honourable friend Mr. Lawrence, but there is one further point which may be stated in answer to the criticism that the Salt Act was passed in 1890, that it is 32 years old and that no amendment of this nature was found necessary. I may point out that only during recent years—within the last three or four years—the Salt and Excise Departments have been amalgamated and that while in regard to the Excise Department a section on identical lines (I will read it out to the Council for their information later on) has existed, there is none in the Salt Act. Now in the amalgamated department, one part of the officers is under discipline by section 49-A and the other part of the amalgamated department is not. I will read out to the honourable members section 49-A of the Bombay Abkari Act, 1878, referred to in the statement of objects and reasons. This provision was introduced in 1912 on the recommendation of the Excise Committee of 1905-06. If honourable members will compare the wording of the bill with what I shall be reading out, they will find that both are practically identical in language and in substance:

"Section 49-A:—Any Abkari officer who, without lawful excuse, shall cease or refuse to perform or shall withdraw himself from the duties of his office, unless with the express written permission of the Commissioner or unless he shall have given to his superior officer two months' notice in writing of his intention to do so or who is guilty of cowardice, shall, on conviction before a magistrate, be punished with imprisonment which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to three months' pay, or with both."

The duties of the amalgamated department are practically similar, but section 49-A applies at present to one part of that department, while the other part is free from this disciplinary measure. The question, therefore, is this, that duties which have got to be discharged by the officers of that department are similar and in many cases akin to duties of police officers. They have got to resist raiders and to pursue smugglers. Not to bring them under a uniform disciplinary system in both the departments will obviously appear as administratively unsound.

[Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola]

As regards the various further criticisms which have been applied to the bill, they can be examined in select committee. The principle of the bill, as I have tried to explain, is the same as applies to one part of the amalgamated department. It will be perfectly open for honourable members when they examine the bill in select committee to see whether it can be improved or whether all the objections that may be urged are adequately met or not, but, Sir, I think that so far as the principle of the measure is concerned, there can be no question. I hope, therefore, that honourable members will pass the first reading.

Bill read a first time. Question put and agreed to.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: After the explanation I have given, I do not know whether the Council desires that the bill should go to a select committee. I am willing that it should, but if the Council, is satisfied that there is no change between section 49-A of the Abkari Act, which I have just read out, and the clause in this bill, they may decide to pass all the three readings at this sitting. I am entirely in the hands of the Council.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I take it that the general sense of Council is that the second reading should be proceeded with.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: I beg to move, Sir,

Second reading that the bill be now read a second time.

Bill read a second time. Question put and agreed to.

Bill read clause by clause.

Clause 2 (New Section 48-A).

After section 48 of the Bombay Salt Act, 1890, the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

Failure of salt-revenue-officer in duty. "48-A. Any salt-revenue-officer—

(a) who ceases or refuses to perform or withdraws himself from the duties of his office, unless he has obtained the express written permission of the Commissioner, or has given to his superior officer two months' notice in writing of his intention or has other lawful excuse, or

(b) who is guilty of cowardice, shall on conviction before a Magistrate be punished with imprisonment which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to three months' pay or with both."

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): Mr. President, I beg to move an amendment to sub-clause (a) of clause 2 of the bill. I move that

'the words "without lawful excuse" may be added after the word "who" at the commencement of clause (a) of new section 48-A.'

Those are the words in the Abkari Act, and I think they should come in here in the bill as well.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: But the words "other lawful excuse" are already in the bill towards the end of sub-clause (a).

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: But not in the place where I want them to be.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The words "lawful excuse" apply for the whole.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: The words are "who ceases or refuses to perform for the Government," and I think these words will not be qualified by the words coming at the end of sub-clause (a).

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Honourable the Advocate General may help and say whether the language of the clause, as it is, is ambiguous.

Mr. J. B. KANGA: I think it does qualify. The clause says:

"Who ceases or refuses to perform or withdraw himself from the duties of his office,

(1) unless he has obtained the express written permission of the Commissioner, or

(2) has given to his superior officer two months' notice in writing of his intention, or

(3) has other lawful excuse."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The question of sui generis may come in.

Mr. J. B. KANGA: It might be argued in that way, but I think the words "other lawful excuse" are all right. I do not think there is any danger.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Advocate General says that there is no danger of that construction.

Mr. J. B. KANGA: I am just now reminded that the rule of construction is always in favour of the subject, and therefore it will not be construed sui generis.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The only difficulty is the clause is differently worded from the Abkari Act.

Mr. J. B. KANGA: In a matter like this, there is always that difficulty. I think, as it stands at present, there would be no objection to it.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Sir, I propose that the wording of the Abkari Act may be adopted in this matter.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Advocate General says it is all right. It is for the Council to decide.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: The Advocate General will not be there before the judge on behalf of the accused.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA: If it creates so much confusion here, it will create much more confusion in courts.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Why not adopt the language of the old section which has stood the test of time?

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: It is open to any non-official member to make a motion referring it to the select committee.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA: This will cause great confusion in the minds of honourable members, and quite rightly too. Why not adopt the language of the Abkari Act, which is on a clear basis?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: You can take the sense of the House, Sir, as to which they will prefer.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I can do so by only having a question before the House. Mr. Gandhi, if you want to bring it in conformity with the Abkari Act, please redraft your amendment.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): I move that

"In caluse (a) of new section 48-A, clause 2, line 4. after the word 'who' add the words 'without lawful excuse' and leave out the words 'or has other lawful excuse' in lines 6 and 7."

Mr. J. B. KANGA: May I be permitted to speak, Sir? I say that in substance both the sections mean the same thing, but the language of the proposed section, clause 2 of the bill, is certainly better than the language of section 49-A of the Abkari Act. I say so, Sir, for this reason. That section of the Abkari Act runs:

"Any Abkari officer who without lawful excuse shall cease or refuse to perform, or shall withdraw himself from the duties of his office, unless with the express written permission of the Commissioner....."

(The honourable member at this point was inaudible.)
There would be some such implication. Therefore the proposed section makes it clear that if he ceases or refuses to perform, or withdraws himself from the duties of his office.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: What is the language in the Abkari Act?

Mr. J. B. KANGA: "Any Abkari officer who without lawful excuse"—'without lawful excuse' is put in first—"shall cease or refuse to perform, or shall withdraw himself from the duties of his office,"—'shall be punished' will come here—then "unless with the express written permission of the Commissioner." (At this point the honourable member was inaudible.) I, therefore, say that the proposed section removes all difficulties, and therefore the proposed section should be accepted. There it clearly lays down three conditions under which a man who ceases or refuses to perform, or withdraws himself from, the duties of his office will not be punished: (1) when he has obtained the express written permission of the Commissioner; (2) when he has given to his superior officer two months' notice in writing; and (3) when he has any other lawful excuse. I therefore submit that the proposed section should stand.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Well, after that the question is whether the honourable mover of the amendment (Mr. Gandhi) will drop his amendment.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: In deference to the opinion of the Advocate General I beg leave to withdraw my amendment.

Amendment withdrawn by leave.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): Sir, I beg to move:

"In clause 2, clause (b) of new section 48-A, before the word 'imprisonment' add the word 'simple'."

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): I support the amendment, Sir, because according to the General Clauses Act, wherever the word "imprisonment" occurs, it may mean either simple or rigorous imprisonment. Therefore it is necessary that this Council should make it clear if it is to be simple.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): Sir, I beg to oppose this. If we reserve that section for the purpose of acting as a deterrent on officers who are inclined to desert when they are required to be on duty, there should not be only simple imprisonment.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Are you replying, Rao Saheb Dadubhai Desai?

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): I have to reply, Sir. For such offences as cowardice rigorous imprisonment is not necessary. Rigorous imprisonment is only awarded in such grave cases as theft, extortion and such like offences. But here for simple desertion I do not think it is necessary to award rigorous imprisonment. The object of the bill would be served by awarding only simple imprisonment.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Sir, I hope the House will not accept the amendment. The punishment provided in this section is the same as in the Abkari Act. The word "imprisonment," as the honourable member Mr. Pahalajani has pointed out, covers both simple and rigorous imprisonment. The discretion will rest with the magistrate who will award either simple or rigorous imprisonment according to the offence committed. He has the discretion of not punishing to the extent of the full three months, but can give a few days' imprisonment. Three months' imprisonment is the maximum penalty which has been authorised, and the discretion should, I think be left to the magistrate as to whether the punishment should be rigorous or simple; that is on the same lines as the Abkari Act, and I hope the Council will not accept the amendment.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. S. K. BOLE (Bombay City, North): I beg to propose another amendment that the words "simple or rigorous imprisonment" may be inserted so that the magistrate may not.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member may be reminded that the honourable member from Sukkur (Mr. Pahalajani) has drawn the attention of honourable members to the General Clauses Act where imprisonment means either simple or rigorous. The General Clauses Act has provided for it. So the amendment is unnecessary.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: I beg to move another amendment that, if the imprisonment is going to be rigorous, instead of "three months," it should be "one month". I therefore move that,

'In clause 2, clause (b) of new section 48-A, leave out the words "three months" and insert instead the words "one month".'

Amendment negatived.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I beg to move that the word "three" should be left out and the word "two" inserted in its place. The section requires two months' notice for enabling a revenue officer to resign his post. It means to say if an officer refuses to work without a proper excuse he is to be put in jail for three months as a punishment; but if he chooses to give notice, two months' notice will be quite sufficient, and therefore it is not necessary that he should be in jail for a longer period than two months.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You mean three months' imprisonment?

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: In line 10 the words are "three months"; so I think the punishment should not exceed two months. I, therefore, move that "In clause 2, clause (b) of new section 48-A, leave out the word 'three' and insert instead the word 'two'."

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA (Karachi City): Mr. President, in support of the amendment moved by my honourable friend Mr. Jadhav I would say that it is a pity that the first amendment was lost regarding imprisonment for one month. Now we are coming to two months' imprisonment as against three and I hope we shall all be ready to compromise on the situation. Supposing, Sir, for the sake of argument, a magistrate convicts and sentences him to rigorous imprisonment, which may be for the full period, that is, two months, don't you think it would be very hard for the man to undergo the rigorous imprisonment, even for five days or ten days subjected as he would be to so many hard rules and regulations of the jail at present ? Nowadays we are all tired of these imprisonments and we all know, sir, that the treatment dealt out to the prisoners in the jails nowadays is extremely hard and we are hearing so much about it.....

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA : I rise to a point of order. Can the honourable member go into all these matters while dealing with this amendment ?

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA : Well, Sir, I need not refer to others. In order to support my contention and convince my honourable colleagues that they should not vote for the proposition of three months' imprisonment, I merely quote certain instances to show whether or not imprisonment even for ten days or fifteen days or a fortnight, would not be very hard having regard to the present hard and drastic regulations and rules of the jail and whether we think, Sir, that under the present rules and regulations of the jail, even five days' imprisonment accorded to a prisoner would or would not meet the ends of justice. Why, Sir, therefore, should we go to two months' or three months' imprisonment and see the man in jail under the present rules and regulations of the jail ? I, therefore, say that it is a pity that the first amendment was lost and that we should all compromise in the matter and provide that not more than two months' imprisonment should be awarded—whether simple or rigorous I do not say—if we have any feeling for our fellow creatures.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Sir, when the sense of the House was ascertained as to whether the bill should be referred to a select committee, it was found that the honourable members were prepared to pass all the three readings now. After this, to bring forward these amendments, one after another, is hardly a consistent attitude. The point is this that the Abkari Act, provides a maximum penalty of three months and the discretion whether it should be simple or rigorous vests in the magistrates. The provision of that Act has been in operation for ten years and we have not heard a single complaint against the manner in which it has been worked. I do hope, Sir, that the Council will reject this amendment and accept the original clause as it stands, which is exactly what it is in the Abkari Act.

Question put that the word 'three' in clause 2, line 10, do stand part of the clause.

Motion carried.

Clause ordered to stand part of the bill.

Clause 1 (Short title) ordered to stand part of the bill.

Preamble ordered to stand part of the bill.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Sir, I beg to move that Third reading. the bill be now read a third time and passed.

Bill read a third time. Question put and agreed to.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I declare that the bill is now read the third time and passed.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : I propose, Sir, that item No. (10) on the agenda paper, Bill No. XVI of 1922 (A Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to local boards), may be taken up now.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Standing Order is that when Government business has precedence, they may arrange such business in such order as they deem fit. They need not give any notice.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA: Still, Sir, it is due to the Council that we ought to know what business is coming on after what business. If the agenda is prepared and a certain order of business is shown therein, it is due to the Council that they should have notice of any change in the order; otherwise, why is the agenda prepared? There is a prima facie case for the Government to go in the order mentioned on the agenda. There is no meaning otherwise in our having the agenda.

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: I may be permitted to mention to the Council, Sir, why it is desirable to take the Local Boards Bill now and not the Rent Bill although, as far as I am concerned, I am quite willing to proceed with the Rent Bill now. But I think it will make for greater convenience to the honourable members if we take up the Rent Bill to-morrow, for, although the report of the committee that was appointed on the Rent Act has been placed on the Council table, it will be more convenient for members to have a copy supplied to each of them, and that will be done to-morrow morning. If the Council wants to proceed with the Rent Bill now, I am quite ready to do so.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): If you will permit me, Sir, I want to make an appeal to Government in this matter. True it is that in accordance with the Chair's ruling Government can vary the order of business as they like. But all of a sudden to take up the last bill to-day and spring a surprise upon us is not fair. After all, we are entitled to certain consideration and courtesy and if we say to the Honourable Members of Government that we are not prepared to take up the Local Boards Bill at this time today—a bill which is the longest, and contains about 200 clauses and in which there are so many principles involved—I think it is quite fair that Government should listen to us in this matter.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Sir, the two alternatives before the House are firstly that the Honourable the General Member should now move the first reading of the Rent Bill without waiting for the circulation amongst honourable members of the committee's report; the other alternative is that the Honourable the Minister for Local Self-Government should proceed with the Local Boards Bill and make his statement explaining the principles underlying it. That will take, having regard to the importance of the bill, a reasonable amount of time. After that speech is made, it will be time to consider whether we will go on with it or adjourn till to-morrow. I do not see that honourable members need object to the Honourable Minister expounding the principles of the bill. It will be open to the Council after the Honourable Minister has made his speech, to go on with the discussion or to adjourn till to-morrow. These are the two alternatives, either of which may be accepted.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District): I think, Sir, that the alternative suggested by the Honourable the Leader of the House should be accepted and we should go on with the Local Boards Bill now.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA (Bombay City, North): Mr. President, I may mention that it has become a big public grievance—in fact a public scandal—that the report of the Rent Act Committee has not been before the public and it is with that view that we do not wish to go on with the Rent Bill just now. If we go on with the Rent Bill at this stage we shall be doing so when we are not sufficiently enlightened as to its merits mentioned in the report of the Rent Act Committee, and I therefore suggest that we should now go on with other business and not with the Rent Bill.

[Dr. S. S. Batliwala]

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: As regards, Sir, Dr. Batliwala's suggestion that there has been a public scandal in regard to the non-publication of the Rent Committee's report, I may tell the Council at once that the statement that the report has not been published is unfounded and that in saying what he did, Dr. Batliwala was speaking without knowledge of the facts. The report of the committee was published and put before the public and given to the press three or four days ago. A summary of the report has appeared in the press already.....

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA: Only yesterday.

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: It has been sent to the press and a copy has been placed on the Council table also. I quite agree that it will be more convenient for members each to have a copy and that is what we are going to do.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: It is in Government's power entirely whether to take up this bill now or any other bill or no bill at all.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: I think the general sense of the House is that the Local Boards Bill should be taken up on the lines I indicated and Government's decision therefore is that the Honourable the Minister for Local Self-Government should move the first reading of the Local Boards Bill.

A BILL TO CONSOLIDATE AND AMEND THE LAW RELATING TO LOCAL BOARDS (BILL No. XVI OF 1922).

First reading.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Mr. President, I beg to move that Bill No. XVI of 1922 (A Bill to consolidate and amend the Law relating to local boards), be now read a first time. The enactments that have been in force up to date in regard to the local boards are the Sind Local Funds Act of 1865, the Bombay Local Funds Act of 1869 and the District Local Boards Act of 1884. The present bill proposes to repeal all these various Acts. After the passing of the Act of 1884, honourable members of this Council are aware that much water has flown under the bridge of local self-government. Various committees were appointed by Government to enquire into the question of local boards. It must be within the memory of members of this Council that a committee under the chairmanship of the Honourable Mr. Lawrence was appointed, known as the Lawrence Committee, which made its recommendations in 1915. After that, a small bill was introduced in the Council, but was subsequently withdrawn. A special officer, Mr. Martin, was then appointed to go into the whole question of the local boards, and he made a report in 1918. Again a committee was appointed under the chairmanship of Mr. Pratt which made its recommendations. All these recommendations have been carefully considered by Government who propose to give effect to such of the recommendations as are deemed desirable and also to introduce some further changes which have been found expedient. The present bill popularises the constitution of the local boards, widens the franchise, gives greater independence, wider powers and larger responsibilities to the local boards.

First, I will deal with the constitution of the boards. It will be necessary to mention here what was the position of the local boards under the Act.

[Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ghulam Hussain]

Under the Act of 1884, in talukas as well as in district local boards we had half elected and half nominated members. Recently, Government raised the elective number to two-thirds. The present bill proposes to give the taluka and the district local boards an elective element of not less than three-fourths, and a nominated element of only one-fourth. Out of this one-fourth not more than half will be salaried servants. Members of this Council will thus see that the present bill is a step forward in that direction. Again, under the Act, in the taluka and district local boards we had first official presidents ; then, recently, non-official presidents were appointed by Government. The present bill gives the taluka and district local boards elected presidents and vice-presidents. Further, it makes officials ineligible for the office of president and vice-president.

Now, Sir, I come to the franchise. I will first deal with the franchise in regard to the taluka local boards. Section 10 of the existing Act lays down the qualifications for a voter. Section 10 (1) says :

"Land-holders, whose holdings situate within the taluka are assessed (or in the case of alienated lands, would be assessed, if they were not alienated) to the land-revenue at not less than forty-eight rupees per annum....."

At present, under the Act, a man who is a holder of land of the assessable value of Rs. 48 per annum has the right of vote. The other qualifications for a voter are as follows :

"Persons who own immoveable property within the taluka, other than a holding described in clause (1) of section 10, estimated by the Collector to be not less than five thousand rupees in value ;

Persons, residing within the taluka, whose annual net earnings from any occupation are estimated by the Collector to be not less than five hundred rupees ;

Pensioned Government servants residing within the taluka whose pensions are not less than rupees fifty per mensem ;

Honorary magistrates residing within the taluka ;

Officiating revenue or police patels of villages within the taluka."

I have just mentioned to you that holders of alienated or unalienated land paying an assessment of Rs. 48, persons having immoveable property other than land of the value of Rs. 5,000, persons earning not less than Rs. 500 per annum, pensioners drawing a pension of Rs. 50 a month, honorary magistrates and officiating revenue and police patels have the right of vote. Now, if you turn to clause 15 of the bill, you will find that all these various franchises have been done away with, and the right of vote in the case of taluka local boards has been given to an owner or occupier of land, alienated or unalienated, of the assessable value of Rs. 8, and every other taxpayer, in the taluka. In the bill, the various franchises that I have mentioned have been done away with, and a general and uniform franchise has been laid down, giving the right of vote to an occupier of land of the assessable value of Rs. 8 and to every taxpayer.

Then, under the Act, let us see who had the right of returning members to the taluka local boards. I would refer honourable members to section 6 of the Act of 1884. Each municipality within the taluka, having a population of not less than 5,000, had the right of sending one member to the taluka board; secondly, one member (qualified as hereinafter provided) was returned by each of the several groups into which the villages in the area, subject to the authority of such board, were divided; and thirdly, one member was elected by the holders of entire alienated villages within the taluka. Under the bill, all these have been done away with. The municipalities, it may be said, have enjoyed this right for a long time, since 1884. My objection to their right of sending a member to the taluka local boards is that there is no community of interest between the municipalities and the taluka boards. Municipalities do not contribute anything to the revenue of the taluka boards. Therefore, they ought to have no right of sending a representative. Again, though the municipalities, under the Act, had the right of sending one representative to the taluka boards, the taluka boards had no corresponding right of sending a member to the municipalities. Therefore, this representation was illogical, and it has been done away with.

Coming to the holders of entire alienated villages, I must say that the withdrawal of their special right has evoked a storm of protest from the vested interests. They say that they have enjoyed the right for a considerable length of time, and therefore this right should not be withdrawn from them. But if you take into consideration the numbers of such holders of entire alienated villages, in Sind you will not find a single one; in some talukas, there may be one or two, but in the Presidency proper there are some talukas having 13, or 15, or 30 entire alienated villages. But I know of instances in which the holder of an entire alienated village sits quietly at home. He says, he will send a relative to be a member of the taluka local board. My reason for doing away with this right of the holders of entire alienated villages is that, in the first place, it is unnecessary, because these people have the right to vote already. They can come in through the common electorate. Secondly, when we are democratising the constitution, it is but fair that these aristocrats, who have enjoyed this special right for a considerable time, should climb down to the common level. It is in their own interest, because they will be in touch with their tenants. So, now the right of vote has been given to an owner or occupier of land of the assessable value of Rs. 8 and to every taxpayer, and they will have the right to return members and be returned to the taluka local boards.

Then I come to the franchise in regard to the district local boards. There was no direct election to the district local boards. The present bill proposes to create separate electorates for the district local boards. The members used to come in by indirect election, and I will show you who have the right to send representatives to the district local boards. Section 7 of the Act says:

"one member or, if Government so direct, two or more members for each taluka local board in the district, or one member for two or more local boards in the district, united for this purpose into a joint board, elected by the members of such board or joint board from amongst their own number."

The members of the taluka boards used to be about ten or twelve, a handful having the right of sending one member to the district local board.

(At this stage the Honourable the President withdrew and the Deputy President occupied the Chair.)

These local boards have no direct election by a distinct electorate, which is to come under this bill. Then:

"one member for each municipal district within the district containing not less than eighteen thousand inhabitants elected by the commissioners of such district from amongst their own number;"

I have shown the Council that this representation of the municipalities on the district as well as the takuka boards is illogical. There is no community of interest between them and such representation has been done away with under this bill. The other method of election is as follows:

"one member elected by the holders of entire alienated villages, if any, within the district from amongst their own number, or, if there is but one such holder in the district such holder himself or any person whom he nominates as his representative:"

[Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ghulam Hussain]

This right has now been withdrawn. The right of voting and the right of being elected to the district local boards is given now to an owner or occupier of land of the assessable value of Rs. 16 in some districts and Rs. 32 in others. This is entirely based on the Council franchise. As regards the franchise of other taxpayers also, I have shown that the present bill is a substantial step forward. It popularises the constitution, widens the franchise, and allows a large section of the public to partake in the administration of their own local affairs.

Now, I come to a very thorny question, that is, special constituencies for Mahomedans. This is a very old question. Before the introductoin of the Minto-Morley reforms, the representatives of the Mahomedans of the whole of India waited in deputation on Lord Minto, who was then the Viceroy, requesting him to grant separate representation by separate electorates on the councils as well as on the local bodies. In pursuance of this, the Mahomedans were given separate representation by separate electorates on the councils, and the question of separate communal representation on the local bodies was left out of consideration. After that, some Presidencies have given communal representation to the Mahomedans on the local bodies, for instance the Punjab, the United Provinces, and I shall come later on to this Presidency. This question of communal representation by separate electorates for Mahomedans in this Presidency was thoroughly investigated by the Pratt Committee, and their recommendation was that Mahomedans should be given such separate representation. Therefore, I am not introducing a new principle in the local bodies. Looking at the question from another point of view, the position is this. The Mahomedans are in a minority in the Presidency proper, and my Hindu friends are in a minority in Sind. If we give Mahomedans separate electorates, automatically my Hindu friends come in. Both these communities we find are sparsely represented by election.

(The Honourable the President at this stage resumed the chair.)

It might be said that, if they are not represented by election, let them come in by nomination. In the first place nomination is not looked upon with favour and, I do not think that any community, if it can be represented by election, would like to be represented by nomination. Moreover, it is very difficult to give adequate representation to the Mahomedans by nomination under the present bill, which gives three-fourths elected members and one-fourth nominated members. By nomination Government experts must come in to guide the local boards which are in their infancy. Then we want men experienced in the administration of the local boards who must come in by nomination, as they may not like to stand for election under the widened franchise. There are then a large number of minorities, such as, the Parsis, Indian Christians, backward classes, untouchables, Jains, Marathas, and so forth, who will have to be represented. This difficulty will increase as we go on increasing the elective element in these local bodies. I think there is no justification for the misgiving that communal representation by separate electorates will accentuate racial differences. What has been our experience in the past? Is not communal representation given to Mahomedans in the Council? Can any honourable member say that any Mahomedan member has raised a single sectarian question up to now? (Voices of 'Hear, hear' and 'Why') No. This principle has also been introduced in the municipalities of Sind, where Mahomedans are having separate representation by separate electorates. Mr. Ojha comes from Karachi and Mr. Pahalajani comes from

[Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ghulam Hussain]

Sukkur. There they have been working smoothly. A Mahomedan was elected president of the Karachi municipality unanimously, and my Hindu friends have been elected presidents of municipalities. They have elected a Parsi gentleman as president, and for the vice-president's place also they have elected a Parsi gentleman. Hence the assertion that communal representation accentuates differences is quite untrue; on the contrary, when you have representatives of both communities, neither community has any grievance. If anybody has a complaint he can refer to his representative. I, therefore, think communal representation has made for the present concord and co-operation between the various communities.

Another important change that is proposed by the bill is the removal of the sex bar. Under that, a woman, because of her sex, is disqualified for a seat or a vote. The present bill proposes to give her both the right to a vote and a seat.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI: A woman has the right to vote. She is a voter under the existing Act.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: She has no right. Now, there might be some objection to this. Some people might have objection to their female relations' names being entered in the list of voters. But clause 11 makes it very clear that the voters' list—as regards those who pay assessment—will be prepared from the records of the Collector or of the revenue office. If a woman's name is there, it will appear in the voters' list. Therefore, to the contention that women's names should not appear in the list, my reply is that the names are already on record, and it is simply transferring the names from one list to another. Suppose a woman is eligible, and her name is not on the record, as this is only an enabling bill, she need not apply to get her name registered, or, if her name is not on the list of voters, she need not apply to get her name entered. In fact, this is a permissive provision. Those who like to do so may apply to get their names registered. This right is given to women, because we are now introducing free and compulsory education by a bill which makes the attendance of girls from six to eleven years of age compulsory. Our country cannot progress without female education or female suffrage. It is a permissive provision: those who like to do so may take advantage of it; those who do not, need not.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Does that permissiveness apply to women only, and not to men?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: It applies to both.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Then it applies to both. Then I want to know whether the bill removes for the first time the sex disqualification.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Yes. Under the old Act women were not entitled.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI. They are entitled to vote, but not to be candidates for membership.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Let us be quite clear on that point.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: There is section 10 read along with section 11 :

" Unless disqualified on any of the grounds set forth in the next following section, and unless disqualified under section 25 or section 25-A or under any other law for the time being in force, the following persons shall be entitled to have their names entered in the list.... qualifying them to be elected '.....

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI : " To be elected ", and not " to vote."

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Sections 11 and 18 make that clear.

Under the bill new disqualifications have been added to the disqualifications already existing and these have been taken from the District Municipal Act. Under the existing Act if a man is disqualified, unless that disqualification is removed by Government, he is disqualified for ever. But the present bill provides that after the expiry of five years he will be eligible even if Government has not removed the disqualification.

Then, as regards corrupt practices, as the law at present stands, a judge can declare any person against whom there appears evidence on the record, whether he be a party to the proceedings or not, to be disqualified. That is, suppose the proceedings are between A and B, and evidence is adduced that C, who is not a party to the proceedings, has committed an offence of corrupt practices, the Judge, as the law at present stands, can disqualify C. The present bill proposes a change in that respect, and that is that such a person cannot be condemned unheard, and that he should be given an opportunity to be heard.

Then there was no provision under the Act specifying the manner in which the resignation of a member should be effected. Such provision has been made.

Then a further provision has been made to allow presidents and vice-presidents of the taluka and district boards to carry on the administration of their boards even after the expiry of their terms of office till new presidents and vice-presidents are elected.

Then, I come to the important additions that have been made to the powers and functions of the boards. Wide powers and greater independence have been given by the bill to the local boards in regard to educational matters. Under the bill a school board will be created. This will consist of not less than 10 and not more than 15 members. Out of these not more than three will be nominated by Government and the remaining will be elected by the local boards, and they shall include persons experienced in education, women and representatives of minorities. Clause 36 therefore requires some verbal changes to this effect. For that clause, as it stands, is as follows :—

" In every district there shall be a committee called the school board ; subject to rules made under clause (c) of section 133 he school board shall consist of not less than 10 and not more than 15 members. Of these not more than three shall be appointed by Government. "

The remaining members can be elected by the district local boards and shall be persons experienced in education, including women or representatives of minorities or of municipalities in the districts which are not permitted by Government to manage their schools. The changes are that the school boards shall include representatives of the minorities and women. In regard to the latter requirement, I may say that as we are introducing free and compulsory education even for girls, it is but fair that the school boards should include women as well.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI : Will the Honourable Minister explain the scheme for representation of minorities ? Will you kindly give us the scheme how you propose to have the representatives of minorities ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: That will be under the rules. It is a matter of detail.

Now what is the position of the local boards in regard to education at present? Their schools are managed and controlled by the Educational Department. Their budgets are prepared by the educational authorities, and the local boards are mere bankers to supply money to them. Now they will have the power to control their own education provided they do not interfere with the salaries of the present teachers; they can appoint new teachers on any salaries they like, provided they fulfil the necessary qualifications. Further, they will prepare their own budget according to their own wants. They can, with the consent of Government, get the curriculum changed. I think honourable members of this Council will agree with me that this gives very wide powers to the local boards in the matter of education which they have not had before.

Another important change that has been effected by this bill is the establishment of public health committees. These public health committees will be wholly elected. If they like they may co-opt the Civil Surgeon. They will have the powers of the district local boards in the matter of public health. They can delegate their powers to any member or any honorary or stipendiary officer of the local boards because there might be difficulties, owing to the distance of some villages, and they can delegate their power to any honorary or stipendiary officer of their own or to any member. For instance, if they want to look after the health of a taluka, they can have a particular officer on the health committee and delegate their powers to him.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: Will these public health committees supersede the village panchayats?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Then, the bill gives wider power to the boards over their own members, and the boards can hold them liable not only for misapplication of the boards' money, but for loss of the money or property of the local boards and they can file suits with the sanction of Government, and at the same time Government also has been given the right of filing suits. The sanction of Government is required because for the same cause of action two parties cannot file separate suits, and the reason why Government has been given the power of filing suits is that the board may not care to file suits against their own members or after filing the suits they may not prosecute them energetically. Further, they have been given the power to compromise suits, which power they did not have before.

Another important change that I would refer to is in regard to section 57 of the Act. Under section 57 of the Act, when the cost of a road under construction or repair exceeded 50 rupees per mile and when the cost of other works exceeded Rs. 500, the local board had to get the plans and estimates either prepared or approved by the Executive Engineer; this limit the bill proposes to raise from Rs. 50 per mile to Rs. 200 per mile and from Rs. 500 to Rs. 2,000, that is to four times the previous limit. However, this is a question for the select committee. Limits have been prescribed because most of the boards have not yet employed qualified engineers. If they have qualified engineers, then they could trust their own officers for the preparation of the plans and estimates. However, this is a question for the select committee and it will be considered there. As regards the execution of works, powers have already been given to the boards to execute their works through their own officers to the extent of Rs. 10,000. Some boards have been given this power already, and, if I am not mistaken, the Ahmedabad district is given power even to the extent Rs. 50,000.

[Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ghulam Hussain]

Then, I would draw the attention of this Council to clause 59 of the bill. To the obligatory duties some new duties have been added, namely, the registration of births and deaths. That is, under the bill it will be the obligatory duty of the local boards to keep a register of births and deaths to enable the public health authorities to have proper statistics. Then, another obligatory duty that has been added is in regard to anti-rabic treatment. At present, when the district local boards contribute a certain amount for anti-rabic treatment for the expenses of people who go from the district for treatment to other places, it is purely voluntary. Now the bill makes it compulsory, because the local boards might at any time decline to contribute when it is their duty. When people residing within their jurisdiction go for anti-rabic treatment, the boards must pay for it.

Then, they have been given discretionary powers to spend money on local industries, on works of public safety, and on any public receptions, ceremonies, entertainments, exhibitions, and so on. Wide powers have been given to them in regard to sanitary matters, and chapter V deals with these; and, if any of the orders or rules framed by the local boards in regard to sanitary matters are not followed, penalties are provided in that chapter.

At present, under the existing Act, local boards can deposit their funds in the Government treasury. The bill proposes to give them authority to invest their funds in banks which have the approval of Government or in such securities as have the approval of the Governor General; so that, if they have any large balances, they can earn interest on them.

I now come to the most important point, namely, the finances of the boards. At present the finances of the local boards are in an exceedingly bad condition. Government make very liberal grants to the boards and in fact contribute two-thirds of the expenditure on establishments, water-supply, communications, education and the like. Yet the boards are not able to meet all their demands. Therefore, the bill empowers them to levy taxes. At present the main source of their income is the one anna cess. The bill proposes to give them the power to raise the cess from one anna to two annas. It is permissible. If they require money for their needs, they may raise the cess by any multiple of three pies, if they choose.

Then again, under the Sind Local Fund Act, the jahgirdars or the holders of alienated lsand in Sind were charged 5 per cent. instead of one anna in the rupee as ce$_a$s. The present bill proposes to charge them one anna in the rupee inste d of 5 per cent. Further, the bill empowers the boards to levy cess on the water rate in the Presidency proper. In the Presidency proper, new schemes of irrigation have been undertaken, in some parts dry streams have been converted into perennial canals and they require bridges to cross them and I think it is a fair cess. Similar cess is levied in Sind as it is included in the land revenue assessment. Again, remissions have been done away with, because the cess is a rate for services rendered. Suspension is allowed in years of famine with the permission of the local boards.

Then, the boards are allowed to levy taxes as in schedule II of the Government of India Act, which the local authorities are allowed to impose such as toll, octroi, house-tax, taxes on sites, buildings and the like.

Another important change that is introduced by the bill is that, whereas under the Act the presidents of takuka and district local boards have no authority of appointing or punishing any of their officers or servants, the present bill proposes to give them the power of appointing their officers and servants, subject to rules made by Government to a certain limited extent and of punishing or dismissing them. If they punish or dismiss them, their decision will be subject to appeal to the boards. Further the local boards themselves will be allowed to punish or dismiss their servants for misconduct, under certain restrictions. These restrictions have been imposed on their powers in the interests of the officers, because we know that in the mofussil there are factions and parties. No officer will find his tenure of office safe if it is left to the sweet will of the members of the boards.

Lastly, the most important change made is that an alternative measure in the shape of dissolution is introduced in the bill. At present, under the existing Act, if a local board commits gross default or shows incompetence or abuses its powers the board is suspended, but by introducing this alternative stage of dissolution, if a board is dissolved, new elections will be held.

As I propose to refer this bill to a select committee, I do not think it necessary to dwell at greater length on the details of it, and I hope this Council will accept the first reading of the bill.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District): I wish to have a ruling from the Chair as to the limit of the principle, because I have given certain amendments acting upon your ruling, Sir, last time. It is at page 82 of the Council proceedings. Thinking that if any amendments of principles have to be submitted, I have submitted them in accordance with that ruling. So, if those amendments can be regarded as amendments of principle, I should like to have a ruling on that point. If not, I should be obliged if you will enlighten us as to the course to be adopted in regard to these matters which are really rather of vital importance, so as to focus the discussion on the first reading of the bill. I have already submitted the amendments.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): Mr. President, I move

"That the further discussion of Bill No. XVI of 1922 be adjourned to the next session."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Do you want me not to answer Rao Bahadur Kale's question?

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: I have no objection, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Our Standing Order distinctly provides that on first reading an amendment of the principle of the bill may be moved. You can only amend the principle of the bill. Now, the principle of the bill means a principle which governs the whole of the bill, forms its fundamental essence, goes to the very root of it, constitutes such a strong feature of the whole bill, all its provisions taken together, that if the principle is given up by an amendment the whole bill is imperilled, is either emasculated or abandoned. That principle of the bill as a whole has to be determined from the title of the bill, from the statement of objects and reasons, from the policy and from the substance or purport of the whole bill. A principle of the bill may also be contained in a section of the bill, but before it can be regarded as a principle of the whole bill, that principle so embodied in any particular section must so necessarily hang together with the rest of the bill as to become a principle of the whole bill so that if that section is deleted, the whole bill falls to the ground.

These are the two tests by which you have to determine the principle of the bill and I shall decide when any amendment is moved whether the amendment is in order or not.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : As to communal representation, it would be better to decide it at the second reading.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Yes, it may be discussed in the select committee.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI (Ahmedabad City) : The only difficulty would be that provisions of this character run through several clauses of the bill, and if no decision is reached about them, there would be difficulty as in the case of the Municipal Bill.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : I may assure the honourable member that there are not many provisions of such a character in the bill.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI : One of the principles is whether there should be taluka local boards or not. That is a principle which runs through several clauses of the bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Order, order. I have thought over that question of the taluka local boards ; that is a question of detail, and I have no hesitation in saying that it is a matter which can be dealt with in the select committee and the second reading.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE : The franchise question also includes the question of co-option ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I think co-option is a matter of detail.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : Is the question of taxation a matter of principle or a matter of detail ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I have already given two tests by which you can determine the answer to the question.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : A member may get up and say that this question is left out, and the proposals as to taxation must be modified.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Is your question whether the local boards ought to be empowered to tax themselves ?

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : Yes, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That is a matter not forming the fundamental principle of the bill, because even if they are not empowered, then some other way may be found out for providing them with funds. Therefore, I hold that is not a matter of principle and any modification may be made in that. It is a matter of detail. I do not wish to be drawn any further, for that may encumber me when concrete instances arise.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI : I move that consideration of Bill No. XVI of 1922 be adjourned to the next session.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Under what Standing Order ?

Mr. C. M. GANDHI : Under Standing Order IV, 4, (1).

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Council is adjourned till 2 p.m. on Saturday, the 23rd September 1922.

Saturday, the 23rd September 1922.

LOCAL BOARDS BILL (BILL No. XVI OF 1922).

Debate on the motion for adjournment of consideration of the first reading resumed.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I must apologise to the honourable member for Surat (Mr. Gandhi) for what I said yesterday with reference to his motion for an adjournment of this bill under the Standing Order he referred to. He was in order, and he has drawn my attention to a very important question. That particular Standing Order which entitles any honourable member to move a motion to defer the consideration of a bill at any time in preference to any motion before the Council gives a very important right. The rule is an exception to the general rule that no business of the Council shall be interrupted by any other proceeding. One exception is the motion for the adjournment of the House in order to discuss a definite matter. Secondly, if there is a bill down upon the paper either for the first reading, or second reading, or third reading, and a debate is going on upon some other subject, any member can rise and say that that bill should not be taken up during that session, but should be adjourned to the next session or so. Therefore, I will allow the honourable member to move the motion under that Standing Order. It will not be an amendment, but a substantive motion.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): Sir, I move—

"That the consideration of the first reading of the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to local boards, Bill No. XVI of 1922, be adjourned to the next session of the Council."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: There cannot be a debate upon it beyond the limit prescribed in the Standing Order, viz.:—

"A brief explanatory statement from the mover of the motion and, if the motion is opposed from the member opposing the motion" is all that is allowed if the Chair permits. Then the question is put.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: Will you allow me to give my reasons?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Yes.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: The reason why I move this motion is certainly not with a view to obstruct the author of the legislation in bringing forward this legislation, but I think it is a bill of far-reaching consequences affecting rural areas. It has not been published in the vernaculars. There are members of this Council who do not know the English language, and one of them coming from the Panch Mahals told me that he was at a great disadvantage in following the bill, because he had not the advantage of reading it in the vernacular. It is therefore necessary that you, Sir, under the power that the Standing Orders give you after the bill is introduced, should be pleased to insist that translations of the bill should be published in the vernaculars of the province. I refer to Standing Order VIII, 2. Even copies in the English language were not available to members of district and local boards in the Surat district, who were called to our conference, and when they wrote to the Government Central Press asking for copies of the bill they were told that spare copies were not available. The bill was published so late as the 24th August, and we have not had even a month to consider its provisions which were in many respects complex and defective. When the Ministers of Local Self-Government in other provinces have thought it necessary to have an informal conference to discuss the lines on which such a measure should be brought, the Honourable Minister in this case did not think it proper even to send this bill to district boards and taluka boards for opinion. Government took something like seven years to mature their proposals and we are asked in less than seven weeks to consider a bill comprising something like 136 sections. There is no very great hurry about it. Legislation of this character can be carried only after the considered opinion of the people affected thereby has been ascertained. I think the Minister would be well advised in accepting my motion.

Rao Bahadur G. K. CHITALE (Ahmednagar District): Sir, I beg to oppose this motion. I am sorry that the honourable member for Surat has made a choice to oppose a bill of this character. If I remember rightly the expedition of this bill was pressed by several questions put in this Council in previous sessions. It is admitted, Sir, that the bill has been hatching for the last seven years. A large number of witnesses have been examined; two committees have looked into it; and the bill was almost ready at the time when the constitutional change came. I cannot see what grounds there are for shelving the bill. I suspect that the grounds are really that some of our friends think that there are certain things in the bill which militate against the real advance of local self-government inasmuch as it empowers local bodies to impose a schedule of taxes which is approved of by Government.

Then again, it has been complained that the bill has not been translated. I remember to have seen the bill long ago, wherein the instruction was that it was to be translated. I believe that instruction has been taken into account and has been put into action. But I do not know for certain, and I would not therefore dogmatise, but I believe that the bill has been translated.

Now, as regards the objection that the bill is so complex as to require very serious consideration at the hands of this Council, I must say that the honourable member need not have taken this rather deliberate step of shelving the bill,—he will pardon me for saying this. This bill is not intended to make any revolutionary changes. If you would allow me to say so, all major changes that are proposed by the bill have already undergone the experimental stage in various districts. It is no doubt true that the speedy advance in those areas is responsible for the introduction of those changes in various other districts.

Now, after the explanation made by the Honourable Minister yesterday, I do not think that our honourable friend from Surat wants the Council seriously to take it that the bill is so complex that it cannot be comprehended by this Council even when it is referred to the select committee. At one time I was rather disposed to have it passed at a single sitting. But perhaps the Council is not in a mood to accept that position but surely there could be no serious objection to allow it to be looked into carefully by a select committee. On the one hand we want a speedy advance of self-government, a wider change of constitutional progress. But at the same time we are afraid of taking the responsibility of taxation. My honourable friends want the responsibility of self-government but when it comes to putting up of taxation, they do not want to take any responsibility, and they think it fit to continue the present state of affairs for some time. I believe that is one of the causes which is at the back of this movement to shelve the bill for six months, so that they are hoping that the atmosphere in Gujarat after winter will be more congenial. But let me assure them that if they look at the bill in its full face, what is it ? You have the District Municipal Act which you have been administering for many years. Look at the changes which are now proposed to be made by this bill. If the changes that are proposed to be made are taken into consideration can any one say that we are taken by surprise as regards these changes, which you have got in this bill ? I do not wish to make a long speech—I did not want to speak at all as I am not in proper health—but I think it my duty to oppose this motion, because, I claim that this is not a bill which is at all of a revolutionary nature : but it is based upon experience which has been gained for the last four years since the report of the Pratt Committee and other changes subsequent to that report.

[Rao Bahadur G. K. Chitale]

Now, is it seriously suggested that my honourable friend from Surat has any fear of this bill or that the recommendations which were mentioned in that report of Mr. Martin were made much of ? I know that there are a number of changes in this bill which will not be found in Mr. Martin's bill. Changes as regards communal representation and several other changes on those bases are after all changes over which there is room for honest difference of opinion. But after all that is said and done, what is it that the bill aims at ? Now let me ask my honourable friends, do they mean that the district local board as long as it exists should have no power of taxation ? There was the one anna cess and it was imposed by Government, and local boards were asked to go on with it only and 88 per cent. of their expenditure came from Government. Now this bill no doubt makes a change inasmuch as it asks the local bodies to take up primary education in accordance with the Primary Education Bill and asks them to meet the cost by levying taxation. And then you prick your ears, make your eyes rather wide and say, what is this ? what will people say ? election is coming on next year, this bill could be brought in the next session. And in the next session perhaps another game may be tried to shelve the bill and it may be said as election is coming near let us see what our successors would do and in the meanwhile let us enjoy at the expense of Government with all the funds that they will give us.

In fact the Montford Report puts it in the forefront that as far as local self-government was concerned Government was willing to take a long step forward to make the local boards independent as much as possible. Now when we have been waiting for the last six years for this step forward and for these changes, and now when some of these changes are brought forward in the shape of this bill, I do not think it will be a wiser course to find some excuse and say that we do not want taxation at present and that it is better to shelve the bill for some time.

Under these circumstances, I do feel it my duty to protest strongly and very strongly indeed against this motion and I would urge that after all let us send the bill to the select committee ; let the select committee be as big as possible, and let the select committee look at it from all points of view of squaring up differences, so that when the second reading comes in you may be in a position to amend it in the best way you like. That, I think, is a much better course and a wiser course than to wreck the bill in its initial stage, and I hope the motion will be thrown out unanimously.

Debate on the first reading of the bill resumed.

Mr. D. D. GHOLAP (Addressed the House in Marathi) : Sir, the Local Boards Bill is being considered by the Council from yesterday, and from the speech of the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government, one would gather that this bill is a step forward in the direction of self-government or responsible government. I regret, however, that I am not in agreement with the views propounded by the Honourable Minister in certain respects. Looking generally at some of the provisions as framed by the Honourable Minister, there appears to me a tendency on the part of the Minister to be a little partial. That is to say, in this bill the Mahomedans have been given separate representation and, in order to support his own view in regard to such separate representation for the Mahomedans, he has relied on the reports made by the two Local Boards Committees, the Lawrence Committee and the Pratt Committee. But I am sorry to observe that, as regards non-Mahomedans, especially those Hindus who are socially, politically and educationally the most backward,—I mean the depressed or untouchable classes,—no provision is made in this bill for their separate or special representation. If we look at the matter from a practical standpoint, we shall find that among the Mahomedan community there are several people who can be classed among educated and well-to-do people, and even if they are not given separate representation, they would not find any considerable difficulty in getting in on the local boards. But the same cannot be said of non-Mahomedans, I mean especially Hindus belonging to the depressed or untouchable classes. I do not know whether the Honourable Minister has at all embodied any provisions in the bill to safeguard the interests of these classes, but, so far as I can make out, he does not seem to have done so. I would draw the Council's attention to the fact that, under the Reforms, Government have reserved one seat on this Council for these classes.

If no such special concession is given to the depressed classes, as has been given to Mahomedans, I do not see how these backward people can hope to get elected on the district and taluka councils. I think I had better tell the House how in the Honourable Minister's own department grave injustice is being caused to my backward community. At present we have what are called village panchayats in this Presidency, on which members can hope to sit by election. How can our depressed classes manage to come on such boards ? I remember an actual instance of how one gentleman from the depressed classes fared in spite of the fact that he was paying land revenue assessment to the tune of Rs. 400 annually. This gentleman stood for election for a village panchayat, but being a Mahar—rather a member from the depressed classes—his name was cleverly placed at the end of the list on account of his sin of being a depressed class candidate and the members of his caste were made to keep a long way from the polling station. The evident motive in the minds of those who manœuvred this gentleman out of the election in this manner seemed to be the undeniable and unremediable fact that he belonged to the untouchable part of the population and that therefore he should not be let in. He was thus deprived of a chance of serving on that village panchayat. If a man paying a land revenue tax of Rs. 400 cannot succeed in a village panchayat election, how members of the depressed classes paying Rs. 8 land assessment can have the slightest chance of sitting on the district or taluka local boards I for one cannot understand, unless of course the Honourable Minister sees to it that special provisions similar to those made by him for Mahomedans are made for depressed class people also. If my people cannot at present get the benefit of the rules and regulations under the Local Boards Act even under the administration of the Honourable Minister, it is difficult to imagine how the situation is likely to change for the better under the provisions of the bill before the House, unless, as I said, by means of some such privileged way as is sought now to be kept open for Mahomedans. I therefore suggest to the Council that, looking to the principle of the bill, it should not be approved of by this honourable House of which I have the honour to be a member. I consider it is our duty not to allow this bill to be passed in its present form.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District): Mr. President, I rise to support the first reading of this bill. The Act of 1884 was designed to meet the then aspirations of the people of this Presidency. Nearly 38 years have now elapsed since then without any changes in the constitution or in the working of the local boards, though it is an admitted fact that there have been rapid strides in the progress of the poeple of this Presidency. People, Sir, have been from a very long time, waiting with eager expectations for radical changes in the constitution and working of the local boards. Local boards have long been suffering from a state of utter helplessness in many important respects. Hence this bill comes as a great relief to the people of the rural areas in this Presidency, and I for one welcome it although there are still certain important defects in the bill itself. The prominent features of the bill are the lowering of the franchise, the increase in the elected element, the abolition of the indirect method of voting to the district local boards, the admission of women to the membership of the local boards, the abolition of undesirable distinction between inamdars and other landholders of the Presidency, the constitution of special electorates for the Mahomedan community, the constitution of school and health boards, the power of taxation and an increased measure of power to carry out works by their own agency given to district local boards and the taluka local boards. These may be said to be the prominent features of the new bill.

With regard to the lowering of franchise and the increase in the elected element, I beg to submit to this House that these two changes will be welcomed throughout the Presidency; they will be regarded as a boon by the masses in rural areas; they will give an increased awakening to the masses and make them alive to an increased sense of their rights and responsibilities. They will give new and fresh opportunities to many people who desire to serve their own districts. The abolition of the sex disqualification is a distinct advance and I may say it is well worthy of the achievement of this reformed Council, though I myself am not so very optimistic so far as the district and local areas are concerned about an increased desire on the part of women of this Presidency to be members of taluka and district local boards.

The only thing that I beg to point out in connection with the franchise is that it would have been a better thing if a uniform lowered franchise had been adopted both for taluka and district local boards. The difference between an eight rupee franchise and a thirty-two rupee franchise seems to be a very big one.

With regard to the abolition of inamdars' electorates, it seems to me that it is a right step in the right direction. The liberalisation and the democratisation of these institutions, namely, the taluka and district local boards, demand the abolition of the special privileges now enjoyed by special classes. The privilages enjoyed by the inamdars up till now were so to say given to them by robbing the people of their legitimate rights. Inamdars need not be sorry for losing a right which inherently did not belong to them. By the abolition of this special privilege, the only result would be that the lost right of the people would be restored to them.

Coming to special electorates intended for the Mahomedan community, I do say that there seem to be special reasons for the Mahomedans to demand special representation for them. Looking to the present membership of the various taluka and district local boards in the Presidency, of course excluding Sind, the Government is justified in seeing that special protection is given to the Mahomedan community who have no adequate representation at all on the district local boards at present. The only thing I would point out to the House is this, that the proportion of representation to be given to the Mahomedan community should not, in any circumstances, exceed the voting strength of the Mahomedan community, either in taluka local boards or district local boards; otherwise, it might result in a great injustice to the other communities.

With regard to the institution of the two boards, the school board and the health board, I have to point out that the constitution of the school board intended by the bill seems to be a very peculiar one. That there should be a school board, of course is desirable and necessary; but looking to the provisions contained in the bill with regard to the constitution of the school board, it appears to be topsy turvy. The members of the school board are to be elected by the members of the district local board, but the membership is not confined to the members of the district local board; in other words, according to the bill, they are not to be elected from amongst the members of the district local board, but any person outside the district local board may be a candidate for the membership of the school board, and from the provisions of the bill it would seem that the school board would be quite independent of the district local board. Whether it will be independent of, or subordinate to, the district local board, the method of election to the school board seems inherently defective. If the school board is to be a part of the district local board, if it is to be subordinate to the district local board, and if the district local board is to elect members of the school board, it stands to reason that the membership of the school board must be confined to and they must be elected from amongst, the members of the district local board.

Then, Sir, coming to the next question of the increased power proposed to be given to the local boards for carrying out their works, up to this time, according to the present Local Boards Act, the power given to the district local boards to carry out their works was purely an imaginary one. They were simply asked to pass a resolution saying that such and such a road should be repaired, that such and such a road should be metalled, and so on. After the resolution was passed, then the district local board was functus officio. If the expenditure exceeded a certain money limit, the whole scheme was to be sent to the Government Department or agency for being carried out, and the way in which the Government Department carried out the works of the district local boards needs no comment. The district local board roads have come to be regarded as roads which ought rather to be avoided instead of being utilised. This is the way in which the works of the district local boards have been carried out by Government agency. There was also great delay in the carrying out of the works. When the board passed a certain resolution, the matter was sent to the Government Department for the preparation of plans and estimates. The Government Department took months after months to do it, and several reminders had to be sent before they got the plans and estimates ready. If after that, the district local board disagreed, they had to pass another resolution and transmit it to the Government; again the Government Department took a certain amount of time. In this way the matter went on in correspondence for months and years without the work being taken up in hand. That is the state of affairs under the present District Local Boards Act. By the present bill, certain increased power is sought to be given to the district local boards. But I fail to see why complete power to carry out the works should not be entrusted to the local boards. The municipalities in the mofussil enjoy the power of constructing and carrying out the execution of their own works. They metal and repair their roads, and they also carry out other works involving expenditure of very large sums of money. I fail to see why the district local boards should not be allowed similar power to execute their own works. By the present bill, certain increased powers are sought to be given. Still, I submit that certain restraints are placed, even in the present bill on the power of the local boards. They are still sought to be placed under the tutelage of the Government Departments. Perhaps, it may be urged that the district local boards have not got the proper agency to carry out the works. But up to this time power was not given to them to carry out their own works. If this power is given to them, they will be obliged to entertain and retain an expert staff for the execution of their works. Without giving them the power to say that they are incompetent, or that they are unable to manage their own affairs or to carry out the execution of their own works, is to make an unjustifiable remark. Even in the present bill certain restrictions are placed on the powers of the district local boards. I beg to say that this sort of restriction should not be placed, and that this sort of the curtailment of the powers of the district local boards in the matter of the execution of their works should be put a stop to.

With regard to the representation of the depressed classes, I have to say a few words. Certainly, the depressed classes are entitled to have representation on the taluka and the district local boards, and Government has, for some time past, been showing their anxiety to select suitable representatives and then to nominate them on the local boards wherever they are found. In this bill, there is no special mention made of the representation of the depressed classes. I trust that the matter will receive the attention of the select committee, and I hope that provision will be made for their representation, either by special constituency or by providing a certain number of seats from amongst the nominated members of the taluka and district local boards

With these words, Mr. President, I beg to support the first reading of the bill.

Mr. M. W. PRADHAN (Thana District): Mr. President, I rise to support the first reading of this bill, and in doing so, I must congratulate the Honourable the Minister on the bold step that he has taken in bringing to the doors of the masses in the village the real training for Swaraj.

Mr. President, the bill aims at giving wider powers in many respects not only to people who are advanced but to people who are residing in villages.

Now, with regard to the great point which is made about communal representation, I would only urge on this Council to see whether the Honourable the Minister has not taken a proper perspective of the real state in the country. My honourable friend Mr. Gholap gave evidence as to how wise the Minister was in giving communal representation to one-sixth of the whole of the population of the Presidency. I know, Mr. President, that the principle of communal representation is bad, but we have to look not to what is bad, but to what is indispensable. Pudding and cakes are no doubt very good food, but congee and whey is the only food that will be relished by a sick man. To him dainty food would be poison. So, in the present state of India, I mean its diversity of classes and races, it would relish only this congee and whey of communal representation. That is their proper food. There is no use ignoring the fact that India is really divided. If it should become united and there is a united cry that there must not be communal representation, then legislation should be undertaken and modified on those lines. What has the Honourable Minister done? He has really taken into consideration the real state of the country, and has provided for communal representation which is absolutely necessary for the prevailing conditions.

My honourable friend Mr. Kambli said that the board must have control over its executive engineers, and I recognise that. But I would only remind the House that this bill is a bold measure and is a very great step in advance. It is indeed a bold experiment on the part of the Honourable Minister to give such wide powers to local bodies. Then it was stated that the district local boards should control their own officers. But there should be a provision in the Act binding on the Government, to lend the services of capable men from the Revenue Department to be appointed chief officers and thus to guide the work of the local boards. As regards powers of taxation, I think Rao Bahadur Chitale said.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You cannot refer to a concluded debate.

Mr. M. W. PRADHAN: I beg your pardon, Sir. With regard to powers of taxation, the improvement of agriculture, industries, sanitation, education, these are all very great powers in advance and do require fresh sources of revenue in the power of local bodies and to my mind it appears that the Council would be committing a great error in not allowing the bill to go to select committee. As regards the statutory provision in the Act making it compulsory on Government to give as chief officers persons from the Revenue Department, as I said above, I think these are matters of detail which can be properly looked into in the select committee. With regard to the whole scope of the bill in spite of communal representation, it is certainly a very great step in advance, and the Council would be committing an error in not allowing it to go to select committee.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District): Mr. President, before proceeding to discuss one or two salient features of this important measure, I should like to join with the previous speakers in the congratulations they had offered to the Honourable Minister for having brought forward a measure which is intended to extend popular control in our local bodies, and I would add that it would have been better, if he had extended further freedom from outside control.

The first formula that was laid down as essential in the Montagu-Chelmsford report runs as follows:

"There should be as far as possible complete popular control in local bodies and least possible interference in them by outside control."

Reading the provisions of the proposed bill, and after hearing the speech of the honourable mover, I was disappointed to see that so far as the second part of this formula is concerned, very little advance has been made in the bill upon the old state of things.

However, before coming to that, I should like to say a few words about the constitution and franchise that have been proposed to be incorporated in the new bill. It is a happy coincidence that this bill synchronises with another bill which the Honourable Minister for Education is bringing forward in this Council, because the subject of primary education is so closely interwoven with the powers and duties of local bodies that it seems to me it is impossible to make any improvement in the one without making at the same time improvement in the other. It is for this reason that both these bills should be carried through with the least possible delay.

Now, Sir, about the constitution of the boards, there are two points which require notice. At this stage I refrain from any discussion of details but in my opinion members of Council ought to give expression to their opinion on certain broad questions, because when the bill is referred to the select committee, that committee should be in a position to know exactly what the views of the different members of this Council are, and what their instructions are in regard to certain provisions that are embodied in the bill. The first point that strikes one in considering the constitution of boards is that of communal representation. I am sorry I am unable to agree either with the mover or with the speakers who have preceded me and who are in favour of communal representation. The history of the question of communal representation is very interesting and the mover of the bill sought to justify the introduction of communal representation in the local bodies on the ground that it has already been recognised in the Legislative Councils. But the circumstances that led to it should be considered before we extend that principle to bodies where it has never existed. The report on Constitutional Reforms (Montagu-Chelmsford Report) has stated in very distinct terms.

"We regard any system of communal electorate is a very serious hindrance to the development of self-governing principle and the evils of any extension are plain."

In the beginning they have laid down the reasons which show these communal electorates constitute a serious hindrance. Other reasons are there based on the teachings of history. The second reason was that it perpetuates class division. We have seen that now: even the member for the depressed classes a few minutes ago put forward his claim for separate representation. Thirdly, they stereotype existing relations, and this is a very important point:

"A minority which is given special representation owing to its weak and backward state is positively encouraged to settle down into a feeling of satisfied security: it is under no inducement to educate and qualify itself to make good the ground it has lost compared to the stronger majority."

Lastly, as I have said—and that is a very important point—in the interests of the community itself it is desirable that that community which is backward should be made to realise that it is by educating itself that it can go forward: it cannot afford to remain backward for ever. But if separate representation is given, it will always be backward and there will be no inducement for it to go forward. Sir, after laying down these principles, and after coming to the conclusion that the system of communal representation is a very serious hindrance to the growth of local self-government, how is it and why is it that the Montford Report and the Franchise Committee's Report and the despatch of the

[Rao Bahadur R. R. Kale]

Government of India on that report, still maintain the principle of communal representation for the local and Imperial Legislative Councils? The reason is they think that the communities have enjoyed that privilege for years together and they should not be deprived of it. Ever since that principle was introduced in 1909, when the Morley-Minto reforms gave a widened constitution to the Legislative Councils, that principle has been embodied in the constitution of the councils. It was therefore thought that under those circumstances it was inexpedient for the authors of the reformed constitution of Legislative Councils to go back on that principle. If you read the Montford Report carefully you will see that it is with great reluctance that this principle has been allowed to stand. It was allowed to stand, because it had stood there already. If it had not stood there already, I am sure any one who reads between the lines of that report will come to the conclusion that the only proper and logical policy would have been pursued. In these days when we have to reach the goal of full responsible self-government, we must look to the history of these institutions for our copy and we cannot afford to maintain this communal representation. It is something like what our grammarians say: if there is a wrong form there is a justification for its being maintained but there is no justification for creating another wrong form. Now, Sir, if as has been observed by my predecessor, these local boards are a training ground, if they form the lower rung of the ladder which we are to ascend, here it is that we must begin and that beginning must be made on lines which ought to be irrespective of any communal claims:

> "Division by creeds and classes means the creation of political camps organised against each other, and teaches men to think as partisans and not as citizens."

That is also a quotation from the Montford Report. Therefore, my submission to my Mahomedan colleagues is that they should look at this question from this point of view: whether they wish to be trained as citizens or whether they wish to perpetuate this partisan spirit for ever. The leaders of that community should look at the question as the late Justice Badruddin Tyebji looked at it. He said "I am an Indian first and a Mahomedan afterwards." Recently during the discussion of the Municipal Bill in the Behar and Orissa Council two Mahomedan representatives Khan Bahadur Mohiuddin Nur, who has since been appointed president of that Council, and Khan Bahadur Fakirruddin, who is Minister of Excise and Education, these worthy gentlemen resisted the proposal to extend separate communal representation to municipal bodies. I hope their example will be followed by the worthy Minister who is in charge of the bill. I know he is a liberal. I am not prepared to go with the honourable member for Surat and say that he wants to favour a particular community because he happens to be a member of that community. Far from it, I know that that is not at the back of his mind, and cannot be at the back of the mind of any one in that responsible position. But he is perhaps obsessed by the idea that his Mahomedan brethren want this communal representation, and therefore with the desire to give them what they want, he seems to have allowed this principle to be brought into the bill. But I hope and trust that when after discussion in the Council the matter goes before the select committee, he will reconsider his position in the light of facts placed before him, and if he finds that this principle of communal representation ought not to be in this bill, I am sure that he will drop it, because in this very bill when he has extended the franchise, as he said, to women, I must say that he has already set aside sentiment in preference to justice and equality. Notwithstanding the feelings and sentiments of the Mahomedans with regard to women, when he was bold enough to support the franchise for women for election to the Legislative Council last year, and this year he has embodied a provision for enfranchising women in the present bill that shows that he has the courage of his conviction. Therefore I have full faith that he will drop this principle if he is convinced as we hope to convince him, that if India has to attain the goal of full responsible self-government, we must start with these rural institutions and exclude the principle of communal representation from their constitution. So far as the experience of my district goes, one Mahomedan councillor in our municipality has been there for nine years and he has been elected all along by Hindu voters. Another instance of a Mahomedan being elected by Hindu voters is the taluka board of Koregaon. A Mahomedan member has been sitting on that board for a long time and he has been elected purely by a Hindu constituency. Only recently the last election was held on the 12th September and it was feared, perhaps owing to this awakening there might be a change—but still he has maintained the ground—and I am glad to say we have seen him on the taluka board. If therefore, Mahomedans when they are fit and available and willing to serve on the local boards, are sent up without difficulty, I am unable to see why we should depart from the usual rule simply to provide for their being set up when as a matter of fact they perhaps in the present state of things may not be quite in a position to sit on these boards. I can understand, Sir, if they have their own separate interest as Mahomedans, then by all means let them have it as in the case of Legislative Councils. But the case of Legislative Councils is different from that of the local bodies. Perhaps in the Legislative Councils you have to pass laws affecting various communities and there you have to consider the religious feelings and other matters in passing enactments and so on; but in local areas, in local boards and municipalities, where you have to concern yourself with local affairs, I must say, unless there is some special interest to be safeguarded, I do not see that these grievances necessitate that community being given a separate representation. I know for instance in matters of education perhaps it may be said that they want separate representation because they are a backward community. But I am glad to see that in this bill and in the Education Bill which will be brought forward we are going to constitute a separate board for education. I have seen throughout my career that the problem of Mahomedan education is somewhat difficult and there Mahomedans might have their own point of view to place before the local body, and therefore I say that so far as the District Local Boards Act which is now sought to be enacted is concerned, the domain of education is to be separate. Education boards are to be separately constituted and consequently we can provide for Mahomedans being represented on these education boards so that they may have no particular reason to complain. Excepting therefore that particular subject, so far as my experience goes, I do not think, Sir, that Mahomedans should have any special reasons for wanting any special safeguard. No doubt where their community is a small community in any particular area they may not have any chance of entering the board, but there are some other communities like the community of my honourable friend Mr. Gholap, namely, the Mahar community. I know that an inamdar Mahar in my district suffers from this grievance and I really sympathise with him because he suffers from the same disabilities as the Mahomedans. Why should his community not therefore be given a separate representation? So I must say, especially when we are going to deal with local bodies there will be no end to this question of communal representation if we once introduce it in this connection. These are the fears which I entertain and I do hope and sincerely hope that my Mahomedan friends will give a full thought to this matter as to what will be the state of affairs when there are so many communities in minority in certain areas which stand the need of protection in the same way as the Mahomedans.

[Rao Bahadur R. R. Kale]

Besides, Sir, so far as our Presidency is concerned the relations between Mahomedans and other communities are not, so far as I am aware, of a peculiar nature and in fact most of the Mahomedans by their customs and manners are almost like Hindoos. So far as my knowledge is concerned as regards their domestic life, there is very little difference between that of the Mahomedans and other communities in most areas. Therefore I fail to see, if that is so, how we should be making a mistake in not introducing this communal representation in local bodies. I may be told that they cannot represent their own interests unless they are given this minority representation. But how will they go forward unless they get themselves educated so as to be able to fill places and positions of responsibility? No doubt they do deserve places and positions of responsibility and they will occupy them and they are occupying them wherever there are deserving people available and it is therefore in their own interest I say that they should forego this new claim for separate representation when they have not got it.

There is another aspect of the question. The Montford Report which has preceded the passing of the Government of India Act, has dealt with this question of communal representation in paragraphs 227 to 231. The conclusion to which we are driven from these paragraphs is that the principle of communal representation was applied only where it was already in existence with a great deal of reluctance and out of sheer helplessness. But taking into consideration the fact that the Local Boards Act and the District Municipal Act have been in force since 1884 and when the principle was not there, is it reasonable to ask to introduce it for the first time when we are trying to enlarge the powers of local bodies? I think it would be a fatal step to take. I therefore submit with due regard that all these facts may be considered in the select committee.

With these words, I now proceed to another aspect of the question and that is the question as regards control and the question of representation of inamdars which latter has been considered in the Montford Report and the reasons given for retaining them as a separate constituency are given there. If we have to follow the Montford Report, then why not do it in the case of inamdars in whose case they have representation on the imperial and local legislatures and then why should not you have them represented on the taluka board? But you take away their right to be represented on the taluka boards now, and on what grounds? You say, because we are living in a democratic age; although really speaking there is the distinction between communal representation and special representation. I can understand that argument of special representation in the case of bodies like Chambers of Commerce or such other bodies and I am not against it. As my honourable friend behind has given notice of an amendment of principle, there is enough opportunity for him to argue that point. But what I say is, there may be special interests of holders of entire alienated villages, who own whole villages in some cases, and perhaps special considerations might be applied in their case. But when you have abandoned that principle, even when special representation was in existence for the inamdars, it seems most surprising to see that you are creating a new communal representation for a community which has no special interests as such community to be represented on the rural local boards, except perhaps in the matter of education, which matter, as I said, has been left entirely to another body.

Then, Sir, I do not know whether the report of the Local Boards Committee recommended communal representation. I do not think my information is incorrect that that committee does not recommend communal representation. (The Honourable Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ghulam Hussain indicated dissent).

The Honourable Minister seems to think that the committee did recommend it, but I am afraid I cannot verify it as I have not had the advantage of having the committee's report here in the library, although I made enquiries about it. But if my memory is correct, I think it did not recommend communal representation.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: The Pratt Committee has recommended it.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: I mean to say the Lawrence Committee has not recommended it, and the Government of Bombay and the Government of India never approved of it.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: The Bombay Government has accepted that, Sir, for Sind.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: I am talking about the Presidency proper, Sir, and I know the Bombay Government has not accepted it for the Presidency proper. There is a majority of Mahomedans in certain parts and a minority of Mahomedans in other parts of Sind. These are matters in which, as I say, the Presidency proper ought not to be mixed up. Just as the Sind Local Funds Act is different, I do not know whether Government has accepted it in the case of certain parts of Sind. But, so far as I am able to see, in the rural population of Sind there is a preponderance of Mahomedans. So they do not require any speical representation there. My Hindu brethren, I am sure, will not accept communal representation; they will resist it. Therefore, in rural areas you do not want any separate representation for Mahomedans. So the question relates to the Presidency proper, and I have explained the situation as briefly as I could and I do not wish to take up a longer time over this matter at this stage. Then, as I said, there are other means, which may by all means be applied, if necessary. For instance, you might introduce co-option. The House will remember, when the Bombay Municipal Bill was on the anvil of this Council recently, similar considerations were put forward and one community was blamed for wishing for communal representation. I do not want to go into that matter now, but I only want to point out that the principle of co-option was introduced there and, as a safeguard, we might introduce the same principle in the Local Boards Act as in the case of the Municipal Act, so that there will be sufficient guarantee for this representation. By all means have these safeguards, because they are, after all, things which are ephemeral and will disappear in due course. But once you introduce this communal representation in rural areas, it will be very difficult to dislodge it as it has been found difficult in the higher legislatures. That is the point which I would press on the attention of this Council.

[Rao Bahadur R. R. Kale]

Now, Sir, I proceed to the second point, and that relates to the control. I find, Sir, on a comparison of the old provisions with the new which relate to the control of these local boards, that the new provisions are not only no improvement upon the old law, but perhaps they are the other way. With regard to this control, Sir, I am fully aware that there must be exceptional powers reserved for Government in case of emergency to deal with local bodies. But, when we have now the subject of local self-government a transferred subject with a Minister at the head of that branch of the administration, why allow the local authorities like the Collector or "any other officer of Government"—these are the words which have been added in the present bill—to have these powers? In the old Act it was only the Collector on the spot who had certain powers. We now find that other officers of Government also have been given powers.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is it necessary, Rao Bahadur, to go into that question of Government control now? So far as I can see, the general objection seems to be that the power of control given to the Government ought not to be increased but ought to be more limited than it is by the bill. Is it not so?

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: Yes; the power given to the local officers of Government.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Whatever, it is, whether it is local officers or other officers of Government, the objection is to Government control. Now, if the bill passes the first reading and is referred to the select committee, then even if the select committee keeps it as it is, it will be open to the Council to limit the powers of Government. But if you want to increase the powers of Government officers, now is the time to suggest that. I don't say you ought not to have referred to the matter at all; you have done well in referring to it. But the Council will have the power of limiting the powers of control even if the bill passes the first reading and the select committee sends it back as it is.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: It all depends, Sir, how you look at it. If freedom from control is to be looked at, then.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Will you look at it from the eyes of the Chair as a point of order? The Council will not be precluded from limiting the Government's powers of control at the second reading.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: With that assurance, Sir, from the Chair that this matter is not one of principle and that it will be open both in the select committee and afterwards in this Council to limit the powers.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: It is a matter of principle; but I understand your contention is that the powers of Government control should be further limited. I say that it is open to the Council to do that on second reading. Only if you want to enlarge them, now is the time on first reading.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: I want to enlarge the powers of the boards and free them from outside control.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That means limiting the Government powers. That is a simple argument.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: So, Sir, I do not wish to take up more time of the Council, and would merely conclude by saying that I intended all my observations for the information of the select committee. So, with these few words, I again congratulate no doubt the Honourable Minister, but with this note of disagreement which, I am sorry, I have to sound at the very initial stage.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK (Deccan Sardars and Inamdars): Sir, I rise to congratulate the Honourable Minister on the bill which he has introduced but my congratulation cannot of course be whole-hearted and I do so with some reserve. Before going into the question of the interests of the constituency which I have the honour to represent here, I shall make a few general remarks on the bill. The Honourable Minister yesterday mentioned that the present bill is an outcome of three official committees.....

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Not official but both official and non-official.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK: So long as the committees were appointed by Government, they were official committees. The Honourable Minister did not yesterday enlighten us on the point as to what the recommendations made were, what recommendations were thrown out and what recommendations were adopted. This I am speaking only of official committees and enquiries. Coming to the various other unfficial conferences and popular opinions expressed in several conferences, I do not know if the Honourable Minister has taken note of all the recommendations made in framing this bill. So far as I can see from the bill itself, some recommendations of very great importance which were made by the conferences are not included in the bill nor has any reference been made to those recommendations for adopting or refusing them by the Honourable Minister. The recommendations that were made by the conferences were of very vital importance and they deserve in my opinion a full treatment at the hands of the Honourable Minister. Those recommendations now go for ever, because when we launch on this new legislation and accept certain principles on which this bill is framed, I think it will be a long time before we amend this legislation. It would have been much better had the Honourable Minister accepted the amendment made by my honourable friend from Surat and asked for opinions of the local boards and other public bodies in this respect. That has not been done and I only say that we did not do a wise thing in that.

I now go to the point of the constitution of the boards. It is claimed that the constitution is popularised. I cannot certainly agree in that view. Men coming from the districts who know what the actual conditions there are will not say that the constitution is popularised. Under the present Act for the district local boards, persons holding land assessed at Rs. 48 were enfranchised. Now the franchise comes down only to Rs. 32 but the Honourable Minister has not taken the recent change that has taken place in rural areas into consideration, that, owing to the introduction of the record of rights and the division of khatas, on that account, men who enjoyed Rs. 48 fsanchise formerly, are not enjoying the same land on their names in the khata and are not paying the assessment at Rs. 32 at present on account the of introduction of record of rights, because according to the former system persons who were sub-sharers were not recognised and the men in whose names the khatas stood were only recognised as voters. Naturally with the addition of these sub-sharers the number of persons giving Rs. 48 was larger and is cut down. I think a reference to the figures of voters formerly and now will convince any member.

[Sardar V. N. Mutalik]

The franchise now, it is claimed, Sir, is made more wide and more uniform as the Honourable Minister claims, but whether it is made more wide I certainly doubt. Formerly persons having some interest in the moffusil property or profession and staying in the talukas, enjoyed the privilege of vote. Such persons are now disfranchised. The Honourable Minister yesterday told us that persons owning property of some value and enjoying income of certain amount are disfranchised,. I ask have these men no interest in the development of the talukas and districts? When we passed the Bombay Municipal Act, we enfranchised the tenants. They were certainly not tax-payers of the municipality. We enfranchised them because they were interested in the municipal administration and they do enjoy some fruit of the municipal administration, but is it supposed that persons living in rural areas are not affected by the administration of the local board and only persons living in Bombay city are affected by the administration of the local body? If sanitation and roads are to do good, it will equally do good to all people in rural areas, namely, agriculturists and others alike. I do not know what led the Honourable Minister to disfranchise all these persons. In fact in my opinion the vote is now restricted only to agriculturists and agriculturists alone. All other persons are altogether thrown out.....

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Ordinary taxpayers.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK: Tax-payers would be coming only when the local boards imposed additional taxation on people that is to say the position comes to this, that the persons will be taxed before they can ask for representation and if they receive no representation they will say "no taxation without representation." I do not know what the Honourable Minister will have to say in reply. If the boards are formed, inamdars of this Presidency and all persons who enjoy the franchise for the Council should be included in the franchise for votes on local boards.

Yesterday the Honourable Minister said that municipal representation on local boards was foolish and illogical. I beg to differ from him. The administration of these two bodies is conducted in one area and it is but proper that there should be mutual representation. If the local boards had no representation on municipalities, that should have been provided for.

Next I come to constituencies. Holders of whole alienated villages enjoy special privileges of special constituency on taluka and district local boards. My honourable friend from Dharwar district says that the inamdars came there by robbing ordinary persons of their rights. I do not know what he means, or whether he was at all serious in what he said. The inamdars' constituency never came in the way of the constituencies or representatives of the general public. It is sheer nonsense to say that the inamdars came by robbing the ordinary persons. Sir, the Government has really created a very difficult position for the holders of alienated villages, in taking away their constituency which exists under the present Act. It is urged by the Honourable Minister that there are very few voters in the inamdars' constituencies. I am afraid he did not look to the Land Revenue Report, or ascertain what the actual number of alienated villages is. The number is as large as 2,000 in the Presidency proper. I think about one-tenth of the villages of this Presidency are alienated villages. I do not know what argument there is in saying that such a large number of people should be disenfranchised. Sir, the interest in the Presidency proper of the holders of alienated villages is one-tenth. Looking to the revenues which the holders of alienated villages enjoy, I think it is more than a crore of rupees. (Mr. O. Rothfeld : It is a sheer shame.) Those who are not holders of alienated villages may say so, but it is more "shame" to draw fat salaries which you do not deserve. The number of voters in the inamdars' constituencies is certainly higher than what it is represented to be by the Honourable Minister. He says that sometimes there is only one village in a taluka. There may be such cases, but looking to my district, almost every third village is an alienated village. All these persons are now disenfranchised without any sufficient reason whatsoever. Now, Sir, it is alleged that holders of alienated villages will be coming in through the ordinary electorates. But, to my mind, if the wording of the bill is to be correctly interpreted, the holders of entire alienated villages are altogether disenfranchised. It must be recognised that they are not holders of alienated land, and the responsibilities of people holding aliented land and of those holding alienated villages are entirely different. Government have imposed certain restrictions on the holders of alienated villages, but the holders of alienated lands are altogether free from those restrictions and responsibilities. I wish my honourable friend opposite had looked into the question beforehand. The Honourable Minister, coming as he does from Sind, may not know the conditions in the Presidency in this respect and might think in a different way. I know in Sind there are very few alienated villages, it being a province newly settled. The Bombay Government was always against giving special representation to the inamdars. In the tussle that went on for seats in the reformed Councils, it was ultimately the Selborne Committee, which gave a franchise to the inamdars in all parts of the Presidency for the Council. I may here refer to the large number of representations that have been made to the Minister and to Government on this point by inamdars from various districts. This particular interest is in an extreme minority in this House, and I hope that members of this Council will recognise this interest, and I do appeal to their sense of justice and equity in determining this question.

I certainly welcome the direct election to the local boards. It is a great step forward, and the Honourable Minister deserves our congratulations for that. The Honourable Minister has now removed the sex bar. That is a great step forward no doubt, but in the first stage of the experiment, I wish he would reserve special seats for women. (An honourable member : Is it only an experiment ?) It is an experiment ; experiment is a great word which was used by a great man, on a great occasion.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : May I ask the honourable member to make it quite clear if he wants a special constituency for the inamdars and a special constituency for women, on the same lines as the special constituency created in the bill for Mahomedans ?

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK : I want to urge.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : A plain answer to a plain question would be an economy of time and also of energy.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK : Two questions have been put to me.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : First of all, you deal with the inamdars.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK : I do want for the inamdars the old privilege of having a special constituency.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You want the principle of communal representation, as it is called, to be extended to the inamdars?

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK: It is not exactly communal representation. It is a special class.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: It is immaterial whether you call it communal or class. I am asking the question for the purpose of determining the principle, so that hereafter no one may be prejudiced, and I may not be hampered in ruling whether any amendments are in order or not. That is the reason why I invited you and requested you to make your meaning clear, so that I may make up my mind.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK: I want a special constituency for the inamdars.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I ask whether the inamdars who form a special constituency under the existing law, come in under the general electorate of the non-Mahomedan constituency?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: They do.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Government bench says that they do, and I must take the word of the Government bench, unless there is something quite plain on the face of the bill to assure me that they are wrong. Supposing they are lumped together, united with the general constituency, and brought in on the same level, then I think it will be open to the select committee, and for you at the second reading to say that that union will not do, and it must be divided. Therefore, it will not come under the head of communal representation, but class representation; so that, you have done well in bringing the point to notice, and it will be open to you to move it hereafter. As regards women, however, I do not know how it stands. If you want them as a special constituency they may perhaps also come under the same head.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK: The case of women stands on the same footing. I want certain seats to be reserved for women.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: By nomination?

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK: Only by election.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That is a matter of detail.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK: The question of the representation of inamdars can be moved at the second reading.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Separate representation, you mean, Yes, I think so.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK: As regards the relation between the taluka boards and district boards, this bill does not go farther than the existing law. That question has to be definitely solved. The Local Boards Conference urged this point and some papers also were read on this subject. Also the Honourable the Minister has not given any idea about what the relation will be between the public health committees and school board committees on the one hand and the district local boards on the other, and how far the district local board will be able to control them. At present the Government administers the whole Education Department, and the local boards are simply called upon to pay. Whether the district local board will have the control of education has not been settled. That is a great question on which public opinion ought to have been invited.

[Sardar V. N. Mutalik]

Coming to the question of control, I perfectly agree with my honourable friend from Satara that this bill has taken away more of the powers of the district local boards instead of giving them a free hand in their affairs. I have not much to add and I hope the select committee will consider these things.

After recess.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Mr. President, I rise to support the first reading of the bill. It might be strange that three honourable members from Satara one after another have risen to congratulate the Honourable Minister. Satara has been very fortunate in having the visits of the three Honourable Ministers. I offer my congratulations to the Honourable Minister for having introduced the bill, which contains a good many points which mark a great advance. It has widened the franchise. That is a very great step indeeed. It has also made elections to the district local board direct. It has done away with the special seats for the inamdars. I want to say something on this point. The inamdars come from the rural classes, and pay land revenue to Government. I do not see any reason why they should enjoy a separate electorate, and send a special member to the district and taluka local boards. In the district of Satara every third village belongs to an inamdar but it does not mean that there are so many voters for them. The owners of entire villages alone are endowed with the vote and their number is not large even in Satara. This invidious distinction in favour of a small number has now been taken away by the new bill. It is claimed that the inamdars have been enjoying that privilege so long: there is no doubt about that, but in this case prescription does not mean anything. If they have enjoyed the vote for many years it does not follow that they should be allowed to enjoy it till eternity. These days of reform must run their proper course, and I think the inamdars ought not to complain if they are deprived of the vote they enjoyed so long.

The Honourable the Minister has told us that special care will be taken to preserve the interests of the minorities, and that, I think, is a step in the right direction. I am at one with my friend who represents in this Council the depressed classes, and I insist that something ought to be done to secure their representation. The depressed classes are a very strong minority and they are always as a rule neglected. Even nomination does not help them to any appreciable extent. During the last three, four or five years, Government has been making attempts to nominate here and there a member from that class, but such nominations are not always very happy, and in certain cases they are almost failures, and more often no nomination at all from the depressed classes is made. If a class or community want to have their grievances or claims put before a local board, they must have the privilege of choosing their own representatives or spokesmen. Members of other communities, however efficient or philanthropic they may be, will not be so fit to represent these dumb lakhs and millions as people of their own choice from among their own kith and kin will be. Therefore, I say that provision should be made for bringing them in in taluka and district local boards. Nomination will not help them. There have been very few seats reserved for nomination and Government nomination, as I said just now, is not always very happy. Therefore I insist that some provision ought to be made for bringing in the depressed classes also by direct election.

[Mr. B. V. Jadhav]

As to the special electorates provided for the Mahomedans certain objections have been raised. I myself was an advocate of special electorates till 1919, but I had to give that up, and I gave my consent before the Joint Select Committee for reservation of seats, and I think the principle of reservation of seats is very good in certain cases, especially in the case of communities like the Marathas and allied castes, who form the majority among the voters, but I am not quite sure whether that principle of reservation of seats will do equally well in the case of the Mahomedans or in the case of the depressed classes who will always be in a minority in this part of the country. I leave that question to the Mahomedan members of this Council and others to decide. If they want special electorates, I for one shall not resist that. If they want reservation of seats, they are free to have that. I for myself, as I have said, am not going to oppose that thing. I think that the Mahomedans should choose for themselves. Certain special provision ought to be made for their representation. Up to this time they have been in the general electorate for local board elections and the results have not been always fair. Here and there some stray Mahomedans have been elected and certain constituencies have always been held by Mahomedans, as my honourable friend from Satara told us just now. But these are very rare instances, and we have found and we do find many a time that even the best Mahomedans are passed over in favour of Hindus who do not possess even half the ability of their Mahomedan competitors. The reason for this is simple, class or communal interest. So, as I said, if the Mahomedans feel that by communal representation alone they can come in and if they are determined to have it, I for myself will not make any opposition. If they find that they can do with reservation of seats, well they are welcome to that.

As to the removal of the sex bar, much has been said about it, and I need not add anything further. It is a good thing no doubt, and there will be some ladies who will exercise the vote. But I think many many years will pass before a lady is elected to a taluka or district local board, and therefore the removal of the sex bar will remain a dead letter for many years to come. However, the removal is a very good thing indeed, and I congratulate the Honourable Minister on that.

Sir, it is claimed that wider powers have been given to the local boards and some of the sections do show that some wider powers are given. But I think still more powers ought to have been given, and the select committee will have to see to that. I need not say anything further on that point now.

As for the franchise, a man who pays Rs. 8 assessment or cultivates a piece of land paying Rs. 8 assessment to Government has been given the vote for taluka local boards, but in the case of the district local boards the vote is given for Rs. 32 rent or assessment. I think this distinction between the qualifications of voters for the district local boards and taluka local boards is not necessary. If a man is fit to vote for a suitable candidate to the taluka local board, he ought to be held fit enough to vote for the district local board also. The franchise ought to be made as wide as possible and this distinction between the voters for the taluka local boards and district local boards should not exist. I do not think that any special qualification is necessary for choosing a man to represent the agriculturists or cultivators to the district local board, and therefore I submit that the franchise ought to be widened for the district local boards also and it ought to be Rs. 8 as is the case with the taluka local boards.

[Mr. B. V. Jadhav]

Education and sanitation have been placed in the new bill under two separate committees. I do not approve of the constitution of these committees. For the education committee members of the district local board are allowed to elect anybody, even those who are not members of the district local board—outsiders—and the control of their actions does not lie with the district local boards when once they have been elected. They become independent bodies. The district local board is only their banker. They can draw their cheques which are to be cashed by the district local boards. I do not think it is a very desirable thing. The education committee ought to be completely under the district board if the district local board is to provide funds for them. In the constitution of that education committee too there is provision made for three nominated members and these nominated members are not to fill up any deficiency, because the section provides that the election of———

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is not this a matter of detail which can be considered in the select committee? I do not think it affects the principle of the bill at all.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I do not then want to say anything further on that point. As for the constitution of the district local board, provision is made that all the members ought to be elected directly by the voters, and it is provided that the taluka boards should be subordinate to the district boards. But no provision is made for any taluka board members to be on the district boards. There may be cases in which no member of the taluka board will be on the district board and in that case the district board will not be in a position, when any question of definite policy of a particular taluka board comes in for consideration, to realize why and for what reason that taluka board took the particular action, and therefore I say that it is quite necessary that this constitution of the district boards ought to be such as to provide for at least one member from each taluka board to be on the district board. I think the principle here is defective and some provision ought to be made for that. I will not take the time of the Council any further. I heartily support the first reading of this bill.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): Sir, it is indeed very regrettable that the local boards were not consulted in this matter by the Honourable Minister. The matter affects the interests of the 80 per cent. of the population whom they represent, and in my humble view the Honourable Minister should have given some opportunity to the local boards to have their say, and to say what they think about a measure which concerns them so much. It is indeed, Sir, a case of neglect, a sad case of neglect bordering on insult which was particularly avoided in the case of municipalities and the corporation of Bombay. But, Sir, perhaps there was a skeleton in the cupboard which the Minister wanted to hide till it was found out too late and the Honourable Minister therefore did not think it advisable that he should consult them; he thought perhaps it would be enough if it were brought all of a sudden before this Council without any opinion of the boards to guide us and I am strengthened in holding this view by the provisions of the bill itself and I am still of opinion that it would have been better if the consideration of the bill had been postponed for some time in order to enable the people to form some opinion about it. The bill, in my humble view, is an attempt by the Honourable Minister to graft on to a struggling plant, struggling on a hungry soil, widely differing species, and I think that neither the original plant that is struggling for its existence nor the grafted ones will thrive. Both will be starved for want of enough nourishment and the results will be disappointing. He said that the district local boards have been given widely extensive functions and powers and rights and all that. Now just let us examine what powers and rights he has given us over and above those that the old local fund committees possessed under the old Act III of 1869. In that Act the obligatory duties had been laid down in section 4 and they were to ascertain and provide for the requirements of the district with respect to works and undertakings calculated to promote the public health, education and convenience including roads, schools, dispensaries, dharamsalas and wells and other works for improving the water supply, etc. Now what has he to offer in the way of further independence and rights in these matters? Here in the bill before the Council he says in section 50:

"It shall be the duty of local boards so far as the local fund at their disposal will allow, to make adequate provision for their areas, respectively subject to their authority in regard to the following matters."

Now in this bill after 50 years the Minister says "it shall be the duty, etc.". There in the old Act III of 1869 it was left to the district local committees to ascertain these duties for themselves; that is the old committees were to ascertain for themselves and to provide for the needs according to their own requirements and not according to the requirements dictated to them by the bench opposite, that is the Government. Now I come to the extension of the functions. One of the functions of the local boards or the duties of the local boards is to construct works and that is one of the chief works of the local boards I am aware of. Now in the Act of 1869 mileage expenditure when it did not exceed Rs. 500 was allowed to be incurred by the old 1869 committees. Here in this bill he allows only up to Rs. 2,000.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Rs. 2,500.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: That was under the old Act, not in this bill in which it is only Rs. 200. Under the original Act of 1869 it was put down clearly that the works up to Rs. 2,500, that is, engineering works which did not require professional skill and the cost of construction of which came up to Rs. 2,500, were to be constructed by the local committees under that Act. Here by this bill works up to Rs. 2,000 are allowed.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: The honourable member is making misstatements and prejudicing the House. My honourable friend says that under the old Act or the Act of 1869 the boards were allowed to execute public works to the extent of Rs. 2,500. But he as the president of one of the district boards ought to know that now they are allowed to execute their works up to the extent of Rs. 10,000, in some cases up to Rs. 30,000 and in some up to Rs. 50,000.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: I am talking of the bill that is before the House, and comparing it with an Act passed in 1869.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: But you are talking of the bill before the House as compared with the existing law.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: No, Sir; not the present but the old Act of 1869. Now as regards the revenue or income of local boards, I may add that the Honourable Minister has not been able to restore to us the Sayar revenue that was allowed under the old Act of 1869. I mean cess on revenues other than the land revenue (An honourable member: No, No.) such as Abkari, Forests, Salt, and other revenues. There are two divisions, viz., land revenue and revenues other than land revenue if my interpretation of the word Sayar is correct, and that Sayar revenue had been taken away from local boards. Why? Because the India Government would not allow our Government to have anything to do with a source of revenue over which they had sole claim. But I should think that a popular Minister, and we have no reason to believe that he is not, who is responsible to this House ought to have stuck to and took his position on the old Act and induced his "Reserved" colleagues to do justice to the claims of the local boards as regards this revenue and even fought with the Indian Government if he found it necessary in the interests of the local boards. This he has failed to do. Does he call this an advance? I have shown that independence or freedom has been curtailed and now I can say that by abandoning our claims over Sayar revenue, the Minister has failed to safeguard our legitimate claims over that revenue. And so even the small paltry assignment of revenue that was given by the Government has been taken away. I mean the small amount in lieu of Abkari revenue, that was being given to the boards as a sort of compensation hitherto is taken away. Wherever we go, Sir, in the villages—and I think my predecessors, perhaps the European officers, the Collectors, who were presidents of the district local board, when they went to the villages found the same thing—there is the old complaint that though the cess is being levied to the extent of one anna, they receive little or no benefit for the money they are paying. Now that complaint will still remain if this bill is passed into an Act and perhaps it may be aggravated. The fact is, Sir, instead of removing this grievance the Minister has taken upon himself to foist upon the local boards altogether new functions or retain those which are purely provincial and not of a local body. As, for instance, where was the necessity of entrusting to local boards by legislation registration of births and deaths and vaccination, veterinary charges and such other matters? The patels wanted increased pay and by thrusting the responsibility of registration of births and deaths on local boards the Government wanted the boards to pay the patels for this work. The patels have been doing the work for Government hitherto and why should they not do it henceforth? Now, similarly, where was the necessity of entrusting them with the responsibility of paying for the veterinary hospitals and vaccination work? In England vaccination work is not done by local bodies.

Mr. O. ROTHFELD: No, Sir. It is.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Well, Sir, my information may be wrong; but, so far as I know, it is done by private gentlemen there and Government impose under certain conditions that duty upon the public at large.

Now I come to the constitution of the school boards. The local boards are held responsible for the carrying out of their educational policy. Now, in a school board municipalities are to be represented. The Government officers are to be there and there will be some women too. In actual operation the boards will be in a hopeless minority; I mean, Sir, the boards on whom the financial responsibility for the school board rests will be in a hopeless minority. Let me give you one concrete instance. In my district, Kaira, there are seven or eight municipalities. About eight members from those municipalities will represent them on the school board. Then three persons will be nominated....

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Every municipality will not send one representative.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: But that is left to you. We may have to submit to your decision if you ask each municipality to send one member each and of course we can take no objection. We have to abide by the decisions that may be gainst us. The same as regards the public health committee. Sir, when I read the bill and its chapters on health and taxation, I found that the Honourable Minister had done the whole thing in eighteen minutes—he has not taken eighteen months—because he has kept the whole Act intact and perhaps asked his Secretary to have all the municipal health sections embodied in the new bill, and this bill is now the result (Laughter). Otherwise, if he had consulted the local boards, they would have said that the president of a local board cannot go from house to house and do the sanitary work in so many villages and ask the people whether there is sanitation carried out in every house. He cannot do such scavenging work (Laughter). It is quite impossible, Sir; in the rural areas we have tiny municipalities, we have sanitary committees, and we have village panchayats, both doing municipal work. Then, where was the necessity of thrusting upon the district local boards all the municipal functions of public health? If you felt that sanitation in the villages was neglected and it should be properly looked after, you should have asked, under the Village Panchayat Act, every village to start a village panchayat. If the village was a very small one, you should have asked two or three small villages to combine together and start a village panchayat under the same Act. Supposing nobody came forward to start a village panchayat, you should have asked those villages to have sanitary committees. But we find that the function of the public health work, which naturally belongs to a municipality or a sanitary committee or panchayat and not to a district local board, is forced upon a district local board by this bill. It is quite impracticable. Of course, my honourable friend Rao Bahadur Chitale might say that Gujaratis are backward in local self-government and do not want further advance and rights for local boards. I may just state in reply that we are not idealistic, we prefer to look at such matters from a practical point of view and not from an idealistic view; so I would rather try to see whether this bill would work well in practice. Perhaps the Honourable Minister will say that public health functions are simple ordinary functions which we may not carry out, and so we are not bound by them. But he has stated there in the chapter on public health that the district local board shall appoint a committee on public health. Now, if you have to appoint a committee on public health, then the next step would be to force the public health committee to do its duty and to appoint a public health officer, and thus the demands on the slender funds of the boards will go on increasing from year to year. That is the difficulty; the budget is the difficulty, Sir. The Minister has not come with further money, with further funds, but he asks the local boards to collect more cess and to levy certain taxes. You assign municipal taxes to local boards. The collection of these taxes will cost more than the taxes themselves (Laughter). Why are you introducing say a house tax, or an octroi tax or any other municipal tax in the villages? Take the case of my district. There are 600 villages in the Kaira district. Say 600 men will have to be employed and they would have to be paid well if the work has to be done satisfactorily. How many thousand rupees will be required for these 600 men, I leave it to my honourable colleagues to consider. And when you consider that the octroi, and house tax and some other taxes are to be levied in the villages, you cannot of course levy them to that extent to which you would be able to levy them in urban areas. You will thus perceive it is expensive to collect them, and if the Minister is prepared to say that, after all, you can levy only house tax in the village areas, I do grant that, it would be easier to collect it; but what will be the total amount collected? It will be a small amount looking to the value of houses in villages. If we adopt the standard of rate adopted for taxing house property in cities like Bombay there will be practically very little amount collected from the villages; but if you raise the rate in villages the city rates will have to be raised rather two or three times what they are at present. The value of the houses in rural areas may be taken at say Rs. 200, or Rs. 300, and if you levy about a rupee per house in the rural areas, to what extent would you have to levy the tax in cities in justice and fairness to the rural areas?

(The remainder of the honourable member's speech was not audible.)

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): Sir, I rise to support the first reading of this bill. The most practical difficulties experienced in working the Act of 1884 have been rectified under this bill. The important provisions of this bill are (1) number of elected members raised from one-half to three-fourths, (2) separate constituencies for Mahomedans, (3) elected presidents, (4) change in the franchise, (5) removal of sex disqualification, (6) creation of school boards, (7) creation of public health committees, (8) power of taxation, (9) power of carrying out works by their own agencies and so on. Many previous speakers have chosen to speak on various points and I would like to make a few remarks on the point of communal representation.

Before the element of electorates was introduced, there was the existence of the Council and the only admission to it was by the back-door, i.e., by nomination. Notwithstanding the fact that Mahomedans, Hindus and Parsis and everybody were represented on this Council by the back-door, i.e., by nomination, the Congress fought out and the element of electorates was introduced in the year 1893 by Lord Cross's bill. I would like to point out to this House that since the introduction of this Lord Cross's bill in 1893 up to the year 1910 till the introduction of the bill of Lord Morley, not a single Mahomedan was returned from any constituency except Sind to the Bombay Legislative Council for eighteen consecutive years. This gives us proof that unless there is communal representation, Mahomedans have very little chance to come in and have their seats in the Legislative Council.

My honourable friend from Satara has pointed out that in the Satara municipality a Mahomedan has been returned by Hindus and Mahomedans jointly for the last nine years, but I would go further and point out that I remember cases in which Mahomedans have been returned for the last so many years in the Ahmedabad municipality and in the recent elections in the Kalupur ward in Ahmedabad, Mahomedans topped the list with four-fifth votes belonging to Hindus (Honourable Members: Hear, hear). Sir, these are very rare instances by which we should not be guided at all. The important communities in power should not debar sister communities which are in a minority from doing their bit in the administration of the district and taluka local boards; they should not arrogate powers to themselves; and if you cast a glance along the Deccan, you will find that always non-Brahmins have complaints against Brahmins and why? Because they have got legitimate grievances against their own brethren, Hindu brothers, and legitimately.

[Khan Saheb A. M. Mansuri]

These Mahomedans must claim separate constituencies, as otherwise there is no chance whatever for them to be returned. As I observed, for eighteen years consecutively not a single Mahomedan was returned to the Bombay Legislative Council. I say minorities must have their own spokesmen. Suppose we have got our case in a court, we do try to choose our own vakil, we do not ask somebody else to appoint a vakil for us. Let these Mahomedans have their own places in various councils and boards and let them have a proper share in the administration of such bodies and the much-talked of unity will be increased thereby instead of decreased. It is argued that the policy of Government is to divide and rule. No, Sir, here I must plainly lay before this House that here the policy of divide and rule is not going to prevail, but on the other hand the unity will be more and more strengthened and we will all unite and work for the common cause, be we Hindus or Mahomedans. My Hindu friends need not be told that the Mahomedans are not less patriotic for their mother-country than themselves.

Sir, may I point out a living example in this very Council that there is greater unity between Mahomedans and Hindus in the case of this very Council ? I have not seen a single occasion which has arisen when my Hindu and Mahomedan brethren have differed on any point because that point was of special interest to either Hindus or to Mahomedans or because only Mahomedan interests were involved or because only Hindu interests were going to be affected. If ever in the case of elections to this Council, there were any occasions on which Hindus and Mahomedans differed, they might have been cases in which the different parties must have made it a personal cause in which their individual interests were concerned.

Sir, I appeal to my Hindu brethren to give up their pressing that there should be no communal representation and to allow this communal representation and I am sure that it will tend to bring greater unity and greater friendship between the two sister communities. My honourable friend from Kaira, Rao Saheb Dadubhai Desai, has referred to the point of taxation. He has stated that the cost of collecting taxes will be much more than the taxes themselves. My honourable friend from Kaira is a practical man and a competent man and I fail to see why he forgets that the talati agency, i.e. those who collect revenues for Government and those who have been collecting this local fund cess till now, could not be employed. That would be doing away with the extra cost which he fears would be involved. This is only a question of collection of taxes, but so far as taxes themselves are concerned, I feel they can be as easily collected through the talati agency as they are being collected at present. I have now only a few words to add. The poor cultivators in Gujarat especially have no irrigation works. Gujarat is visited by famine every three or four years, and it would be adding fuel to fire if they were to have more taxation. I wish the Honourable Minister would give some further proposals by which taxation of people already over-burdened with taxes would rather be avoided, proposals which would raise money by way of some taxes from the excise or by a certain memorial from this Government to the Imperial Government to allow them a share of the income tax which is being collected from those ryots. With these remarks I beg to resume my seat.

Rao Bahadur S. D. GARUD (West Khandesh District) : Sir, I may be permitted to congratulate the Honourable Minister on the bill which he has introduced. Though there are shortcomings in the bill, the bill is no doubt a distinct step forward in the right direction. The direct representation of the masses in the district and the taluka local boards is no doubt an advance in the right direction. The shortcomings to which I have to refer would, I hope, be sifted in the select committee, and we may arrive at a proper understanding about them all.

The first point to which I would like to allude is the abolition of taluka local boards. We had hopes that now that village panchayats have been formed and are being encouraged in each district, the taluka local boards would be allowed to drop, because, with the constitution of the village panchayats in almost every important village, there would be very little scope for the taluka local boards to act independently. Then, these taluka local boards will have no direct representation on the district local boards, and therefore the influence which they used to have through their representatives on the district local boards will also be lost. They will, therefore, be a sort of unconnected middle link between the village panchayats and the district local board. I therefore submit that the question whether the taluka local boards should be abolished and village panchayats established in almost every important village in the district deserves to be carefully considered. Under the present bill, the district local board will appoint efficient officers in the Engineering Department, the Sanitary Department and the School Board Department, who would be quite capable of looking after the interests of the whole district and of every one of these panchayats. There would therefore be very little scope for the taluka local boards as an independent entity.

The next point that I would like to refer to is the question of communal representation. I feel, Sir, that separate Mahomedan electorates in the Presidency proper will not be found to be workable. In the first place, taking my district as an example, the West Khandesh District, I may say that the Mahomedan population there is less than one-tenth of the whole, and even that one-tenth practically consists of the indigenous population which has made common cause with the other communities, and there are practically no outstanding differences between the Hindu population and the indigenous Mahomedan population. Therefore, the separation of these two communities will not be in the interests of the rural Mahomedan population.

The next point to which I would refer is the one to which the honourable member himself referred. He said there were a hundred and one minor communities. Therefore, I submit if we introduce the principle of separate representation in local self-government institutions, there will practically be no limit to this separate representation, as each one of the communities will be rightly entitled to be separately represented. Practically every caste is a minority as against the remaining whole, and would therefore want separate representation. Then we would have to concede the demand that the depressed classes should have separate representation, or the demand of the Marathas and allied castes, as they are called, for separate representation. In that way, I submit, there would be no end to separate representation. Separate representation creates separate interests where there are none, and vitiates that feeling of solidarity and common interest which is felt by the citizens as a whole in local self-governing institutions. Separate representation, therefore, practically does harm to every community. Where there are qualified men, to whatever community they may belong, they have made their mark in local self-governing institutions, and they have been elected whenever they chose to stand as candidates. Mahomedans have, as we find, been elected on village panchayats, whenever they have offered themselves as candidates. They have acted as presidents of large and important municipalities. In the Dhulia municipality, for instance, there are five Mahomedan members; they are all elected, and there have been no difficulties in their election on the one or two occasions when they have stood as candidates. The Dhulia municipality had the honour of having a Mahomedan as president and I do not think there is any special difficulty in the way of Mahomedans being returned in sufficiently large numbers. The honourable member also referred to one fact with which we are all well acquainted in this Council. He said that the Mahomedan members of this Council have never kept harping upon their own separate interests. But what I say is that there are no separate interests, and when there are no separate interests, it is not right to create separate constituencies and destroy that feeling of common citizenship and common interest in questions of local self-government.

Referring to the question of representation on the district local boards, I may say that the taluka local boards under the existing Act have the right of direct representation, and if it is decided to retain the taluka local boards, I do wish that they should have direct representation on the boards to enable them to place their point of view through their representatives before the district local boards. It has always been a great help to district local boards to have representatives of taluka local boards in connection with matters which pertain to their talukas, and with which they have intimate acquaintance. I would also wish that the village panchayats should be given direct representation on the district local boards. The panchayats will be under the district local boards, and it would help the district local boards to have members who have intimate acquaintance with the panchayats on the board itself.

The question of giving women separate seats on the district local boards will, I hope, be considered. I do not know whether it would be possible to form a separate electorate for them, consisting entirely of women, but if that were possible, we would surely bring able women on the boards. I do wish that the select committee would consider this question when they are considering the question of representation on the district local boards.

The next point that I would refer to is the representation of inamdars on the board. I am myself an inamdar, and therefore, of course, partial to that class. They have, from my point of view, strong vested interests in the rural areas. They are not a class who should be neglected. They are keenly interested in the working of the board, because they represent entire alienated villages. They come into contact with a very large section of the rural population. They make a large contribution to the district local board fund for their villages which, perhaps, no such other body in the rural areas makes. They pay the local fund cess even on their waste lands. They have got a substantial interest and make a substantial contribution to the local board fund. Their claims, therefore, must be examined carefully.

Lastly, I come to the question of taxation. The district local board has been given some powers of taxation which they can levy in order to meet their increased expenditure. One of the forms of taxation given to the boards by the present Act is one anna in the rupee of Abkari revenue. In 1873, the Government substituted a contribution in lieu of the cess, and this contribution has never since been revised and the boards have never got the benefit of the increase in the Abkari revenue. I moved a resolution on that subject in the Council, and I do hope the Government will take this opportunity to consider this question carefully again and restore to the boards the source of revenue to which they have a legitimate title. There are other sources of revenue which the board can claim. I think as my honourable friend Rao Saheb Desai pointed out one anna of the Sayar revenue including this Abkari revenue may be made over to the district local boards. The forest revenue in some districts seems to be considerable, and since large parts of our Presidency are under forests, it imposes responsibility on the boards, as for instance in carrying out anti-malarial operations, the expenses for which should be defrayed from the revenue which the Government derive from that source. Other revenues such as from salt pans may be given to the boards.

The bill as a whole is a distinct advance and is a move towards the democratisation of the constitution. Some of these changes can be made by the select committee. In the meanwhile I request the Honourable Minister to consider whether he would not give a chance to the district local boards and taluka local boards to consider the bill and place their considered opinion before the select committee before it concludes its labours. I think this step should have been taken before the bill was introduced in the Council for the first reading, but still this course will be appreciated if the opinions of the district and local boards are invited and placed before the select committee before it finishes the consideration of this bill.

Khan Bahadur S. N. BHUTTO (Larkana District): Mr. President, there is no denial that the need of amending the present Act is great: I would go even further and say that it is absolutely necessary, otherwise, it is not possible to run district local boards satisfactorily under the present reforms with a half a century old restricted Act. Of course, the proposed Act is also not sufficiently advanced to meet the wants and requirements, but those alterations and additions could be effected by the select committee. However, I offer the following remarks:—

Chapter I—Preliminary—clause 1 (2).—The circumstances and state of general development is not uniform throughout the Presidency. Even in Sind, there are certain districts which are far advanced, while others are backward, nay, even in the same district some divisions and talukas are advanced and some backward. The Act should not, therefore, be extended to the whole of the Presidency at once, but its applications should be gradual. There are still some districts, where, notwithstanding Government endeavours, no non-officials could be secured to serve as presidents of district local boards.

Chapter II—Constitution of local boards—clause (5) 2.—Officers of Government are being appointed as ex-officio members of a local board under the existing Act, vide section 5 (1) (b). This clause (2) appears, therefore, to be unnecessary and may be expunged.

Clause 25 (1) (2).—Absence without leave of a vice-president for more than 15 days involves loss of his place as vice-president and member of the board. This restriction is very hard for vice-presidents of zamindar class of Sind. Though the same condition exists in the District Municipal Act, yet the municipality cannot be compared to a local board. A municipal district is always a compact area and members meet very often, but in a local board area the members are scattered about and sparse. They therefore cannot meet so often in the local board without much expense and trouble. A vice-president therefore cannot easily obtain leave in such areas as in municipal districts. The term of absence should therefore be extended to one month at least, if not more. Further the president may be authorised to grant him leave and the formality of appointing a vice-president for one month may be done away with. The work could easily be done by the president in his absence.

Then coming to the conduct of business of local boards, clause 44 (1) of Chapter III, in view of the financial stringency of local boards, the power of local boards for execution of works should specifically be raised from Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 30,000, and in some cases to Rs. 50,000, as otherwise nearly one-fourth of the cost of the works, viz., 24 per cent. is absorbed by the Public Works Department as their supervision charges, etc. This clause should therefore be modified as follows, that works costing more than Rs. 30,000 should be executed by the Government Executive Engineer.

Chapter IV (incorporation of local boards: property, powers and duties)—Clause 50 (e).—The registration of births and deaths should not be made an obligatory duty of local boards. In municipal areas this duty can be performed very easily, but the reverse is the case in local board areas. In rural areas it is often complained of that the registration is incomplete. This work in rural areas is at present carried on by Government, who have got a number of officers to supervise it, and yet the work is incomplete, while a local board has no such staff nor any surplus funds to engage it. The work therefore should continue to be done by Government revenue officials, as before, and the clause inserted in the bill should be removed therefrom.

Chapter VI—Revenue and Expenditure—Clause 75—The fishery receipts are credited to district local boards under executive order, vide Government Resolution No. 639, dated the 14th July 1865, but no separate provision exists in the Act for control and credit of this item of revenue. However, as the Act is being revised, the bill should be so modified as to secure for the district local boards this source of income.

Clause 89 (1) (b).—The limit of Rs. 200 per mile in the case of roads and Rs. 2,000 in the case of other works above which the plans and estimates are required to be reviewed by the Government Executive Engineer should be raised to Rs. 500 and Rs. 10,000 respectively, especially when every district local board is maintaining or trying to maintain an officer with engineering qualifications.

Before proceeding further, I would like to say a few words on communal representation. Communal representation which already exists in municipal districts may improve Mahomedan prospects in the Presidency proper, but at the same time it will give a substantial representation to our Hindu brethren in the province of Sind, where they are in a minority. It is an old tale to repeat that communal representation is a bad principle. At the same time no honest man can deny its necessity, because the community in power and in majority have failed owing to their selfishness to convince the weaker communities that they will have fair treatment. The interests of different communities are equally focussed in local areas as in the Councils though on a smaller scale, and local authorities are capable of being more nasty than one could ever expect of the Councils. It is therefore the duty of the Mahomedans to appeal to their Hindu brethren not to deny them their fair share under the pretence of a principle. The Mahomedans know their own interests and they do not stand in need to be told so.

As for the Government control over the district local boards, the boards are held in tight grips. The Collector of the district has been given too much power over the local boards, while the local boards have got absolutely no power to criticise the Collector or any other individual department. Therefore I would suggest that the Collector of the district should have as little to do with local boards as possible, to avoid unnecessary interference from the official class. Power to hear appeals under clause 113 should be vested in first class magistrates only. Powers under sections 125 and 126 should be given to the Commissioner instead of to the Collector. As regards clause 128, no officer who is below the Collector should be invested with powers under this clause. I would further point out that clauses 120 and 122 enable the district local boards to delegate their power.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Now, you are going into the details of the bill. You can only deal with general provisions and principles.

Khan Bahadur S. N. BHUTTO: In that case I will not discuss the clauses in detail. With these remarks I support the first reading of the bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: At this point I think I ought to deal with the notices of amendments to the first reading which have been given. There has been general discussion enough, and before the discussion proceeds further, I will give my rulings with reference to the large number of amendments, notices of which have been given.

Rao Saheb Harilal Desai has given notice of an amendment as regards communal representation to the Mahomedans:

"That the provisions in the bill relating to the creation of Mahomedan and non-Mahomedan constituencies be omitted."

That is a question which is not necessarily one of the main principles affecting the bill and therefore, after the bill passes the first reading, it may be considered and modified in the select committee, and then dealt with as it comes amended from the select committee, or is proposed to be amended, at the second reading. The principle to be borne in mind is this. The Council settles the main principle of the bill at the first reading; and you cannot go beyond that principle, but you can limit the principle in select committee and in the second reading. Now, the general principle of the bill is a general electorate limited however by Mahomedan representation. Now, if the select committee comes to the conclusion that the Mahomedan constituency as a particular constituency ought to be omitted, that will be lumped up with the general electorate, but the general electorate consists of non-Mahomedan constituencies and Mahomedan constituencies. Therefore by either uniting or dividing you neither enlarge nor limit. Therefore the principle I have enunciated both yesterday and today remains. Therefore this question can be dealt with in the select committee and by the Council at the second reading. Therefore I rule this amendment to be out of order for the purpose of the first reading.

Then his next notice of amendment is:

"That the provision in the bill relating to taluka local boards be omitted and provision be made instead for the formation of taluka committees from among the members of the district local boards residing in the talukas."

That also is a question of the internal constitution of the local boards, and therefore it does not affect the main principle, and therefore can be dealt with in the select committee and at the second reading.

Rao Bahadur Ramanbhai has given notice of an amendment as regards the Mahomedan constituency. I have already dealt with it and my ruling applies here.

[The President]

Then he wants clause 5, section 3, and clause 133 to be omitted. They are matters of detail and not of principle and may be dealt with by the select committee and at the second reading.

Rao Bahadur Garud has an amendment as regards the Mahomedan constituency. This has been dealt with by me and the same ruling applies.

Mr. Trivedi has also given notice of an amendment :

"That all reference in the bill regarding separate representation to Mahomedans be dropped."

I have already dealt with that. His next amendment is :

"That the provisions vesting the power of control in the executive government be so modified as to vest that power in a Local Government Board to be elected by this Council with the Member in charge as chairman....."

That also is not a matter affecting the main principle of the bill and can be dealt with in the select committee and at the second reading. Then comes :

"That in the provisions of the bill regarding finances of local boards suitable modifications be made so as to guarantee to local boards a definite share of provincial revenues or definite proportion from these revenues on the total expenditure incurred by the local boards in each of the departments administered by them."

That amendment I rule out of order upon the ground that no recommendation, no proposal, can be made, no section can be embodied, in an Act as regards the revenues, unless there is a recommendation from the Crown. So, it is out of order and I rule it out of order. The next amendment is :

"That provisions in the bill empowering the local boards to increase the local fund cess on land revenue should be dropped and that it should be further provided in the draft bill that the local boards shall have power to levy rates and taxes on Forest and Income Tax."

That, I think, is a matter which may be considered in the select committee and at the second reading. Then :

"That provisions regarding the construction and management of public works in the local board areas should be so modified as to vest full powers in respect thereto in the local board concerned."

That is also a matter for the select committee and the second reading. It does not affect the main principle. I, therefore, rule it out of order.

"That provision regarding disqualification of candidates or members should be restricted to offences involving moral turpitude."

That is also a matter for the select committee and the second reading.

"That the franchise provision should be so altered as to qualify (a) all persons who have passed a defined literary test, (b) all persons who hold immoveable property of certain value, (c) persons who have a certain annual income from whatever source."

This involves a new provision, and unless Mr. Trivedi makes it quite clear I cannot say whether it is in order or not, for the House ought to remember, and I take it from the bill, that the qualification for an electorate, whether Mahomedan or non-Mahomedan, is payment of land revenue or local rates. This is the principle suggested by the bill. If the Council is of opinion that the principle should be enlarged by bringing in other voters with other qualifications, that is enlarging the principle and an amendment would be necessary now. In the absence of any amendment now, this would be foreclosed on the second reading. But if the amendment is carried at this first reading, the bill will have to be withdrawn. As I have pointed out from the passage in May's Parliamentary Practice which I read at the last session, you cannot attach new principles to a bill at the second reading and enlarge its principle affirmed at the first reading. Therefore I wish to hear Mr. Trivedi on that point and then I will make up my mind.

Rao Bahadur Kale has also an amendment about communal representation. I have already dealt with that.

[The President]

The principle of co-option which he raises is also a matter for the select committee and not necessarily one of principle, and therefore I rule it out of order.

As to the amendment about the greater independence of district local boards to be secured by restricting the powers of Government officers, this is a matter which can be dealt with in the select committee. It is not a provision for enlarging the powers of Government but of limiting it. Therefore I rule that out of order. So I have dealt with this point. Now the debate will proceed.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): Sir, I desire to move the following amendment of principle :—

"Add the following paragraph (d) to sub-clauses (1) and (2) of clause 15 of the bill :

'(d) who had passed on or before the date of preparation of the list the vernacular final examination or any other higher educational test.' "

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The amendment should be in the following form :—

"Leave out the words from the word 'that' to the end of the question (that is, the original motion for the first reading) and add instead the following words :

'That while recognizing the step forward taken in the bill for the purpose of local self-government, this Council thinks that it is unsatisfactory in so far as the sections dealing with the franchise are concerned, and declines therefore to proceed further with it unless the Government add to the bill franchise based on educational test giving the right of election to those who pass, on or before the date of preparation of the list, the vernacular final examination or any other higher educational test.' "

That will be the amendment proposed and the question put will be that the words proposed to be left out in the original question do stand part of the question.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: Then, Sir, I do not wish to move the amendment.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE (Poona District): Mr. President, as the oldest non-official president of a district local board in this Presidency, it is proper that I should address the Council a few words on the important measure that is before us. The good points in the bill have already been brought forward and the Honourable Minister has been patted on the back for them. It is the weak points that I want to place before the Council. The first weak point is the separate Mahomedan constituency that has been brought in. The Honourable Minister has been sufficiently attacked as regards this point by the previous speakers and especially by my honourable friends Rao Bahadur Kale and Rao Bahadur Garud. I do not wish therefore to take up any further time of the Council in dealing with this defect. The only thing that I wish to place before this Council is that in the Poona district out of the 61 local board members that are elected from the talukas we have got two Mahomedan members already that have come in by election. The proportion of Mahomedans in rural areas is $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the whole population in the Poona district, and based on that proportion they are entitled to two seats only and these they have got in the rural areas.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Have they come in by election ?

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE: Yes. Then in the municipal areas of the district 11 Mahomedans have already come in by election and my honourable friends from Satara and Dhulia have already stated to this Council that the proper number of Mahomedans have been elected by the present machinery in their districts, and I do not see why the Honourable Minister should go out of the way to insert in this bill a principle that is quite out of date and which is calculated to throw back the interests of this Presidency for a number of years. The principle is quite wrong and, if it is extended to Mahomedans, there is not the slightest reason why it should not be extended to Jains and to my friends the members of the backward communities.

Another weak point in regard to the bill has been brought to the notice of the Council by my honourable friend Rao Bahadur Garud, and that is that the bill does not take into account the existing machinery of local boards which includes the taluka local boards. The taluka local boards are the agency through which the district local boards carry out their works and the district local boards control the operations of the taluka local boards, and it is but proper therefore that the taluka local boards should have representatives on the district local board.

Then, the bill does not take into account at all the new local bodies that have come into existence in important villages and these are the village panchayats. In my opinion they are the best form of local self-government, because the village panchayats are entitled to impose taxation in their areas and they are entrusted with the duty of spending the proceeds of this taxation within their own limits. I do not think any institution of local self-government has gone so far in this respect as the village panchayats, and therefore these village panchayats that affect a considerable portion of the rural population ought to be taken into account in the formation of the new local boards of this Presidency. In the Poona district we have got 22 village panchayats already which have been formed, and they control a population of about 66,000 people. The bodies that control the sanitary requirements of such a large section of the rural population ought to find a place in the constitution of the district local boards. The district local board, therefore, should have on it, in addition to the representatives already provided for in the bill, the representatives also of the taluka local boards and of the village panchayats. In time, as pointed out by Rao Bahadur Garud, these village panchayats will develop and the taluka local boards will then become useless bodies. They will have then to go and the system of local self-government will be the district local board and the village panchayats. In my opinion, the Honourable Minister cannot ignore the existence of such important bodies in the bill that is before the Council. We should provide a certain number of seats in the district local board for the village panchayats.

Another weak point that has already been brought to the notice of the Council is the district education committees and the district health committees. My honourable friend Rao Saheb Dadubhai Desai has already pointed out that the sanitary or health committees will not be able to do anything for want of funds and for want of proper machinery to put health schemes into operation in our rural areas. In regard to education committees, they also in my opinion ought to be differently constituted. The district local board provides the funds and the body they have created themselves will go on with the operations in their own district without consulting them. They will start a new school, or will close an existing school, or increase the pay of the masters, without consultation with or the sanction of the district local board.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : They will have to go according to the budget.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE : In carrying out the budget they will be free to fix their own figures. It seems to me, Sir, to be a very unwise measure in that direction.

Then again, I might point out that in the Poona district we have ten minor municipalities. All these ten minor municipalities will have to find a place on the school board for their representatives, and, with three nominated members, there will thus be thirteen outsiders and there will be two places only left for the representatives of the district local board. So the number apparently is insufficient and it will have to be increased to 25 or more in the case of certain boards, not in the case of every board but in the case of certain boards.

The principal point however that I want to bring to the notice of this Council is as regards the functions of district local boards—the obligatory duties and the discretionary powers that are given to the district local boards. In my opinion, as regards the discretionary powers, there ought to be a large extension of those powers. The first extension that I would propose would be to authorise district local boards to promote railways and tramways in their areas. There is no developing agency equal to the provision of rapid means of communications and transport for the development of rural areas. That is a point known to all of us and I think the lines on which the Madras Local Boards Act and the Bengal Local Boards Act are drawn up ought to be studied by the Minister and similar provisions made amongst the discretionary duties of the district local boards as regards railways and tramways.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : There is a provision in our bill in section 50 (n), last clause.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE : Well, that is a very indirect way of putting it. I want that a measure like that, which involves large financial considerations, ought to find a separate place and I think it is imperative that the Honourable Minister, amongst the discretionary powers of the district local boards, should invest them with powers to promote railways and tramways in their areas, either by undertaking their construction themselves or by guaranteeing interest, during the first eight or ten years, during which the railways will not be paying dividends. My honourable friend Rao Saheb Dadubhai Desai tells me that in 1915 there was a special bill drafted by the local Government and apparently the Minister has ignored that bill altogether (Laughter). So, that is a point that I want the Honourable Minister to make a note of and to make due provision for. Authorise the district local boards to promote railways and tramways in their area.

Then, another class of power that I want included among the discretionary powers of the district local boards is the power for the construction of certain works which are calculated to increase the sub-soil water level in our rural areas. My honourable friend Rao Bahadur Chitale will bear me out when I say that these works are extremely important. If you have got a small tank storing water at the head of a nulla, the practical effect of that tank is that the wells along that nulla have their sub-soil water level raised and what were dry wells become irrigation wells. In my opinion the district local boards should have power to construct such works for the development of their rural areas amongst the discretionary powers that are given to those boards.

Then, the third class of works that I would advocate and for which the district local boards should have discretionary powers is the construction of minor irrigation works. In this district of Poona, during famine time the Revenue Department have spent a lot of money in constructing a tank at Ranjangaon Ganpati. The famine gangs at work have raised the embankment and the only thing that remains to be done is to close the nulla and convert the work into a useful tank. Why should not the district local board have the power of spending a little more money on this work and bringing it to effective operation ? Let us store water, it will do good to the area below it by increasing the sub-soil level of water in wells and by encouraging a little irrigation on the banks of the nulla. What I would advocate therefore is that amongst the discretionary powers of the district local boards should be the power of constructing these three sets of works—one set is the promotion of tramways and railways ; the second set is the construction of tanks at the head of nullas for increasing the sub-soil level of water in dry wells. (At this stage the Honourable the President withdrew and the Deputy President occupied the chair.) And the third set is the power of constructing small irrigation works for the benefit of the ryots wherever there are suitable sites in their areas. I strongly suggest that the Honourable Minister should take these points into consideration and make the requisite additions to his bill.

As I said, I am not asking him to do anything new, but I want him to follow the lines that have been followed in other Presidencies in this matter. These are the main provisions on which I wanted to speak and I hope the Council will endorse the views that I have placed before it.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: Mr. Deputy President, the Honourable Minister in charge of the bill has received congratulations, either whole-hearted, or, partly mixed, on the measure he has submitted to the Council. I am afraid I cannot be a party to congratulations of either nature and my first observation to this House would be that I personally feel greatly disappointed at the bill as it is submitted to this Council. My disappointment is not based on the details that govern or concern the management of district local boards or others. My disappointment is principally with one or two chief handicaps that I think the bill carries with it. That disappointment of mine is further increased by the rulings given by the Honourable the President that in moving any amendment to this bill an honourable member has to move that unless a certain subject that the honourable member wishes to get amended is accepted by Government, this bill has to be withdrawn by Government. Knowing, Sir, as you do the anxiety of the Council that the District Local Boards Act, which is more or less now much too old for present days, should undergo changes very soon, the Council can very easily realise what a handicap it is to any member of the Council who differs on any principle underlying the bill to move a single amendment at this first reading. That handicap is the one great handicap which the Council will have perceived to-day as it could not have perceived before now so clearly and perhaps so unmistakably as it has gone home to them this time. (At this stage the Honourable the President resumed the chair.) I was saying, Sir, that my great disappointment on this bill is based principally on one or two important subjects. The first one that I will mention is the distressing subject of communal representation which is introduced in this bill or which is sought to be introduced in this bill—a subject which, as I said at the last session of this Council, I thought we would hear very little of in these days. Belonging as I do to one of the two communities to which this question refers, I fully realise my shortcomings and also my handicaps. I fully realise that I can very plausibly be charged (I am hoping ultimately perhaps the honourable member will himself see that that charge will not hold at all) I can very plausibly be charged that I am carried away in what I say hereafter, because I am a Hindu. But I wish to assure the Council that I take my stand against communal representation on the same basis now as I took at the time when the Bombay Municipal Corporation Bill was before this House and when I opposed my honourable Parsi friends when they asked for communal representation in Bombay. This very Council then disposed of communal representation and it will take a good deal to make out any strong case for communal representation, be it for Mahomedans or Jains or any other section. You start and turn down communal representation once and I fail to see how this Council can pass or approve of communal representation on any ground unless it is proved as holding exceptionally good. I was told to-day that if this communal representation was approved of, the Hindus stood to benefit in Sind. That hardly counts with me; whether the Hindus benefit by it, or the Mahomedans, in one part or the other, I am out against it on principle and I do not think I shall take any more time of this House enunciating before them why I strongly disapprove of this communal representation. I feel, Sir, that on that subject the less said the better. I really wonder if the Honourable Minister is prepared to defend communal representation on principle and on technical grounds as Government generally do. I know the grounds on which he has tried to defend communal representation and which he put forward on the first reading of this bill and I shall a little later on deal with one or two of those grounds that have very kindly been communicated to me by kind friends. But before I do that, I would like honourable members of this House to turn to the statement of objects and reasons and just bear with me for a minute when I read some lines by which the Honourable Minister explains clause 6 therein. He says there :—

> As the Muhammadan population in rural areas is small and scattered separate Muhammadan constituencies have been created to secure adequate representation for their interests. The interests of other minorities will be secured by nomination.

May I ask the Honourable Minister, Sir,—I really wonder if the Honourable Minister has made it clear when he moved the first reading—may I ask him, Sir, what happens where Hindus happen to be in a minority ? The statement of objects and reasons as presented does not make that quite clear. May I ask the Honourable Minister to explain that, or is it to be left to be understood, to be construed .....

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: If Hindus happen to be in a minority .....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. Unless the honourable member gives way, the Honourable Minister cannot interrupt him.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: I will give way, Sir, if the Honourable Minister cares to reply. If he makes an attempt to rise, I shall give way for the time being as I have asked him a question.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: It is only when you resume your seat that the Honourable Minister can rise to interrupt.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: It is very clear, in the body of the bill as well as in the statement of objects and and reasons. If one community is in the majority, the Mahomedans for instance, the Hindus automatically get it.

Honourable MEMBERS: How ?

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: The statement of objects and reasons .....

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: If you refer to section 6 in the body of the bill, you will see that there are two constituencies, Mahomedan and non-Mahomedan.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: I have read section 6; I have also read the statement of objects and reasons. It says "As the Mahomedan population in rural areas is small." It does not say "If the Hindu or the Mahomedan population be small, special constituencies will be given."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I just interfere ? The honourable member should not go upon the statement of objects and reasons alone. If he will address himself to clause 6, dealt with in the statement, he will see that the general constituency is divided into two, namely, Mahomedan and non-Mahomedan, which means the two are there, and it applies to both. The interpretation is right. Upon that basis you may deal with it.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: The Honourable Minister should be grateful to you, Sir, for having put it so clearly. The statement of objects and reasons does not say that wherever the Mahomedans or the Hindus are in the minority, special electorates would be given to them. But I will refer to another clause which complicates matters still further; clause 133 (a) says:

"The Government may by notification in the Bombay Government Gazette from time to time make rules, or orders, consistent with this Act:

(a) prescribing the number of members of each local board, the proportion of the elective and nominated members for each local board and the number of members to be elected by each constituency;"

Even there it is not stated on what basis it is to be done. The difficulty therefore is further increased. I was pointing out, as far as clause 6 is concerned, that it is not at all clearly made out that there is as much solicitude for the Hindu minority as for the Mahomedan minority. It may be an oversight, and I take it from the Honourable Minister that it is an oversight. I only want to point out that the statement of objects and reasons as it is gives no explanation.

Further, Sir, the statement of objects and reasons says that the interests of other minorities would be secured by nomination. I would have very much liked to hear if the Honourable the Minister had given any reasons for this—if he has already given any reasons I beg his pardon; I was not here—as to why he differentiates between other minorities and the minorities of Hindus or Mahomedans in particular in any district. I am quite aware that in trying to justify this question of communal representation, the Honourable Minister said that there were precedents for it in the United Provinces and the Punjab. I would like to ask whether in the United Provinces and the Punjab there are also other minorities that have to be provided for, and if so what those minorities are, and whether they are sub-sections of Hindus or Mahomedans, and, further, how they are provided for. Is it by nomination ? Are those Governments as inconsistent as this Government now proposes to be ? Have those Governments enacted that for Hindus and Mahomedans there shall be separate treatment, but as regards other minorities, they may, as was said by some honourable member, go abegging for nomination ? I therefore contend, with all the deference due to the Honourable Minister, that, at best, he is inconsistent in this bill, and, according to my humble opinion, he has introduced in the Reformed Council the element of representation by communities, an element which I felt I should hear the least of in the Reformed Council. I am quite aware that many of my honourable colleagues the Mahomedan members sitting in this Council owe their seats in this Council probably to communal representation. But that is not a thing to which this Council was a party. That is a thing that was done above the heads of any Indian legislature and the Indian legislature had nothing to do but to accept it. I may be wrong. It is quite possible that there is room for absolutely honest and genuine difference of opinion, but I think that I would be quite justified, according to my lights, in saying that I feel greatly disappointed that the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government should be a party to the introduction of anything of a communal nature, and should have compelled a person like myself to make any remarks against it, remarks which pain me immensely.

I may be asked, and I was asked by some honourable members with whom I was discussing this question, What is the remedy ? I say, if the Government recognises minorities, and they have made up their mind to look after them, nobody can say nay to it. But let them recognise all minorities alike ; let them not differentiate between minorities because they happen to be differing in religion. Let them look after the Parsi, the Jain, the Hindu, the Maratha and the depressed classes minorities—I do not know how many others there are—on a common basis. If it holds good, let us not have differential treatment for Hindus and Mahomedans alone ; let us have it for all sections, and it doesn't matter ; let us be divided into a hundred parties and a hundred compartments. But let Government be consistent. As it is, it is one thing for one community and for the rest ! They can all go into the common pot. That is not a practical and consistent solution.

I would suggest nomination. Somebody said that he had an abhorrence to nomination, and he did not want to go abegging for nomination. I do not think nomination is secured by going abegging for it. People may think otherwise if it pleases them. If not nomination, I think you have the other alternative co-option. In regard to the Bombay Municipal Corporation, in spite of the Honourable the Minister, this House increased the number of co-opted members from 4 to 10. I see the Honourable Minister smiling, and he may tell me that the standard of intelligence in the mofussil is not what it is in Bombay—very flattering for Bombay. But I say the standard of intelligence in the mofussil will be the same whether you take it by election, or nomination, or co-option. If general election is not preferred, you may have nomination; if nomination is not acceptable you may have co-option. But if nothing is acceptable, and the only thing acceptable is what some gentlemen outside described as differentiating between the two communities, let this Council accept it at their own risk. The nomination provided for in the bill is 25 per cent. You can put that up to 35 per cent. or you can say that at least 50 per cent. of the nominations shall be given on the recommendation of the elected members to representatives of the minorities that are not represented. What I submit is that, if this House, led by the Honourable Minister in charge, do want to get over this nasty business of communal representation, they can do so. I see some honourable members smiling. Probably they think that what I say is absurd. Perhaps I have not as much experience as they have. It makes no difference. All that I submit and contend is that this Council will have, sooner or later, to get over this communal differentiation, and the sooner they do it, the sooner they stop starting a precedent as this one, the better for all concerned. I would very much like to hear from the Honourable Minister, when he gets up to reply, of the conditions which prevail in the United Provinces and the Punjab. He has told this Council that there are precedents for communal representation for Hindus and Mahomedans there. So far as I am aware, in the Punjab there are no more than two sections. (A voice 'Sikhs'). I am afraid I do not know much about Sikhs; but there are only two broad sections, Hindus and Mahomedans. Any way in Bombay you have got to deal with more than three; you have got to deal with six at least. The Honourable Minister must take courage in both his hands and go the whole hog and show that there is consistency and logic in the Government proposals.

Section 133 (a) of the bill leaves it to Government to prescribe the number of members of each local board and the proportion of the elected and nominated members, and the number of members to be elected by each constituency. There are two constituencies, Hindu and Mahomedan, and it leaves it to the discretion of Government to decide the number of members to be elected by each constituency. I feel that Government are undertaking a great responsibility, for, after all, local bodies are always likely to be, unless this experiment of reformed Councils undergoes a change for the worse, in the hands of an Honourable Minister, and although I am sure one day or the other my Parsi colleagues here may have from among them a Minister in charge of local bodies, it will be more often than not in the hands of a Hindu or Mahomedan Minister; and unless some basis is fixed by legislation as to how these seats are to be divided between the proposed two constituencies, I am afraid members who may have to criticise the Honourable Minister in charge at that time will have to do that with a certain amount of apology. I do not think the Honourable Minister wants to put the Council in that position. To submit a bill like this for the first reading without making this point clear points to a defect in the bill.

It was stated that all these things could be looked into in the select committee. We have had a very bitter experience of select committees that dealt with some of the bills, and I was myself a member of the select committee appointed to deal with the Bombay City Municipal Bill. The passage of the Bombay City Municipal Bill is still fresh in our minds. Now, Sir, you have ruled that if any motion to extend the principle of the bill is passed by the Council the bill will have to be withdrawn. That ruling of yours, as I am sure it is quite correct, I am not at all criticising. I am pointing out what handicaps such measures are to the Council when they are put forward by the Honourable Minister in charge without consultation with anybody—there is the grandfather of the Council, Dewan Bahadur Godbole, the oldest president of a local board, there is my honourable friend from Dhulia, my honourable friend from Ahmednagar, Rao Bahadur Chitale, stalwarts who have worked so hard as presidents of district local boards. I have not heard from any of them that district local boards were consulted. I put it to you.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: My ruling is based on this.....

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: I bow to your ruling. I am only pointing out how in view of the ruling bills like this put before the House are a handicap to them. I was going to say that persons like Dewan Bahadur

[Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas]

Godbole, Rao Bahadur Chitale, Rao Bahadur Kale and Rao Bahadur Garud, who have taken a prominent part in the management of district local boards till now, have not been consulted. When each one is feeling that something is wanting.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I just make myself more clear? My ruling is based on what is stated in May's "Parliamentary Practice":—

> "It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of the bill to move an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to or differing from the principles, policy or provisions of the bill."

That applies to the first reading here according to our Standing Orders.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: I bow to the ruling. I am pointing out how confused are laymen like myself who do not know either much of law or of the working of the district local boards, when they differ on an important principle.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: An amendment of the principle of the bill to be in order should not be a mere negative of the bill. It should propose some alternative principle. In that case, as May points out, if the amendment is carried, the principle of the bill falls through and with it the bill.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: I was saying how confused I feel in voting for the first reading of the bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I do not see any confusion. If you attach so much importance to your principle, whatever the other merits are, you must say to the Honourable Minister "Bring another bill on the lines of the principle I contend for."

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: You have ruled that such amendments can be moved at the second reading and given every latitude to discuss them. I was just going to say that everybody who has been in this House knows how difficult it is to overthrow a select committee report once it is made. The privilege of nomination of members to the select committe is with the Honourable Minister (An Honourable member: No, no). Will you just wait a minute please? The Honourable Minister will get up and propose some 15 names; the House will add two or three more. You will suggest, Sir, that that makes the select committee unwieldy. Then 15 and 3, 18 members will make the report. As it happened in the Bombay City Municipal Bill, some one like myself will be in a minority. The select committee report comes before the Council. You know how difficult it is to dislodge a position like that. I appeal to the Honourable Minister whether it is fair to this Council in view of the criticisms he has heard, to push on the first reading, when notice of a series of amendments is given, which you read out, Sir, by mofussil members who are anxious to see that the old District Local Boards Act is amended, and will not wait for a minute more than it will be absolutely necessary. I am trying to put before the Council what will happen after the select committee report. The members of the select committee.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: It is open to the Council to reject any name.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: Has it ever happened Sir? One member has never been discourteous to another. Even my esteemed friend Dr. Dadachanji will not challenge my name, though he may not like it at heart, if my name is suggested to a committee. Therefore, Sir, the practical difficulties are so many that I do not think the Honourable the Minister should push on with this bill, knowing how the Council is practically in a most difficult position, and knowing also that outside the Council some may call it "tactics" to get through the bill—I do not call it so, and I do not think it is, but it may be called so.

Sir, there is one thing more before I resume my seat. I see that in the qualifications for voters clauses (2) and (3) of section 10 of the existing Act have been absolutely omitted. Clause (2) says:

> "persons who own immoveable property.....not less than five thousand rupees in value," and clause (3) says:

> "persons residing within the taluka whose annual net earnings from any occupation are estimated to be not less than five hundred rupees,—"

estimated by the Collector, of course. I should have thought, Sir, that persons with an annual income of five hundred rupees or owning landed property to be valued by the Collector at five thousand rupees would be looked upon by the Honourable Minister as persons with a stake and responsibility in the district.

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL H. SETALVAD: Persons holding land of the value of Rs. 5,000 will be paying Rs. 8 assessment.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: The Honourable the General Member has not cared to look at the old Act.

It is not "landed" property. The section is

> "persons who own immoveable property within the taluka, other than a holding described in clause (1)..... estimated by the Collector to be not less than five thousand rupees in value."

It may mean a bungalow or a house.

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL H. SETALVAD: They will pay house-tax then.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: Not necessarily. The Council realizes that the Honourable Minister tries to impose at one stroke a basis of absolute uniformity—it may be payment of Rs. 8 or Rs. 32 per annum. When we hear so often from Government benches that the material one gets for district local boards from the mofussil is rather poor, it is illogical to throw away on the excuse of consistency material like this, namely, people owning immoveable property of not less than five thousand rupees in value, and persons whose annual net earnings from any occupation are estimated to be not less than five hundred rupees.....

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Five hundred rupees annual income is not much.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: That is quite enough for the mofussil, Mr. Paranjpye. I should have thought that these were the people who would be looked upon as having a stake and responsibility in the district. Sir, that is a change from the present Act which requires to be justified on grounds other than those of uniformity. We do not want uniformity at the expense of the franchise of people like those provided for under the old Act. I feel, Sir, that a step like this should be substantially justified by the Honourable Minister. I would have moved an amendment but for the ruling which you have so very kindly given to the Council, but which puts us absolutely out of court at present for moving an amendment of this kind. The difficulty is this. I wish to move an amendment that these sections of the old Act be embodied in the present bill. That is broadening the basis and you will not admit this after the first reading. I therefore venture to ask the Honourable Minister why he has omitted these important sections of people whose claims rest not on the basis of communal or any other ground, but on the basis of a common qualification. The difficulty of the House is this. Some members of the House want, my honourable friend from Surat wants, to broaden the basis on certain grounds and I would like to have it broadened on the ground, I have just mentioned. It may appeal to the House or it may not appeal to the House, but the amendments cannot be discussed by the House for this reason, that the House will not pass the amendment lest the whole bill may have to be withdrawn. Now, I wish to ask the Honourable Minister whether he has consulted persons with practical experience before he made these omissions, omissions of clauses which were in the old Act and which seem to have acted very well so far.

I feel, Sir, that I have taken up too much time of the Council. I have talked very frankly, but I feel that at a juncture like this, when such an important measure has been placed by the Honourable Minister before the House, I should not mince matters or keep back anything which I like to say to this House. On such an important bill like this, with 136 clauses, one would have liked to offer the thanks of the Council to the Honourable Minister in charge for having put it before the Council, but my only handicap is that I disagree with one or two material points only and regarding others I think that the Council wants to know the grounds which have justified the Honourable Minister in cutting out certain privileges that have been enjoyed by certain sects of people irrespective of any differences of race or religion.

Mr. O. ROTHFELD : Sir, I shall not commence by reiterating the congratulations given by various members to the Honourable Minister. I think the bill as it stands is an ample testimony to the trouble and care that he has taken. But I would like to begin by congratulating the last speaker on the excellently delivered, extremely witty and very eloquent speech that he delivered. I can only regret that I cannot and I trust that the majority of this House cannot agree with the matter of his speech. (Honourable Members : 'No, no'). Sir, I find myself in regard to this bill in the very unfortunate position of having to differ from several gentlemen with whom I am constantly associated in public work and whose services in those directions I fully appreciate. Most of all I regret that on this subject of all subjects I have to differ so strongly from the honourable member for Kaira. The honourable member for Kaira comes here as the representative not merely of a rural constituency, but the representative of a rich district where the people are distinctly above the average in intelligence and where they have very likely a desire to extend their own independence in the management of their own affairs. The honourable member in addition to being a representative of that district also had at the last session of this Council moved a resolution—interesting indeed in certain respects —to secure that further capital should come to the districts from Bombay, and in particular into the co-operative movement in which, I am thankful to say, he is keenly interested. Well, here, you have a bill which first of all provides for very much more than has ever been offered, namely, independence in the districts and the power to the district local boards to manage their own affairs. But the honourable member for Kaira rejects it and says he does not want the management because he does not want to raise money by taxing people. Secondly, in this bill we have provisions dealing with co-operative institutions. Now, there are one crore and twenty-four lakhs of rupees per year which constitute the revenue of the boards, and I do not know if the honourable member treats one crore and twenty-four lakhs as being a very small sum not worth considering. If he does so, I regret I cannot take the same view. I wish I could have for the co-operative movement one crore and twenty-four lakhs from the Government treasury. I think that is a most important provision in the Act and I request the honourable member to consider it. (The honourable member at this point was inaudible). It is so late that I do not think it would be right at this moment to go into the other questions raised by the honourable member in regard to provincial taxation and local funds. At a previous meeting of this House I had occasion once to refer to the idea that seemed to prevail among some honourable members that Government had a huge box constantly refilled out of which to draw money and apparently the honourable member still seems to have that idea. The honourable member for Kaira, I think, seems to believe that provincial funds go on without actual taxation. But he must know that Government have not got unaccountable treasures to draw from. The proposition in this bill is simply that the person who pays shall have the management, while the proposition of the honourable member is that the board should be given no hand in the management and that the funds should be collected and applied by Government officers.

Now as regards communal representation, honourable members must be aware that there are two large communities in this Presidency, one the Mahomedans and the other Hindus. But the honourable member, Mr. Gholap, has also suggested that this Act should provide for the representation of the untouchables, namely, the Asparsha communities. But there is this danger at the back of that suggestion. I do not think that the Asparsha class should remain untouchable for ever, and that it should retain its Asparshatva for all time to come. The honourable member's proposal will make it so by stereotyping the distinction in the whole of British India. The last speaker tried to confuse the question of the representation of these minorities with that of the two great religious communities and to confuse the issues before the House. The honourable member for Satara, Rao Bahadur Kale, referred to the Hindus of Sind. He said that there should not be religious differences, but I would ask him if he knows the conditions of Sind, and, as he knows, the meaning of the Sanskrit word "Sandhi" is joining together. (At this stage the honourable member had some conversation on the word "Sandhi" and the meaning of the word "Sadgun" with Rao Bahadur Kale and other honourable members).

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Will the honourable member go on with his speech?

Mr. O. ROTHFELD: I was dealing with the question of Hindus in Sind. They amount to 875,000 of the total population and they constitute more than a quarter of the population of Sind.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: I do not think the honourable member has caught my point.

Mr. O. ROTHFELD: You said that they do not want separate representation. The Hindu cultivators in Sind—my Mahomedan friends, will excuse my saying so—are the persons whom we must look to for agricultural progress in Sind. They are persons who would certainly want to be represented, not beyond their numbers, but in the right proportion, on the local boards. I think the honourable member from Sukkur will probably be able to support me when I state that I believe that in the last ten years there have probably been not more than two or three rural Hindus who have been elected or nominated on the local boards in Sind.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Correct for election but not by nomination.

Mr. O. ROTHFELD: Very well. Now I ask whether this is a state of things which should be allowed to go on. You have to take into consideration the actual facts. Unless you do that, you will not arrive at the right conclusion. What the Honourable Minister has proposed is that the two communities should vote for each section separately. I for one see no objection to that. I need not go into the question of Mahomedans in the other parts of this Presidency, because the question has been amply discussed for many years. It is a question in which persons are guided by their individual bias. Everyone is entitled to his own opinion on these questions. Personally I think there is nothing wrong in the proposal of Government as it affects the Presidency. But I want to emphasize this point of Sind, especially, because that has not been a matter of so much discussion. With these remarks I will conclude by saying that I hope this House will support the first reading of the bill, which, although it may not satisfy all classes and although everyone may not be able to see it through the Honourable Minister's eye, does represent a very substantial progress in the most important province of Government's administration, namely, local self-government.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I think it is 7 o'clock, but before we adjourn, I would say, with regard to the speeches which have been made and which I have been following very closely for the purpose of seeing whether I can easily find out a way to smooth the situation and satisfy all parties, that I find that there is some way out of the difficulty, and that with regard to my ruling especially on the question of franchise, to which the honourable member from Bombay Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas referred, there is a way out of the difficulty. I have just now been looking into the authorities and I find it is this. This bill is not a new bill in point of its principle. The title of the bill says "A bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to local boards". I understand that under the existing law the educational qualification exists.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: No, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Very well.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: Pensioners also.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Honourable members will resume the debate on Monday and I put this point before them for their consideration. I have found a ruling of the Speaker in the House of Commons laying down that you cannot, at the third reading (which is equivalent to our second reading), propose any new principle or amendments affecting a principle which would extend the franchise and not modify it, that you cannot add a new franchise or establish an entirely new principle for which leave had not been given by the

[The President]

House or which had not obtained the sanction of that House at the second reading, i.e., our first reading. Therefore, if anybody who enjoyed the franchise under the existing law has been deprived of it by the bill, then I think it would be open to the select committee to consider the question and for honourable members to move amendments on the second reading on that point. As regards the education qualificatiom, whether it exists or not, in the existing law, I cannot say anything now and it may depend upon other circumstances. But honourable members will consider these points and I will give my ruling aud see whether the situation cannot be eased. As regards communal representation, whether it ought to remain in the bill or whether it ought to be omitted, and whether, if it is to remain, it can be extended, as for instance in the case of the depressed classes, these are matters considered as matters of details in the select committee and at the second reading and amendments can be there moved. The only question now is confined to the extensiou of the franchise, but even as to that, I think we can find out a way. Whether it is a modification or an extension, we have to consider and I shall be quite prepared to yield to Mr. Gandhi's suggestion about the education qualification if he will satisfy me that it is not an entirely new principle and it will not add very largely to the electors under the existing bill.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: I am told, Sir, that graduates have a vote under the existing Act.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Under the rules framed under the Act.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is it under the law?

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Under the rules made by the Governor in Council under section 69.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Well, I decline to give any final ruling. (At this stage there was a little confusion in the Council.) I hope honourable members will show respect to the Chair. It is a very intricate point and I think the Chair ought to be, in these circumstances, helped. It will be open to honourable members to raise the point on Monday and, after hearing the speeches, as I have said, I shall try and make up my mind whether the situation cannot be eased. The point is this; whether the educational test exists and, if it does, then, whether they have enjoyed it under the rules or the Act. The principle has been affirmed by the legislature and now this bill proposes to do away with it by an amendment. Therefore, it will not be an entirely new principle as it was in the case of women. Women never enjoyed it and the Speaker said "I am not going to allow this to be brought in at the third reading when the matter was not referred to at the second reading". I do not give my final ruling to-day. I am merely making these suggestions to the honourable members for their consideration and, I will give my ruling on Monday. That ought to satisfy everybody and make the passage, both of the supporters and of the opponents of the bill, smoother.

The Council is adjourned to 2 p.m. on Monday, the 25th September 1922.

Monday, the 25th September 1922.

The Council re-assembled at the Council Hall, Poona, on Monday, the 25th September 1922, at 2 p. m., the Honourable the President, Sir NARAYAN GANESH CHANDAVARKAR, Kt., LL.D., presiding.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. Questions.

TEMPORARY ESTABLISHMENT OF THE P. W. D.

*Mr. S. K. BOLE (Bombay City, North): Will Government be pleased to state (a) the number of retired officers and subordinates employed in the Public Works Department on the temporary establishment in the Presidency with the salary and age of each person as well as the amount of pension drawn by each of them, (b) and the necessity of their employment?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: The information relating to officers was furnished at the last session of the Council. That in connection with subordinates has been embodied in the accompanying statement.†

COUNTRY LIQUOR SHOPS AT MAHABLESHWAR AND PANCHGANI.

*Khan Bahadur D. B. COOPER (Satara District): (a) Is Government aware of the fact that owing to the discontinuance of the country liquor shops at Mahableshwar and Panchgani in the Satara district on temperance grounds from 1st April 1922, the sales of the tariff duty paid spirits of much higher strength than the country liquor which used to be sold there have so much increased that the total consumption of spirits remains all the same notwithstanding the closing of the shops causing hardship on poor people and compelling them to buy inferior foreign spirit at a higher cost?

(b) Will Government be pleased to supply the figures of sales of foreign and country spirit for the three months, April, May and June for the last year and the figures of sales of the corresponding months of the current year in proof gallons at Mahableshwar and Panchgani?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) Yes.

(b) Two statements‡ furnishing the requisite figures are laid on the Council table.

MEMORIAL FROM PROVINCIAL POLICE.

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL (Broach District): Will Government be pleased to state if they have received a memorial from members of the provincial police and if so, when they may expect to receive final orders on the subject of their grievances enumerated therein?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Government have received the memorials which will receive careful and sympathetic attention, but Government are unable at this stage to say when orders will be issued.

* This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

† Vide Appendix H.

‡ Vide Appendices I and J.

TRAVELLING ALLOWANCE TO POLICE OFFICERS.

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL (Broach District): (a) Is Government aware of the fact that under its recent travelling allowance rules, if a senior deputy superintendent of police even when acting as District Superintendent of Police and a probationary assistant superintendent of police were to travel together, the former officer would draw travelling allowance on the inferior scale, whereas his subordinate would draw travelling allowance on the superior scale ?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to state why and for what reason this anomaly is due in the police service, and will Government please state if such an anomaly exists in any other service ?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: (a) and (b) The anomaly does not exist as deputy superintendents of police acting as District Superintendents of Police draw first grade travelling allowance as officers of an All-India Service.

NEW GOVERNMENT VERNACULAR SCHOOLS IN AHMEDABAD.

* Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) the number of vernacular schools opened by the Government in Ahmedabad town after the teachers were withdrawn from the municipal schools ;

(b) the number of teachers engaged for each of these schools, with their qualifications and pay including the allowance ;

(c) the average attendance of pupils in these schools since they were opened ;

(d) average cost per pupil in these schools ;

(e) average cost per pupil in the Government vernacular practising schools attached to the P. R. Training College for men and Mahalaxmi Training College for women ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) 4.

(b) Vide statement† appended.

(c) 120.

(d) Rs. 4-10-5 per mensem.

| | Average cost per pupil. Rs. a. p. |
|---|---|
| (e) (1) Gujarati Practising School attached to the P. R. Training College for Men, Ahmedabad. | 2 5 5 |
| (2) Urdu Practising School attached to the P. R. Training College for Men, Ahmedabad. | 2 13 3 |
| (3) Practising School attached to the Training College for Women, Ahmedabad. | 4 0 0 |

CHIEF CONSERVATOR OF FORESTS.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): (a) Is it not a fact that the Chief Conservator of Forests has to supervise the work of only three Conservators of Forests ? When was this post created ? Who did the present work of this office before it was brought into existence ?

* This question was asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

† Appendix K.

(b) Will Government state if any and what insuperable difficulties exist in doing away with this office ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : (a) The Chief Conservator does not merely supervise the work of three Conservators. Besides that he has the following duties :—to act as the chief technical adviser of Government in regard to forest matters, to co-ordinate the work of the department in the several circles regarding the framing of working plans, to supervise and direct the collection of economic products and the conduct of forest research work, to tour throughout the Presidency and inspect the various forests and offices, to act generally as the administrative head of the department in direct communication with Government. For some time the duties of the Utilization Conservator have also been combined with those of the Chief Conservator.

The post was created on 11th December 1917.

Only some of the duties of the Chief Conservator used formerly to be discharged by the senior Conservator.

(b) The office was created because the need for it was seriously felt and cannot be abolished without loss of efficiency and revenue.

COMMITTEE ON STATIONERY AND PRINTING.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City) : Has the committee appointed by Government to report on the working of the Department of Stationery and Printing made its report ? If so, will Government be pleased to lay it on the table of the House ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD : No committee was appointed to examine into the working of the department. The report of the committee appointed to examine into the working of the Government printing presses was received in January 1921 and effect has been given to its recommendations as far as possible. Government do not consider that any useful purpose would now be served by laying the report on the table.

TRANSFER OF MAGISTERIAL WORK TO SUB-JUDGES.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City) : (a) Are the proposals of the Commissioners as to the practicability of reducing the ordinary magisterial establishments and of transferring the magisterial work to subordinate judges at places where there are subordinate judges' courts received ? If so, will they be laid on the table of the House in order to enable the Council to consider them ?

(b) By what time do Government propose to give effect to the resolution of the Council on the question ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : (a) The Commissioners' replies have been received and are being considered by Government.

(b) It is impossible to say. The question depends largely on the retrenchments promised to the Legislative Council.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI : My question as to whether the proposals will be placed on the Council table for their consideration has not been answered.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : I do not quite follow you. Does your " If so " mean " if the question depends on the retrenchments promised to the Council " ?

Mr. C. M. GANDHI : My " If so " means if the proposals are received.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : No, Sir, not at present.

PLOTS OF LAND AT MATHERAN.

*Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA (Bombay City): (a) Will Government please state whether they have leased out any plots of land at Matheran on the Rugby plateau and in Mary Lane during the last two years ? If so, how many and to whom and at what price ?

(b) Whether there were other applicants for these plots and, if so, how many and whether their applications were considered and, if so, with what result ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : (a) During the last two years, only one plot has been leased out on the Rugby plateau. It was given out at the fixed price of Rs. 2,500 per acre to the proprietor of the Rugby Hotel at Matheran. During this period, no plots have been leased out in Mary Lane.

(b) There was one other application for the plot on the Rugby plateau. It was not entertained as it was received three months later than the first application and as it was considered desirable to afford facilities as far as possible for extension of hotels on the hill rather than for separate bungalows.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA : May I know what was the price offered by the other applicants for that very plot ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Government require notice of the question.

INDOOR PATIENTS IN THE J. J. HOSPITAL.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA (Bombay City): Will Government please say whether any indisposed indoor patients were sent away from J. J. Hospital and Sir Cowasji Jehangir Eye Hospital early this month and, if so, how many, giving their dates of admission, nature of their sickness and the reasons of sending them away ?

(b) Will Government please state as to under whose orders these indoor patients were sent away ?

(c) Will Government lay on the table any correspondence that passed between the Government and the hospital authorities with regard to the keeping of those indoor patients in the hospitals ?

(d) Will Government please state whether the hospital authorities had invited the Honourable Minister in charge of the hospital portfolio and the Surgeon General to attend the committee meeting of the hospital authorities and see things for themselves early this month, and whether they did not attend the same ? If not, why ?

(e) Will Government please say whether those indoor patients were re-admitted to the hospitals and if so, how many, and when, and under whose orders ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) and (b) No.

(c) The press note† issued on 19th August 1922 is laid on the table.

(d) A suggestion of this somewhat unusual nature was made by the Senior Medical Officer in a telegram dated 29th July. The matter was disposed of in the Surgeon General's memorandum of 1st August and the Government telegram of the 4th August, copies† of which are laid on the table. I have since visited the hospital and made the fullest enquiries into all the circumstances.

(e) Of the patients discharged from the hospital between 24th July and 4th August inclusive one was re-admitted on August 5th and discharged again on August 15th. This patient was admitted on 11th May 1922, for mastoid

* This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

† Kept in Secretary's office.

abscess. With regard to his re-admission the Senior Surgeon has reported that he could have attended the out-patient department, as he was convalescent, but as he had come from Igatpuri he was re-admitted.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA : With regard to my question 2 (b) you say "no". Is there any reason for keeping this information from the Council and from the public ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : The question does not arise. The honourable member has asked whether any indoor patients were sent away. None were sent away.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA : I ask under whose orders they were sent away.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : Obviously that question does not arise as no indisposed indoor patients were sent away.

Mr. KANJI DWARKADAS : Will Government be pleased to state why the Minister for Education and the Surgeon General were invited to attend the meeting in Bombay, which procedure the Honourable Minister now says is of a somewhat unusual nature ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : The Surgeon-General and the Minister were invited together. That is the unusual procedure.

Mr. KANJI DWARKADAS : Will Government be pleased to state why this unusual request was made to them ?

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA : You say in (d) "I visited the hospital and made the fullest enquiries into all the circumstances." Will you kindly tell this Council and to the public through this Council the result of your enquiries ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Please address the Chair.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA : Although I am looking at the Minister, it is understood that I am addressing the Chair.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : You say "Will you, etc."

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA : Will the Honourable Minister be good enough to give his opinion to the public through this Council ? The public are very anxiously waiting as to the result of the enquiries of the Minister in charge of this department.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : There is the press note in which the information is given.

ADMISSION OF PATIENTS IN THE J. J. HOSPITAL.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA (Bombay City) : Will Government please say as to how many patients sought admission in the J. J. Hospital in the months of May, June and July last and how many got admission and how many were refused ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : The number of patients admitted in the J. J. Hospital during the months of May, June and July 1922 were 674, 643 and 539 respectively. It is not, however, possible to say how many patients sought admission to the hospital. Patients do not, as a rule, ask to be admitted into hospital, but are admitted from the out-patients department or the casualty room when this is considered necessary by the out-patient staff. This hospital has always been full and new patients were admitted up to the limit of the accommodation available, except from the period from July 24th to August 4th.

Patients are refused admission at times because it is considered that their complaint is not one which requires treatment in a hospital, while, on the other hand, many patients, far from seeking admission, are only too anxious to remain as out-patients and have to be persuaded by the medical officers to come into hospital, for the necessary treatment.

WALIKAR ESTABLISHMENT.

*Mr. C. C. HULKOTI (Dharwar District): Will the Government be pleased to state what is the total saving from the reduction of the Walikar establishment of the villages in the Presidency?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: The savings effected are as shown below:—

|---|---|---|---|---|
| Satara | .. .. .. | 4,028 | 8 | 0 |
| Belgaum | .. .. .. | 60,957 | 14 | 0 |
| Dharwar | .. .. .. | 49,170 | 3 | 1 |
| Bijapur | .. .. .. | 25,954 | 2 | 7 |
| | Total .. | 1,40,110 | 11 | 8 |

The savings in the Satara district were effected in the years 1919 and 1920, those in the Belgaum district between the years 1910—20, in the Dharwar district between the years 1910—13, and in the Bijapur district between the years 1910—14. The reduction of shetsanadi establishment in the Sholapur district is under consideration.

NUMBER OF APPEALS FROM ACQUITTALS.

Mr. C. C. HULKOTI (Dharwar District): Will Government be pleased to state:—

(a) how many appeals from acquittals were filed by Government during the last three years ending 31st March 1922,

(b) out of these, how many were allowed and how many disallowed by the Honourable High Court of Bombay,

(c) what is the total amount of expenditure on all the appeals filed, and (d) what is the total amount of expenditure on appeals that were dismissed?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: The information has been called for.

POLICE STATIONS IN DHARWAR DISTRICT.

Mr. C. C. HULKOTI (Dharwar District): Will the Government be pleased to state:—

(a) how many police stations and outposts are in the district of Dharwar;

(b) how many offences were registered and how many were investigated and sent up for trial during the last three years, 1919, 1920 and 1921—

(i) in Shiragupi police station, Annigeri,

(ii) in Annigeri police station,

(iii) in Mugad police station, all in Dharwar district;

(c) have any of these three police stations been abolished during the retrenchment, if not, why not?

*This question was asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : There are in all 23 police stations and 16 outposts in the Dharwar district.

One police station and five police outposts have been reduced provisionally under the retrenchment scheme but the three police stations mentioned have not been included in the retrenchment owing to the prevalence of crime in the district. The question of their reduction will however be referred once more in view of the suggestions of the member for the particular opinion of the Inspector General of Police.

Mr. C. C. HULKOTI : Will Government be pleased to answer part (b) of the question ? There is no answer at all to (b).

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : I have not answered the question, because I have undertaken, on the suggestion that the crime is small, to refer the matter again to the opinion of the Inspector General of Police.

RENT OF BUILDINGS OCCUPIED BY GOVERNMENT OFFICERS.

Mr. C. C. HULKOTI (Dharwar District) : Will the Government be pleased to state :—

(1) Dharwar,
(2) Bijapur,
(3) Belgaum ;

(b) who fixes the rent of these buildings in the district and how it is recovered by Government ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : (a) The rent on such of the buildings in question as were constructed or purchased before 1st January 1922, i.e., before the Fundamental Rules came into force is calculated at 5 per cent. of the capital cost, i.e., 3½ per cent. for interest, 1½ per cent. for repairs. That on buildings constructed or purchased and additions and alterations to existing buildings carried out after 1st January 1922 is calculated at 8 per cent. of the capital cost, i.e., 6½ per cent. for interest, 1½ per cent. for repairs. The percentage is uniform for all the districts in the Presidency.

(b) Before the introduction of the Fundamental Rules the rent was sanctioned by the Superintending Engineers of Divisions. It is now sanctioned by Government. The rent so fixed is recovered by deduction from the salary bills of the officers concerned, the maximum amount of rent recoverable from an officer being limited to 10 per cent. of his emoluments.

COMMUTATION OF KULKARNI WATANS.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) The number of villages in the districts of the Central and Southern Divisions in which the kulkarni watan service is commuted and they are now replaced by stipendiary talatis ?

(b) The number of villages in each district in the two divisions the kulkarnis of which are still officiating ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Information has been called for.

RULES UNDER CRIMINAL TRIBES ACT.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Will Government be pleased to place a copy of the rules passed under section 20 of the Criminal Tribes Act applicable to the district of Satara ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: A reference is requested to Government Notification No. 9828, dated the 19th October 1920, in the Judicial Department published at pages 3297—3302 of Part I of the Bombay Government Gazette dated the 9th December 1920.

LIST OF CRIMINAL TRIBES.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Will Government be pleased to state when they expect the list of criminal tribes will be revised in the district of Satara ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: The work has been taken in hand and will be completed during the next two touring seasons.

LAND FOR HOUSES AT LONAND.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Will Government be pleased to state :—

(a) What is the area of the Gavthan of the town of Lonand ?

(b) Whether the town is very congested and people are asking for more house sites ?

(c) What area is now acquired by Government ?

(d) What area is now left by Government to private individuals to build huts only ?

(e) What is the rent charged per guntha per month ?

(f) Whether it is a fact that the rent charged amounts to Rs. 480 per acre per mile ?

(g) What is the average price per acre at which Government acquired the land ?

(h) Whether Government contemplate to acquire more area there ?

(i) Whether Government intend to let it at the same rate of rent ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Information has been called for.

PANDHARPUR-LONAND AND MIRAJ RAILWAY.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Will Government be pleased to say whether there is any prospect of the Barsi Light Railway taking into hand the construction :

(a) Of the Pandharpur-Lonand section within the next five years ?

(b) Of the Pandharpur-Miraj section within the next five years ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: This Government is in communication with the Railway Board about the matter but no decision has yet been reached.

FOREST AREA IN SATARA DISTRICT.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Will Government be pleased to state for the district of Satara—

(a) The area per taluka under forest ?

(b) The forest area per taluka under management by the Revenue Department ?

(c) The revenue derived by the two departments respectively ?

(d) The amount of cattle grazing fees received per taluka last year ?

(e) The establishment charges at the talukas and at Satara for the forest administration ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Information has been called for.

APPOINTMENTS OF VERNACULAR TEACHERS.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Will Government be pleased to state :—

(a) Whether the deputy educational inspector of Satara has been asked to ascertain from candidates for appointment as vernacular teachers about their willingness to take service on Rs. 12-8-0 per mensem ?

(b) How many of such candidates have given their consent to serve under the proposed conditions ?

(c) How many of these are Brahmins ?

(d) Are these to be recruited as probationers and to be confirmed on Rs. 25 within a year or two ?

(e) Are the deputy educational inspectors of other districts asked to make similar enquiries ?

(f) If the reply be in the negative, will Government be pleased to say what special circumstances in Satara necessitated the enquiry ?

(g) I the reply to sub-question (e) be in the affirmative, will Governmefnt be pleased to say what their policy is in this connection ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Enquiries are being made.

CONSULTING ARCHITECT'S ESTABLISHMENT.

* Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District): Will Government be pleased to state when the Consulting Architect's establishment was created together with the expenses of the department year by year since its creation ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Information regarding the dates of creation of the offices of the Consulting Architect to Government and the Executive Engineer, Architectural District, under him together with the figures of expenditure on establishment in those offices during the five years ending 1920-21 was furnished at the last session ; that regarding the remaining years with the exception of 1901-1902 (for the Consulting Architect's office) for which separate figures are not recorded is as under :—

|---|---|---|
| | Rs. | Rs. |
| 1902-03 | .. 27,052 | .. |
| 1903-04 | .. 31,422 | .. |
| 1904-05 | .. 36,448 | .. |
| 1905-06 | .. 44,076 | .. |
| 1906-07 | .. 46,319 | .. |
| 1907-08 | .. 45,551 | .. |
| 1908-09 | .. 34,195 | .. |
| 1909-10 | .. 35,483 | .. |
| 1910-11 | .. 42,150 | .. |
| 1911-12 | .. 41,122 | .. |
| 1912-13 | .. 51,259 | .. |
| 1913-14 | .. 68,796 | .. |
| 1914-15 | .. 72,958 | 8,216 |
| 1915-16 | .. 66,058 | 35,959 |
| 1921-22 | .. 1,27,904 | 50,696 |

* This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

NUMBER OF PROSECUTIONS IN THE SATARA DISTRICT.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District): What is the number of prosecutions under Chapter VIII of the Criminal Procedure Code in the Satara district during the last three years? In how many of them, securities were taken? What is the number of appeals in such cases? In how many cases the accused had to remain in jail for want of security? In how many cases were securities refused more than once?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: The information is being obtained.

CRIMINAL TRIBES SETTLEMENT AT HUBLI.

* Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District): Will Government be pleased to give information as to—

(a) How many prosecutions and for what offences were lodged against members of the Criminal Tribes Settlement at Hubli after the transfer of management of the same to a private body till end of December 1921?

(b) How many of such prosecutions ended in convictions?

(c) What was the number of prosecutions and convictions for the corresponding period of previous two years?

(d) Is it a fact that there has been a laxity of control over the members of criminal tribes after the transfer of management of the same to a private body?

(e) Is it a fact that the number of absentees at night was greater in the period referred to in (a) above than in the corresponding periods of the previous two years?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD:

(a), (b), (c) A statement† embodying the information is placed on the Council table.

(d) It is not a fact.

(e) It is not a fact.

ENGLISH TEACHING AT KURTKOT IN GADAG.

‡ Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District): (a) Is it a fact that the villagers of Kurtkot in Gadag taluka of Dharwar district have applied that provision should be made in the village for teaching English?

(b) Is it a fact that there is no school at Kurtkot where English is taught?

(c) What is the population of the said village?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) No.

(b) Yes.

(c) 3,772 according to the Census of 1921.

SUITS IN THE FIRST CLASS SUBORDINATE JUDGES' COURTS.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District): Will Government be pleased to state:—

(a) The number of first class suits filed in each of the first class subordinate judges' courts in the Presidency in each of the following years, viz., 1917-18, 1918-19, 1919-20, 1920-21 and 1921-22?

* This question was asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

† Vide Appendix L.

‡ This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

(b) The number of first class suits over a year old pending in each of these courts at the end of July 1922 ?

(c) The total number of first class suits pending in each of these courts by the end of July 1922 ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : The information is being obtained.

PROCEEDS FROM AUCTION SALE OF LIQUOR SHOPS.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District) : Will Government be pleased to state :—

(a) The amount for which toddy and other liquor shops have been auctioned for the current year in the Presidency ?

(b) The amount for which these shops had been auctioned during the year 1921-22 and 1920-21 ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : Information has been called for.

REVENUE DERIVED FROM COURT-FEE AND GENERAL STAMPS.

5. Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District) : Will the Government be pleased to state :—

(a) The revenue derived (i) from the sale of court-fee stamps, (ii) and from the sale of general stamps for the period from 1st April 1922 to the 15th of August 1922 ?

(b) What was the revenue from these sources for each of the corresponding periods of the last two years ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Information has been called for.

VILLAGE OFFICERS IN DHARWAR DISTRICT.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District) : Will the Government be pleased to state—

(a) The total number of (i) patels and (ii) kulkarnis in the Dharwar district ?

(b) The total number of talati kulkarnis and the total number of talati patels in the same district ?

(c) The total number of villages in the same district ?

(d) The total number of (i) revenue patels and (ii) of police patels in the same district ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Information has been called for.

CAUSEWAY OVER ASUNDI NALA.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District) : (a) Is the Government aware that the nala called the Asundi nala on the Haveri Guppal road causes great inconvenience to the public on account of want of a bridge or causeway over it ?

(b) Is it in the contemplation of Government to construct a bridge or causeway over it ?

(c) If so, when will the construction be taken in hand ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : (a) The Haveri Guppal road is not known. Perhaps the eastern section of the Havanur Yekkambi road is referred to the section from Haveri to Havanur, upon which is the village of Gutal. If so, then there is a nala still unbridged near Agadi.

(b) Yes.

(c) When funds become available.

SALARY OF THE HEAD CLERK OF DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT OF POLICE, KARACHI.

Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City): (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that Mr. Jeoosingh Hemansing, head clerk to the District Superintendent of Police, Karachi, was granted two advance increments by the Commissioner in Sind owing to which he was permitted to draw Rs. 135 instead of Rs. 125 per mensem ?

(b) Whether he drew his increased rate of pay from 20th July 1920 and Rs. 145 on 20th July 1921 ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : (a) and (b) The reply is in the affirmative.

(c) The reply is in the negative.

This is the question which I promised to answer the other day.

SIND RAILWAY POLICE.

Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City) : Are Government aware that the offices of the Superintendent of Police, Karachi and Sind Railways, have not been inspected since 1918 ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : It is a fact that the Deputy Inspector General of Police for Sind has not carried out a formal inspection of the two offices mentioned since 1918. Other work of exceptional urgency has interfered with the regular routine of inspection laid down by standing orders, and in the case of offices stationed at headquarters with which he is closely in touch, he can to a considerable extent satisfy himself of their efficiency without a detailed inspection. His attention has however been called to the matter.

This is the other question which I promised to answer the other day.

APPOINTMENT OF NOTARIES PUBLIC IN KARACHI.

* Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City) : Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) The number of notaries public in Karachi ?

(b) The number of cases referred to each of them every year during the last 5 years ?

(c) If any applications are invited for such appointments ?

(d) If any Hindu or a Mahomedan has ever been given this appointment during the last 20 years in Karachi ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: (a) and (b) A statement† is placed on the table.

(c) No.

(d) Several ex-officio. None non-official.

* This question was asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

† Vide Appendix M.

Mr. G. H. KASSIM: Will Government be pleased to state whether any Hindu or Mahomedan was in charge at any time?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: The reply is, several ex-officio None non-official.

Mr. G. H. KASSIM: I want to know whether any Hindus or Mahomedans were appointed.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: The answer is, several ex-officio Hindus and Mahomedans; no non-official Hindus and Mahomedans.

SUKKUR HIGH SCHOOL.

*Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether it is moved by the Sukkur municipality to take over the maintenance of the high school under the latter's control?

(b) If the answer is in the affirmative, what action does Government propose to take?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) Yes.

(b) Government do not propose to comply with the request of the municipality.

ASSISTANT CONSULTING ARCHITECT TO GOVERNMENT.

†Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City): (a) * * * *

(b) How many designs of architectural interest have been prepared by the Assistant Consulting Architect since his being posted to Karachi and how many have been approved of by Government?

(c) * * * * * * * * * * * *

(d) * * * * * * * * * * * *

(e) If yes, how much?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: (b) Twenty designs have been prepared by the Deputy Consulting Architect since his posting to Karachi, out of which four have been approved and the remaining are either under consideration or require certain details, which are awaited from the local officers.

(e) Rs. 61,918-11-0.

PUBLIC MOVEMENTS AND INAMDARS AND WATANDARS.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK (Deccan Sardars and Inamdars): Will Government be pleased to state:—

(a) The names of the inamdars or watandars who have been served with notices to show cause why their inams should not be resumed for taking part in some public movements?

(b) The action taken on these notices in each individual case.

(c) The specific charges against each of them for which the notices were issued or the reports on which the Government proceeded and the names and designations of the persons making the reports?

(d) Whether any regular inquiry was made in each case and whether any opportunity was given to submit explanations about the charges

*This question was asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

†This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given. Vide page 463, Vol. VI.

levelled against them or to explain their conduct, and also to cross-examine the witnesses who deposed against them, or whether the decision of Government was based merely on the reports received ?

(e) The explanations given by any of the persons on the charges if communicated to them, or whether the charges were not communicated to them at all ?

(f) If any persons against whom such notices have been issued hold any offices or are members of the local self-government bodies, or are serving on any other semi-government bodies like the co-operative societies or agricultural associations ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Government will be glad to give any information reasonably required in respect of any specific instance, but cannot undertake to prepare general statements of the nature indicated in the question.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK: Are there several cases ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : There are several such cases.

RESUMPTION OF INAMS.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK (Deccan Sardars and Inamdars): Will Government be pleased to place on the table all the correspondence in connection with the resumption of inams for taking part in any of the current public movements ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Confidential correspondence cannot, in the public interests, be placed on the table.

SURVEY SETTLEMENTS IN ALIENATED VILLAGES.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK (Deccan Sardars and Inamdars) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state the number of alienated villages in each district or in each Division, which are due for the first or second revision settlement, but in which such settlements have not been introduced although the talukas in which they are situated are settled ?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state the number of alienated villages in each district or in each division, the holders of which have applied for such introduction of the survey settlements, but in which the settlement is not yet introduced ?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state when they intend to take up the work of survey settlements in alienated villages stated in questions (a) and (b), which is due for a long time ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA :

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| (a) Northern Division | .. | .. | Nil. |
| Central Division | .. | .. | 145 |
| Southern Division | .. | .. | 11 |

(b) No application for revision settlement to be introduced into villages in which it is due is necessary. But so far as can be ascertained, five inamdars of five of the villages included in the answer to the preceding clause have pressed for the introduction of the revision settlement in their villages.

(c) As soon as the Legislative Council passes the grant for the field party establishment which they cut out of the budget for the current year.

* This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

EDUCATION OF THE DEAF AND THE DUMB.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK (Deccan Sardars and Inamdars): Will Government be pleased to state :—

(a) Whether there are any special facilities provided for by Government for the education of the deaf and the dumb in this Presidency ?

(b) Whether there are any facilities for training teachers (either private persons by way of scholarships or for teachers in Government service in this special line ?

(c) If no facilities are available for the instruction, what steps do Government intend to take in this matter ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a), (b) and (c) The whole question of the education of defectives was referred to a special committee in October 1917. The committee's report was considered and orders issued thereon in February 1920. These orders sanctioned inter alia a special allotment of Rs. 12,620 in the budget for the education of defectives of which a portion was intended for the training of teachers. Owing to financial stringency the provision has been reduced by Rs. 10,000 in the current year, and further steps to improve facilities for the education of defectives must be postponed till the financial situation improves.

TRAVELLING ALLOWANCE DRAWN BY CERTAIN OFFICERS IN POLICE DEPARTMENT.

*Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Will the Government give separately the actual figures of the travelling allowance drawn in the Police Department by—

(a) The District Superintendents of Police and their establishments,
(b) The Assistant Superintendents of Police,
(c) The Inspectors,
(d) The Sub-Inspectors, and at what rates for railway-fare and daily allowance, during the last 10 months ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Separate figures for the various classes mentioned are not available, and could only be collected at an expense of labour and cost not commensurate with their utility. A statement† of the various rates is laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF AHMEDABAD-KUHA ROAD.

Mr. B. P. PATEL (Ahmedabad District): Will Government be pleased to state why the amount collected for the construction of the Ahmedabad-Kuha road by levying certain amounts from khatedars is lying useless in the Government treasury since long and when will it be taken in hand ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Information has been called for.

VILLAGE CHORAS IN KAIRA DISTRICT.

Mr. J. B. PATEL (Kaira District): Will Government be pleased to inform this Council :—

(a) How many village choras in Kaira district are in a dilapidated condition ?

---

* This question was asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

† Vide Appendix N.

(b) Do Government intend to repair them ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Information will be called for.

CODE PAY TO VERNACULAR PRIMARY SCHOOL TEACHERS.

Mr. J. B. PATEL (Kaira District) : Will Government be pleased to inform this Council :—

(a) When do Government intend to give the code pay to the teachers in the vernacular primary schools under the last year's scheme of the Honourable Dr. R. P. Paranjpye, the Minister in charge of Education ?

(b) Do Government intend to take the previous services of the first and second year men who have passed the third year's examination after serving Government for some years as teachers in Educational Department ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : Both the questions are under consideration.

TRAVELLERS' AND INSPECTION BUNGALOWS.

*Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA on behalf of Mr. JEHANGIR B. PETIT (Bombay Millowners' Association) : Are Government aware that travellers' and inspection bungalows, one after another, are often used by Government servants on leave, for different periods, thus enabling individual officers on leave to enjoy a continuous holiday in Government properties without paying for them, often to the exclusion of the public in the case of travellers' bungalows and to the inconvenience of Government officers on duty in the case of inspection bungalows ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Government are not aware of any instances of the nature referred to. When travellers' and inspection bungalows are occupied by Government servants on leave, which is very rare, the position of the occupant is merely that of a member of the general public. The usual occupation fees are paid, the period of occupation is restricted by the rules governing their occupation and in the case of inspection bungalows care is taken to cause no inconvenience to Government officers travelling on duty.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Have you authority to ask questions on behalf of the honourable member (Mr. J. B. Petit) ?

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA : The honourable member, Mr. Jehangir B. Petit, has telephoned to me to ask the questions in his behalf.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : You ought to have obtained permission of the Chair first.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA : I regret the omission, Sir.

SUITS IN THE FIRST CLASS SUB-JUDGE'S COURT OF SHOLAPUR.

†Mr. R. G. SALGAR (Sholapur City) : (a) How many suits have been filed in the first class sub-judge's court at Sholapur in the last two years ?

(b) How many of them retained by the first class sub-judge's court and how many are transferred to the joint sub-judge's court ?

* This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

† This question was asked at the meeting held in February 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

(c) How many of them have been either compromised or withdrawn in both the courts ?

(d) How many have been tried on merits and decided by both the Courts and how many are still pending ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: A statement* is laid on the table.

PROSECUTION OF TONGA DRIVERS IN SHOLAPUR.

†Mr. R. G. SALGAR (Sholapur City): Will Government be pleased to state how many proceedings were launched against the licensed tonga drivers in the Sholapur city for having allowed more passengers to sit than they are authorised by their licenses in the year 1921-22 ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: 137 from 1st July 1921 to 30th June 1922.

PROSECUTION OF RAILWAY SERVANTS.

†Mr. R. G. SALGAR (Sholapur City): Will Government be pleased to state whether any responsible railway servants have been prosecuted during the last ten years in this Presidency for allowing more passengers in railway compartments than the fixed number authorised ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: With the exception of the G. I. P. Railway, no responsible servants of any other railway administration in this Presidency were prosecuted during the last ten years for allowing more passengers in railway compartments than the fixed number authorised.

The Agent, G. I. P. Railway Company, reports that information cannot be given for the last ten years, as records for three years only are available. The Agent states that during the period 1919—22 there has been one instance of the nature mentioned in the Bombay Presidency. In this case one Mr. Javadekar filed a suit against the Railway Company and a guard for damages amounting to Rs. 5 on account of the annoyance and inconvenience he alleged to have suffered as a result of the compartment in which he was travelling from Chalisgaon to Dhulia on 25th March 1919 being overcrowded. The case was dismissed, a decree being passed that each party should bear its own costs.

SALE OF LIQUOR IN POONA.

†Mr. R. G. SALGAR (Sholapur City): Will Government be pleased to state whether the sale of country liquor in Poona city has decreased and the sale of foreign liquor increased ? If so, can Government give any reason for it ? What are the sales of country and foreign liquor in April, May and June 1922 in Poona city ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Sale of country liquor decreased greatly in 1921 owing to picketing. It has now recovered but is still lower than in 1920. The sale of foreign liquor has increased to a small extent.

Figures for April, May and June 1922 are shown below :—

| 1922. | Foreign liquor. L.P.G. | Country liquor. L.P.G. |
|---|---|---|
| April .. .. | 308 | 1,694 |
| May .. .. | 400 | 2,294 |
| June .. .. | 391 | 2,384 |

* Vide Appendix O.

† This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

TODDY IN SHOLAPUR.

*Mr. R. G. SALGAR (Sholapur City): Will Government be pleased to state :—

(a) Since how many years Messrs. Boyce and Company have been working as toddy contractors in Sholapur city ?

(b) How many toddy trees within a short distance from the Sholapur city have been purchased by the said company or taken on lease from the owners and for what period ?

(c) Is it a fact that no bidder dares to bid for want of trees ?

(d) How many toddy trees were tapped in 1920-21 and 1921-22 for Sholapur in each month and what income did the Government derive from the license fee and tree-tax for the above period by month ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : (a) 1909-10.

(b) The number of trees purchased and taken on lease is 6,000 and 13,000 respectively. The period of lease is 20 to 30 years.

(c) It is not correct that no bidder dares to bid for want of trees. There are plenty of trees available, though not so well situated as those belonging to Messrs. Boyce and Company. At the last auction several men bid, but they did not go very high.

(d) A statement† containing the requisite information is laid on the Council table.

APPLICATIONS FROM SHANBHOGS OF KANARA DISTRICT.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North) : (a) Has Government received applications from the Shanbhogs of the Kanara district (individually) who are served with notices dispensing with their services from 30th September 1922 ?

(b) If the answer to the above be in the affirmative, what action do Government propose to take on it ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : (a) Yes.

(b) Government have not considered the petitioners' request and are awaiting receipt of copies of the applications submitted through the proper official channel.

Mr. A. N. SURVE : I wish to know whether these talatis were dismissed from service before the expiry of notice.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : I require notice of that question.

ORDER REGARDING STRIKER SHANBHOGS.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North) : (a) Is it true that the Collector of Kanara and the prant officer, Rao Bahadur S. S. Koimattur, either orally or in writing had given the striker shanbhogs to understand through Mr. Nadig, mamlatdar of Kumta, that the order entailing loss of service and grade will not be enforced ?

(b) Were these shanbhogs given their pay until March 1922 under the revised scale without taking into account the loss of service and grade they had incurred at the time of resuming the service after the strike ?

* This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

† Vide Appendix P.

(c) Has there been a want of uniformity of treatment in the case of striker talatis of the Southern Division on the one hand and Northern Division and Central Division on the other hand ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Information will be called for.

NUMBER OF CASES DISPOSED OF BY RENT CONTROLLER.

Mr. KANJI DWARKADAS on behalf of Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: Will Government be pleased to place on the table a statement showing the total number of cases disposed of by the Rent Controller, together with a summary giving the number of cases in which the decisions of the Rent Controller and/or his committee were in favour of—

(a) the tenant,

(b) the landlord ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: Information is being obtained.

PREPARATION OF THE ELECTORAL ROLLS.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Will Government be pleased to say when the preparation of the electoral rolls for the next Council election will be taken in hand ?

(b) What steps do they propose to take to make it widely known to the public at large ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: (a) The preparation of the new rolls will be taken in hand next year.

(b) The Director of Information will be instructed to give the matter due publicity in the press and otherwise.

PRIVATE PRACTICE TO CONSULTING ARCHITECT TO GOVERNMENT.

* Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Will Government be pleased to state if the Government Consulting Architect or his assistants are allowed private practice ?

(b) If so, will they be pleased to state the amount of fees received by them from such practice as compared to their salaries during the last five years ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN:

(a) * * * *

(b) The necessary information is embodied in the attached statement.†

GRANTS TO EUROPEAN SCHOOLS.

‡ Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): What amount was spent in European Schools in 1919 and 1920-21 as (a) boarding grants and (b) as the payments for (1) orphans and destitute children, and (2) children of the poor, (c) how many schools took advantage of this and which were they, (d) what was the number of children of class (1) and (2) in each of the two years ?

(e) Are similar grants available in non-European schools ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Parts (a) to (d) The information is given in the statements § which are laid on the table.

(e) This has already been answered.

---

* This question was asked at the meeting held in September 1921, when an ad interim reply was given.

NOMINATION OF DEPRESSED CLASSES ON LOCAL BOARDS.

*Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Will Government be pleased to state :—

(a) If the Depressed Classes Mission Society, Poona, was being consulted for the last three years in the matter of nomination of the depressed classes people on the local bodies in the Deccan and Karnatic ?

(b) If the reply be in the affirmative, were the recommendations of the society accepted by Government ?

(c) Did any recommendation from the society reach Government in 1922 with regard to nomination on the Poona municipality ?

(d) If so, was it accepted ?

(e) If not, why not ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: (a) It was not consulted, but its recommendations, like those of any other public body, were duly considered when made.

(b) Its recommendations were accepted in making nominations to the municipal boards of Poona city, Satara, Ahmednagar, Dharwar and Hubli and to the taluka local board, Hubli.

(c) The name of a Mahar clerk in the Collector's office was recommended to the Commissioner who makes these nominations.

(d) No.

(e) All the persons nominated by the Commissioner were non-officials and he considered that the interests of the depressed classes would be better safeguarded in the municipality by the other gentlemen who were nominated.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: The right that was given to the depressed classes to have one of their community nominated on the Poona municipality was not exercised this time. Formerly it was exercised. What are the reasons ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: The reasons are that if a non-official is recommended, and the Government considers that he is an eligible man belonging to the depressed classes, Government would very gladly nominate him.

WELL BORING MACHINES.

*Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Will Government be pleased to state how many applications for well boring machines were received from (1) agriculturists and (2) from private owners of bungalows in the Thana district during the last three years ? How many of these were attended to and in what places, and how many of them were of class 1 and how many of class 2 ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: During the last three years 168 applications were received as under :—

|---|---|---|
| (1) Agriculturists | .. .. | 112 |
| (2) Private owners of bungalows | .. .. | 56 |
| | | 168 |

*This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

Sixty-eight applications were attended to, viz., 18 for drinking purposes of private owners of bungalows and 50 for agricultural purposes, vide statement* attached.

SURU PLANTATION IN THANA.

† Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District) : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state when the Suru (casuarina) plantation on the sea coast in Thana district was undertaken ?

(b) What is the total amount spent on it up to now ?

(c) What are the annual establishment and other charges ?

(d) What is its specific object ?

(e) What is the area of grazing land occupied by the plantation ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : (a) Some of the plantations were started as far back as 1894 in Dahanu and Umbergaon talukas. The extension of these plantations began about seven years ago.

(b) The total amount spent up to 28th February 1922 is Rs. 32,026-4-0.

(c) The charge in the current year will come to Rs. 2,200 and in future years to Rs. 1,200 per annum if no extension is undertaken.

(d) Plantation on sandy land of trees yielding profit and erection of a screen to prevent sand from blowing over cultivated land and rendering it less fertile. A subsidiary object is provision of shade and camping grounds.

(e) 194 acres.

BUNGALOWS RENTED BY DEVELOPMENT DEPARTMENT.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District) : With reference to my question‡ on this subject asked at the second session of 1922, will Government be pleased to state—

(a) What were Government's reasons for not taking advantage of the Rent Act in settling the rents of the three bungalows rented by the Development Department ?

(b) What steps were taken to ascertain whether suitable bungalows were available near the railway stations between Bandra and Andheri ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD : (a) As Government were not in possession of the bungalows they were not in a position to take advantage of the Act.

(b) Most careful enquiries were made, but it was not found possible to obtain other suitable bungalows.

UMRETH MUNICIPALITY.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District) : With reference to my question‡ on this subject asked at the second session of 1922, will Government be pleased to state—

(a) The part that the mamlatdar of Anand played at the meeting of the Umreth municipality that was convened to elect the president ?

(b) Did he threaten to bring in police to arrest a member ?

(c) If so, what steps have Government taken to mark their disapproval of the conduct of the mamlatdar ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : (a) When at the meeting Mr. Chunilal Rasiklal assumed chairmanship without proper election, confusion ensued, and as there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace the mamlatdar requested Mr. Chunilal to stop further proceedings. Mr. Chunilal ignored this request and began to write something in the proceedings book. The mamlatdar therefore called in the police sub-inspector to preserve order.

(b) and (c) No.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : Is it usual to call in a police inspector to preserve order in a municipal meeting ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That is debating. The answer implies it is usual to call in when a breach of the peace is feared. It is pure waste of time to ask that question.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : In a municipal meeting ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Anywhere.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : Was there any disorder at the municipal meeting ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Order, order.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : I was suggesting there was no occasion.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : You are not by a supplementary question to raise a debate in the form of questions by making suggestions. The answer already given is that the Chairman Mr. Chunilal Rasiklal began to do something which, in the opinion of the mamlatdar, was illegal, and calculated to disturb order of the peace, and therefore the policeman was called in. The answer is clear and you may ask any supplementary question arising out of that instead of suggesting anything.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : Therefore, I ask my question, what was the strength of this municipal board ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That does not arise out of the question and the answer. A supplementary question must arise out of the question, and if answered, out of the answer. Here you merely refer to Mr. Chunilal Rasiklal and the mamlatdar. Now you go to the question of other members of the board, their strength and so on. That is not a supplementary question. I do not know where you will end.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : Was there a breach of the peace at this municipal meeting ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Mr. Trivedi, I am sorry that you do not take my hint. The answer given shows there was in the opinion of the mamlatdar.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : If Government do not give information, what can I do?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I have nothing to do with the question whether the Government's reply is satisfactory or not. Your question is : " Was there a breach of the peace ?" I have already called your attention to the suggestion in the answer, that the chairman did something which the mamlatdar thought was calculated to provoke a breach of the peace and that therefore the police inspector was called in. Now, that ought to suffice for your purpose to raise a debate if you like, but in the form of questions and answers you cannot go into an argument, and I hope, Mr. Trivedi, you will respond to my appeal not to raise an argument but to make use of the answers in a debate on some proper occasion, as for instance on the budget debate.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : Does Government consider writing in the proceedings book by the president a disorderly conduct ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHIAKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: When he is not properly elected.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. That is a matter of opinion.

SUBSIDY TO THE DISTRICT LOCAL BOARD, THANA.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they have granted the request of the district local board, Thana, contained in their representation dated 26th June 1922 for a subsidy of Rs. 5,600 as prayed for in paragraph 20 of the representation ?

(b) If not, what are their reasons for rejecting that request ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: (a) The request has not been granted.

(b) The claim was based on a misunderstanding of the provisions of the Bombay Tolls Act of 1875.

NON-OFFICIAL VISITORS' COMMITTEE FOR THE COMMON PRISON AND HOUSE OF CORRECTION, BOMBAY.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Will Government be pleased to state their reasons for making distinction in the matter of applying the terms Mr. and Esqr. to the names of Indian and European members of the non-official visitors' committee appointed in connection with His Majesty's Common Prison and House of Correction, Bombay, as per their Resolution No. 1100-D, Home Department ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: The variation was due to a clerical error which will be corrected in future notifications.

INDIAN NEWS AGENCY.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Will Government be pleased to state (a) who are the proprietors of the Indian News Agency ? (b) What is the total annual amount paid to that Agency by Government for the last three years, as also the amount budgeted for this year ? (c) Is the amount paid in one lump sum or is it paid in different sums by different departments; if so, will Government be pleased to give details ? (d) What is the nature of the service done by the Agency to different departments ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: (a) The Eastern News Agency, Limited, Delhi.

| | | Rs. |
|---|---|---|
| (b) | 1919-20 .. .. | 1,800 |
| | 1920-21 .. .. | 2,000 |
| | 1921-22 .. .. | 3,000 |
| | 1922-23 .. .. | 3,000 |

(c) Government subscribe for eight copies of Indian News Agency telegrams. The minimum amount of subscription is Rs. 250 per mensem for 8 copies and is paid in equal proportion from the contingent grants of the officers concerned.

(d) Copies of the telegrams are supplied to the officers concerned to give them immediate news of the occurrence of events of importance and to enable them to contradict false and malicious rumours.

NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Will Government be pleased to state what newspapers were subscribed to and how many copies thereof, out of the amount of Rs. 2,400 provided for this purpose under contingencies in the Separate Department last year?

The Honourable Mr. LAWRENCE: A statement* is laid on the Council table.

TIMBER FOR DEVELOPMENT DEPARTMENT.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the Bombay Development Directorate had indented for a very large quantity of timber from the Pacific coast through a local European firm?

(b) If so, what was the quantity so ordered and what was the price c. i. f. Bombay?

(c) Before the timber was so indented what attempt was made to find out whether timber of any local varieties suitable for the purpose was available in India proper and Burma?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: (a) Twelve hundred tons of Oregon pine timber were so ordered.

(b) The quantity was as stated and its value c. i. f. Bombay was about Rs. 1,64,500.

(c) Attempts were made to get suitable local timber but that forthcoming was found entirely unsuitable.

BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE OF LIBERALS.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether the Indian Members of the Council of the Bombay Government had sought and obtained permission to participate in the deliberations of the Bombay Provincial Conference of Liberals held in Bombay early in May last?

(b) If so, under what rules was such permission given?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: A reference is requested to the reply given to clause (a) of Mr. Gupte's question on the subject at the last meeting.

PURCHASE OF SAFES BY GOVERNMENT.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) With reference to the statement made by the Finance Member on Tuesday, the 31st July last, in the Bombay Legislative Council, with regard to the purchase of the safes manufactured by Messrs. Godrej and Boyce, will Government be pleased to lay the circulars issued by them in the matter on the table of the Council?

(b) Is it not a fact that some orders for safes have since been placed with Messrs. Godrej and Boyce?

(c) Is it not a fact that the donation by this firm to the Tilak Swaraj Fund was ear-marked for the work of amelioration of depressed classes and temperance work?

(d) Have Government placed any other Indian safe manufacturer on their list of suppliers, in place of Messrs. Godrej and Boyce?

* Vide appendix T.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: (a) The circulars referred to were confidential.

(b) Government have no information to this effect.

(c) Government have not seen any published accounts of the Tilak Swaraj Fund and are therefore unable to form an opinion.

(d) There is no such list, but no orders have been issued prohibiting dealings with any other Indian firm of safe manufacturers.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: Will not Government get the information asked for in my question (c) from the source that supplied Government the information that this firm had given a donation ?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: I have nothing to add to the answer.

EDUCATIONAL SCHEME.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Will Government be pleased to lay on the Council table the scheme which the Education Minister, while speaking at the Deccan Sabha, Poona, on June 23rd, 1921, said he had prepared, and " which would make it worth while of the school master to use his personal influence with the guardians of the pupils and persuade them to continue him there " ?

(b) Will they also state in how many places it has been put into force, and (c) with what results ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The scheme was referred to the departmental officers as stated in the speech and after considering their criticisms the general lines on which it should proceed have been settled but the details have still to be worked out. No provision for it exists in the current year's budget.

VERNACULAR LITERATURE FOR ADVANCED STUDY.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Will Government be pleased to state what steps if any they have taken for " an adequate supply of literature in the vernaculars which can be used for fairly advanced study " to which the Education Minister referred in his speech at the Deccan Sabha on June 23rd, 1921 ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: A detailed scheme was drawn up, and a provision of Rs. 25,000 was proposed to be made in the current year's budget, but owing to the imperative need for economy the provision had to be omitted.

POONA MUNICIPALITY'S ADDRESS TO HAKIM AJMAL KHAN AND PANDIT MOTILAL NEHRU.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Is it not a fact that the sum of Rs. 500 unanimously voted by the Poona city municipality for expenses in connection with the presentation of an address to Hakim Ajmal Khan and Pandit Motilal Nehru in the third week of July last was disallowed by the Commissioner ?

(b) If so, what were the grounds on which his disallowance was based ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: The information is being obtained.

POONA MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Are Government aware of the fact that an application to the Superintendent in charge Yeravda Jail asking him to allow Dr. V. D. Pathak undergoing imprisonment in the jail to sign his nomination paper in connection with his candidature for a Poona municipal election was refused ?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to state the grounds for the Jail Superintendent's action ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Yes.

The correspondence of prisoners is restricted to matters of a purely private and personal character.

SALARIES OF MUNICIPAL SCHOOL TEACHERS.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether their attention has been drawn to the complaints of the municipal school teachers of Dholera, Dhandhuka and Borsad municipalities that they have not received their salaries for several months ?

(b) Were other municipal servants paid regularly ?

(c) What steps have been taken to ensure regular payments to all servants by these municipalities ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) Yes.

(b) and (c) Enquiries are being made.

QUALIFICATION OF ASSISTANT TAXING MASTER.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the legal and educational qualifications of the present Assistant Taxing Master in the Bombay High Court ?

(b) Who were his predecessors in the past during the last 10 years and what were their qualifications ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Information is being obtained.

REVENUE FROM PRIVATE FORESTS WORKED BY GOVERNMENT.

Rao Bahadur D. A. VICHARE (Ratnagiri District): (a) Will Government be pleased to say whether the private forests worked by Government under an agreement between the inamdar or landlords and Forest Department are paying any net revenue or working at a loss ?

(b) Is there any definite object in retaining such unassessed forest area under Government if it does not fetch a net income less than an average land assessment in the vicinity ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Information has been called for.

SERVICES OF "FASHE PARADHI".

2. Rao Bahadur D. A. VICHARE (Ratnagiri District): Will Government be pleased to say whether the Agricultural Department has taken any step to utilise the services of "Fashe Paradhi" and to kill pigs and wild animals which are doing havoc to crops in the Ratnagiri district ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: No. Government are awaiting the report of the committee they have appointed to consider the means of dealing with wild animals damaging crops.

NEGLECT TO INSPECT BANDHARAS AND NATURAL DRAINAGE.

Rao Bahadur D. A. VICHARE (Ratnagiri District): Will Government be pleased to say whether the Agricultural Department has collected any data to show how many acres of good land has been washed away on account of neglecting the inspection of bandharas and natural drainages and to suggest means to check this loss in Ratnagiri district ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : Information has been called for.

INSTRUCTIONS TO PREPARE MANURES.

Rao Bahadur D. A. VICHARE (Ratnagiri District): Will Government be pleased to say whether the Agricultural Department has adopted any means to instruct villagers to prepare locally green manures, carbonised manures, dung and urine manures and some such local manures of local utility ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : The Agricultural Department spreads information regarding manures by means of its propaganda staff and through leaflets and demonstrations.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF PLANTATION OF VALUABLE TIMBER.

Rao Bahadur D. A. VICHARE (Ratnagiri District): (a) Will Government be pleased to say whether the Agricultural Department has, with the help of the Co-operative Department, encouraged the plantation of valuable timber trees, oil seed trees, etc., as well as converting varkas land into rice fields with a view to assess such lands and increase the revenue of Government ?

(b) Will Government be pleased to say whether the Agricultural and Co-operative Departments have tried to utilise the services of presidents of district local boards and taluka local boards to organise such works ?

(c) If not, do they intend to try it as an experiment in a taluka, with a view to encourage local enterprises ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : The answer to clauses (a), (b) and (c) is in the negative.

AGES OF STUDENTS IN PROFESSIONAL COLLEGES.

Rao Bahadur D. A. VICHARE (Ratnagiri District): Will Government be pleased to say whether the ages of students admitted to professional colleges are verified from some reliable documents, or were assumed as true from the applicants' statements ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : Inquiries are being made.

QUALIFICATION OF MR. KANITKAR WHILE ADMITTED IN ENGINEERING COLLEGE.

Rao Bahadur D. A. VICHARE (Ratnagiri District): (a) Will Government be pleased to say what was the qualification of Mr. Kanitkar, the son of Principal Kanitkar of the Fergusson College, when he was allowed admission in the Engineering College ?

(b) What was the number of marks he received in the First Year Arts and in what year he passed this test ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) and (b) Mr. Kanitkar passed the First Year Arts examination with an average of 78 per cent. marks in Mathematics and Physics and was in the opinion of the Principal of the College the best qualified student admitted to the Mechanical Engineering branch of the college in recent years.

ASSESSED AND UNASSESSED AREA IN RATNAGIRI DISTRICT.

Rao Bahadur D. A. VICHARE (Ratnagiri District): Will Government be pleased to lay on the table the area of the Ratnagiri district under the following sub-heads:—

(a) Rabi and Bagait area assessed;
(b) Kharip area assessed;
(c) Unassessed culturable area;
(d) Unassessed unculturable area;
(e) Waste or kharaba area;
(f) Forest area;
(g) Unassessed Government area?

Will Government be pleased to lay on table the average assessment of rabi and kharip per acre?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Information has been called for.

DONATION FROM WESTERN INDIA TURF CLUB.

9. Rao Bahadur D. A. VICHARE (Ratnagiri District): The annual report of Western India Turf Club for the year 1921 gives an item under expenditure, Donations, Government for horse breeding in India.

Will Government be pleased to say how this amount is credited?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: The Government of Bombay have not received and are not aware of any such donation.

Presentation of Petitions.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI (Bombay City, South): Sir, on behalf of the Land Holders' Association, Bombay, I beg to present their memorial in connection with the Rent Act.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You have to give a brief substance of the memorial in accordance with my ruling.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI: Sir, the Landlords' Association say that economically the Act is not sound. It causes great hardship to landlords, and, Sir, they urge that this Act will not encourage the building of new houses in the city as long as this Act remains. There will be always scarcity of houses, but if this Act is repealed, according to the principle of supply and demand things will come to an equal level. This is, Sir, the substance of the memorial. I request, Sir, on their behalf that the memorial may be placed on the table.

Petition ordered to be laid on the table.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI: Sir, on behalf of the Zoroastrian Association I request that their petition be placed on the table. This petition states that the association has got certain buildings on charitable and on some similar basis and in accordance with their rules they have entered into an arrangement with their tenants that when their conditions improve they should vacate the premises and make room for those who are really in need. Now since the passing of this Act a good many of their tenants who really ought to make room for people who are really in need have refused to vacate. The association have fought out the cases in the Small Causes Court and in the High Court who have refused them redress because the tenants take shelter under the Rent Act. For instance one tenant who used to get Rs. 20 when he occupied the premises is now getting Rs. 400, and still he does not vacate the premises. A suit was filed against him in the Court of Small Causes who refused to hear that suit. The case was then taken to the High Court who decided that under the Rent Act the tenant cannot be forced to vacate the premises. The association desires that all these facts stated in their petition should be taken into consideration.

Petition ordered to be laid on the table.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The importance of allowing these petitions to be placed on the table lies in the fact that they will be referred to the select committee if any select committee is appointed with reference to the Rent Act Amending Bill.

I am glad to inform the House that the committee appointed by me to report on the question of the Council Library has submitted its report and now I am taking action upon their recommendations. I have accepted almost all their suggestions and they will be printed and circulated amongst honourable members. In the meantime I have to announce that I have appointed the following Standing Library Committee :—

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. Hayward, Mr. M. A. Havelivala, Mr. B. G. Pahalajani, Mr. C. M. Gandhi, and Rao Bahadur G. K. Chitale and the Secretary to Legislative Council ex-officio.

The Chairman and the Secretary will be elected by the committee. I have not included the Deputy President in the committee for the special reason that in my absence he shall have to act as the controlling authority and I do not wish to place him in a position which may lead to conflict between the two duties.

LOCAL BOARDS BILL (BILL No. XVI of 1922).

(Further consideration of the first reading resumed.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: In accordance with the promise, I have to give my ruling on the points that were raised at the last sitting just before the adjournment.

As to the franchise clauses of the bill and the principle involved, first this bill as its Title shows, seeks to consolidate and amend the existing Act or Acts relating to local boards. As the rule is that the principle of a bill should be gathered from its title, and its purpose mentioned in the statement of objects and reasons the principle of this bill is the principle of the existing Act or Acts relating to local boards which this bill purports to amend. It follows that the franchise clauses in the existing Act or Acts relating to local boards are involved as much as the clauses of this bill in the discussion of its principle on the first reading. Secondly, several honourable members have discussed the question of those franchise clauses in the existing Act or Acts relating to the local boards as a matter of principle during the debate at this first reading, and have invited my ruling on the point. Therefore it is my duty to rule that if the Council adopts the first reading of this bill, the Council will have affirmed the principle and scope of the bill so as to include the whole question of the franchise clauses of the existing Act or Acts relating to local boards and leave that question to be dealt with by the select committee and subsequently by the Council when the bill comes to be read a second time.

This conclusion to which I have come is based on the ruling of Mr. Speaker in the House of Commons that in deciding the scope and principle of a bill as affirmed at its second reading in that House (equivalent to our first reading in this Council) the Chair both in the House itself and in a select committee should pay due regard to the Title of the bill, the conditions of the debate, the points raised at that reading and the suggestions then made and dealt with by Mr. Speaker.

Then there is the question of communal representation as regards which I have already ruled that it may be dealt with as a matter of detail in the select committee and afterwards at the second reading. But I should like to give a warning. Should this bill pass the first reading and a select committee be appointed it will be for the chairman of that committee, to have a firm hold on the point of order to which I now beg to draw the attention of this Council. That point relates to the principle of what is well known in the House of Commons as the rule of diminishing amendments. The rule of that principle is that it is not possible to defeat a bill by a series of diminishing proposals in the form of a series of amendments. Where a clause in a bill puts in general words, you cannot whittle those words away by a series of exceptions to them in the form of amendments. This bill as to local boards lays down a general electorate or a general rule in clause 6 and then makes one exception to it by constituting Mahomedans into a separate constituency. Whether any further exceptions can be made to that general rule after the first reading is a question over which the Chair has to exercise its discretion so as to see that the general rule does not become the exception and the exception becomes the general rule. That is what is called the principle of diminishing amendments; that is, having laid down a general rule, namely, a general electorate and grafted on it an exception such as that of a Mahomedan constituency, carved out of the general rule, you cannot go on carving out by means of further amendments a number of separate constituencies so as to reduce the general constituency or electorate to a shadow and make it illusory because that has the effect of negativing the main principles of the bill.

I am merely mentioning the general rule. It will be for the chairman of the select committee to consider and apply it if necessary in the first instance and afterwards for the Chair in this Council when the bill comes to be read a second time, with due regard to the scope and principle of the bill affirmed at the first reading.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI (Ahmedabad City): Sir, there are in this bill several provisions which, though of vital importance, are, in the way in which they have been put, objectionable. In the first place, I would refer to the question of franchise. The present Act gives franchise to the landed class, the propertied class, and also to the intelligentsia. The bill, however, only gives at present a franchise to the landed class either holding land with an assessable value of Rs. 8 for taluka local boards or Rs. 32 for district local boards, and the other franchise, which is provided for, is one which cannot immediately be exercised—I mean the payment of taxes imposed by the local board. So long, therefore, as the local boards do not impose any taxes, the propertied class would stand disfranchised and would not be in a position to exercise the franchise which they exercise at present. Of course, the inamdars, who enjoy the franchise under the present Act, are disfranchised as such, but they will continue to have the franchise under the general electorate. Consequently, they are not altogether disfranchised, whereas the propertied class has been altogether disfranchised. I have a serious objection to that part of the provisions in this bill.

Then, I would like to refer in this connection to one point referred to by the Honourable Minister. In his opening remarks he took credit for giving votes to women and also for qualifying them to be elected as members. The present Local Boards Act, however, did not disqualify women to vote. The Honourable Minister was under an impression that they were disqualified both to vote as well as to become members. But under section 11 of the present Local Boards Act, which relates only to disqualification for being elected as members, the disqualification is there for females. But under section 19 of the Local Boards Act, which refers to qualification to vote, there is no bar of sex, and over and above that, I would also make a reference to.....

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Will you please read out the sections? I contradict your statement.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI: Over and above the reference to sections 11 and 19, which the Honourable Minister wants me to read out, I would refer also to the note of Mr. Cumming in his Local Boards Manual. Section 19 runs thus:

"No person who is less than twenty-one years of age shall be entitled to have his name entered in the said List No. II."

Now, here the disqualification is with reference to the age, while in section 11, which refers only to the disqualification for membership, it is stated:

"No female and no person who is less than twenty-one years of age may be a member of a local board."

So two different disqualifications were provided for two different functions, and the note at page 31 of Mr. Cumming's Local Boards Manual says:

"Females are not qualified to be elected, but they are not disqualified as females from voting."

The disqualification of females in section 19 was struck out when the bill, which became an Act in 1884, was under discussion by the Legislative Council, and even under section 11 there is a note at page 18 in Cumming's Local Boards Manual, which reads:

"Females are not qualified to be elected but they are qualified to vote."

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Will you read section 10?

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI: Yes, I am quite ready to read it. Section 10 says:

"Unless disqualified on any of the grounds set forth in the next following section and unless disqualified under section 25 or section 25-A or under any other law for the time being in force, the following persons shall be entitled to have their names entered in the List No. I, to be prepared as hereinafter provided, qualifying them to be elected under section 6."

and so on. So this refers to persons who are to be brought under the list as being qualified to be elected as members. But section 19 only provides for disqualification to vote, and I know as the vice-president of the Ahmedabad district local board and also with reference to the other local boards whose voting lists I have seen, that both in municipalities and local boards women do possess the right to vote, and it was the late Council which passed a resolution for removing the sex bar to become members in the case of women as regards the Bombay corporation. The resolution was moved by the honourable member from Bijapur and it was passed by this House. Consequently, with reference to this I state that women did enjoy the right to vote all along, and of course the Honourable Minister has the credit of removing the sex bar to their being members in the present bill.

Now, with reference to constituencies, the question of communal constituencies is one which I regard as very objectionable. I believe that in these days there should be a movement towards solidarity rather than towards any cleavage between the two communities. If there is a clashing of interests between any particular sections, then there may be some justification for providing for a communal electorate, but, as all the honourable members do know, the functions of a local board mainly relate to roads and buildings, and as regards education separate provision is being made and with reference to roads, if a road is in bad repair, then whether one is a Mahomedan or a non-Mahomedan, he is likely to be equally affected. So also in the case of buildings. When the bill provides for a school board and separate administration with reference to education, it may be said that there is no likelihood of any clashing of interests. When that division is made, then what remains is what appertains, according to the provisions of this bill, to the administration of the local board proper. There is no likelihood of any clashing of interests, and so far as my experience goes with reference to the Ahmedabad collectorate, I can say that I have not noticed any clashing of interests between the two communities.

In 1915, as the honourable members are aware, there was the Lawrence Committee appointed and that committee reported on its investigations. With reference to the report of that committee, there was a dissenting minute by Rao Bahadur Sathe and Mr. V. J. Patel and several official witnesses were examined with reference to the question of communal electorates.

(At this stage the Honourable the President withdrew and Dr. K. E. Dadachanji occupied the chair.)

This dissenting minute, which appears on page 35 of that report, reads :—

> Out of the witnesses, official and non-official, consulted, very few favour the principle of communal representation. It is at the same time significant to note that almost all the Collectors and all Assistant Collectors of the Presidency proper have emphatically expressed their opinion against communal representation. These officers are in constant touch with the people of their districts and are eminently fitted from their positions to know the needs and requirements of the public living in their districts. The unanimous opinion of such officers is entitled to great weight and the committee was not justified in setting aside such a strong body of official opinion which is not open to the usual criticism of being biassed or one-sided. Government have also perceived the impracticability of arranging to give separate representation to different creeds and communities, vide G. L. No. 7273, G. D., dated 10th October 1913. The situation has not certainly changed since then. A similar view has been expressed by Government of Bombay in their letter to Government of India No. 1768, G. D. date 26th March 1908, paragraphs 13 and 22. The goal must be to link different races of India in bonds of union and brotherhood, and Government, at any rate, should not take any step or adopt a system which will crystallise and accentuate the sectional and sectarian differences which already tend to retard progress in this great country. Moreover, election by communities demoralises the people and necessarily makes their vision narrow.

(At this stage the Honourable the President resumed the chair.)

[Rao Saheb Harilal D. Desai]

They also refer with approval to the remarks of His Excellency Lord Hardinge in a speech which he delivered in his reply to the Muslim League which waited upon him. Even in Government of India Resolution No. 41 dated 16th May 1918, in paragraph 5, they make reference to this subject and they say :

"As regards the special representation of minorities where this is necessary, the Government of India would prefer that this should be effected by retaining the practice of nomination rather than by introducing some system of communal or proportional representation."

This was the opinion which was expressed by the Government of India in 1918 and I venture to say that even if we examine the question from the standpoint of there being a cleavage between the two communities, what is the effect of a separate communal representation if there is a cleavage ? This separately represented community would, being in a minority, always continue to be so but if both the communities were understanding each other and trying to help each other's needs without there being any communal representation, there would not be any further cleavage, which may be regarded as very fortunate.

The third subject with which the present bill deals is the administrative machinery. With reference to that, the present Act provides for district local boards as well as the taluka local boards. This question was investigated by the Government of Bombay. In 1917 a memorandum was addressed by Mr. Martin to the district local boards as well as to the Commissioners and the reference was :—

"As regards taluka boards, the chief issue is whether these are required at all or not, especially if punchayats are established. It is pointed out that their disappearance would be facilitated by or necessitate an increased number of members of the district boards and that these larger boards would have to work largely through a standing committee."

And in the printed note which was circulated on this subject for opinion and to which I know Sir George Curtis was a party, he felt keenly that these taluka local boards were a stumbling block to the proper administration of the district by the district local boards. There certain alternative systems were considered and the alternatives are :—

(1) The abolition of taluka local boards and the concentration of such powers as cannot be given to punchayats in the district boards as in the United Provinces and the Punjab and also to a large extent in practice in Bengal and Bihar and Orissa.

(2) Abolition of the district local boards, and the performance of local self-government work through sub-district or taluka boards, and

(3) The Madras system of the district and sub-district boards, the latter having separate revenues and independent duties.

Then with reference to the taluka local boards, there is a certain passage which is very important :—

The first system, namely, the abolition of the taluka board, in which the taluka boards would disappear, would seem feasible in the conditions of this Presidency only if accompanied by a large increase in numbers in the district board, with taluka committees made up mainly of the local members of the board and a standing committee vested with considerable powers. The area to be covered makes it impossible for members to be in touch with the tracts or populations they represent or to know and put forward their wants and claims if the board is not considerably larger than at present. Still less is it possible to supervise or check work going on or get any work done if each member has, as his constituency, an area at all approaching that of the taluka—the present constituency of a district board member. Further the geographical factor and in some districts difficulties of communication make it impossible for the full district board to meet frequently or to dispose without delay of the many questions and the considerable routine business which must arise in the large area and wide sphere of work for which the board would be responsible. A small standing committee for this purpose would seem necessary.

A district of eight talukas might have a membership of 60 of whom 40 would be elected and 20 nominated. This would permit of taluka committees of a strength of 5 to 7 district board members, to whom at least one ex-officio member, the mamlatdar, should be added. The full district board would probably meet as at present two, three or at most four times a year, but a standing committee of say 12 members might meet once a month or as often as required.

Then we have the functions. There are a few lines which I will read :—

The taluka committee would be an inspecting and supervising rather than an administrative body. It would watch the working of local board institutions or the execution of works in its area, put forward the claims of the taluka when budgets are being prepared and generally represent its wants. The dual functions of member of the district council and of the taluka committee would, it is possible, attract the best material to the boards and invest the position with an importance and interest supposed to be lacking in the present taluka boards.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I am afraid the honourable member, instead of giving his own views, is reading long quotations from other people's reports.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI : I have ventured to quote from this simply because it was a memorandum issued by Government.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I dare say it is a valuable document, but reading long quotations is not in order.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI : Then, Sir, it was also urged that the disappearance of the taluka local boards would avoid duplication of staff overlapping of functions and unnecessary expense. At present, if we retain both the district local boards as well as the taluka local boards, a staff more than at present would be necessary for the taluka local boards. At present they retain a clerk, and there have been complaints that one clerk is not enough. Under the present bill, it may be that every taluka board may have to retain a secretary, and even under the present system perhaps each taluka board spends about Rs. 2,000 a year on the staff. With the increase of the number of members and the payment of travelling allowances to members, one can imagine what it would cost if we were to have an enlarged district local board, and, at the same time taluka local boards. I therefore submit that with the district local board constituted on a basis of representation according to population, and with the formation of taluka committees from among the members of the district local board residing within the taluka, whether elected or nominated, there would be the necessary element for the purpose of giving information to the district board and at the same time to supervise its work in the taluka, and duplication of expense, machinery and staff would be avoided. That is most desirable in the present state of the resources of the local boards.

Then, Sir, the third subject is with reference to the duties of the boards. One of the provisions in the bill lays it down to be the obligatory duty of the district local board to make adequate provision for certain things. When the District Local Boards Act of 1884 as well as the Municipal Act of 1884, were enacted, in both those Acts, in the sections thereof which related to obligatory duties, the word 'adequate' was used ; but when the District Municipal Act was amended in 1901, the word was changed to 'reasonable', and the words put were 'that it was the duty of the boards to make reasonable provision.' But in the present bill the word 'adequate' is retained. When however certain duties are specifically imposed upon district local boards, and when Government want to retain to themselves the power of stating what should be the necessary quota which the district local board ought to provide out of its expenditure for education, then, Sir, it is necessary that the word should be 'reasonable' rather than 'adequate'. Otherwise, it would be putting the local boards to great expense.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : May I take the liberty of suggesting to the honourable member that he is now dealing with particular provisions of the bill ? That is entirely a matter for the select committee and the second reading. There is no question of any principle of the bill involved in it.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI : I bow to your ruling, Sir. It was an important matter, and therefore I referred to it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I dare say it is a very important matter but not relating to this first reading debate.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI : Then, the bill provides for the district local board maintaining training schools which are certainly a part of higher education. Now, while provision is made in the bill for having a school board for the purpose of the schools, the provision about obligatory duties does not provide for investing the local board with powers of administration, management, or control. While under section 28 of the Municipal Act, the town as well as city municipalities have powers of management, control and administration with reference to the schools in their areas, in the bill, as it is at present framed, no powers are given with regard to the management and administration of schools to the local boards. That is a defect which appears to me to be a very serious one, and which will have to be considered.

Then, further, with reference to the obligatory duties, in the present Acs as well as in the present bill, there are two—one providing for training schoolt and the other for making provision for vaccination which would be expensive. But the bill imposes a further duty, namely that of providing for the registration of births and deaths. Now, my honourable friend Rao Saheb Dadubhai Desai has referred to the question of the registration of births and deaths. If this duty were thrown upon the district local boards, a duty which is being done by the patels at present without any expenditure at all, it would cost an amount of money. With reference to the other two obligatory duties, namely, training schools and vaccination, although the duties are in the Act and they have been translated into the present bill, I believe that the boards are not able to do much in that direction, and until their resources are put upon a satisfactory basis, it would be very difficult for them to do anything more than they do at present in that regard. With reference to that, I want to refer to the opinion of the Decentralisation Commission, which was of the opinion that even the duties as at present provided in the Local Boards Act are more than the local boards can meet, and they rather require to be lightened than increased. Under these circumstances, the addition of duties which cannot be effectively met is a matter which requires very serious consideration.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Are these duties obligatory ?

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI : Yes, Sir. They are obligatory.

With regard to the provisions in the bill with reference to school boards, it does not appear that the school boards which are going to be formed will be subject to the district local board. There will be, according to the present scheme, members from municipalities and members from outside. My submission is that the school boards under the district local boards ought to be on the same lines as the school committees under the District Municipal Act, and that they should be formed out of the members of the district local board. It may be that certain members from outside can be co-opted, but they should be under, and not independent of, the board altogether. There is one provision with reference to this matter, namely that persons experienced in education with be nominated on the board. I am unable to understand what my honourable friend means by persons experienced in education. Does he mean persons who are educated or persons who have served in the Educational Department? It may mean persons who have served in the Educational Department. What is the test of experience in education is a matter which has been left out. I think this is a very vague provision and requires to be made clear.

Then, with reference to the provision regarding public health committee, of course it is good in its own way, but without a proper machinery, all these provisions will be observed more in the non-performance than in anything else. When a district extends over several hundreds of miles and contains hundreds of villages, and when there is no machinery in the several villages to look after the orders or instructions of that committee, I fail to understand what good purpose will be served by simply transferring from the District Municipal Act provisions about sanitation to the Local Boards Act and then leaving the matter where it is. If only a health inspector or an officer of Public Health is to be appointed, he could work under the standing committee of the district local board rather than under a separate public health committee. Without having anything to do on account of want of machinery, and want of resources, I fear that these provisions also will be there without much good.

Then, one provision made in the bill appears to me to be rather out of the way. If any member of a board, whether district or taluka, misapplies money, he ought to be made personally liable for misapplication; but it is intended to make him liable for loss or waste also. In the case of making roads, culverts, etc., opinions may differ whether a certain amount of money is wasted or not or is lost or not lost, and this will give occasion for persons of factious temperament to maliciously pursue people who have been doing their duty. Such a provision is no safeguard but exposes people who would with a sense of responsibility discharge functions which the administration of a local board imposes. The matter is a questionable one, and it will lead to an amount of dispute by factious persons.

With reference, then, Sir, to the resources of the local boards which are called technically local funds, provision is made for the purpose of authorising Government to fix the quota which a local board ought necessarily to contribute towards education. But as to the assigning of any revenues from the provincial revenue, it is all discretionary and there is no provision made in the bill which may be obligatory on Government. The one anna cess at present yields to different districts a varying amount of revenue, and the share of expenses, if we only take the case of education, which the local boards contribute is about 15 per cent., whereas Government contribute about 85 per cent. roughly. Now the power is reserved by Government to fix the quota which the local board has to contribute, and in view of the desire for compulsory education the first step necessarily would be that every board will be required by Government to reach its one-third for maintaining schools on a voluntary basis, and when they are able to go so far, then and then only they will be called upon to consider the question of compulsory education. Then, let us take it that 33 and 66 per cent. is going to be the quota between Government and local boards eventually. At present the local boards contribute 15 per cent., whereas the balance comes from Government. In this connection, if we examine the provisions with reference to taxation, the difficulty of the situation would be clear to honourable members. The proposals about taxation are divisible under two heads. One is to raise the present cess to twice its present amount, and the second is the power to impose taxation.

Now, with reference to the one anna cess, I am afraid the Decentralisation Commission was against any increase in it. They have stated that further burdens on land do not deserve to be imposed. Even in the dissenting minute, Rao Bahadur Sathe and Mr. V. J. Patel were also of the same opinion. It was pointed out that it was not the item that should be first touched. But, let us consider the question from the standpoint that it was doubled in all the districts. Even then if you examined the quota of every local board towards education, even after it is doubled, I am afraid every board will have to find money to a very large extent, to reach that one-third proportion. I have just tried to work out how it will be, and what even on the voluntary basis, will be the position of each board, if Government were to say 'for a voluntary basis you must find your one-third quota.' Thana district will have to find Rs. 73,000, Ratnagiri Rs. 1,12,000, Nasik nearly one lakh of rupees, Kolaba Rs. 68,000, Ahmednagar Rs. 1,16,000, Sholapur Rs. 87,000, and Satara Rs. 1,28,000. In the southern districts Dharwar will have to find Rs. 1,80,000, Belgaum Rs. 1,35,000, Bijapur Rs. 1,12,000 for the purpose of maintaining schools on a voluntary basis. If the Government were to call upon each municipality under the power which they reserve to themselves, every municipality will have to find so much and even if every municipality doubled its cess, namely, from 4 pies to 8 pies, still it would have to find a large amount of money by extra taxation. That is going to be the situation on account of Government not committing themselves to any position with reference to their quota towards the expenses of schools maintained as at present on a voluntary basis. And if you consider the question of compulsory education, then that will be something very much more.

In this connection I would like to refer to one or two points. I would quote to you the instance of the Daskroi taluka in the Ahmedabad collectorate. The maximum dry crop rate in that taluka is Rs. 4-4-0 per acre, and the average assessment per acre comes to Rs. 4-3-1, i. e., the cultivator nearly reaches the maximum rate on the average, and in some cases gives more than the maximum rate, Rs. 5-12-0 in some cases, and even Rs. 8-10-0 in others. That is, he pays a premium over the maximum rate. Now, if you were to examine in the same way the Ahmednagar district—and I may say that I have taken the figures from Mr. Roger's reports where he gives the revision figures, and even if there have been revisions thereafter, there could not have been an increase of more than 25 per cent,—Akola in Ahmednagar had an average assessment per acre of Re. 0-12-2 and Sangamner Re. 0-7-8. In the Khandesh district, in Bhusaval where the maximum was Rs. 2-4-0, the average assessment was Rs. 1-8-0. They have not reached the maximum. So that, Sangamner would be paying ½ anna cess per acre and Akola, if the assessment has been subsequently raised, will be paying 1 anna as cess. So that even if you were to duplicate the rate, in Ahmedabad in the Daskroi taluka, a cultivator who is now paying 4 annas on the average per acre will have to pay 8 annas, whereas in Ahmednagar the cultivator who now pays in one taluka ½ anna and in another taluka 1 anna, would be paying 1 anna and 2 annas if you doubled the rate. With reference to the Deccan districts, I say that even if the local cess were to be doubled, still they would not be able to make good their expenditure on education. My honourable friend from Nagar of course is known as a very public spirited gentleman and particularly praised for his great interest in local boards, but the position in which he finds himself every third year is that he has to go about with a hat in hand to capitalists outside in order to help that district. Now, I would like to put it to you whether his district, with all his eagerness for taxation, would be in a position to contribute by taxation, and by doubling the cess enough amount for meeting the expenditure on schools even on a voluntary basis would be forthcoming. I would like to be enlightened upon that subject. But I believe that if his eagerness is his own and not the eagerness of his constituents, then certainly this House would have to pause before taking his eagerness as the eagerness of his constituents. (Honourable Members : Hear, hear.)

Then, Sir, there is lastly the tax-collecting agency. The tax-collecting agency which has been provided for in this bill is practically a copy of the tax-collecting machinery in a municipal area. In a big municipal area like Ahmedabad, Surat or Poona, or in a city or town, it is very easy to serve bills, to issue notices, to serve notices of demand, and to take measures for recovery, but in a large area, where each district has villages to the extent of 600 to 900 and several miles of distances, how is the tax-collecting agency that has been copied from the District Municipal Act, likely to be serviceable without being burdensome and wasteful ? My humble view is that the cost of collection, if collection is to be made by a local board through a paid agency of its own, would devour the income altogether or would leave very little.

There are one or two further drawbacks in this bill. One is that, as in the case of the Municipal Act, it does not provide for quarterly sessions. There is no provision that there should be so many meetings in a year. There ought to be a provision that there should be at least quarterly meetings.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That is not a matter of principle but one of detail.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI : I moved a resolution in the last council with reference to the account year for local boards as the ordinary financial year is inconvenient and as they are now in an awkward position in framing their budget before they know anything of the coming monsoon. I had proposed that it should be from August to July and Government had accepted it, but no provision seems to have been made in this bill in that direction.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Is that not a matter of administrative detail, and not legislation ?

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI : Well, I have referred to some matters which may be considered from one point of view as matters of administrative detail, but as you were good enough to rule that important points may be referred to for the purpose of the information of the select committee, I have done so.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Order, order. If that is a matter of administrative detail, as it appears to be, then however important, it is not a matter of principle for a first reading discussion. The question of the financial year, so far as my knowledge of legislation and precedents goes, has always been treated as a matter of administration and not legislation.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI : It is provided here in this bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Is there anything in the bill about it ?

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI : Clause 83 is there.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: It is a matter of detail in any case.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: It will be fixed by administrative orders: no date is fixed.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Well then, that settles the question. The question is still left for administrative orders, and the honourable member need not pursue that point as a matter of legislation.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI: I have nothing more to add.

Rao Bahadur G. K. CHITALE (Ahmednagar District): I wish, Sir, to keep my promise to be within the limits of the first reading and do not wish to wander over the details. I hope I shall be able to keep it. Now, in the first instance, I welcome this measure as an advancement, though it may be, some of us have to criticise it from various standpoints. The point is this, that the present District Local Boards Act is very old, that it requires amendment and that as a result of this we have several amendments embodied in this bill. The principle that I take is that there is to be an advancement in every direction as far as possible. I wish to see that that object is achieved. For instance, at the apex of the Local Boards Act you have the district local boards in which all the boards' powers are centred. The taluka local boards rightly complain that they have no powers and have a very small fund to play with. As far as the District Local Boards' constitution is concerned, the district local boards at present are recruited from pocket constituencies. They are generally dealt with in this Act and are now broad based. Under the old Act the district local boards were constituted by the return of 10 or 12 members who were elected members from the several taluka local boards and the inamdars who have a constituency of about 30 to 50 members.

An Honourable Member: They number more than that.

Rao Bahadur G. K. CHITALE: I am absolutely accurate there. Now, as it is, these district boards are a filtered constituency; the basis of it, that is the taluka local boards, were formed mostly of members who were elected by the electorates, but these 10 or 12 good people were elected members to the district local boards on the analogy of our old councils. Now that constitution has been done away with and the present constitution is broadly based and I offer the Honourable Minister my own thanks for it. We want that both local bodies and the local councils shall be responsible to the voters themselves who pay the tax and, as a matter of fact, make the board responsible. The pocket constituencies therefore are done away with rightly, and I am putting it, Sir, to my honourable friends to say whether looked at from a practical point of view they will show me any district or constituency which does not answer the description of a pocket constituency; if they are able to show that, then they have a case, if not then on the general hypothesis of doing away with the pocket constituency they will have to suffer. Then again, I am not sure if many inamdars make it a grievance to show that they have lost their right. Looked at from the practical point of view, I put it to my inamdar friends whether they do or do not own lands on which they pay land revenue, which would qualify them to be elected to several boards. Both in the electorate and in the board they have to place themselves along with the other agriculturists and unless they wanted a privileged position, they will not be right in expecting a pocket constituency to look after their own interests; I think they will do better to be represented on democratic basis as leading agriculturists in general and holding that privileged place of inamdars they become the true landlords. So far therefore as these pocket constituencies are concerned, they are rightly done away with and the measure from that point of view is a better one. Having regard to the pocket constituency, you will find that instead of 150 voters exercising their rights on the district local boards on the present basis of constitution, you will have 10,000 to 15,000 voters in each district. 15,000 voters in each district is a broad based constituency on which any local board can safely wield a large amount of authority. Looked at from that point of view the measure is better. It is said—no doubt true—that at present we have one element only, namely, a non-Mahomedan constituency. The bill no doubt makes distinctions between the different communities. Now this matter about a separate Mahomedan constituency is a matter on which there is a great deal of difference of opinion but may I point out, Sir, one thing ? After all, we are agreed I think, that on principle communal representation is bad and let us stick to that principle. If my honourable friend the Minister has looked into this question, has explored all the other resources by which the aspirations of my Mahomedan friends cannot be achieved by creating multiple constituencies with cumulative voting and lumping in all Mahomedan voters or even by reservation of seats, then by all means have recourse to these. But I am not sure, whether by the lumping up together of the Mahomedan votes in any district in a multiple constiuency, it is not possible to get adequate representation of my Mahomedan friends ; because letting Khandesh alone there are many districts wherein Mahomedans are in a sufficient proportion—and we will not get only one or two but several constituencies. In another district, Sholapur you will find Mahomedans coming up to one-fifth—20⅛%—of the population, or, according to the voters, they would give them a voting strength. If that voting strength is pulled together and put in a constituency in which they will be put in majority, I think a way will be found out by which the nomination will be done away with and my Mahomedan friends will come in by direct election. I have put in that suggestion for the select committee. I am sure the result according to my own experience may answer the object in view. Perhaps it may not be possible to get them in one or two districts and in those districts you can find out other means. It is no doubt also true that nomination is a bad thing. It is useless to say, let Mahomedans come by nomination : if it is a bad process it is bad for all and therefore I am not for nomination. They have a right to nomination as an important minority but I do not think it is right to say that they have not got a separate interest. Looking at the question, so far as the vernacular education was concerned they insist that they shall have Urdu, but after all there is no doubt that they have different interests. They insist as you know and make it a point of grievance and of keenness that primary education must be given to them in Urdu, that all the teachers should be Urdu and that even the deputy inspectors should be Urdu. Now as a matter of fact, so long, at least for half a dozen years, their wishes have been respected. Whatever the previous orders were, they really fought even on such matters though they have not got elected representatives on the local boards. You can ask them to be so charitable that every constituency would look up from their point of view. I do not think therefore that a way cannot be found out in order to give them an adequate representation by election in proportion to their population and strength by pulling up and permitting a multiple constituency and then let us resort to this direct measure as a last resort. That is my suggestion. Let that matter therefore be looked into by the

[Rao Bahadur G. K. Chitale]

[Rao Bahadur G. K. Chitale]

Honourable Minister in the select committee and let us have all the data worked up for the members in select committee.

Then I come to the other matters where you want the board which is self-contained, self-contained in the sense that it shall administer through its own officers all the departments which are given under its control. In other words, the present liberty is nothing else but an airy nothing. In all the departments, the Educational Department, the Medical Department, the Veterinary Department, or the Public Works Department and in all other departments, you are only responsible for signing the cheques. The department does the rest. Well, I do not find that this bill therein gives us much, for we are to be regulated by the rules. I might say without fear of contradiction that this Local Boards Act was in existence for the last 30 years and it was only in the last seven years that this Government shook its head rather seriously and gave us amplified powers by way of experiment. As the result of administrative orders, it has no doubt given us larger constituencies, larger powers, partly of non-official presidents, and so on. But they took really 30 long years to do all this. I have, therefore, a horror of leaving anything to the making of rules. This Council will, therefore, certainly be within its rights in seeing that the Act is as complete as possible and very little is left to the rule-making; or even if it is left to the rule-making, let that rule-making power be subject to the vote of this Council, so that we will have adequate safeguards whenever these rules are made to see that matters are arranged according to our angle of vision. No doubt, there is a decided change now. We have a popular Minister, but, after all, Government is run on certain grooved lines. The Honourable Minister naturally finds himself in that groove and it is very difficult for him to get out of it, because you find that if a certain groove is given to you of a particular height, you can only move in that groove up to that height; no more.

Then, as regards the school-board, I would like to discuss it when the primary education bill comes in for discussion, but in answer to the challenge which the Deputy President gave, I may say that I will accept it. I say that if the district local boards want all these powers which are to be self-contained and independent in everything, I do not think it is proper to say that the Government shall bear the greatest part of the expenditure. Well, he has appealed to me and challenged me to say how am I prepared to find the requisite quota even for this primary education. I assure him that if I am at the head of these affairs, I will accept very willingly the challenge to make good my promise. More than that I will not say at present. If you take into consideration the feeling of the people, you will find that all the people in the Central and Southern Divisions are anxious to have this primary education and, as a matter of fact, they are quite prepared to tax themselves. That is not my individual opinion. There was a different note struck in Gujarat. My friends are welcome to hold their views, but, as far as the Central and Southern Divisions are concerned, I would say that the Compulsory Education Committee was assured both in the Central and Southern Divisions that the people were prepared to tax themselves to any extent. Of course, when the time comes, we will test it. But, as far as I am concerned, I am prepared to say that we will find our quota; I am not afraid of it. I need not say anything more at present. When the question of primary education bill comes before us, we can say more.

Then, there is the matter of control, on which I wish to speak, and then the sources of taxation. I have said the sources of taxation is a matter more for the future. All this Council has to decide upon is this. Take up the old

[Rao Bahadur G. K. Chitale]

Local Boards Act. The district local board as a body has no power of taxation : absolutely none. An Act which was passed in 1869 imposed a local fund cess, which was transferred by the Local Boards Act to the local boards. But a part of the income was earmarked for education and the rest of it was made over to the local board. It was a small income. It is one thing to say that the local bodies shall have a certain source of taxes which are scheduled. But be it remembered that no district local board is called upon by this Act to put the whole schedule into operation without the consent of the voters in the district local board. It is left to the district local board to say what taxes it will use. And then again, you will find that taxation has to run another gauntlet, namely, you will have to get the support of both the local body and of Government. I shall have to ask both my constituency and the local body for support and I shall have to make out a very good case indeed, because I shall have to obtain the Government sanction. The Government sanction will not be given as a matter of course, because you know the machine. In all matters of local bodies, the Collectors and the Commissioners have to be consulted. They are no longer partisans of the local bodies and therefore I am absolutely sure that they will look at them with more critical eye now than they used to do before. Whatever the schedule of taxation will be, that taxation will be first imposed by the local body broad-based as it is and will have therefore to consider twice before it recommends unpopular taxes. My only regret is that this Local Boards Bill does not fix a particular number, either a number in proportion to the population or in proportion to the voting strength. It is necessary that a rule should be made that a particular district local board shall consist of so many members. Even in the case of the Government of India Act one of the first things decided was that this Council shall consist of a maximum number of 111 and all the constituencies were fixed within that number. Even under the Bombay Municipal Act we have a particular number fixed. It may be rather difficult to fix a number for a particular district. I recognise that comparisons may not be quite correct, but it is just possible to declare that every district local board shall have a minimum, say 2 for 100,000 population, or 4 or whatever number that may be, or whatever particular number in respect of the voting strength of, say, 1,000 voters. That will give you a basis at once. My Mahomedan friends and other communities and the minorities will have a grievance if the number is too small. For instance, take the present number of the Ahmednagar district local board. It has 19 members for a population of 900,000 on a voting strength of 15,000. We may perhaps not be able to provide for adequate representation of all the communities on all the boards which are considered to be important. And from that point of view, therefore, if it is possible to fix a number, I hope the select committee will do its best to do it, so that we shall know exactly where we are and we will also know how to bring in the minority constituencies, namely, my friends the depressed classes and Mahomedans or Christians or Parsis.

That was the third comment I had to make on the first reading of this bill. Then, before concluding, I must say that I am not satisfied with the control section in this bill. My point is this that originally there was something in making the Collectors and Commissioners the controlling heads of departments because they themselves underwent a training. You remember that under the old Act an Assistant Collector was usually the president of taluka local boards. He administered several taluka local boards. When he became the Collector, he also administered several district local boards. He had to provide for the budgets, look to their wants, and the rest. Now, as it would happen, all the Assistant Collectors and Collectors will be deprived of these powers. They will not have the training grounds, and I am afraid, therefore, that unless—on their own ground as Government used to say—unless you get a training, how is it possible for you to examine a particular case with that prudence and care which it is necessary to exercise ?

After recess.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order.

Rao Bahadur G. K. CHITALE (Ahmednagar District): I was speaking, Sir, as regards this control and I have said what I had to say with respect to that.

I wish now to speak on one other point. It is this : you remember, Sir, that the Panchayats Act has been enacted and in several districts panchayats are being formed, and if they are formed in an appreciable number, this Council will have to consider how taluka boards would fit in along with the other machinery. It is just possible that in some advanced districts or in some special circumstances where perhaps the communications are not so good, it may be possible to have some method broadly speaking. To my mind there is no case now for the taluka boards. In the first place I am not sure whether you will find so many people for administering taluka boards on scanty funds and without independence and therefore the matter is to my mind an important one and may be looked into by the select committee in its proper perspective.

Then the fourth question on which I wish to address the House for a few minutes is this—what is the extent of powers ? You want independence ; how is that independence as a matter of fact to be administered or carried into practice if you have not got adequate machinery ? In the first place you have to do away with the departmental system. If the departmental system is to be done away with, the district board will have to be officered by properly experienced and trained men for several of the departments such as the engineering department, the educational department, the sanitary department and the medical department. These are all the four heads which will have to be officered. At present Government is spending a very large sum on ministering to the wants of the several people by having men on very high salaries and it will be for Government to consider whether people of the right stamp would not be put at the disposal of the district boards as administering officers, and in order that all the funds of the district boards may not be eaten away by the staff, to serve the purpose of both the Government and the district local board, it will also have to be considered by Government whether their servants cannot be put at the disposal of the district local boards. Let me give an illustration which will do away with many of the difficulties felt by some of my friends. It is asked how is sanitation of rural area to be looked after ? The Act says it will have public health committees. A public health committee consisting of certain members is surely a very small body to minister to the wants of a diffused area like a district consisting of several hundred square miles. What is done at present ? What is at present done is that these wants are supplied by the several departments of Government with their subordinate staff. If Government means to draw away this staff, save their pay and make the local board responsible for the sanitation, I think it will not be a step in the right direction.

[Rao Bahadur G. K. Chitale]

I hope that the Honourable Minister does not mean that; what he means is all the sanitary wants and all the defects, inasmuch as these boards have not got requisite powers needed for an adequate discharge of their functions. I hope the Honourable Minister will arm the local bodies with sufficient powers and that he will be in a position to give the requisite staff. The staff is there, is at present administering the boards; if any supplementary staff is needed, the local body may be asked to supply it. What I mean is this, that if all these several departments are to be administered, if these local bodies are to be independent as far as possible, then in that case the district local boards or these local bodies must be given the services of full-time, well qualified and trained medical officers, trained educational administering officers, trained engineers and perhaps at least veterinary administering officers, so that the whole staff will be looking after the work of the district local boards which will be properly administered by trained men and Government will not lose, because they are at present spending a very large amount. It is only a question of give and take and it depends upon the mood of Government, but in enacting an Act we have to be very careful in getting as independent powers as possible so that Government may not say that the Council has put its seal upon this Act and therefore the district boards or bodies are now in law responsible to administer all the duties that have been put upon them, either discretionary or otherwise. Looked at from that point of view, I do not think that the Honourable Minister means it. However, the wording is deficient in various particulars, in various clauses, and I hope that he will allow the select committee and also he will have such select committee as will be able to go over the whole Act to make it a sound measure from several points of view, and I am absolutely sure that this House will welcome the report of the select committee if after all it is found to answer the criticism which is so far administered in this House. I welcome the measure and congratulate the Honourable Minister for giving us an opportunity of looking into it and I hope members of the select committee will see that all the points of criticism that have been given voice to in this House will be given effect to as much as possible in presenting their report to the House.

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL (Broach District): Sir, I rise to welcome this beneficent measure and to congratulate the Honourable Minister and Government on bringing forward this long-overdue bill and thus removing a reproach which has been levelled against the Government of Bombay. In offering my congratulations to Government, I include the names of the Honourable Mr. Lawrence and also Mr. Martin who contributed in no small degree by their reports in the initial stages which have enabled the Honourable Minister to give shape and form to this bill.

We have first to consider whether the defects found in the old Acts which have been working for the last 30 or 35 years have been remedied in the present bill. There is no doubt that this is a very liberal measure in giving an enlarged franchise, in the election of presidents and vice-presidents and making them free from the leading strings of official guidance, investing the boards with greater powers and furnishing means for developing education, sanitation and so on and in improving the financial resources of the board. I, therefore, hope that the Council will unanimously agree to refer this bill to the select committee, as it is a distinct improvement on the old Acts and it is a very wise measure.

[Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. Dalal]

During the last thirty or thirty-five years that this Act has been in operation, we shall consider whether it has been successfully worked and whether it has done benefit to rural areas or whether it has not done so, and after arriving at this result, we must ascertain whether these defects have been remedied in the present bill. When we look into these defects, we find that there are two main causes which have not led to the success of the present Act. The finances of the boards have been very inelastic, and that is the main cause; the second cause is that the villages have not been recognised as units of local self-government administration. In the present bill, the finances have been made a little elastic, but the villages have not been included as units of local self-government administration. I have the experience of being associated with district local boards both as member and as president for the last fifteen years (as president for seven years and as member for fifteen years), and I find that the minor, small, poor villages take absolutely no interest in the district local boards. They contribute towards the revenues through the tax which they pay as the one anna cess; out of this 4 pies go for education, but these small villages have not got any schools, they have not got any roads, and have not even the barest amenities of life. It is therefore a matter of indifference to them whether it is a taluka local board or a district local board. This frame-work has not been touched in this bill, and I hope the select committee will take it into consideration. Unless and until the villages are made units as the first link in the path of local self-government, I believe any measure which is intended for the happiness and contentment of the rural areas will be partially or wholly a failure. We know several arguments will be advanced that the villages are small, that they cannot at present be made units of administration, and that they must wait. It will be also said that Government have recently introduced the Panchayat Act, and that the panchayats can send representatives if they like. But although the Panchayat Act has been passed, Government have not given the panchayats any encouragement. So far as the district of Broach is concerned, the Village Panchayat Act is very unpopular. Even the large villages do not want panchayats. They say "Why should we have panchayats? Our one anna cess is absorbed by the taluka and the district local boards. We have no rights, we have no drinking water, we have no roads, and we are left high and dry." Therefore, my suggestion is that the taluka local boards should go, and instead of that the villages should be made the units of the first link in the chain of local self-government. From times immemorial, the village has been recognised as the unit of administration. Eminent historians, writers and jurists, in regard to these time-honoured institutions, have admitted that the spirit of self-government even in the smallest villages, still exists. No doubt, it is in a dormant state, but the energy is still alive, and it is for the new bill to energise and magnetise this force, which will be very great in future in working their own salvation. This is a sort of anomaly, and further it affects 50 per cent. of the rural areas who have no voice in the administration of the local boards, and who are not benefited to the extent of the cess which they have to pay, and it is for the new bill to introduce some such measure by which they will be benefited.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Have the villages no part or lot in the local boards?

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL: I refer to the administration of the local funds and in the present bill they have nothing to do with it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Are they simply pay-masters, and they do not get any share in the local boards administration ?

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL: I will develop this argument later on.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Under the present bill, what is made the unit of local board administration ?

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL: The talukas simply elect their own men; that is all.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Then your argument is that the districts and the talukas are given all the power and the people in the villages only pay the money. They pay the piper, but cannot call the tune.

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL: Yes, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Then, your argument is that you want the villages to be brought in. That affects the whole principle of the bill.

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL: This is the frame-work. It is the fundamental of the bill which should be touched, and if it is touched, and if the principle which I have enunciated is introduced in the present bill.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Your argument comes to this: the Government measure at present before the House begins at the wrong end; it ought to begin at the other end, the right end, namely the villages. That raises the whole problem of local boards.

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL: Yes, Sir. Therefore, I say, revivify these time-honoured institutions and introduce that principle in the present bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I am informed that under the Village Panchayats Act, the villages are brought in.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: One village or a group of villages may have a panchayat.

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL: Against this argument my answer is this.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have nothing to do with the merits of the question. I am only seeing whether your speech is addressed to the principle of the bill. If the villages, either under the Local Boards Act or the Panchayats Act, are brought into the administration of the local boards, then the whole of your argument as to the principle of the bill falls to the ground.

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL: Now that this opportunity has presented itself, it would be very wise on the part of the Honourable Member in charge of the bill and the select committee if they will take into consideration this important point.

As regards the introduction of the panchayats, there is no inducement for the villages to form themselves into panchayats. If in the Panchayats Act there was some such provision by which say one-fourth of the one anna cess which the villagers paid could be transferred to the panchayats, all these villagers would have gladly come in. There is no inducement for them. They say, "Why should we pay"?

Another evil arises out of the present Act. It has made the villages not self-reliant and independent to stand on their own legs. They are depending upon the generosity of the taluka boards. Even for the smallest service they have to look for outside help. This question was considered by the

[Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. Dalal]

Lawrence Committee, and it says in that report:

"It is desirable, however, to make the contemplated panchayats when they are established the first link in the chain of local self-government administration. A system under which villages scramble for allotments from the scanty funds of the taluka local boards is calculated to undermine their sense of responsibility and villagers must be brought to recognise that they cannot expect their local wants to be satisfied without local effort and sacrifice. Very commonly people will not even contribute until they despair of the whole cost of an improvement being met from taluka local board funds or until their want is intolerably pressing. People can hardly be expected to do what some one else may do for them or pay when there is always a chance of some one else paying for them, if they are only sufficiently importunate."

Therefore, I say that the object and aim of the present bill should be to make villages self-contained units in the administration of local self-government of districts. It may be argued that if a village is too small, and if the village panchayat is to be introduced, it should be worked very cautiously. But we have had sufficient time, and we see in the villages public spirit. I do not see any reason why it should not be introduced in this way. If, however, the Council or the select committee, on sentimental grounds or for other reasons, wish to retain the taluka local boards, although in my opinion they ought to be abolished, I do not press for their abolition; they may remain as agents and supervise, but the machinery of the whole administration of the taluka boards should be done away with.

Next, the provision of appointing the school board has been introduced in this bill. It is a wise provision, I admit, because it will look only after education, but I fail to understand what the powers and functions of the school board will be. We do not understand how these boards will be organised, what are its functions, and what are the relative functions of the school board in respect of the district local board. It leaves to Government to frame rules with regard to these things instead of incorporating them in the bill itself.

Another important innovation is the introduction of the health committees, and it is a very wise provision that it has been included in the bill. But, as regards its working, I am afraid several gentlemen who have preceded me have very ably pointed out the inpracticability of their working. When we know that even big municipalities ere not yet able to carry out the rules and regulations for the sanitary requirements of big cities, and when mofussil municipalities very often break all these rules, how can you expect in a much more diffused area, comprising hundreds and thousands of villages, and extending over thousands of miles, proper supervision and control of the health of the rural areas? But if by legislation you introduce village panchayats in every village or in every group of villages, then these committees will supervise and to a small extent improve the condition of health in the villages. Otherwise, it appears to me that it will be a dead letter, just as it is in the small municipal areas of the mofussil.

Now, I come to finance, which is the crux of the whole question. As I said in the first part of my speech, the insufficient finance is the prime cause of the failure of this Act. This has been improved in the present bill and power has been given for imposing taxation. I welcome this power and the benefits which we will derive by this power, but as explained by my honourable friends, this is very small indeed, because the expense of collection in the rural areas will be out of all proportion to the income, and further the condition of rural areas can never be the same as in the city municipalities. If the Government had introduced provisions offering subventions and grants such as 'if you raise so much revenue, we will pay you so much', there will be some chance. In this Council I plead on behalf of the poor agriculturists. It is a fact which cannot be gainsaid that the burden of taxation on the poor is such that additional burdens cannot be imposed, and unless Government come forward generously with the same subventions and grants as they are giving now to encourage the boards for raising additional taxation, it will not be possible for villages to make any appreciable improvement in the government of their affairs. In this connection I agree with my colleagues in the Council that the district local boards should start a propaganda work to instruct their constituencies, that Government cannot pay for all their requirements, and that they must try to raise as much revenue as they can, and then ask Government for co-operation. There are two schools of thought: one wants that everything should be done by Government, and the other says that if you want to improve your amenities of life you will have to pay yourself. Both are wrong. There is a golden mean. The Government must pay as well as village people must contribute by taxation.

As regards the general administration, I believe there is no change in the new bill from the old bill, but in my opinion the time has arrived when we should make a departure and differentiate the deliberative functions of the board from the executive functions. It is too much to expect district boards, who are not experts, to look after the execution of works. The duties of the central board should be to lay down a certain policy, to frame the budget and to exercise general supervision, but the execution of works should be left to an executive body.

I, in pointing out the defects of the bill, ought to say with due deference to my Mahomedan friends that the element of communal representation introduced in this bill is, in my humble opinion, not advisable. The reason is this: it is one thing for this Council or the State Council or the Imperial Council for political expediency and for other reasons to lay down that separate constituencies might be created, but for the district board where the aim and object of Hindu, Mussalman or Parsi is only to ameliorate the condition of the rural villages, it is not right to perpetuate the old racial feelings of these two important sections of the community. And again, Sir, when in this Council even in the last sessions, the Council has set its seal by doing away with communal representation in the amendment of the Bombay Municipal Act, it is not wise to perpetuate that wrong, in this new measure. So far as my district is concerned, Mahomedans do not feel any need for it, as far as I know.

An Honourable Member: How do you know?

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL: My board consists of 15 Mahomedans and they are able and strong to stand on their own legs. If they manage the concern, I do not see why it should not be done in other districts.

In this bill no provision is made for the borrowing powers of the board. I know that there is some special Act by which the boards can ask the Government to lend, but I want particularly in the bill to introduce a section by which district local boards can borrow from the public. In the absence of that power to borrow, the Bombay Presidency district boards could not build their own railways: they failed because there was no power to borrow from the public and Government did not back them up in this enterprise. In Madras they are far ahead of us. They have got splendid narrow gauge railways which are valuable assets of these boards. If this policy had been adopted ten or fifteen years ago, I believe the Bombay Presidency boards would have at their back most valuable assets from which they could derive splendid revenues. In my district there is one narrow gauge railway for which the district board had been agitating for the last thirty or forty years. When the district board passed a resolution and forwarded it to the Commissioner—I carried it to the Commissioner—about fifteen or twenty years ago, he not only did not support it, but he ridiculed the idea of district boards taking loans and building their own railways. It is to the credit of the Honourable Leader of the House that when he was in charge of Local Self-Government I waited upon him at the Secretariat and complained about this matter and he said "you pass a resolution and send it to me and if the scheme is good, we will support it". But that is by sufferance, that is, a Minister might take one view or another but if it is prescribed in the Act, it will be a power in the hands of the boards.

And now, I have done, and my last request will be to the Honourable Minister in charge of this bill and the select committee which will be shortly appointed not to rush the bill, but to take the views of the district boards of the Presidency.

One function has been thrust on the boards under this new bill, and that is the registration of births and deaths. As contended by my honourable friends, the previous speakers, there is no machinery existing at present to do this work, and I believe it will be a failure, and I hope the Honourable Minister will be so kind as to delete that provision from the bill.

Now, I have done with this last remark, that this bill is the most comprehensive of all the measures passed during the last forty years. Some bills and some Acts might be in better lime-light, but as regards the happiness and prosperity of the eighty per cent. of this Presidency's population who are voiceless, you are going to bring them the benefits of peace and contentment by means of this bill and if this bill is passed into law and administered well and generously, I am sure we will rear up a very strong peasantry which will be at the back of loyalty and restfulness and contentment and we can laugh at revolutions and unrest. With these remarks I support the first reading of the bill.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: (Surat City) Sir, I rise to address a few remarks on this question with a certain amount of diffidence, for I have not been able to consult the people who will be most affected by this bill. I am also afraid of uncharitable motives being attributed by others who do not take a similar view on this question. I am certainly, Sir, not enamoured of the extended powers which this bill is likely to give the boards, for extended powers mean extended liabilities, and unless and until those who are to meet those liabilities are consulted and give their opinion in favour of it, it will not be wise for any Government which is going to be a responsible Government to push on a legislation of this character. Owing to these extended powers definite duties have been thrown on us as regards public vaccination, registration of births and deaths and sanitary works and measures necessary for the public health, and linked with that is the duty to provide for compulsory primary education. Now, Sir, let us consider what are the liabilities which we are going to incur. I concede that if we are going to have wider amenities of life we must be prepared to pay for it but before we are able to induce the people to tax themselves, we must be in a position to talk to them and take them into our confidence. That has not been allowed to be done. The situation is this. Our total rural population is about 161 lakhs including Sind, and on a rough calculation I have been able to make, in order to provide for compulsory education we must find something like 320 lakhs of rupees. The total cost of education now to Government is about 71 lakhs.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: For primary education?

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: Yes, for rural areas. The total cost of local administration is 125 lakhs. So that we have to find about 54 lakhs for general administration of the district local boards on the present basis. In all therefore we have to find 374 lakhs, 54 lakhs for general administration and 320 lakhs for primary education. Government will contribute two-thirds of the cost of primary education, that is about 212 lakhs, and the rest, namely, 162 lakhs we have to find ourselves. Now the local rate is 22¼ lakhs. It may be doubled. It will then bring us 44 lakhs and a half, so that we have to find 218 lakhs for the compulsory primary education and for general administration of the local boards. Then consider the extended duties which are going to be imposed on us under this Act and see what provision is made by Government to help the local boards to meet their extended liabilities. I again concede that it is not possible for Government to supply money for all that we want. We are prepared to tax ourselves, but it is not easy to tax people who are already overburdened. We have to take them into our confidence and carry them with us. Now what is the provision that Government is going to make? When Government asks local authorities to set apart ⅓rd for education, let us see what definite proportion Government sets apart for local funds. Clause 74 of the bill merely says "all grants and assignments of revenues made by Government". Government asks us at least to find one-third, or one-half for education. Government is not prepared to tell us what assignment Government will be prepared to make out of the provincial revenues. My honourable friend the honourable member for Ahmednagar district said that we are going to have very liberal powers. Of course liberal powers to tax ourselves! Liberal powers for Nagar where there are two famines in every three years and there is nothing to be taxed! I say, Sir, that this measure is not liberal and the reason why I say so is this, that Government was giving us something like 84 per cent. towards education and other administration.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: No, not education and other administration.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: How much for education?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Two-thirds.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: Now Government is going to give us two-thirds for education and is asking us to find the rest of the money, and Government says that if we do not make adequate provision—and of what that adequate provision is, Government is left to be the sole judge—Government may call upon the local bodies to raise the necessary funds and if they do not, then they have the power to hold up the local boards as guilty of default and to place some officer in its place to perform the duty. The words are "may be compelled". That is I say hardly a liberal measure. In all civilized countries—I hope I am right in saying so—when the local authorities are called upon to meet such a heavy expenditure on education, Government also makes specific assignments out of the general revenues and the Minister,

[Mr. C. M. Gandhi]

I say, ought to have made a provision in this bill for the purpose of inducing the people to welcome this measure.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Will the honourable member point out where specific assignments are made? In which countries?

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: In England.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Now, they are done away with.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: Very well. It was given till 1921, so far as I am aware. But we are at the initial stage of our development, and if in other more wealthy countries a similar provision was made, certainly in India provision ought to be made. It emphasizes the position which I am taking up, namely, whether it is right for the Minister to rush through the Council a measure of this character, which is going to affect the rural areas in the way in which it is intended to do, in the manner in which this bill is being rushed through, and people not given an opportunity of stating as to whether they should insist on Government for making a regular assignment out of the provincial revenues or whether they will be able to find funds for themselves and therefore accept the bill as it is.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Will the honourable member suggest some measures?

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: When it comes to me to suggest, I will. This is not the time at which I should suggest, but if the Honourable Minister had taken some of us into his confidence, certainly we would have been in a position to suggest some measures. But that is another matter. My esteemed friend the honourable member for Ahmednagar district said, some members are unwilling to tax themselves and therefore they are trying to obstruct the Honourable Minister in this bill.

Now, Sir, I have been at some pains to find out, if we are called upon to meet the cost of primary education, how does Surat stand and how does Nagar? The population of Surat district is 513,000 and the cost of education on the basis accepted by the Compulsory Primary Education Committee will come to about 10¼ lakhs. Government will find two-thirds thereof. So the Government will give us 6¾ lakhs and the district local board will have to find 3½ lakhs. Our local cess is Rs. 1,61,000 and if that is doubled, Surat pays its way. But what is the situation in Nagar? In Nagar the population is 646,000 and the cost for compulsory education will come to about 13 lakhs, of which Government will have to provide 8¾ lakhs. The district local board will have to find the balance of 4¼ lakhs. Doubling the local cess, Nagar will have 1¼ lakhs, and Nagar will have to find the remaining 3 lakhs. How is Nagar going to do it, is a matter which the honourable member for Nagar should have consulted his constituents about and not run in for this legislation in a hurry as he has tried to do. Sir, therefore, when I suggested caution, I never meant for a moment to obstruct the Minister. I am one of those who believe that if we are to succeed in local self-government and in attaining higher responsible government, our administration in the local are should be strengthened. But that does not mean that a legislation of this character should be rushed through in the manner in which it is proposed to be done. Sir, let us now consider what are the sources of revenue given by this bill. In clause 93 you will find that Government gives us a power of doubling the one anna local cess by a multiple of three pies, if the district local board makes an application for it. A second source of revenue is an additional water rate under clause 96. You will see, Sir, that when Government has been pleased to give us a power of increasing local cess if the local board makes an application for it, whether Government will allow water rate to be levied or not has been kept in its own discretion. Government may allow to levy a water rate or may not. Then, the other sources of taxation are all those taxes which are admissible to us under the Government of India Act. But we are told they shall be subject to any general or special orders which may be made by the Government. Is that a liberal advance of local self-government? We are to find the money. Of course, the sources of revenue which have been given to us are not very inviting. Any member who takes the trouble of referring to page 157 of the Council Manual and looking at the schedule of taxes admissible to us under the Government of India Act will find that many of the sources of revenue therein mentioned are hardly suitable. We have to make our own selection. But then comes the provision "subject to any general or special orders which may be made by Government in this behalf", so that, again we do not know what Government will do. These are the three sources of revenue and with these three sources of revenue we are called upon to exercise certain extended powers, so far as public health is concerned. Now, what are those powers? If you refer, Sir, to clause 50, you will find that in the list of obligatory duties, a reference to those sanitary measures is in these words:

"Clause (e): public vaccination, registration of births and deaths, and sanitary works and measures necessary for the public health."

Then follows chapter V, in which certain duties are imposed either on the president or on the district local board. Now, when we consider how those powers or duties are to be exercised or performed, we have to realise that unless we are prepared to appoint a very large agency from village to village who will report on the breaches thereof to the district local board, it will not be possible to perform the duties at all. That means a large agency over a widely diffused area and not a compact area like that of a municipality. We have got now, as my honourable friends Dewan Bahadur Godbole and Rao Saheb Dadubhai Desai have said, village panchayats; we have got sanitary committees, who have been doing their duties, not very satisfactorily I concede, but these should be developed. These bodies exist in so many villages and in order to make the whole system perfect, you need only extend and develop them. But, as it is, the district local board, if called upon to keep an agency to check breaches of the provisions made under this bill, which will have to be a very large agency, will find it very difficult and I am afraid the sanitary measures by that agency will be practically futile. Sir, I forgot to refer to one very important matter with regard to taxation. So far as the cess is concerned, the Government agency continues. The Government, through the village patels or the village kulkarnis, will collect it for us. So far as the rates are concerned, Government will collect them for us and hand over the proceeds after deducting the cost of collection. But with regard to all other taxation which the district local board will levy under this bill, what is the provision provided for? You have to refer to clause 114 of the bill and that says that in all these cases the taxation could only be recovered in the manner in which taxes are recovered in municipal areas, namely, by presentation of bills, by notices, by warrants. Now, what a troublesome machinery that is is well known to all those who know or who have to deal with the District Municipal Act. And how is it possible, when we have to deal with 600 to 800 villages, how is it possible, I ask, to deal successfully with the matter of collection of taxes? Take the instance of collecting taxes on animals and so on, how many bills have to be prepared, how many notices are to be issued and how many warrants are to be issued? If that is so, then why not have the procedure by which the village officials collect their revenues? It may be said that Government will be pleased to order the ordinary revenue agency to collect the taxes for us, but, unless this provision is made in the Act itself, I am quite sure neither the village patel nor the village talati will do it. For any extra work which they may be called upon to do, they will ask for additional pay which is quite legitimate. Therefore I say the cost of collection will be quite out of proportion to the revenues collected even if the district local board is prepared to go in for additional taxation to raise revenue.

Then, Sir, we are told in this bill that the Collector will be called upon to prepare a list of voters, i.e., those who pay the cesses and those who pay the taxes. If this is to be done by the same officer, why not put upon the same officer the duties not only of collecting the local cess but also collecting the local taxes? Therefore, my first proposal is to consider whether it is at all necessary to have chapter 5 in this bill and whether it will not be proper to delegate these duties to the village panchayats and the village sanitary committees.

In speaking of the powers of control, let us have a look at clauses 127-128 which contain powers which are known as the bludgeon clauses and power is taken for Government interference under which a certain officer is empowered to perform certain duties if Government is pleased to rule that the local body has been found guilty of default in performing them. Under clause 129 Government takes upon itself the power to dissolve, which I think is a good provision, but it also takes power of supersession under clause 131. If a district local board is to be proceeded against for neglect of duty, then I say the power shall not be exercised by one man. Time has certainly now come when the Honourable Minister must be relieved of that duty and be assisted by a board of representatives of the district areas either sitting in this Council or outside who will be elected by presidents of district local boards in each division (Honourable Members: Hear, hear). In some other provinces similar boards exercise this function and I think, so far as self-government is concerned, this Council may well consider whether it will not be wise to see that these powers of the bludgeon clauses are not allowed to be exercised by one individual but by a body in whom the district boards or other local bodies have confidence.

Then, Sir, I go to clause 131. There is a practical difficulty which the Honourable Minister may well consider. When a municipality or a district local board is superseded, the power is given to a committee of management but when the committee of management comes into existence it has no corporal perpetual existence and whenever it is to be sued or it has to sue, it cannot do so in its corporate capacity. I therefore think that early steps should be taken to rectify that defect. But whenever a committee of management is appointed, it must be a body with powers to sue and be sued in its corporate capacity.

Then, Sir, I go to the question of the constitution of local bodies, and I must here join my voice in condemning with as great emphasis as I can the question of communal representation. So far as my district of Surat goes, no difficulty has been found and as a matter of fact in three out of eight talukas, though the Mahomedan voters are in a minority in proportion of sometimes four to one, sometimes eight to one, even then a competent Mahomedan is elected and there is no hardship at all because Mahomedans have not been given separate representation. After all, what is the situation? Take it that there are some questions on which opinion amongst the two sister communities is divided on racial or religious grounds. So far as local bodies are concerned, there are no such differences as was pointed out by the honourable member Sardar Dalal, but suppose there are, what will be the situation? We are told either the Hindus are in a minority in proportion of one to five or vice versa and even if separate representation is given, Mahomedans or Hindus will be in that proportion and if the questions are decided on racial or religious grounds, then the Mahomedan or Hindu majority which is overwhelming will be able to carry out their wishes. No good purpose will be served. Therefore, why try to enforce upon the administration of local areas a constituency which has not existed up till now and when the whole system has worked so very well.....

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI: No, no.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: My honourable friend who represents Surat and Ahmedabad cities says "no, no". I keenly appreciate his view—he represents a community which wants to come in by, as he says, the back door—he does not want to stand on merit alone. If a competent Mahomedan is found to take his place side by side with a competent Hindu, I see there is no difficulty at all. Opinions will differ. It is impossible to convince a man who refuses to be convinced, but I can say without hesitation that in my district Mahomedan candidates are returned times out of number by Hindu constituencies even when the strength of voters is in proportion of I think eight to one sometimes. Three out of eight talukas is a fairly good illustration to show that there is no such danger as you suppose. However, as I said, it is a matter of opinion. The Government of India have been emphasising the principle that communal representation shall not be given, it is bad and so far as possible the interests of minorities should be safeguarded either by nomination or some arrangements should be made whereby voters in particular groups of Mahomedans may be able to have certain representation. But these are details which you can work out harmoniously and it will be ruinous to the best interests of the country if this principle is allowed to be introduced in this Presidency which, so far as its moderation and sanity in political wisdom is concerned, stands first in the whole of India.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI: How did the Congress accept it?

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: The Congress accepted it when sanity left some of its leaders.

Then, Sir, speaking on the question of franchise, this bill tries to take away the franchise from the propertied classes and the intelligentsia. I say the Act of 1884 was passed side by side with the District Municipal Act of 1884, under the Government of Lord Reay. It was then said that situated as we are in this Presidency where a large number of people are imperfectly educated or not educated at all, the educated classes by their influence, by their education, are people who will lead the ryots and that therefore a franchise based on an education test should be allowed. If that is so, Sir, shall we not recognise the fact that if we give an extended franchise to men who pay eight rupees assessment, we may get men of good common sense who can bring their own experience and common sense to bear upon the work to be done, how are we to find men who will be able to lead them? I have found very often that when people possessing this tax qualification are able to return their own men in a large majority, they have sometimes to import men from outside their constituency to lead them, because they really want men of education and leading to be there in order to help them, though I do not for a moment say that men with imperfect education may not be able to take a fairly satisfactory share in the administration. Therefore, I say that unless and until a very good case is made out to show that the men who hold property to the extent of Rs. 5,000, pensioners, school masters who have retired on a pension, honorary magistrates and other people of intelligence and education have not done their work well while on the boards, it is giving too much to a theoretical principle to disenfranchise them, and to have a uniform representation on the Rs. 8 basis. I hope the Honourable Minister will be able to consider that in the select committee.

Then, Sir, let us see how the bill provides for the carrying out of the several duties which it imposes on the district local board. One of those duties is the creation of a school board. In the Municipal Act, the constitution of the schools committee is dependent on rules made by the municipality itself. But, according to the bill, the constitution of the school board is to be made dependent on rules made by Government, and I share the sentiment of my honourable friend from Ahmednagar when I say that these vital powers which affect the very life of the body shall not be left to rules to be made by Government, and if they are to be left to rules, the rules must be part of the Act itself. Considering the matter further, what are the powers given to the school board? The school board is said to perform the duties and exercise the powers of the district local board in regard to matters of education. When you go to clause 50 of the bill, what are the powers given to the district local board in regard to educational matters? The powers given to the district local board are the provision of suitable accommodation for, the visiting and maintenance of, and the training of teachers for, primary schools, and the general development and extension of primary education. Look where you like in the whole of the bill, you do not find a provision similar to that in section 28 of the Municipal Act, where the municipality is given the power of managing the schools in their charge. In this bill, the power of management is not given to the school board at all. It has been given some powers, but.....

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA: Are these not all matters of detail, which, according to the ruling of the President, should be considered in the select committee and at the time of the second reading?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Mr. Gandhi is dealing with the general provisions, and it is very difficult to draw the line. The Standing Order allows that.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: I think, according to the Standing Orders, I am entitled to discuss the general provisions, and I am discussing them in regard to the constitution of the school board. The bill does not give the local boards the power of management in regard to the schools under their charge. The old powers given to the district local boards in regard to educational matters were also exactly the same as the provisions in the present bill. But, as

[Mr. C. M. Gandhi]

I said, the District Municipal Act gives power to the municipalities to manage their schools.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That would fall within the Compulsory Education Bill. We are now dealing with the Local Boards Bill and you can deal with the school boards only so far as the local boards themselves and their powers in this bill are concerned, but in the matter of education and the management of education, and all educational matters, that would fall appropriately within the purview of the Compulsory Education Bill.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: I accept your ruling, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Mr. Gandhi, I am merely making a suggestion to you. It is impossible for me to say anything definitely. So, you are at liberty to go on in your own way. I merely made a suggestion; you may accept it or not.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: I bow to your ruling, Sir. The whole of it may be unnecessary here. Clause 37 provides for a school board and the constitution of the school board is to be made under rules framed by Government. When we are creating a body, in my humble opinion, that body must have power to do something, the power to manage the institutions which will be there.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You are perfectly justified in speaking from that point of view, but there is this danger.....

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: That bill may be carried or may not be carried.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: From the point of view of order, there is this to be said, that there may be conflict between this bill and the Compulsory Education Bill which is to be brought forward. It is relevant for you to point out that it would be necessary to put something in this bill, so as to avoid any conflict.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: That is exactly what I am doing. There is another point to which I would like to draw the attention of the Honourable Minister. In the provisions of the District Municipal Act there is a distinct section which says that all decisions or resolutions arrived at by sub-committees are appealable to or revisable by the general board. Here we are creating a school board consisting of not only members of the district local board, but also of a large number of members who will be outside the board. There is no provision in the bill....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: With due deference, may I say that you are just now going beyond the line of the first reading? This is really a matter of detail.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: The only thing that I was going to say was that this clause should be amended in order to make the whole machinery of the bill complete. That is all, Sir, that I intended to say on the main provisions of this bill, and I hope that the Honourable Minister will see that the bill is translated into all languages and widely circulated before the select committee considers it.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA (Karachi City): Mr. President, as a Hindu member from Sind, I should like to make some observations with regard to the merits and demerits of the bill. I frankly confess that I have not got any intimate knowledge of the local boards in the province of Sind, as I am not a member of any local board, and I have had very little opportunity of knowing anything about the working of the local boards in Sind or elsewhere. I also admit that my knowledge with regard to the working of the Act in the Presidency proper is absolutely nil. I was very pleased to hear the remarks of some of my honourable colleagues who have been discussing the merits and the drawbacks of the bill for the last three days, and I am much obliged to them for the light thrown by them on the manner in which the local boards are worked.

Though, as I submitted before, I have no intimate knowledge of the working of the Act, still from my common sense point of view, I should like to confine myself only to one or two points which have been discussed at great length by some of the previous speakers. The point on which I wish to lay stress is the question of communal representation. My honourable Mahomedan friends from Sind, I find, have not that ability of expressing their views and putting before the Council their claims in English for the benefit of the Council.

Mr. KANJI DWARKADAS: I rise on a point of order. Is the honourable member in order in making a reflection on the ability of other members?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Reflections on any honourable member's ability are not unparliamentary, provided they are not offensively personal.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: It is not my intention to cast any reflection, Sir. My honourable friend Rao Bahadur Chitale was criticised by more than one member for the speech he has made. Communal representation has been pressed forward by my Mahomedan friends. I am well aware of the conditions prevailing in Sind, and they are entirely different from those prevailing in the Presidency proper. That is the reason why I find the speakers from Sind have been at one with regard to the principle of communal representation. I do not know how the present provisions of the bill will govern the people of the province of Sind. I thought that some of the members might be under the impression that as the Honourable Minister in charge of the bill is a Mahomedan and that as his sympathies are bound to be with the Mahomedans, he has put in a provision for communal representation, but that was a misunderstanding. The other day Rao Bahadur Kale said that such was not the case. I am very glad to say that the Minister in charge is a Mahomedan belonging to Sind and he has looked at the question from a proper perspective. I do not know whether, from his experience of Sind or from his experience of his office, he has come to the conclusion that communal representation to a certain extent is necessary, but apart from my own personal opinion I say that so far as the province of Sind is concerned, it is necessary. In that province, so far as major municipalities are concerned, communal representation has been in vogue. When the question of communal representation in municipalities came on for consideration, a unanimous opinion was given that their Mahomedan brethren should be encouraged and that communal representation should be allowed. We have heard speeches of some honourable members who contend that because we are on our way to attain complete popular government, we must see that these reformed councils are worked in such a way that there is no room for disunion by a separate representation. But, as my learned friend Khan Bahadur Bhutto told you, Mahomedans are a backward community and their Hindu brethren must come forward and help that community, which is called the sister community, in order that that community, which is weak and which requires encouragement, may co-operate with us in making the reforms a success. That was the view we took so far as municipalities in Sind are concerned, and decided that communal representation might be allowed. My honourable friend Mr. Kassim is a municipal councillor of Karachi. He had been representing, before communal representation was introduced, a ward which was composed mainly of Hindu voters, and I cannot bring myself to agree with the contention of some of my predecessors that communal representation would produce disharmony and self-interest. In consideration of his services the ward elected him as its representative in preference to a Hindu candidate. Another ward composed mostly of Mahomedans elected a Hindu as its representative, and it did not consider then that, because they are Mahomedans, they should elect a Mahomedan as their representative. Why do such instances occur though they are rare? It is because there is some kind of union and fellow feeling between different communities living in large cities and towns to co-operate and carry on the administration of municipalities harmoniously and peacefully. Being a backward community they come to us, as we are educated, for help to bring them forward. Should we not as educated and intelligent people accede to their request, and help them forward though we may say that they require to be raised by artificial pulleys by way of communal representation? We do realise and we do know that the Mahomedan community forms the bulk of the population, and that there is lack of education and enlightenment among them. Those gentlemen, very few of them there are, who can come forward and represent the Mahomedan community are always of opinion that in order to elevate their community the Hindu brethren of theirs must come forward and help them by giving them certain concessions, so that it might inspire confidence in them which will make them co-operate with their Hindu brethren and work harmoniously. These are some of the reasons which prompted the Hindus in Sind to see that communal representation in municipalities was not discouraged. From the speeches that have been delivered I gather this much, that the Mahomedan population in the Presidency proper is in the minority. I fail to understand why Hindus, while they are in a majority, and while they can come in without any difficulty, should be reluctant to give this concession to their sister community, and encourage their weaker brethren in co-operating with them in the administration of their country. I hope, Sir, when this bill goes to the select committee, which will mainly consist of members from the different districts of the Presidency proper, they will express themselves in favour of communal representation, so far, at any rate, as the province of Sind is concerned. I feel I have given sufficient reasons to convince and take with me those colleagues of mine who did not agree with me on this point. I make allowances for conditions which are not the same as in Sind. I submit that this suggestion of mine may be duly considered by the select committee when this question of communal representation in the local boards comes before it. In that case, what I would suggest is this: that some provision might be made whereby different parts of the Presidency might be dealt with differently having regard to the different conditions prevalent in them. I have stated, Sir, that in the province of Sind the bulk of the population is Mahomedan. Most of the zamindars and landholders are Mahomedans. We have not got there particularly anything of the kind which might create dissension or disagreement. We have got Mahomedan gentlemen as zamindars and there are a few Hindu zamindars also. My honourable friend Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas remarked yesterday for reasons best known to him that Sind might gain by communal representation but that the rest of the province would not. If that is the feeling, I do not know how the select committee is going to deal with the province of Sind. Hindus are sometimes nominated to the local boards, but the majority of the local boards are composed of Mahomedans. You may call the Mahomedans what you like, say that they are ignorant, say that they are uneducated, say that they are officially taken in. Whatever it may be, if they get Hindus who are educated on the taluka local boards they come in contact with an enlightened section of the community, with the result that they get by way of borrowing some enlightenment which enables them, these ignorant people—that is my humble opinion—to change their views and become one with their Hindu brethren. I give the following as an information to my honourable colleagues. I was appointed by the Karachi municipality to the taluka local board of Karachi. If I remember rightly, the Honourable Mr. Lawrence was the Commissioner of Sind then. Government asked the taluka local board for opinion as to whether they required for the taluka local board an official vice-president and chairman or a non-official as such. The mamlatdar or the mukhtiarkar was the vice-president and chairman of the taluka local board at that time. The bulk of the members of the board were Mahomedans. Everybody or at least I myself expected that the Mahomedan gentlemen of the taluka local board would side with the Government and write to the Commissioner of Sind that they did not want a non-official as their chairman. When I samjaoed them and explained the whole difficulty, they gave up the idea of any powers being exercised by the official vice-president as chairman of the board and they sent up their opinion that they wanted a non-official as their vice-president and chairman. The sum and substance of the whole story is this : that though we may consider communal representation to be very bad, without conceding it feelings between the two communities will become more and more bitter. If we feel that the Mahomedan gentlemen of the taluka local boards will be of no use at all, we Hindus as an educated and enlightened class of people should come in contact with them, educate them and enlighten them, with the result that we shall be able to bring them to our opinion. And thus democratic Government will be attained sooner than otherwise.

[Mr. Dipchand T. Ojha]

With these few remarks, I would suggest that when the select committee comes.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Order, order. You have made this suggestion twice. Let us not go backwards.

Khan Bahadur D. B. COOPER (Satara District) : Mr. President, I am glad I have to follow the honourable member for Karachi City (Mr. Ojha) and support him in his views about communal representation. I beg to express my agreement with the principle, and I am simply sorry that it is not extended to other sections of the community as well. This principle is much reviled in the name of nationality, unity and patriotism as being a means of disruption. On the contrary, I think, so long as the social habits and attitudes continue to remain what they are in this conglomeration of castes and creeds which goes by the name of India, in order to ensure equality of rights, obligations and treatment, every caste and every creed should have a voice in the administration of local institutions at least in the mofussil. There has been any amount of tall talk indulged in, which in effect purports to declare that even in the present condition of things every community is represented on the boards as practically and effectively in the absence of the addition of the principle of communal representation as is proposed to be done now under the bill. Well, is this a fact? I do not think a scrutiny will bear this out. As far as my district is concerned, the figures of respresentation on the district local board are quite different. In my district, Sir, there are in all 19 members on the board. Out of the principal communities that reside in the district, the Brahmin community—38,000 population—has got 10 elected members and 2 members nominated by Government; out of 34,000 Mahomedans there is not a single elected, not a single nominated; Marathas—650,000—only 1 elected and 3 nominated by Government; Jains and Lingayets—42,000 in number—not a single nominated, not a single elected; untouchables 175,000—not a single elected, not a single nominated; others—81,000—2 elected and 1 nominated. The total population of the Satara district is 1,020,000, and its district board consists in all of 19 members, of whom 11 are returned by taluka boards, i. e., one by each taluka board, 1 is nominated by inamdars, 1 by the Satara city municipality and 6 are nominated by Government. Now the figures given by me show that the Mahomedans, 34,000 in number, are without a member; the Jains and Lingayets, 42,000 strong, are without a member; the untouchables 175,000 have not a single member; the Marathas and miscellaneous communities numbering 731,000 have got only 7 members; while a community of 38,000 have as many as 12 representatives on the board. Is that a satisfactory state of things I ask? I should take the liberty of asking the Government to consider the desirability of introducing proportional representation into the constitution of the local boards in view of these facts.

Finally, I sincerely congratulate the framers of the bill on their conscientious attempt the bill evidences, the reducing the official element in the internal working of the board to its minimum importance, so far as it is possible to do without impairing the efficiency and sense of responsibility of the board and its power of doing good to the community. With these words, I support the motion.

Mr. R. G. SALGAR (Sholapur City) (Addressed the House in Marathi): Mr. President, in the first place I thank the Honourable Minister for introducing this Bill No. XVI of 1922. I do not wish to take up the time of the Council in making a long speech. I only want to refer to one or two questions. As regards the question of separate Mahomedan constituency my own experience of my district, district of Sholapur in this respect, is that for the Sholapur city although there are 75 Mahomedans in my ward of the city, they cannot secure sufficient number of votes for themselves to get one of them elected for the municipality. Three years ago there was an election case in which those who had tried to bribe the voters were prosecuted and both of them were disqualified but notwithstanding this the Mahomadens could not come in. Now that is the state of affairs in the city of Sholapur as regards the municipal constituency. As regards district local boards the Mahomedan population is very much scattered in the district and in some villages there are one or two Mahomedan voters and in others there are a few more. And thus it is very difficult for Mahomedans to get themselves elected on the district local board from the general constituency. For these reasons, I must thank the Honourable Minister for creating a separate Mahomedan constituency by which I have no doubt Mahomedans who claim election will be returned to the district local board.

[Mr. R. G. Salgar]

I am only sorry the Honourable Minister has not taken the claim of the depressed classes also into consideration as regards this matter of separate constituencies. The state of the depressed classes in the rural area is very sad. They do not get sufficient water and other amenities of life to which they have equal right with others. If they stand for election for the panchayats according to the newly enacted Village Panchayat Act the patel and kulkarni and rich persons would not allow them to be elected there. The claim of the depressed classes ought therefore also to have been taken into consideration in connection with this measure. I hope that the Honourable Minister will take into consideration this fact.

As regards the inamdars I do not think inamdars require a separate constituency. Most of the agriculturists are their tenants and they can very easily seek election to district local boards through their tenants. Now the bill provides for three-fourths to be elected and one-fourth nominated, but according to new reforms the number of the nominated members ought to be less. So I propose that the elected members ought to be four-fifths and the nominated one-fifth as is provided in the municipal election. Now as regards the supply of funds to the district local boards for their irrigation works, etc., as Mr. Rothfeld indicated that the Government has no funds, I only want to throw in a suggestion, namely, that as Government has issued a loan in connection with the development of Bombay, it would be better if Government also issues a sort of an irrigation loan and thus raises money for the irrigation works of the district local boards. Taxation should be levied to discharge the interest of such a sum. In the Deccan, the agriculturists do not get sufficient water from irrigation, and hence they are in a deplorable condition, and almost all of their lands are mortgaged to sowkars. With these words, thanking once more the Honourable Minister for the liberal measure he has brought forward, I resume my seat.

Khan Saheb I. A. SAHERWALA (Northern Division): Mr. President, I rise to support the first reading of the bill and to say that the communal representation given to Mahomedans in this bill is thoroughly justified. If such representation is not provided for, then I am afraid no Mahomedan would be returned to any local or district or provincial boards in my district in Panch Mahals. There are three taluka local boards in Panch Mahals in which only one Mahomedan could come in only if separate representation is provided for. A large number of Mahomedans in this district are so poor that even under the present franchise many would not get the right to vote. In the whole of the district there are about 80 inamdar voters and they have been given a separate representation in the old district local boards; then it is but right that the Mahomedans should get separate representation in the new law. The honurable member Rao Bahadur Kale laid great stress on his argument against such representation in local boards, saying no religious or sectarain questions crop up in taluka local boards. I beg the honourable member's pardon, and say every now and then questions regarding tabuts and Hindu Ganpati and other processions crop up, and therefore it is equally necessary on local boards as in this council that there should be a separate representation for Mahomedans. I would also urge that in Panch Mahals which is a backward district the presidents should be nominated and not elected, because there are several reasons why Government control is indispensable in my district. I should say about taxation in the Panch Mahals district the cultivators, Bhils, Kolis and Nayakdas are so poor that they cannot bear more taxation in that district.

[Khan Saheb I. A. Saherwala]

Half the land of Panch Mahals is forest land, loaded carts of timber and firewood are coming on the local board roads and no cess is levied on forest income, as also on the abkari revenue. I therefore ask that these remarks should be borne in mind in the select committee.

Mr. S. K. BOLE (Bombay City, North): Sir, I rise to support the bill and in doing so I offer my congratulations to Government in general and to the Honourable Minister in particular for widening the franchise and for removing sex disqualification and giving the boards the power of taxation. I also offer my congratulations for introducing a uniform franchise on the basis of taxation and not on the basis of educational or other qualifications. Up till now, Sir, the minorities ruled the majority and the capitalist and the privileged classes enjoyed the franchise. It is therefore natural that they should try and oppose a measure like this. It is these persons who have been at times asking for democratic measures, and when Government comes forward with such democratic measures, it is these persons again who come forward and oppose them. It was clearly seen at the time the Municipal Bill was under discussion, and when the present bill was being discussed, several efforts were made to thwart it on some pretext or another.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member will be good enough not to refer to any past debates. Concluded debates ought not to be referred to, unless they are necessarily relevant to and connected with the current debate.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: I am only trying to show, Sir, how efforts were being made to thwart the bill on some pretext or another.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Those are past efforts; we have to make new efforts now.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: We have heard a great deal, Sir, against communal representation, but those who are opposing the communal representation have been asking for special representation for the inamdars, which is nothing but communal representation. Several members criticise Government as if the Government was responsible for the caste system that is prevailing in India.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: We don't want them to perpetuate it.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: Of course, Government is not going to perpetuate the caste system, but we must take things as they are. It is the duty of Government to secure representation for all the communities and, unless that is done, there can be no good government as well as self-government. Not only Mahomedans were not able to secure representation on the Legislative Council for several years, but Marathas and allied castes went without representation before the advent of the Reforms Scheme, and it is only when the wise measure of communal representation was introduced into this Council we see so many members on this Council from the backward Marathas and allied classes.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: By exertion.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: So I do not want Mahomedans to be necessarily given separate representation. But give them separate seats in the general electorate. My object is to give them sufficient representation, and I go further and say, give a special representation to the Marathas and allied castes in proportion to their population. The depressed classes should be also given a separate representation. Give them separate seats, if you like, in the general electorate.

[Mr. S. K. Bole]

Do not call them, if you like, the depressed classes or the untouchables. My honourable friend Mr. Rothfeld took exception to that term. Call them Somavanshis and the allied castes, if you like. They do not call themselves Asparshyas. They call themselves Somavanshis. I know there are some associations of these people in Bombay which go by the name of Somavanshis. Call them by that name if you like, but anyhow give them separate seats. Sir, as long as the caste system is there, you will have to give separate representation. The caste system, I am afraid, will not disappear soon. Even in small matters like sports, we see how strictly the caste system is being observed. It is said here, "Deserve and then desire"; but we have seen that though many members from the depressed classes were qualified to be captains of cricket teams, they were not allowed to be captains of the Hindu cricket team in the last quadrangular match. It is all because the caste system is there. From this we see, Sir, what the disadvantages of this system are. It is said that in local boards and municipalities there are no separate or communal interests. It is good to say that, but, Sir, if you will move in the city of Poona itself, as you are moving on the Ganeshkhind Road, you will see that separate water taps are reserved for Brahmins and non-Brahmins who are all termed as Shudras. No better word than "Shudras" could be found by the men concerned. There are separate tanks for Mahomedans. And then, not merely that, but you will see, Sir, there are separate burning grounds for Brahmins and non-Brahmins. When this is the state of affairs in a city like Poona, the state in other towns and villages may just be imagined. I would also cite some instances where fit persons belonging to the depressed classes were elected on municipalities, but as soon as they were elected, other members belonging to higher and advanced classes sent in their resignations in a body. What does that show? You ask them to come in through the general electorates and when they are elected through such electorates, you resign.

Then, even if you assume for a moment that there are no separate interests in local boards and municipalities, still if some communities go without representation, then a bitter feeling would be there. It will not be removed. You will see that when the Indian National Congress accepted the principle of communal representation and gave some seats to Mahomedans, there was no bitter feeling between the Mahomedans and the Hindus. So also if you will give communal representation to Marathas and allied castes, and to the depressed classes, all the bitterness between these communities will be removed. Sir, I have dwelt on this occasion at some length on the necessity of giving communal representation in municipalities and local boards, because I had given notices of resolutions several times on this subject, but my opportunity or turn never came. So I take this opportunity and hope separate seats will not only be given to Mahomedans, but that they will also be given to Marathas and allied castes, and to the depressed classes.

(At this stage Mr. G. C. Bhate and four or five other members rose in their seats to address the House.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I should like to take the sense of the House. I see now for the last one hour arguments have been repeating themselves. If the sense of the House is that they want the same arguments repeated, I am quite prepared to yield, but I wish to know if there is anything left to be said.

Honourable Members: Vote, vote.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : May I say a few words, Sir ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Yes, certainly.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Sir, I feel that the subject of the district local boards is so important, and so many honourable members of this House have taken a direct interest in the administration of such boards, that permission should be given to go on with this debate a little longer. I hope, however, that honourable members will realise the importance of saving the time of the Council and that when they speak they will try to introduce new points only and be as brief as possible. Having regard to the importance of the subject, I would personally deprecate the application of the closure at this stage.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I notice that arguments are repeating themselves. I shall therefore only allow fresh arguments and no repetition.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA (Karachi City) : So far as we, the mofussil people, are concerned, we feel that.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : When the occupant of the Chair is standing, no honourable member should rise on his feet to speak. I think the honourable member, Mr. Ojha, is making a second speech.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA : No, Sir, I am not making a second speech, but I want only to point out that if three or four days are going to be taken over such a matter now before the House, I do not know when it will be possible for mofussil members to finish the work here and get back to their homes.

Mr. G. C. BHATE (Kolaba District) : Mr. President, without making any preliminary remarks, I would like to come at once to the points which I wish to urge. The first point I should like to press is that if we have to choose between a district local board and a taluka local board, I would be the first person to urge that the district local board should be abolished and not the taluka local board. I come from a taluka place and have had experience of the taluka boards for the last 15 or 20 years, and I know what a hindrance the district local board is in the administration of the taluka board from the point of view of the taluka people. The honourable the Deputy President read some extracts from the Lawrence Committee's report, but he was careful enough not to read the paragraph which relates to the abolition of the district local boards.....

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI : I did not refer to that report at all.

Mr. G. C. BHATE : Whichever the report may be, the same report has reference to the abolition of district local boards and the question before the committee was whether the district boards should be abolished or whether the taluka boards should be abolished. Whatever may be the opinion of the people coming from district centres (because so many who have said that the taluka board should be abolished come from district boards of which they are either presidents or members and no taluka local board member has taken part in this discussion as yet), from the point of view of talukas now that we have got the Village Panchayats Act, the next step would be to make the taluka boards as good as possible if an enactment, namely, the District Local Boards Act, is to be amended. We had fond hopes when we were told that such a bill as this was coming forward, that the position of the taluka boards would be very much improved, but I fail to see any provisions improving the status of the taluka local boards. On the contrary, I see that the position of the taluka boards is rendered worse by the provisions of this bill. In order to see how the position is, I would like to refer first to the original state of things. Section 45 of the old Act gave certain revenues to the taluka boards.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Which is the old Act?

M G C. BHATE: The Act of 1884. Section 45 of the Act of 1884 gave certain revenues to taluka local boards for expenditure at their discretion. They are mentioned in sections 45, (a) (1), (2), (3), (4) and (5); but as regards (5), the point is this: paragraph (5) relates to one anna cess, and as regards that one anna cess the position of the taluka boards is at present that the district local board has to assign a certain portion to the taluka boards and that portion is to be assigned on the principle, namely:

"The balance of the revenue described in clause (a) or clause (b) of the last preceding section (namely, 44) levied in the area subject to its authority after the district local board shall have made provision therefrom for the portion to be devoted to educational purposes under section 48 and for such share of the charges payable by the district local board under sections 46 and 49 as the said board shall deem equitable."

The important words are "as the said board shall deem equitable". Experience for the last 20 or 30 years as regards my taluka is that we have never got even one-fifth of the one anna cess, though there is a rule of the district local board of Kolaba district to the effect that not less than one-fifth should be assigned to the taluka local boards under it. So this "equitable" apportionment proved to the detriment of the taluka. What is the position of the taluka boards under the present bill? If we compare the provisions of clause 76 of this bill with section 45 of the Act of 1884, the provisions contained in clause 76 are these:—

The balance of the revenue described in clauses (b), (c), (e), (g), (h), (i), (j) and (k) of section 75 accruing in the areas subject to the authority of such taluka local board, after the district local board shall have made provision therefrom for the portion to be devoted to educational purposes under section 80 and for such share of the charges payable by the district local board under sections 78 and 81 as the said board shall deem equitable.

Thus all the sources including those reserved for the taluka boards open under section 45 of the existing Act have been combined in clause 76 of the bill before the House for distribution among the two boards and the reason given for this change is this, as stated in the statement of objects and reasons:—

"In the existing Act it is provided that the district local board is to devote not less than one-third of the proceeds of the local cess and shop-tax to education, and is to appropriate a suitable portion of the same for certain general charges and for the construction and maintenance of works (sections 45 (a), (5), 46 and 49) and that the balance of the local cess and shop-tax is to be at the disposal of the taluka local boards. It is found that some taluka local boards derive large revenues from the proceeds of fees paid for permission to quarry, while the district local board is unable to levy contributions from them, and may be in a less favourable position financially than the taluka local board....."

And hence it will be seen that the district local boards can claim a share of the revenues that formerly belonged exclusively to the taluka boards. It appears that all funds available to taluka boards under section (a), 45 (1), (2), (3), (4), (5) for their exclusive use have been disallowed and the district local boards can now say that all the revenue belongs to themselves and that the taluka boards must contribute something towards the expenses of the district local boards. So the financial position of the taluka boards is rendered worse by the provisions of clause 76 of the present bill.

As regards other matters, for instance budget, the position of the taluka boards was this, that the taluka boards used to prepare their own budgets to be sanctioned by the district boards and even small appropriations without the sanction of the district boards were not allowed. Under the present bill no independence is given to taluka boards in this matter but their position is rendered worse than what it was before this bill came on the anvil.

Then the other point which I would like to refer to is the municipal representation. Everybody seems to think that municipal representation on taluka boards is unnecessary and that it is a good thing that the bill has disallowed such representation. But from the experience that we have gained in talukas I can say that when a member from the municipality is on the board, the gentleman has experience of the working of sanitation and so on in the municipal areas and that experience of his is of very much use and help to the taluka board. That seems to be the reason why a member from a municipality was allowed to sit on the taluka local board. This principle of the experience of municipal councillors is also admitted in this bill, though to a limited extent, in clause 36 which deals with the school board. Sub-clause (2) of clause 36 says :

"The remaining members shall be elected by the district local board and shall be persons experienced in education, including women, or representatives of minorities or of municipalities in the district."

An Honourable Member : The municipalities are unable to manage their own education.

Mr. G. C. BHATE : So, some of the municipalities at least will have a chance to be on the board. The old provision that the municipalities should have a place on the board was for the benefit of the boards themselves, not for the benefit of the municipalities. The doing away of the representation of municipalities on the local boards will work detrimentally to the interests of the taluka boards themselves. They will lose experienced representatives from municipalities.

Then, as regards the point of the finances of the boards and their resources, while my honourable friend the honourable member for Surat City (Mr. Gandhi) was speaking, the Honourable Minister asked him whether he could suggest any other sources than the ones which are given in this bill. With due deference, I should like to read out to him some sources proposed by the Government officers so far back as 1882. I should like to see whether the Honourable Minister would take advantage of these. They are (1) all ground rent now credited to Government as sale proceeds of land sold for non-agricultural purposes, (2) a separate local fund cess on abkari contracts, and (3) a proportion of the increased revenue derived from the introduction of a revised survey settlement. These are the three sources which, so far back as 1882, were suggested by Government officers should be at the disposal of the local boards. When this bill was under consideration, some questions were sent to the taluka local boards asking them to make suggestions as regards the sources that could be had for the improvement of the revenues of the district and taluka local boards, and from my taluka at least I think a suggestion was made that there should be a one anna or some such cess on the forest contracts. That is a revenue which can be very well had, and the revenues of the district boards can be augmented if a one anna cess or some other proportion is levied from the forest contracts. Very large amounts are involved in these forest contracts which can very well be tapped. One other suggestion that I have to make is that the salt tax should be increased by one anna or half an anna per maund and the surplus should be given to the local boards. These are the ways in which the resources of the boards can be increased, if the Government wish that they should be so increased. I admit that salt is an Imperial head, but Forest is a provincial head.

Then there are some minor points about which I wish to make a few remarks. The present bill does not make any provision for the existing contracts. When the bill comes into force, the absence of any provision that the existing contracts will remain as they are will work hardship. Then as regards.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is there not provision for that under the General Clauses Act? Any contract entered into by law shall remain valid even if the law is repealed.

Mr. G. C. BHATE: The Act of 1884 specifically mentions these contracts and similar provision should be made in this bill.

As regards communal representation, I do not want to repeat any arguments. I am not in favour of communal representation at all. Further, if my information is correct, the Bihar and Orissa Council have a similar measure on the anvil, and I understand that the bill of that Government does not contain this principle. As regards this point, I would only refer to one resolution of the Bombay Government itself. It was a resolution passed in the month of February 1916, and that resolution specifically mentions that communal representation should not be allowed in rural areas. The purport of the resolution is that there should be no representation for Mahomedans in rural areas, the interests of the two communities not being conflicting, except in education. With these words, I leave that subject.

As regards Sind, one word and I have done. If, really speaking, Sind wants this communal representation, then we can make provision for it in the select committee, and leave the Presidency proper to be treated in a separate way. But that point can be considered in the select committee. With these words, I heartily support the first reading of the bill.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Mr. President, I rise to support the first reading of the bill, and, in doing so, I think it is necessary to place before the House for examination the claims which the Honourable the Minister has made as regards granting extended privileges to the rural areas. He claims that the franchise has been widened by introducing a uniform standard; he claims that special educational facilities have been given; he claims further that independence has been given to the local boards in matters of control, and finally he claims that the power of appointment and dismissal of their servants has been given to the local boards. It is necessary that I may be one of those, who congratulated the Honourable Minister not on the scope of the bill but upon the industry bestowed on the framing of the bill, but I cannot agree with him so far as the independence of the local boards and their other rights are concerned.

One of the claims of the Honourable Minister is that in this bill he has introduced a new principle which was not in the old Act, namely, the creation of permanent non-official presidents and non-official vice-presidents. But that is a claim which could not be considered correct, because, according to section 27 of the existing Act, there is the power given to Government to allow any local board either to elect its own non-official president, or for the Government to nominate one, and the Council will understand that the progressive Government of this Presidency has been, from time to time, making liberal use of this option, and, at the present day, many local boards have the power of electing their own non-official presidents.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: No.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Now, in this Council, I believe, we have a member of the Council who is the elected non-official president of a local board in Sind. Now, Sir, the power exists in the present Act, the difference being that what we say now is that there shall be a non-official president, while under the existing Act it was provided that there could be a non-official president I may point out to the Honourable Minister in charge of the bill that with regard to freedom from control his claim is untenable, for the provisions in the old Act and in the present bill are the same. Comparing clauses 124 to 129 of the present bill with sections 62 and 66 of the old Act, you will find that there is neither diminution of the power of control of the Collector, the Commissioner and the Government; the situation of the local bodies remains the same, even worse, for looking into clause 124, you will find that freedom from control is further diminished by insertion of the words "The Commissioner, Collector or any officer of the Government authorised by general or special order of the Government...." So, while the power of inspection was given to one officer, the Collector, in the old Act, it is now given to three different officers. If we proceed further on, we find that Government is authorised to make enquiry in the case of defaulting local bodies. That power was in the old Act and is still retained in the new. But the only difference is this: in the old Act while the Government can supersede local bodies, in the present bill it can dissolve or supersede local boards. That is the only change—and it is a change for the worse—in the whole chapter of control that this House will find. Looking into the bill, so far as increase in the independence of local bodies is concerned, I for one do not find any change. It will be for the Honourable Minister in charge to point out to the House the direction in which any independence has been conferred on district local boards.

Proceeding further, Sir, the same complaint which you, as chairman of the Primary Education Committee, heard that plans and estimates for construction of buildings by district local boards have to be sanctioned and carried out by the Engineering Department of Government and not by the boards themselves and such a condition was a great obstruction to the construction of cheap school buildings, it still remains in the present bill and has not been removed. There is the same restriction upon works exceeding Rs. 2,000, and there is the same restriction with regard to construction of roads which exceed a cost of Rs. 200 per mile. In the Act of 1884, the local bodies were empowered to make roads costing up to a limit of Rs. 50, and construct buildings whose cost did not exceed Rs. 500. This was in 1884, and it is now 1922. The cost of materials since then has increased enormously, and what we find is that Rs. 50 has been increased to Rs. 200, and that the limit of Rs. 500 has been increased to Rs. 2,000. I put it to the Honourable Minister whether the work that cost Rs. 50 in 1884, will not cost Rs. 2,000 now. This is hardly any extension of power conferred on local bodies. The extension of power claimed consists in having increased Rs. 50 to Rs. 200 with regard to roads and Rs. 500 to Rs. 2,000 with regard to other works. The consensus of opinion of the witnesses, you know, Sir, that gave evidence before the Primary Education Committee, was that district local boards should have considerable and wide independence with regard to the carrying out its own works and framing their own plans and estimates. It was one of the points that that committee considered that local bodies ought to be given power up to a certain limit to construct their own buildings independent of the trammels of the Engineering Department of Government. The plans and estimates, as has been pointed out times out of number by my friend Rao Bahadur Chitale, while discussing the budget, framed by the Engineering Department are far too heavy for the district local boards to bear. Those works can be done far cheaper by the boards themselves. It is high time that the district local boards should be given independence in this direction to take care of their works like any private proprietor. That independence has not been given, and the provision stands the same as it is in the old Act, and the local boards stand trammelled as before.

With regard to the appointment of officers, the same old section has been transported bodily into the present bill. As in the old Act, so in this one, all appointments have to be made, subject to such rules as Government may make in this behalf. There is no offence whatever in the wordings. Therefore, Sir, reading these clauses themselves I do not find any justification for any independence granted by this bill. If the extended independence lies only in the giving of a non-official president, or vice-president, I concede the claim. But so far as the powers of the boards are concerned, these are governed exactly by the same limitations as we had before. Sir, with regard to the execution of works, the limit of Rs. 500 of 1884 has been raised to Rs. 2,000 in 1922 : with regard to roads, the limit of Rs. 50 of 1884 for a mile of road has been raised to Rs. 200 in 1922.

Proceeding, Sir, we have got in the new bill a provision for a school board. Section 36 is the only section in the whole of the present Act which deals with primary education. If you, Sir, turn to section 30 (d) of the old Act, you will see that clause 50 (d) of the present bill follows it word by word. So far as primary education is concerned, the duties are the same and the powers of management and control, of which my honourable friend Mr. Chitale has been complaining times out of number and the whole country has been complaining, remain the same. You find only one clause, clause 36 which refers to the creation of a school board. I, Sir, being a member of the Compulsory Education Committee and knowing exactly its intention and knowing also the trend of the evidence that was recorded before that committee, am in a position to say that what is intended is not the creation of a school board to be elected by the district local board from the rest of the world, but that you will find in the Education Committee's report—the creation of a separate independent district education board, and not a school board—an entity separate by itself in which will enter not only some of the members of the district local board, but also representatives of the various talukas of the district and of the municipalities which are not themselves local education authorities. What is recommended by the Education Committee is not the school board, a small minor committee, a branch of the district local board, which can be created by clause 36 of this bill. If any committee under the Education Bill is to be created, it will have to be created out of the general body, composed of some members of the district local board and representatives of rural municipalities.

[Mr. B. G. Pahalajani]

Therefore, Sir, so far as this clause 36 is concerned, it does not solve the difficulty of the Compulsory Education Committee: it does not solve the great problem of the transfer of the management and control of primary education from the Government to the local board. It can only be done as the Education Committee has recommended, by the creation not of a school board as the branch of the district local board, but by the creation of a body independent of the district local board itself, which can delegate its powers, which can create powers by itself, and which, so far as education is concerned, will not be a branch of the district local board. It will be a body in itself co-extensive, as far as education is concerned, as the district local board itself and have command over revenues and expenditure, supervision and control of education. I am sure that you, Sir, presiding over the committee, were in full sympathy with that recommendation of the committee; the whole committee was unanimous in their view that the control of education should be transferred from the Government to the local boards. Therefore, I respectfully submit that the Honourable Minister in charge should bear in mind that clause 36 is only a very poor attempt at supplying the necessary power of managing the whole of primary education as is intended by the creation of a separate Education Board. Clause 36 is a misplacement in this bill. The matter of transfer of powers, you will find fully dealt with in the Compulsory Education Bill.

LOCAL BOARDS BILL (BILL No. XVI OF 1922.)

(Consideration of the first reading resumed.)

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, yesterday I tried to show that necessary provision for education had not been made in the present bill, but such provision is necessary in the case of primary education.

The next important chapter in this bill is the chapter on taxation. Important clauses in that chapter are clauses 93, 95 and 96 which deal with the levy of an additional one anna cess on every rupee of land revenue, that is, land revenue can be doubled if necessary, with the levy of water rate not exceeding two annas to be imposed by Government and other taxes that can be imposed suo motu by the district local boards. Now, Sir, if this new power of taxation has been given to the district local boards for the purpose of better provision of education and if hereafter while deliberating upon the Compulsory Primary Education Bill it is decided that the local boards ought to contribute one-third—a matter which is still under dispute in the various sections of the people—it will be necessary to see that all the powers of taxation that have been conferred upon the district boards will be sufficient to produce an appreciable amount in that direction. The expenditure on collection is a serious factor to be considered in determining the net amount available for the purpose. There is one whole chapter devoted to the collection of taxes. This chapter has to be considerably modified in such a way as to cost the district local boards as little as possible to enable them to carry on the duties that the Compulsory Education Act might impose upon them. Now, Sir, the powers of taxation that have been conferred are certainly no other than those that are dealt with in rule 5 of the Government of India Rules under section 80A, (3) (a), namely, tax on land and land values, tax on buildings, tax on animals, menials and domestic servants, a terminal tax and a tax on trades, a tax imposed in return for services rendered, such as water rates and other rates. Now, so far as the rules under section 80A of the Government of India Act are concerned, these are the taxes which will be good enough for municipal areas, and, so far as those areas are concerned, they are likely to bring a very large amount in those areas, but when these taxes are proposed for district local boards, for rural areas, it is a highly doubtful question whether a sufficient amount will be realised after deducting expenditure to provide for the enormous increased expenditure that the compulsory education will involve. Even at present the financial state of district local boards is such that out of the expenditure of 55 lakhs on primary education they can pay only one-ninth of that expenditure, that is, six lakhs only. The rest has been paid by the Government. If it has to provide one-third, 33⅓ per cent., even on voluntary education it will have to provide three times the present expenditure, that is, 18 lakhs of rupees. If compulsory education is introduced the local boards will have to raise an additional sum of Rs. 42 lakhs. It is a serious question to consider whether these sources of taxation will be sufficient. I put it to the House whether any taxes will be at all necessary were it not for the advent of the compulsory education. The chapter commencing with clause 104 provides for the machinery for the local boards to collect taxes as is done within municipal areas. Municipal area is a concentrated area in which within a small sphere population is collected : it is easy to collect all the taxes in a short time and with the minimum of expenditure but in the rural areas where the areas extend over hundreds of miles and hundreds of villages, it is not possible to create an establishment which will not absorb all the revenue recovered under all these heads. This matter that a machinery for collecting taxes will be too costly was brought to the notice of the Compulsory Education Committee. That committee was considering ways and means to make it possible for the local boards to collect their revenues. It would be time to consider hereafter whether the burden of charges for the purpose of collecting these taxes should not be taken away from the district local boards and laid on the Government which can collect and hand over the collection in the treasury for the benefit of the district local boards. Are we not told that Government will collect the additional cess on the water rate because it is the Government who imposes it ? As regards the taxes that these local bodies may impose, they will have to employ their own agency ; that is the provision in the bill. But I will remind the House that there is a precedent for putting the burden on the Government in the Sind Local Fund Amendment Act of 1865. By this local cess was imposed in the province of Sind. In that very Act there was a provision made for a shop tax. This Act is still in force. The shop tax so levied like the one in the new schedule is to be recovered through the agency of the Government by the Commissioner in Sind. A similar burden can be laid by a special provision in this bill on the Government as was done in the Act of 1865. I would, therefore, submit that while this bill is in the select committee or when this bill comes again before this House at the second reading, this House may consider, may seriously consider, Sir, whether the cost of the collection and the whole chapter on it which deals with the cost of collection should not be done away with and another section substituted for the purpose of throwing the burden of collection on the Government. If compulsory education is to be introduced, the cost of the collection of the taxes should not be thrown by Government on the district local board.

I am prepared to say that if taxation is imposed, and this chapter retained, there will be no saving whatever and the power of taxation that is given by the bill will be altogether futile. It will be only a name ; it will not assist the board to carry forward any new measures of improvement if so minded. I proceed to refer to another chapter on nuisances, on conservancy, which has been bodily taken from the Municipal Act. It is the most unsuitable in the Local Boards Act. The conservancy chapter can easily be applied to municipal areas, because it is easy to administer such an Act within a limited area. But, where jurisdiction extends not to a few villages centred into one, but to thousands of villages, it is not possible to enforce the provisions of nuisance or conservancy clauses through an agency of the district local board or through an agency of the taluka local board. If the function can at all be done, it is through the village community. If it at all can be done, it is through the village panchayats or, as under the Municipal Act, by appointing sanitary committees in rural areas where there are no municipalities. But, so far as the district local board is concerned, I do not think, Sir, it is fit, or fair, or suitable, or that these several porovisions of the Municipal Act can be easily brought into action without incurring enormous expenditure disproportionate to the welfare to be derived by enacting these sections. I therefore submit that this chapter on nuisances is also an unnecessary one, whose retention in the bill has to be carefully considered by the Honourable Member in charge, either at the select committee or at the second reading.

And lastly, Sir, there is the question of franchise. Honourable members will hear from the Honourable Member in charge that this institution of the district local board is in its infancy and it is not safe to remove Government control from it. If one admits that position, he must also admit that the new Local Boards Act which is being enacted is a mere experiment. If the Government is anxious to see how the new members are fit for this kind of duty and that therefore it is necessary for a time to retain the same control with respect to boards, then I say that the new extended franchise, which lowers the right to vote to Rs. 8, lower than that which is considered necessary by Government rules for the purpose of electing a member for this Council, is too low at the presnent time when it is merely an experiment, when the franchise is being extended by way of experiment to befit us for the duties involved. I submit that this new measure will throw upon the district local board an enormous number of voters disproportionate to the necessity of it. The new qualification of an Rs. 8 assessment will defeat the very object for which the bill is proposed, i. e., to fit new men for the work. If, instead of making the Rs. 48 assessment a qualification, a lower qualification, but not so low as Rs. 8, is preserved, I think it would be worth while for Government to consider or for this House to consider whether it will not be necessary to alter it in order to give the board efficiency. But the most important question is, Sir, the communal representation question. So far as I am personally concerned, without hesitation, Sir, I will declare against communal representation. I know its disadvantages, and I have always been able to assert that the communal representation does away with the independence of character which is absolutely necessary for the discharge of one's duties on elective boards. I may say that communal representation has the evil effect of inducing those elected by their community to confine their attention to the needs of their community only, to the complete exclusion or benefit of the other community or communities to whom they are not responsible for their votes. That is the evil effect. I cannot commit my constituency in Sind by any opinion on that point. What I say, Sir, is my own personal opinion. What my Hindu constituency, so far as the district local board or the rural areas are concerned, will say, I am unable to state. I cannot bind them by any expression of opinion which I give on my own behalf alone. I may add that, so far as Sind is concerned, the whole matter can be easily solved by having mixed constituencies, that is to say, by making Hindu candidates seek for the votes of Mahomedans and Mahomedan candidates seek for the votes of Hindus alike. If necessary, reserve some seats for the Hindu minority there. After all, in Sind there is a Hindu minority of one-fourth to three-fourths. It may be necessary to give the Hindu minority there, though they have not demanded it, more representation. A mixed representation with a mixed constituency will, in my opinion, serve better purpose than communal representation, because communal representation goes to accentuate and perpetuate the differences between the two communities. I know by my experience in the municipalities that this communal representation had to be resorted to, not by their free will, but it has been more or less forced upon the municipalities by the local Government, which in Sind is the Commissioner in Sind, of course not by the Bombay Government, which has from time to time declared itself against communal representation. The matter, so far as the municipalities in Sind are concerned, is concluded. So far as district local boards are concerned, the matter still remains open. But the effect of this provision in clause 6 is a matter which remains to be judged not by personal predilections, but by the predilections of the constituency which I represent. I therefore submit to this Council that if the bill is proposed to be referred to the select committee with all its present provisions, it will be absolutely necessary to add and subtract a large number of provisions. It may be necessary to add a new chapter in some cases for the purpose of effectively carrying on real local self-government and of making compulsory primary education a reality in this Presidency.

It is absolutely necessary to think over it again and to go over the chapter on taxation in order to see how it can be made an effective aid for the purposes of carrying on the new business. It will be necessary—absolutely necessary—to husband our resources in the district local boards if district local boards are to be hereafter an unburdened good to the country. And therefore, Sir, whichever members go on the select committee, I will beg of them to take into consideration all these new matters. If they want to create more independence for the district local boards, they should put them in the Act itself and not give them all over to the Government under clause 133 of this new bill to provide by rules. Whichever they choose, place it in the Act itself—take that power once for all unto themselves and not depend upon the mercy of Government who can deprive them of the power by rules.

Sardar Davar T. K. MODI (Surat District): Mr. President, I had no desire to intervene in this debate at this late stage when the patience of the House is almost exhausted. But, Sir, several members have thrown out suggestions that the taluka local boards should be done away with. I therefore deem it my duty to utter a few words of warning.

It is an admitted fact that local self-government has up to now achieved no success; the reason has been that we have not built it up from the bottom. We did not associate the people with the administration of local affairs by establishing village committees and we circumscribed the powers and resources of the taluka boards. We have now got village panchayats and I expected to find in this bill larger resources and powers given to the taluka boards. But to my great regret I find, Sir, that the district boards have not been given larger powers or greater resources, but on the contrary I find that the resources have been still further curtailed. Under the present Act, all the revenue and income derived by the taluka boards are not liable to a contribution to the district boards, but the bill before the House empowers the district board to levy a contribution on all sources of income of the taluka board. This is in my opinion a very retrogade step. In my opinion the taluka board should in the scheme of local self-government form an essential part. It should be the general agency for rural administration and it should be the principal agency. It should have adequate powers, adequate resources and greater independence. The reason for this is this, that the area over which the jurisdiction of the taluka boards extends is such that people in it are known to one another and possess local knowledge and interest. They have interests which converge on definite and recognised objects. But the members of the district boards cannot possibly have much local knowledge, because the area of the district board extends on an average from 1,400 square miles to 4,000 or more square miles, and the conditions of each taluka in a district considerably vary. Therefore, for the purpose of local self-government the district board is a less important body than the taluka board. The district board should deal only with questions of common interest, should have large co-ordinating and financial powers; it should exist for the purpose of co-ordination and taxation, and for executing such functions for which it is specially fitted. The present bill ignores this fundamental principle and, if this principle is not recognised, I am afraid that all the good results expected from this new bill will not be achieved, and this bill also like the present Act will not any further advance local self-government.

[Sardar Davar T. K. Modi]

Coming to the question of taxation, it is a matter of common knowledge that rural boards have made no substantial progress because their resources have been inadequate. How does the present bill propose to increase these resources? Two kinds of taxation have been suggested, the first is the land cess and the second the levy of certain other rates. With regard to the first, power is given to the district board to recommend the increase of one anna cess up to two annas. I am extremely doubtful if the district boards will incur unpopularity and ever make such recommendation. But, even if such recommendation is made and the income of these boards under this head is doubled, that income will be absolutely inadequate because with the rise of expenditure, the expenditure of the board is not only doubled but has increased to a far greater extent and, with the increased liabilities which have been proposed to be imposed upon the district boards, the expenditure will be more than quadrupled.

The other head is that of taxation proposed by this bill which empowers the boards to levy certain taxes which are laid down in a schedule of the Government of India Act. With regard to them, in the statement of objects and reasons the Honourable Minister tells us that the sources of rural taxation for the land cess are very limited. Let us see what these very limited sources are. They are very few, for instance, tolls. We know that tolls are being again imposed and the revenue under that source will not be very large and will not ease the situation very much. Then there is the octroi, the house tax, the wheel tax, tax on animals and a tax on professions and business. Now, Sir, we know that village panchayats are being established under the Village Panchayats Act and the house tax has been made compulsory under that Act, so that that head goes away. Then the village panchayats are also empowered to levy octroi: they may impose octroi if they so choose to do. The only other three sources left are the tax on animals, the wheel tax and the tax on professions. Anybody who is acquainted with rural areas will immediately see that these three sources cannot at all be tapped. Therefore, Sir, the power of imposing taxes which is given to the district local boards is not at all real, but is illusory. (An Honourable Member: Hear, hear.) There is, under one of the present Acts which we are going to repeal by this bill, a power which gives authority to Government to levy a one anna cess on the excise revenue. It is quite true that up till now Government never levied that cess. But recognising the injustice of not doing so they, in lieu of it, made a contribution to the district local board and called it a contribution in lieu of the one anna cess on the abkari revenue. That is now proposed to be abolished by the present bill, and with regard to that the Honourable Minister.....

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Who gave the contribution?

Sardar Davar T. K. MODI: Government, of course.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: The Government of India, not the provincial Government.

Sardar Davar T. K. MODI: I stand corrected with regard to that, but now Excise has become a provincial subject, and the Bombay Government can certainly continue that contribution. It does not matter whether the Government of India paid that contribution or the Government of Bombay did. But the local boards are certainly entitled to that contribution if the present bill is not passed. With regard to that, in the statement of objects and reasons the Honourable Minister very coolly tells us that this tax was never imposed, and by dropping the words "sair revenue" no inconvenience would be caused and the result will be to preserve the status quo. I ask him, Sir, whether it is a correct statement.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: It is.

Sardar Davar T. K. MODI: I submit, Sir, with the greatest deference to him that it is absolutely incorrect. It is not taking the House into confidence, but leading the House on the wrong track altogether. The result of dropping those words from the present bill, as far as my own board is concerned, will be that it will lose a recurring grant of Rs. 14,000 every year. (Honourable Members: Hear, hear).

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: The Government of India decided that the local boards are not authorised to levy that tax, and the whole question has been decided. The Government of India used to give that contribution.

Sardar Davar T. K. MODI: The explanation given by the Honourable Minister does not make me any wiser than I was. I simply say that the result of dropping these words "sair revenue" from the Local Boards Act will be that my local board will lose a recurring grant of Rs. 14,000. By dropping these words, the Government of Bombay or the Government of India will be saving at least a lakh and a half of rupees, because the total contribution under that head amounts to Rs. 1,50,000. I ask if this is a harmless change proposed to be effected by this bill. I respectfully submit that it is not, that instead of increasing the resources of the district local boards this bill only cripples them. This contribution which is made by Government was fixed on the basis of the excise revenue at some distant date. If this had been revised from time to time, the contribution which the district local boards would have derived under this head would have been at least 50 per cent. of their present income. If this power is not taken away by the present bill, if the local boards are fairly treated by Government, and if this cess of one anna is levied on the excise revenue, the income of the district local boards will increase by 50 per cent. I say that the other sources of revenue being illusory and not real, this is the only source to which we must cling.

Then, Sir, as soon as free and compulsory education is introduced, the boards will find that they will lose their income derived as fees from the schools, and, so far as my board is concerned, I know that it will lose an income of Rs. 10,000; so that, if this bill is passed as it stands, my board will stand to lose Rs. 25,000 every year. I want to know if a measure of this kind really increases the resources of the district local boards.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Does the honourable member not want free and compulsory education?

Sardar Davar T. K. MODI : I never said that I did not want free education. I said that the result would be that my board would be losing Rs. 10,000. I would not complain of losing Rs. 10,000 if the other legitimate source of revenue, namely, the cess of one anna on the excise revenue was kept. It is not at all fair to deprive the local boards of that cess at a time when the burdens are going to increase. Free education will come in, and that will increase the burden of the district local boards. Then there will be the duty of registering births and deaths. Although that looks very simple and plain, the expenditure on that head will be considerable, because we have at present absolutely no agency to register births and deaths in villages, where the villages are 700 or 800 in number, and perhaps many more in other districts. The other day an honourable gentleman said that the patels and talatis could be used as the agency for this work as at present. With regard to that, I must say that in those boards in which non-official presidents have been appointed, the Commissioners of those divisions have written to these boards saying that they can no longer employ the agency of patels and talatis even for the purpose of holding auction sales which they up till now held for disposing of roadside trees and grass. I ask, is it treating the boards fairly if the agency of the patels and talatis is taken away by the Commissioners and the further duty of registering births and deaths is imposed on the district local boards ? Then, the burden of making contribution for anti-rabi treatment also comes in. The result of all this will be that the boards will find themselves much poorer, with much less resources than they at present have.

Then, Sir, coming to the question of light railways and tramways, my honourable friend Dewan Bahadur Godbole said that the power to construct such railways and tramways should be given to the district local boards. The Honourable Minister promptly got up and said that that power existed under the present Act, and it was also included in the present bill. But I ask him whether it does not cost money to build them, if it does not require capital expenditure, and, if it does, has he made any provision for that in the bill ? Is it treating the House fairly to say that the power is there ? I say there is no power at all in the bill.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Do I understand the honourable member to say that Government should pay all the money, and that they should carry on the other administration without funds ?

Sardar Davar T. K. MODI : I do not ask for money from Government. I want the district local boards to construct their own railways, and for that purpose has not the power to be given to the district local boards ? Is any provision made in this bill empowering them to borrow money ? Is there any provision for guaranteeing payment of interest on capital expenditure ? Even if there had been any power given to the district local boards to levy special extra land cess for the purpose, then I should have said that satisfactory provision was made in the bill for constructing light railways and tramways. When such powers do not exist in the bill, and when an experienced member like Dewan Bahadur Godbole made a suggestion of that character, I say that it was not correct to say that the power has existed in the present Act and also in the bill. Then, Sir, coming to the subject of execution of works, no adverse criticism would have been made on that head if provision was made in the present bill empowering these local boards which employed engineers of their own to construct their works up to any limit. At present it remains with Government to empower local boards to construct their works beyond a certain limit, even though the local boards may employ engineers of their own. Those boards which have employed engineers have been empowered to construct works of their own up to Rs. 50,000. Every one is complaining about it. I think that a provision must be made in the bill itself to the effect that boards which employ engineers and adequate staff, should be allowed to construct works up to any limit.

Coming to the question of school committees, my honourable friend the honourable member from Surat said that the present bill does not give any further powers with regard to the management of schools than in the old Act. The Honourable Minister after consultation with the Minister for Education stood up and assured us that the next bill, the bill for compulsory education, has made adequate provision for that. Now, Sir, I want to ask the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government whether that bill makes provision for compulsory education up to vernacular standard IV, and whether the district local boards do not make provision for further education. As a matter of fact they do not confine their activities to teaching up to standard IV. What about the management of schools which give education beyond standard IV? Does that bill give power to district local boards to manage those schools? I am assured by the Honourable Minister for Education that it gives further powers than are contained in the present Act. With these observations I resume my seat.

Mr. C. C. HULKOTI (Dharwar District): Mr. President, the bill has been dealt with in its various aspects by several members of the House. In the light of my experience for nearly 7 years on the district local board of Dharwar, I beg to submit that the present bill, considered as a whole, is not satisfactory in many of its provisions. The honourable members who preceded me have covered the ground exhaustively. The first point which has to be emphasised is that this bill for the first time introduces a dangerous principle and that principle is likely to jeopardise the very progress of local self-government. The next point which I wish to make out is that certain provisions in the bill are incapable of execution, and absolutely impracticable. The third point which I would like to make is, that the machinery that is provided for imposing and collecting taxes seems to be quite cumbrous, and it ought to have been simplified. It seems to have been modelled on the lines of the District Municipal Act. The provisions as are found in the bill are absolutely unworkable, so far as rural areas are concerned, which are very extensive. The next most disappointing feature is that the revenue officers of the district are given more power than in the old Act, and I beg to submit that this will hamper the progress of local self-government. With regard to the different committees that will come under the bill, their relation to the district local boards has not been clearly defined and hence they are likely to be misinterpreted. I feel that the committees that have been newly introduced in the bill could be safely deleted. Further I may tell the House that no provision with regard to acquisition of lands and building-sites by district local boards is made in the bill. Unless special machinery is provided for in the bill as in the case of municipalities to be constituted under the new "major municipalities bill," it is impossible for district local boards to go on with their construction of buildings for schools and roads. The last point which I wish to impress upon this House is this: the provision with regard to taxation is such that it is not worth the money that will be required to be spent upon its collection. I wish to submit this point for the serious consideration of the select committee.

[Mr. C. C. Hulkoti]

My suggestions as regards the frame-work of the bill are these. The bill as a whole should be divided into two sections: the first part should contain substantial sections of general application throughout the Presidency, which are capable of being altered by the Legislative Council, and the other part should consist of rules and orders, as in the Civil Procedure Code, which can be left to be amended, if necessary to the corporate local body, subject, of course to the approval of the local Government. I make this suggestion with one view, and that view is this: the local conditions of the rural boards are different, and they require different rules. They should, therefore, be allowed to make their own rules and by-laws under different heads to suit their own conditions and also to meet their local needs. It is quite desirable, in these circumstances, that these boards should be given enlarged powers of making rules and by-laws, and these rules ought to be subject to the sanction ultimately of the local Government.

The frame-work of the Act as it now stands is not so satisfactory as it ought to have been. The first point is as regards the constitution. I beg to submit that the elective element which is now fixed at three-quarters ought to be enlarged and the nominated element should be reduced. I beg to submit that the time has come when the official element ought to be reduced still further and the elective element ought to be increased. The present bill contains some sort of provision for compelling the presence of officials on the board for the purpose of giving expert advice whenever necessary. With this safeguard, I beg to submit that the official element may be reduced to a greater extent. I need not tell the House that the cry of the country, so far as these rural boards are concerned, is that they should be wholly elective bodies, but unfortunately that cry has not been met so far as the provisions of this bill are concerned. The next important matter, so far as the constitution is concerned, is the numerical strength of the rural boards, whether taluka boards or district boards, is not determined in the bill itself, but is entirely left to the rule-making power under clause 133, and therefore the Council is handicapped in determining the strength of the nominated element and the elective element. So, it is not possible to suggest any modifications so far as the constitution is concerned.

Now, I come to the second part of the bill, which introduces an important change. For the first time, as I said in my preliminary remarks, a distinction is made between Mahomedan constituencies and non-Mahomedan constituencies. Before I proceed to make my observations on this principle, I may be permitted to tell this House that I am a non-Mahomedan, a non-Brahmin and a non-Maratha. Still, I beg to submit that this is a most unhappy feature of the bill, and this provision is likely to create a very undesirable exclusiveness between two important communities that have lived side by side in the rural areas quite smoothly and harmoniously for ages together. It will not be surprising if I tell the House, so far as the rural areas are concerned—I come from a rural area myself—there is no distinction at all so far as Mahomedans and non-Mahomedans are concerned. A number of my learned colleagues in this House have given instances from different districts, of cases of Mahomedans being elected by Hindu constituencies. But an attempt has been made to justify this distinction on three grounds. Those grounds, I beg to submit, do not hold good so far as the rural areas are concerned, especially in view of the nature of the duties and responsibilities of the rural boards. The first ground mentioned by the Honourable Minister in charge of this bill was that this principle was not recognised for the first time: it was recognised for election to the local and Imperial Legislative Councils. But, all the same, I trust that he will recognise that the duties and responsibilities of the Legislative Councils and the local bodies are quite different, and that the grounds which justified the introduction of this principle in regard to the Legislative Councils cannot be applied to the local boards. Then the other point urged by the Honourable Minister was that there has been harmonious working in the Councils in spite of communal representation. I beg to submit, Sir, it may be due to the fact, as was mentioned by one of my friends, that there are few grievances now to urge on the attention of Government, because without a great deal of cry they are likely to be remedied very easily. I think this probably accounts for this harmonious working, if I may be allowed to use the words of the Honourable Minister, meaning that sectarian questions were never urged by my Mahomedan colleagues in this Council. Again some instances were quoted of this communal representation being extended to Mahomedans in the provinces of the Punjab and United Provinces. So far as I know, there seems to be a greater distinction and cleavage between the Hindus and Mahomedans in those provinces than in this province, and it may be necessary there in the interests of the two communities that the Mahomedans should have separate representation. But here in our Presidency, so far as rural boards are concerned, I think it is quite essential in the interests of both communities, if they are to live side by side amicably, that this distinction should not be carried further. This distinction should not be perpetuated any further. If once you introduce this principle of communal representation in the rural areas, we do not know where we shall be able to stop. It has already been suggested by a number of my honourable colleagues in this Council, for instance Khan Bahadur Cooper, who comes from Satara, that almost all the communities, the Marathas, the depressed classes, the Lingayats, in fact almost all classes, should be given communal representation. In order to be consistent and logical, you must concede that claim, if once you suggest that there is justification to introduce such a distinction in this bill to safeguard the interests of important minorities.

Mr. O. ROTHFELD: Sir, to make it quite clear—I could not catch the honourable member—am I to understand that he is arguing that there should be no nomination at all?

Mr. C. C. HULKOTI: That is not exactly what I say. I object to the official element, and there should be no nomination of officials. So far as the non-official element is concerned, I agree that there may be nomination. I think the interests of the Mahomedans in rural areas may be safeguarded by lowering the franchise still further, from Rs. 32, to Rs. 8, so far as the district boards are concerned. So far as the taluka boards are concerned, may I submit to the Honourable Minister in charge of the bill that the franchise of Rs. 8 should, if feasible, be still further lowered, so that the Mahomedans in rural areas may increase their voting strength by the lowering of the franchise? It should also be considered whether the principle of co-option should be given to these local bodies under the Local Boards Act if it is likely to help my Mahomedan brethren in rural areas. This question may be considered in the select committee. As I said Rs. 32, so far as the rural areas are concerned, is a higher qualification and it should be reduced to Rs. 16 or Rs. 8 or the same franchise may be adopted both for the district and taluka local local boards. Then there seems to be one more important omission so far as the franchise is concerned, namely, the property qualifications which were contained in the old Act. These have been entirely omitted from the new bill and the reason why they were omitted is not clear and, as stated by the Honourable Minister in charge of the bill, is not valid. It seems to me under the present provisions of the bill, persons owning lands but living within municipal limits are entitled to a vote but not those who own other property than lands. If the property qualifications are introduced just like those that were in the old Act many in municipal areas will be enfranchised. For instance, any man having moveable property worth about Rs. 2,500 instead of Rs. 5,000 as in the old Act, and every man who has an earning of Rs. 250 annually instead of Rs. 500 as in the old Act, must be enfranchised under the new bill. This qualification would, if introduced, enfranchise a large number of Mahomedans who live in the cities and in municipal limits, and also other people who live in municipal areas. As municipal representation has been entirely done away with, it seems proper and desirable that these people in the municipal limits should have the power of vote in the district as well as the taluka local boards. In the old Act there was reason for refusing the franchise to these people and the ground was that the municipalities had the power of sending their representatives to the taluka and district local boards, and therefore there was some reason for refusing the franchise to the people living within municipal limits. Now that reason is gone. Therefore, I think it is much better to enfranchise these people in order to have their say in the representation of the local boards.

Now I come to the provisions, so far as the school boards are concerned. As the matters stand at present the school affairs are entirely in the hands of the Educational Department, which department is entirely under the control of the local Government. I think, Sir, it is now high time that some changes should be made to empower these rural boards to exercise some effectual control in the matter of primary education within their jurisdiction. It appears to me that a provision for the first time has been made in this bill for the constitution of the school boards. Unfortunately, I find looking to the provisions that affect the school boards that there are serious defects, which ought to be remedied by the select committee. The constitution of the school board is again left to the rule-making power of the Government itself, and secondly the numerical strength also is not satisfactory, and it would be rather perplexing to note the various elements that are required to be represented on the school board. It makes provision for the minority, it makes provision for women and it also makes provision for people with educational qualifications, and we do not know according to the provisions in the bill whether these school boards are to be carved out of the members of the district local board itself or entirely distinct bodies completely independent of the district boards, so far as the control and management of schools is concerned. It was suggested yesterday by my honourable friend Mr. Pahalajani that these boards ought to be completely independent and that they should have definite powers and definite mode of control over primary education in rural areas, and taking this view to be correct, I beg to submit to this house that this provision, so far as the school board is concerned, may be very safely done away with, as it forms no part of this Act which is meant to control the district and taluka local boards.

[Mr. C. C. Hulkoti]

Then, it was claimed by the Honourable Minister in charge of the bill that it is intended by the new provisions in the bill that the control of primary education in rural areas should be more within the powers of the rural boards, but I beg to submit that the relations of the boards to the Educational Department are again entirely left to the rules to be made by the local Government under clause 133 and we do not know what the rules will be. All that the Council is asked to give an opinion now is as to the formation of a school board. However, I will suggest some likely powers that ought to be entrusted to such a committee. If at all a committee of the school board is to be formed, the committee at least should have the power of appointment, transfer and promotion of teachers in these schools, and it should have also the power of opening and closing schools and also the freedom of any selection of the curriculum in the rural schools. These ought to be entrusted entirely to the hands of these boards.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. The question of curriculum and internal administration is not a matter for legislation. It is an administrative measure.

Mr. C. C. HULKOTI: I bow to your ruling, Sir. I am not going any further into it, but I would only point out that the special officer that was appointed to report on local self-government has, I believe, recommended all such powers being given to a schools committee to be formed ....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: In what bill ?

Mr. C. C. HULKOTI: I think it is Mr. Martin's report.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You had better drop it and not enlarge as it is an administrative matter. We have got to do now with the general powers of the school board and of the local boards.

Mr. C. C. HULKOTI: I beg to submit that a curriculum with a number of optionals, may be placed for selection in rural boards, so that they might have in hand a selection of one set of curriculum which is suitable for their own area. This is simply a suggestion which I make for adoption by the select committee.

Then, I come to the next point, the public health committee, which is to be appointed under the new Act. I only say one word with reference to this, namely that the sanitary provisions, which have been provided for in the new bill seem to me to be quite unworkable, and without an efficient staff it is impossible to carry out the provisions as detailed in the bill.

Now I come to the general provisions as regards finance and taxation. The Honourable Minister in charge of the bill told us that these rural boards have been given the powers of expanding their resources to a material extent; but, however, I do not agree in this respect with the Honourable Minister in charge of the bill. The only source of taxation which is given and which is likely to bring in a decent sum to some rural local boards is the assignment of a cess on water rates in their respective areas. But I beg to point out to the Honourable Minister in charge of the bill that in my district there are very few irrigation works, and also in other districts, such as Belgaum, Bijapur and others and it is not likely that this source of taxation would be a great source of revenue to those local boards. The other taxes which are suggested are those mentioned in schedule II of the Government of India Act. With regard to these, I would simply content myself with the remark that these taxes also are very difficult to collect and very expensive.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I ask whether you are not now repeating what has been said by half a dozen honourable members who have spoken on that point? I am afraid it comes within the Standing Order as to tedious repetition.

Mr. C. C. HULKOTI: I bow to your ruling, Sir, but I am only suggesting one or two taxes which are likely to be of use to these local boards. I am against raising the one anna cess to two annas. I beg to point out that the agriculturists in the rural areas are already heavily taxed and it is not desirable to tax them any further and I see a probability of discontent and agitation amongst agriculturists. Therefore, I wish to suggest other taxes for the consideration of the select committee. For instance, a tax on pilgrims who generally resort to shrines periodically in the different parts of the Presidency might be a good source of income and this point might be considered thoroughly by the select committee. I also wish to point out that a surcharge on income-tax would be a better provision and a provision which is likely to bring in a good deal of revenue to these local boards, and this would help them materially so far as finance is concerned. Further, it seems to me, it would be possible to have a license fee on all non-agricultural incomes and it can be very safely and without much trouble and expense introduced, and these taxes I have suggested in order to lessen the burdens of the agriculturists in the rural areas who, as I have already said, have been overtaxed.

With regard to official control, I beg to point out to this House that decentralization is the best remedy for removing apathy and indifference of the members of the rural boards and it is far better in the interests of the boards themselves that this official control should be relaxed. To my great surprise, I find that a number of additional provisions have been made in the last chapter, specially clause 128, which empowers the local Government to institute local enquiries into the affairs of the local boards whenever they think fit to do so. And the next power which is given is rather a very dangerous power, namely, the power of dissolution, which was not in the old Act itself.

So far as the machinery for collection of taxes is provided, as has already been said, it is rather expensive and it runs on the lines of the District Municipal Act. As the areas of local boards are bigger, it is not possible to have such a machinery. To illustrate my remarks.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: But I thought you had exhausted your remarks regarding the machinery for collection of the taxes. Instead of going to the head, you are going to the tail again. That is against the Standing Orders.

Mr. C. C. HULKOTI: For collecting the taxes, you have first to prepare and present a bill to every individual tax-payer, and then again a notice of demand, and then again a warrant has to be issued. This is an expensive process and extremely cumbersome.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You are again going back to the question of machinery for collection of taxes.

Mr. C. C. HULKOTI: May I submit that I am making all these remarks so that they might be taken into consideration by the select committee?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I have allowed honourable members to refer to the select committee, but now you are going back to what you have already said.

Mr. C. C. HULKOTI : With respect to the statutory limits which have been fixed at Rs. 200 in the case of roads and Rs. 2,000 in the case of buildings, I fear they will not be of great advantage to the rural boards, and this power seems to be quite illusory in these days of high prices. So far as buildings are concerned, it is a well known fact now that it takes nearly Rs. 3,000 or Rs. 4,000 to construct an ordinary school building and therefore all these constructions shall have to be handed over to the Public Works Department.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Is not that a matter of detail ? There is no principle of the bill involved in it. Is not that so ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Yes, Sir. The honourable member as a member of the board ought to know that.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I am not concerned with what the honourable member ought to know or ought not to know, but it is not a matter affecting the principle of the bill. It is a matter of detail which can be worked out in select committee and at the second reading.

Mr. C. C. HULKOTI : I bow to your ruling, Sir. One word more and I have done. As regards the abolition of the taluka local boards, I am against the proposal. That is all I wish to say.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : Mr. President, I think that this House is probably well satisfied that they have had a very satisfactory preliminary examination of the principles of this bill and that the result of the investigation of so many nooks and crannies may make for a saving of time when we come to the second reading. I take it, Sir, that your ruling that all these matters such as taxation, franchise, communal representation and so on, may appropriately be discussed at the second reading will render it unnecessary for us to anticipate any adverse vote at this first reading. I gather the same inference from the numerous references which have been made and which have been banned by you, Mr. President, to the possibility of committing this bill to select committee. In those circumstances, I wish to confine my remarks practically to one point only. I would, however, first of all, congratulate my honourable friend opposite, Sardar Modi, who has, I understand, just made his maiden speech, on his admirable survey of the general field. I should also like to console him a little. He seems to think that the Government have adopted some sinister design for robbing his district local board. Sir, I wish to assure him that we have not thought of robbing the Surat district local board. We have in the past, as I see from the figures here, subscribed no less than four and a half lakhs out of his annual revenue of seven and a half lakhs and since he has made a reference to the continuance of a particular subvention of Rs. 14,000 for excise, I assure him that we have not considered cutting off any subvention which has hitherto been paid to his board. I hope, Sir, that he may now look upon the bill with a less jaundiced eye.

I would now ask permission specially to refer to the point which has evidently aroused a certain amount of emotion and in regard to which I think it is particularly necessary that we should have a perfectly cool and reasoned judgment. I refer to the question of communal representation. From the remarks that have been made by honourable members from different portions of the Presidency, it is very clear that this question has assumed a very varying degree of importance in the different areas. In that happy country of Gujarat, owing, I think, probably to a very equal distribution of interests, castes and creeds, this question is evidently of very little importance, but elsewhere, for instance in Sind, it has been discussed frequently with burning heat. And the case of Sind is one which is especially illustrative and educative. You heard the honourable member Mr. Ojha explain to you in eloquent language how in Sind the influence of the adoption of this method of communal representation has led to better feelings and greater union and accord between the two sections of the population there. That, Sir, is the chief lesson which, I think, we can draw from experience which we have gained in this Presidency. In Sind you have the Hindus in a minority and the Mahomedans in a large majority, and communal representation, if it is adopted at all, will in Sind give protection to the Hindu interests as against the Mahomedan, and in respect of that fact you have here the notable instance of Sind Mahomedan zamindars expressing their vote in favour of communal representation in order that the Hindus may have a fair share on the district boards. Now, Sir, that is a very striking fact. It may be said that the Mahomedan zamindars are induced to adopt this view in order to give protection to Mahomedan interests in the Presidency proper. If that be so, it is a proper method in politics; and will the Hindus of the Presidency proper refuse to reciprocate in this matter for the benefit of the Hindus of Sind?

We have also heard several members state that there is no division of interests in matters dealt with in this Act. One honourable member who, I think, must have made a very cursory inspection of this bill, told you that it dealt only with roads and buildings. I think he must have omitted to notice those clauses which give power over matters of sanitation, which give power to the district local board to issue orders regarding grain markets, meat markets, slaughter houses; water supply, and in fact all those intricate details which affect our lives. How can it be said accurately that this bill deals only with roads and buildings, and will not affect those sections of the community which have so different interests and different points of view on these important matters of rural life? But, Sir, it is a common belief of human nature that persons who possess power and influence are themselves the best representatives of all the interests committed to their charge. We have seen that instanced in the history of representative government in England. We know that in former days, when the rich and noble had political power, they thought that the country would be ruined as soon as power devolved on the commercial classes. We saw again that when the commercial classes succeeded to power, they considered that ruin would follow if political power went into the hands of labour, and now since in recent years we have had labour interests represented in Parliament, we have seen far better feelings, better concord and far more harmonious working than in previous times. Similarly also, in the case of the representation of women, we used to hear that there was no such satisfactory custodian of women's interests as the men in power. Since that theory also has been given up, we find greater concord in political life in England, and when the British constitution was strained to the utmost during the Great War, we found all these interests combining, and they showed a most wonderful instance of concord and union. It is true that the case which I have taken may be stated not to be on absolutely parallel ground, for there is not in law, in England, any provision that requires the representation of these various interests either by men or women. Nevertheless, what the law omits to provide actually occurs through economic and social causes in that country. If you wish to have concord, union and good-will in administration, you get it not by ignoring conflicting interests, but by calling them into consultation. I think, Sir, the application of these remarks is sufficiently clear whether in the Council such as that in which we are now sitting or in the local board whose administration we are now discussing. I trust, Sir, that when we come eventually to voting on this most difficult and contentious question, all members of this House will feel that they should be actuated not so much by the local experience of their own particular locality as by the widest and broadest interests of the Presidency at large.

Honourable Members: Vote, vote.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have got here the names of several honourable members who had risen and whom I should like to call upon to speak, unless the House desires that it should proceed to vote, in which case a closure must be moved.

Honourable Members: Vote, vote.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): I had risen on Saturday evening, and you told me that I would be allowed to speak on Monday.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: To-day is Tuesday. Unless somebody proposes a closure, I cannot do anything.

Mr. F. NELSON: Sir, I beg to propose a closure.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Really I think we have had a very full discussion.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: You may assign a time limit if you like.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have no power to assign a time limit.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Sir, much has been said on this bill, and I do not want to indulge in repetition, but the discussion that has followed on this bill has convinced me that the bill that is placed before us gives devolution of powers as recommended by the Decentralisation Commission, just as in the case of provincial Government as distinguished from the Imperial Government. But when our Councils were enlarged and when we got enlarged provincial Government, when we got this division of transferred and reserved subjects, and also when nation-building departments were placed under the Ministers, we were also given the sinews of war, and the discussion that has gone on on this bill has clearly proved that each and every district has voiced the feeling that is in the country that the bill (although they have not seen it, they have anticipated it) that is placed before the House is a bill for the devolution of power, for giving the local boards more functions, for giving them more obligatory duties and discretionary duties, but without providing the sinews of war. If you give us more duties.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is not this an argument which has been made by nearly every honourable member who has spoken before now?

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: I am making a comparison between the relations of the provincial and Imperial Governments and those of the provincial Government and the local boards. Unlike the provincial Government, the local boards are given more power without any fixed revenue. When these extended powers are given, Government must clearly assign a fixed proportion of the provincial revenues for the use of the local boards. The Honourable Mr. Lawrence just now said that he was not going to cut down anything that is being given ; I thank him for that. But where is the provision in the bill that a fixed proportion shall be given to the district local boards, when we assign to them a larger number of functions ? So, I say that unless you give the local boards a fixed part of the revenue and make provision for that proportion in the bill itself, the local boards will be left to the mercy of Government, and the Government, poor as it is, and with their own burdens of provincial administration, may turn round and say " We have no money ; you mind your business ; find the money by taxing yourselves ". It is all right to say that we are against taxation. I say that Gujarat is not against taxation, but Gujarat finds in this bill that Government has taken upon itself no responsibility for fixing the proportion to be given from the provincial revenue.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : May I ask the honourable member whether he knows of any law in any civilised country which by legislation has fixed that a certain definite portion of its revenue ought to be allotted to any particular subject ?

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : I am coming to that.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Is there any instance ?

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : I shall give the instance of our own Government.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : By law ?

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : Yes ; by law. Certain revenues are assigned like that : take for instance forest revenue. When the Imperial Government and the Provincial Government agreed to divide their finances, the Provincial Government insisted upon assigning certain fixed revenues to them. When you are going to give the district local boards further powers and functions, are you not going to assign them some fixed proportion of the provincial revenue ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I am putting it as a point of order. Giving a fixed proportion by an administrative measure is different from prescribing by legislation a fixed proportion of the general revenues of the Government for a particular object or body.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : The land revenue, and forest revenue come from rural parts, and if you take away all the revenues of the rural parts, and give us more functions, where is the money to come from ? Therefore, I want the Government to give a fixed proportion of provincial revenue. The Act of 1869 gave local bodies a certain fixed scale of revenue derived from Forests, Excise, and Salt. The present Act abolished it. Take the instance of my own district : we have got good forests and salt pans. The Government disallow us having any of these revenues : the big sources in my own district are denied to me. They do not take any responsibility to finance me. The bill is a mockery and insult to this House, unless Government comes forward and says that we are going to give you certain proportion of such and such revenue, and to allow you to have your own resources. If the Imperial Government objects to it, we should fight with them. Unless you do that, my district has asked me to strongly protest against this and say that they do not want any more functions, when the power to tap their own resources is denied to them, and when the Government gives only a few sources of revenue which are difficult to be collected, and asks them at the same time to do a number of things which they are unable to do. Therefore, the bill is a farce and mockery to them.

Mr. G. FINDLAY SHIRRAS: Sir, may I put in a word explaining what is being done in the United Kingdom? The honourable member for Surat, Mr. Gandhi, in the course of his speech yesterday put a question whether it was the case in the United Kingdom that Government assigned certain revenues annually to local authorities, in addition to the amounts raised from the rates. I have since looked into the data, and I find that the payments so made are comparatively small and are the proceeds of certain excise license duties, part of the beer and spirit duties, and part of the probate and estate duties. The main sources of local revenue are rates. In 1920-21 the payments to local taxation accounts amounted to nearly £11,000,000. Figures are not yet available of the total local revenue for 1920-21, and the latest detailed figures are for 1917-18, which show that the total revenue from rates, Government contributions, water, gas and electric light undertakings, tramways and light railways, loans, etc., was approximately £174,000,000, and rates alone amounted to over £75,377,000 of which £11,715,000 were from County Councils, £7,016,000 from urban districts, and £3,191,000 from rural districts. A major portion of the revenue comes from rates and the receipts from water, gas, and electric undertakings. The whole point is this: in the United Kingdom no large sums.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is such portion of the general revenues fixed by legislation?

Mr. G. FINDLAY SHIRRAS: No, Sir; not by legislation. The sums are equivalent to the proceeds in some cases of the year 1908-09 and in some cases of the current year.

The THAKOR of AMOD (Gujarat Sardars and Inamdars): Sir, I feel it my duty to congratulate the Government and the Honourable Minister in charge. I find that the fundamental defects and deficiencies have been left untouched. The local boards have been in existence since 1884, and yet we hear it said that the rural population is apathetic, and do not take a keen interest in local board matters, and that the attitude of members as a class is lukewarm. The Bombay Local Fund Act was passed in 1869, and not a pie of the local cess has been spent in several villages for years past. I think these disappointing results are due to the frame-work of the Act in existence.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member is reading his speech and going into a historical survey.

The THAKOR of AMOD: The main thing is this, Sir, out of the one anna cess they pay now, 4 pies is used for the educational advantage of other villages, as they themselves have no schools; 5½ pies for the district boards, and 2½ pies are spent in larger villages which are lucky in sending members of their own. And the result is, as I have already said, the poorer villages receive scanty attention. I may instance the case of the Azamnagar village. They have paid in the last 50 years Rs. 21,593 and not a single pie has been spent there. Another village Matarvato in the last 53 years has paid Rs. 22,586, but not a single farthing is spent there. The third village is Wadia—I have the honour of being the owner of it—and it is neglected absolutely. The cess paid is Rs. 27,000 but not a single pie has been spent there. And in another village, Ranipara, Rs. 14,000 has been paid, but except during the last three years nothing has been spent there. In the Amod taluka, where I live, the income is about Rs. 29,000, but we now get only Rs. 5,000 : we have got 52 villages and it is most difficult to meet their needs. What I propose now is that out of the one anna cess 4 pies should be set aside for education, 4 pies to the taluka board and 4 pies to the district board, and 2 pies out of the 4 pies allotted to the taluka board should be earmarked for the villages and handed over to the panchayats. Let the people know that they get something to do and that they have something to look after. I would suggest that some provision should be made in the bill to this effect and this may be considered in the select committee. The village panchayats are thought to be failures, but it is due to the fact that they get no share from the local cess. We people in Gujarat are in a very bad situation. Unless we give something to the panchayats, how can we tell the people that there will be something for them ? My suggestion is that if you give this 2 pies to the panchayats they will be a success.

Now, I come to the point of the inamdars, who have unfortunately been made a target to shoot at. Excluding Sind, the number of inami villages is about 267 in the Northern Division, about 1,046 in the Central Division and about 723 in the Southern Division, and I believe their claim is quite justified. It may perhaps be not suitable to send one member out of them to every taluka, but I see no reason why one out of them cannot be sent to a district board. They are a responsible and influential element. I do not want this thing on sentimental grounds. They are an influential class and they have worked usefully all the time and their work has been recognised by Government themselves. In the Wagra taluka in village Kalam the inamdar paid about Rs. 30,000 and he has got only Rs. 5,000. In the Zinibal village Rs. 3,600 were collected, but only Rs. 400 was spent. In the Khud Khundali village Rs. 3,600 was collected, but only Rs. 600 was spent. Not a pie was spent in the last ten years in Harinagar and Zinibal.

Now, a few words about Mahomedan representation.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I think we have had enough of it. It should not be tediously repeated.

The THAKOR of AMOD : Then, I come to the important point of taxation. In the old Acts, III of 1869 and I of 1884, it was lawful for Government to levy one anna cess, but it was not obligatory on Government. And so Government was in a position to keep up their promises given now and then to talukdars, but now I find under the bill that it is obligatory on Government to levy a cess not exceeding 2 annas in the rupee. Under these circumstances, I fail to see how Government will be in a position to keep up the promises given by several Government resolutions that the cess will be charged only on the jama they pay to Government and not on the full assessment.

I do not think I need go into details at the first reading. With these words I support the first reading of the bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : May I say to the honourable member that he has given us strong proof that he makes himself more effective by speaking than by reading, and hereafter I shall be very strict in not allowing him to read at all ?

Major-General W. E. JENNINGS : Sir, I move the closure.

Rao Bahadur R. M. NILKANTH: I want to speak, Sir.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA: I too want to make a short speech and to refer to some historic points.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: We will adjourn now, and resume at half past four, and I will then consider whether I should accept the closure.

After recess.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, Order.

Mr. B. P. PATEL (Ahmedabad District): Sir, I rise to oppose the first reading of this bill. Although the present bill is a distinct step in advance to train the villagers for local Swarajya, still it is not a perfect one. When villagers are going to be saddled with the responsibility, it is but fair that they should be consulted beforehand. If this bill is passed in hurry, a great injustice will be done to the villagers. On the 30th of August a large number of landholders of different villages gathered at my place, Aslali, in order to record their votes for a certain local board election when they made to me a serious complaint that, although they heard about a new local board bill coming before the September session, they were all ignorant as to what that bill was, namely, that they had not then got the translation of the bill. Sir, such an impression on the minds of the villagers is very bad; I mean if they once find out that the Council passes bills without caring to know the views of the public beforehand, they will begin to lose their faith in the present councils. Therefore, the first reading should be postponed to ascertain the views of the public. With these words, Sir, I oppose the first reading of the bill.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA (Bombay City): Sir, I rise to give my whole-hearted support to the first reading of this bill and, in view of the several speeches that have been made by some of the honourable members of this Council opposing the principle of communal representation in the proposed bill, I, as a Mahomedan, would be failing in my duty if I were not to rise and make a few observations on that point. As you know, Sir, the Mahomedans in this Presidency proper are in the minority and they feel very keenly that the Mahomedans had not any adequate share in the affairs of the local administration. Individual representations were made from time to time to the heads of the departments and these individual representations eventually culminated into a very important deputation that awaited upon Lord Minto in the year 1906. That was the deputation not of any province, but it was an all-India Mahomedan deputation, and one of the grievances in that deputation was, as I said, that the Mahomedans being in the minority had no adequate share in the administration of local affairs. When that important deputation awaited upon the Viceroy, Lord Minto, he assured the Mahomedans as to what the Government of India then thought on the important question. This fact has not been touched upon by any honourable member here in the debate. I would beg to refer for the enlightenment of those honourable members who oppose the communal representation that it was at the request and at the wishes of all-India Mahomedans that the policy of communal representation was enunciated by the Government of India as far back as 1906. Then the representation of Mahomedans as a community was clearly promised in the municipalities and the district boards by Lord Minto, and it would not be out of place here to refer to that momentous assurance given in reply to the deputation on October 1st 1906. His Excellency then said:

"The pith of your address, as I understand it, is a claim that in any system of representation whether it affects the municipalities, a district board or a Legislative Council, in which it is proposed to introduce or increase an electoral organization, the Mahomedan community should be represented as a community. You point out that in many cases electoral bodies as now constituted cannot be expected to return a Mahomedan candidate, that by chance if they did so, it could only be at the sacrifice of such candidate's view to those of a majority opposed to his community, whom he would in no way represent. You justly claim a numerical strength in respect to the political importance of your community and the service it has rendered to the empire. I am entirely in accord with you."

This is the policy, Sir, enunciated as a result of that deputation sanctioned by the Secretary of State and followed successively by several provincial Governments and the Government of India. Even no mean authority such as the late Mr. Gokhale once also pointed out in the Legislative Council debate in the year 1901 that, although they conceded that the Mahomedans were in the minority and the Mahomedans could be adequately represented by nomination, still it would be better if the Mahomedans were given a special electorate. That is the policy, Sir, which is enunciated by the Honourable Minister in this proposed bill and it is unfair to lay criticism against him and to say that he has enunciated a policy of creating racial feeling and unpleasantness. I point out this, Sir, with a view to show that it was not a new and novel policy on the part of the Minister, but that it is policy affecting the whole of the Mahomedan community in India and that policy was asked for at the request of the Mahomedans in general, and accepted and followed by all the provincial Governments.

Then again, Sir, a criticism has been levelled against the communal representation on the ground of identical interests and creating racial ill-feeling. Much has been said on these points by several speakers who have supported the bill, but I would like to point out only one thing, Sir, that if there are any identical interests of the two communities they are in the Legislative Council much more than what they are in the local board of a province. I admit, Sir, that no doubt in the local board administration some interests may be identical, but I do say, Sir, that it would be foolish to deny that there are some matters of the highest importance where the interests of the two communities often clash. They have been pointed out by the Honourable Mr. Lawrence, and some more I can suggest and they are in matters of education, linguistic questions, music before mosques, employment and so on. These are matters vitally affecting Mahomedan interests in general and as experience shows they often clash.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Will you allow me to interrupt you a little?

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA: Very well, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: For the guidance of honourable members, I should remind them that the rules to be observed in this House are that members during the sitting of the Council ought to keep their places, ought to enter or leave the House with decorum and ought not to read books, newspapers or letters. That is the Parliamentary practice. I observed an honourable member reading a book and therefore I thought it was my duty to say that the rule extended not only to newspapers, but also to books. Now you can proceed with your speech, Mr. Havelivala.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA: In these matters, as I said, the interests of the Mahomedans would clash most materially with those of Hindus. I may point out only one case pertinent to this point. That is with regard to an appointment of the superintendent of the slaughter-house in the city municipality of Poona, an appointment which can very suitably be given to a Mahomedan, was not given to him, but to a Brahmin. Such being the case, the Mahomedans do, and very keenly, feel that their interests, specially in matters of education and employments, will not be served unless they have got proper representation on the local bodies, and in view of that, is it fair, is it proper, that the honourable members who have opposed the principle of communal representation should oppose it in the manner they have done ? I should think, Sir, that they should try to strengthen the bond of concord and harmony that prevail in the Bombay Presidency at present rather than impair it and embitter the feelings of the Mahomedans by denying special representation to them. These are the remarks which I wished to make and I would be failing in my duty if I did not make them.

Rao Bahadur R. M. NILKANTH (Ahmedabad District): Mr. President, one of the defects of the bill is that it tries to frame a very ambitious scheme, a scheme far too ambitious to be successful. The local boards under the present Act do not suffer from any paucity of duties and functions, but suffer rather for want of the means for discharging those duties and functions. The present bill, while retaining the duties under the old Act, adds to those duties, for instance, the duty of making provision for the training of teachers of primary schools, the registration of births and deaths, the appointment of a public health committee to administer the sanitary provisions of the Act and by-laws made for the purpose, and so forth. Now I submit that the training of teachers is a matter of higher education, which ought not to be saddled on to local boards, and so also, sanitary measures and the registration of births and deaths are matters which require detailed day to day administration which could not be carried on by a district local board, which has no compact area to deal with like a municipality, its area being spread over a wider area.

Another point on which I wish to speak is the scheme of taxation. I consider it is not fair. With the increase of land revenue, doubling of the local fund cess, and the house tax of the village panchayat, the rural areas, I submit, will find it very difficult to bear the burden of additional taxation. Besides, that taxation is not likely to give any great income to the local boards and the cost of collection will be very heavy. I therefore support the suggestion made by some honourable members that the local boards should have "assigned revenues," i.e., subventions from provincial revenues guaranteed by statutory provisions and not left to the discretion of the executive Government.

On that point I will refer to what is done in England, particularly as you, Sir, have asked the question whether there is any precedent for such an assignment by statute of State revenues. In England the revenue which flows annually from the national exchequer into the "exchequer contribution account" of County (and County Borough) Councils comes from three distinct sources :—

1. All excise licenses referred to in the Act of 1888 as local taxation licenses, and specified in the First Schedule of the Act.

2. Four-fifths of one-half of the probate duties, i.e., estates duties derived from personality.

3. The third stream of revenue which runs into the local taxation account of County Councils was set flowing by Mr. Goschen in 1890 when he imposed the beer and spirit surtaxes—an additional three pence per barrel on beer and six pence per gallon on spirits—for the further relief of local taxation (Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890, 53 Vict., c. 8). So, Sir, the question raised whether there are any instances of any assignment of revenues occurs here as in England in this instance.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That is by the finance bill ?

Rao Bahadur R. M. NILKANTH : What I gather is this, that at least in what is referred to as Mr. Goschen's Act a special surtax was levied for the relief of local taxation.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Yes ; but was it not a finance bill ?

Rao Bahadur R. M. NILKANTH : Of course, it was a finance bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : There in the House of Commons there is first the introduction of the budget, then resolutions thereon, and, in accordance with those resolutions, what is called a money bill or a finance bill is introduced. Government can raise a surtax by a finance bill, but this is not a finance bill. However, you may point out the difficulties which may be created by this Local Boards Bill.

Rao Bahadur R. M. NILKANTH : What I submit is that, when Government impose certain duties on local boards, it is but right that Government should part with some part of the revenue and transfer the same to local boards. Otherwise, I submit that the new scheme is bound to work a great hardship on local boards and is likely to be wrecked on the matter of finance. All the duties which are assigned to local boards are to be discharged by them and if they do not discharge them properly, they are to be dealt with for default. I say there is not money enough to carry on the obligations imposed on the local boards. There will not be enough money to carry on primary education even after it is made compulsory.

Further, there is a proposal in the bill to make the levy of local fund cess obligatory and I associate myself with what was said by the honourable member, the Thakor Saheb of Amod. The talukdars of Gujarat are at present paying local fund cess, not on the amount of assessment, but on the amount of Jama which is less than the assessment. They believe that the new provisions would assail their ancient rights which are based on their historical position and supported by agreements between them and Government.

With regard to the remark of the Honourable Mr. Lawrence on the question of communal representation, I submit that the analogy which he gave of the nobility in England and the commercial classes of England being unwilling to part with power and being obsessed with the idea that they alone should exercise power and nobody else, does not apply. Those who oppose communal representation do not believe and do not urge that they alone ought to possess power. On this point I would submit that Hindus believe that the exercise of power ought to be shared by all classes, but what they object to is the perpetuation of cleavage which is believed to be most unfortunate and which prevents communities from developing a sense of identity of interests. That is a matter of very great importance. Sir, so much has been said on the point that I will not weary the House with any more remarks on communal representation and its demerits and disadvantages.

Only one more observation need I make as regards the abolition of taluka local boards. The honourable member Mr. Bhate said that he would rather prefer that there should be no district boards than that there should be no taluka local boards. I submit that there is now the Village Panchayats Act, which gives a panchayat to every village, and that there should be a certain amount of co-ordination in the administration of the district and that the abolition of the district local boards would make such co-ordination impossible. There being village panchayats and there being district local boards, taluka local boards would not be necessary. It has been found that their partly concurrent jurisdiction leads to considerable friction and a much better course would be to have committees of district local boards in charge of taluka affairs. With these remarks I resume my seat.

Khan Saheb A. A. GODAD (Northern Division) (Addressed the House in Gujarati): Sir, the people of my part of the country, namely, the Panch Mahals, are too poor to be burdened with any further taxation, as they already pay the one anna cess. I would therefore most strongly deprecate any attempt to impose additional weight of this character on my division.

In famine times we suffer from an acute scarcity of water. The wells that are there belong to ryots and not to Government. Some suitable provision should be made in famine times to supply us with enough water.

The forests are now closed. The population and cattle have been deprived of the benefit of fodder that was formerly available in forest areas. This grievance should also be removed.

It is my opinion that all the money collected in my division ought to be spent in my division only, i.e., money collected in a particular taluka should be spent for the benefit of that taluka only.

I, of course, heartily approve of the rights that have been conferred on women in this bill.

Mr. J. B. PATEL (Kaira District): Mr. President, the great complaint I have got to make against this bill is that the Honourable Minister did not invite opinion of local boards concerned. My honourable friend from Ahmednagar said that Gujaratis were not willing to tax themselves for primary education. I can assure him and the entire House that it is not that we Gujaratis are unwilling, though capable, to tax ourselves, but the fact is that nearly eighty per cent. of the agricultural population in Gujarat are too poor to pay any further taxes. So far as my district of Kaira is concerned, nearly twenty-five per cent. of the agricultural population is living from hand to mouth—many have to go with one meal a day—more have to be satisfied with half a meal a day—many more still are obliged to be content with less than that. There are rich people living in cities and towns. I cannot understand why the Honourable Minister does not think of enforcing one anna cess on income-tax. People paying income-tax are in a position to bear greater burden of taxation. Why not tax carriages and owners of motor cars? These men are entirely left out. I do not know how many members will come forward for this bill if it includes a tax on owners of carriages and motor cars rather than a tax on the poor agriculturists of the rural areas.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Mr. President, I should like to reply to the several points that have been raised in this debate. A great grievance has been made by my honourable friends, specially from Gujarat, that the local boards were not consulted before this bill was brought in the Council. I may remind this House that the question of legislation for local boards has been engaging the attention of this Presidency since 1915. Several committees were appointed from time to time, evidence was recorded and a special officer was appointed to report. Besides, all the important principles that are embodied in this bill have been from time to time referred for opinion to the various local boards in this Presidency. Again, the bill was published on the 24th August 1922 and was sent to the members of this Council. When I look around me, I find there are several stalwart presidents of district local boards among the members of this House. Was it not their duty to call special meetings, and put the matter before the members of their respective boards ?

Again, Sir, since I have taken charge, I have been overwhelmed with requests to introduce such a bill, and when I do bring in a bill like the one before the House, I am asked to delay it, and my friends say they will not vote for it. What will be the result if the bill is delayed or the first reading is postponed ? There is another bill being brought forward by my honourable friend Dr. Paranjpye for making education compulsory. If this bill is delayed and that is passed, the local boards will not be able to introduce free and compulsory education, even if they desire to do so, after it is introduced in the municipalities. However, there is still enough time for the local boards to represent their views, and if they have any suggestions to make, they can make them to the select committee, where all their suggestions will be considered, and most of the stalwart presidents of district local boards who are members of this Council can also move any number of amendments they like. So, I think the local boards, from time to time, had ample opportunity of considering the whole question as all important matters including taxation were referred to them.

Now, I would like to deal with the question of taxation. It is not that Government are anxious to empower the local boards to levy taxes. Members of this Council, who were present at the first meeting of the Reformed Council, must remember that numbers of speeches were made on the subject, and it was asked when power was going to be given to the local boards to tax themselves, in order to enable them to replenish their resources, and it is to meet that wish that power to tax themselves has been given to the local boards. The honourable member for Thana district (Mr. Trivedi) complained that larger powers and privileges had been given, but that the sinews of war had not been supplied. I really fail to understand him. If he wants larger powers and privileges, he must undertake correspondingly increasing duties. But he says " No, let us have all the powers ; Government should supply the money." My honourable friend ought to know that all the taxes that are going to be levied are to be raised for services rendered. They are not for the benefit of Government, but for the benefit of the people in the rural areas, for their education, sanitation, roads, etc. It is not that they are making a gift to any one. The taxes will be levied for services rendered.

Then, Sir, I come to the taxes themselves. My honourable friend complained of the small powers of taxation which had been given to the local boards. He ought to know that Schedule No. II of the Government of India Act prescribes the taxes which the local bodies are empowered to levy. It is beyond my province to add anything to that schedule without the necessary sanction ; it is even beyond the province of the Government of Bombay. So, it is no fault of mine that the local boards have only been empowered to levy the taxes which this Schedule II authorises. My honourable friend also suggested some other taxes. First, he suggested that a fixed portion of the provincial revenues be given to the local boards. Suppose Government agrees to this, which is absurd, then the municipalities will come forward and say

[Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ghulam Hussain]

"All right, you have given the local boards a certain portion, give us also a fixed portion."

Then the Honourable Member for Law and Order will come and say "Earmark a certain proportion of the total revenue for me." Then another department will come forward with the same request, and there will thus be no end to it. Then again, some of my honourable friends, including Mr. Trivedi, have suggested two sources of taxation—salt and surcharge on income tax. If they would refer to section 81 (3) of the Government of India Act, they would see that

"The local legislature of any province may not, without the previous sanction of the Governor General, make or take into consideration any law affecting the public debt of India, or customs duty, or any other tax or duty for the time being in force and imposed by the authority of the Governor General in Council for the general purposes of the government of India."

Both these taxes belong to the Central Government, and we cannot impose them.

Then, they suggested two more taxes, one a cess on excise and the other a cess on forests. Now, with regard to excise, from the first day of the Reformed Council I have been hearing every honourable member urging ardently that we ought to do away with excise, as it is tainted money, and that we ought to have total prohibition; and to-day I am surprised to find my honourable friends asking for a cess on excise. Suppose Government accedes to their request, what will be the result? Instead of totally abolishing excise, I am afraid it might be kept up for the benefit of the revenue to Government and of the cess to the local boards. Again, excise revenue is provincial. Now, if you levy any cess on that, the contractors will take into consideration the fact that for every rupee thay have to pay one anna as cess to the local boards, and when they come to bid they will naturally bid less. The result is that you reduce the provincial revenues. If the provincial revenue is reduced, then you cannot turn round and ask for liberal grants from Government. You cannot have it both ways—asking for liberal grants and at the same time reducing provincial revenues. Suppose by that one anna cess several lakhs of the provincial revenue are reduced, how is the expenditure to be met? Should we then resort to fresh taxation? Or will my honourable friend suggest any other means?

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: I have not suggested any other means.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Similar is the case of the cess on forests. Government gets money by the sale of timber in the forests to the contractors. If a cess is levied on that, the contractors will take that one anna cess into consideration, and reduce their bids. In the result, we will reduce the provincial revenues. In fact, none of my honourable friends have made any practical and constructive suggestions as to the additional powers of taxation to be given. Some honourable members will say "You should have obtained the sanction of the Government of India for imposing a cess on some of their revenues." The Government will turn round and say "We have prescribed this schedule for all the local bodies in India. Have you taxed yourself to the fullest capacity before touching our resources?" What will be the reply? That we cannot tax ourselves?

Then, I come to the question of the procedure to be adopted for the collection of the revenue. Great objection has been taken to that. I am afraid that, had Government provided in the bill that it should be collected through

[Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ghulam Hussain]

Government machinery, several honourable members would have turned round and said that the talatis and the tapedars oppress the people and extort money from them.

An Honourable Member: No, no.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: I am glad to hear that, but still I fear it would have been said that these subordinates pester the people, and all possible motives would have been imputed to them. Now, it stands to reason that, when we give powers of taxation to the local boards, we ought also to give them the authority to collect the taxes. If honourable members think that the boards are incapable of collecting them without incurring a large amount of expenditure, the question may be considered in the select committee. However, I should like to make one or two suggestions on this point. As panchayats will be introduced in most of the villages, they may be asked to collect the taxes on behalf of the district local boards. There then remains the question of the taluka towns. Some of the taluka towns have municipalities which are not affected by these taxes. Then, arrangements will only have to be made for the collection of taxes in the remaining taluka towns.

Then, with regard to the question of cess, it was contended by some of the honourable members that the cess should not be raised from one anna to two annas on the ground that it will be very hard upon the people residing in rural areas. But this is a discretionary provision. If the boards want more money, they may raise the cess not straight away from one anna to two annas, but by multiples of three pies. Then, the Thakor Saheb of Amod raised the question of Jama, but cess is paid for services rendered. The standard rate laid down is one anna in the rupee.

I then proceed to deal with some further objections raised by honourable members. My honourable friend opposite me contended that the whole body of the boards should consist of elected members. I think, like myself, he belongs to a minority from whom Government very often receives representation for nomination. If we accept that suggestion, what will be the result? All minorities will go without nomination. Again, it is contended that the proposed franchise of Rs. 16 or 32 for the district local boards should be reduced to Rs. 8 as in the case of the taluka boards. The strength of the elective element in the boards will be three-fourth under the bill. Thus, if there are 16 members for the taluka local board and 32 members for the district local board, 12 and 24 will be the number of elected members respectively. The same number of voters that elect members for the taluka local board will elect members for the district local board. That is, the electorates for the district local boards will be much larger than those for the taluka boards. Again it is contended that inamdars, persons having property other than land of the value of Rs. 5,000, persons having an income of Rs. 500 a year, pensioners, etc., are deprived of the right of vote under the bill: But all these persons will come in if they fulfil the qualifications prescribed in the bill, and there is thus no need for retaining these various qualifications. Under the Act, municipalities had a right to send members to the local boards. Persons residing in municipal areas got into taluka and district local boards, and tried to become presidents and vice-presidents without having any community of interest, or any real state in the district, and now this bill proposes to take away that right, and hence the stir among the articulate, as it is difficult for the residents of the city areas, without paying cess or other local tax to enter the local boards. Formerly, they used to do so without paying any taxes, but now that right has been taken away. The next thing that was suggested was that inamdars should be given representation on the boards. If that suggestion is accepted, what will be the result? A mere handful of inamdars will return numbers to these bodies. Again, it was urged that taluka boards should have representatives on the district boards. The result will be that the very object for which direct election is introduced will be frustrated. People residing in taluka areas and villages can come in by general election. If the suggestion of my honourable friend the Deputy President to do away with taluka local boards be accepted, the whole power will be centralised in the district local boards, while it is the object of Government to decentralise from larger to smaller units. If we accept this principle, we shall be stultifying the institution of panchayats.

Then the Honourable Sardar Khan Bahadur Dalal said that the village ought to be the primary unit. I might remind him that our primary unit of local self-government is the village panchayat, which can be established in any village or group of villages. He complained that people are not coming forward to form panchayats because there is no inducement for them. I think that is no fault of the legislature. There is a provision in the Panchayats Act that panchayats will receive, after taxing themselves, some contribution from the district local boards. They can claim those contributions.

Then, Sir, I come to the most important question of communal representation, against which all the forces of criticism have been directed. The Honourable the Deputy President quoted some old resolutions of the Government of Bombay and of the Government of India against communal representation, but he forgot to mention that after those resolutions were passed, the Government of Bombay accepted the principle of communal representation in the case of the Mahomedans in Sind. Further, the Government of Bombay had the question thoroughly investigated by Mr. Pratt's Committee which came to the conclusion that Mahomedans should be given separate representation by separate electorates. I am sorry that my honourble friend from Bombay, Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas, also joined the chorus. He said appealingly to this Council; "You must reject this principle, because you have done it in the case of the city of Bombay when the Municipal Bill was before you." Sir, I am not asking for separate representation for the city of Bombay; I am asking for it for the rural areas. The city of Bombay is a most cosmopolitan city, where it is not considerations of caste and creed that induce men to vote for a member, but the consideration of merit alone. Here I am asking for communal representation for the rural areas, where, as several speakers representing various communities have told you, people are torn by factions. Take the Hindu community itself. The Brahmins, the Marathas, the Lingayats and the depressed classes are at loggerheads with one another. The speeches made by their own representatives will show you why I am asking for separate representation. Then again, the honourable member from Bombay said that separate representation was rejected in the case of some of the minorities of Bombay when the Municipal Bill was before the Council. I wish my community was as much advanced as some of the communities that we referred to when the Municipal Bill was before the Council. Those minorities who were not given the right of separate representation when the Municipal Bill was passed by the Council are the minorities who are returned at elections, who have education, wealth and influence and who can represent their interests as they liked. But the Mahomedan community in the mofussil is neither educated nor wealthy nor influential and, above all, are not returned by election. This Council will be surprised to know that there are only 31 members on the district local boards in the three divisions of the Presidency from the Mahomedans, out of whom 15 are nominated and 16 are elected, and the total number of members of the district local boards is 309. Then, Sir, some members of the Council say; "We are all brethren. There is no necessity for separate representation." I hope they will excuse me when I suggest that everyone of us ought to set our own house in order before we commence preaching to others. Several members of this House representing sub-sections of the Hindu community have themselves bitterly complained that their interests are not safe in the hands of the other sections. Then, how can the Mahomedans with a different religion, and different traditions, consider their interests safe without separate representation? The honourable member from Bombay suggested a way of getting over the difficulty. It was that antiquated plea that Mahomedans can come in by nomination. I think we must do unto others what we would like to be done unto us. When we do not like nomination for our own community, we should not thrust it on others. But let us see if the Mahomedans can even come in by nomination. Now, we have got a majority of three-fourths elected members, and some boards might get four-fifths; at the same time, the claims for nomination are many. There are Government experts, there are those who are conversant with the administration of local boards, but who may not like to seek election; there are the minorities, such as the Parsis, the Indian Christians, the Lingayats, the depressed classes and other backward communities. Thus, as we go on increasing the elective element there will be very few places left for nomination and it is impossible for Government to meet the demands which may be made by several communities. Again, it was suggested that co-option would meet the difficulty, but it has been ruled by the President that co-option is outside the scope of this bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Have I ruled it so? I do not remember having ruled it as outside the scope of this bill. On the contrary, I said it was a matter of detail and can be considered in the select committee and at the second reading.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Then, I must make it clear to this Council that I am not asking for separate representation for the Mahomedans alone. As has been pointed out by the Honourable Mr. Lawrence to this Council, the Hindus are in a minority in Sind, and my honourable friend opposite to me (Mr. Pahalajani) one day told me that the Hindus ought to have separate representation in Sind. The Hindus will get it in Sind; here the Mahomedans should get it. Then the honourable Rao Bahadur Kale referred to the Montagu-Chelmsford Report, and tried to make out that the authors were against it. I might remind this Council that, while the Morley-Minto Reforms conceded communal representation only to Mahomedans in the Presidency where they are in a minority, the Montagu-Chelmsford Report has extended that principle to Mahomedans in Sind, where they are in a majority. Rao Bahadur Kale said that there were no communal matters coming up before these local boards, which need the presence of Mahomedan representatives. If that is so, then their presence cannot in any way accentuate racial differences. Why should honourable members of this Council, if there are no communal matters to be discussed, object to the Mahomedans coming in by separate election? But in point of fact there are important communal matters to be discussed. Take the case of education. In the first place, the Mahomedans of this Presidency claim that they ought to be taught in Urdu, and that has been recognised by Government, and now we are transferring the control of education to the local bodies. Will not the presence of the Mahomedans on the boards be necessary in the interests of their education ? Again, we are introducing compulsory education. Now for that, you require a large number of Mahomedans to go and persuade Mahomedan parents to send their boys to schools and this compulsion is to be used after some time in regard to girls also. Then, Sir, there is the question whether there should be mixed schools for girls and boys or separate schools. Unless you have separate schools in the commencement, girls won't come in. All these questions will have to be discussed by the local boards. Then, I may cite an instance of a dharamsala in Ahmedabad in connection with which there was an interpellation in this Council to the effect that Mahomedans were not allowed to make use of this dharamsala although it belonged to the local board. So, there do crop up questions as regards dharamsalas, wells, slaughter-houses, burial grounds and so many things which require to be considered by Mahomedan members. My honourable friend Rao Bahadur Kale says these local bodies are training grounds. I quite agree with him that these bodies are the places where people are trained in the administration of local affairs and are equipped for the discharge of higher duties in the Council and in other fields. If such important duties are learnt in these local bodies, will it not be deplorable that no Mahomedan should be trained therein ? What will be the result if none of them are trained and they are asked to join hands with others to demand more rights for India ? They will say we have got so many rights already and we do not benefit by them, and we do not want any more. It is your business to make them fit for asking for more rights. I may assure this Council that unless you give this backward community the necessary training, they will be drags on the progress of the country. If you once leave these backward classes behind, they will never care to go forward again.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: This applies with greater force to the depressed classes also.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Yes. Now, Sir, it is asked by the honourable member from Bombay why the depressed classes should not be given a separate electorate. I am quite in sympathy with them and I am quite willing to do that, but I would distinguish between the cases of Mahomedans and the depressed classes. As regards the depressed classes, in the first place it is so difficult to define those classes as there are so many sections of them. Then, they are not in sufficiently large numbers in all parts of the Presidency. I challenge any one to show me that the depressed classes are to be found in every part of the Presidency in sufficiently large numbers to deserve separate representation. A similar argument applies to the Parsis. You won't find large numbers of them in all places. Similarly as regards the Indian Christians. Again, the Honourable Rao Bahadur Kale deprecates communal representation for the Mahomedans, and in the same breath asks for separate electorates for the inamdars. He said that one Mahomedan was elected on a taluka board. He ought to have at the same time enlightened the Council as to why there is no Mahomedan member on his district local board. Again the honourable member for West Khandesh (Rao Bahadur Garud) said that a Mahomedan was elected president of a municipality. But he ought to have at the same time remembered that when His Excellency two months ago went to Dhulia that very President presented an address and asked for communal representation for the Mahomedans. The honourable member for Poona district (Dewan Bahadur Godbole) mentioned that Mahomedans have been returned on the Poona municipality in large numbers. I quite agree with him, but they have been given reserved seats by mixed electorates. As I have told you before, this is not a new principle; not only the Poona municipality, but some other municipalities also have given Mahomedans separate representation. It is by this means that they are returned to the municipalities.

[Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ghulam Hussain]

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE: Sir, I pointed out that two Mahomedan members were elected by the rural boards in the Poona district. In the Poona district those were elected on the taluka board.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Sir, my honourable friend Dr. Batliwala said that I should accept the principle that certain number of seats be reserved for the Mahomedans by mixed electorates as is done in the Poona municipality. But it was not long ago that Government received a memorial from the Mahomedans of Poona in which they said that they wanted separate representation by separate electorates. Let me illustrate their case. Suppose there are 100 Mahomedan voters and 100 Hindus; and 95 out of the Mahomedan voters vote for one candidate and the 100 Hindu voters and the 5 Mahomedan voters vote for another candidate, the latter will be returned. But the successful candidate cannot be said to be the chosen representatives of the Mahomedans. Lord Minto also said that the Mahomedans should be returned by their own community.

Now, Sir, coming to the school boards, I must say at the outset that education in the local boards will be governed by the primary and compulsory education bill, which will shortly be introduced by my honourable friend. The very preamble of that bill says "Whereas it is expedient to provide for compulsory elementary education and to make better provision for the control of primary education in the Presidency of Bombay", and there is a provision that control should be given to the local boards to manage their primary education. Now clause 36 of this bill has been taken from that bill. It was asked by some honourable members why local boards should elect outsiders as members of their school boards. Well, that is done in the interests of education. A man who might be very well acquainted with education may not otherwise be a member of the board. If the school board is only constituted from the members of the local board, outside experts will be excluded. Therefore, this provision is made in order that the local boards may elect outsiders who may be experts in education. Then there is the case of the minorities, depressed classes, Mahomedans and others. Suppose none of them is on the board, their interests will not be represented. Therefore, it is made compulsory to elect representatives of the minorites. Then, there was some misapprehension regarding the right of the municipalities to send representatives on this board. The position is that each municipality by itself will not be given the right of sending a representative, but several municipalities together will be allowed to send one or two representatives on the board. However, that is a question of detail, and my honourable colleague, who is an expert in education will consider that point when he introduces his primary education bill.

[Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ghulam Hussain]

Then Sir, it was said that the powers in regard to sanitation given to the boards are all right, but it was asked how they are to carry out their functions. I would refer honourable members to sections 18 and 38 of the Panchayats Act. It is for the panchayats to attend to the conservancy work of the villages. Now panchayats are constituted in villages. When most of the villages have got panchayats constituted, this work will be carried out by the panchayats. As regards the taluka towns, we have given power to the public health committees to delegate their powers. The public health committee can delegate their powers either to members residing in a taluka, or to honorary or stipendiary officers of the board. I do not think there will be much difficulty in the exercise of these powers especially when panchayats are constituted all over.

Then, objection was taken to the registration of births and deaths being made an obligatory duty. It is, I think, necessary to make this an obligatory duty, but the real difficulty is as to the manner in which the boards will carry out that duty. But these details will be considered in the select committee.

Dewan Bahadur Godbole referred to the powers of the boards to spend money on railways, construction of tanks, etc., but if he were to read sub-clause (m) of clause 50, of the bill it would be clear to him that they can spend money on those works. As regards minor irrigation works, that is a reserved subject outside my province.

An Honourable Member: What about the powers to raise money?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Well, we have the Local Authorities Loans Act, under which provision is made for raising loans.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE: May I ask the Honourable Minister what provision is made for railways and tramways?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: You are allowed to spend money on them under clause 50 (m) which reads:

"Any other local works or measures likely to promote the health, safety, comfort or convenience of the public."

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE: Is it not advisable to make special provision for it, by a separate clause or sub-clause?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: All right: we will consider it. Now, I come to the provisions regarding control. Much was said as regards the control.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I do not think, Dewan Bahadur, that that is a matter of such great importance as to require a separate clause.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE: It is provided by a separate clause in the other Local Boards Acts in India.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Sir, as regards control, it was suggested by some of the honourable members that Collectors and Commissioners should be deprived of their powers of control, but I regret very much that none of those honourable members made any suggestion as to what other agency should be adopted in their place. Now, suppose we take away all the powers of control, which are given to the Collectors and Commissioners, what will be the position? Wherever you go, you will find only one of two systems prevailing; either centralization or decentralization. In England, they have centralized the control in a central

[Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ghulam Hussain]

Local Government Board, which employs an agency, of inspectors and other officers for which they have to pay very heavily. Is this Council prepared to deprive the Collector and the Commissioner, who are on the spot, of their powers of control and to appoint an inspecting staff which would directly receive orders from me and execute them ? No constructive suggestion has been made by any honourable member.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: I think Mr. Gandhi made a suggestion to replace the Commissioners. He suggested the appointment of a standing committee.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Supposing a standing committee is appointed and given the control which is at present given to the Collectors and Commissioners, may I ask the honourable member where that committee will meet ? Where will that body's head-quarters be ?

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: With you.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: With me ? Will it be at Bombay, Poona or Mahableshwar ? And what about their establishment ? How will they carry on without an establishment ? Suppose orders are passed at head-quarters. How will they exercise all the powers that are at present exercised by the Collector and Commissioner ? Suppose the orders are, to go and inspect such and such a record of the local body. Who will go ? Will not an agency be required ? I have given considerable thought to all these matters. There are only two methods, to centralize or decentralize ; or appoint your own agents who should take the place of the Collectors and Commissioners. Suppose the Minister wants to inspect the records of a local board. Whom should he ask to do that ? There must be some agency. Suppose a board passes an order which is likely to be injurious to the public, and I am sitting here, how am I to know that such an order has been passed ? You must look at it from a practical point of view. Then, what are the powers ? If a Collector suspends a board, the Commissioner is there to confirm it and finally it has to come before Government. Those officers have not been given final powers.

An Honourable Member: Government should be assisted by a board of this House.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: My difficulty is, what will that board do ? It will be merely advisory. Are the Minister and the board to sit together to decide by a number of votes ? Advisory committees rather have a tendency to delay work, they do not in effect exercise any power, what will they do ? I shall have to write to all the members and convene a meeting ; when they turn up, they may or may not come to a decision ; that will only delay work. If you want that your advisory boards should have an effective voice and their decisions be binding on the Minister, then the only course for you is to get the Government of India Act amended, which is beyond my province, because under the Government of India Act the Governor has to act with the advice of the Minister.

An Honourable Member: That is the reason why we suggest that there should be a standing committee of this House.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Will it be a practicable proposition ? On the other hand, in the present position, any action the Minister may take is subject to your vote, and you can bring any motion you like in regard to it. Besides, these powers of control are already exercised by the larger municipalities. If we take them away from the present officers, the Council should supply some other agency to exercise them. An honorary board will, I fear, only tend to delay matters.

I now come to the works of the boards. There is some confusion in the minds of honourable members in this matter. I must make it clear that even in the regular service of the Public Works Department, qualified assistant engineers have not been invested with the power of sanctioning plans and estimates—only the Executive Engineers have that authority—no plans or esitmates can be sanctioned by the assistant engineers except with the sanction of the Executive Engineers. In the Public Works Department, we have the supervising machinery of Executive Engineers, Superintending Engineers, Chief Engineers and so on. What will be the supervising agency that will be supplied by the district local boards ? There will be none.

Then, the bill provides for works. District local boards can frame their own plans and estimates of works whether they have competent engineers or not in their employ, to the extent of Rs. 200 per mile in the case of roads and of Rs. 2,000 in the case of other works. As regards the execution of works, Government has already given such powers to the limit of Rs. 10,000 to every board. If larger powers are desired, Government will consider the question if they find that the engineers employed by district local boards are really qualified engineers. Otherwise, what will happen is this ; suppose an engineer in the employ of a district local board says such and such a work will cost Rs. 10,000 ; who is there to check the correctness of his plan and estimate ? It is in fact in the interest of the district local board itself, and Government have no interest at all in the matter. However, this is a matter that can be considered by the select committee just as all other questions of detail raised by honourable members will be looked into by the select committee.

The honourable member, Mr. Pahalajani, says that the boards have no authority in regard to the employment of their own officers. I would refer this Council to clause 119 which allows the boards to appoint their own servants. At present the office establishment expenditure is borne by Government, yet the boards are given such wide powers of appointing their own men, but powers as regards punishment and dismissal are restricted. That is done in the interests of the boards themselves. Unless the officers of the boards are guaranteed their tenure of office, how can the boards get any officers to consent to serve them ? Even in the case of municipalities, unless three-fourths of the members agree, the higher officers cannot be dispensed with, without the approval of Government. Moreover the bill gives powers to the boards to delegate their power of appointment and dismissal to their presidents subject to certain restrictions, which powers are not even enjoyed by the presidents of municipalities.

I think I have replied to all the important points raised in the Council and I therefore hope that the House will pass the first reading of this bill.

Bill read a first time. Question put and agreed to.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : There is one suggestion I should like to make with reference to the provision for a quorum in select committee. That ought to form an inevitable part of every motion for a select committee. The difficulty was brought to my notice in a select committee of which I was chairman. I believe the rule in the House of Commons is that, if no provision is made for the quorum, then every member must attend and if any member does not attend, the report of that select committee is regarded as null and void. Our Standing Orders say that, when any member is not able to attend either owing to illness or any other cause, then the chairman of the select committee must report to the President. Generally three form a quorum in a select committee in the House of Commons.

Another point is that any member of a select committee who is not present at any of its meetings and has taken no part in its deliberations owing to his absence must be prevented by the chairman from sending a minute of dissent as if he had attended and done his duty as a member of the committee. A member of a select committee may not be able to be present at all the meetings, but no member has any right to a dissenting minute when he has not attended any meetings of the committee and given the benefit of his views to other members. He has no right to put those views in a minute without hearing the views of other members in committee and discussing them.

Rao Saheb L. V. PARULEKAR (Ratnagiri District): Sir, I wish to move an amendment to this.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Amendment to what?

Rao Saheb L. V. PARULEKAR: I take it that the Honourable Member in charge wishes to proceed.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: There is no question before the House to be amended.

Rao Saheb L. V. PARULEKAR: I take it that he wishes to proceed under Standing Order 5 (b) of Part VIII. So, I wanted to move an amendment.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: He has not made any motion. Therefore, there can be no amendment. When he makes the motion to-morrow, then you may try to amend it as you like, and then I will consider whether it is in order or not.

A BILL TO PROVIDE FOR THE REGULATION AND CONTROL OF TRANSACTIONS IN COTTON IN THE PRESIDENCY OF BOMBAY (BILL NO. XIII OF 1922).

(As amended by Select Committee.)

Second reading.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Mr. President, I beg to move that the bill to provide for the regulation and control of transactions in cotton in the Presidency of Bombay be now read a second time.

It appears to me that considerable misconception prevails in regard to the object with which this bill has been brought forward, and much difference of opinion has manifested itself under, what appears to me to be, a complete misapprehension as regards the scope and the object of the bill. I may inform honourable members that in 1919, in consequence of extensive speculation in the cotton trade, the trade approached Government for providing control over the cotton transactions for forward delivery. As a rule, Government are averse to interfere with trade in any article. But there may, however, be exceptions. If any important trade desires the assistance of Government and the legislature in exceptional cases, Government would not object to come to the assistance of such trade. In 1919, Government were satisfied that there was a case for interference in the cotton trade, and they brought forward legislation for the purpose, which was sanctioned by the Council. That legislation gave control to Government, because the board of control which was constituted under that Act had an official chairman, with a certain number of members nominated by Government. After a couple of years, considerable difference of opinion arose amongst the representatives of the trade, and they demanded the repeal of that control. Government's general policy being what I have already stated, they accepted the view of the trade and brought forward legislation for the repeal of the Cotton Contracts Control Act. The repealing bill was passed by the Council and it went, in the usual course, for the sanction of the Governor General. Before that sanction could be obtained, the leading representatives of the trade approached Government and earnestly pressed for presenting the repealing Act from coming into force. It was represented that the immediate effect of that legislation would be that certain elements which had arisen in the trade were going to upset the whole regulation of that trade. Government, after satisfying themselves that the representation was well-founded, managed to delay the sanction of the Governor General, in order that that Act might continue, at all events for some time. Afterwards that Act was repealed, and the trade came in for complete control and management by themselves. Difficulties appear to have immediately arisen, and they again approached Government for assistance. They constituted an association by name the East India Cotton Association, and asked Government to give it statutory recognition. It was represented to Government that all interests of the trade were unanimous in reducing the statutory recognition of the East India Cotton Association, and all that they wanted was legislation to carry that object out. The present bill is the outcome of that representation, and honourable members will have observed that it is not in any way on the lines of the previous legislation. Under the Cotton Contracts Control Act of 1919, the board was constituted with, as I have already pointed out, an official chairman, with a certain number of members nominated by Government. At present, the East India Cotton Association is representative of all the interests in the trade. They elect their own chairman, they elect their own board : Government have nothing to do with it. Government are merely coming to the assistance of the trade to give statutory recognition to that association, so that the trade may have the required authority to manage its own affairs. There is going to be no Government interference, and no Government control.

An Honourable Member : Just like a local self-governing institution.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Yes, quite so. Government considered that it was necessary, if they asked the legislature to give statutory recognition to the association, to have some power of seeing that the important cotton trade was fairly managed. Under the principles of local self-government, and following the analogy a little further, it will be observed that Government have provided control over the rules and regulations of the association. It may, therefore, well be taken that this legislation is practically on the lines of local self-government with control to a certain extent by Government.

Now, Sir, I said in my opening remarks that there appeared to be considerable misconception in regard to this measure, and I said so with special reference to the two minutes of dissent which have been made by two honourable members who served on the select committee. They seem to imagine that this association will have the power of fixing the rates of contracts, that the liberty of private persons to contract in cotton according to their own free will is going to be taken away, that the effect of the recognition of this association will be bearish and will reduce prices, that the agriculturists will be affected, and that in consequence the importance of Bombay city as the centre of the cotton trade will be adversely affected. Now, Sir, I think that the whole basis of the criticism is ill-founded. There is not going to be the slightest interference with contracts for ready cotton. Ready cotton which is brought into Bombay city can be purchased and sold at such rates as are acceptable to both and the association will have no control whatsoever in regard to these transactions. There are two other kinds of cotton contracts which will be controlled by the association. There are in Bombay and Ahmedabad a large number of spinning and weaving mills which consume a very large quantity of cotton for manufacturing purposes. Honourable members are probably aware that in many cases, the millowners sell their production consisting of yarn and piece-goods for delivery several months forward. In order to be able to do so, they have to get their requirements of cotton. They could not get ready cotton of the quality required for manufacturing purposes, and even if they do, they would have to stock it and incur interest and other charges. In order to protect themselves against a rise in the price of raw material, they enter into hedge contracts, that is to say, they buy forward either in the Bombay market, or in the American or Liverpool markets. In business circles this is not regarded as speculation, but bona fide transaction in order to make manufacturing profits secure. Any subsequent rise or fall does not thus affect them. It is for this reason that hedge contracts are in my opinion justifiable transactions and necessary in the interest of the cotton industry. If it stood there, there was nothing further to be said, but in consequence of forward transactions being possible, there are a certain number of people who enter into these contracts purely for the purpose of speculation. Some people expect a rise in prices, and others anticipate a fall and these people have so far as one could judge, no intention of receiving or giving delivery. The bona fide hedge dealers require a certain amount of protection in order that their contracts may be carried out as originally entered. Before any Government control was applied for, contracts for certain qualities of cotton, for instance Broach cotton, were entered into in September for delivery in April or May, and people sold or bought without being required to make any payment till the due date of delivery. In the meantime cotton prices being regulated by world prices, there are many fluctuations, and uncertainty exists as regards the capacity of these people to meet their obligations on the due date. Therefore, there was a tendency of over-speculation beyond the means of the people resorting to it. It was then felt that some kind of control should be resorted to in order to see that losses or profits do not accumulate for several months, and therefore it was decided that, every fortnight, there ought to be what is called settlement. Now, for the purpose of that settlement prices have got to be fixed and that is, I think, what has led to this misconception. If a man sells, say Broach cotton at Rs. 500 a candy for forward delivery and if the board fixes the price at Rs. 520 for an intervening settlement, the seller has to pay Rs. 20 to the buyer and the price of the contract instead of standing at Rs. 500 stands at Rs. 520. The fixing of the price does not affect the original contract, except that it becomes based on the price of Rs. 520. The payment by the seller of Rs. 20 per candy does not affect him as the contract price rises by the amount of such payment, and the original sale remains unaffected till the date of delivery. There must be some authority to regulate these transactions in order to minimise the risk and the liability on each contract. The price is not fixed by the board till the due date and, when the contract becomes due, representatives of the trade constituting the board fix the price of that settlement which is final. The intermediary fortnightly settlements are for the purpose of adjusting and keeping contracts standing. It is not the intention of the association or of the legislature to stop speculation. That cannot be done, but only to control it and bring it within narrow and reasonable limits. Some authority, it will be obvious to honourable members, is essential to carry out these transactions in the interests of the trade. The East India Cotton Association, which is representative of all interests in the cotton trade, is proposed as such authority and Government have brought forward this legislation to recognise it for the purpose. There is to my mind no foundation for the belief that this legislation is intended to reduce prices as stated by one of the members in his dissenting minute. There is no such intention. I may tell Rao Saheb Dadubhai Desai and other honourable members of this Council that Government will never allow themselves to bring in any measure which will in the remote degree adversely affect the agricultural classes. (Honourable members: Hear, hear.) The two interests which Government must safeguard are the agricultural interest and the interest of the city of Bombay having regard to its importance in the cotton trade. Nothing should, I think, be done which will have any effect of unnaturally reducing prices in the cotton market of Bombay, firstly because it would affect adversely the agriculturists, and secondly because such a result will have the effect of diverting cotton to other ports in India and the importance of the city of Bombay and its cotton market would be seriously affected. Government will not consciously be a party to any procedure which will lead to such results. The honourable member Mr. Ojha has twice interrupted me by pointing out that this is speculation. Well, to a certain extent, as I said, speculation cannot possibly be avoided. We have got the example of New York, which is the centre of an enormous quantity of cotton produced in America; we have got the instance of Liverpool, which is a very large centre for the consumption of cotton, and there such associations exist and such regulations are provided for. To a certain extent, this little amount of speculation is to my mind helpful, because it brings more demand for cotton, and therefore has, if anything, a little bullish tendency. The agriculturists stand to benefit by these movements rather than be adversely affected. At the same time, I have clearly pointed out that the association has absolutely nothing to do with the sale and purchase of ready cotton: that is a matter which is regulated outside the association and outside this bill. Therefore, if any one wants to purchase cotton up country, send it to Bombay and sell it at current market rates, this bill will not affect him.

There is only one thing more which I will say in concluding my remarks, and that is that I regret that an honourable member of the select committee should have thought fit to embody the following remarks in his minute of dissent:

> "After the discussion of the bill by the select committee was closed and the meeting was announced to be over, I departed. But afterwards I was informed that the meeting had resumed its sitting and had changed its previous decision maintaining the clause authorizing the extension of the Act by Government to the Bombay Presidency outside the City of Bombay, into the deletion of that clause, or, in other words, confining its operation to the City alone."

Sir, I may be permitted to point out that this is wholly incorrect. It is perfectly true that while considering the bill in select committee it decided by a majority to retain the provision for the extension of the Act by notification to other parts of the Presidency. The select committee was sitting and considering other clauses of the bill, when the honourable member said that he wanted to leave and catch the 3 o'clock train. Therefore, while the select committee was still sitting, he sought my permission to leave. The select committee proceeded with the discussion of the bill in his absence, and we subsequently reconsidered the whole matter and came to the conclusion that, as this bill was going to be applied only for three years and would be subsequently extended only if the trade wanted it, it would be unnecessary to bring in other parts of the Presidency within its scope. We then, in the absence of the honourable member, decided unanimously to delete that clause which provided for the extension of the Act to other parts of the Presidency and to restrict the operation of the Act to Bombay city. We, however, felt that it was due to the honourable member as he had opposed its extension to other parts of the Presidency, that he should know before he left at 3 o'clock that the committee had reconsidered the matter and had decided to exclude the power of extension to other parts of the Presidency.

Mr. G. H. KASSIM: May I correct that, Sir? I was distinctly told that the meeting was over, and I was permitted to leave. Otherwise, I would not have left the meeting at all.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: Sir, as a member of the select committee, I beg to confirm what the Honourable the Leader of the House has said. Mr. Kassim distinctly asked for permission to leave, saying that he was going by the 3 o' clock train and the committee was sitting when he left, and continued to sit 15 or 20 minutes more.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Sir, the facts are as I have stated. I would not have taken any notice of it, but I think as the chairman of that committee it is due to me to contradict a statement of this kind when it is put in an official document which forms a part of the report of the select committee. So far as the select committee's report is concerned.....

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: Was it brought to the notice of the Honourable the Leader of the House before it was put in in the select committee's report?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: No; I first saw it in the dissenting minute.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Now, that the point has been raised, I must say that remarks of this nature as to what was done in the select committee are absolutely improper. I am afraid the honourable member Mr. Kassim is rather very difficult to satisfy. (At this stage Mr. Kassim stood up.) I cannot allow the matter to proceed. It is a matter of domestic concern. And hereafter, if any such remarks appear, I hope they will be brought to my notice, and I shall see them eliminated. It is entirely a matter of domestic concern. I have no right to interefere whatever be the decisions of the chairmen of select committees. This is a matter entirely for the select committee and is not a matter either for me or for the Council.

[The President]

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Sir, there is only one more point which I should like to bring to the notice of honourable members. When this bill was taken up, it was represented to Government that all the interests of the cotton trade were unanimous in demanding it. During the last two or three days it has been represented to us that the Bombay Millowners' Association would like to have it postponed. (An Honourable Member: Hear, hear). Before the honourable member supports that view, he ought to wait till he hears the whole of my explanation. I then called the representatives of the Millowners' Association, the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, the Indian Chamber, and of the cotton trade, and pointed out that the scope of the bill is misunderstood. The position is that the bill merely recognises the East India Cotton Association, which is representative of all the interests in the cotton trade and authorizes the making of rules subject to the sanction of Government. I also pointed out that until these rules were sanctioned by Government, the bill would remain inoperative, beyond recognising the association. I took the opportunity of giving an assurance on behalf of Government that as a disinterested party we would, as soon as we received the set of rules from the association, send it to the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, the Indian Chamber of Commerce, the Millowners' Association and such other representative institutions interested in the cotton trade in order to enable them to submit their suggestions and criticisms. When all these are received, Government will examine them and, if there is any conflict of opinion, Government will try to bring them together at a conference. The intention is that only such by-laws should receive the sanction of Government as will be generally acceptable to the trade as a whole.

In view of the fact that the elected representative of the Bombay Millowners' Association was on account of ill-health absent from this session of the Council, I enquired whether the President or the vice-president of the association would accept nomination, so that they would have an opportunity of explaining their views to the honourable House. They declined to be nominated and said that in view of the assurance given they did not wish to press for postponement. They made it clear that, though they were not quite satisfied, they did not wish to oppose the passage of the bill at the present session. Government could not, of course, give any guarantee that there must be absolute unanimity amongst all interests in the trade before they will sanction the rules, but they will take care to see that the rules and regulations will be of a nature generally acceptable to the trade as a whole. With these words, I trust the honourable members will pass the second reading.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA: Why did the association want a postponement?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: The reason was that there was now a crisis in the cotton trade and they required time to think out what was the best thing to be done. I pointed out that the bill did nothing beyond giving statutory recognition to the East India Cotton Association which was admitted to be representative of all interests in the cotton trade; that the rules and regulations would not be sanctioned till every interest in the trade had had an opportunity of considering them; that this procedure would give the association ample time to think out what regulations would be in the best interests of the trade and that only such by-laws would be sanctioned which would be in the general interests of the trade as a whole. It will be clear, therefore, that there can be no object in postponing a bill of this character. The opposition was, therefore, not pressed. I trust honourable members will pass the second reading.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Before I propose the question, I have already stated what I said is the defect of the dissenting minute of one of the honourable members on the select committee. May I also say with due deference to the dissenting minute of one honourable member, Rao Saheb Dadubhai Desai, that that dissenting minute negatives the principle of the bill? That could be done only at the first reading. As regards the second reading stage the minute says: "I am therefore of opinion that the bill sh ould notbe allowed to pass in the form in which it has emerged from the select commi tee."

That is in order so far, but the whole purport of the dissenting minute is to oppose the principle of the bill as a bill. That ought not to have been brought in at all for even a first reading. Now I think any honourable member who accepts his office as a member of the select committee ought to remember that, the House having affirmed the principle of the bill, he cannot destroy it in the select committee by attacking its principle totally. The bill must be preserved and may be modified. If the honourable member has any alternative suggestions to make, they must be proposed and considered, and if they are not accepted, then he must propose amendments.

Mr. R. G. SALGAR (Sholapur city) (Addressed the House in Marathi): Mr. President, I object to the second reading of this bill, No. XIII of 1922. My chief objection is that the provisions of the Cotton Act of 1919 are not at all advantageous to the buyers of cloth, but that they are advantageous to the millowners. The cotton trade is mainly based upon the transactions in Bombay and hence although the select committee has settled that the bill will be applied to the city of Bombay only, still it will affect the whole Presidency. The by-laws which are proposed to be made under clause 3 sub-clause (e), are solely in the interests of the Bombay traders. The fluctuations of the cotton trade do not affect the producers and therefore the cotton producers of the mofussil derive no benefit from the provisions of this bill. Not only that, but the provisions in this bill will cause a distinct loss to the cotton growers in the mofussil and in fact there ought to be no control on this cotton trade at all. I therefore oppose the second reading of this bill.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): Sir, before the House consents to pass the second reading of this bill, I would just like to request the Council to take into consideration what I think about the origin of the bill. The bill is the outcome of a recommendation of the Indian Cotton Committee.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I must warn honourable members that this is a second reading debate. The principle of the bill has been affirmed. By passing the first reading, the Council has affirmed the principle that there ought to be a regulation and control of cotton transactions by empowering a board to make by-laws. That is the principle affirmed and the debate ought to be confined to that without destroying the principle. It is not in order to raise any debate or arguments which would negative the very principle of the bill.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: I just wanted to refer, Sir, to the history of the bill. As the Honourable the Leader of the House.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I am not going to interfere with the freedom of discussion. I have merely given a warning as to the limits within which we have to conduct a debate for second reading.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Sir, the Indian Cotton Committee, first of all, recommended to the Government of India that an association representing the various interests in that trade might be constituted so that it might regulate the transactions in cotton in order that the speculation that is rampant in Bombay might be checked, and the committee went so far as to give the name of the association also. They suggested that the association might be named the East India Cotton Association. The Government of India, closely following on the committee's recommendations perhaps, arranged the union of the various conflicting interests that were prevailing in Bombay in such a way that they all combined, with the result that the East India Cotton Association was formed. We have to see on what principles that association is formed. This association in fact conforms to a sort of exchange that is usually found in such big cities as New York and Liverpool and other countries of Europe. But the difference between those exchanges and the Bombay exchange that is newly founded, or that will be founded under the bill, will be this: while the exchanges outside India are colourless exchanges, that is, exchanges specially formed by the brokers or by the commission agents, the rest being associate members of such associations having no voice in the decisions here in this association, along with the brokers there are various conflicting interests that are represented on the board of control of that association. That, I think, is rather a very weak point in the composition of the association. That is, if the section dealing with the representative panels that the Government have put in the bill is passed by the Council, it will not be to the interests of this country or the agriculturists who will stand to lose. Brokers are naturally colourless (Laughter). They bring buyers and sellers together. They are not interested in the prices, of course, in theory; but in practice they may be huge speculators, just like others in the trade. But in theory brokers are quite colourless (Laughter).....

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: They should be.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: We have to take them as colourless people, and I do not understand why on the analogy of the Liverpool and New York exchanges the cotton association of Bombay should not be formed, specially of brokers, and if along with the brokers the Bombay trade demanded that there should be other interests represented on that association, I should very well allow the representation of commission agents on the board, but never of merchants such as importers or exporters of cotton, also millowners, and others.

The point, Sir, that the Honourable the Leader of the House tried to make out that this association or the managing board of this association will not fix the prices to the detriment of the interests of the agriculturists is one that we cannot agree to. I rather think that a board of management of an association, composed as it is of various vested interests, if given the vague powers of fixing a price you can take it for granted, will fix a price which will benefit them and which will be injurious to the interests of the country. Merchants would like to have things cheap. For example, I may cite an instance. Even now though the bill is on the anvil, the price is being fixed by the managing board of the association at a far lower level than the actual price offered by the buyers. At this time some corner is going on. The man who has cornered the cotton says that he would like to take delivery of cotton at a certain price, while the price settled by the board is far lower than that.....

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: Which do you approve of?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. Let the honourable member be allowed to go on uninterrupted.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: He need not reply to me if he does not want to.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Now, under the New York Cotton Exchange Act, that was passed by the New York legislature, there was no such power given by the legislature to the New York Cotton Exchange to fix the price. But here, in this bill, you are going to allow that body to fix its own price. Now, if we give power of fixing the price, the result will be that the board may fix a price which is lower than the price ruling in the market. At best it depends upon the sweetwill of the persons serving on the board, whether to declare the real market price or to declare one that is far lower than the actual price. In any case we may safely assume that by reason of the constitutional weakness inherent in the board of directors of the association, it cannot depend upon the natural course of prices in the market and so I would say that the board that is given such wide powers is not expected to give fair prices for cotton. I come now to the point of speculation raised by the Honourable the Leader of the House.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: These are all very good arguments for the first reading for negativing the bill and destroying its principle, but I am not quite sure that they are good arguments for the second reading. Of course, you may vote against the bill so as to reject it, but the arguments must be confined within the limits of the principle.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: As the Honourable the Leader of the House has referred to speculation which is going on in Bombay, and that it was necessary to control speculation, I should just like to ask the Honourable the Leader of the House whether he has not.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: My duty is rather delicate. I must confine the arguments to the second reading subject to the affirmation of the principle of the bill by the Council. The Honourable the Leader of the House was allowed by me to go a little beyond relevant points, because I think I have already stated in this Council at two meetings that the Honourable the Leader of the House and the Leader of the Opposition are both allowed some liberty as regards relevancy and irrelevancy, but none else, and for the same reason, if you are the Leader of the Opposition, I will allow you the indulgence.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: With regard to another point referred to by the Honourable the Leader of the House, namely that the spot prices of cotton will not be affected by the passing of this bill or by giving such a power of fixing the price, to the Cotton Association, and that the agriculturists will not consequently be affected, I think that the prices that the agriculturists receive depend upon the hedge contracts that are made in Bombay and that the price that the agriculturist gets depends upon the speculative prices that may obtain in Bombay because Bombay merchants do not buy direct from the cultivators but from the middlemen who make their purchases in the cultivators' homes. Both these class of merchants have to resort to speculative market to cover their transactions. So if you allow the association the power to fix the price, that association may fix a lower price and thus the agriculturist will be affected by being compelled to sell at a price that may be lower than the market price raging at the time and that would be, I think, to the detriment of the cultivators.

When it is understood that the interests of the cultivators and the interests of the country at large depend upon high prices being got for cotton which is an export commodity, I hold that this House will do well not to pass this bill in the form in which it is presented.

I have shown that the business of the association and the powers that are given to this association far exceed the powers possessed by the New York association. It is also objectionable that the determination of the number and classes of contracts should be one of the duties of the board, as it interferes with the natural course of the market as regards classes of contracts and the number of contracts that should prevail at a particular time in the cotton trade and the power that is given to the cotton association to fix the number of contracts also would go against the agriculturists as I see from the list of cottons allowed to be tendered against a particular type that cottons of varying qualities are being allowed to be tendered under each type. So I should think that such a power of tendering so many varieties under a particular contract or under a particular class should not be given to the association.

Mr. G. FINDLAY SHIRRAS: I am afraid, Mr. President, that there is a little misunderstanding on the part of the honourable member for Kaira rural. About twelve years ago I was a member of the Prices Enquiry Committee presided over by that distinguished Indian, Mr. K. L. Datta, and we went into the question of the fixation of prices with very great care. The honourable member for Kaira has put forward an argument which I do not think this House will for a moment agree to, and that is, that this East India Cotton Association, formerly the Cotton Contracts Board, controls the prices of cotton. I can assure honourable members that the price of cotton to-day in Bombay is governed by supply and demand. What this East India Cotton Association does is to determine that a certain market price was ruling on a particular day, but honourable members know that the price on the Cotton Green to-day depends on the demand in Bombay, on the demand from Japan and also on the supply of cotton both ready cotton and cotton which is to come to market. The Cotton Contracts Board broadened contracts that, is to say, widened the range of grades of cotton that may be tendered against contracts, established a clearing House and the net result was the control of speculation. Therefore, all that this Cotton Contracts Board did, and all that this East India Cotton Association is going to do, is to control speculation.

No one can have a greater sympathy for the welfare of the cultivator than myself. The honourable member from Kaira rural knows that Government has always been most interested in, and will continue to be deeply interested in the welfare of the man behind the plough who is the backbone of the country. Now, what is the result if you have no control? You have chaos, and some time ago when there was multiple control, that is to say, when there was no one body to control speculation, you got confusion—and how does it affect the cultivator? Chaos means that he does not get his price for the article produced by him. Why? Because an artificially high speculative price means in the long run detrimental to him. So it is, all things considered, that the price is governed mainly by supply and demand, and I want to repeat once more that all that this East India Cotton Association is to do is really to determine that the market price to-day (which is governed by supply and demand) is so and so, and consequently this is entirely in the interest of the cultivator, the man behind the plough.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Has the machinery anything to do with the lowering of the level of prices of any commodity? Supposing in any particular business you introduce complicated machinery, that has perhaps something to do with the lowering of the prices.

Mr. G. FINDLAY SHIRRAS: The honourable member is not correct. I wish he had come to the Cotton Green a few days and seen the machinery actually at work. It is not so in the case before the House.

Having dealt with the question of the fixing of the prices and the interests of the cultivator, I now pass on to the other point, namely, the question of the rules. Government, as the Honourable Member in charge of the bill has said, have to sanction every rule, before it comes into force. Think what that means. No rule which is not in the interests of the trade or the cultivator will ever be allowed to pass, and, more than that, Government have clearly stated that the bill is for three years. After gaining full experience, Government will only extend it if the trade wants it and Government are satisfied. So, I think, all things considered, this Council ought unanimously to pass the bill.

Before I sit down, I should like to say a word about what Bombay has acknowledged and that is the extraordinarily good work done by the chairman of the Cotton Contracts Board, during a very difficult time. Mr. Wiles worked like a Trojan, and I am sure that this House will agree that his work on the Cotton Contracts Board has been of first rate importance (Hear, hear).

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Before adjourning, there is one point on which I hope the Honourable the Leader of the House, who is in charge of the bill, and other honourable members will bestow careful consideration. It is a point on which I feel some doubt, and it will have to be considered very carefully. I have not yet come to any conclusion, but I should like to have some light from the Honourable the Leader of the House and also from other honourable members. There is a clause added at the end which says:

> "Contracts for the purchase and sale of cotton entered into subsequent to 31st May 1922 and prior to the coming into operation of this Act under the rules or by-laws of the Association shall be subject to the provisions of this Act and of by-laws made thereunder."

That looks like giving retrospective effect to this bill. The Council is entitled to make an Act retrospective if it likes. But no provision having been made in this bill at the time of the first reading to give retrospective effect to it and as the definition of the word "contract" in this bill is "a transaction in cotton to be carried out", it is a serious question whether, as a point of order, it is not my duty to rule that the last clause goes beyond the scope and principle of the bill affirmed by the first reading. I hope it will be seriously considered before I give my ruling to-morrow. The clause introducing the principle of retrospective effect is very important, because the general rule is that no Act shall be retrospective, and no Act is to be interpreted as retrospective, unless there are words to that effect in the Act. The question was not debated at the first reading; no point was raised, and no hint was given, and the question is whether the select committee had the power to go beyond the scope of the original principle.

[The President]

The Council is adjourned to 2 p.m. on Wednesday the 27th September 1922.

Wednesday, 27th September 1922.

The Council re-assembled at the Council Hall, Poona, at 2 p.m. on Wednesday, the 27th September 1922, the Honourable the President, Sir NARAYAN GANESH CHANDAVARKAR, Kt., LL.D., presiding.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order.

LOCAL BOARDS BILL (BILL No. XVI OF 1922).

(Motion to refer the Bill to Select Committee.)

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Sir, I move that the bill be referred to a select committee consisting of 18 members, of whom 7 shall form a quorum and that the committee do report before the next session of the Council.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK: Seven is too small a number for such an important bill. I suggest that it might be 12.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Supposing that you do not get together 12 members at any meeting of the committee, that will be another way of wrecking the bill. In the House of Commons provision is made for a quorum and the quorum is usually 3. Do you insist upon your view?

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK: I merely suggested it.

Question put and agreed to.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Sir, I move:

> "That the select committee on Bill No. XVI of 1922 do consist of the following members: The Honourable Dr. R. P. Paranjpye, Mr. J. C. Ker, Mr. L. J. Mountford, Rao Bahadur G. K. Chitale, Rao Bahadur R. R. Kale, Rao Bahadur D. A. Vichare, Rao Saheb D. P. Desai, Khan Bahadur D. B. Cooper, Mr. B. G. Pahalajani, Khan Bahadur S. N. Bhutto, Khan Saheb A. M. Mansuri, Mr. Ibrahim S. Haji, Mr. O. Rothfeld, Mr. B. V. Jadhav, Mr. S. T. Kambli, Mr. M. W. Pradhan, Rao Saheb Harilal D. Desai, and the Honourable Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ghulam Hussain."

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: Mr. President, it is now my painful duty to propose an amendment to the motion made by the Honourable Minister. I shall read out names of the members whom I am going to propose, and the qualifications of each one of them. Then it will be for the Council to decide.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The procedure will be this: First how many names from amongst those in the Honourable Minister's motion do you accept? They will be put first and as regards the names your amendment proposes in the place of the rest in the motion, they shall have to be put afterwards.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: I do not wish to ask any one of the names proposed to be omitted. It is most invidious to have to say that A should be omitted and that B should be substituted in that place. I will, therefore, read out, and then the Council will decide how many have to be substituted.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You cannot avoid invidiousness. It is an inevitable part of the position you have taken up and it places me under the obligation of saying 'leave out so and so and substitute so and so'. I have to do that and that is the difficulty.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: There are persons in this Council who have done pre-eminent work in connection with district local boards. I find those names absent in the list read out by the Honourable Minister in charge. I have got a list in my hands with the qualification of each stated, which I will venture to put before the Council with your permission. Then those names which do not exist in the list of the Honourable Minister may be substituted if the Council agrees. Dewan Bahadur K. R. Godbole:.....

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Dewan Bahadur K. R. Godbole has declined to serve on the committee.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: Then it will fall through. I have not approached any single member to ascertain his desire to serve on the committee. Rao Bahadur S. D. Garud.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Sir, the House has already agreed to have 18 members. Is the honourable member in order in adding more names to it?

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: The Honourable the Home Member has not caught my point. I do not want to add but I want to substitute certain names.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Your point of view ultimately comes to what I have stated: it is my duty to put it to the House. Please read out your list, and we shall see what names are common, and then I shall put that first: the other names which are to be substituted and are not common to the list of the Honourable Minister will be put afterwards.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: I am quite prepared to put the question in that way if it is necessary to go to that extent: I shall read out the names: Dewan Bahadur K. R. Godbole, Rao Bahadur S. D. Garud, Rao Bahadur G. K. Chitale, Rao Bahadur D. A. Vichare, Rao Bahadur R. R. Kale, the Honourable Mr. H. S. Lawrence, Sardar Davar T. K. Modi, Rao Saheb Harilal D. Desai, Rao Saheb Dadubhai P. Desai, Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. Dalal, Mr. C. M. Gandhi, Khan Bahadur S. N. Bhutto (President of the Larkana district local board), Mr. B. G. Pahalajani, Mr. D. D. Gholap, Rao Bahadur R. M. Nilkanth, Mr. J. C. Ker, and Mr. C. C. Hulkoti, and the Honourable Minister in charge. The number is eighteen, but as Dewan Bahadur Godbole has declined to serve, my list is of seventeen.

Mr. KANJI DWARKADAS: Sir, I move that Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas' name be added to this list.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Yours is an amendment to the amendment, which cannot be allowed.

Mr. KANJI DWARKADAS: Then, I beg to withdraw it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: It is not a question of your withdrawing it: it is out of order.

The THAKOR of AMOD: Sir, not a single member has been taken from the landholders and zemindars.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Will you kindly act according to the rules? I have to put the amendment, and unless I put the amendment you have no right to speak. The amendment only mentions seventeen names.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: If you will allow me, I will add the Honourable Minister for Education.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You will have to move your amendment in these terms: " Leave out the following names from the question, namely, .....and insert instead the following names, namely,..... "

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: I beg to move:

Leave out the following names from the question, viz., Mr. L. J. Mountford, Khan Bahadur D. P. Cooper, Khan Saheb A. M. Mansuri, Mr. Ibrahim S. Haji, Mr. Rothfeld, Mr. Jadhav, Mr. Kambli, and Mr. Pradhan, and insert instead the following names: viz., Rao Bahadur Garud, the Honourable Mr. Lawrence, Sardar Davar T. K. Modi, Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. Dalal, Mr. C. M. Gandhi, Mr. D. D. Gholap, Rao Bahadur R. M. Nilkanth, and Mr. Hulkoti.

Sir, may I say one word before you put it to the vote ? All that I am anxious to convey to the honourable members whose names it has been my painful duty to move may be omitted, is that no reflection is meant on any of them. I feel very strongly that the Council ought not to overlook the names of those who have years of experience with the subject matter of this bill, but who happen to have the misfortune to differ from the Honourable Minister.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): I have only one word. From the discussion that followed from the first reading of the bill the House must have seen that the bill is one for local self-government and not for communal representation, and the names that have been proposed to be omitted are only of those holy members who have not shown much interest in the discussion of the bill from the point of view of local self-government, but only from the point of view of communal representation. And if the House feels that the question before the House is one of local self-government and not of communal representation, they must support the amendment of my honourable friend Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI: Sir, I wish to oppose the amendment proposed by my honourable friend from Bombay. It is very regretful that the idea should be prevalent in this Council that the people from cities are not able to look after the interests of the mofussil. It is to be deprecated that a suggestion has been made that the Honourable the Minister in charge of the bill has proposed these particular names to the select committee because they are the persons who will carry through the principle of communal representation. I think this way of thinking ought to be checked. The names suggested by my honourable friend from Bombay were introduced to us with certain qualifications at their back, that they have been the presidents of this board or that board. In other words I do not like the suggestion that the persons whose names are to be omitted are the persons who lack abilities or lack interest in local self-government of the country, and I submit to this Council that the names submitted by the Honourable Minister and the names suggested in the amendment ought to be considered on their merits and no aspersions should be cast and no suggestion should be made that the persons whose names have been suggested by the Honourable Minister have not shown any real interest in this bill.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Mr. President, I had no intention of speaking on this point but I find that it is of importance that the composition of the select committee should be such as will be acceptable to the whole House. It is for that reason that I propose to address a few words to the

[Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola]

Council. I do not know on what grounds my esteemed friend, the honourable mover of the amendment, has suggested the name of Mr. Lawrence in place of Mr. Mountford. Mr. Mountford is one of the Commissioners of Divisions and as such, has great knowledge and experience of the working of local boards. His presence will prove of great assistance to the select committee. The Honourable the Finance Member is so very busy that I do not think he will be able to find time to work on a committee on such an important bill which will probably require daily sittings. I should also like to point out how undesirable it is that not a single Commissioner of a Division should find a place on a select committee consisting of 18 members to consider a bill dealing with district matters. I do not wish to raise the question of communal representation, but as it has been introduced in the bill and on which there is bound to be a considerable difference of opinion, it appears to me hardly fair that no representative of the Mahomedan minority of the Presidency proper should find a seat on the select committee. The Honourable Minister has put three non-official Mahomedans on the committee. The honourable mover of the amendment turns out two and leaves only one Mahomedan representing Sind. There is therefore not a single Mahomedan from the Presidency proper on the select committee which will have to consider and decide the question of communal representation. Whether it decides in favour or whether it decides against it, there will be no opportunity open to Mahomedan representatives of the Presidency proper to represent their views to the large Hindu majority. To suggest that every Mahomedan member representing any part of the Presidency proper should be turned out of the select committee is a proposition which I trust the Council will not accept for a moment.

Apart from these two considerations, it will be observed from the list which the Honourable Minister has put before the Council, that he has taken great care in providing representation for all possible interests. He has not provided inordinate representation to any one Division in the Presidency or to any one communal or other interest; all interests, official as well as non-official, have been carefully thought out and put before the House, and I am sorry that such an amendment should have been moved by my esteemed friend Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA (Karachi City): Mr. President, I do not want to speak as to the merits of the original proposition or of the amendment. What I want to know, Sir, is how are you going to dispose of the amended list as against the original list? Are you going to put to vote the amended list en bloc for it is possible out of the original list or the amended list some may vote in favour of one man and some may vote in favour of the other. If you put the whole amended list en bloc as against the original list, I do not know what will be the position. I may prefer one of the names or five names out of the eight proposed by my honourable friend Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas and then I shall be in an awkward position. I should rather like to see the name of a particular man in the amended list pitted against another.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I am going to follow the usual rule which I have all along followed in putting amendments before the House and you know that rule by this time. There is bound to be some inconvenience but in a matter of this kind I shall follow that rule. There are two ways of putting the names of members of a committee when there is a motion and an amendment to it—one is the usual and the other putting each name as against another. The amendment proposed follows the usual practice and I am bound to put it in the usual way.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: May I reply?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Yes.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: Mr. President, I fully appreciate the remarks and the reprimand if I may call it of my esteemed friend, the Honourable the Leader of the House to whom I always look for guidance under similar difficulties. I fully realise my shortcomings and my poor qualifications in preparing a list of names for a select committee on a bill like this. But, Sir, what I have done has been done as a matter of principle—as a matter of vindicating that this Council must have a select committee the names of which must be judged from the speeches delivered on the bill and that no name of anybody who may have taken a prominent interest in the subject before this Council or who may have made any caustic remarks regarding the bill should be omitted, either knowingly or unknowingly, for any reason at all. I fully appreciate the difficult position in which I am and which the Honourable Leader of the House has tried to point out to me. May I ask with all deference to him whether he has not overlooked the most important grounds on which my list has been prepared, namely, absence in the list of names which requires still to be justified? Why are the names of Rao Bahadur Garud, Sardar Dalal, Sardar Modi of Surat, names of persons who are known for the excellent work that they have done, especially the name of Sardar Dalal who is the one man in Gujarat who has been at the head of a district local board for some years now—I hesitate to guess how many years—and whose work has been acknowledged by everybody whom I see on the benches opposite? Is there any justification why the Honourable Minister should have omitted these names? Regarding the Mahomedan question, I can assure the Council that I was not guided when I prepared the list as to how the select committee as constituted by me is going to vote. The Honourable the Finance Member's name was put by me specially after hearing his views regarding this question and I must assure the House that his name was put in not because I felt that he might have leisure or not, nor because I did not know whether he has taken any prominent interest or part in regard to district local board work till now, but mainly because of his strong views regarding separate electorates and his very intimate and daily touch with conditions in Sind. That was the only reason why the Honourable the Finance Member's name was put in by me. I should have no objection at all to substitute the name of Mr. Mountford for that of the Honourable the Finance Member, but, Sir, I wish to show to the House what a difficult position they may be put in. May I ask the Honourable Minister in charge if he is prepared to have this question put off till say tea-time, and if he does not mind condescending to it, we will sit down at a common table and perhaps be able to submit to the Council a list which will meet with their approval and meet with the approval of people who think like me. There is a practical solution if the Honourable Minister will take it. If he will insist on his right and say "No, you must take what I give or leave it," then I must press for my amendment.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA (Karachi City): Can I, Sir, move an amendment?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Whether you can put in another amendment or not would depend upon the fate of this amendment. I cannot tell you now.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: I need not, Sir, discuss the respective merits of the individual members who are proposed for the select committee in the original proposition or the amendment, because I do not like to make any remarks about individual members. But, generally speaking, I would submit, Sir, that, as pointed out by the Leader of the House, the amendment purposely drives out the representatives of the Mahomedan interests so as to create a division in the select committee. That in itself shows that communal representation is necessary. Again, the honourable member said that I have taken away all the names of those who have opposed the bill; but if the House were to scrutinise the names I have proposed, they would find that there are in my proposal both those who spoke for and those who spoke against the bill. On the other hand the amendment proposes the names of all those who are against the bill and takes away all those who have supported it. Among the names I have proposed is that of Rao Bahadur Chitale. Who can say anything against him? Then, Rao Bahadur Kale. Then, Rao Bahadur Vichare. He is neutral; he has not spoken on the bill, and we do not know his views. He is a representative of the Marathas and he ought to be there. Rao Saheb D. P. Desai spoke against the bill; he is there. Then, our Deputy President has spoken against the bill; he is there. Then, Khan Bahadur Cooper, who spoke for the bill. Then, Mr. Pahalajani, who spoke against the bill. Khan Bahadur Bhutto, who spoke for the bill. Khan Saheb Mansuri, who spoke for the bill. Mr. Haji, who has not spoken anything at all. Mr. Rothfeld. Then, Mr. Jadhav; he is the representative of the Marathas from the Central Division. Then, Mr. Kambli, a representative of the Lingayats. Then, Mr. Pradhan. In fact, I have taken every care to see that those who have spoken against as well as those who have spoken for the bill are included in the list, and I hope the House will reject the amendment.

Question put that the following names do stand part of the original question:—

Dr. R. P. Paranjpye, Mr. J. C. Ker, Rao Bahadur G. K. Chitale, Rao Bahadur R. R. Kale, Mr. D. A. Vichare, Rao Saheb D. P. Desai, Mr. B. G. Pahalajani, Khan Bahadur S. N. Bhutto, Rao Saheb Harilal D. Desai, and the Honourable Minister in charge.

Motion carried.

Question put that the names proposed to be left out do stand part of the original question.

The House divided. Ayes, 53; Noes 20. Motion carried.

Bill referred to select committee.

Original question put and carried.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind) : Sir, in view of the importance of the bill and the many interests concerned, I move that the select committee may be authorised to hear expert evidence and representatives of special interests affected by the measure. There is provision for this in Standing Order 6 (4) of Part VIII.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Standing Order provides for that :

"A Select Committee may hear expert evidence and representatives of special interests affected by the measure before them."

You do not want any instruction for that. The select committee has already the power.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : In that case, I beg to propose that the select committee shall hear expert evidence.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : You cannot make it obligatory when the Standing Orders make it discretionary. That would be overriding the Standing Orders.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : Sir, I beg to propose that the words "within two months" be substituted for the words "before the next session."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The House has already decided that ; we cannot go back upon it, as the Council has by accepting the Honourable Minister's motion directed that the committee has to report before the next session of the Council.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : In the Standing Orders it is said that the committee shall report ordinarily within two months.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : If, before the next session the select committee is not able to do it, then you may get an extension. In any case, when the Council has once decided, I cannot re-open the matter.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : I submit, Sir, that if the original motion is allowed to stand as passed there may be this difficulty : Supposing that this session is merely adjourned and not prorogued, then it would not be possible to take this bill up again at the adjourned meeting but only at the next session.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Before the next session means at any time before the next session which gives the utmost limit of time. It does not say at the next session.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: I understand, Sir, it means that it is open to the select committee to report eariler if they like and if they can do so, and that their report can be taken up at the adjourned meeting.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Yes, before the next session at any time.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: I see, Sir, it is so, as you say.

COTTON TRADE CONTROL BILL (BILL No. XIII OF 1922).

(Motion for second reading resumed.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Has the point which I raised just before adjournment last evening been considered by the Honourable the Leader of the House?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Mr. President, if you will permit me, I will explain the object with which that clause was introduced, and make it clear that no new principle has been introduced thereby. The clause runs:

"Contracts for the purchase and sale of cotton entered into subsequent to 31st May 1922 and prior to the coming into operation of this Act under the rules or by-laws of the Association shall be subject to the provisions of this Act and of by-laws made thereunder."

You will observe, Sir, that this clause really provides for uniformity in contracts of cotton for forward delivery entered into under the rules of the East India Cotton Association from the 1st June onwards. This bill may pass now and may receive the necessary sanction of superior authorities within the next few days. The rules and regulations will have then to be submitted to Government. They will necessarily take some time to sanction them. As soon as they come into operation, new contracts will be made under the sanctioned rules and regulations. There will therefore arise the difficulty that contracts entered into up to that date under the present rules and contracts entered into subsequent to the sanctioned rules will be governed by different sets of rules. The new clause has been added to the bill with the intention that if the sanctioned rules are to the benefit of both the purchaser and the seller, then the old contracts will get the benefit of such rules. It is not a new principle but merely a provision to bring about uniformity in the rules and regulations governing all contracts.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The difficulty which suggested itself to me last evening is solved. It was my duty to bring it to the notice of the Council. If a bill is prospective in principle when introduced and read the first time, you cannot make it retrospective in the select committee because the question whether it is to be prospective or retrospective has been decided at the first reading. In this bill I see now that the word "contract" is defined as meaning "a transaction in cotton to be carried out". Clause 7 added by the select committee relates to contracts entered into. So the prospective principle of the bill that it is to apply to the carrying out of contracts is kept intact and clause 7 does not conflict with that. Therefore it is in order.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): I rise to oppose the second reading of this bill. Sir, this bill is of the nature of a private bill according to the Parliamentary practice. We have not that distinction in our Councils. We have here Government bills and private bills. Government bills are those which are introduced in this House from the Government benches and private bills are those which are introduced by the non-official members of this House. But in the Parliament the practice is different, and also the terminology is different. There the bills which are in the interests of a private person or private persons are said to be private bills, therefore I submit that the present Cotton Bill being in the interests of the East India Cotton Association is a private bill. Mr. Erskine May has described the procedure that is followed in the House of Commons and he has also stated why a different practice is followed in the case of private bills. I am reading at the bottom of page 607 of "May on Parliamentary Practice". It is a very short paragraph :—

"Passing now to existing practice, the proceedings of Parliament, in passingprivate bills, are still marked by much peculiarity. A bill for the particular benefit of certain persons may be injurious to others: and to discriminate between the conflicting interests of different parties involves the exercise of judicial inquiry and determination. This circumstance causes important distinctions in the mode of passing public and private bills, and in the principles by which Parliament is guided."

Sir, in this paragraph it is stated that the interests of an individual and other individuals may conflict and therefore Parliament makes a distinction between the passing of a public bill and a private bill. Then a little further down the practice of passing private bills is described. I am still on the.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : How is that relevant here ?

Mr. A. N. SURVE : Sir, it is relevant in this way. We are not bound by the Parliamentary practice but I am trying to show that the rules of Parliament are based on the experience of many years.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The rules of Parliament are based upon the experience of centuries, but fortunately or unfortunately for us that experience is not utilised by the legislature in the Rules and Standing Orders for our benefit here. So we have to go according to our Rules and Standing Orders and there is no distinction between a public bill and a private bill so far as we are concerned.

Mr. A. N. SURVE : Sir, certain cautions are observed. Private bills of the nature of the present bill are not very frequent in our Council and as they are very rare I beg to submit that wherever we can adopt the Parliamentary procedure so far as it relates to the safety of public interests we should follow it. That is my humble submission, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : But that is a question for altering the Rules and Standing Orders and altering the Government of India Act. It is not relevant to second reading.

Mr. A. N. SURVE : I bow to your ruling, Sir, and further urge that apart from the Parliamentary practice, we are rushing through this bill. It was stated in the last session that this bill should be passed through all its stages in one session. I am very glad to say that the Honourable the Leader of the House did not comply with the request that was made to him by the promoters of this bill. Sir, this bill is of a retrospective nature, so far as the rules are concerned. If you look to the third para. of clause (3) you will see that the rules which are not yet framed are to be binding on the parties who have already entered into contracts. The rules, the Honourable the Leader of the House has said, have not yet been framed. They are to be framed hereafter and when they are framed the Government will consider and circulate them among the chambers for their opinions, and if there is any difference of opinion, the Honourable the Leader of the House has told us that he will follow the majority opinion and give sanction accordingly. Sir, I think it is very unfair to the trade to give retrospective effect to the rules which are not in existence and to which some may not consent. Then the last thing is that the Honourable the Leader of the House has assured us that this bill does not refer to contracts in which ready goods are to be delivered, but if you go through the clauses of this bill, I am afraid that ready goods also fall within its purview. If you look to the definition of contract, it is stated there

[Mr. A. N. Surve]

"'Contract' means a transaction in cotton to be carried out in whole or part in Bombay;"

It does not differentiate between a forward contract and a contract for ready goods. I ask, will the Honourable the Leader of the House differentiate between the two contracts by inserting the word 'forward' before the word 'transaction' in that definition? If this word is not inserted, what will happen? If a man enters into a contract, and there is any dispute, and that man goes to a court of law, then under the 5th clause, as the contract is not in accordance with the rules of the association, the court will hold the contract to be void, and the man will have no remedy, in spite of his contract being for ready goods. For these reasons, I beg to oppose the second reading of this bill.

Mr. F. NELSON (Bombay Chamber of Commerce): Sir, I rise to support the second reading of the bill. The recent happenings in the cotton market have caused me, in common with all those who have the interests of Bombay as a great cotton centre at heart, great misgivings, and I have come to the conclusion, after the most careful consideration, supported, I may add, in my opinion by the cotton interests of my constituency, that it is eminently desirable for the East India Cotton Association, which is at present controlling the cotton trade of Bombay, to receive statutory recognition by Government. In all large markets where large quantities of any staple product are bought and sold, there will always be found a certain number of traders who are convinced that the price of the particular commodity in question will go up and a certain number of traders who are equally convinced that it will go down. Each of these interests will operate accordingly, having regard to what they consider their business commitments are likely to be. This is what we call 'taking a view of the market' and the present day conditions of competition virtually force a trade risk of this kind on to a majority of traders. This is perfectly normal and is the natural working of the law of 'supply and demand', as applied to modern business conditions, but it is a very long way removed from the operation known as a 'corner', which has for its object the acquisition of the entire crop of a certain type of cotton, or at any rate a great majority of the quantity available in order that, when a trade demand for this type of cotton arises, the trader will be forced to pay whatever price the originator of the 'corner' may then be in a position to demand. To those honourable members who fear that the interests of the grower are not safeguarded by this bill, I may say at once that the cultivator does not benefit by the artificially enhanced prices. In fact, there are nothing but bad results. During the last few months, no less than three of these 'corners' have taken place, and it is my earnest desire and hope that by passing this bill into law we may be initiating the first step towards the prevention of this type of operation in future. Speculation can never be eradicated, but it may be controlled up to a certain point. The obvious remedy is a widening of the contract, and I hope we shall be fortunate enough to hear Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas shortly, who is one of our acknowledged authorities on cotton. He will do better justice to this highly technical subject than myself.

The inferential compliment which my honourable friend Rao Saheb Desai, perhaps unwittingly, paid me in suggesting that the board of the East India Cotton Association should consist of brokers places me in a somewhat difficult position as to how I can logically demolish his suggestion. He characterises brokers in so far as their calling is concerned as colourless. May I be permitted to say, Sir, that curiously enough that is one of the few qualities or defects—I am in some doubt as to under which head these should fall—that I have so far not heard applied to the profession to which I have the honour to belong. Seriously, however, we must bear in mind that we are seeking statutory recognition for a body which is controlling the many-sided cotton trade of Bombay, and as such it is surely essential that all interests should be represented. This, if I may say so, is the elementary principle of local self-government. I am robustly confident in the ultimate good sense of the cotton trade, or the interests that go to constitute the cotton trade of Bombay, realising, as I feel certain they do, that the prosperity not only of this great trade but also to a large extent the prosperity of the whole port is bound up with such measures being devised as may be calculated to dispel this pestilential miasma of speculation which is vitiating the whole of our commercial atmosphere.

Now, let us not be under any misapprehension. This is no governmental control of the cotton market: it is merely a desire to vest the government of the trade in a central body, counting upon the good sense of that trade to evolve and submit in due course a just and equitable set of rules and bye-laws for the sanction of Government under the Act.

Now, Sir, in conclusion I wish to tender my thanks to the Honourable Member in charge for his very lucid exposition in moving a second reading of the bill. At the same time, may I ask him to take the opportunity, when he replies, to assure the House that the date on which these sanctioned rules will be brought into force shall only be decided upon in consultation with the trade? With these words I strongly support the second reading of the bill.

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL (Broach District): Sir, I have to say very few words in connection with this bill. I have no doubt, so far as my knowledge of the cotton trade goes, that this bill is bound to do good to the cotton trade. The cotton trade of Bombay is the premier trade in the Presidency and as a matter of fact in the whole of India, and it should be the aim and object of this Council that that pre-eminence should be maintained.

Another point of which I know by experience is that this East India Cotton Association, by these statutory powers that they require, will be able to check speculation. It will not in any way injure the interests of the cultivators: on the contrary, I am inclined to believe that it will give them full prices when the produce is marketed. The element of speculation in forward contracts and hedge contracts is always present, but in ordinary industries and big organized trades you must always take into account this speculative element. Especially for the mills and factories of any industry, the manufacturers must sell forward and in order to sell forward they must buy forward, and if they are not protected by any statute or by any association, they are likely to suffer. As regards the agriculturists and producers, I beg to submit that whenever prices are good, they are protected by this statute to sell forward and to have their contracts enforced. Otherwise, when the produce is harvested and marketed, for one reason or another, either by capital being scarce or by the incidence of the land tax hanging over their heads, they are not able to move the produce at current and spot prices and consequently they are obliged to part with their produce at a very great sacrifice. Therefore, from my experience I find that this bill is bound to benefit even the cultivators. The element of speculation—in taking it too far into corners—as very ably explained by Mr. Nelson, is the only defect in the trade of Bombay, but when this bill is passed into law, on account of the settlement of the contracts at short periods, this will have a tendency to minimise that evil, but I should like to be enlightened on this point by my honourable friend Mr. Purshotamdas who is an authority on the subject.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Sir, everybody would be glad if we could stop speculation or curb it by means of legislation. But cotton is a commodity for export, and the country would be benefited immensely if anything happened to advance its price. It would be to the interest not only of the country but of the poor agriculturists. We have therefore to see whether by this control that is sought to be given to one particular association, the interests of the country at large (and of the agriculturists particularly) are safeguarded. In this we have the analogy of America, which is also a cotton-growing country and which is also similarly situated as regards export. Therefore I have taken some pains to find out what is being done in America in a similar situation. I understand that there is a cotton exchange house in New York and that it looks after the interests of the cotton trade, but I do not find that it rests content with control merely. It does many other things. Particularly that exchange busies itself in finding out the causes whenever there is depression in the cotton trade. Whenever prices go down, that exchange board at once looks out for remedies to raise the price. I fail to find anything in the bill empowering the new exchange, our East India Cotton Association, to do anything of the kind, i.e., to take any action to safeguard the interests of the country in times of depression. Am I to understand that it is not one of its duties ? If you take the analogy of New York, they busy themselves most in raising the price of cotton.

As regards speculation, I must say that I am not in favour of it, and I would welcome any measure that will control it. But, as the Honourable the Leader of the House stated, it is impossible to avoid speculation. In this trade even a genuine merchant, even the millowner, has to cover himself by his contract, and therefore even a genuine trader cannot avoid speculation. Therefore, the only thing that can be held objectionable is cornering. Now, we have to see whether cornering—people may not like the word "corner"—helps to raise prices, and thus indirectly tends to benefit the agriculturists and the country in general. I confess that I am not connected with the cotton trade and I do not know its intricacies, but my only point is this, that in this East India Cotton Association there is nobody who will guard the interests of the agriculturists. Now it was put to us by the Honourable the Leader of the House that the agriculturist does not suffer. I know that lately agriculturists even in far-off places do care to know the fluctuations of even New York and they are interested in the latest prices that are quoted from New York. I was in one of the villages recently which is a cotton growing village and I was surprised to find that agriculturists there were talking about and asking "what is the latest telegram about prices in New York?" That shows that agriculturists are interested in knowing present prices, in knowing the prices of what is called spot cotton. And then it is true that most of our agriculturists are poor and therefore they do not get the advantage of the rise and fall of the market; perhaps they are so much indebted that it is the sowkars who take the advantage, but it is our endeavour and should be the endeavour of Government that we shall so improve the condition of the agriculturists by co-operative and other measures that the agriculturists will be as far as possible free from the indebtedness of the sowkars. Then there are certain agriculturists who are able to procure money and wait till the price of cotton rises, till there is speculation in Bombay, till there is a cornering. Would such agriculturists get the advantage of the rise in price by the cornering that is going on in Bombay or not ? That is the question. Take for instance, the case of a person who is cornering. If the man who corners says he is ready to buy any cotton that is offered to him at Rs. 490 and if the East India Cotton Association comes in and says "No, cornering will ruin a certain man, will ruin a certain set of persons and therefore we shall set down the price or lower the price from Rs. 490 to Rs. 450", will it affect the interest of the agriculturist or not ? That is the only question I am interested in and if the Honourable the Leader of the House or the honourable member Mr. Purshotamdas can assure us that the agriculturist who can wait till the cornering of cotton has raised the price so much, can get the benefit of such rise, I will vote with them.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: Does the honourable member expect a corner every year or every season ?

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: Suppose for instance an agriculturist has some cotton ready for sale. He sees that in Bombay the prices are rising, whether by natural of unnatural causes. It is to his interest not to look into the matter whether it is by natural or unnatural causes but if the prices are rising and if he has any cotton ready in hand, will he be benefited by the rise of the price of cotton to Rs. 490 or will he be benefited by the price going down to Rs. 450 ? That is the only question I am interested in and if the Honourable the Leader of the House or the honourable member Mr. Purshotamdas can conclusively tell us that the agriculturist will not suffer and that agriculturists of this kind of which I have given an instance will not suffer, then I shall vote with them, but if I am not satisfied, then I will vote against them in the interests of the agriculturists and in the interests of the country. It is because, as I said, that we are an exporting country in this matter. Cotton is a commodity of export and the higher the price we get, whether it be by natural or unnatural causes, the better for my country and why should I let legislation come in and save one or two men who have been mad enough to corner and speculate ?

Then the other point is that the Honourable the Leader of the House says that certain circumstances have arisen, that certain interests have represented to Government. I thought that the Honourable the Leader of the House would not deal in that vague manner, that he would have told us the exact nature of the circumstances that have arisen, of the interests that have represented to Government. Why make such indefinite statements and not take the House fully into confidence ? We may not know what is going on in the cotton trade, we may not be interested. What I am interested in is, as I put it, that the agriculturists of the country should be benefited as it is both to the interest of the cultivators and of the country alike that the cotton producers should get every advantage out of the rise in price of cotton due to an attempt on the part of any one to corner or to speculate, whether it be by natural or unnatural causes, whether it is by speculation or by genuine business, whether one man is saved or one man is doomed, and as an agriculturist country, as an Indian, I am interested in seeing that the agriculturist gets as high a price as he can for his product. As a business man, I do stand for curbing speculation, but as it is put to us, speculation is impossible to be curbed. I am glad in this matter I have on my side the authority of Mr. B. F. Madon, who is the representative of Messrs. Tata Sons and Co., who export cotton and he says that it is impossible to curb speculation by this legislation. If opinions like that differ, how is the Council to judge on this question and why should we take any such steps by legislation of this kind which will affect the interests of the cotton producers ? Whether you say it or not, at least so far as the arguments advanced are concerned, the matter is plain to me.

On these two points, I should like more enlightenment both for me and for the Council before I can vote in favour of this bill.

Rao Bahadur G. K. CHITALE (Ahmednagar District): Sir, I had no mind to interpose in this debate, but judging by and applying the tests which the Honourable the Leader of the House has put before us, I look at the measure from the legislative point of view. We were told that this Act does not apply to ready contracts of cotton. I have tried to scrutinise the measure to try and see whether there are any words in the Act which excepted them from the purview of the proposed East India Cotton Association, but so far as the bill is framed, no such phraseology is used and this is the point on which I seek information.

Another thing which I may bring to the notice of this House is that at the last time when this bill was before the House for repeal one of the acknowledged authorities who was a member of this House, pointed out certain difficulties and he (the then honourable member, Mr. Wadia) said that as a man of experience he would warn the House that any bill which was intended to be piloted through this House would have to stand a particular test which was in his words " that this bill should be made applicable only to one hedge contract ". Hedge contracts should be defined, and he made it a condition that, whatever name was given to the association, the bill should apply to a single hedge contract and the whole crop of cotton of different staples grown in India should be available for tender as against any such hedge contract. I am looking at it from a common-sense point of view. His view was this, as the phraseology now stands, I find in line 25 " fixing and declaring market rates for cotton of any and every description". The instance that he took was that supposing a corner was made in " Umra " cotton, that the rules of the association should be so framed in order to avoid any " corner " delivery of any cotton which was grown in India ; otherwise " Umra " cotton will be cornered and it will be impossible from his point of view to avoid speculation. I think, Sir, that is a point on which this House will require elucidation from experts. I thought that when the bill for repeal was before us that point was really made by the representative of the Millowners' Association whose complaint was that unless that was done, there was no hope of curbing any manipulation or speculation. I am told across that the millowners have no objection. Well, I shake my head and say this House will have to be convinced. It appears to me a really good point was made then, namely, all these corners are made with a view to make a big profit in a very short time. There are huge funds behind and the Honourable Mr. Wadia's complaint was "We do not know what the funds behind this association are". Then, in that case, if they have got sufficient funds of their own, the chances are there will be huge speculations and corners in a particular staple of cotton, against which unless the rules of the association allow you to tender any kind of cotton, you will have to pay the price fixed by that particular board for that particular staple. I say, Sir, therefore, that these two difficulties might be removed, so that we might give an intelligent vote; otherwise, we are all blind and we will have to go with the Honourable the Leader of the House relying implicitly on his views and perhaps those of Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas and Mr. Nelson.....

[Rao Bahadur G. K. Chitale]

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I see honourable members still forget to say "the honourable so and so". I must insist upon it. It is inexcusable in a veteran like the honourable member now in possession of the House.

Rao Bahadur G. K. CHITALE: I apologise, Sir, for the omission. I am only anxious that all interests should be served and there should be no complaint even in this House that, even on such things as were brought to our notice before, we did not feel quite strong and a convincing case was not made out simply because millowners now want to come in. Who knows by what method or for what purpose they want to come in?

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: I am afraid, Sir, the nature of the bill that is before the House has been so badly misunderstood in some quarters that one honourable member of the House thought that it should be called a private bill, because it made recommendations for the recognition of a private association. Perhaps the coincidence that this year I happen to be the president of the East India Cotton Association is responsible for connecting me personally with most part of this bill and with the passing of the bill through the Council, as the Honourable Mr. Surve said, in great hurry last July. In addition to this, the flutter that has existed in Bombay during the whole of this month in connection with what is now famous as the September Oomra corner makes the consideration of this bill full of great interest to this House and, naturally, of increased responsibility also for them. I fully appreciate this peculiar and, if I may say so, unfortunate coincidence, but I think that will not make the Council shirk the responsibility that lies on their heads for legislating for what is said in the title of the bill "better regulation" and consequent control of cotton transactions in Bombay.

I may say at the outset, with reference to the misunderstanding that has arisen regarding what the Honourable the Leader of the House said in connection with ready cotton, that as far as I understood the Leader of the House, he said the fixation of prices did not affect ready cotton, whereas the Honourable Mr. Surve and the Honourable Rao Bahadur Chitale seem to have understood the Leader of the House to say that ready cotton would not be subject to rules and regulations of the association. What the Honourable the Leader of the House impressed and said clearly was that, inasmuch as the fixation of price of cotton had to be left to the directors of the East India Cotton Association, there might be conceded some uncertainty regarding this being done to the satisfaction of all. But whether that was correct or not, would have no effect, good or bad, for people trading in ready cotton, that is, for people not speculating, as some would call it, and not trading in forward cotton. I hope, Sir, I have put the point exactly as the Honourable the Leader of the House said and I hope I have made it clear to the Honourable Mr. Surve and the honourable member from Ahmednagar that there need be no misunderstanding as far as the Honourable the Leader of the House's remarks yesterday were concerned.

As several honourable members in speaking on the second reading of this bill have referred to my name for some information and for removal of certain doubts, etc., I would venture to encroach upon the time of this Council just for a few minutes, for I trust I would be able to show them the necessity of having an association like this at this juncture. Forward trading in any variety or any staple of cotton needs some sort of regulation and consequently—it will be clear to this House—some sort of control also. As long as trading in cotton in India was restricted to ready or what is called "spot" trading, there was no exchange or association with a board of directors necessary in order to regulate these transactions. The transactions regulated themselves, the buyers and the sellers agreed to certain terms, and the deal went through from a common sense point of view. But, as India is the second largest cotton-producing country in the whole world and as America is by far the most important market for cotton, the commercial community trading in cotton in India did not take long to follow the American method of disposing of their cotton before they actually had the cotton in their possession. This is called trading forward or trading for future months' delivery. In every country in the world where forward trading in cotton is desirable or practised, there is some sort of central body or association to control and regulate forward transactions. Go to New York, go to New Orleans, go to Liverpool, or, coming nearer home, go to Egypt, wherever there is an important cotton market and consequently important dealings of some size in forward transactions in cotton, an exchange or some sort of body is found necessary to regulate it. I hope nobody in this Council will have any doubt about this. It is, therefore, natural that Bombay being the largest cotton marketing centre in India should have a sort of exchange or association with a board of directors to regulate the transactions. The first one was started in 1875 and was the sole body in control of the regulations for these forward transactions. In 1892 a second exchange was started in competition with the first one, for reasons which are not pertinent to the points which I wish to put forward before the House for consideration. From 1892 to 1917 these two bodies either jointly or each independently and alternately controlled cotton transactions in Bombay. There being two bodies—there was not one single body—which controlled forward cotton transactions, it was left to common sense and ordinary law to regulate dealings in ready cotton. In 1917 happened the now notorious Broach corner. Several telegrams, due to exasperation on both sides concerned, were sent to the Government of India, and the Government of India sent down a deputation to Bombay who went into the question and reported that one central body was necessary to control forward cotton transactions in Bombay, and that it should be started. The Indian Cotton Committee presided over by Mr. McKenna was then in session or had just then submitted their report. So, the Government of Bombay started what was known as the Cotton Contracts Board. That body controlled the cotton trade in Bombay from 1919 to 1922 May. The Indian Cotton Committee unanimously recommended for Bombay one single association, including all the various interests to control the cotton trade of Bombay. The Government of India, by a letter which is now well known in the trade as Mr. Innes's letter, approved of that, and asked the temporary body, known as the Cotton Contracts Board to get into touch with the whole trade, that is the various sub-sections of the trade, and to devise some one association which would be acceptable to all interests.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: I should like to know whether there was any cotton merchant of Bombay on the Cotton Committee.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: Mr. N. N. Wadia was a member.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: He was a millowner. I wanted to know whether there was any Bombay cotton merchant on the committee.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: I have given the honourable member the name.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: He was a millowner.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: But the Government of India thought that he could adequately represent Bombay. I do not think there is any point in the question of my honourable friend. The recommendation of the Indian Cotton Committee, as far as the starting of a single association in Bombay to regulate and to control the cotton trade is concerned, is based on the unanimous evidence of everybody concerned before the Indian Cotton Committee, from Bombay, including the Bombay Cotton Exchange and the Bombay Cotton Trades Association and every other commercial body that gave evidence before the Indian Cotton Committee. Thus Mr. Wadia may well be said to have correctly reflected the opinion of the Indian cotton merchants in Bombay in that recommendation. Then, Sir, in accordance with the letter of Mr. Innes, who was then Secretary to the Government of India in the Commerce and Industry Department, the Chairman of the Cotton Contracts Board, the body that was to bridge the gulf, got into touch with all the various interests concerned, and the result is the East India Cotton Association.

My honourable friend from Ahmednagar made reference to the speech of Mr. C. N. Wadia made in this very hall almost a year back, on this question, when the Cotton Bill was to be repealed. At that time, last September, certain sections of the trade had got impatient, and even before September they approached the Government of Bombay saying "We do not want this control any longer by Government of the cotton trade." The Government of Bombay having secured the information they wanted said that they would apply for the withdrawal of the bill to the Council. Mr. C. N. Wadia may be said to have been representing the millowners' interests in this Council. The millowners had then a serious difference of opinion with the cotton trade. The millowners wanted what is called one-hedge contract. The cotton trade were then strongly opposed to it, and if I know their mind correctly to-day, they still continue to be strongly opposed to it. I was hoping that if this Council passed this bill, as the by-laws and rules of the association would be subject to the sanction of Government, this question of one-hedge contract or five-hedge contract would go before Government as an impartial authority over the two widely differing views existing on this question, and I therefore had expected that I would be able to spare the Council the infliction of what I will now have to say regarding what my honourable friend Mr. Nelson described as a highly technical subject. I will put the whole thing in a nut-shell.

The millowners think that by having a single one-hedge contract, they would stop all ideas of or efforts at corners. They are not wrong. The trade on the other hand say that by having only one single-hedge contract for Bombay, there will be such a depreciation in the return of prices to the caltivator as to preclude the idea of their agreeing to it under any circumstances. I hope, when I say that that is the difference of opinion between the two, the honourable member for Ahmednagar will agree that the trade should not adopt it without further consideration. I will further explain it in this way. The values of Indian cotton differ very much. If fully good Bengal is worth Rs. 250—300 a Khandi, fine Navsari would be at least Rs. 350—400 a Khandi, or higher up, and Cambodia may be higher still. Now all varieties of cotton grown in India would be tenderable against one single contract. The man who buys that contract does not know whether it would do for him to be prepared for payment of, say, Rs. 12,500 in order to accept delivery of 100 bales, or whether he will require Rs. 20,000. If he has to take delivery of say Bengal cotton at Rs. 250, it might be all right. But he may be tendered, by a person trading in fine Navsaris at Rs. 350—400 or by a person trading in Cambodias at a higher rate still, in which case the difference would be added to the price, and he would have to be prepared with Rs. 20,000 or more. From what I have stated, I hope the Council will be able to appreciate the issues. On these and similar questions the trade and the millowners could not agree last September. The trade, however, were, as I said, a bit impatient, and they approached Government for the withdrawal of the then existing control. Government of course said that they had no objection to the trade getting out of it. The result has been very fully explained to the House by the Honourable the Leader of the House. The Council themselves are a party to the new bill which was introduced in last March, approving of the withdrawal of the previous bill, which was saved only by the chance that His Excellency the Governor-General had not given his consent to it, and we are at this juncture considering this bill, application for which was made to Government unanimously by all the interests affected. The honourable member for Ahmednagar asked, what are the means by which the trade and the millowners have been unanimous? I will give him that reply explicitly.

After recess.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: Sir, last time when the bill for the repeal of Act I of 1919 was before this Council Mr. C. N. Wadia speaking on behalf of the Bombay Millowners' Association strongly objected to the East India Cotton Association as it was then constituted taking the place of the Cotton Contracts Board, the main bone of contention between that association and the Bombay Millowners' Association being on the score of a single hedge contract or five or six hedge contracts as were suggested by the then East India Cotton Association. Subsequently the trade and the Millowners' Association, thanks to the good offices of Mr. Wiles who was acting as chairman of the Cotton Contracts Board, came to an understanding; and I think it necessary in reply to the invitation thrown out by my honourable friend the member for Ahmednagar district, that I should tell the Council what that compromise was. It was pointed out to the Millowners' Association that several members in the cotton trade had honest and genuine apprehensions as to the effect of the adoption of a single hedge contract for the Bombay cotton market as far as the price available to the cotton cultivators in the districts was concerned. But it was also conceded that if this apprehension of certain members of the trade was rather far-fetched or was incorrect the trade would perceive that themselves in course of time and that in course of time the trade might come in line or fall in line with the Millowners' Association. But that would be on a future day and also a question of time, and also a question of the experience of members of the trade who do not agree with the millowners at present. The millowners having perceived the strength of this argument demanded a guarantee that the members of the East India Cotton Association will not make any such drastic changes in the rules and regulations of the East India Cotton Association as will make hedge contracts narrower. They said that at least they could not be a party to any hedge contracts which may be narrower than what was agreed upon. I wish to tell the Council that all these negotiations were carried on with full knowledge that the legislature may take time to or may not recognize any cotton association and we were prepared to arrange our needs in such a manner that, if the worst came to the worst, the association would stand and the cotton trade in Bombay would be carried on as best as possible and as the trade themselves could manage. So an undertaking to this end was given, that the number of hedge contracts should be restricted to five, and that they would not be increased from five, that they would include certain districts in each contract and that no narrowing would be done. For instance in the contract for Broach growths of cotton known as Punjab-Americans, Surat, Kathiawar and Cutch would be included. Thus the whole idea was that the contracts should be changed in the direction of a broader basis and not of a narrower basis, and the millowners agreed to join. There was also some difference of opinion regarding the principle on which the chairman was to be elected and also as to who had the right of electing the directors of the board. However, I do not think it interests this Council or is pertinent to the remarks made by the honourable members, and I therefore do not propose to weary the Council on that point. But I think I might mention that I have made an attempt to place before the Council the important part of the compromise. So that was the compromise on which the millowners, and the trade agreed to contract, and after that was reduced to writing as it was agreed on both sides, the millowners became members of the East India Cotton Association, and practically the Millowners' Association and the East India Cotton Association became unanimous and came under one roof. We started to work from the 1st of June, and with the consent of the millowners, whose representatives are on the board of this East India Cotton Association in the same proportion as those from any other sections of the trade, it was unanimously resolved by the board of that association to approach Government with a request that Government might be pleased to give some sort of recognition to the East India Cotton Association. It therefore is not as if the Government of Bombay choose to give recognition to this Association on their own initiative simply, but there is the unanimous recommendation of the Indian Cotton Committee followed by a letter from the Government of India in the Commerce and Industry Department chalking out the lines on which the Association would have to address the Government of India for their recognition by the legislature, and then followed in greater detail by the Government of Bombay. This bill therefore comes before this House not as a private bill but as a bill with the full approval of the Indian Cotton Committee, the Government of India and the whole of the cotton trade of Bombay. I wish, Sir, to submit to this House this consideration. Supposing this House chose to reject this bill and did not pass it, the cotton trade of India or Bombay and the cotton trade all over India will go on. As long as the trade can export cotton to

[Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas]

Japan and other places, the activities of the trade will go on and the Association also will go on doing its business in cotton. Is it not more desirable to elevate a trade in which the merchants, the millowners, the general public, and, if I need say it, all the growers of cotton, are so much interested? For I understand my honourable friend Mr. Trivedi has appealed to the House very strongly in the interests of agriculturists. Other honourable members have also spoken very strongly as to the ill-effects of any cornering or other artificial manipulation. Is it desirable to leave this important staple outside the control of the Government, and therefore of the legislature, or is it better to bring it under the control of Government and hence under the control of this House, as I will presently show? The rules and by-laws are subject to the sanction of the Government. If it is represented to Government by anybody, either outside the trade or within the trade, that a certain rule or regulation is detrimental to the interests of agriculture, or to the interests of the importance of Bombay as a cotton market, does any honourable member think that Government will not consider it? In the best interests of everybody, the interests of trade, the interests of agriculture and the interests of the investing public, and for financial considerations, it is desirable, also from the legislators' point of view, that dealings in forward cotton should be subject to the control of Government so far as by-laws and regulations are concerned. With all respect to the honourable members who expressed great misgivings, I fail to understand how on the second reading of the bill, it can be said 'Leave the bill alone; we do not want to interfere with the trade'. The trade has been unanimous and has approached Government. If the trade agrees to give some hold either to Government or to this Council, then the Council must welcome it. As a mere merchant, forgetting myself for the moment that I am a member of the Legislative Council, I would ask, looking to the selfish interests of only the people dealing in cotton, "Why go to Government and give explanations? From 1875 up to 1922 the cotton trade was carried on without Government control." Now, I am afraid, the cotton trade is putting itself into a position where it has to offer explanations, and give this House particulars in reply to questions as to certain aspects which may or may not be known to the public. That is a rather narrow view I would take merely as a cotton merchant.

I now come to the remark made by the honourable member, Mr. Trivedi, that in every one of the foreign markets, there is only one single association controlling it. It is not clear whether such associations have the approval of the Government or not; and I am not conversant with the actual conditions there. But I believe that the sense of discipline is greater there than in India; perhaps the trading community themselves have so organised themselves, as to conduct their business without the need of any legislation. We tried it in Bombay from 1875 to 1892; then there was difference of opinion, and there sprang up another association. These two associations tried to control the trade for 20 years, and it was agreed unanimously by all in the trade, by the Government of India and the Cotton Committee that in order to better the condition of cotton trade there should be one single association and no more should be allowed. How are you going to prevent another association from being started except by legislation? In the East India Cotton Association you have got a body on which all interests are represented more or less evenly. Here you have got a body where no one party will have its whole say except under special circumstances or an accident. I submit that you cannot devise anything better than what has been done in this association. I further submit that you cannot prevent any other association from being started unless a bill like the one before the House is passed. I wish briefly to refer to the two minutes of dissent which.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: These two minutes attack the whole bill, and I have already ruled them out though somehow or other they got in. I do not think it necessary that you should refer to them.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: My honourable friend from Kaira remarked that the control of cotton was undertaken in 1919 during the period of war. I am afraid my honourable friend from Kaira has picked out a few portions from one speech or another and tacked them on to the minute of dissent, irrespective of the conditions in connection with which some remarks were made by the Member in charge, Sir George Carmichael. You rule, Sir, that I need not refer to it, and I do not propose to follow it up any further. But I wish to point out one thing that although that legislation was conceived when the war was on, and although that legislation was enforced first under the Defence of India Act, and secondly under the war exigencies, the Honourable Member in charge of the bill moving it said distinctly that these were temporary measures before a permanent one could be devised and put before the legislature. I do wish that the honourable member from Kaira had also said that, when he said other things, and emphasised that the Cotton Contract Act was a war measure. His omission to say that, I am afraid, may give honourable members of this Council an imperfect and incomplete idea of the circumstances in which that was said.

(At this stage Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI rose to interrupt.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: No honourable member is entitled to interrupt a speech unless the member in possession of the House gives way.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: I have not given way, Sir. Just one more thing about the dissenting minute of the honourable member from Kaira. He says that the association becomes a trust or a pool. Surely you can have a trust or a pool when there is capital or if you give trading powers to that association. No trading powers are given to that association and no capital is possessed by the association. Not only that, but the articles of memorandum of the association say that their business is only to regulate cotton transactions. Surely, before the honourable member said something which would be prejudicial to the whole bill and the East India Cotton Association, he should have ascertained whether the association had capital or trading powers. They have neither. The main grounds on which both the honourable members have written dissenting minutes show one thing, that the fluctuations of cotton rates in Bombay do affect cotton rates all over India. The speeches of the honourable members who have spoken before also make it clear that the fluctuations of rates in Bombay would be reflected in the return to the cultivators for the cotton that they would sell. I submit, Sir, to this House that that very reason should make them all the more ready to devise something by which cotton transactions in Bombay could be carried on in a systematic manner. If the fluctuations of prices in the Bombay cotton market are reflected in the returns to the cultivators up-country, is it not a very good reason why those transactions should be properly controlled, if you like to call it so ? Is not the control that is being given to Government by means of powers to approve or to reject the bye-laws of the East India Cotton Association—a very strong power given to the Government by the cotton trade—beneficial to the interests of the cultivators ? I therefore submit that the same reasons that have been used for the rejection of this bill go very strongly to urge this Council to adopt this bill as early as possible.

The honourable member from Kaira has stated in the last paragraph of his minute that he does not think that this bill should be passed in this form. He has not put up any constructive form : he has not said that this should be taken off and something else should be substituted. Now, I was very carefully scrutinising his speech to see if there was anything constructive he had to put forward, and the only constructive suggestion that I have heard is that instead of having all interests represented in the board only brokers should be represented as they are the most impartial and colourless people. My honourable friend Mr. Nelson has dealt with that. I submit that Rao Saheb Desai's suggestion is a thing which will not appeal not only to any section of the trade, but to any member in this House either.

My honourable friend Rao Bahadur Chitale referred to clause 3 (e) :

"fixing and declaring market rates for cotton of any and every description which rates shall be binding for all purposes upon every one dealing in such cotton."

He said that he had some apprehensions about this clause. Now, Sir, fixing and declaring market rates for cotton of every variety is a thing which has got to be done from day to day when contracts are closed, in order that those who are dealing in it may know exactly how to close their contracts, but that necessity does not arise until one of the two sides, namely, the seller or buyer, has failed to carry out his part of the contract fully. If I have sold forward 5,000 bales and A has bought the 5,000 bales, both being members of the association, and I tender 100 bales, A may take them or he may refuse to take them. If the contract is not hedged, and the transaction is ordinary, the fixing and declaring of market rates does not concern him. The fixing and declaring comes in when I tender the cotton and he rejects it on account of low quality, in which case of rejection the contract has to be squared up and the contract can be squared up only at the rates fixed by a board. So that this clause 3 (e) does not affect people dealing in cotton in the ordinary course, but where power is given to chose or to reject, and the rejection takes place, the contract has to be closed and some sort of body is necessary to regulate the rate at which that contract can be closed, and that body can only be a board of people representing all sections of the trade.

I do not think, Sir, that I have got anything more in justification for my support of the second reading of this bill. I will only say one thing before I finish, and that is that I very much regret the absence of my honourable friend Mr. Petit who represented the Bombay Millowners' Association in this Council. The Honourable the Leader of the House told the House yesterday in his opening remarks that in the enforced absence of Mr. Petit Government offered nomination to the Chairman of the Millowners' Association to come to the Council and to be present in the Council to put the views of the Millowners' Association before this House. The Chairman of the Millowners' Association being very busy and not finding it suitable to attend the Council meeting, I understood the Honourable Leader of the House to say that Government offered the same privilege to the Vice-Chairman of the association, but that neither of them were prepared to come to the Council and say whatever they might have had to say. I regret that the Chairman of the Bombay Millowners' Association, who has been of such great assistance to me as President of this Cotton Association and to the whole board, should not have found it convenient to come before the House when an important measure like this was being discussed by this House. I hope the House will realise that Government have given every possible opportunity to every person concerned in the cotton trade to put his views before the House. Though personally, from the narrow point of view of a cotton merchant, I am sorry that somebody else is going to have a say as to how the trade should be carried on, I have no hesitation in saying that the Council by passing this Bill will be doing one of those actions which for years hereafter will be remembered as a step in the right direction, and I go further and say that it is not unlikely that the Governments of other Presidencies, where similar staples are being dealt with speculatively and for forward settlements, may before long look up to this Act as a model. With these words, I support the second reading of the Bill.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District): Mr. President, coming as I do from the mofussil, I am inclined to say a few words because although the bill as it has emerged from the select committee says that the Act shall apply to transactions in Bombay, still the word "contract" as defined, saying as it does, that transactions in cotton can be carried out either in whole or in part in Bombay, if any payment is to be made or any act is to be done in Bombay, that means that the contract will be affected by this bill. I need not say that I do not consider that such legislation is not necessary. Debates in the last Council on the bill that was before the House then, show that there was a necessity for a measure of this kind and it was pointed out in fact that because there existed no such body in this country as the Cotton Exchange of Liverpool or America, therefore Government had to undertake control and now I must say that it is a matter of congratulation that an association is being formed or is formed to do that work. But my difficulty is that the constitution of the administrative machinery of that association is not at all before us. It is sanctioned in clause 4 by Government. We were told that it was going to be a sort of local self-government body. Quite true, but we do not know, we are not in possession of any facts which do go to show, the constitution of the administrative machinery. Secondly, the bill consists mostly of, I should say, a section which gives power to the board to make rules and regulations. There is nothing substantial so to speak laid down in the Act itself. Ordinarily merely leaving everything to rules is a sort of unsatisfactory state of things but in this case it goes further because the rules are to be made not by Government but they are to be made by that body and not even by that body but by the board and even the board means the board of directors of the association acting through a quorum of some members and that quorum may be made of two or three people even. I know that the sanction of Government is to be obtained for the approval but.....

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: May I inform the honourable member, Rao Bahadur Kale, that the articles of association make it necessary that those rules should be submitted to 19 members representing the representative committee of the association, all the six panels to be represented and the 19 people thus constituted must pass those rules before they are submitted to Government?

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: Exactly, the explanation offered by Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas itself shows the difficulty under which we are labouring; not that I am opposed to the measure as such, but we are absolutely in the dark as to what is the quorum. Of course I am obliged to my friend because he now explains but still as I say nothing is placed before us.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: It was a very good argument for the first reading but the bill has passed that.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: I am opposing the second reading on the ground that the bill as it has emerged from the select committee.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Was that argument made at the first reading?

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: I do not know....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I do not want to come in your way but I think we must not allow looseness of debate.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: My difficulty is, as I said, that there are not sufficient materials before us to enable us to know what is this constitution going to be and what these rules will be and as the honourable mover of the bill said that there was opposition.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Why did you not raise all these points at the first reading and say that this bill should not pass the first reading unless all and full information is laid before the House as regards the constitution of this association which is the priniciple of the bill affirmed by the first reading?

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: The principle of the bill that there should be some body to control is not disputed and I am not going to dispute it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The principle of this bill was that the control of cotton transactions shall be entrusted to the particular body named in it. Now you cannot change that body after it has been affirmed at the first reading. No amendment to substitute another body would be now in order; that is against the principle.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: With due deference, I am not going to say that there should be another body. My difficulty is that the rules of the constitution of the administrative body.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I understand you thoroughly, Rao Bahadur. You want information about this association. The time for asking for that information was the first reading. Now the first reading was allowed to be passed and that body was allowed to be kept intact. Therefore it is too late to say that information ought to be forthcoming. I do not want to come in your way, but do not please go into details.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: I must say I am not satisfied as my difficulties still present themselves to me and those difficulties are these. As I have said, the honourable member, Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas, ought to have furnished members of this House with copies of articles of association or whatever they may be called and that would have been certainly a very proper thing to do, and the members of this Council would have been in a position to look through the constitution, but in the absence of anything of that kind being supplied to members and in the absence of any information, it seems to me that it is impossible for us to give our assent to the second reading of the bill. I should not be taken or understood to say that I am opposed to any legislation of this kind or to the constitution of such body, but the gist of the discussion in the last bill was that the bodies in India have not yet sufficiently advanced to that stage to which the cotton exchanges in America or Liverpool have done. That was the burthen of the arguments that were advanced but until and unless they are satisfied that the body which is newly formed has attained that level, I think our misgivings will continue and therefore until and unless the Council is satisfied that the new East India Cotton Association or whatever its name may be is formed in that manner and any body stands on the same footing as the several cotton exchanges in other parts of the world, I believe we have a right to say that sufficient material has not been made available to us.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI (Bombay City): Mr. President, it has been urged that representations have been made to Government to undertake legislation in order to create a cotton exchange along the lines of the cotton exchanges in Liverpool and America. There has not, so far as I can see, been a single public meeting either in the districts or in the city of Bombay nor has there been a single meeting of the producers of cotton in the districts where cotton is produced calling for such legislation. The first measure of this kind came as the result of the war which was put forward as its justification. Now those conditions are non-existent and yet this House has been asked to pass this bill not as a war measure but as a substantial and as a permanent Act of the legislature. Now, for such a legislation we expected that it would emerge from the select committee for second reading in such a manner as would command the confidence not only of this House but of the public at its back. Those who have ventured to support this bill have not quoted a single instance in their favour to show that the public opinion demands it, but we have heard from stalwart traders in cotton and also from the president of the board of the East India Cotton Association a vindication of the persistent demand that such legislation should come into existence. Why is it wanted? Because the transactions are to be controlled; that is, the board must have powers to fix prices, and prices of what?—not only of the future or the forward sales or purchases, but of any sales including the ready sales. As you would see, Sir, in clause 3, sub-clause (e), it is specially laid down that the whole board should provide for certain rules relating to this trade. The sub-clause reads:

> "fixing and declaring market rates for cotton of any and every description, which rates shall be binding for all purposes upon every one dealing in such cotton."

It is ridiculous to say, Sir, after the way in which this bill has emerged from the select committee, that it does not affect the agriculturists. I submit, Sir, that the select committee has not considered this bill in all its aspects as was expected from the select committee by this House, and the dissenting minutes which have been appended to the select committee's report at once indicate that the select committee as a majority did not consider that this bill would affect the agriculturist classes. And the very retention of this clause, which gives powers to the board to control not only the forward sales and the fixing of prices of the forward sales, but also of any sales, shows that the select committee has not considered this point. Therefore, it becomes incumbent upon this Council to consider seriously whether they should accept the second reading of the bill or not, and in submitting my view, Sir, I ask this Council not to pass the second reading of this piece of legislation.

The second question, Sir, I want to submit to this Council is this, that when a single board, the East India Cotton Association in this instance, is given the power to fix prices of any sort of cotton at any time and at any rate, it is a very extraordinary power that this Council is going to give to a board of traders. In other words, by passing the second reading of the bill, we shall create not a trust, as mentioned by my honourable friend from Kaira, but a group of monopolists and their vested interests will become so strong that I do not know where the cultivator of cotton will be when that exchange comes into existence. Sir, if I carry on my remarks in showing to this House how this bill would affect the consumer, I am afraid, Sir, you would rule me out of order that I am speaking as if on the first reading. But it seems, from the way the bill has emerged from the select commtitee, that this Council has been awakened to what has passed between the time that this bill was submitted to the select committee and the time when the select committee made its report. In these words I ask this House not to pass this legislation to give powers into the hands of one board of trade, namely, the East India Cotton Association, particularly when there is no public opinion at its back and there is no demand from the producers of the commodity. If this Council passes it, I am afraid the Government will commit itself to teaching certain lessons to traders in other commodities or to the professions how to behave and how to control and fix prices. This is not the function of Government to interfere. If cotton traders do not know their business, well, it is not the business of this Government to say to them, "You better trade in this way", I would, therefore, ask the House to reject the second reading of the bill.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District): Sir, by this bill, it is sought to give absolute, dictatorial powers to the East India Cotton Association, to fix and regulate the price of cotton. It has been put forward that the interests of the Bombay cotton trade have been consulted, but nobody has ever suggested that the growers of cotton have been consulted in this matter. Their interests are, strange to say, considered fit to be safeguarded by the traders and manufacturers of cotton. When I consider this bill, Sir, another point suggests itself to me and I think it is my duty to place it before this House. Some time back, it was sought to introduce legislation in this Council in order to prevent the transport of cotton from one place to another; and now we see a similar bill on the anvil of the Central Legislature. Now here we are and this position has been reached; namely, this Council wants to give power to fix the price of cotton to a certain set of interested traders in Bombay; by another piece of legislation in the Central Legislature, it is sought to prevent the free transport of cotton from one place to another, except under a license. The result would be this, that instead of the price of cotton being fixed by the natural law of supply and demand, instead of the prices being regulated by the world prices, instead of the free and unfettered movement of cotton to places and markets where it can obtain the best price, if the two pieces of legislation introduced are passed, certainly a monopolist class will be created in Bombay whose interests it would be to put down the price of cotton. And, Sir, if you take into consideration the fact that though the price of cotton has gone down considerably recently, still the manufacturers of cloth and yarn have not reduced the price of cloth and yarn by that proportion, certainly much misapprehension will be caused, and I think it will be caused on right and reasonable grounds. Therefore, Sir, I oppose the second reading of this bill.

Major General W. E. JENNINGS: I move that the question be put.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I accept the closure?

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA: I would like to say a few words, Sir.

Honourable Members: Vote, vote.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Very well, I accept the closure.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Sir, I thought the lucid explanation which my honourable friend Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas gave to the House would have satisfied them in accepting this measure...

An Honourable Member: It has gone the other way.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: I was hoping that the duty of explaining to the House further, which devolves upon me, might have been spared in view of that explanation. But I find that there is still considerable misapprehension in regard to the principles of the bill. I should like to ask honourable members to bear in mind one very important fact, and that is that the cotton trade, so far as forward contracts are concerned, requires to be regulated by an association. For the past fifty years there have been one or more associations discharging the duties of regulating the trade. It has been found that the trade cannot go on unless there is some association in whom the powers of regulating it are vested. It is necessary that an association must exist. The question, therefore, is whether this Council, desires that, in the interests of the community, the rules and regulations of such an institution should be subject to the sanction of Government, or whether those rules and regulations should be made on the exclusive authority of the association itself. That is the first issue. The second issue for consideration is whether in the interests of the community which includes the agriculturists, it is desirable to have only one association, recognised by Government, whose rules and regulations are controlled by Government, or any number of associations, leaving the traders to contract under the rules of any of them.

Having pointed out that it is necessary that an association should exist in the interests of the trade, I would ask honourable members to consider whether it is in the interests of the agriculturists and the cotton trade to have one association only which can impartially and judiciously deal with all problems, or two or more associations. It must be remembered that there are forward contracts for the sale and purchase of cotton. If there were no contracts for the sale and purchase of cotton for forward delivery, there would be no occasion for any association. Now, I ask whether it is or it is not in the interests of the producers of cotton and the traders to have forward contracts. If the opinion of honourable members is that there should be no forward contracts in cotton at all, then I could quite understand their opposition to the second reading of the bill. But forward contracts are essentially necessary, in the interests of the producers, in the interests of industries and in the interests of the trade. Honourable members will remember what has already been pointed out, that cotton is a world commodity, that India has not got a monopoly of that article, and that India is not the largest producer of cotton. The prices of cotton are governed by world prices, and telegrams are exchanged every day, if not every hour, between the principal centres of production and consumption of cotton as regards the prevailing rates. Forward contracts are entered into in all these principal centres, and if India decides not to have forward contracts it would be doing the greatest injury to the agriculturists, in whose interests some opposition has been offered to the bill. If it is necessary in the interests of the general community, especially the agriculturists and the cotton industry, to have forward contracts, then there must be some authority to regulate such transactions. If you do not have an association, forward contracts cannot take place without involving costly litigation. If the bill is rejected the trade will have to organise one or more associations, with the result that the community will suffer. That is the issue before the Council. The trade has come to Government and asked their help in order that the trade may be regulated and controlled on lines approved by an independent authority like Government. If the trade is told that it should shift for itself, it would to my mind do considerable harm to the community.

I was particularly amused at the speeches which were made by my honourable friend Rao Saheb Dadubhai Desai and the honourable member for Thana. Their position seems to be that cornering is to the advantage of the cultivator, because cornering raises prices and therefore the agriculturists get higher prices. The honourable member for Thana said that there are agriculturists who will wait till a corner has raised the prices; as if cornering was an every day affair. But what I was particularly amused at is that these honourable members seem to be under the impression that cornering was a philanthropic institution which raised prices for the benefit of the agriculturists, and that a hard-hearted Government were coming to the rescue of the cotton trade by recognising an association, in order to deprive the agriculturists of higher prices due to an every day affair called cornering! Sir, the people who resort to cornering desire to create a monopoly by getting the entire supply of the crop in order to raise prices to the detriment of the community, and, after all, the rise of prices in cotton by these unnatural means would raise the prices of piecegoods which every consumer in India has got to pay for. They try cornering in order to put crores of rupees into their own pockets. Whether they succeed or not is a different question. I made it perfectly clear in my opening speech that it is not possible to control entirely a reasonable amount of speculation, and there is considerable misconception as to what speculation means. I explained to honourable members that a millowner does not want to speculate. Supposing he sells 2,000 bales of piecegoods or yarn for delivery six months hence, he has got to cover his cotton in order to make a safe transaction. He does not get the class of cotton from which he proposes to manufacture. Therefore he buys forward Broach or one of the other standard qualities in India, or in America, Liverpool or New York as a hedge against his sale. When the time of delivery comes, he has got to sell his purchase in order to buy ready cotton of the quality he wants, for manufacturing purposes against his original sale of yarn or piecegoods. Now if you stop forward contracts the result will be that the important cotton spinning and weaving industry in India will be adversely affected. The interests of the agriculturists will also suffer because if there are no forward contracts the tendency would be for prices to depreciate. In this connection I should like to invite the special attention of honourable members to what my honourable friend Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas pointed out. He said that there was one section of the trade which desired that there should be only one hedge contract. The effect of this would be to depreciate the prices of cotton and the trade has wisely resisted it. No one desires that anything should be done to depreciate prices. At the same time no one can desire that prices should be forced up by an effort to capture the entire production of a particular quality. What every one should desire is that such an important trade as the cotton trade should be conducted on the principles of fair trade and the object of this association in coming to Government and getting Government control over their rules and regulations is to ensure that such should be the case.

[Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola]

There is only one point to which I think I must refer and that is to remove an impression from the minds of some honourable members that the organization and recognition of the East India Cotton Association would result in lowering prices. I do not think such can be the case. The intention must be that the trade should be carried on on the principles of fair trade. The prices would in the ordinary course be regulated by world conditions. The rise and fall in prices will depend upon supply and demand not in India alone but also in other parts of the world. The total world production of cotton, the total demand for cotton throughout the world will operate in regulating prices. That is as it should be in the best interests of every interest concerned, and that is why Government want to support this bill.

There is only one word, Sir, which I will say in conclusion. I hope I have satisfied honourable members that what they are doing is a thing which will endure and which will reflect credit upon them and that it will in no way be to the detriment of any legitimate interest. The honourable member for Satara, Rao Bahadur Kale, pointed out "We do not know anything about the constitution." I have told the House in my opening speech that as soon as Government receives the rules and regulations framed by the association which will contain all details, they will send them to the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau, the Millowners' Association and other important trade associations. On a suggestion received, they will also be sent to the Karachi Chamber. The whole trade will have an opportunity of considering those rules and regulations, and, if necessary, I have promised to invite a conference of the representatives of those interested in the trade in order that Government may be in a position to judge exactly what is in the best interests of the community. Having done that, I may give a further assurance required by my honourable friend Mr. Nelson that the rules will only come into operation on a day which will be suitable to the trade. Government do not desire to favour any specific interest in the trade. They stand to help the trade as a whole and it is on that basis alone that they have brought forward this legislation and it is on that basis alone that Government ask honourable members to pass the second reading of this bill.

Question put. House divided. Ayes 36. Noes 33.

Bill read clause by clause.

Clause 2 (Definition) ordered to stand part of the bill.

Clause 3 (Power of Board to make by-laws) ordered to stand part of the bill.

Clause 4 (Legality and alteration of Articles of Association).

The constitution and administrative machinery set out in the articles of association of the Association are declared to be lawful. The said Articles shall not, except with the sanction of the Governor in Council, be altered in respect of the number or constitution or Panels or the representation upon (a) Panels, (b) the Panels Representative Committees, (c) the Representative Committee of the Association or (d) the Board.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: I have got an amendment.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Have you given notice of it?

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: I gave notice of it, but it was ruled as time-barred. I have to ask for special permission.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: What is your amendment? If it is important and affecting vital interests, I may dispense with the rule as to time-bar.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: In clause 3.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: We are now concerned with clause 4. Did you not notice that I proposed clause 3 and sat down? What a pity you are not so vigilant. Next time at least please be vigilant.

Clause ordered to stand part of the bill.

Clause 5 (Contract contravening by-law void).

Any contract (whether either party thereto is a member of the Association or not) which contravenes any by-law of the Board shall be void.

Mr. A. J. F. HOOD (Bombay Chamber of Commerce): Sir, before moving my amendment to this clause, I request you to advise me as to what the correct form would be.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You read your amendment and I shall put it in the proper form.

Mr. A. J. F. HOOD (Bombay Chamber of Commerce): My amendment reads as follows:

"Delete clause 5 and substitute the following: 'Any contract (whether either party thereto is a member of the Association or not) which is entered into after the date on which by-laws under this Act are sanctioned by the Governor-in-Council and which contravenes any such by-law shall be void."

The necessity for this amendment arises out of the provision in clause 7 which provides for contracts entered into after 31st May 1922 and prior to the coming into operation of this Act. There is a danger that contracts entered into subsequent to the passing of this Act and prior to assent being given to it by the Governor-General might become void under clause 5. Therefore, Sir, I have asked leave to move this amendment in order to do away with that danger. It is a small legal point.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The question proposed is:

In clause 5, line 1, after the word 'not' and parenthesis add the words "which is entered into after the date on which by-laws under this Act have been sanctioned by the Governor-in-Council and:"

after the word 'any' in line 2, add the word "such", and leave out the words "of the Board" in line 2.

So that there will be three amendments to this clause, and I will put them separately. But the last two are consequential upon the first, and as they relate to the same clause the discussion will be upon all the three amendments taken together, that is because they hang together. When and if passed, the clause as amended will read thus:

"Any contract (whether either party thereto is a member of the Association or not) which is entered into after the date on which by-laws under this Act have been sanctioned by the Governor-in-Council and which contravenes any such by-law shall be void."

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): I want to speak one word about this section. I think, Sir, that the by-laws may be sanctioned by Government, but still the public may not know about them until they are published. What about those contracts which are entered into after the date of sanction and before people come to know about it? That is all I have to say, and I will ask the honourable mover to consider whether it will not be proper for him to add the words "and after the by-laws are published" in the amendment moved by him.

Mr. A. J. F. HOOD: Clause 3, sub-section (3), provides:

"By laws made by the Board under sub-section (1) and sanctioned by the Governor in Council shall be published in the Bombay Government Gazette."

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: The by-laws may be sanctioned and yet people may not know about it for some time to come. What about those contracts which are entered into without knowing that the by-laws have been sanctioned? Will they be void?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: I think there is a great deal of force in what Mr. Gandhi says. I understood him to make the suggestion that the clause should be amended thus:

"Any contract (whether either party thereto is a member of the Association or not) which is entered into after the date on which by-laws under this Act have been sanctioned by the Governor-in-Council and published in the Bombay Government Gazette,..."

I think Sir, that is fair to the public. I do not think it can be objected to. If the amendment is carried, the public will have notice and then only the liability will arise.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Do you accept that, Mr. Hood?

Mr. A. J. F. HOOD: Yes, Sir.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: Sub-clause (3) of clause 3 says:

"By-laws made by the Board under sub-section (1) and sanctioned by the Governor in Council shall be published in the Bombay Government Gazette; by-laws so made and sanctioned may be enforced before publication in the said Gazette."

This seems to be inconsistent with the proposed amendment.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: Sir, there is a great deal of difference between clause 3 (3) and clause 5. What is referred to in clause 5 will happen only once. What is mentioned in clause 3 (3) is applicable to the current by-laws of the Association during the currency of the Act and the Council can easily understand how a minor alteration due to a printing or typing mistake may necessitate the sanction of the Government. Clause 5 relates to contracts being void. Once the Government approve the bye-laws.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Well, we have gone beyond clause 3.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: I pointed out an inconsistency between the proposed amendment and clause 3, sub-clause (3).

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: We have passed clause 3. That is for the Council to say.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Sir, I want to move an amendment.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Let us get rid of this amendment. What is your amendment? Do you want the omission of this clause?

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: No, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Then, you cannot move any amendment now. Rao Bahadur Kale's doubt has not been removed. Is there any answer to it?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas has given an answer.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: I have explained it, Sir. The effect of clause 5, as amended by Mr. Hood is, after the first time that Government sanctions the by-laws, any contracts by persons inside or outside the association, which contravene those by-laws will be void. The honourable member from Surat suggested that the contracts should be void only after the by-laws have been published in the Bombay Government Gazette, which means only after the public know that Government have passed the by-laws. This has been agreed to by the Honourable the Leader of the House. Now, that is a very important thing and refers to contracts becoming void. This will happen only once. What is referred to in clause 3, sub-clause (3), relates to the general approval of Government to the various by-laws which may be made from time to time. After once the Government approve of one set of by-laws, that same set or another corrected set is bound to be in force all through the currency of the Act. Therefore I submit, Sir, that it strikes me as there being no connection between clause 5 as amended now and clause 3, sub-clause (3)

Question put:

That the words " which is entered into after the date on which by-laws under this Act have been sanctioned by the Governor-in-Council and " be added in clause 5, line 1, after the word ' not ' and parenthesis.

Amendment carried.

Question put:

That the words " and published in the Bombay Government Gazette " be added after the words " Governor-in-Council and "

Amendment carried.

Question put :

That the word " such " be added after the word " any " in line 2 of clause 5.

Amendment carried.

Question put :

That the words " of the Board " in line 2 of clause 5 be left out.

Amendment carried.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District) : I move :

That instead of the words " whether either party thereto is a member of the Association or not " the following words shall be substituted :—

" when both parties are members of the Association."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I am afraid, Rao Saheb Dadubhai, you are not careful about the Standing Orders. The Standing Orders are that when a clause is proposed to be amended and when certain orders have been put for the purpose of amendment to the Council, you cannot go backwards but you must move forwards.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : But, Sir, I was asked by you to move my amendment after Mr. Hood's amendment was disposed of.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : You ought to have risen before Mr. Hood. There is another difficulty. Your amendment is time-barred, it is beyond time. Mr. Hood's also was beyond time technically, but he gave me notice two or three days ago : it has been with me three days and now you spring this upon me at the last moment. I cannot allow that.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : I have given notice to the Secretary more than three days back.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Then I think you ought to have risen before Mr. Hood did.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : I had risen before Mr. Hood to move but....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : My second objection is that you are now going backward instead of moving forwards. That cannot be allowed.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : I had risen before Mr. Hood.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Why did you not tell me when Mr. Hood proposed his amendment that you wanted to propose a thing which was previous to his ?

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : You asked me to wait till after Mr. Hood's amendment was disposed of.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I presumed that you knew the Standing Orders and the rule which I have laid down from time to time. No one can plead ignorance of it because I have insisted upon it and it is a very plain commonsense rule that in the case of legislation you must move forward in the amendment of a clause and never go backward. I am very sorry, it is too late, but it is open to you to reject this clause altogether if you are not satisfied with it, to vote against it.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA (Bombay City, North) : If Mr. Hood was in possession of the House, how could Rao Saheb Dadubhai Desai have moved his amendment ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : It is not proper to catechise the Chair like that. It is rather hard upon the Chair to be called upon to explain when it is doing its best.

Clause as amended ordered to stand part of the bill.

Clause 6 (Officer, etc., not personally responsible).

No officer or servant of the Association shall be held personally responsible for anything in good faith done or omitted by him within the scope of his authority as such officer or servant in relation to anything authorised by this Act or the by-laws made thereunder.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North) : I beg to move :

In clause 6, line 2, leave out the words " in good faith " and insert instead the words " in good faith and not dishonestly " in the same line after the word " omitted ".

Sir, the clause was amended in the select committee by the addition of the words " in good faith. " The clause as it originally stood did not contain those words, but contained instead the words " provided he was not thereby dishonest, " which are now scored out. My reasons for adding " in good faith and not dishonestly " are these, that the words " good faith " are defined in two enactments. First, in the General Clauses Act, section 20. There " good faith " is defined as follows :

" A thing shall be deemed to be done in ' good faith ' where it is in fact done honestly, whether it is done negligently or not. "

Now in an immunity clause, which is generally inserted in the interests of the Government, the word " negligently " may be tolerated ; but in the case of this association, in whose favour this enactment is going to be passed, if its officers or servants are to act negligently, I cannot understand why they should be given an immunity. If they are negligent, they must be responsible for their negligence. Again the words " good faith " are also defined in the Indian Penal Code in this way :

" Nothing is said to be done or believed in good faith which is done or believed without due care or attention. "

A man may be acting with any amount of care and any amount of attention, but if he is dishonest, he must not get the benefit of the immunity. The man may be very careful and very attentive, but, in spite of that, he does not become harmless. We must see that no man shall be put to loss on account of inattention or want of care and also on account of dishonesty in the technical sense. " Dishonestly " is defined as follows :

" Whoever does anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another person is said to do that thing dishonestly. "

Now here, these officers and servants are placed in a position which they can abuse by causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another person. Therefore, I submit that the addition of the words " in good faith " by itself is not sufficient, and in order to be on the safe side, we must add the words " not dishonestly " also. As the clause was first drafted, the idea of dishonesty was there, as it contained the words " provided he was not thereby dishonest." This clause has been scored out by the select committee and I want by my amendment that it should form part of the clause. With this explanation I leave the amendment in the hands of the honourable House.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Sir, I have carefully followed the speech which the honourable member made in support of his amendment. He read out the definition of the words " good faith " as given in the General Clauses Act. There it clearly means that anything not done honestly is not in good faith. Therefore, the words " not done dishonestly " are already covered by the words " in good faith ". The only word which is not covered by these words is " negligently, " but the honourable member has not moved an amendment to introduce the word "negligently." If he had done so, there would have been something to be said in his favour, but he wants to add words which are already covered by the clause. Government are quite indifferent as to the amount of protection to be given to the officers or servants of the board, and if any amendment is to be moved, a case can certainly be made out.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I do not know whether the Honourable the Leader of the House has understood the honourable mover of the amendment. So far as I have understood him, his meaning seems to be that the General Clauses Act defines the words "good faith" in one way, the Penal Code defines them in another way, and therefore it is necessary that in this legislation we must be quite clear as to what interpretation is to be put upon the words "good faith". That may be a good argument or a bad argument, but that seems to be his point. Isn't that so, Mr. Surve?

Mr. A. N. SURVE: Yes, Sir.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Sir, I am not a lawyer, but, as far as I know, the provisions of all Acts in this Presidency are interpreted according to the General Clauses Act, and the interpretation of this clause will be in accordance with that Act. The General Clauses Act provides.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: What is the definition as given in the General Clauses Act?

Mr. A. N. SURVE: The definition there is:

"A thing shall be deemed to be done in good faith where it is in fact done honestly."

"Dishonestly" is defined; "honestly" is not defined.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The fact of it is, in the Indian Penal Code due care and attention is given to the definition relating to criminal offences because the words there are therein specified. The definition in the General Clauses Act is applied to all other Acts. The clause in this bill says no officer or servant of the association shall be held "personally" responsible. The word here is not "criminally" but "personally". The Honourable member from Bombay (Mr. Surve) is entitled to contend that it must be made quite clear and it is for Government to consider his contention.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Sir, the whole position is this: Government do not wish to afford protection by legislation to the servants or officers of the board beyond a legitimate limit. When I heard the honourable member's speech, I found that what he wanted was to protect the public, as against the servants or the officers of the association, so far as negligence was concerned. If he had moved an amendment for the addition of the words "in good faith and not negligently done or omitted," I would have been prepared to accept it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: On that assurance of the Government that the definition of the General Clauses Act ought to prevail, and not of the Penal Code, perhaps the honourable member (Mr. Surve) will consider whether he should withdraw his amendment or not.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: I am much obliged for your suggestion. If Mr. Surve alters his amendment, and instead of the words 'not dishonestly' inserts the words 'not negligently', I would be prepared to accept it.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Mr. President, I should like to say a word, if I may. I would put it this way. The Bombay General Clauses Act, 1904, will apply to this bill when it becomes law. Section 3 of that Act says:

"In this Act, and in all Bombay Acts made after the commencement of this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, a thing shall be deemed to be done in good faith where it is in fact done honestly, whether it is done negligently or not."

Therefore, that definition will apply. The honourable mover of the amendment wants to provide that if a thing is done in good faith, but still negligently, the doer shall be responsible. His object can be attained by inserting after the words 'in good faith' the words 'and not negligently', because, then those words will be in the Act and they will modify to that extent the definition as appearing in the Bombay General Clauses Act. If the President were to allow that amendment to be put, then the Honourable the Leader of the House would have no objection to accepting it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Does the Honourable the Leader of the House accept it?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: If the honourable mover alters his amendment by substituting the words "and not negligently" for the words "and not dishonestly", I am prepared to accept it.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: I should have no objection to accepting the amendment that is suggested by the Leader of the House. My difficulty is that that would absolve the man as far as civil liability is concerned. But what about the criminal liability?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Personal liability may be different from criminal liability and mean civil liability.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: I accept the amendment suggested.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The definition from the Bombay General Clauses Act, which has been read out by the Honourable the Home Member puts the meaning on the term 'good faith' just as you want it.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: I have stated that I am going to accept the amendment.

Question put that in line 2 of clause 6, after the words 'in good faith' the words 'and not negligently' be added.

Amendment carried.

Clause as amended ordered to stand part of the bill.

Clause 7 (Act to apply to contracts entered into after 31*st May* 1922).

Contracts for the purchase and sale of cotton entered into subsequent to 31st May 1922 and prior to the coming into operation of this Act under the rules or by-laws of the Association shall be subject to the provisions of this Act and of by-laws made thereunder.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: Mr. President, I move

"That clause 7 of the bill be deleted."

Firstly because the bill, when it was referred to the select committee did not contain this clause. Secondly because as the select committee was not asked to give retrospective effect to this enactment, therefore the insertion of the clause is in excess of the powers of the select committee. For these reasons it should be deleted from this bill.

(At this stage the Honourable the President withdrew and the Deputy President occupied the Chair.)

The Deputy PRESIDENT: My attention has been drawn to the fact that the honourable member's amendment is a direct negative, and therefore he will be free to vote against it, when it is put to the vote.

Clause ordered to stand part of the bill.

Clause 1 (short title and duration) ordered to stand part of the bill.

Preamble ordered to stand part of the bill.

(At this stage the Honourable the President resumed the chair.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Bill No. XIII of 1922, a bill to provide for the regulation and control of transactions in cotton in Bombay, has duly passed the second reading.

Third reading.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Sir, I beg to move the third reading of this bill. In the first place I formally ask you, Sir, to suspend the rules. There was only one amendment carried at the second reading and that is the only change that has been made in the bill. We have had a full discussion on the second reading and I think it will be appropriate to proceed with the consideration of the third reading.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I suspend the provision of the Standing Order and allow.

Question put that Bill No. XIII of 1922, a bill to provide for the regulation and control of transactions in cotton in Bombay, be now read a third time.

The House divided. Ayes 38. Noes 29.

Bill read a third time.

Motion carried.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order.

A BILL FURTHER TO AMEND THE BOMBAY RENT (WAR RESTRICTIONS) ACT, 1918, AND THE BOMBAY RENT (WAR RESTRICTIONS, NO. 2) ACT, 1918, (BILL NO. XV OF 1922).

First reading.

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: I beg to move, Sir, that Bill No. XV of 1922 be now read the first time. Honourable members will remember that in 1918 the Legislative Council enacted two measures for controlling rents in Bombay. The first Act was Act II of 1918 and the second was Act VII of 1918, which latter Act related to what are called small premises, that is premises the rent of which does not exceed Rs. 20, and special machinery was provided by the second Act for dealing with those small premises. These enactments were passed in 1918 owing to the exceptional circumstances and conditions that were prevailing in Bombay owing to the shortage of houses, accentuated as that circumstance was by the war. The Council will remember that only the existence of those exceptional circumstances was thought to justify those measures. For, it must be borne in mind that after all the house-owners in Bombay or in other places are suppliers of a commodity like any other dealers, and ordinarily the prices they charge for the commodity they supply must be left to the operation of the law of supply and demand. Only exceptional circumstances would justify measures which would restrict the ordinary law of supply and demand. Such exceptional circumstances had then arisen and that was the justification of those measures. In the statement of objects and reasons for the first Act it is mentioned:

> "The justification for this kind of legislation is that it conduces to the interest of the community as a whole to regulate to some extent the power, which the purely abnormal circumstances of the war have placed in the hands of persons occupying certain positions in the economic organisation, to take advantage of those less favourably situated."

Now the first Act, that is Act II of 1918, provided that "only standard rents" should be charged for premises in Bombay and standard rent was defined in section 2 of the Act as—

> "the rent at which the premises were let on the first day of January 1916, or, where they were not let on that date, the rent at which they were last let before that date, with the addition, in either of the foregoing cases, of ten per cent. of such rent."

The second Act also applied to all premises, not only to dwelling houses, but office premises, business premises and premises of all kinds. Now, in enacting those measures, the legislature here went much beyond the corresponding legislation in England. By the corresponding Act of 1915 in England, the control was resorted to only with regard to dwelling houses, for office and business premises were not brought under control at all, and with regard to dwelling houses also there was a restriction; only houses with an annual rent of £35 in England, £30 in Scotland and £26 elsewhere should be brought under the Act. Dwelling houses with annual rent exceeding these amounts were not controlled under the Act at all and they remained altogether unrestricted. So also all office and business premises remained uncontrolled. And so it continued till you come to 1920 when the Rent Act of 1920 enacted that that Act would apply to all dwelling houses the annual rent of which was not above £125 in England, £90 in Scotland, and £78 elsewhere. The Act was not made applicable to all dwelling houses, but only to dwelling houses within the limits mentioned. By the Act of 1920 they brought under control also business premises, the rents of which were within the limits mentioned. Honourable members will see therefore that our enactments went beyond the English legislation. We enacted control for all premises—dwelling houses, office and business premises—and without any limit as to the annual rent of those premises. The present Acts have been in operation for four years and more. Honourable members will remember that in September 1920, Mr. Sethna, then a member of the Bombay Legislative Council, moved a resolution which was accepted and passed by the Council recommending the appointment of a committee to consider and report upon the working of the Rent Acts and to suggest such amendments as were thought necessary. If honourable members have acquainted themselves with the discussion in the Council that took place then, they will see the various points that were emphasised at the time. Various abuses had grown up in the administration of the Acts and it was pointed out that steps should be taken to remedy those abuses. As a result of that resolution Government in January 1921 appointed a committee for the purpose of investigating the working of the Acts and suggesting any modifications thereof that in their view seemed desirable. The committee, as honourable members will see from the report which is in their hands, consisted of people with considerable experience of the city of Bombay and represented various interests that required to be represented on such a committee. The report shews that the committee examined a large number of witnesses, both house-owners and tenants, and the committee had also before them a large number of written memoranda by various people on the questions which were referred to them for opinion. The committee made their report and the present bill is based on some of the principal recommendations of that committee. That report made various further recommendations but Government took the view that inasmuch as this was after all emergency legislation and not intended to be permanent, it would not be desirable to complicate the situation by giving effect to the various other recommendations of the committee which involved the constitution of various offices and courts and other machinery. They took the view that it would be enough if effect was given only to such recommendations in the report as the circumstances of the case made it desirable to give effect to. Honourable members must have gone through the bill and observed that the points that the bill deals with are really four. The first point is about the duration of the Act—how long this measure is to continue in force. The second point is the percentage of increase to be allowed to house-owners with regard to their premises. The Act, as you have observed, gave ten per cent. over the rent of January 1916. The increase proposed under the bill is 33⅓ per cent. Then the third point is with regard to sub-letting and the abolition of what is known in Bombay as the rent-farmer. The fourth point relates to the exemption of buildings not let before a particular date in 1922 and also buildings let on a lease of three years or more from such date as the Council will fix.

[Sir Chimanlal Setalvad]

Taking the first point, namely, the duration of the Act, when the Act was enacted in 1918 the period of its existence was to be the continuance of the war and six months thereafter or any such further period as Government might choose to extend it to not exceeding two years—therefore the maximum period of existence was two years after the termination of the war. The war terminated officially on the 31st August 1921, and Government in the exercise of the powers vested in it under the Act gave the full extension of two years with the result that the two Acts will in the ordinary course expire on the 31st of August 1923. The committee, as honourable members must have observed, recommended extension of the life of the Acts to the 31st of March 1924 and the bill takes it somewhat further by taking it to 31st August 1924, that is, one year beyond the date on which it would otherwise expire.

I may tell the House how the matter was dealt with in the case of corresponding English legislation. The original Act of 1915 was practically in the same terms as regards duration as our Act, i.e., the continuance of war and six months thereafter. Then the Act of 1920 extended the provisions with regard to dwelling houses up to the 24th of June 1923, so that in England this legislation restricting the rents regarding dwelling houses up to certain limits of rentals will expire on the 24th of June 1923. With regard to business premises with regard to which again the rental limits apply, the Act of 1920 provided that the provisions would come to an end on the 24th of June 1921; so that with regard to business premises, the operation of the Act there has already ceased. The question therefore for the House is, what under the circumstances at present existing in Bombay is the desirable limit of the duration of the Act. As I pointed out, if nothing else was done it would in the ordinary course expire in August 1923. The bill proposes to keep it alive a year more, i. e., up to the 31st of August 1924.

With regard to the conditions at present obtaining in Bombay which must determine the question of this duration of the Act, I do not think there will be any difference of opinion that so far as office and business premises are concerned, there is really no need for any further control. Experience tells us that the rents of offices and business premises have considerably gone down and large business premises newly built on the Ballard Estate have not evoked demand even at very moderate rents. Therefore, the position is, I submit, that there is really no need for extending the duration of the Act with regard to offices and business premises. Still, it was not thought desirable by Government to discriminate between different classes of premises and the extension to the 31st of August 1924 is proposed with regard to office and business premises also. If however it is considered desirable to make the extension longer, it will be necessary to discriminate. And I can well conceive that some members of this Council are of the view that there should be really no extension of the Act with regard to office and business premises.

With regard to dwelling houses, I quite recognise that there is considerable room for difference of opinion as to how long the Act should extend. There again, those who are in favour of the extension for a period longer than what is proposed in the Bill, I think, have in mind more what are called the small premises than the bigger ones—premises with a rent of Rs. 20, or Rs. 50 or Rs. 100, or any other limit according to each individual opinion. As I say, these are all matters on which it is possible to hold different views. You may differentiate between small premises and big ones, between business premises and dwelling houses. I submit that these are all matters that can be threshed out in the select committee, and some satisfactory solution may be arrived at with a view to harmonise the different views that might be held, and I should not think it would be a difficult matter to arrive at a solution on that point which would meet all views. I would therefore tell the Council that this is a matter which will be thoroughly gone into in the select committee, and there will be ample time then to properly adjust the question.

Then the next question is, as I have said, the percentage of increase to be allowed to the house-owner, which is put down in the bill at 33⅓ per cent. in substitution of the 10 per cent. allowed by the existing Act. Now, with regard to this point, the Council must remember that the house-owners have come in for a great deal of odium at present, and considerable prejudice has come to be attached to them by the use of the expression 'landlords'. But, after all, as I have said, they are suppliers of a commodity, and they have to make their living by the supply of their commodity, and it must be remembered that the cost of living has gone up with regard to all including the house-owners. They have also to maintain themselves. It must also be remembered that there has been a general increase in the rate of interest obtainable on money. Where originally you could get 3½ per cent., you now get 6 and 6½ per cent. free of income-tax on Government paper. Therefore, one would naturally expect a house-owner also to get, and justly, a larger return on the capital that is invested by him in his business. What that limit should be is another question altogether. Then, it must further be remembered that if there had been no war and no rent-restriction-legislation, in the ordinary course there would have been some rise in rents. Even if no exceptional circumstances had interfered, past experience shows that house rents would certainly have gone up, not considerably but certainly in certain normal proportion. Therefore, you must make allowance for the fact that you have fixed the house-owner down to the rent of January 1916 and you are not allowing him even the normal increase that he would have ordinarily earned in six years. I do not suggest for a moment that these are facts that ought to determine the issue, but these are facts that have to be borne in mind in arriving at the increase which may be considered, under all the circumstances, to be reasonable. In this connection I would invite attention to the figures that have been worked out by the committe in paragraph 10 of their report on this point, and this is what they say :

"Under the Bombay Rent Acts, the landlord is allowed an increase of 10 per cent. over the rent of January 1916 and no allowance is given to the landlord if he does the repairs as in Bombay he generally does. It therefore appears that on the analogy of the English Act the landlords under the Bombay Rent Acts are entitled to a substantial increase. To examine this question more closely we asked some expert witnesses to work out from actual examples what would be the effect on the rate of interest received from the capital invested (as on 1st January 1916) if rents were increased by varying percentages over the 1916 rents. The results are as follows :—

"If a 5 per cent. net return was obtained in 1916 then in 1921 an increase of 25 per cent. (instead of 10) on the standard rent would yield a return of 6·11 per cent. on the capital."

Surely a return of 6·11 per cent. would not be considered excessive.

Other examples showing the actual net percentage in 1916 are as follows :— Then they take different localities. Parel Road : the return in 1916 was 5·26 per cent ; if you give 25 per cent. increase in rents the present yield would be 6·57 per cent ; a 33⅓ per cent. increase would yield 7·12 per cent., and a 50 per cent. increase would yield 8·21 per cent. With regard to Bhendy Bazar, the return in 1916 is 5 per cent ; at 25 per cent. increase it would be 6·54 per cent. at 33⅓ per cent. increase the present yield would be 7·15 per cent. and at 50 per cent. increase the yield would be 8.38 per cent., and so on with regard to various localities.

Then, further, it must be remembered that these house-owners are not, as is generally conceived, rich people who fatten on their tenants. It must be remembered that in Bombay a large number of house-owners look only to their houses for their living. They have made their whole investment in a building. There is a large number of widows and others whose money is invested in houses, and they live on the income derived therefrom. It is not a case of the wealthy classes oppressing in that sense the poorer classes. They are people who have invested their money in a building, out of which they derive an income, from which they make their living. That is pointed out by the dissenting minutes to this report signed by Mr. Brander, the Collector of Bombay, Mr. Hooseinbhoy Abdoolabhoy Laljee, Mr. N. V. Mandlik, and Mr. Jehangir B. Petit. They gather the following facts from the statement laid before them based on the Bombay Municipal Assessment records : the majority of landlords belong to the middle classes : the total number of properties is 65,051 ; the owners of properties are 16,094 ; widow property-holders are 886 ; property holders paying the qualifying tax of Rs. 30 per annum or more are 8,525 ; and widow property-holders paying the qualifying tax of Rs. 30 per annum or more are 643. Thus out of 16,094 property-owners, 7,469 do not get an income of even Rs. 300 per annum from their property. This will show that we are not dealing with an exceptionally wealthy class. With regard to this increase, I would ask the honourable members to bear in mind the increase given in the English Act of 1920. There the increase is given in various different ways ; a certain additional percentage, and further additional percentage and so on. When you work it out, it comes to roughly an increase of 40 per cent. on residential premises and 60 per cent. on business premises. Under these circumstances, the question is what increase the House will allow over the Act of 1918. I have submitted to the Council the various circumstances and points that arise for consideration. As I have said, it is again a matter where there is considerable room for difference of opinion. There may be some who may think that 33⅓ per cent. increase would work harshly while some will consider that a greater increase was necessary. Some may advocate a graded increase up to a certain limit. These are possible adjustments according to the circumstances of the case, and can be dealt with in the select committee. We are not wedded to any particular figure.

Then, Sir, the third point that I mentioned was with regard to subletting. I do not think there will be any difference of opinion with regard to this matter, for it is well known how scandalous the subletting has been with regard to various premises. Monthly tenants, for instance, take advantage of the Act, pass on their premises to other sub-tenants at greatly increased rent, and pocket the difference. The Act never intended that the tenants should profiteer. There are cases known where monthly tenants have retired to their homes up-country getting an annuity of Rs. 300 to Rs. 400 per mensem while the Rent Act lasts and are living upon it. That was never intended or desired when the Act was enacted. This bill provides that a tenant cannot sublet without the permission of the owner. It was never intended that middlemen should make a profit. With regard to business-houses, I have known of cases in which a tenant who, while paying for a flat Rs. 600 or Rs. 700 per month has sub-let three-fourths of it for Rs. 2,000, himself occupying the remaining portion free and making a monthly profit of over Rs. 1,000 in the bargain. Under the bill subletting beyond the term of tenancy will not be allowed without the express sanction of the house-owner. During the term of tenancy he can sublet, but beyond it, he must have the sanction of the house-owner ; if he sublets beyond the term of his tenancy, the bill will give him no protection.

[Sir Chimanlal Setalvad]

Clause 4 of the bill debars subletting, prohibits subletting after the date of the publication of the bill. It is for consideration whether subletting and profiteering by the tenant should not now cease even when the subletting has taken place at any time after the Act of 1918. Those who have sublet and derived the benefit till now must consider themselves fortunate that up to this time they have been allowed to profiteer. There is no hardship if profiteering is now stopped. The bill merely disallows subletting after the date of publication of the bill which certainly, in any event, should be done. No future subletting should be allowed. Then with regard to the exemption of new buildings it is not a new principle at all. That exists under present Acts. There have been suggestions in favour of bringing the new buildings that may be erected hereafter in Bombay within the operation of this bill. That matter was considered fully by the committee, and they rejected the proposal. I submit that control with regard to new buildings will seriously discourage the building of houses in Bombay, and the whole effort of every one should be to produce as early as possible and in as short a time as possible sufficient housing accommodation in Bombay. That is the real remedy for the evil. All these Acts for protecting people are merely palliatives which cannot have any permanent effect. They may be useful for tiding over any period of stress, but, after all, as I have said, the real remedy is the production of housing accommodation to meet the demand, and that is what the City Improvement Trust and the Development Department of Government are doing to the best of their ability. Therefore, under those circumstances, it would not be wise to take any step which would act to discourage the building of houses, particularly as materials and labour have gone very high in Bombay. I know from experience, Sir, that while you could formerly get a carpenter for Rs. 1-8-0 a day you cannot get him now for less than four or five rupees, and even then he does not do the amount of work which he used to do before. And with all that, if you were to bring the new buildings under the Act, it would seriously discourage the building of new houses in Bombay. Therefore, I submit, Sir, that the original Act as well as the bill have wisely put new premises out of the Act.

With regard to leases of more than three years, which are proposed to be be exempted from the operation of the Act, there again, Sir, you will see that it is easily conceivable that tenants are quite prepared to pay a higher rent for a longer security of tenure, for otherwise they would always have the fear of being turned out as soon as the Rent Act expired. It is far better for him instead of taking a lease for a short period to take one for a longer period though at a higher rent. There is no reason why the legislature should interfere with that course of business. It is, therefore, proposed to exempt leases of more than three years from the operation of the enactment.

These are, Sir, mainly the points which I need deal with on the first reading of the bill. As I have mentioned, Sir, the various points on which differences of opinion are possible are points capable of adjustment by discussion and consideration in the select committee.

I omitted to mention one demand that has been made with regard to which my honourable friend Dr. Dadachanji presented a petition the other day. That petition prays that charitable premises may be exempted from the operation of the Act. Cases have been pointed out where tenants who were allowed to occupy rooms at a low rent because their income was below certain limits and therefore they deserved assistance have refused to vacate although their incomes have considerably increased, thus keeping out others more deserving of assistance. The petitioners ask that such tenants should not be allowed to continue to live there on the lower rent when their earning capacity has increased and they are able to pay a higher rent; they should then vacate in order to make room for the more needy people who are always demanding housing accommodation. That again, Sir, is a matter which can be considered in the select committee, because it only means the curtailment of the principle of the Act, namely, the interference with the freedom of contract in this matter. The Act can well say "We will exempt a particular class of tenants from its operation." I do not think, Sir, I need detain the House any longer on this first reading and, as I have said, all controversial matters will be open in the select committee to be considered and further dealt with on the second reading of the bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Before the debate begins, I will dispose of the amendments on paper, notices of which have been given. All the amendments are out of order and therefore, when notices were received, I did not allow them to be printed and circulated. There is a notice of an amendment by the honourable member for Ahmedabad (Rao Bahadur Ramanbhai) about clause 4: "After clause (a) add the following as clause (b): 'After the word 'terminated' add the following words 'or that the tenant refuses to pay rent until the landlord makes at his own cost repairs to the premises which in the opinion of the Court are reasonably required'." That is entirely a matter of detail relating to a particular clause and does not affect the principle of the bill. Therefore, that amendment is out of order. Then, there are a number of amendments sent in by the honourable member from Thana (Mr. Trivedi). They are also out of order. The amendments are:

"Substitute '1928' for '1924' in clause 2."

"Delete sub-clause (a) from clause 3 and renumber respectively sub-clauses (b) and (c) as (a) and (b)."

"In clause 5 substitute '1928' for '1924'."

"Delete clause 6."

"That provision be made in the bill to provide penal clauses on the analogy of the latest English Rent Act."

As to this last mentioned amendment, I will refer to it later on again. Then the next notice of amendment is:

"That Rent Control Department contemplated in clause 7 should be under the Municipal Assessor and Commissioner."

That also is a matter of detail. Then the last notice of amendment is:

"That provision be made in the bill to exempt from the operations of the Acts all housing associations or societies or funds or trusts or other institutions in the city which are conducted on fully charitable or semi-charitable lines or which have limited the rates of rents to be charged to their tenants in accordance with certain fixed and recognised rules."

That also is a matter which can be dealt with in the select committee and at the second reading. Therefore, all these amendments are out of order.

As regards the amendment that provision be made in the bill to provide penal clauses on the analogy of the latest English Rent Act, I will only say that that is a matter which can be dealt with in the select committee, provided the penal clauses are necessary and they fall within the principle of the bill. That is all I will say at present and it will all depend on how the penal clauses are drawn up so as to bring them within the principle of the bill and so as not to require my interference ruling them out of order.

With regard to the notices of amendments given by the honourable member for Bombay (Mr. Haji), the first is:

[The President]

After clause 1 of the bill the following shall be inserted :—

"1A. In sub-section (3) of section 1 of the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions No. 2) Act, 1918, for the clause (a) the words '(a) shall come into operation at once in the city of Bombay, the taluka of Salsette of the Thana district, the city and cantonment of Poona, the municipal district of the Poona suburban municipality, the municipal district and cantonment of Karachi, the city of Ahmedabad, the city of Surat and in Aden; and' shall be substituted."

Now as to that amendment, it strikes me that this falls outside the scope of this bill for two reasons. One is that this bill is a bill to amend the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act, 1918, and the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions, No. 2) Act, 1918. And you cannot amend the principle of the bill confined to Bombay by extending it to other places. That would seem to require a separate bill. The conditions of Bombay may be different from the conditions outside. This bill involves the principle of that difference.

Then as to, but one, all of the other notices of the honourable member for Bombay (Mr. Haji) relate to the details of particular sections of the bill, and do not relate to its principle. Therefore they are out of order and may be dealt with in the select committee and on the second reading. As to the notice that "After clause (b) of sub-section (2) of section 2 of the principal Act insert the following new clause :

(3) At any time or times, not being less than 6 months after the date of any increase permitted under this Act," and so on my ruling is you cannot add a new clause on the first reading. Therefore it is out of order at this stage. Whether this particular clause would come or not within the principle of the bill, when and if it is affirmed by the first reading, it will be for the chairman of the committee first to decide. If this clause is added in committee I reserve to myself the decision of the question whether the additional clause falls within the principle of the bill.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI : Section 1 of Act II of 1918 expressly lays down as to the places where this Act can come into operation. That is the first Rent Act. It lays down as to which places this Act will be applicable. It is not entirely applicable to Bombay only but to various other places.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : You see this is not going to be interfered with by the present bill. Sub-section (3) of section 1 of Bombay Act II of 1918 (Bombay Rent War Restrictions Act) says :—

"In such notification the Governor in Council may direct that all or any specified portions of this Act shall come into operation in such local area and shall apply, with such modifications as to dates as he may think necessary, having due regard to the general principles of this Act, to any class or classes of premises as may be specified".

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI : It is not a matter of principle.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : It may not be a matter of principle so far as these designated localities are concerned but as to the rest, whether and how far they will apply, that is a matter with which I am not concerned at present. All that I can say is the second principle may come into operation, namely, whether it should form a distinct code of legislation. I reserve to myself the right of deciding that at the second reading, should the point arise and should the select committee deal with it. At present if I give a ruling, it will be interfering with the discretionary power of the chairman of the select committee.

Mr. J. ADDYMAN (Bombay City) : Sir, whilst I am not prepared to accept the bill as it is presented, I am prepared to accept though with a certain diffidence, the broad principles embodied therein.

[Mr. J. Addyman]

But whilst doing so, as I have said with diffidence, I really cannot congratulate Government on presenting on the 28th of September 1922 a bill based on the report of the Rent Act Committee and submitted to Government on the 30th of October 1921, especially in view of the fact—and Government must be aware of that fact—that during the eleven months which have elapsed since the issue of that report and the presentation of the bill to this House conditions have changed in many respects to such an extent as to make the major portion of the report obsolete.

Nevertheless, there are certain features embodied in this bill which I appreciate and support. One of these features is that which seeks to make rent-farming illegal. This is certainly a step forward in the right direction, and it is certainly high time that such a principle was embodied in the bill to protect those sub-tenants who have so long been fleeced by those unscrupulous persons who have taken every advantage possible of the serious defects which exist in the bill as it stands. The Honourable Member in charge of the bill has told us that rent-farming was never intended, but I ask why has it so long been permitted ? It is my sincere regret that this House has not been called upon long ago to consider this most important matter.

Another satisfactory feature of the bill is that which seeks to provide for a further extension of the Rent Act covering a period of two years. This is an absolutely necessary provision especially in the interests of the middle and the lower classes.

A Rent Act is an absolute necessity until those conditions obtain which will permit of the unrestricted operation of the economic law of supply and demand.

Such conditions are not yet in sight and indeed no nearer than when the Rent Act was introduced or when the report of the Rent Act Committee was issued. Now, Sir, assuming for a moment that the principles to which I have referred are accepted (as I trust they will be accepted) by this House and that they eventually become part and parcel of the Rent Act, will the Rent Act then assist in one single iota in solving the problem which confronts us ? I would like to refer at this stage to a portion of paragraph 7, page 3 of the report which reads :

"We recognize that emergency rent legislation is but an ephemeral palliative of the housing problem and that the Bombay Rent Acts only afford a breathing space pending the only solution of the matter, namely, the construction of a sufficient number of buildings."

But that sufficient number of buildings is not yet obtained nor will be obtained until that upon which houses can be built, can be purchased at a price which will offer to the prospective builder a reasonable return on his investment based on a reasonable rental to the tenant.

The Honourable Member in charge of the bill has pointed out to the House the importance of encouraging the building of housing. But, Sir, we cannot build houses in the air, we must have land. I would much have preferred to have found myself engaged in a debate which sought to solve the problem rather than taking part in a debate which seeks to extend a relief satisfactory to neither party. I would much have preferred to have found myself attacking not exactly private land-owners but preferably our Trusts, the Improvement Trust for instance, which in some instances has shown an example of profiteering which even a private land-owner could not excel. So long as the Improvement Trust holds out for a profit on land,—which I always understood was taken over by that Trust to develop for the benefit of the communities generally—a profit if anything from 80 per cent. to 100 per cent. according to site, so long will the housing problem remain. My own community sought, through the European Association, to relieve the acute housing situation by obtaining a site on the Worli estate and made an offer which was felt to be a reasonable offer and which would yield to the Improvement Trust quite a good profit. But the offer was rejected as it was hoped to realise a higher figure. The scheme to provide houses on developed land had to be dropped because the price asked for land made building prohibitive. I appeal to Government to prevent profiteering and we shall then see houses going up and ere long the economic law of supply and demand will be established.

Now, Sir, having dealt with the features embodied in the bill which I am going to support, I will now deal with a feature of the bill which I do not approve of, and that feature is the one which seeks to increase rents 23⅓ per cent. over what is at present allowed and without seeking in the least degree to provide that land-owners shall carry out necessary repairs. I stand at the moment, Sir, not as a European seeking to protect European interests only. I stand here as a unit of this responsible legislative body seeking to legislate in a manner conducive to the best interests of the communities generally. Whilst I am ready to admit that some increase is due, I would have liked the Honourable Member in charge of the bill to have discriminated between those landlords who bought property in a normal market and those who bought at the height of a property boom. If Government seeks to protect those who bought at the height of a boom, then I claim protection should no more be given to a house speculator more than to one who may have speculated in the stock and share bazar. But, Sir, under any circumstances, I think the present time is most inopportune to impose such a heavy burden on tenants especially in view of the fact that in almost every sphere, commercial, railways, etc., there is a depression and unemployment such as Bombay has not known for many years past.

Whilst supporting the first reading of the bill, I hope Government will note the diffidence with which I support the measure.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI (Bombay City, South): Sir, I rise to support the first reading of the bill. I beg to offer my hearty congratulations to the Honourable the General Member for the very able and lucid way in which he has explained the whole meaning of the new bill. All the points, one by one, were taken up by him and fully explained, and after that he said that it would be left to the select committee to make alterations in the various provisions as they liked.

Mr. President, long before the war there was no doubt a shortage of houses in the city of Bombay. There were a large number of small houses, which the City Improvement Trust demolished, especially those having a rental of Rs. 20 to Rs. 100, in their various schemes, without providing other houses to replace the houses demolished, with the result that the displaced population had to go somewhere and live as sub-tenants or co-tenants in other houses. The result was overcrowding and rise in the death-rate of the city.

The Bombay Municipal Corporation and their representatives on the Trust board protested and protested against this sort of demolition, and urged that there should be a large number of chawls provided before those houses were demolished. No heed was given to them. Added to this, there was great plague in Gujarat and especially in Ahmedabad which brought a great influx of people into the city. And directly after that the war broke out, and the industrial activities promoted by the war invited many industrial adventurers to come to the city, many of them with money and others were in the hope of earning large profits. They all needed house accommodations and as it was not available they offered fancy rents, and landlords, as is human nature, said " Oh, we will take advantage of it ", and they raised their rents. The result was the poor and middle classes were driven out of their houses. The Honourable the General Member has explained that the English Act was taken as our basis. When the old English Act was introduced in the House of Commons the Right Honourable President of the Board of Trade, Mr. Walter Long, distinctly said that that would be a war measure, and therefore a temporary measure ; he would not go into the various details, but at the same time he confessed that it would be a sort of double-edged sword which would cut both ways. That is the case with our present Act which while doing a lot of good has done a lot of mischief to the housing and economic conditions of the city. No Rent Act will augment the supply and control the demand. It has no doubt stopped profiteering by landlords, but it has raised another class of profiteers—I mean the tenants, as has been pointed out by the honourable mover,—and I think I should give you one or two instances although there are many in this respect. There is a shop in Null Bazaar in Bombay. The monthly rent was Rs. 20. That man sub-let it for Rs. 180 and has now retired and enjoys his pension. Tenants living in Improvement Trust chawls also began to profiteer—a tenant paying Rs. 15 took on a sub-tenant on Rs. 20 to Rs. 25. We could not prevent that owing to the Act as it stands now. That being the case, as it has been said by a well-known lawyer, legislation in this case was so very astute that it provided for no increase of rent to be obtaind by the landlord over the standard rent, and if taken, to be refunded, but it did not provide similarly against sub-letting by tenants. Of course it was a measure carried out in a hurry. Mr. President, the great question before us is, what is the condition of the landlords of the city? It is assumed by all that landlords in Bombay city are very rich, but if anybody looks in the municipal assessment books he will be convinced that there are 80 per cent. of one-room tenements in the city. They mostly belong to the middle and upper poor classes. Many of these houses have been mortgaged for domestic needs and municipal requisitions. In the English Act there is control on mortgage money but in our Act there is no such control and the poor landlords have had to pay fancy rates of interest on money obtained from such mortgages. Another thing, Sir, is that there are many people who have to depend for their livelihood solely and wholly on the income they derive in the shape of rents of houses they own. Owing to the restrictions of the Rent Act they cannot sell their houses, and even they cannot transfer their property. That is the state of things prevailing in the city. I should not be taken to mean that the Act should be at once repealed. The Act does need to be continued for some time. What is the effect of it? What we want is to put a stop to sub-letting on the part of tenants. Landlords have found out some nice expedient, namely, when a tenant goes away he quietly takes what is called " pagdi ", i.e., cash premium payment in advance usually far exceeding several times the monthly rent from the party whom he allows to occupy his own rooms and then leases them to him. This system has led to what one of my esteemed friends says " crimes and immoralities ". This is the effect of the law as the Act at present stands.

[Dr. K. E. Dadachanji]

It is said that there should be more houses built and my honourable friend Mr. Addyman says that instead of the Rent Act, there should be more houses. I agree with him. But who is to build them? As long as this Rent Act is on the statute-book, no private person will come forward to invest his money in building houses. My friend Sir Dinshaw Petit openly said in the municipal corporation recently that though a large capitalist he would not invest his money in house-building. Materials have risen in cost, labourers and artisans and contractors demand higher and higher rates of remuneration though irregular in their attendance, and if they are not paid they threaten to go away. That is the reason why nobody comes forward to build houses nowadays, rather they would invest in giltedged securities earning interest at 5½ per cent. or 6 per cent. free of income-tax. There is a class of Mahomedans, Sir, in Bombay who according to their religious principles do not believe in earning interest. This class of Mahomedans only seem to be willing to put up houses and invest money in house-buildings. Even as regards this, my friend Mr. Khandwani said to me the other day that he also was tired of the whole thing owing to the cost of materials being so high. He complained that he had a lot of trouble in trying to keep labourers and artisans on the works and to induce them not to go away. He complained also that they demand high wages. Such being the case, I do not think that it will encourage any private enterprise to build more houses and without any private enterprise, I submit, Government alone cannot undertake the whole work of supplying the requisite number of houses. The municipality may be able to do something, the Improvement Trust has also been doing its share in house-building as it has to still to provide for nearly 18,000 people displaced by their various schemes and those houses I have reasons to believe will be finished in two or three years. But that will not suffice. The Development Department is going to provide 50,000 one-room tenements but I do not think that that will be enough either, and for middle classes these tenements will not do. We require more and more houses of a kind which the middle classes can rent. One-room tenements I repeat Sir, will not be sufficient for middle class people who usually form a family of five or more.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Are we not wandering away from the Rent Bill? The question of house accommodation by the Development Department is not the relevant issue before the House.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI: My honourable friend Mr. Addyman said his European Association was not treated properly by the Improvement Trust. His association wanted some land at Worli at a cheaper and a reasonable price for housing purposes. We had a petition from the European Association, Mr. Gorrie representing the Chamber of Commerce on the Trust Board advocated it, but they wanted what? A plot nearer the sea which we wanted to rent for Rs. 72 per square yard for which they offered Rs. 32. That cost the Trust over Rs. 45. How could that be done? Mr. Gorrie asked the Board and asked me to support that. How could it be done? There must be some certain reasonable figure, at least Rs. 50 or so. That is why I have referred to the housing question. We do not want to profiteer, that is a sort of a burden on our assets, and I think the Improvement Trust is going to be transferred to the municipality and the whole debt is to be borne by the municipality. I am sure that the municipality will suffer a heavy loss by such transactions. That of course is by the way.

[Dr. K. E. Dadachanji]

As regards residential quarters and dwelling houses, there is an opinion outside that residential quarters should be exempted from the operation of the Act. The Honourable the General Member gave reasons but still the opinion is there, I think rightly so, that there should be some distinction observed between residential and office or business premises. It is in these business quarters—business places especially—that sub-letting is going on and profiteering is rampant.

Then, Sir, there is the opinion that instead of 33⅓ per cent. there should be a graduated scale, that those who are paying a rent of Rs. 200 or more should be asked to pay something more, those paying Rs. 100 to Rs. 200 should pay some smaller percentage of increase, say 40 per cent. and below Rs. 100, 33⅓ per cent. or lower. Whether it is reasonable or not, whether it will exceed the capacity of the people concerned, is a matter for the select committee to look into and decide. But these are the points requiring elucidation. If some such relief is given by the select committee, I think it will be a very good thing.

Then as regards sub-letting, the Honourable the General Member has thoroughly explained that sub-letting is extensively going on, and it is intended to put a stop to it. But as regards the pagdi system, I find there is no provision made in the bill. The landlord asks for a cash premium payment before letting out the premises, or what is known as pagdi.

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: That is provided in the existing Act.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI: There is no penalty provided. If a provision is made that a landlord demanding a pagdi of Rs. 100 will be fined Rs. 200, then it will be put a stop to. With these few remarks I beg to heartily support the first reading of the bill.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Mr. President, I also join in congratulating the Honourable the General Member on the lucid way in which he has put before the Council the chief provisions of the bill, but on one point I differ from him, and it is this. The Honourable the General Member has made out a case that the Rent Act had to be passed to meet war conditions, but my honourable friend Dr. Dadachanji has just told the House that it was not the war conditions alone that were responsible for the scarcity of houses, but the previous conditions created by the destructive policy of the Improvement Trust were responsible for the shortage of housing accommodation in Bombay, and that whether the war had come or not, there would have been that problem, and there would have been a demand for control of rents even if we had no war. Therefore, I say that it is not merely a war measure, but it is a famine measure, a measure to control the rents due to the famine of housing accommodation. In this connection, I would refer to the Census Report that has been published lately. There it is stated that there is no comparison between overcrowding in Bombay and London and that the Bombay conditions are far worse. I would just give a comparison of the figures for Bombay and for the mofussil. In Bombay there are 22·3 persons living in one building, whereas in Ahmedabad it is 6·2. From this you will see, Sir, that there was already a famine of housing accommodation in Bombay, due to the policy of the Improvement Trust, of destroying first and building afterwards, and it is authoritatively proved that the Improvement Trust has not as yet supplied houses for those who are dishoused.

[Mr. G. B. Trivedi]

Then, the Development Department has taken up this problem, and has undertaken to build 50,000 tenements, to provide housing accommodation for 2,00,000 of poor people. But, what is the period during which they will be able to do this ? From the latest report of the Development Department, we see that this programme will not be completed till 1928. In that case, how can you think that the existing accommodation will be enough by the end of August 1924 ?

Then, I would like to point out another thing. In Bombay, it is estimated that there are at present 35,000 dwelling houses, and some people calculate that there are 22 people for each dwelling house, while others calculate it at 30, and, according to that, there are left about 2,00,000 or more of people to be provided for. That shows that there should be 10,000 more houses built in Bombay, before this problem of overcrowding, or even returning to the normal condition of housing can be solved. Therefore, 10,000 more houses have to be provided in Bombay, and what is the condition ? The rate at which new buildings are being put up in Bombay at present is about 700 per year, so that, if you want 10,000 houses, how many years will it take ? Supposing that this rate is accelerated (which Dr. Dadachanji doubts) by the efforts of the Development Department and the Improvement Trust, what will be the problem ? According to that rate, it will take at least eight years before you can reach the normal state of things that existed before the Improvement Trust began its policy. So that, it will be seen that this Rent Act is not a war measure. You should extend it not merely for one year, but you shall have to extend it for at least eight years, if you want to bring us back to the normal state of things. I do not want to trouble the House further with this aspect of the question, and I hope the House is convinced that our difficulty will not be solved in two years, but that it will take at least eight years before this problem can be solved.

Then there is another thing. The Development Department has undertaken to build 50,000 tenements for the poorer people. The conditions of the Improvement Trust and the Development Department in regard to new dwellings are that there shall be built more and more flats, rather than chawls, so that the problem of the lower middle classes, that is of the clerk and the mehta, remains where it is. They want two-room tenements, and not the one-room tenements which the Development Department has provided for the poor people. The necessity of the lower middle classes is two-room tenements ; you may give them three-room tenements, but at least two rooms will be required. Who is going to provide that ? The new houses that are being built are all flats, chawls are not being built in Bombay, and where will these lower middle classes go ? Where will the clerks find the accommodation ? That is another problem, and in every session, in order to draw the attention of the Development Department to that problem I have put up a resolution recommending that the Development Department should provide 50,000 tenements for the lower middle classes. I do not know whether the attention of Government has been drawn to that, but unless the Development Department will take up the problem, my fear is that nobody else will take it up, because, as my honourable friend Dr. Dadachanmji has said, it does not pay people to invest in building chawls. Therefore, I am almost sure that the Development Department will have to tackle this problem. Further, the famine for houses will drag on till 1928, and not till 1924 only. My submission, therefore, to the House is why not this be extended, not for one year, but for at least five years more, till the Development Department finishes its programme of buildings chawls for the poor people? That is one thing.

Then, Sir, as regards the increase of percentages, the Honourable Member in charge was very fair in putting it, but he said that the rate of interest is not enough for a good return for those who have already invested. It is true that it is a misfortune with which we have to sympathise. The question now for consideration is whether we are to sympathise more with the 70 per cent. of the population, the poor and the lower middle classes, than with the poor landlords. I admit according to the committee, the majority of the house-owners are poor, and I am not going to dispute it. But the problem before the House will be whether we are to sympathise with the 70 per cent. of the population who live in one-room tenements—10 or 15 per cent. of them live in two-room tenements—or with the 10,000 and odd house-owners. I do not use the expression landlord, which is much maligned. As regards the question of investment, have not many people suffered by investing in 3½ per cent. Government Promissory Notes and by buying industrial shares? If those people who have invested in landed properties, especially if those that went in speculation suffer, are the Government going to their help? I sympathise with them, but still I say that they are not so much to be sympathised with as the poor and lower middle classes.

Then, much was made of the fact that this bill is on the lines of the English Act, and that in the English Act increases are provided for liberally. But it is authoritatively stated that rents in Bombay are three or four times dearer than in London. I will even quote the authority, if not at present later on, that rents for the same accommodation in Bombay are three times dearer than in London. How can you then compare the state of things in Bombay with the state of things in London? Therefore, the problem is a difficult one, and the poor and lower middle classes deserve the sympathy of the Government more than the house-owners. I have not got much to say about the sub-letting question which will be dealt with by others.. As regards office accommodation I will make one observation. It is true that there are many office premises in Fort, which are not occupied. They are not occupied because the trade is depressed. There are big European and Japanese business houses, as well as small commission houses, the latter being taken up by Indians. If I am deprived of my present business premises, and driven to Ballard Pier, I may be forced to pay rent three times more. It is not out of selfish motives that I bring this point forward. Office and business premises are built on a larger scale in Fort than before, but we do not want to leave our old premises, because we cannot afford to pay higher rent, on account of the depression in trade. Are you going to put these small business houses to the disadvantage of seeking other premises on a much more exhorbitant rent than what they pay now? If business suffers, people will have to pay more. With these few words I support the first reading of the bill. I hope the House will insist on a duration of five years more and exempt the lower middle classes from any further increase of rent, and by exempting the business houses and shops from the protection you will create a position which will be bad for the city of Bombay.

Mr. KANJI DWARKADAS: Sir, the middle classes and labour classes of Bombay owe indeed a very deep debt of gratitude to Lord Willingdon's Government and to the present Government for the protection afforded to them by the Rent Act and to the present Government especially for its extention to the maximum period of two years and for the proposed extension of one year.

[Mr. Kanji Dwarkadas]

Sir, in a matter like this it helps nobody to call the other party names. In a question like this there are certainly honest differences of opinion, and it does not help one party or the other to call one party hungry wolves, or the other Bolsheviks, when one party or the other supports a bill of this nature or opposes it. I am mentioning this fact, because, in places other than this House, this has been talked about with unnecessary bitterness.

Sir, coming to the very able and lucid speech of the Honourable the General Member, he said that this Act was merely a war measure, and therefore, a measure like this cannot be extended for a long period. Well, Sir.....

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD : I did not say that it was a war measure.

Mr. KANJI DWARKADAS : I accept the Honourable Member's explanation. But I think that a measure of this nature has to be extended for a much longer period than is contemplated by the proposed measure. Much need not be said on this, as we have had the assurance of the Honourable Member in charge of the bill that this matter will be threshed out in the select committee. How far can this bill be extended? Till what period should this bill, when it becomes an Act, remain in force ? To that, the answer is very plainly given by the speeches delivered by honourable members in the old Council of 1918. The honourable member, Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas, my friend here, the Honourable Mr. Cadell, and many other members speaking at that time very clearly said that, so long as building operations on a very large scale were not carried out, it would do no good to abolish the Act. Sir, the Honourable Member in charge whilst replying to a question put by my honourable friend Mr. Bole last July said :

"None of the chawls being constructed by the Development Directorate has yet been completed. The work done to date is equivalent to the construction of 19 complete chawls, etc."

I admit, Sir, that the work by the Development Department is indeed going on at a very satisfactory speed. Certainly everybody would wish that it would go on at a greater speed still, but there is no doubt that it is going on at a very satisfactory speed. But, as the Honourable Member in charge himself, admits, these operations have not yet been completed, and so long as we cannot properly house the two lakhs and more of the labouring classes in Bombay, so long as we cannot properly house these poor people, it will be the duty of this House and of the Government to see that the period of the Rent Act is is extended to that period.

Two main principles out of the four, I shall touch upon. The first is with regard to the life of the Rent Act. Then, there is the question of the increase in rent. Let me again go back to the 1918 debate. At that time, the Honourable Mr. Phiroze Sethna definitely proved that the normal annual increase in rent between the years 1908-09 and 1917-18 was 2·712 per cent. (An Honourable Member : Every year ?) Yes ; Mr. Sethna definitely proved that. If we take that point into consideration, Sir, it will be clearly seen that the proposed increase of 33⅓ per cent. would be indeed too much. And, Sir, my honour-able friend Mr. Chunilal Mehta then moved an amendment that an annual increase of 5 per cent. should be given to the landlords for the period the Rent Act was in force. Now remember, Sir, that the Act was passed in 1918. The rents are counted as 10 per cent. over those of 1916, from the year 1918. If the Honourable Mr. Chunilal Mehta's amendment had been accepted then, the tenants would have had to pay to-day 30 per cent. over 1916. The Legislative Council then did not accept that amendment, which clearly shows that they were not prepared to grant in the year 1922, 30 per cent. increase, and the present proposal is 33⅓ per cent. increase. When that Council was not prepared to accept the Honourable Mr. Chunilal Mehta's amendment of 30 per cent. increase over 1916 rents in the year 1922, the proposal now is for an increase of 33⅓ per cent.

[Mr. Kanji Dwarkades]

An Honourable Member: How could they have foreseen the circumstances which would prevail in 1922 or 1920 ?

Mr. KANJI DWARKADAS : My honourable friend Mr. Havelivala asks, how could they have foreseen the circumstances ? Well, Sir, it is to their credit indeed that they did foresee the circumstances. At that time, the building operations designed by the great imagination of the present Governor were not taken up. His Excellency came into power in 1918. After he took his office in 1918 he at once set his heart to this most pressing problem of the city and he took up this work of building operations by creating the Development Department, and those operations, as I have just now said, have not yet been completed, and therefore the proposed increase of 33⅓ per cent. is, in my opinion, a bit too much. It is very, very much. Then, Sir, as the honourable mover of the bill has again left this quite an open question to be decided by the select committee, I shall not go into that question any more, except to say that the economic conditions this year, as has been so ably put by my honourable friend Mr. Addyman, are so bad indeed that it is impossible to raise rents of a particular nature, rents for example which come under Rs. 100 a month. Let me take an instance of a man who makes Rs. 100 a month. He would ordinarily be paying a rent of Rs. 25 to Rs. 35. Now, who in this House will tell me that that man is to-day saving or can save Rs. 10 or Rs. 15 a month to pay the increased rent ? All the money that he now makes, Sir, he spends to make the two ends meet,—in fact he spends more and he gets into debt,—and therefore, Sir, it is absolutely impossible for him to be able to meet the new demand of increased rent proposed by the present bill. I think I have said enough on this point and I shall now come to the report of the Rent Act Committee. Sir, that committee reported in 1921, when circumstances were much brighter, more cheerful, than they are now. But even then the majority report said, Sir, that "if all the present restrictions were removed the landlords would be placed in a position of advantage similar to that occupied by them before the Rent Acts were introduced and the conditions then produced would undoubtedly arise again.". The majority report tells us very clearly that it is absolutely necessary that the Rent Act should be extended. Then, Sir, with regard to the minute of dissent by Messrs. Petit, Brander, Mandlik and Lalji, I think the whole minute of dissent loses all its value when we look at one or two sentences in that minute. They say:

"It should be pointed out that in passing the first Rent Act a serious error was made in the Legislative Council which has told against landlords."

These gentlemen, Sir, never wanted the Rent Act. They think that the Rent Act of 1918 was a mistake and so their position is absolutely untenable, and I think this Council will not pay much heed to their remarks. So also my honourable friend Mr. Jehangir Petit whose absence we all regret very much here and who we all hope will soon return back with renewed vigour and health—he says "I have been always opposed to the introduction of the Rent Act and the principles underlying it." Well, while Government have accepted the principle of the Act here is a member of the committee who is even against that very principle. Now since Government have accepted the principle and in accordance with the wishes of the citizens of Bombay as voiced in the press have thought it fit to extend the rent Act for a further period, I think a graded scale might be inserted as the select committee thinks fit so that rents coming under Rs. 200 or Rs. 150 might not be given any further increase at all.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA (Bombay City, North): Sir, I rise to support the first reading of this bill, not that I entirely agree with all the points made in this bill but because I believe some amendments in the present Act are necessary. No doubt, Sir, when the Act was introduced it was introduced as a temporary measure designed to protect the community as a whole against persons who were profiteers and monopolists. But, Sir, that function has been admirably performed by the Act. The question now before us is whether that state of things still exists or exists in modified conditions. If it does exist in modified conditions then it is our bounden duty to see that the Rent Act is modified. It is for that reason, Sir, that I support the first reading of this bill. Sir, according to my view the properties in the city of Bombay can be divided into four classes or sections. Firstly, properties for office accommodation. Secondly, those which are rented for shops. Thirdly, all those properties which are used as better class dwelling houses; and, fourthly, all those properties inhabited by the lower middle classes and poorer classes. If we take into consideration the properties under these four heads, perhaps we will be able to come to some conclusion on the differences that arise between the landlords and the tenants. As has been said by the Honourable Member in charge of the bill the offices are going abegging in Bombay. There is no doubt, Sir, that vacant office accommodations are plenty and they are not replaced. There is no doubt at the same time that there is slight slump in the trade, but that must not induce us to say that that state of things is going to last long. But that is no reason why, I ask, such office premises which are capable of fetching increased rents should be restrained by the Rent Act.

Then, I come to those classes of premises which are called petty shops. Now there is a difference of opinion in this Council as well as outside that these petty shopkeepers ought not to be burdened with additional increase of rent under the Rent Act, or in other words that they should be protected and should not be made to pay additional rent as has been done in England. But, Sir, I do not think that even the petty shopkeepers deserve our sympathy. I do think that we have not as yet passed the conditions when these shopkeepers are asking people to pay high prices for the commodities that they sell. Of course if the idea is that if the rents of these shops are increased they will charge still higher prices to the poorer classes, then I have nothing to say against it. But everyone of us will admit that in the case of these shopkeepers also we have to be guided by the golden rule of supply and demand. If the shopkeeper class insists on profiteering over the necessities of life notwithstanding the fact that there is no dearth of the supply of those necessities in Bombay at the present time, then it must be admitted that they are at the bottom of the high cost of living, and if that is true, then there is no reason to sympathise with these shopkeepers or dealers. There may be some justification for small traders to attempt profiteering, but at the same time I cannot agree personally speaking that these shopkeepers who are profiteering at the expense of the poorer classes ought to be protected by the Rent Act. I hope, therefore, that the Honourable Member in charge will please see that the business premises of these shopkeepers who have been earning large sums of money by profiteering do not come under the protection offered by the Rent Act.

[Dr. S. S. Batliwala]

Then, the third class that I referred to above are the wealthy people who claim the better class premises. To be sure, Sir, nobody can deny that at present the better class houses are not available, and that that is to some extent due to the existence of the Rent Act. There is no denying the fact that even the better class dwellings are being occupied at low rents and in some cases the landlords cannot demand even the standard rent. That clearly shows, Sir, that even supposing they have a little difficulty in finding good houses at cheaper rates, the sympathy of this Council should not be extended to these wealthy classes who can afford to pay high rents. I hope therefore the Council will see that the better class of people are not protected as regards the provision of houses, because they can very well amply provide for themselves. I know a case where millowners and people who earn thousands of rupees have taken advantage of the residences for some paltry sums like 100 rupees and even when they were asked to pay a small increased rent of Rs. 30 they did not hesitate to fling the Rent Act at the face of the landlords. Under these circumstances I ask this House whether it will be fair on the part of this House to protect these wealthy people of Bombay. I hope therefore that you will not support that provision and therefore you will see that these wealthy classes are kept out of this Act.

The fourth and the last class is the lower middle class dwelling houses. I must say, Sir, that if there is any calamity, if there is any real grievance that is existing in Bombay, it is not with the poorest of the poor but it is with the poor and the lower middle classes that are suffering the pinch to the utmost. I will give you my reasons when I say that. The poorest of the poor being wage-earners have got an increase in their earnings by 100 per cent. and even by 200 per cent. But so far as the lower middle classes are concerned they have got an increase only upto 20 per cent. in several offices and now on account of the slump they have been threatened with a loss of even these increased salaries. Retrenchment, Sir, is everywhere and not only in Government offices. So it is not fit that these classes should be made to suffer by increase of rent. They have been already suffering the pinch and they cannot make the two ends meet because their income is not adequate as compared with that of the poorest classes who have got, on account of the increase of their wages, an increase of 100 per cent. or as compared with the richer classes who can afford to pay higher rents. So, if any sympathy is to be extended by this House, it is my prayer to the Council that it should be extended towards these middle classes and it is they who need our support.

Then, I have got one more ground to urge and that is according to the census figures we find that there are about 80 per cent. one-room tenements in Bombay as against 20 per cent. of more than one-room tenements. So, if you give protection to the lower classes, i.e., 80 per cent. of the population which is poor, there remains only 20 per cent. of the richer classes which could be safely left without protection of the Rent Act. I must admit that it is a very difficult problem. But if under the plea of extending your relief to the masses, you also give protection to the classes you are depriving the house-owners of their legitimate income not only for providing the poor classes but also the rich.

Sir, if these points are taken into consideration, I am sure the House would come to a fair decision on this question. I beg to suggest to the select committee which I hope will be appointed that the increase of 23⅓ per cent. on the present Act as proposed in the bill or any other per cent. that may be decided on by the select committee, be allowed on these 80 per cent. houses, by compartments. I will make myself clear. This 23⅓ should be spread over in equal proportion for five or three years respectively whichever period the select committee comes to recommend and the Council accepts. Let the proportionate increases be thus given on those houses which are occupied by the poorer classes or say, those houses with a rental of Rs. 100 per month or less be allowed an increase of five per cent. every year. Thus, if you fix 25 per cent. and fix the period of the Act for five years, the rate of increase in rent per year might be fixed at 5 per cent. As regards the other 20 per cent. of the tenants who could well afford to attend to their own wants and do not feel the pinch as keenly as the poor classes, they may be safely excluded from the protection of the Rent Act, or in other words they may be placed in the same class as of new houses. I think I have made myself clear. I say that a certain percentage of increase in rent is absolutely necessary and I have given my reasons for the same.

After recess.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA: Sir, I was saying that all these poor classes who are paying rents, say, up to Rs. 100 might be protected under the Rent Act, and an increase of rent might be allowed every year in equal proportion up to say, 30 per cent. Thus if the period of the Rent Act be fixed for 3 years, it should be 10 per cent. increase every year and if the period be fixed for five years, it might be six per cent per annum.

Then, Sir, as regards the proposed increase of 33⅓ per cent. there is a feeling among the tenants that it should not be allowed because the house-owners are as a class very rich people. It has been pointed out in one of the dissenting minutes of the Rent Committee that all the house-owners as a class are not rich people. About fifty per cent. of them are poorer classes. It is said that out of 16,000 landlords or house-owners, about 7,900 belong to that class which do not pay individually an assessment to the municipality of more than Rs. 30 per annum, that is, having an income of not more than Rs. 300 per year. If these classes are called rich, then I do not know who are called poor classes. It is these poor classes who could not afford to repair their houses from their slender income. If they are not given any increase I submit they cannot afford to repair their houses. The prices have gone up, and labourers are charging 200 to 300 per cent. more wages, and it would be a cruelty to these poorer classes not to allow them to increase their rents when large numbers of them cannot afford to meet the extraordinary charges that come upon them in these days of high prices. We find from the Labour Gazette that the prices of of the necessaries of life have gone up by 70 per cent. and these poorer classes of house-owners have to pay these increased charges. Why should we put the landlords who are made of the same texture as yourself at a disadvantage and tell them "Never mind, you suffer this 70 per cent. loss and in addition to that, you must give to your tenants extra charges for repairs, etc." We have to go to the rescue of those who deserve the most and at the same time not do injustice to the others. It is against the dictates of British justice and freedom that we should lay our hands on the landlords because they are supposed to be rich, while as a matter of fact they are not.

Then, Sir, my honourable friend Mr. Kanji Dwarkadas said that when the present Act was discussed it was stated by the honourable member Mr. Sethna that there was an average rise in the income from the landed property of 2½ per cent. and my honourable friend Mr. Chunilal Mehta said that it was 5 per cent. Supposing we take the lower figure of Mr. Sethna, I ask my honourable friend Mr. Kanji Dwarkadas, do the same conditions that existed when they framed the law exist now? Are we not in a position to see that prices of all materials have increased? I am sure that having regard to the increase in the cost of materials, increase in the cost of living and increase in so many other directions, which affect the landlords, my honourable friend Mr. Kanji Dwarkadas will not grudge extending to the landlords by a 10 per cent. rise every year, a 30 per cent. increase in three years.

Sir, I would not take up the time of the Council by saying anything on the other clauses which have been inserted in the present bill, but I would only mention by way of suggestion to the select committee that it might be so provided that the tenants might be allowed to sub-let if they do not profiteer.

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: It is very difficult to find out.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA: (The honourable member was for a time inaudible) It is with the object of coming to the rescue of these lower middle classes who do not get sufficient accommodation on account of one-room tenements only being built by the Development Department, the Improvement Trust and other bodies. It is to meet that, that some provision should be made to allow sub-letting to tenants who do not profiteer. It might be decided in the select committee. I shall now only say one word about charitable organisations about which the Honourable Member in charge has promised to look into in the select committee. There is no doubt that these charitable organisations, about which a lot has been said and petitions have been sent to the Council, do require relief and I hope that the Honourable the General Member will look into the question in the select committee. With these words, I beg to support the first reading of the bill.

Mr. S. K. BOLE (Bombay City, North): Mr. President, the question before us is no doubt a very complicated one and requires to be considered from all points of view. The Bombay Improvement Trust has no doubt done some good things but it is responsible to some extent for the scarcity of houses in the city of Bombay. It carried on in its early life wholesale demolition of houses without providing sufficient chawls for rehousing the people that were dishoused by their schemes.

In the Parel area it will be found that many palatial buildings have been erected on the ruins of chawls that were inhabited by workmen who have to go and herd together in the slum area which was already over-congested. Besides, Sir, it is the Improvement Trust which has commenced profiteering by selling their plots to the highest bidders.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I beg to enquire how that is relevant to the bill before the House?

Mr. S. K. BOLE: I am just going to show.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I take your assurance that you are going to illustrate by an example bearing some relation to the point.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: When the merchant class made large profits during the war, they knew not what to do with their money and carried on speculation in land, paid fancy prices and ultimately they had to charge increased rents enough to make their investments profitable. That has raised the prices of land and prices of materials.

There is another point to be considered. There are big employers in the city of Bombay, namely, the Government, the Municipality, the Port Trust, the Improvement Trust, the Railways, the millowners and factory-owners. All of them have done very little or nothing to house their respective employees. Government have not built chawls for their clerks or menial staff; the municipality of course have built some chawls for their menial staff such as halalkhors, but nothing has been done for their clerks, peons and others. That is the case with all the other bodies, the Port Trust and the Improvement Trust, and the millowners and factory-owners.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: For five minutes now I think the honourable member has been wandering away from the relevant points. The bill is brought in because the evil about house accommodation is there and has been admitted on all hands. Whoever is responsible for that, the question of finding fault with him and punishing him and so on will require a separate bill to be brought before this Council. The evil is admitted by every one and now the question is whether the bill as brought before the House should be passed or not.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: I am just going to say one word about the duration of the Act and that the existing Act should run on for more than a year—for at least two years.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: How does this question of failure on the part of those bodies to provide house accommodation arise? The evil is there. You may say the evil is likely to continue for some years. The honourable member from Thana (Mr. Trivedi) set a very excellent example; he dealt with the point in a relevant manner. I never interfered with him. Will the honourable member now addressing kindly follow his example?

Mr. S. K. BOLE: I was just going to say that these big employers should make suitable provision for their employees and that if they had done so, the necessity for this bill would not have arisen.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Unfortunately, the necessity has arisen now somehow. Let us not go back to the causes of that necessity.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: The remedy, namely, to build more chawls ought to have been adopted. We are grateful, to His Excellency the Governor for making a provision in the development scheme for building 50,000 tenements....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That I think is irrelevant.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: That will relieve the congestion considerably.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Everybody admits the congestion; the question is whether the bill before the House is the proper remedy and should pass the first reading.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: Till that scheme is completed, I submit, Sir, some sort of relief will be required for these men and so I say that in the case of poor workmen who are paying monthly rent up to Rs. 5 should be exempted from this Act. They should not be made to pay anything more than the present increase allowed by the Act. So also the chawls built by the Improvement Trust, by the municipality and all other employers for their workmen should be exempted from the operation of the bill before the Council.

[Mr. S. K. Bole]

As regards the points raised by my honourable friend Dr. Batliwala, I submit that there is another side of the question and that is, there are a good many poor landlords in whose case the term "landlord" is a misnomer; they are petty house-owners and their case should also be considered in the select committee. Sir, Government have done nothing for controlling and restricting profiteering in trades and business. They have done nothing also to restrict the rates of interest charged by money-lenders. Under those circumstances, the petty house-owners and poor widows who have to maintain themselves on their petty incomes ought to be given some increase, but what that increase should be left to the consideration of the select committee. I think in that case an increase of ten per cent. more, not 33 ⅓ per cent., should be given, but that is a matter of detail.

As regards the point of repairs that was referred to by Dr. Batliwala, I can assure him that the chawls and premises inhabited by workmen are already in damaged condition. Those who have visited those chawls will bear me out. These workmen have to go out to work early and come very late and have practically no time to damage their premises—it is not those classes, but the higher classes that may be making any damage to their residential premises and so that argument does not stand.

As regards sub-letting, that of course should not be allowed; the workmen never take advantage of the clause of sub-letting. Advantage was evidently taken by those rich tenants who were occupying big flats and going to Mahableshwar and Matheran and other hill stations, sub-letting their flats and thus profiteering, but in the case of poor persons very few cases will be found amongst workmen classes who have done so. Under those circumstances I think sub-letting should be prohibited. With these words, I would support the first reading of the bill with some modifications.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA (Bombay City): Mr. President, I rise to support the first reading of the bill, which affects the whole city of Bombay. The problem is such a complex one that it will take our best efforts to solve it. The conflict is between the landlords and tenants, and the interests of the landlords are diametrically opposed to those of the tenants. In view of that conflict, we ought to find a via media and lay down what is proper both in the interests of the tenants as well as in the interests of the landlords.

After listening to the speech of the Honourable Member in charge of the bill.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I hope honourable members will take care hereafter to raise their voices; otherwise, their speeches will be inaudible and go unreported.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA: The Honourable Member in charge of the bill has given us a full and detailed survey of the operations of the two Acts which this bill proposes to amend and as that is going to be referred to the select committee, I do not wish to dwell at length on the various points raised in the bill and take up the time of the Council any longer. But, Sir, I wish to emphasise one point, and that is with regard to the life of the proposed bill. Some of the speeches that have been made are not quite clear whether the life of this bill is going to be extended to two years or more. I wish to make it clear that while accepting the principle of this bill, the time by which rent control will be extended should be two years and not more. Coming to the point, I wish to say that most of the public investing in landed property is anxiously waiting to know what we are going to do about the Rent Control Bill. In some quarters it has been suggested that the life of the bill ought to be extended to five years, or even more than that. If that situation is going to last, I think the building operations in the city of Bombay will come to a standstill, and most of the investing public who wish to put their money in buildings will not do so owing to the uncertainty of rent operations in the city of Bombay. So, I think we ought to make it clear that the bill is going to last for two years and no more.

Then there is another point, and that is with regard to the increase that should be given to the landlords. So far as I can see from the speeches, there is absolute unanimity of opinion that some sort of increase ought to be given to the landlords. What that increase should be will be discussed in the select committee. When the report of the select committee is before the Council, I am sure that an appropriate increase will be given to the landlords.

Then I wish to emphasise the point that was made by Dr. Dadachanji and my honourable friend opposite that the passing of this bill will not solve the housing problem in the city of Bombay once for all. If we are going to solve this problem we should encourage the investing public to put their money on buildings, and not put obstructions in their way. This point will be quite clearly borne in mind by my honourable friends, and that can only be done at present by making it quite clear that the bill, in so far as it is intended to give protection to the tenants, will be only for two years and no more.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: Mr. President, I rise to support the first reading of the bill not because I agree with all the provisions in the bill, but chiefly and mainly because, I think it is necessary to amend an Act of this kind which was passed in 1918, in the light of experience gained by the working of the Act.

The Rent Acts, known as Acts Nos. II and VII of 1918, were the first effort made by Government at interference with private proprietary rights. On account of the conditons that were brought about by the War, perhaps some notes of caution that were then sounded were overlooked and the interference with private proprietary rights was carried through in great hurry. Under the Defence of India Act, small tenants paying rents under Rs. 10 were covered, and, as far as my memory goes, there was hardly any grumbling at the protection given to the occupiers of these small premises. Subsequently, all properties in Bombay were covered by Act No. II of 1918; that Act was again modified by Act No. VII of the same year. I would like to tell this Council how these two enactments have affected the relations between tenants and landlords in Bombay so far, and I would like to tell them my view of the result of the working of these two Acts.

To begin with, the quasi-proprietorship rights that were created in tenants by Acts Nos. II and VII of 1918 strained the normal, satisfactory relations between tenants and landlords in Bombay to a pitch that could not have been done by any other enactment. The tenants found that, under the protection of these two Acts, they were the masters of the situation, and the landlords found that whilst they owned property they were not masters in their own houses. Paragraph 13 of the report of the committee appointed by Government distinctly says that the proprietorship rights of the tenants that were created by the Rent Act did disturb the relations of the tenants and landlords, and all the intelligence at the command of either the tenant class or the landlord class was used in order to interpret the law as it suited each party, or in order to get round the best intentions of the law. Expert legal advice was sought and employed in order to assert the rights of each party. Disgraceful cases have happened, where landlord and tenant sought to attack each other unjustifiably, and appeared before court. Cases of an extremely mad behaviour are known. No doubt, there have been also good tenants and good landlords. As soon as the Rent Act came into force, the bitterness that had existed before found an outlet. I was informed that the moment the present bill was passed, 45 to 50 per cent. of the tenant class would have to quit, not because higher rents would be demanded of them but because the relations were so very strained between the landlords and tenants. The Honourable Member in charge of the bill knows, from his experience when he adorned the bench of the High Court, how people on both sides resorted to courts of law in order to assert their rights; and he had none other than rent suits to dispose of. All this has taken place from 1919 up to now. My chief aim is to point out to the Council that Act II has created a vicious circle, and that it is necessary for this Council to find a way out. My honourable friend Dr. Dadachanji pointed out to the House that a well known landlord had told him, I understand, in the corporation, that he would not advice anybody to construct any more buildings so long as the Rent Act or anything of a like nature existed. If any change is made with regard to the rent, naturally the tenant class will complain, because it will hit them very hard. As was pointed out by one honourable member, people in Bombay derived much larger income than they ever did before, during 1919-20, and it is now having its reaction. Then, there was more of employment among the lower middle and upper middle classes, and the landlords now demand the increase in rent due to them for 1919-20. The Government have submitted the bill to the House, and it is for the House to decide, rather for the select committee, as to how this demand is to be met. I cannot help feeling that the time is most inopportune for asking for any increase in rent which was under control when Bombay was said to be rolling in riches. I should like the House to see what conditions have prevailed since the Rent Act was passed. The value of landed property was stationary before the first Rent Act was passed. As there was an arbitrary check put on the return from landed property, the value of landed property ought to have depreciated. If it had been so, I have not the least doubt that the Government would have come to the House much earlier, without a committee saying that the Rent Act of 1919 had affected very prejudicially the interests of landed proprietors and their properties, and therefore they should either modify or withdraw the Act. On the other hand, what do we find ? The value of lands which were controlled went up to such a height, that so far as I can remember there was no parallel to it. Properties which were before 1916 worth two lakhs were sold for five lakhs, six lakhs and seven lakhs. There were other properties, which were offered a much higher rate, but the owners would not sell. This is a fact which I would like anybody in the House to challenge. In fact, Government themselves were very nervous, at what was called speculation in Bombay. Naturally everything that flies so high must have a reaction and come down and now the value of landed property is considerably lower than the high pitch to which it went since the Rent Act of 1918, irrespective of any return on the capital invested. I should like some landlords to point out to me where comes the basis for an increase by percentage return. If properties in Bombay were sold at prices in proportion to the return, I would certainly look into half a dozen or a dozen sales, and find out the basis on which the percentage of increase is to be fixed. I am quite sure that I shall be told that that was the way of speculation, which need not be taken cognisance of by this House. I ask then what is the basis on which people invest in landed property in Bombay. Let there be some basis approved, and then the House will be in a much better position to give an increase to the landlords. It is not at all an incorrect inference to make that the greater the control, the higher the prices. To all those landlords who come to this House with petitions and ask for justice, this House can justifiably ask, "What is the basis of return on which you fix the valuation of property in Bombay?" The bill under the consideration of this House is mainly concerned with three salient points. The first is the period of the existing Acts. This period of the existing Acts expires next year. The committee that sat in connection with this have reported in paragraph 7 and 8 of their report as under:

"During the last two years a good beginning has been made in this connection but there is still much more to be done, and we consider that theRent Acts should be retained to provide necessary and temporary relief until the return of more normal conditions."

That is the last sentence of paragraph 7. In paragraph 8 their conclusion reads thus:

"We consider that the period for the Rent Acts might be extended till the end of the financial year, that is to say, till the 31st March 1924."

This means that they expected normal conditions to return, or more normal conditions to return on or about the 31st March 1924. I wish that the same committee had explained a little more in detail what made them conclude that more normal conditions than what existed in 1921 would prevail in March 1924. I do not think it will do to say that prices may come down. If Government wish to fix the life of the existing two Acts at March 1924, I think this House would like something more definite than the mere recommendation of the committee. The unfortunate part of that committee's report is that it is nothing more than a mere expression of opinion. It is nothing else. My own feeling, Sir, is that more normal conditions, as far as housing in Bombay is concerned, will not be available either in 1924 or in 1925. They can only be available when there are real genuine efforts made by the Government—and I will later on explain why I say by the Government—at getting people to stay in the suburbs: and people will go and stay in the suburbs, but they want fast communications and arrangements for that purpose in the shape of more trains and more tramway facilities. (An honourable member: Cheaper tranpsport) I did not suggest that, because I think cheaper transport is not the best form of putting it. I have not the least doubt that what is being done by the Development Department in this direction may be very valuable, but I submit that the problem that is sought to be solved is so difficult that no mere extending of the Rent Acts will meet the situation and if the step which was taken in 1918, owing to the existence of the war, in the shape of control of properties, is to be carried to a justifiable and logical conclusion and if the actions of this Council are to be logical, the sooner steps are taken in this direction of getting people to go out to the suburbs, where they will have healthier, cheaper and better accommodation, the better. I cannot help feeling that until that is done, whenever the Rent Act is removed, the conditions of the middle, lower middle and upper middle classes in Bombay would be such as to make the tenant class regret the period that they had between the year 1918 when the Rent Act was passed, and the year when the Act was removed. I do not think, Sir, that this is an opportune time when to say more regarding the activities of the Government in connection with the development of the suburbs or provision of faster and cheaper transport. But I do wish to point out that any effort at slackening the Rent Acts will work very hard on the tenant class, because by starting this control over rents Government have disturbed the natural flow of things and have given rise to such strained feelings between the landlords and the tenants that nothing will restore those feelings which existed before the war.

The next point is regarding the rent. These two Acts of 1918 give a 10 per cent. increase on the rent that prevailed in 1916. Naturally, the landlord class—seeing the prosperity of everything else except landed property in Bombay—have felt, as honourable members must have seen from newspapers and petitions submitted to the Council, that they have been dealt with very harshly and as an exception. I really wonder if the select committee would ever be able to come to a definite conclusion as to what further increase should be given to the landlords, and justify it with facts and figures to the satisfaction of impartial observers. I am afraid the select committee will have to put down at random some sort of figure for the increase, and the Council will have to accept it if they are disposed to give any increase in the rents to the landlords. But in some letters that I have seen where the landlord class ask for " justice and nothing else than justice", I was very much amused when they recommended that tenements with a rent of Rs. 30 might be kept under control—the figure was from Rs. 30 to Rs. 100—and those who owned tenements above that rent might be freed from control as proposed by this bill. Surely, if you control tenements up to a certain point, say Rs. 30 or Rs. 50, and let others off, it only comes to this, that the larger number of the poorer classes shall be under a greater handicap than the persons who are comparatively better off. That is the last method by which to pave the way for the repeal of the Rent Act. I have failed to follow either the logic or the reasonableness of those who contend that smaller tenements may be given more protection and the others less. It may be all right as far as the tenant class is concerned. But what about the people who provide them with those tenements ? For, after all, the aim and object of this Council should be to control tenements and rents in Bombay not for ever, but up to a period and their object should further be that that period be as short as possible. If the House is agreed on that aim and object in the matter of this legislation, then they ought to devise something by which more tenements could be put up for the poor and middle classes, the welfare of which is the solicitude of this House. And as several honourable members who have spoken before me in this House seem to have expressed very great solicitude for the people paying rents upto Rs. 30, 50 and 100, I put it to them whether it is a right way of setting about to say that people who have catered for the poorer tenements should be at a disadvantage. This is one of the considerations on which the Council in 1918 said " treat all tenants alike ". It is quite possible that there may be other grounds hereafter which may appeal to this House, but from what I have heard up till now I fail to perceive how you can more or less distinguish between one class of landlords from any other. It is further suggested that business premises should be relieved of control. I feel, Sir, that the honourable members who talked of business premises for this recommendation must have had in their minds the Ballard Estate in the Fort of Bombay where some fine buildings have been put up since 1918 and which to day are going more or less a-begging for rent. It is quite true that there is a greater supply in the Fort area for business offices on the Ballard Estate of the Port Trust. There is less demand for it, and naturally rents have gone down for office premises in the Fort area. But if the suggestion made by honourable members who spoke in favour of this recommendation was with reference only to the Fort area of Bombay for business premises, one could understand it. The business premises however would include shops and small offices in Shaikh Memon Street, in Mumba Devi and Pydhownie and so on, and there I have not heard yet that there is a single vacancy or a single tenement,either residential or office or business tenement,which is going a begging for tenants. I therefore venture to submit that the problem is not as easy as may be inferred by honourable members from what has been said till now regarding business premises. The profiteering by the merchant class and by the commercial class in 1918, 1919 and 1920 is not denied. Now that point was urged with very great emphasis before the Council of 1918. But that Council could not arrive at any solution of that problem, and said we will pass the enactment for the greatest good of the largest number. I should still be very glad if the select committee could find a way out of it, which would disturb the conditions as little as possible and the great point is, is it worth while for this House to enact a change ? The third main point in the bill, Sir, is the question of sub-tenants. I was the first who pressed in 1918 when the two acts were before the Council that that enactment should not allow tenants to put in sub-tenants in their places without the consent of the landlord. Unfortunately then I was perhaps the only one or was in a small minority before that House. It is my proud privilege therefore to be able to say that I anticipated all the difficulties that have now been put before the committee that has submitted this report to the House and that has been endorsed by the Honourable Member in charge of this bill. I feel that nothing has created more bitterness between the tenant and the landlord than this privilege unjustifiably given to the tenant class to shelve on to the premises of the landlord anybody and everybody that the tenant chooses irrespective of whether he is acceptable to the landlord or not. I have not the least doubt that the proposed remedy for this handicap to the landlord class, as pointed by the uniform recommendation of the committee appointed by the Government would have the approval of this House. I feel, Sir, that the problem as presented to this House not only by the report that has been before the House but also by the various views expressed in the press and by way of petitions presented to this House is a very complex one. It is not a question of giving relief to a landlord here and a tenant there. It is a question of providing for the growing population of Bombay something which will not require any sort of artificial interference from the legislature. Personally I am afraid that time is not yet ripe to consider when the legislature could safely withdraw the protection from the tenant class. I am extremely diffident as regards the year 1924 or 1925. In this connection what I feel is that as Government has taken up the housing question and as Government have raised and have taken up the question of the development of the suburbs it is up to Government now to push on with that in a manner which will soon make the cheapest possible residential quarters available to the people. All the necessity of rent control will then disappear more or less automatically. Until then anything that is sought to be done by these two rent controlling Acts will have to be done with the utmost caution. There is just one more thing that I would like to refer to. Government are asked to be landlords themselves. They are beginning to own large blocks of residential quarters. I am not aware as to what blocks are in occupation yet and what number of chawls will be actually in their occupation in the future. These chawls will naturally cost Government considerably more than the private owner, who built chawls in 1916, 1917 and 1918. There is a shrewd suspicion in the minds of some—I do not endorse the suspicion—I only mention it to the House with a view that the Honourable Member in charge of this bill may like to give some sort of information that as Government are increasingly becoming landlords in Bombay they are beginning to see where the shoe pinches and now are in favour of putting up the rentals available to the landlord class of Bombay very substantially. As I said I do not believe that this could be behind the mind of the Honourable Member in charge when he drafted or presented this bill to the House. But I think it is only fair to him to mention to him what has been mentioned to me in order that he may be able to explain to the House the basis on which the new chawls, the new tenements that are being put up by the Development Department and which are going to be built are to be rented; for the honourable member who began this discussion had told this House that the City Improvement Trust is in the eyes of several honourable members a profiteer to the extent which is not available to the owners of the properties. I therefore feel that the 33⅓ per cent. increase that has been put forward by the Government in this bill requires to be explained rather at fuller length.

If, after all, the figures given by the Honourable Mr. Sethna to the Council in 1918 are correct, namely that the normal increase in rents in Bombay did not exceed 2·7 per cent. and if the Council in 1918 agreed only to a 10 per cent. increase, which is still in vogue, in 1922 to go from 10 to 33 per cent. as suggested by the Government is rather a big jump, especially when the economic conditions in Bombay are what they are today.

With these remarks, Sir, I beg to give my support to the first reading of the bill, in the hope that the select committee will go into the various points I have put forward in this speech.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): Sir, I am one of those who believe in freedom of contract and who think that it is not the duty of the State to interfere in the relations between landlords and tenants. But unfortunately the peculiar conditions of Bombay, for which neither the landlords nor the tenants are responsible, makes it incumbent on us to see that some control is exercised over the ordinary laws of contract and of supply and demand. The Honourable the General Member, however, while agreeing to this has come forward with too much increase to the landlords. I think, Sir, that in 1916 there was an increase of 10 per cent. given to all the landlords and that 10 per cent. included the amount for repairing as well as for a natural increase in the rents. At that time it was agreed that it was the duty of the landlords to do ordinary repairs to the buildings during the time this Act was in operation, but the landlords have failed to carry out their duty of repairing the buildings. We have been hearing complaints, and those complaints are not few, that the houses are kept in a very bad state of repair, and that the roofs of the tenements are at places leaky. If the proposal of the 33⅓ per cent. increase that the Honourable the General Member has made is not to go to remedy this state of affairs, I am sorry that this 33⅓ per cent. should have to be largely curtailed, and so we must request the Honourable the General Member to see if he cannot bring these landlords under some sort of control so that they may carry out their part of the duty. My honourable friend Dr. Batliwala has made a distinction between residential buildings and other buildings. He says that the office premises do not deserve any protection. I think, Sir, they are the first to deserve our protection. In Bombay three-fourths of the people are dependent upon these middlemen. Any increase in their office rents therefore would have to be borne either by the producer or the consumer, as the case may be, as these people will not give the rent from their own pockets: they will pass it on to the consumer or producer. I should, therefore, think that neither office premises nor shop premises, whether old or new, should be subject to any increase in rents. I think these rents should remain where they are, and no shop-keeper or middleman should have the rent of his dwelling place or office premises increased to any appreciable extent. My honourable friend Dr. Batliwala has stated.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I must now rule that from henceforth no honourable member should mention another honourable member by name, but he should be referred to as the member for his constituency. It is only the Chair that has the right to call members by their names when they catch the eye of the Chair and rise to speak.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: There is a difficulty, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: There is no difficulty whatever. That is my ruling. I hope there will be no debate upon it. It is all very easy if honourable members will take care to practise it.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: My honourable friend from Bombay said that the richer class tenants should not be protected. If they are really rich tenants, then I do not see why they should not give an increase of 33⅓ per cent. for their dwellings as is proposed by the Honourable the General Member. But for the dwellings of the poorer classes, I regret to observe that the scale proposed by the Honourable the General Member is more liberal than the proposals made by the landlords themselves. The landlords in their petition were willing to leave people alone who were paying Rs. 100 and less. But the Honourable the General Member has not exempted them from the operations of this bill. I should think that in the select committee this point should be considered and there should be no increase made in the case of the dwellers who pay about Rs. 100 and less in rent as stated by the landlords themselves in their petition.

As regards the cases of outgoing tenants demanding a kind of cash premium from the incoming tenants of the shops or dwelling premises, I think some control should be placed on that practice, only for the future, for it would be hard on the present sub-tenants who have already paid large premia.

Lastly, my honourable friend from Bombay stated that Sir Dinshaw Petit had stated in public that owing to this Rent Act, he was not going to build any new houses. I think that argument is an absolutely hollow one as the present bill does not affect new premises to be built. These appear to have been specially exempted in the bill. With these remarks, I resume my seat accepting the principle of the bill before us.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI (Bombay City): I confess, Sir, that I am rather in a fix and a puzzle as regards the bill presented by the Honourable the General Member.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Will you kindly raise your voice so as to be audible to the official reporter?

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI: The official reporter ought to come and sit here, (pointing to the centre of the hall).

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: It is not for the honourable member to say where the official reporter should sit. The honourable member knows the rule that no strangers can be allowed within the precincts of the Council, and if I allow official reporters there, that will be not only contrary to the example set by all other legislatures but it will embarrass me and my successors in future.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI: The bill as presented to us by the Honourable Member in charge is more pro-landlord than the speech delivered in support of the bill by the Honourable Member in charge when introducing it to the Council would lead one to believe. I was surprised to see that there was no change in the attitude of the Honourable Member since his exaltation from a seat on the High Court Bench to the membership of the Executive Council. When the present Act was enacted much was said in favour of it, namely that it was intended to afford protection to tenants against the profiteering tendency of landlords, but in the actual working of the Act in the city of Bombay, all that ultimately proved to be otherwise. When the Rent Act emerged from the hands of the Council in 1918, it was said that tenants should have adequate protection and a certain amount of security of tenancy. It was also said that the landlords should not be allowed to increase the rents as they would otherwise have done if the Act had not been passed, but the working of the Rent Act in the city of Bombay has been more detrimental to the tenants and more pleasing to the landlords. All the arguments of the stalwarts and saviours of tenants have proved nugatory by the decrees and the decisions of the High Court in the matter of ejectment. I was not at all surprised when I heard that this bill was to come from the hands of the Honourable the General Member and that if there was any amendment it would be in favour of the landlords, for the Honourable Member himself interpreted the working of the present Act in favour of landlords, because his judgment made the ejectment suits easy of success for the landlords, whereas the Rent Acts were enacted to restrict ejectment suits which were the order of the day. Ejectment has now become so very common and easy that the landlord has only to go from the Small Causes Court to the High Court and he can get the tenant ejected, and it is no cause for surprise at all that this bill makes no provision at all in spite of the fact that the committee to which the Honourable the General Member referred and which was appointed by the predecessor of this Council have suggested certain amendments. The present bill overlooks certain recommendations made by that committee on pages 6 and 7 specifying certain conditions which should be essential for ejection, for after all this is a legislation which is going to secure not only that the landlords should have inordinate and high increases—in fact as much as they would like to have—but also security or permanency of tenancy made possible under this bill. The present bill does not say a word about the conditions preceding order for ejectment. There is no provision at all and it does not mention that because the Honourable Member fails to realise the tenant's point of view, I hope he will, when he goes to the select committee, listen to his colleagues on the select committee and do what is right. Otherwise I do not see how this bill is likely to be of any help to the tenants.

The question arises whether this legislation which emanated as a war-time measure in 1918 should be continued beyond the due date. I beg to submit, Sir, that this legislation was a war-time legislation in the sense that it was intended to prevent the intrigues of landlords against their tenants. These two Rent Acts were not enacted in order to win the war or provide for the production of arms and munitions. These Acts were enacted to secure certain protection for tenants against profiteering on the part of landlords. They were enacted to protect tenants during the famine of houses. I beg to submit that this view should be kept in mind and must be considered from this standpoint, namely that it should be regarded as a permanent measure. I hope when the measure goes to the select committee, the preamble of this Act will be changed so as to make it in all respects satisfactory. The conditions in 1918, as you will find from the official reports of the Director of Labour Bureau, were that the cost of labour and material was much higher in 1918, but went up to the highest point in 1920, and we find today from the official reports that the prices are very much lower now both as regards cost of living and the materials with which buildings are built. The Honourable Member in charge of the bill says in the statement of objects and reasons that since the Acts were passed, prices have risen considerably. I fail to understand how the Government can blow hot and cold. One department of the Government says that prices have fallen, and another department comes forward, perhaps without consulting its experts, and tells us that the prices have risen. The Honourable Member in charge of the bill will have to justify this statement of his before asking the House to support the bill, and the sudden increase which he proposes to give to the landlords. I am aware that he has not himself said whether the increase is reasonable or not. I do wish he had made up his mind about it. However, he has agreed to leave it to the select committee as to what increase should be given, and that is creditable on his part.

With regard to the period for which the bill will be extended, the bill says that the period will be increased by one year; in other words, the Rent Act will be thrown overboard at the end of August 1924. I beg to submit that that is not sufficient. It may be sufficient in some cases; it may not be sufficient in certain other cases. If it is decided by this House to exclude certain premises from the control of the Act as laid down by the provisions in this bill, I beg to submit that this House must extend the control of the Act to premises and rents which affect the poorer and lower middle classes for a longer period than two years. Neither the Government nor the public have increased the housing accommodation in the city of Bombay up to now. Similar is the case with regard to the other places where these two Acts are in operation. We hear from all those parts of the Presidency where these Acts are in operation that there is demand for the continuance of this Act not for the period provided in the bill, but for a further period still. The city of Bombay, when this bill was published, rose with indignation to find that the Rent Act was to be dropped in two years' time. Similar is the feeling in Karachi, in Poona and in the district of Thana, and I can assure the House that the application of the Act is also demanded in other parts of the Presidency. The period of relief sought to be given by the bill is bound to be inadequate in the case of the tenants belonging to the poorer working classes.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is that with reference to the honourable member's notice of amendment?

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI: I am discussing that, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have been looking into the existing Acts, and I find that they may be applied by Government to other parts of the

[The President]

Presidency by an order or regulation. I will say no more than that, but will leave it to the discretion of the chairman of the select committee for the present if the bill passes the first reading. My final ruling will be when and if the question comes at the time of the second reading.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI: The Honourable Member in charge of the bill, in introducing this bill, analysed it fully in such a way as to show that it would relieve four evils. But really the bill does nothing of the kind with respect to tenants.

In the first place, he has turned the entire aspect of the question, and turned the bill for the protection of the tenants into the Magna Charta of the landlords. This bill provides for an increase of rent all round by 33⅓ per cent. Is it to the interest of the tenants to pay this increase? The answer is absolutely in the negative. On this point the landlords score. Then we come to the question of the sub-letting. Sub-letting is to be prohibited by this bill, and how is it going to be done? It is going to be done by preventing the tenant from sub-letting without the permission of the landlord. We are told that this bill is going to be a just one, giving power to the landlord, so that the profiteering tenant shall not squeeze money at the expense of the landlord. I should like to ask the Honourable Member in charge of the bill how he is going to restrict the landlord from having the mithai or pagdi directly himself, if not through the medium of the tenant. If the bill allows sub-letting with the permission of the landlord, I am afraid the mithai or pagdi will be shared equally by the landlord and the tenant which was hitherto devoured by the tenant. I submit that the clause relating to sub-letting is so worded that it would lead to more litigation than is believed by the Honourable Member in charge.

Provision has been made in the bill for not giving the benefit of the Act to rent-farmers. The Honourable Member in charge is quite aware that rent farming has been going on in the city of Bombay to a large and systematic extent. But, according to the provisions of the bill, if A gets the lease of a building from the landlord for three years, he gets exemption under this Act, and for three years. A can throw the Act overboard and profiteer just as much as he likes. The present wording of the bill is absolutely unsatisfactory and would create doubts and would perhaps create a good deal of discretion in the powers of the Judges of the Small Causes Court or even the High Court. I beg to submit, Sir, that this clause, as it is, is not enough. What is wanted is an imitation of that clause which prohibits sub-letting in the English Acts. If a tenant has sub-let, the landlord can appeal to the court and get that sub-tenant directed to himself. But, after all, where is sub-letting going on to-day? Sub-letting, though it leads to overcrowding and congestion is indeed an economic relief. If this bill is going to stop sub-letting altogether, I am afraid that the present tenant of the poorer classes will have to pay per head more rent, and it would also cause the removal of the sub-tenants from the permanent holding which they occupy, either in the suburbs or anywhere else in the city of Bombay. It should therefore be carefully considered whether in certain parts of the city sub-letting should be allowed or not. I have already said that the provision in the bill about sub-letting will not affect the present landlords and sub-tenants but will affect the future sub-letting. At the same time this clause about sub-letting is not quite clear, because we are not certain whether it would stop present sub-letting. I hope the Honourable the General Member will see that this clause is made quite clear.

[Mr. Ibrahim S. Haji]

Now, Sir, it is evident that the bill has been introduced in spite of strong protest against it by the tenant class. All their agitation has proved unsuccessful. The Honourable the General Member pointed out that the bill is on the lines of the English Act. If that is so, I hope he will see that the provisions which are absolutely essential in the interest of the tenants are embodied in the bill. The increased percentage given by the existing Acts for the high cost of repairs was quite right. But the landlords have played the trick till now by leaving their building without repairs in order to make it a means of ejecting the tenants. I beg to submit that this bill does not make it obligatory on the landlords to carry out the necessary repairs, as in the Act of the United Kingdom. Therefore, provision must be made in the bill giving the right to the tenants to recover the cost from the house-owners, if they carried out any repairs or cease paying increased rents. Unless this is done, the landlords will keep on their buildings without repairs, purposely to eject the tenants.

It was suggested by the Honourable Member in charge that, if they restricted new buildings also, landlords would not invest money in building houses, and the effect of this would be that it would increase the congestion in Bombay. After the passing of the Rent Act, numerous buildings have sprung up, and the rent that is demanded is so extremely high, that they are generally not occupied. Perhaps the landlords are waiting for the rainy day when there is no Rent Act and no restriction against their rapacity.

If the restriction is removed, it will put the tenant class to great hardship. Why should we not continue this restriction till the Development Department finishes its programme ?

The select committee to which this bill is going to be referred will have a very serious task to perform, because everything that is contained in the bill has to be considered. I hope the Honourable Member in charge of the bill will see that persons who have got a first-hand knowledge of the subject are put on the committee.

In short, I do neither want to be unjust to the landlords nor allow this Council to inflict any hardship on the poor tenants. Though justice is on the side of the landlords, yet expediency is on the side of the tenants. It is said that the greater part of the nation is not living in castles but in cottages. It is up to the Council to see that they do not lose even their cottages for the increased rents would drive them on to the pavements.

Before I conclude, I wish to point out the position of the Mahomedan landlords of Bombay. Most of the landlords (about 40 per cent.) are Mahomedans, and Mahomedans by force of their religion are not allowed to make profits by lending money, and so they invest their money in landed property. So a via media is necessarily to be found. While I consider that the 33⅓ per cent. is rather high, I feel that there should be no increase over rents under Rs. 100. I hope that this and other via media will be found which will be satisfactory to both sides. Now for such purpose we see on page 5 of the committee's report certain percentage returns have been given, as obtained by the landlords, whether Mahomedans, Parsis or Hindus. They have mentioned the returns in 1916 as being 5½ per cent. in the case of most localities. The committee say : " If a 5 per cent. net return was obtained in 1916 then in 1922 an increase of 25 per cent. on the standard rent would yield a return of 6·57 per cent. on the capital and an increase of 53⅓ per cent. would yield 7·12 per cent. Now, Sir, I cannot understand why the members of this committee could not give us the returns or the figures before the war and particularly the figures of 1914, in order to be a guide for us to determine whether the investment in landed property ought to be made to yield more as the Honourable Member in charge of the bill wants to make it, namely 7½ per cent. I beg to submit, Sir, we have not before us the figures of the returns on land for the years 1914, 1918, 1920 and so on, and these would play a very great part in the consideration of the bill in select committee—especially the figures for the years 1914. That would enable us to determine whether the landlords should have as a rule the usual increments or the usual returns that they would get with respect to their investment in land and houses. In my opinion never in the history of land returns the average yield has gone above 5 per cent. In conclusion, I beg to submit to this House that the increase proposed by the Honourable Member in charge of the bill, namely, 33⅓ per cent. should not be given, but more figures should be placed before us for determining to what extent the landlords would suffer if there had been no increase in the rents, and what are the classes who require protection of the law in these matters. Then the question comes whether the conditions to-day are such as to warrant any increase in the rents at all or such as to warrant any hope that normal conditions would prevail in the near future. That is also a matter for the consideration of the select committee.

Finally comes the question whether the Rent Acts should be extended for one year, or two years or more from now. It is a matter which should be considered very carefully by the select committee. At least to the poorer classes and the middle classes the relief now afforded by the Rent Acts will have to be given for some considerable time to come.

Mr. F. NELSON (Bombay Chamber of Commerce): I beg to move the closure, Sir.

(At this stage several honourable members rose in their seats simultaneously).

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA (Karachi City): I should like to speak a few words, Sir, from the point of view of Karachi. I rise, Sir, to support the first reading of the bill. I find that some members have offered congratulations to the Honourable the General Member in charge of the bill and some at the same time have levelled criticism at him. I do not know whether I should join one party or the other in this matter inasmuch as, in the opening remarks, the Honourable the General Member did not make any reference to the city of Karachi. All he said was about Bombay and he seemed to have very little knowledge of the conditions of Karachi; otherwise he would have also made a reference to the conditions of Karachi. I submit, Sir, that both Acts, namely, Act II of 1918 and Act VII of 1918 were war measures pure and simple as I shall prove later on. Karachi and Bombay both being important seaports and defended harbours were considered to be the main bases of supplies of recruits etc., for Mesopotamia and Africa, with the result that in the course of time there was a great influx of labourers, artizans and workmen into these two ports, and further both these cities were made the bases of supplies of troops and the ports of embarkation and disembarkation of troops. Restrictions were therefore imposed upon every commodity, during the continuance of the war, and the Government therefore also thought fit that some kind of control should be had on landed property as well. I submit that those circumstances do not now exist and that as the control upon commodities has been removed, I fail to see why control on landed property should not also be removed. Sir, His Excellency the Governor of Bombay, while recommending the third reading of the first Rent Bill in 1918 expressed himself as follows :—

"I quite admit that this bill is entirely novel in character and is to some extent restrictive in its action but I think honourable members have all realised that this is due to the effects of the war and the circumstances under which we exist at this particular moment. It is of course a common knowledge that our city has become the main base of supplies for the whole of the Mesopotamian forces, that here we have the main base for hospitals and all troops that go to and from either East Africa or Mesopotamia."

Now this will show the grounds on which the Acts were passed. So far as my knowledge goes, the armistice with Germany was effected in 1918. Now, for the sake of argument, let us consider that the war measure was to continue for six months or at the most two years after the discontinuance of the war. I submit that the war was over in January 1920. However, Government extended the Act to 1922 and I find it subsequently extended to 1923, and the proposal now is that it should be extended further for a year more, till August 1924. I submit, Sir, having regard to all the circumstances that have transpired up till now and having regard to the reasons advanced by some of my honourable friends from Bombay, this Act should have been thrown out long before this. No doubt, the existence of these two Acts has created, as one honourable member from Bombay said, extremely strained relations between the landlord and the tenant, but, as the tenant was being encouraged under the protection of these two Acts, the tenant considered himself to be the landlord and the landlord to be the tenant. The control exercised over landed property also to a certain extent came in for a share of blame in my humble opinion. There are unhappy instances in Karachi also in which the tenant class has treated the landlord class very badly, and has caused injury to the landlord's property and person and has robbed the poor landlord of his rent for months together, apart from the fact that tenants have made unlawful profits by transferring the tenements to sub-tenants and demanding considerable sums from them as Mithai or consideration for such transfer. That clearly shows that the tenants taking advantage of the Rent Acts benefited themselves considerably and challenged the landlords. The landlords were often obliged to go to court, with the result that delays were caused and much time elapsed before any relief could be given to them, and in the meantime if the tenant ran away the poor landlord was obliged to lose the rent and submit to his fate. There are sub-tenants who do not recognise landlords. There was no remedy for the landlord to eject the sub-tenants. The result was that the landlord was entirely at the mercy of the tenant and was required to leave the property at the mercy of the tenant, the reason being that the tenant class could see that Government was at its back and that it was protected by the court and not the landlord. It was subsequently, as my honourable friend Mr. Haji.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The honourable member must say 'my honourable friend from Bombay.' In the House of Commons if an honourable member is during a debate mentioned by another honourable member by his name he is called to order by the Chair.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : There are some difficulties, Sir, which I will place before you in this matter. Suppose there are two honourable members for one district or constituency and if I want to name a particular member, how can I distinguish him ? Also how can I address an official member, and also a nominated member ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : When there are two or more honourable members for one district or constituency, you may refer to him as " the honourable member for Bombay " and point him out. A nominated member may be referred to as " the honourable nominated member for " the locality he comes from or the interest he is nominated to represent. A Government officer should be referred to by his office, as for instance, the honourable member, Commissioner for the Southern Division, the honourable member, Registrar, Co-operative Societies, the honourable member, the Chief Secretary, and so on. These forms must be observed ; their value will be appreciated as the Council gets more and more used to them.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA : The honourable member for Bombay said that the High Court and the Court of Small Causes did not of late decide cases in favour of the tenants and that, in the opinion of the honourable member, was rather hard upon the tenants. But he is mistaken in this view ; it is because the Government or the Courts have begun to realise now that the tenants are terrorizing the landlords for nothing and are taking undue advantage of the protection under the Rent Acts that the High Court and the Court of Small Causes have begun to decide cases in favour of the landlords. In other words the courts have begun to see that these war restriction Acts are beginning to work harshly on the landlord class. That in itself, Sir, goes to show that these Acts enacted by Government are one-sided, that they are more in favour of the tenant class and also partial to the tenant class. For although the landlords have put their case before Government, the Government have not been able to see how harshly they are working on the landlords. I therefore cannot endorse the remarks made by my honourable friend on my right, the honourable member for Bombay, and I repeat that this Act should be abolished instead of being extended. I am rather surprised to see that not a single honourable member against the bill has come forward to say that the extension of the two Acts should be till eternity. But they rather seem to be satisfied with a little extension of two, or three or four years only. I submit that if these two Acts are extended even for a year more, the relationship between landlords and tenants will become more and more estranged with the result, as was observed by one of the honourable members, that after the expiry of the Rent Act some tenants who are in occupation at present will be in a worse position because of their having unnecessarily worried and troubled their landlords under the protection afforded to them by the Act. There have been instances of this kind in Karachi I know, and can quote them for the information of those who are against the bill—I mean those who are against some of the provisions of this bill introduced by the Honourable Member in charge. Even in Karachi the tenant class has the audacity to come forward and if I mistake not they have made representations to the Government of Bombay also that the landlord should be forced to provide the tenants with sufficient arrangement for water for flushing purposes and the like, and all sorts of conveniences and facilities on the first, second and third floors of the premises though they knew very well that the water supply is scanty and that the prices of the material have gone up. Still they go on urging that such and such a provision should be made for them in the Act. It is not preposterous to think or say that all these facilities should be provided without their paying a single pie more to the landlord as rent ? I know there are several other such instances in Karachi. I may quote them for the information of the honourable House and for the information of those honourable members who say that the landlord class is a bad class and that the Act should be extended for a long period for the convenience of the tenants. I say, Sir, there are instances in which tenants allow four or five families to live together, with the result that the accommodation becomes overcrowded. They want additional bath-rooms, additional cook-rooms, additional water closets and so on, with a view to afford facilities to the people who are subsequently imported into the premises. They then divide the rents among themselves to the detriment of the landlord. They approached the Rent Controller in Karachi and the Controller refused to interfere, and then it was represented to the municipality that the municipality should take some action in the matter, and that, if possible, the landlord, should be forced to provide all these additional facilities without the tenants paying a single pie. Of course the municipality had to look into the matter. They sent their health officer to the premises who found that the premises were over-crowded and reported to the municipality that from a sanitary point of view so many people should not be allowed to stay on the premises. These are instances that I have quoted for the information of those who say that the Act should be extended for at least five years more and that the percentage of increase now proposed should be reduced for the benefit of the tenants. I am, Sir, going to say something more which will show that so far as Karachi is concerned there should be no reduction of the 33⅓ per cent. at all unless Government sees its way to meet the wishes of the people of Karachi. I think, Sir, my honourable colleagues who belong to the Presidency proper do not know the nature of the tenure of property in Karachi. In Karachi there are two classes of property; some plots belong to the Government and the others belong to the municipality. The municipality levy house-tax, land rent, and so on, on the plots sold by them, and Government charges land rent on their plots. Some plots belonging to Government are held on 21 years' lease and some on 51 years' lease. Some of these leases expired in 1910-11 and 1914-15. The Government did not take any particular care to revise the assessment at the time when the leases expired. They sat silent for nearly 12 years, and it is only now that the Government have come forward and revised the assessment, but they have revised it to such an extent that it is absolutely intolerable for holders of Government land to continue in possession of the property for any length of time. The landlords in Karachi holding plots from Government think that the Government want to deprive them of their property and want to turn themselves into landlords. I do not know how far the suspicion expressed by my honourable friend from Bombay, that the Government wants to make property and earn a profit thereon is well-founded, but when the new rules of revised assessment were published in Sind in June 1922 it gave an impression to people in Karachi that the Government wanted to have the lands for themselves.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: What is the difference between the municipal and Government ground rents?

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: The municipality have got their own rates, but Government forced the municipality to adjust their scale in such a way that it might be in consonance with the scale laid down by Government. A representation was made to Government, and the Government replied to the Landlords' Defence Association that they were sending in October their own Consulting Surveyor, Mr. Mirams, to consult landholders and to report on the matter. Somtime ago Mr. Mirams was in Karachi, stayed there for some months, and made his suggestions to the Collector with regard to the revision of land rent. The Collector made his own suggestions to the Commissioner and the Commissioner sent his proposals to the Government, and the Government have set aside the suggestions of all these officers and have fixed the scale as it thought proper. And mind you, this revised assessment has got a retrospective effect. In other words, these assessments on the scales sanctioned by Government in June 1922 will have a retrospective effect from 1911 in addition to the premium to be paid for leases which expired in 1910 and 1914-15.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: I rise to a point of of order, Sir. The Legislative Council has a very important and a very long agenda paper to go through. The honourable member is talking on the Rent Act, but he is referring to the action of Government in regard to the revision of ground rents for leases given by Government to occupiers of land in Karachi. Sir, I fail to see what connection there is between the Rent Act and the ground rent revision in Karachi.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: Sir, I had expected this question to be raised and I am prepared to answer it. The relevancy is this. If my honourable colleagues think that this 33⅓ per cent. should be reduced, I say that so many taxes are already saddled on to the property, and premiums to the extent of thousands of rupees have to be paid. Will not the occupiers of land suffer if they are compelled to rent their houses on small rents? I will give certain instances of the revision of these assessments. In the case of one plot the original assessment was Rs. 14: the Collector said it should be Rs. 880 per year; Mr. Mirams suggested that it should be Rs. 1,770 and the Government have imposed Rs. 1,995. Now look at the great increase from Rs. 14 to Rs. 1,995. In the case of another plot.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: How is this relevant to the question of putting restrictions upon the freedom of contract between the landlord and his tenant?

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: If there is to be freedom of contract between Government and landlords, there must be freedom of contract between the landlord and the tenant. If freedom of contract is allowed in one case, why should it not be allowed in the other case?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That is not relevant. If and when that question arises the Council may discuss and decide, but it has not arisen now.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: I am sorry, Sir, revenue is a reserved subject and it cannot be referred to in this Council.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I do not see the relevancy of this point as regards leases by Government.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: I am sorry, Sir, my point has not been appreciated and followed. I refer to it to show that the landlords who have to pay these heavy assessments and taxes will be unable to meet their liabilities without increasing their rents.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I see the honourable member's point now. His point is that the effect of interference by this bill with freedom of contract between a landlord and his tenant will be to restrict the former's right to recover proper rent from the latter while Government do not relax their right but reduce the landlord to a position of almost.....

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: Penury. My object in placing this point of view before the Council is two-fold; one is that so far as Karachi is concerned, the bill should provide not only for 33⅓ per cent. but more, as Government wants to be the superior landlord of properties in Karachi—in other words Government want to take the money from us and want at the same time to saddle us with so much liability with the result that people will be obliged to give up their holdings—they will be, they are going to. What will be the result?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I understand your point; you say that the legislature is asked to restrict the landlord's right to recover from his tenant whereas Government is not restricted in taking as much rent as they like from the landlord.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: In other words, they want to cut the throats of the landlords. The reason why I rather insist upon speaking on behalf of Karachi city is to let my honourable friends know that this bill does not meet the wishes of the people of Karachi and I hope, Sir, that Government will, while in this manner safeguarding the interests of tenants, also at the same time have at heart the welfare of the landlord class. My object again is that, having regard to this innovation lately introduced in Karachi, I am afraid that it may also be introduced in Bombay and therefore it is in my opinion desirable that the select committee should consider the most pertinent point, namely, so far as the circumstances of Karachi are concerned, whether or not the suggestion of my honourable friend from Bombay on my right was a reasonable one or not, that the Act which was introduced as a war measure should have been discontinued long before this.

Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: I am afraid.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member for Karachi (Mr. Ojha) has not given way; unless he lets the honourable member rise to interrupt, the latter cannot interrupt.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: I do not know how my honourable friend will help me. I have placed all the facts before him—if I have not got sufficient knowledge of facts, I shall be obliged to him if he can help me out of the difficulty so far as the Landlords' Defence Association in Karachi is concerned, namely, how the case of landlords can be considered along with the case of tenants. How is the tenant class going to be helped? How is the landlord class going to be helped? That is the question. I submit, Sir, under these circumstances the select committee will consider the question whether 33⅓ per cent. is too high or should be graduated in any way, but speaking from the point of view of the landlords in Karachi, I think that the bill throws considerable hardship upon them. When we have regard to the fact that the Government has recently revised ground rents and premiums exhorbitantly, the Rent Act ought to be liberally revised.

My honourable friend from Bombay representing the Mahomedan interests remarked that there was a good deal of profiteering in the shape of speculation in land. I fail to see what this speculation or profiteering in land had to do with the Rent Acts. I fail to see how that helped the tenant class—I fail to see how that helped the landlord class as against the tenants under the Rent Acts.

I do not know whether I should take up any further time of the Council in placing facts as regards Karachi, which facts are different from those prevailing in Bombay. I hope the select committee will consider the conditions and the case of Karachi on a different level from that of Bombay, but if the select committee consider that the present act should not be extended to Karachi from 31st August 1922 I shall be very pleased to hear that —more pleased to hear that. Of course I find in Bombay a lot of circumstances and conditions and other things of which I have not the least idea and therefore say, Sir, that Bombay should be placed on a different level and that the case of Karachi should be considered by the select committee on the facts which I have now placed before the Council, and I hope that the select committee will lay down what percentage should be added to the rents now charged by the landlords in Karachi in the light of facts disclosed by me and which are not applicable to Bombay.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): I rise, Sir, to support the first reading of this bill. It is not a piece of perfection but it is the best that could be devised to meet existing conditions. The Honourable mover of this bill has rightly told us that there are controversial points in it and he would see that they are thoroughly discussed in the select committee. I congratulate him for the tact which he has shown in disarming opposition. Such amiability and reasonableness on the Government side would lead to more harmony and less loss of time in discussion.

I now come to the first point of principle that is involved in this bill, namely, the duration of the Rent Acts. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, I think the proposed extension is a reasonable proposition. The bill proposes to extend the operation of the Rent Acts to the 31st August 1924. That proposition is a fair one and my reason for saying so is that so long as the Rent Act is on the statute book the operation of the law of supply and demand will be greatly restricted, and no private enterprise will come forward to put up more houses, the result of which will be that the congestion will not be diminished. The Development Department is building 50,000 single-room tenements and, if the Rent Acts are not repealed, I am of opinion that tenants living in the city will not go to the tenements built by the Development Department whose rent will be higher than what is paid by the poorer classes of Bombay under those Acts. My honourable friend representing Thana has said that there is a famine of houses in Bombay, and 10,000 more houses must be built to remove congestion and to restore normal conditions. He has also told us that in Bombay every year 700 new houses are built, and that therefore the Rent Act should be in force for something like ten years more. But I would draw his attention to the Census Report. It states that the population of Bombay in 1911 was somewhere near 10½ lakhs, and the Census Report of the year 1921 says that it has gone now somewhere near 12 lakhs. That means that there is an increase of only 1½ lakhs of persons. Now, we know that in the year 1910 there was no complaint about famine of houses. So, I think that if there is overcrowding, it is due to the increase of 1½ lakhs of persons having come into Bombay during this period of ten years. It may be said that during the period of these ten years, the City Improvement Trust has demolished houses and constructed new roads. But I can assure my honourable friend from Thana that if he reads the reports of the City Improvement Trust, he will find that all those people who were dishoused by the Improvement Trust are now housed by them. Therefore the operations of the Improvement Trust have not increased congestion. Sir, exaggeration may be a good thing to attract attention, but it leads to wrong conclusions; therefore in a deliberative assembly like this it should be kept within proper limits.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Are you likely to take some time, Mr. Surve?

Mr. A. N. SURVE: Ten to fifteen minutes more, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: In that case, I think we will adjourn, but before we adjourn I hope honourable members will not think that I am laying down a rule which is not in accordance with the necessities of this House, as regards the way in which one honourable member shall refer to another honourable member. I will only say that as regards these forms, a name distinguished in the history of the British Constitution and a great Parliamentarian, the late Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman, once said in that House at a debate:—

"These are very small matters no doubt in one sense, but, as I have said, it is not mere pedantry. Depend upon it there is something in even the smallest of these forms."

May in his "Parliamentary Practice" points out:

"Each member must be distinguished by the office he holds, by the place he represents, or by other titles, as the Noble Lord the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, the Honourable or Right Honourable Gentleman the Member for York, or the honourable and learned Member who has just sat down."

I should be unworthy of my place here if I did not request and require honourable members to adhere to these forms. Looseness as to them to-day may and is sure to lead to worse than looseness in this House two or three years after this. (Hear, hear, and applause.)

The Council is adjourned till 2 p. m. on Friday, the 29th September 1922.

Friday, the 29th September 1922.

The Council re-assembled at the Council Hall, Poona, on Friday, the 29th September 1922, at 2 p.m., the Honourable the President, Sir NARAYAN GANESH CHANDAVARKAR, Kt., LL.D., presiding.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. Questions.

PROPORTIONATE REDUCTION OF GRAIN COMPENSATION AND WAR ALLOWANCES.

Mr. P. N. ADHAV (Satara District): When the prices of staple food grains are steadily falling, will Government be pleased to state if any action is taken to proportionately reduce the grain compensation and war allowances to establishments wherever allowed?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Grain Compensation Allowance or War Allowance are not at present drawn by any establishments.

COST OF MAPS AND PLANS UNDER THE BOMBAY LAND REVENUE CODE.

* Mr. G. C. BHATE (Kolaba District): (a) Will Government be pleased to state the amount of costs of preparation of maps and plans under section 135G of the Land Revenue Code, (1) recovered up to now, and (2) to be recovered, in the Kolaba District?

(b) Is it a fact that such costs are recovered from the khatedars in some cases at least without even giving notices of demand?

(c) Is it a fact that the plans and maps prepared in Mahad taluka villages are in experimental stage being based on "Plane Table survey"?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: (a), (1) and (2). The total amount recovered up to now is Rs. 53,357 and that to be recovered is Rs. 77,090.

(b) No. The recoveries are always made by informing the khatedars orally, as the issue of notices of demand, in the first instance, will throw additional burden of notice fees on the khatedars. The survey expenses are recovered under section 135 (G) of the Land Revenue Code as a revenue demand. The amount to be recovered as certified by the mamlatdar, is entered in the accounts against each occupant, and the occupant has a right to inspect his account, free of charge, and to obtain a copy thereof for one anna.

(c) No.

Mr. G. C. BHATE: Am I to understand by the reply that the plans and maps are not in experimental stage?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Answer is in the negative. They are not experiments.

Mr. G. C. BHATE: Are they based on Plane Table Survey?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: I require notice of the question.

* This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

TRANSFER OF THE CENTRAL RESEARCH INSTITUTE FROM DELHI TO BOMBAY.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA (Bombay City North): Will Government be pleased to state what reply they have received from the Government of India regarding the transfer of the Central Research Institute from Delhi to Bombay ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: No final reply has yet been received from the Government of India.

TODDY LICENSE.

Sardar Khan Bahadur ADARJEE M. DALAL (Broach District): Are Government aware that the toddy license auction sales and tenders to be called for in the Surat and other districts will make toddy dearer and lead to more adulteration than when the license fees were fixed by the Collector ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: The auctioning of toddy shops in places other than Surat has been in existence since 1918-19 and the tender system has been introduced in Surat and its vicinity since 1919-20. The working of the systems so far does not justify the honourable member's apprehensions.

GRAZING LAND.

Sardar Khan Bahadur ADARJEE M. DALAL (Broach District): (a) Will Government be pleased to place a statement on the table of grazing land assigned for each taluka in the Northern Division and the number of milch and plough cattle for the same ?

(b) Are Government aware that the area of this grazing waste land in some districts and talukas where rainfall is scarce and which are periodically affected by scarcities, have insufficient grazing lands for the cattle causing distress and hardship to the ryots ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Information has been called for.

BOMBAY SECRETARIAT.

Sardar Khan Bahadur ADARJEE M. DALAL (Broach District): Will Government be pleased to place on the table a comparative statement of the staff in the Bombay Secretariat, department by department, for the years 1913 and 1921, showing the total amounts of expenditure in each of the two years for salaries and other expenses incidental thereto and how many of this staff is composed of covenanted and other officials in 1913 and 1921 drawing a salary of Rs. 500 and upwards ?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Information will be collected for the financial years 1913-14 and 1921-22.

SCARCITY OF DRINKING WATER IN BROACH DISTRICT.

Sardar Khan Bahadur ADARJEE M. DALAL (Broach District): Are Government aware that in the Bara tract of the Broach district on the coast villages of Wagra, Jambusar and Amod, chronic scarcity of drinking water and acute scarcity in the years of deficient rainfall prevail, necessitating cart service for water for distant villages and that the water grant given to the district local board is inadequate and out of proportion to the requirements and peculiar condition of those parts ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The information is being called for.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A MARINE TRAINING SCHOOL.

Major C. FERNANDES (Bombay City South): Will Government be pleased to state if they have in recent years received a petition from Indian seamen of this Presidency for the establishment of a marine training school? If so, will Government be pleased to place on the table the petition and the reply?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: Yes. The copies* asked for are laid on the Council table. This Government has since, however, addressed the Government of India on the subject of the establishment of a nautical school for lascars in this Presidency.

NUMBER OF VILLAGE PANCHAYATS ESTABLISHED.

Mr. D. D. GHOLAP: Will Government be pleased to state —

(a) how many village panchayats are established within the Presidency proper and (b) how many members of the depressed classes were returned into them by election or by nomination?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSEIN: Enquiry is being made.

GOVERNMENT SCHOLARS IN GRANT MEDICAL COLLEGE.

Mr. D. D. GHOLAP: Will Government be pleased to state how many Government scholars are studying in the Grant Medical College, Bombay, and medical schools under Government control and what are their respective castes and sex?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Information is being obtained.

WOMEN IN PROVINCIAL EDUCATIONAL SERVICE.

Mr. D. D. GHOLAP: Will Government be pleased to state how many Indian women are in the Provincial Educational Service and of what castes?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Two. One Mahomedan and one Parsi.

QUALIFICATIONS OF HONORARY AND SPECIAL MAGISTRATES.

Mr. D. D. GHOLAP: Will Government be pleased to lay on table the names of the honorary and special magistrates of Central and Southern Divisions respectively together with their educational qualifications and powers?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: A revised list of honorary and special magistrates which specifies their powers will shortly be published.

No educational qualifications are prescribed but the District Magistrates, in submitting their recommendations, take into consideration all qualifications necessary for the discharge of magisterial duties.

Mr. G. C. BHATE: What are "all those necessary qualifications" referred to?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: There is no qualifying examination for honorary magistrates.

*Kept in Secretary's office.

GOVERNMENT SCHOLARS IN GIRLS' TRAINING SCHOOLS.

Mr. D. D. GHOLAP: Will Government be pleased to state how many Government scholars are in the training schools for girls and of what castes?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The information has been called for.

SCHOLARSHIPS TO DEPRESSED CLASSES STUDENTS.

Mr. D. D. GHOLAP: Will Government be pleased to state how much sum has been spent in giving the scholarships to the depressed classes students out of the budget grant of Rs. 4,000 in 1921-1922 for arts colleges and how much is in hand?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The information has been called for.

IRRIGATION SCHEMES IN BELGAUM DISTRICT.

Rao Saheb P. G. HALKATTI (Bijapur District): Will Government be pleased to inform:

(a) how far the irrigation schemes on the Ghataprabha and the Markandeyi rivers in the Belgaum district have progressed?

(b) when they are likely to be undertaken?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: (a) They are at present under investigation.

(b) Not for some years.

TECHNICAL AND INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION.

Rao Saheb P. G. HALKATTI (Bijapur District): Will Government be pleased to inform what further steps Government are going to adopt with respect to the report of the Technical and Industrial Education Committee having Sir. M. Vishweshwaraya as its chairman recently appointed by Government?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The report is under the consideration of Government. It is, therefore, not possible to state at this stage what steps they propose to take.

GAMBLING ON THE STOCK EXCHANGE OF BOMBAY.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA (Bombay City): Are Government aware of the huge gambling going on, on the stock exchange of Bombay for some months past to the great detriment and the ruin of a large section of the general investing public and the Indian industries? If so, whether Government intend to take any legislation in hand with a view to put a stop to this gambling?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Government are not aware of the facts alleged.

FOOD GRANT FOR PATIENTS IN THE J. J. HOSPITAL.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA (Bombay City): Will Government please state whether it is a fact that Colonel Carter, the Senior Medical authority, pointed out to Government that the grant which Government gave for food purposes was not enough and adequate for the patients of the J. J. Hospital; and, if so, what action did the Government take on that requisition ?

The Honourable Mr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The matter is under consideration.

DAMAGE BY MONSOON TO BACK BAY RECLAMATION.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA (Bombay City): Will Government be pleased to state whether any of the reclaimed portion of the Back Bay scheme is washed away by the monsoon of this year, and if so, to what extent, and what amount of damage thereby ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD : No part of Back Bay has yet been reclaimed. The sea-wall has been in no way damaged by the monsoon.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA : I think the sea-wall has been damaged ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD : If the honourable member can spare time to visit the place after he returns to Bombay, he will find out that his information is quite wrong.

ASSISTANCE SUITS UNDER LAND REVENUE CODE.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the number of assistance suits under sections 86, 87 of the Land Revenue Code instituted in the district of Satara in the years 1919-20, 1920-21 and 1921-22 ?

(b) In how many of these the full amount asked for by the superior holder was decreed and in how many was it reduced ?

(c) In how many of these decrees the discretionary fine of 25 per cent. was inflicted and awarded to the superior holders ?

(d) How many of these superior holders so rewarded were Brahmins ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Information has been called for.

WATANDAR TALATIS.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Will Government be pleased to state how many members of the old watandar families are employed as talatis in the district of Satara and how many of these are working in their own villages or within 10 miles of it ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Information will be called for.

REDUCTION OF TALATIS AND CLERKS.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Will Government be pleased to state the number of talatis and clerks in the Revenue Department in the district of Satara who were dismissed owing to the reduction in the staff and how many of them were Brahmins ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Information will be called for.

DECCAN AGRICULTURISTS' RELIEF ACT.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District): Will the Government be pleased to state the reasons why the bill to amend the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act is delayed ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : It is still awaiting the reply of the Government of India.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE : Has any reminder been sent to the Government of India ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: A reminder was sent quite recently. The reference was made about a year ago to the Government of India.

INTERIM RECOMMENDATIONS OF RETRENCHMENT COMMITTEE.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District) : What action is Government going to take with the respect to the interim recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee regarding the travelling allowance rates of the Government officers ?"

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : Some of the recommendations of the Retrenchment Committee are still under the consideration of Government. Others were taken into consideration in passing various orders on the subject, copies* of which are laid on the Council table.

TENANTS' STRIKE.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District) : In how many villages in the Satara and Belgaum districts lands of the landlord class are left uncultivated by the tenants on account of the strike made for reducing the exorbitant demands of the landlords ? Is it a fact that the landlords there do not get any help from the village Balutas as before ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Inquiry will be made.

GOVERNMENT RESOLUTION REGARDING ADMISSION OF GIRLS INTO SCHOOLS.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District) : Will Government be pleased to lay on the Council table the Government Resolution in the matter of admission of girls into schools where no separate schools for girls exist ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : A copy of Government Order,† Educational Department, No. 4951, dated the 31st October 1919, is laid on the table.

CO-OPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL CREDIT SOCIETIES.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District) : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state whether the question of redemption of old debts of the members of the co-operative agricultural cerdit societies is now before them, and, if not (b) what action is being taken on the report of the Registrar of Co-operative Credit Societies about the matter ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Yes ; some selected localities and societies are being taken up for action in conjunction with the Provincial and Central Banks.

TECHNICAL AND INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District) : Will Government be pleased to state what action has been taken on the report of the Technical and Industrial Education Committee in this Presidency ?

---

* Vide Appendix U. † Kept in Secretary's office.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : The report is under the consideration of Government.

LINGAYAT STUDENTS.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District) : Will Government be pleased to state :—

(a) The total number of Lingayat students studying in all the arts colleges of this Presidency in the year 1921-22 ?

(b) The total number of Lingayat students studying in the professional colleges of this Presidency in the year 1921-22 ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : (a) and (b) The information appears in the usual course in the annual reports of the Director of Public Instruction, but unless the member gives, privately if he so wishes, any special reason for getting it in advance, I do not think it proper to add to the work of an already overworked department.

TOTAL NUMBER OF LINGAYAT STUDENTS IN COLLEGES.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District) : Will the Government be pleased to give :—

(a) the number of Lingayat students in the various arts colleges of the Presidency as it stood at the end of July 1922 ?

(b) the number of Lingayat students studying in the professional colleges of the Presidency as it stood at the end of July 1922 ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : (a) and (b) The information appears in the usual course in the annual reports of the Director of Public Instruction, but unless the member gives, privately if he so wishes, any special reason for getting it in advance, I do not think it proper to add to the work of an already overworked department.

INCREASED POTGI TO PATILS.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District) : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state whether it is the intention of the Government to give an increased amount of potgi to the village patils in the Dharwar, Bijapur and Belgaum districts ?

(b) If so, does Government intend to make a provision (for meeting additional expenditure on this head) in the next year's budget ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : The question of increase in the remuneration of patils is under the consideration of Government.

REVISION OF PAY OF SHETSANADIS.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District) : Will the Government be pleased to state :—

(a) Whether the pay of shetsanadis in the Dharwar district is revised ?

(b) If so, from what date ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Information has been called for.

INCREASE OF JURISDICTION OF SUBORDINATE JUDGES.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District) : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the question of increasing the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the second class subordinate judges was before the High Court or was considered by the Bombay High Court some time back ?

(b) If so, in what year ? And what was the opinion of the Bombay High Court on that question ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : Government understand that no such question has been before the High Court.

ENGINEERING COLLEGE AT KARACHI.

*Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state when candidates who have passed out of the D. J. Sind Engineering College at Karachi this year will get orders for joining their guaranteed appointments ?

(b) If the candidates who passed from the above College in 1921 have been given the guaranteed appointments ?

(c) If so, have the candidates resumed their duty ?

(d) If not, why ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD : (a) and (b). Thes points were replied to at the last session.

(c) and (d). Of the four candidates appointed two are already in Government service ; one has requested his appointment may be kept open for some time and the last man stated he would join his appointment a month after receipt of orders which have since issued.

NEW MUNICIPAL ACT FOR KARACHI.

Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City) : Will Government be pleased to state when the new Municipal Act for the City of Karachi will be introduced in Council ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN : The draft bill will be referred shortly to the Karachi municipality for its remarks. It is therefore not possible to fix a date for its introduction in Council.

PROSPECTS OF ENGINEERING COLLEGE STUDENTS, SIND.

Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City) : Will Government be pleased to state :—

(a) What appointments and pay will be offered to candidates who have passed out of the D. J. Sind College of Engineering in March this year ?

(b) Is it a fact that the students of the D. J. Engineering College who passed in 1921 have not accepted the guaranteed appointments offered to them ?

(c) If the reply to (b) is in the affirmative, to state the reasons for their non-acceptance of such posts ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD : (a) One on the Upper Subordinate establishment on Rs. 100 per mensem and one on the Lower Subordinate establishment on Rs. 60 per mensem. Both subordinates will be on probation for one year. If on the expiry of the probationary period they are favourably reported upon by their superior officers they will be confirmed in their appointments and start on Rs. 100 per mensem each in their respective scales of pay.

(b) No.

---

* This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

CLEARANCE OF CANALS.

Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City): Will Government be pleased to state :—

(a) Is it a fact that the Engineering Department do not clean beds of canals in taluka Mirpur Bathoro, Karachi district, since the last few years ?

(b) Is it a fact that owing to this, there is not sufficient water in the canals to enable zamindars to cultivate their lands fully ?

(c) Why has the system of clearing canal beds been done away with ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD : (a) and (c) Clearance is done when required and as far as funds are available.

(b) It is not a fact.

COMPULSION TO CONSTRUCT MORIES.

Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City): (a) Are Government aware that the Engineering Department in Sind insist on zamindars to construct pukka Mories to their Kuries at their own expense, otherwise the said Kuries are being closed ?

(b) Is it a fact that three regulators which the Engineering Department had constructed in the Mirpur Bathoro taluka some years back are working no longer ?

(c) How much money was spent on their construction ?

(d) Were any zamindars of the division consulted before these regulators were constructed ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD :

(a) No.

(b), (c) and (d) As the regulators are not described these points cannot be answered.

INVITATION TO ZAMINDARS FOR ENGINEERS' CONFERENCE.

Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City): Will Government be pleased to state whether any zamindars in Sind were invited by the Commissioner in Sind last year at the Engineers' Conference held at Karachi ?

If not, why ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: There is no reason why zamindars should be invited to attend departmental conferences unless their presence is specially desired.

ZAMINDARS' INABILITY TO REFUND TAKAVI AND PAY ASSESSMENT.

Mr. G. H. KASSIM (Karachi City): Will Government be pleased to state if they are aware that some zamindars in the Karachi district have been obliged to sell their lands at low prices owing to their inability to refund takavi and pay land assessment to Government ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Inquiry is being made.

INDEPENDENCE OF URDU CLASSES.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): Are Government aware that two independent institutions existed some time back in the premises of Dharwar training college for men ? And will Government be pleased to state what objection there is in declaring the Urdu classes at Poona and Ahmedabad independent in the present premises ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : Enquiries are being made.

PRACTICE OF DEPUTING PERSIAN TEACHERS TO SECONDARY TRAINING COLLEGE.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): Will Government be pleased to state why the practice of deputing Persian teachers along with other assistant teachers to the secondary training college, Bombay, has been stopped ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Enquiries are being made.

NEW PROVINCIAL ENGINEERS.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA (Karachi City): Will the Government be pleased to state whether the lists of the new provincial engineers acknowledged to have been received from the other local Governments, as per their reply No. 3 printed at page 1241 of Volume II of the proceedings of this Council, have now been examined; if not, what are the reasons of the long delay ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: The lists have been examined in connection with the case represented by the joint deputation of Upper Subordinates and Assistant Engineers received in 1921 and the matter is still under the consideration of Government.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: May I enquire how long Government will take to consider the matter and reach a final decision ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: As soon as it can possibly be done.

P. W. D. DEPUTATION.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA (Karachi City): Will Government be pleased to state what delays the disposal of the case of the joint deputation of Public Works Department upper subordinates and provincial engineers that waited on the General Member of Government (the Honourable Sir Chimanlal Setalvad), and the Minister for Local-Self Government (the Honourable Khan Bahadur Ghulam Hussain) in June 1921 regarding the revision of the orders issued by this Government in their No. E.—1051 (P.W.D.), dated 19th January 1921 and Financial Department No. 20, dated 21st January 1921.

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD : The matter is still under the consideration of Government.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: I hope the same reply will be given if I ask a similar supplementary question ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: Exactly.

GIRLS' SCHOOL, AHMEDABAD.

Mr. B. P. PATEL (Ahmedabad District): Will the Government state whether the girls' high school at Ahmedabad was located in a separate hired building owing to want of accommodation at the Mahaluxmi training college ? Was there any substantial increase in the number of pupils requiring this change ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Enquiries are being made.

EXAMINATION OF URDU TRAINING CLASSES.

Mr. B. P. PATEL (Ahmedabad District): Will Government be pleased to state why is not the annual examination of all the Urdu training classes held on one and the same date throughout the Presidency proper on par with the divisional vernacular training colleges and the district training schools and the vernacular final examination ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Enquiries are being made.

FURNITURE OF DISTRICT LOCAL BOARDS.

Mr. B. P. PATEL (Ahmedabad District): (a) Is the Government aware that all the school furniture of the district local boards is made at Ahmedabad under the supervision of the Educational Inspector ? What were the reasons of doing away with the old practice of making them locally in each district ?

(b) What amounts were annually spent (from the time this system is in vogue) after the school furniture, and (c) transit charges for the same ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Enquiries are being made.

CITY COURT BILL.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): (a) Have Government received back the bill on the City Court which was sent to the High Court for report ?

(b) If so, what action Government has taken upon it ?

(c) Will Government be pleased to place on the table a copy of the remark made by the High Court on the said bill ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: (a) and (b) The reply has been received and the matter is under the consideration of Government.

(c) It would be inconvenient to publish the papers pending consideration by Government.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA: How long will Government take to consider this matter ? It is nearly a year since this matter was represented to this Council.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: I cannot say definitely.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA: Surely, Sir, you can state at what stage it is.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: The papers have been under my personal investigation for the last few weeks.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA: How long will it take to reach a decision ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: I cannot say.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON RENT ACTS.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Will Government be pleased to place on the table the report of the committee appointed to suggest amendments to the Rent Acts ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: Attention is invited to the reply given to Mr. G. B. Trivedi's question on the same subject.

SPECIAL SURVEY FOR BUNDING.

Mr. KANJI DWARKADAS on behalf of Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS: Will Government be pleased to put on the table a statement showing what has been done by Government with regard to Resolution No. 12 passed by the Bombay Legislative Council on 20th September 1919 recommending that a special survey be made as early as possible with a view to find out the most suitable places on rivers and streams in the Presidency for purposes of bunding, and on receipt of the report of such survey to forthwith undertake such works without delay ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: No action was taken on the resolution in question at that time for want of sufficient staff to carry out the investigation recommended therein. In (1) the Sukkur Barrage Project, (2) the Nira Valley Development Project and (3) the Gokak Extension Project the department has so much in hand that the staff is fully engaged for a long time ahead and more financially than it can cope with, almost indefinitely.

Mr. G. C. BHATE: Is it not possible for the Executive Engineers and their subordinates in the districts to cope with this work ?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: It has not been found possible.

RELEASE OF MULSHI PETA PRISONERS.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if it is not a fact that the release of the Mulshi peta prisoners was, a few months ago, recommended by the District Magistrate, Poona district, and that his recommendation was backed up by the Commissioner, Central Division ?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to give the reasons for rejecting the recommendation ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: (a) and (b). The release of these prisoners was considered along with other remissions in connection with retrenchment in jail expenditure. It is not in the public interests to disclose the opinions of officers consulted by Government.

ABOLITION OF HAZRI.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Were any proposals made by the City Magistrate to the Collector, Satara, last year for the abolition of Hazri on Mangs residing in Satara ?

(b) Has action, if any, been taken on those proposals ?

(c) If not, what is the cause of delay ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Government are not aware of any such proposals.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: The Mangs in the town of Satara have been exempted, whereas those in the district have not been. Why is it so ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Government are not aware of that.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: Will Government enquire ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: There is no necessity for any particular enquiry. I may say this: we have under consideration the question of a special settlement for the criminal tribes in the Thana District.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: My question is not with reference to any particular class. My question is why they have been exempted in some places and not in others? Will Government be pleased to make enquiries into this differential treatment?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: I cannot. But if there is any difficulty and if the matter is brought to my notice, I will see what can be done to remedy it. But as it is I have nothing on my record to justify any enquiry.

REPLY TO GOVERNMENT'S PRESS NOTE TO DHOLKA MUNICIPALITY.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if the Dholka municipality has sent any reply to the Government's ultimatum conveyed to the municipality in their press note no. 2703-A., dated July 22nd, 1922?

(b) If so, will they be pleased to place it on the Council table?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: The answer is in the negative.

AWARDS FOR LANDS ACQUIRED IN SALSETTE AND TROMBAY.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) How many awards for lands acquired in Salsette and Trombay have been made by acquisition officers up to August 1922?

(b) How many of these have been declared?

(c) How long will it take to declare the remainder?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: The information is being collected.

CIRCULAR TO GOVERNMENT PENSIONERS.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Have Government sent any circular to their pensioners that their political activities against Government would be considered as misconduct?

(b) How many pensioners are deprived of their pensions for their political activities during the last two years in this Presidency?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: (a) No such circular has been issued.

(b) One.

REPORT OF BOMBAY RENT COMMITTEE.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Will Government be pleased to lay on the Council table the report of the Bombay Rent Act Committee?

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: The report* is laid on the table.

GURCHARAN LAND IN THANA DISTRICT.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Will the Government be pleased to state what was the area of Gurcharan land in 1917 at Palghar, Mahim and Alari in Mahim taluka, Thana district?

(b) How many acres were given away since 1917?

(c) Is the reduced area sufficient for the cattle of those villages?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Information has been called for.

* Kept in Secretary's office.

RESTRICTION ON GRAZING LANDS.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Are Government aware that some mamlatdars in Thana district have recently issued notifications restricting the rights of free use of grazing lands other than open forests ?

(b) What is the Government's justification for issuing such notifications ?

(c) Are the Government aware that thereby they are causing discontent amongst villagers ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Information has been called for.

INTRODUCTION OF VILLAGE PANCHAYATS.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Have the Government received recommendation from Mahim taluka local board for granting village panchayats to Palghar, Tarapore and Sofala ?

(b) Have they come to any decision in the matter ?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: No. Attention is invited to section 3 of the Village Panchayats Act, 1920.

SALE OF INJAILI TREES.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Are Government aware that injaili trees from Gurcharan land of Mendhavan in Manor range, Mahim taluka, have been sold ?

(b) Is this according to usual rules ?

(c) Did the people of the village object to it ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Inquiry is being made.

FOREST DEPOTS IN THANA DISTRICT.

11. Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Are forest depôts in Thana district generally closed between the months of April and November ?

(b) If so what steps are Government taking to meet the demand for fuel during these months ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Information has been called for.

PERMIT FEE FOR CUTTING TREES.

Rao Bahadur D. A. VICHARE (Ratnagiri District): Will Government be pleased to say under what agreement the cultivators are asked to pay from one half to one rupee per tree of teak as permit fee for cutting trees standing in their fields for which they have been paying land assessment from generation to generation and have no agreement asking the cultivators to maintain such trees as reserved such as teak, sandal, etc. ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Attention is invited to sections 40 to 42 of the Land Revenue Code and Rules 58 to 63 made thereunder in which the legal position regarding the right of Government to trees in occupied land is defined.

NON-BRAHMINS ON BOARD OF EXAMINERS.

Rao Bahadur D. A. VICHARE (Ratnagiri District): Will Government be pleased to state as to whether there is any non-Brahmin member on the board of examiners of the training colleges ? If not, will Government be pleased to say when this defect is likely to be rectified ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : Enquiries are being made.

NET INCOME FROM LAND UNDER FOREST.

Rao Bahadur D. A. VICHARE (Ratnagiri District): Will Government be pleased to say whether the land under Forest in the Ratnagiri, Kolaba and Satara districts brings a net income per acre more than one rupee or less ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: The net income from forests in the Kolaba and Satara divisions is less than one rupee per acre. The Kolaba division includes the Dapoli taluka of the Ratnagiri district. There is no forest in charge of the Forest Department in the rest of the district.

DIFFERENCE IN SCALES OF PAY OF TEACHERS.

Rao Bahadur D. A. VICHARE (Ratnagiri District): Will Government be pleased to say whether different scales of pay are proposed for the Brahmin and non-Brahmin village teachers in the Ratnagiri district ?

If not, what is the minimum pay on which a qualified non-Brahmin teacher can be engaged in a non-Brahmin village as well as a Brahmin teacher in a Brahmin village ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Enquiries are being made.

APPLICATIONS BY NON-BRAHMIN VILLAGERS.

Rao Bahadur D. A. VICHARE (Ratnagiri District): (a) Will Government be pleased to lay on table the date of first applications made by the non-Brahmin villagers of Masura, Malvan taluka, Parolee and Paral Vada of Vengurla taluka and Vada Donga for additional and new teachers, respectively ?

(b) And whether they have been complied with ?

(c) If not, will Government be pleased to say as to whether no new teachers were granted during this period up to now to any of the villages mainly occupied by Brahmins, as well as by Brahmins and non-Brahmins ?

(d) Will Government be pleased to say whether the additional teacher given to the village of Masura as intimated in Government Memorandum No. 230-F (dated the 9th December 1921) has been again withdrawn ? If so, why ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Enquiries are being made.

(Presentation of Petitions.)

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI (Bombay City, South): Mr. President, on behalf of the proprietors of cinemas and theatres.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Are you going to present a petition ? Will you allow me to look at it ? I ought to take this opportunity to inform the Council, and through the Council the public in general, that petitions with reference to bills pending in this Council are frequently addressed to me. I have received a number of them. I have with the assent of the House on a previous occasion laid down the rule, and that has become in effect the Standing Order of this Council, that no petitions shall be taken notice of with reference to any matter before this Council unless such petition is presented by one of the honourable members of this Council, and it is the duty of the honourable member presenting any petition to see that it is in proper order, that is to say, that it contains no defamatory statement, no offensive language and nothing calculated to wound the feelings of any class or community. On the ground of this rule, I have had to lay aside all the petitions that have been received by me.

[Dr. K. E. Dadachanji]

I cannot make any exception. If any portion of the public will go on infringing the rule and addressing petitions to me, surely it is neither my right nor my duty to place them before the Council. Also, whenever any honourable member desires to present a petition, I hope he will allow me to see it previously in order that I may examine its contents and see whether it contains anything objectionable, so as to prevent my allowing it to be placed before the Council.

I ought also to say another thing. There are some bodies which seem to think that it is allowable to them to make improper reflections upon this Council in criticising its proceedings and submit their representations to this Council through Government. I hope Government will not countenance that. Any representations which are made to Government with reference to any matter pending before the Council, with a request express or implied, that they may be forwarded to or in some way brought to the notice of this Council shall be treated under, and with due regard to, the rule about petitions which I have laid down with the general assent of the Council. I hope Government will see to it that such representations are not forwarded to this Council or otherwise taken notice of. One such representation was forwarded to me, and I have declined to take any notice of it. What you cannot do directly you cannot be allowed to do indirectly through Government.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI: The petitioners pray that the rates proposed in the bill are far in excess of those mentioned in the Finance Act; that it is unjust and inequitable to levy rates on gross incomes, without any regard to the profit and loss of the theatres and cinemas; that the bill does not take notice of supplementary tickets and passes, and that the bill makes no provision for cases in which accommodation being found insufficient in a lower class the persons are allowed to sit in the higher class without charging the difference between the lower and higher classes. They pray that a committee should be appointed to go into this matter.

Petition ordered to be laid on the table.

RENT ACTS AMENDMENT BILL (BILL NO. XV OF 1922).

(Debate on the first reading resumed.)

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Mr. President, before we adjourned last evening, I was speaking on the point of the duration of the Rent Act, and I had said that we have to accommodate about a lakh and a half of people that were in excess of the last census figure, and therefore it was not necessary to lengthen the duration of the Rent Act for a longer period than two years, that is, 31st August 1924. To continue on the same point, I beg to say that those who have proposed a longer period have not taken into account the building activities that have been carried on in Bombay by different bodies, the most important of which is the Development Directorate. This House is very well aware that this Directorate has laid down a programme of building 50,000 single room tenements in a period of 8 years. According to that programme 60 chawls will be built by the 31st of March 1923; 65 more will be built by the end of 31st March 1924, and by the time the Rent Act is repealed on the 31st August 1924, 50 more chawls are likely to be completed. If we add these together, we get 175 chawls by the end of August 1924. Sir, each chawl will contain 80 rooms; so 175 chawls multiplied by 80 will bring into existence 14,000 rooms, and if you calculate 5 persons to a single tenement, by the end of 31st August we will have provided room for 70,000 men. Now, the second body that is working in this direction is the City Improvement Trust. We are told that within the next three years it is going to build 3,900 single room tenements. That means that by the operations of the Development Directorate and the City Improvement Trust, by the end of August 1924 nearly 90,000 people out of one and a half lakhs will be provided for. That is so far as the poorer people are concerned. The City Improvement Trust leases out its plots, and private owners build on them for the richer people. So, both the poor and the rich are provided for. Then, the third body that is at work is the Port Trust. It has a scheme in hand for its clerical staff drawing a monthly salary of Rs. 100 and less, known as the "Antop Hill Scheme" in which 1,700 garden cottages are going to be built, out of which nearly 500 are now ready. It was said yesterday that nothing was done for the poorer and lower middle classes. This is an example showing that something is being done for them. Then, the millowners are also working in this direction. 26 chawls are now either in existence or under construction and 18 more are expected to be undertaken in hand in the near future. Then Government have schemes of their own for the police people. Thus, many agencies are at work to relieve congestion and our Government, out of the Development Loan, is giving out loans to those bodies for the purpose of housing people. Thus, you will see that the problem of scarcity of houses is to remain only for a short time. That is the reason why the duration of the bill should not be longer than two years.

My honourable friend representing labour yesterday observed that the committee on the Rent Acts recommended an extension, but I notice that their recommendation is to extend the Act to the 31st March 1924, whereas the bill before us goes still further and extends its operation to the 31st August 1924.

The honourable member representing the commercial interests of Bombay (whom I do not see in his seat now) said that the report of the committee only stated an opinion when it said that the duration of the Act should be continued till the 31st of March 1924 and that it was ill-founded. But, Sir, the explanation which I have given by placing facts and figures before this House has shown to you that the opinion of the committee is not ill-founded. The honourable member said that the Rent Act has created a vicious circle. He has admitted that since the Rent Act came into operation people do not like to invest their money in buildings and yet he said he would vote for an extension of this Act for a longer period. Is that the way of getting out of the vicious circle? I submit, Sir, that that is not the proper way. He says that if you do away with the Act, at least 45 per cent. of the tenants will be driven out to-morrow. Nobody has said that the Acts should be repealed immediately but whether you repeal them to-morrow or after five years, the tenants who have ill-treated their landlords will have to leave the premises at the termination of the Rent Acts. For this reason I do not see any reason in extending the period of this measure to a longer period. On the contrary, if a remedy is to be suggested, I think that the only remedy by which we can get out of the difficulty is to accept the bill in its present form.

Sir, I now come to the point referring to the increase of percentages in which connection some of the honourable members have suggested graduated scales. The honourable member representing Bombay (South) and sitting to my right (Dr. Dadachanji) has given us certain percentages. He says that those who pay rent over Rs. 200 should have their rents increased 50 per cent. and those who pay Rs. 100 and under should have their rents increased 25 per cent. I say such a graduated scale is doubly illogical. It is illogical to the landlord as well as to the tenants.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA (Bombay City, North): I am afraid I have been misunderstood by my honourable friend.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: More shall be given to them that already possess much. He says give higher percentage to the richer landlord and lesser to the poorer. Therefore, it is illogical as regards landlords. It is well known that persons drawing higher salaries have obtained lesser percentage of increase than persons receiving smaller salaries. In the Government service servants drawing higher salaries have received an increase of 30 per cent. and those drawing smaller salaries have received 70 per cent. increase. Therefore to say that those persons who have obtained a lesser percentage of increase in salaries should be made to pay more increase in their rents, and those who have received more percentage of increase should be made to pay less increase in their rents is illogical as regards the tenants.

The second suggestion placed before us is that the increase should be based on the number of years, i.e., for the first year say five per cent., second year ten per cent. and the third year fifteen per cent. and so on. A scale based on annual increase will prove illusory because the Rent Acts will no more be necessary in the near future, and they will not fix the rents, but the law of demand and supply will do it when the single room tenements will come into existence. Therefore, a scale based on annual increases will not benefit the landlords.

Another thing that was said was that the Honourable Minister of Excise had in 1918 proposed a five per cent. annual increase. Even if we accept that scale, the increase in 1922 would—calculating from the year 1916—come to 30 per cent.

It was urged that the Honourable Mr. Pheroze Sethna had calculated the normal increase in rent in Bombay to be 2·7 per cent. I ask, Sir, can we say that we are living in normal times when the cost of living has increased nearly 70 per cent.? I submit, not.

What is the picture that is placed before us by the report? In the dissenting minute attached to the report of the Rent Acts Committee it is stated that in Bombay there are no less than 7,500 land-owners who get no more than Rs. 300 as rent per year. Sir, I wish to impress upon the honourable members the fact that 7,500 out of 16,000 land-owners in Bombay get Rs. 25 per month as rent. Out of this big (!) income of Rs. 25 a month they have to maintain themselves, they have to pay taxes and they have to incur expenses for repairs and they have to pay court charges when their tenants become unreasonable. I ask, Sir, is it fair that these 7,500 small land-owners should remain content with only 10 per cent. increase and that no more should be given to them? Who live in these houses owned by poor house-owners? It is the wage-earners that live in these houses, such as the millhands, and dock-labourers. Now, what is the percentage of the increase that these millhands and other wage-earners have obtained? They have demanded, at the point of bayonet and obtained one hundred per cent. increase. The dock-labourers have obtained an increase of something like two hundred per cent. and yet when the question of increase to these small house-owners comes some of my honourable friends here say that the small landlord should not be given any increase. Is it fair to say that and maintain it? I submit it is not.

Then, look at this question from the other point of view. The committee has worked out figures and it has stated that in 1916 the landlords got a return of 5·26 and if you give them 33 per cent. increase they will get only 6 per cent. return on their investment. Taking into account the high rate of interest that is given on Government securities and that is given by the banks, is it fair to say that the house-owners of these tenements should only get 5 per cent. on their investments and no more ?

The dissenting minute attached to the report of the Rent Acts Committee has mentioned that the landlords ask 66 per cent. increase but the bill proposes to give only 33 per cent. increase, and I consider that to be a very reasonable one.

Then, some point was made about the slump in trade. Well, Sir, if there is slump it is not the landlords who are responsible for it and after all it will be temporary and will pass away in a short time. Prices are going down and the increases already received by the tenants are not withdrawn ; therefore it will not be an unbearable hardship to them if the rent is increased by 33⅓ per cent. Sir, in a critical time the landlords have willingly accepted 10 per cent. increase when the cost of living was nearly doubled. Now the prices are going down, and so is it not the duty of the tenants to come to the rescue of these landlords and make them some amends ? The committee has said that landlords do deserve an increase and therefore no more need be said on that point.

Then, the other point is about sub-letting and I am glad that provision is made for it in the bill. Tenants use their own tactics. In a small room of ten by ten a man lives with his wife and a child. Then his brother comes with his wife and lives with him. If the landlord objects, he says " Oh, he is my brother. " Then his sister comes and thus the number of occupants goes on increasing. Now since the Rent Act has come into operation the landlord cannot eject the tenant though he creates overcrowding in the room. There is a clause in the Bombay Municipal Act whereby overcrowding in premises is prohibited but that clause is at present suspended. Municipal officers do not seem to take any action under it. So that clause of the Municipal Act also does not give any help to the landlord and the landlord is at the mercy of the tenant.

Then I would just like to make one more suggestion and that is this, that at present the tenants have been given protection so long as they pay rent. But some of the tenants are so very bad that they go on injuring the premises. Therefore my suggestion is that if a landlord proves that the tenant is guilty of destructive waste he should not be protected by the Rent Act.

Lastly the extension of the Act for two years coupled with an increase of 33 per cent. will satisfy the landlords to some extent. I think that the bill is an equitable compromise between the suffering landlord and the oppressive tenant and I heartily support its first reading and hope that this House will pass it.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City) : Sir, I only wanted to speak on one matter in which I am interested. The Honourable the General Member in his opening speech admitted the propriety of the select committee considering whether such charity houses as are let to poor people ought or ought not to be exempted from the operation of this Act. I want to submit that the same consideration will apply to the cases of houses built by co-operative housing societies and which are let out on certain conditions arrived at under a given set of circumstances ; but circumstances having changed, the houses have cost more, and unless and until the societies are allowed to charge higher rents they will not be able to return the loans with interest. Conditions which would prevail with a Council like this in restricting rents do not apply in the case of co-operative housing societies, and I think that when the select committee meet they will also consider whether it is not proper to exempt co-operative housing societies from the operation of this Act.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Sir, I wish to say a few words because the figures that I quoted in 1918 have been quoted again to-day, and it appears to me that there remains a certain amount of misapprehension as to what was the normal yearly rise of rents in Bombay in the fifteen years previous to 1916-17 as calculated by me and as calculated by the Honourable Mr. Sethna. I had the honour, Sir, of representing the municipal corporation on the old Council and I put before the Council the views that the Bombay municipality had arrived at after a close study of the figures which I placed before them. I will quote briefly those figures as I stated them in 1918, and I maintain, Sir, that my conclusions were correct and continue to be correct to-day. I made the calculation in the following manner. The gross valuation in 1902-1903 in Bombay city was Rs. 3,18,00,000. In 1916-17, that is, 15 years afterwards, it was Rs. 6,54,00,000, a rise of 105 per cent. That gave an average rise of 7 per cent. Out of that, two deductions had got to be made. One deduction on account of the increase in the total number of buildings in the city of Bombay, and another deduction on account of the increased accommodation that was provided by the new buildings that were put up on the estates of the Improvement Trust. In that year (1902-1903) the number of buildings in Bombay was 35,170 and in the year 1916-1917 it was 40,864, that is to say, a total increase of about 5,000 buildings. That means a percentage of 14. I further allowed a similar percentage—my assumption might be rather liberal—for enlargements to existing buildings. I took that as another 14 and allowed 28 per cent. in all for the rise due to the increase in the number of buildings and enlargements. I deducted that 28 per cent. from the 7 per cent. which had been the normal rise in the city of Bombay, and I arrived at the net figure of 5 per cent.

The difference between my calculation and that of the Honourable Mr. Sethna was this, that while the Honourable Mr. Sethna took the number of buildings in 1902-03 at a certain figure, he did not allow in 1916-17 for buildings that were destroyed under the operations of the Improvement Trust. Those destroyed buildings amounted to 8,172, and that naturally made a difference between 2·72 which he quoted and 5 per cent. which was the figure that I arrived at.

I now, Sir, would like to refer to some matters of considerable importance that have arisen in this debate. Incidentally I may say that I am entirely at one with the remarks made by the honourable member from Surat with regard to co-operative housing societies. I consider their case deserves special attention and I hope that it will receive special treatment at the hands of the select committee. Sir, another member from Bombay, representing the European community, who initiated the debate yesterday, mentioned to the Council that his analysis of the trouble in Bombay city was that it was due to the fact that there was no land available, or that such land that was available was very expensive. He also mentioned that the Improvement Trust were so grabbing in their tendencies that they refused a reasonable offer for a portion of their Worli estate. I do not wish to traverse the same ground in reply as was taken by my honourable friend from Bombay City, South, but it is necessary, Sir, that I should mention the exact facts of the case and the reasons why the

[Mr. C. V. Mehta]

Improvement Trust have been compelled to act in the manner in which they have done. I do so, Sir, with some knowledge of the facts, because the question was decided while I was a member of the Trust. It is perfectly true that the European Association offered a sum of Rs. 30 per square yard for a plot on the Worli estate. It is also true that it was very much less than the amount which could be obtained in the open market, considerably over a 100 per cent. less, for the particular plot. The difficulty arises in this way. If the Improvement Trust were to hand over their developed estate at cost price or at a reasonable profit, it is impossible to determine to whom this land should be sold. Suppose after development the land costs Rs. 40 a square yard and suppose the Improvement Trust were to charge only 10 per cent. profit and were willing to sell it at that rate, who is to get the benefit of the land which cost the Trust Rs. 40, if the market rate is say Rs. 75 ? Should private persons benefit ? Or is it necessary that such profit as does accrue should come back to the State through the channel of the Improvement Trust ? It is on account of that difficulty, Sir, that it is impossible to sell any plot of land except by auction and except by calling for tenders. But in the case of co-operative housing societies, where there is a limitation imposed that the rate of return to the members of those societies shall be limited to a certain reasonable percentage, namely 6 per cent., and where the members of those societies are only such as draw a small amount of salary or have a limited income, it is perfectly justifiable to give the land at below the market rate, and that has been done by the Improvement Trust in many cases to Parsi co-operative associations, Hindu co-operative associations and various other associations. The only trouble, and to my mind the great pity, is, Sir, that it is impossible to force the pace of the creation of these associations, and although the Co-operative Department is anxious to give all possible assistance and is willing also to give loans for the formation of such associations, they do not come into existence at the same rapid rate as we should like. There remains, however, the question of the quantity of new building sites and its effect on the price of all land, and I think the criticisms of the honourable member from Bombay were perfectly correct. I think if the Improvement Trust were to make a profit on the Worli estate, they ought to place on the market other estates where they do not make as much profit, and I mention this point advisedly for this reason that in the year 1920, about the end of 1920, two very large schemes for Bombay city were projected by the Improvement Trust in addition to the Worli scheme. One was the Dharavi scheme and the other was the Sewri-Wadala scheme, and I am sorry to say that the Dharavi scheme has been postponed. Although it has not been actually abandoned, it has been postponed, apparently because it does not show as good a result as the Worli scheme. I do not think that that ought to be the attitude of a public body, and I think the only way by which you will make an impression in reducing the cost of land in Bombay is by making as much land available for building as possible, and I trust that both the schemes will be pushed forward by the Improvement Trust and that all that land will be placed on the market, by which means they will bring down the price of the land. It is happening, I understand, with regard to the Dadar Matunga scheme of the Improvement Trust and so much has the price of the land been affected that I understand that plots of land which had been taken by the public at comparatively cheap rates have now been thrown up. If you want to deal with the housing problem in the city of Bombay satisfactorily, you have got to look at it from a much broader standpoint than by purely relying on the ephemeral effects of the Rent

[Mr. C. V. Mehta]

Act. The honourable member from Bombay City, North, stated that in his opinion in a very short time the question of housing in the city of Bombay would be solved. I am afraid, Sir, it is too optimistic a view to take and I do not see any likelihood of the question being solved in a short time. In 1919 the Municipal Commissioner made a calculation by which, in his opinion, no less than 64,000 tenements were required if the minimum housing accommodation in Bombay city were to be provided for. We are nowhere near the 64,000 tenements. And what is more, these tenements are purely single room tenements, and I do not think the House will give its approbation to the housing of our citizens in a great city like Bombay in single room tenements only. Eighty per cent. are single room tenements, they are most insanitary, and unsatisfactory. I look forward to the day, not in the very distant future, when single room tenements will be a thing of the past and at least two rooms will be provided for families to live in. If we are to place this ideal before us, then the housing problem appears to be more and more distant of solution. The point really is that, unless you make land cheap—and I have mentioned the way in which it is possible to do so—unless you bring down the cost of construction to which the Development Department is paying its attention, give more facilities for bringing in quantities of building materials, and unless you see that no unnecessary obstacles are placed in the way of construction, you will not be taking a reasonable step forward in this very difficult problem. The idea that if the new buildings are exempted from the operation of this Act, it is enough encouragement for construction of new buildings, I am afraid, is wrong. I will only point out this ; if in a locality there are old houses to which the Rent Act applies, and which pay rents on the basis of 1916 with whatever percentage of increase the Council may allow, so long as in the surrounding houses of that neighbourhood, the return on house property is low, and rent is low, how do you expect people to pay much higher rent for new buildings in that locality ? It is not enough inducement for construction of new buildings. I am sorry I have not got the figures of the new buildings constructed during the last three or four years. The rate of construction of new buildings is very much less than before. If that is so, we are getting farther and farther away from a solution of the problem. When Government paper was 3½ to 4 per cent., the return on house property was 5 to 5½ per cent. according to the report of the Rent Committee. The impression that landed property in Bombay is a bed of roses is entirely wrong. The owner of landed property in Bombay has to undergo a great deal of hardship and harrassment. If one were to make a choice between landed property and Government Paper with a clean return, he will unhesitatingly choose 6 or 6½ per cent. Government Paper free of income tax. These are economic factors which have to be taken into consideration, even while you settle the effect of Rent Acts. The honourable member for the European constituency in Bombay City deserves commendation for the fact that he has tried to look at it from a broad standpoint.

I will only add, Sir, lastly, for fear I may be misunderstood that the amendment I moved in 1918 which, however, failed to obtain acceptance, desired a yearly increase of 5 per cent. with a maximum of 25 per cent.

Major C. FERNANDES (Bombay City, South): Sir, I rise to support the first reading of the bill. There has been much agitation in Bombay ever since the bill was published. The popular view is that the Rent Acts should not be changed, but should be continued as they are for five years more at least. The subject was also discussed at a meeting of the municipal corporation of Bombay when strong comments were made on either side. One prominent member went the length of saying that the officials favoured this course as they were also tenants. Now this was a very uncharitable remark to make. The purpose of the Rent Acts and the present bill was and is, as the Honourable mover of the bill said, to meet an exceptional state of circumstances created by the war, and to prevent landlords from taking undue advantage of the scarcity of the housing accommodation. The unassailable point made by the majority was that we ought to look to the greatest good of the greatest number. But for the fact that this principle hits the landlords in the present instance, most of the landowners themselves would give their allegiance to it. In supporting the Rent Acts, the officials were only supporting a principle that we all value so very much, namely, the greatest good of the greatest number. As a landowner myself I am interested in all matters affecting the interests of the landowners, but that circumstance does not prevent me from taking the view that the tenants, in the present circumstances, require some relief. But the only question is to what extent the demand of the tenants could be conceded. As I have already said, the demand has come from influential quarters that the Rent Acts should be continued without any change for 5 years more. I dare say many honourable members here are prepared to support this demand on the principle to which I have just referred. But the honourable mover of the bill and some of the speakers who followed him have clearly shown that the landlords also have got a case. They have shown also that the majority of the landlords don't belong to the superwealthy but rather to the middle and poorer classes which include a good number of widows who are wholly dependent for their maintenance on the income derived from their properties. Appreciation of properties which ought to follow in the wake of increasing demand, has been barred by restricting the return by the Rent Acts, whereas no such restrictions have been placed on producers of and dealers in other commodities, joint stock companies and the like. Prices of building material and labour have gone up considerably. The only class on whose income restrictions have been put are the landlords. Owing to those restrictions the poorer class of landlords find themselves unable to meet the enhanced cost of living whereas the position of the wage-earning tenants has imp oved by the increment in their wages. Any unjust treatment of the landlords to favour the tenants will discourage capital being invested in landed property, which in the end must tell against the good of the tenant class. The Honourable Member in charge has told us, and I entirely endorse his view, that rents of office accommodation at present are quite reasonable owing to supply and demand being more or less equally balanced, and therefore the landlords of this class of accommodation are entitled to a free market.

Then the next class of property he referred to was the premises occupied by traders having their commodities in shops and small business premises. Considering the large profits this class of tenants make, I agree with him in thinking that this class also requires no measure of protection under the Rent Act. The accommodation intended for the wealthier classes also is at present ample. At any rate it is not less than what is required for that class, and the withdrawal of the restrictions in their case would not affect them adversely, and any increase that they might have to pay would be negligible, and could be easily borne by them. Now, the real class of tenants who need relief under the Rent Acts and the provisions made in the present bill are the classes comprised in the last class named by the Honourable Member in charge, namely, the poorer and the middle classes. These are the classes in which the largest increases in population recorded in Bombay have taken place and the accommodation so far available to them is woefully inadequate, and so it is very important that this class should be protected in some manner or other against any excessive increase in the rents they might have to pay. This is a class for whom all of us have our greatest sympathy and this is the class also in whose interests much of the agitation both in the press and on the platform has been carried on. The question now is how best we could meet the problem with regard to this particular class. Of course, whatever protection we might give to this class could only be of a palliative nature. The only real remedy against the evil is to provide more accommodation for them and to improve transport facilities. It is only then that we could hope to give permanent relief to this class. Until then, whatever we do would be only, as I said, of a palliative nature, and the special protection that we have given to this class of tenants so long might have to be continued indefinitely. This is of course a matter for the select committee to consider, and I have no doubt that an equitable settlement will be arrived at as both interests will be represented in the select committee. And the only appeal I wish to address to them is that they should approach the question dispassionately and in an impartial spirit and in a spirit of compromise.

Then, Sir, with regard to the question of sub-letting, enough has been said : so it is not my intention to trouble the Council with further remarks on that subject. I wish however to say one thing, and that is that a great deal of the abuses that have been referred to by some of the previous speakers is due to the power the tenants possess to sub-let. Premises that were never intended for a particular kind of use have been put to such use with considerable damage to property and great loss to the landlords, and tenants have been allowed to make large profits by sub-letting the premises. I think the sooner we put an end to this evil the better for all concerned.

There is one more consideration I wish to place before the house and that is on behalf of a certain class of landlords, namely, those who purchased or built and let premises after the first day of January 1916. The conditions that prevailed in 1916 and 1917 in no way differed from those that prevailed in the years immediately preceding, especially 1915 and 1914. There was great depreciation of trade owing to the stress of war being felt most in those two years, and there was a great exodus from the city owing to this cause as also to the scare caused by the German battleship "Emden." So instead of the tenants being charged more rents in those years, in some instances the rents charged were less, because many premises had remained vacant, and for a long time. The Rent Acts fixed the 1st of January 1916 as the date after which no houses built or let could get the benefit of the 10 per cent. increase. I feel, Sir, that for the reasons I have mentioned the houses that were built and let after the 1st day of January 1916 ought to be placed in the same category as those that were built or let before 1st of January 1916. The real increase of rents took place about the beginning of 1918, owing to the large profits that people then began to make, and also to a number of joint stock companies and other business concerns having been floated at that time. I would therefore ask the members of the select committee to give this matter their serious consideration and see if they could not put these buildings on the same footing as those that were let before the 1st of January 1916. The landlords of these premises have not been in my opinion treated fairly inasmuch as they have been deprived of the 10 per cent. increase on the rents, and I think it is unfair that they should be allowed to continue under the same condition.

There is one more point about which I wish to make a few remarks before I resume my seat, and that is the question of expediting the disposal of the suits of tenants or landlords regarding rents. At present there is considerable delay involved in the disposal of these suits, and I think it would be a great advantage if the Rent Controller is invested with larger powers to deal with these cases, so as to avoid unnecessary delay and expense. As suggested by the committee appointed to enquire into the working of the Rent Acts, I think the Rent Controller ought to be a lawyer of great experience and ability. Under the present Act, the tenants are provided with the remedy to get a refund of any excess of rent that might have been charged by the landlord. But unfortunately the landlord does not possess any remedy against profiteering by tenants at his expense. I think some provision must be made in the new bill that is before us with regard to this anomaly. There is also another class of landlords in the case of whose building an old tenant leaves a tenement and a new tenant comes into his place. In such a case, I think there ought to be provision made as regards the landlord whether the property has been newly built or sometime before the old tenant left. There is no differentiation made in a case where the tenant leaves of his own accord and the premises become vacant and a new tenant comes in. I think it is only fair to those landlords to have that made clear in the bill.

Before I conclude, I have only to say that the case of the poorer class of tenants ought to receive the greatest consideration at the hands of the members of the select committee. With these words, Sir, I beg to support the first reading of the bill.

Khan Saheb HAJI HAZRATH KHAN MOHIDINKHAN (Poona and Sholapur Cities) (Addressed the House in Urdu): Sir, the suggestion that small landlords should get only 5 to 10 per cent. increase when others who have invested their money in other businesses have been making 25 to 50 and even more per cent. profit on their money, does not at all seem to me fair. How do you expect such small landlords, some of them Mahomedan widows depending chiefly upon the rents, to eke out their living and meet other necessities of life ? I therefore think that the Rent Acts should not be extended after they expire in 1923.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Mr. President, many speakers have said.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The word "speaker" has a technical meaning, therefore when referring to honourable members who have preceded a member, that member should in referring to them say "honourable members who have already spoken".

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Some of the honourable members who have already spoken have described the pitiable condition of poor landlords and I need not say anything further on that question. I have simply to say that I find that everybody has urged the passing of this bill which will give them a rise of 33⅓ per cent. I see that landlords have already got a rise of ten per cent. over the rents of 1916. This scheme is based upon the report of the Rent Committee which was made according to the conditions prevalent a year ago. Many changes have taken place since it was written a year ago and the prices are going down, and therefore I think that a rise of 33⅓ per cent. is not necessary according to the present-day conditions. There ought to be some rise I cannot deny, but to claim such a large rise for the landlords will surely be a tyranny upon the poor tenants whose number is very large. The honourable Maratha member for Bombay City (North) said that overcrowding was being practised on account of the permission to sublet and that that was the great grievance, according to him, of the landlords. But I must say that this overcrowding was not indulged in by the poor tenants to inconvenience the landlords, but it was made quite necessary because the rentals were so high that one tenant could not out of his own income pay those rents and he had to take in a partner simply to lessen the burden of the rent he had to pay. So, if according to the scheme now the higher percentage of increase in the rental be allowed, it will, I am afraid, lead to more overcrowding because the poor tenants will not be able to pay the rental plus the rise that will be allowed and therefore this will perforce lead to more overcrowding and more misery. This Council ought to take this into consideration and the select committee should, I think, take into consideration the conditions of the poor tenants and see that they are not improperly harassed. With these words I beg to accord my support to the first reading of this bill.

Mr. D. B. DALAL (Panch Mahals District): Mr. President, I think I need not speak on the various points which have already been touched upon by the honourable members who have previously had their say. I feel sure that the House will go with me when I say that this Act should not be repealed at this stage when there is acute shortage of houses specially in Bombay and I further say that the same conditions will prevail at least for five years or more specially when the Improvement Trust is profiteering as stated by the honourable member from Bombay and when destructive works are being carried out by the Development Department. A legislation of this sort is quite essential to protect poor tenants from the profiteering of landlords by demanding exorbitant rents. At the same time, Sir, I quite realise the fact that charitable institutions are suffering on account of this present Act. At the same time also, tenants are taking undue advantage and derive profits through sub-tenants, but this defect and others as pointed out by the honourable member could be easily remedied by the select committee. So I think that the House will be well advised to send this bill, by passing the first reading, to the select committee whose work will be to do justice both to the landlords and to the tenants by examining the different remarks and suggestions made by honourable members of this House.

Mr. B. P. PATEL (Ahmedabad District): Mr. President, I rise to support the first reading of this bill. In my humble opinion the poor and homeless creatures thronging to the second city of the Empire must be enabled to secure a roof over their heads before they are able to do anything as citizens. The period of this Act should be at least five years, i.e., until the Development Department is able to provide more houses for the lower middle classes such as mehtas, clerks, and so on. With these few words, I support the first reading of the bill before the House.

Mr. F. NELSON (Bombay Chamber of Commerce): Mr. President, I move the closure.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I accept the closure.

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: Mr. President, we have had a lengthy debate on the motion for the first reading of this bill and while

[Sir Chimanlal Setalvad]

I wish time had been economised in the manner it could have been, I still welcome the various suggestions that have been made in the many speeches that we have heard on this motion. I may assure the House that the suggestions made by many honourable members who have spoken will certainly be very helpful to the select committee when they proceed to consider the bill. I do not propose to take any length of time in my reply, as we have a very heavy agenda before us and it is very essential for every one of us to make an effort to economise time as much as possible. I would, however, refer to one or two matters of prejudice that were introduced by some of the members who have spoken. My honourable friend, the nominated member from Bombay, representing the mercantile interests, gave currency to a rumour—all the time professing that he did not believe in it as he said, still he chose to give currency to that rumour—that Government were bringing in this bill because they were becoming large landlords themselves and that, therefore, they were bringing in this bill in the form in which it was presented to this Council. Now I assure the House that Government had no such sinister object in bringing in this bill at all. The honourable member possibly did not know that so far as Government are concerned—assuming that they at all contemplate becoming landlords in the sense of owning premises to be let out to tenants, which they have no intention of doing—the Rent Act does not bind Government. It has been ruled by the High Court that the Crown not having been mentioned in the Act is not affected by the Act. Therefore, no selfish motive can be attributed to Government in bringing in this bill. Further, the fact really is that the Government are more largely tenants in many places than landlords and they themselves have, as honourable members will remember, been obliged to pay very heavy rents in various places for their office accommodation. Therefore, any insinuations made against Government that they have any interest in common with house-owners are without any foundation.

I will not, Sir, notice the personal references made by the honourable member representing the Mahomedan community of Bombay, personal references to me as regards my deeds or, according to him, misdeeds in another capacity. I can only say that those remarks were entirely uncalled for and unjustifiable. If the honourable member had really cared to study the real facts about the matter, he would have seen his mistake, and I will not take any further notice of remarks of that character, which I submit ought never to have been made in this House by any honourable member.

Then, Sir, the honourable nominated member representing the commercial interests of Bombay—I am sorry he is not here to-day to listen to my remarks—I confess I have not been able to follow him in his reasoning. I am not able to gather yet what his view is with regard to this bill. He started by saying, if I followed him correctly, that the Rent Act of 1918 ought never to have been passed. He described to us what bitterness the Rent Acts had created between landlords and tenants, and still having said that, he seemed to indicate that nothing further should be done in the way of amending the Acts at all. So that, his position was this that, though he was of the view that some of the provisions of the original Acts had resulted in bitterness between the landlords and tenants, we should perpetuate that state of things and not make any attempt to remove the causes of that bitterness. That is what this bill attempts to a certain extent to do and still the honourable member would have none of it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I rather gathered that his argument was—I have nothing to do with the merits—I mean fairly representing him—I rather gathered that as this bill was to expire soon it was not necessary to repeat legislation of this sort or something like that. I may be wrong, but that is what I thought.

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: I do not think, Sir, that can be an accurate representation of what he said, because in that case I should have expected him to say that we should not do anything at all; but he went on to argue that the landlords had really no cause for complaint, that they were getting the ordinary return that they ought to have. I may be quite wrong, because his remarks, as also any conclusion that he might have meant to indicate, were so difficult to comprehend.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I merely said that that was my impression. You are perfectly entitled to put that construction upon his speech as a whole. I interrupted you merely because it is my duty to see that any honourable member's speech is fairly represented.

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: I won't attempt any further to criticise the remarks of the honourable member because my complaint about him is that I was not able at the end of his speech to gather any constructive suggestion from his remarks at all.

Then, Sir, I would say a word with regard to what the honourable member representing the European community in Bombay said about the real bearings of the housing problem in Bombay. I quite agree with him, Sir, that all these measures like the Rent Act are merely temporary measures and that the real remedy is no doubt to provide necessary house accommodation in Bombay to keep pace with the demand. As has been said by one or two honourable members, every effort is being made in that direction by Government and the Improvement Trust and other bodies that are co-operating in that direction. I will refer, Sir, to one observation of that honourable member, to which I think a reply has to some extent been given already by the Honourable Minister for Forests and Excise, namely, the complaint against the Improvement Trust. He said that the Improvement Trust were profiteering and were giving to the public lands not at reasonable and cheap rates but at very exorbitant prices. Now, Sir, it is very easy to lay a charge of that kind against the Improvement Trust. If the honourable House will analyse what it means, they will see that if the Trust were not to do what is called profiteering and were to give lands at say cost price or a little bit over cost price, so long as the market value of land is much higher than the cost price, the result will be that the man who takes that land would profiteer. The man who takes the land for Rs. 30 or Rs. 40 per square yard from the Improvement Trust can straight go and sell it at a higher price, so that the intermediate person will profiteer. But if there is to be any profiteering in that manner, surely it is much better that the general community should benefit by the rise in value and not the private individual. The real remedy, therefore, is not to ask the Improvement Trust or bodies like that to produce land and give it at cost price or at a little over the cost price; the real remedy is to produce such large quantities of lands available for building houses and so flood the market with those lands that the market value will come down to a reasonable figure. Then alone it will be possible to produce more houses at reasonable rents in Bombay. Now, that is what the Development Department have undertaken to do and they are pushing their operations with as much speed as is, in the circumstances, possible, and when those operations fructify and when you have lands put in the market in such large quantities that the prices must come down to a reasonable figure, then alone the problem of housing in Bombay will be solved. In the meantime, Sir, Government have and the Council have to adjust matters by legislation in such a manner as to work equitably and justly to all the interests that are affected by such legislation, and the present bill is an attempt, Sir, to reach that result. As I said in moving the first reading it is possible that on various matters arising on this bill, there will be differences of opinion and the task of the select committee will be, as far as possible, to adjust those differences of opinion and arrive at a workable arrangement which will serve the original object of the Act and also remedy the defects found in the working of the Act and arrive at an equitable result as between the house-owners and the tenants and the other classes affected.

Bill read a first time. Question put and agreed to.

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: I now beg to move, Sir, that a select committee consisting of twenty members, with a quorum of five, be appointed to consider this bill and report within a month.

Question put and agreed to.

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: I now beg to move that the select committee do consist of the following members:—

Mr. Purshotamdas Thakurdas, Dr. K. E. Dadachanji, Mr. G. B. Trivedi, Dr. S. S. Batliwala, Mr. D. J. Ferreira, Mr. Kanji Dwarkadas, Mr. A. N. Surve, Mr. S. K. Bole, Mr. Ibrahim S. Haji, Mr. M. A. Havelivala, Mr. J. Addyman, Mr. G. H. Kassim, Mr. Dipchand T. Ojha, Mr. C. M. Gandhi, Rao Saheb Harilal D. Desai, Mr. G. Findlay Shirras, Dewan Bahadur K. R. Godbole, Mr. J. C. Ker, Mr. J. B. Kanga and the mover.

Bill referred to a select committee. Question put and agreed to.

After recess.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order.

A BILL TO PROVIDE FOR COMPULSORY ELEMENTARY EDUCATION AND TO MAKE BETTER PROVISION FOR THE MANAGEMENT AND CONTROL OF PRIMARY EDUCATION IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY (BILL No. XVII OF 1922).

First reading. The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Mr. President, I have great pleasure in moving the first reading of Bill No. XVII of 1922 (A bill to provide for compulsory elementary education and to make better provision for the management and control of primary education in the Bombay Presidency).

Mr. President, I claim that the bill I have the honour to introduce before the House is of a very important nature. The cry for the extension of education is not new. Public men of this country have long recognised the need for a wide extension of education. Over ten years ago, Mr. Gokhale introduced a bill in the Imperial Legislative Council to give an option to local bodies to introduce compulsion in their areas if they chose. At that time, the bill was not passed; the opinion of several local Governments was against it, and it was thought that it was too far in advance of the times. But in spite of the slowness with which it is supposed to move, our country has moved comparatively faster in this direction. This Presidency has had the unique honour of having a bill of this nature passed about four years ago, and the measure was known as a bill to introduce compulsory education in the Presidency, and shortly known as Patel Act. That Act was passed four years ago. But unfortunately not enough advantage has been taken of that Act, mainly because the Act was merely of a permissive nature. But it has marked a beginning, and the Bombay Presidency has had the honour of imitation in many other provinces in this country, and several other provinces have now a measure of this nature on their statute books. If the Council will pass this bill, we shall continue to keep up the reputation of this Presidency as one that shows the way to other provinces, because this bill proposes to take a further step, an important further step in the same direction. As you will remember, the Patel Act and similar measures in other presidencies allowed compulsory education to be introduced only in municipalities and that too only if a municipality wanted to do so. Secondly, there being no compulsion so far as local bodies are concerned, advantage was not taken of this Act, except by a very few municipalities. At present there are only five or six municipalities that have introduced compulsion in their areas. The first of these is Bandra in Salsette which introduced compulsion both for boys and girls, and next was Surat. I need not refer to the imbroglio in which education in Surat has been for the last year or two. Other municipalities like Satara and Dhulia (which has recently been allowed) have introduced compulsion. This practically exhausts the whole list. There is one other municipality, Dakore in Kaira district, which asked for permission to introduce compulsion, but which only last month or so applied for the withdrawal of this compulsion, because it could not afford it; and the Government had to reluctantly allow it to withdraw. This then has been the actual effect of the Patel Act, which was passed only four years ago; so that, although the principle has been accepted, the working of the principle has not been carried on to any considerable extent. But in the meanwhile, and particularly on account of the wide awakening, on account of the war and the constitutional reforms, the cry for compulsory education, which was ten years ago practically confined to the leaders, has now begun to come from the classes immediately affected by it. It is particularly pleasing to find that in the Marathi and Kanarese speaking parts of this Presidency especially, the demand for compulsory education has been very strong indeed. They very rightly realise that their progress is bound up with education and that they cannot rise in the social scale, and that they cannot hope to improve their economic condition, without a wide diffusion of education among those classes. I say the demand is quite reasonable and that it has made the path of Government comparatively easy. The Government have to meet this very reasonable demand from the classes specially affected, and they feel that it is necessary to go forward in that direction. As His Excellency remarked in the opening speech he made to this Council, it is really a very daring step to take in the present position of the finance of this Presidency. Still, I feel that the step has got to be taken in spite of any sacrifice that we may have to make; and it is, therefore, that I have ventured with the full concurrence of His Excellency's Government to bring forward this measure for the consideration of this Council. The question is a very large and complicated one, and I do not think that the Council will blame me, if I have taken a year and nine months, after assuming office, before I am able to introduce a measure of this character. A large amount of study of various details had got to be made. Conditions, not only in one town or in one district, had to be investigated, but conditions all over the Presidency, and especially of a Presidency like ours in which different parts vary enormously from each other. What might apply to a district in Deccan or in Konkan might not apply to a district in Gujarat, and much less to a district in Sind. All these things had got to be investigated, and proposals had to be formulated, which would apply fairly to all parts of the Presidency. Consequently, early after the constitution of this Council, I appointed a committee of the members of this Council to go into the question in detail and report upon it. I have had the very inestimable privilege of seeing you, Sir, accepting the position of the chairman of that committee. (Cheers.) The Committee went thoroughly into the difficult question and have submitted a very valuable report on which, I am sure, any future schemes of expansion of primary education not only in this Presidency, but to a great extent in other presidencies also, will depend. That report will be taken as a basis of proposals for this purpose in all parts of the country, and I think the members of this Council will agree with me when I say that their consideration of this question has been greatly facilitated by the very lucid report that the committee has placed before them. The bill that I have the honour to move before this Council seeks to give effect, so far as legislation is required, to the recommendations of that committee. The committee in fact has gone into all the details about this question, legislative and administrative. In this Council we have only to consider that part of their report which has reference to legislation and in the bill I have tried to incorporate those of their recommendations as far as it seemed proper to me to accept those recommendations, and the bill gives the framework in which all the details can be fitted up.

The main points in this bill are two: one is to make provision for the introduction of compulsory education, and the second, to a certain extent subsidiary, but also of a very important nature, is to make certain changes in the administrative machinery of education in this Presidency. The second part would not have been necessary unless we had decided to accept the first part. Sir, the most important part of this bill is to go ahead with the introduction of compulsion in all parts of this Presidency. As I have already mentioned, the Patel Act only gave permission to municipalities to introduce compulsion in their areas if they liked. I have already told you what the effect of the Patel Act has been. We find that the effect has been very small indeed. Although the principle has been once for all accepted, we feel that it is not possible now simply to depend upon optional compulsion, so to say, and to confine it only to municipal areas. The present bill has reference not only to municipal areas, but also to all local board areas, and therefore covers the whole of the Presidency except the city of Bombay. The city of Bombay, so far as education is concerned, is covered by another Act altogether, and therefore has been left out of the purview of this bill. But barring the city of Bombay this bill has reference to the whole of the Presidency, the people residing not only in municipal areas but in local board areas. Then, again, we do not leave to the municipalities the option to introduce compulsion or not. While in section 8 we leave to local bodies the option of making the first move, the option of making a scheme for themselves and asking Government to sanction it, we have not stopped at that: though in fact we believe that for a short time at any rate that part of the section will remain practically only a devout hope, what we intend is that according to the second part of that section Government will call upon any local body to make a scheme of compulsory education; and if that body does not make that scheme Government will appoint its own officers to make a scheme and ask the local body to carry it out. The local body may still perhaps be recalcitrant. Government will not stop there: Government will appoint an officer of its own to carry that scheme through even if the local body does not want it, and we will compel the local body to contribute its quota to the expenses of the scheme. You will find therefore that according to the clauses of this bill, it is not left to the local body to introduce compulsion, although we devoutly hope that many local bodies will come forward of their own accord to do so. But we feel that the introduction of compulsory education is so vitally important to the progress of the people of this Presidency that Government must have power to take the initiative themselves and compel the local bodies to go ahead in this direction. Thus section 8 gives power to Government to ask local bodies to introduce compulsion and to make a scheme. The clause relating to default, clause 24, will prove to you that Government is in deadly earnest in this matter of introducing compulsory education. In the former bill, the Patel Bill, because it was a very new measure and not tried before in this Presidency, there were certain conditions laid down as to how a scheme should be made and how a scheme should be passed, and we in fact under that bill required that, when a scheme is to be made, it should be passed by the local body with a two-thirds majority of the members voting and an absolute majority of the total number of members of the local body. All these conditions have been given up. A local body by a simple majority can now come forward and say that they want to introduce compulsion and that they want a scheme to be sanctioned. Honourable members will find therefore that if the machinery of this bill is acted upon properly then no further legislation, at any rate so far as this principle of compulsion is concerned, would be necessary. The Patel Act has been followed in certain of its clauses. So far as the details of a scheme and certain other provisions are concerned, the legislation was already there and we have followed several of the sections almost word by word. Thus for instance, when we ask for the making of a scheme we want various details. I may just mention a few of these details. First of all we must know the number of children in a local area, or in the part of a local area that have to be brought under any scheme. Now, I might mention a few points in which this bill differs from the report. One point is the question of the age limit. The report recommends that the age limit for compulsion should be 5 to 10: in the bill you will find that the age limit is 6 to 11 according to the Patel Act. However, on these and various other details that I shall explain to the Council, I do not assume a non possumus attitude. I shall be guided in all fairly minor details,—of course the essential framework must be there—but in all details, even of a comparatively important character, I shall be guided by the opinion of the select committee and of the Council. If therefore the select committee and the Council come to the conclusion that the age limit 5 to 10 is better, well, I leave the decision on that point to the Council, although personally I feel that the age limit 6 to 11 is on the whole better, because it is desirable to let the children grow up and have an easy time of it before they are compelled to go to school. Then the making of a scheme requires a census of the children, and you will find in section 9 that when we ask a local body, or when we ask a Government officer in case of default, to take a census we want various details about the children who will have to be educated. In this Presidency of course difficulties about languages, about communities, are bound to arise, and therefore the census must give us details about the various communities from which children are drawn, the various languages which the children speak at home and in which schools have to be provided. All these difficulties accentuate the complicacy of our measure, but having regard to the practical circumstances of the case they have got to be provided for.

Then we shall have to provide a sufficient number of schools, which we can ask the children to attend for their education. Now, there may already be a certain number of schools in any area in which we desire to introduce compulsory education. There may be public schools, or local board schools, or occasionally a Government school. Then there will also be aided schools or even recognised schools. But in order to carry through any scheme of compulsion, new schools may have to be opened, and in making any scheme, all the necessary details about such a scheme will have to be properly investigated and properly made up.

Then there is the provision for finance. If a local body moves of its own accord and makes a scheme, it must see how it is going to provide for the expense of education. I shall speak more about finance directly. Then there are provisions about exemptions and reasonable excuse. Most of them are copied from the Patel Act, and honourable members will find that they are generally reasonable.

Then there is already a provision in, I believe, clause 23 which enables particular classes in an area to be exempted from the operation of the Act. We do not wish to get the scheme broken on any communal differences. Occasionally, certain classes will have to be exempted. For instance, in Sind, if in any local board area the majority of the people are Mahomedan and the only school which it would be possible for the children to attend is a Mulla school, it might be necessary to exempt the children in the two or three Hindu families that may be residing in the village from attending that school. It may be necessary occasionally to exempt two or three Christian families living in a village or a small town, because their native language may be English and there may not be English schools. What I want to say is that such cases will arise, and in the beginning of a scheme like this it may be necessary to exempt particular classes, although I should be very glad indeed if such difficulties did not arise.

Then there are clauses about penalties, both for not sending children to school and for employment of children who are of the compulsory age, so as to prevent their attendance at school. The report proposed that the penalty for non-attendance should be Rs. 5 and Re. 1 per day for continued non-attendance. I want to go rather slowly, and you will find that these figures have been much reduced in the bill. So far as the penalty for non-attendance is concerned, I have made the maximum penalty Rs. 2, and in the case of continued non-attendance after conviction 8 annas per day. On the other hand the fine to be imposed for the employment of children of school-going age has been fixed at Rs. 25, because the people who employ these children would be educated and they would know that they are acting illegally in that matter.

Another point on which the bill does not accept the conclusions of the report is the question of the person who is to impose these fines. The committee reported that these fines should be imposed by a local body. The bill, on the other hand, says that the people before whom cases of this nature can be taken are either magistrates of any class, if there are any such in the area, or a patel, or any other person appointed by the District Magistrate. Now, it might be worth while explaining to the Council why we have made this change. You will find that in any village where the compulsion clauses are to be operative, an attendance committee or an attendance officer will have to be appointed. Two or three persons will have to be given the duty of seeing that the children do actually attend the schools. Now, in a small village it is not possible to get a large number of people who would be able to do all this work, and if there are three men for the purpose of seeing to the attendance, and prosecuting parents for default, you cannot ask them to inflict the fine also, because it will mean that the same prosecutor would also convict. I believe the Council will not accept a principle according to which the person who prosecutes anybody for non-attendance of the children will also have the power to fine. The question as to what officer is to be assigned this duty in each village is rather difficult. There is no Government officer of sufficiently high standing in every village. After all, there is only the patel, and the Council has expressed the opinion in the last session that these patels are a class of men who are doing work of a very responsible nature on a comparatively small remuneration. In some villages it may be possible to appoint another person of a sufficiently important standing, intelligence or education who may be entrusted with this work, but at any rate somebody of standing has got to be appointed for the purpose of inflicting these penalties. If there is a magistrate, well and good.

Again, in order to safeguard the parents against the abuse even by the patel of the powers which are going to be entrusted to him, we have allowed an appeal to the nearest magistrate, but in the case of a magistrate we have not allowed any appeal at all. I hope the Council will be able to accept this change from the recommendations of the committee, but in any case I shall be glad if the Council or the select committee were to propose another and better method for the administration of these penalty clauses.

I next come to the question of finance which, after all, is the most important in connection with any scheme for the wide expansion of education, or a scheme of compulsory education. At present, the financial positions of the municipalities and that of the local boards differ entirely from each other. In municipal areas Government contributes one-half of the expenditure, and the municipality contributes the other half, the management of the education being in the hands of the municipality, subject to a certain amount of control from the Education Department. On the other hand, in local board areas the position is entirely different. In local board areas, the schools practically are Government schools, and the Education Department does everything about the management of education, and seeing that it does this, the local board does not find it necessary to meet all the expenditure in connection with these schools, except for the small contribution they give for the purpose. In the present Local Boards Act, one-third of the income from the anna cess is reserved for educational purposes, and practically that is all the contribution that the local boards make for education in their areas. The result is that whatever expenditure might have to be incurred on primary education in local board areas, the local boards themselves do not contribute anything above this one-third of the anna cess and all the other expenditure is to be met by Government. In recent days considering the increased expenditure on primary education, the local board contribution has remained constant while the Government contribution or the

[Dr. R. P. Paranjpye]

Government part of the expenditure has risen very considerably indeed, so that at the present moment, taking the Presidency as a whole, for primary education the local boards spend only about 12 per cent. and the Government spends 88 per cent. And consequently, if the position were to remain as it was, every pie extra required for education on the present basis will have to be met by Government. This bill proposes that in the larger municipalities which will be henceforward allowed to manage and control their own education, the scale of grant from Government will be one-half—so far as the Act lays down it would be one-half—and the grant to local boards will be two-thirds. I might at once point out that if we were to act strictly according to the letter of this section from next year, we should be reduced to an absolutely impossible position. At present we spend 88 per cent. If therefore we ask local bodies to change their contribution from 33⅓ per cent. all the new resources which are to be given to them according to the Local Boards Act would be eaten up and more than eaten up in finding the remaining 21 per cent. What is intended in fact is this, that the present grants that are being given to the district local boards are not to be reduced (Honourable Members: Hear, hear) and the scale of ½ and ⅔ will be applied to the new expenditure that will have to be incurred in the expansion of education on optional basis and the introduction of compulsory education. I give an illustration; suppose at present we spend Rs. 100 after education in a village. Out of that, Rs. 88 are spent by Government and Rs. 12 by the local board. Suppose by any measure of expansion or compulsion, this Rs. 100 becomes Rs. 200. Of the new Rs. 100 Government will find 66 or 67 per cent. and the local body will find the remaining 34 or 33 per cent., and now Government will spend Rs. 88 plus Rs. 67 that is, Rs. 155 and the local board will spend Rs. 12 plus Rs. 33, i.e., Rs. 45, so that you will find that on this basis we propose that the burden on the local body will be one-third so far as the new expenditure is concerned, and Government will continue to give the grant on the old scale to local boards on the present expenditure. Of course, if the increase were to be infinite, we should have later on approximately a situation in which the local body would contribute ⅓. But of course it is not going to be that. Still we understand that the position of the local bodies will be absolutely impossible if this clause is to be worked out to the very letter. You will also find that that clause has reference to the cost of any scheme of compulsory education and therefore should not have given rise to needless apprehension. I hope that with the explanation given to you of that clause and of the intentions of Government there will be no further carping criticism about the finances of this bill. After all, a large proportion of the educational expenditure of local boards will be met by Government; two-thirds certainly, nay, in the illustration I have given, Rs. 45 out of Rs. 200; practically rather more than three-fourths in the state of things when the educational expenditure is doubled. You will find there that the new burden that we cast upon local bodies will be of course a fair amount but not an amount which they will never be able to bear. We expect that the whole programme as outlined in this report will be carried out in ten years and during the course of ten years, as you will find from the figures presented in this report, the local bodies will have to find about 33 lakhs of rupees, 13 for the municipal areas and 20 for the local board areas. I really do not feel that the Council believes that this amount of additional burden is too heavy even for the local bodies to bear. It is of course a burden, but if we are keen upon the expansion of education, I do not feel that anybody in this Council or any intelligent person outside this Council will grudge to bear a burden to this comparatively mild extent.

I have spoken about some clauses of this bill. I shall now go into some of the other changes that are necessary in order that this bill should be properly acted upon. A certain number of administrative changes we feel are absolutely necessary if the principle of this bill is to be carried properly into effect. At present the scheme of educational administration is this. In municipal areas each municipality has got a school committee of its own which is supposed to manage its own schools subject to certain rules of Government. In the local board areas the schools are entirely managed by Government, but when we mean to embark upon a scheme of compulsory education, you cannot do all this merely by Government agency; you have got to get the help of local agency in order to carry the scheme through properly and efficiently. It is proposed therefore to give a wider educational autonomy to local bodies. We propose to make rules under which local bodies will be invested with the task of managing their own education subject of course to certain general powers of supervision and control, but the detailed control, the detailed administration which the Educational Department has been so long undertaking, will be stopped soon after this Act comes into operation. In fact the sections regarding administration are to a certain extent a devolution of power from the Educational Department to the local bodies in educational matters (Hear, hear). Now in order that this devolution should not spell inefficiency, you must obviously ensure that the population which the local authority is to provide for, that the areas over which the local educational authorities are to act, should be comparatively extensive. You cannot ask a municipality with a population of five or ten thousand to manage its own schools entirely, for they may have occasionally to make with the sanction of the Educational Department changes in their curriculum, they will have to see to the employment of teachers, giving their employees fair prospects of promotion and so on. All these things are absolutely impossible if the domain is too small. You must have in fact fairly large areas over which any one educational body should have control. It is proposed therefore that these educational administrative areas shall be of comparatively wide extent. At present, the municipalities are divided into city municipalities and town municipalities. There are at present altogether 157 municipalities in the Presidency. Out of these 33 are city municipalities. The city municipalities have somewhat wide powers. Even these 33 municipalities contain several which are very small that will probably find that it is not easy to manage their own education by themselves. The other municipalities certainly will not be competent to manage their education by themselves. I expect that it would not be ordinarily feasible to have independent educational units in those municipalities which have a population of less than 50,000 persons. Of course I am not going to lay down a hard and fast rule; if any municipality is particularly keen on managing its education and gives assurance that it will satisfy all the rules that will be made on that behalf, probably Government will not come in their way; but we expect that for these smaller municipalities it will not be in their own interest to manage their own education. Take for instance the question of teachers which indeed is most important in connection with education. In order to be able to engage teachers of proper calibre and to give them proper prospects of promotion you must have a comparatively large cadre of teachers so that they may have a proper opportunity of promotion. You cannot do that in smaller municipalities. There may be ten or fifteen teachers in each of such smaller municipalities and it is not possible for them to provide for their proper promotion. Again we expect that with wider powers of education they will have the power to appoint their own administrative officers who will have to supervise the work of their schools in their local area and who therefore must be fairly superior in calibre and qualifications. All the municipalities will not be able to pay their educational administrative officers sufficiently well in order to secure such superior administrative officers of schools. It is therefore expected that the smaller municipalities will not be able to do all this work themselves. I believe the Council will agree with the principle that educational autonomy is perfectly sound in its intention and in order to carry this out we shall have in future large city municipalities which will manage their education and district local boards for the parts where we have these smaller municipalities. Then the smaller municipalities will henceforth be relieved of the management of their education and will for educational purposes be merged in the district local board. What about their contribution for educational expenses, I may be asked. At present you will find that the continual complaint of these small municipalities is that they are unable to meet the cost of education on account of increased cost of teachers. When we force upon them the further duty of introducing compulsion and therefore going in for much larger expenditure on education they will absolutely break under the task. We therefore expect that while they will be asked to give up their educational control they will be treated more favourably in financial matters. At present they pay half and when they come under the local boards their contribution will be about one-third. So that to a certain extent they will be relieved at least in part of their financial responsibility. On the other hand, in order to assess their responsibility properly we shall probably make rules by which their financial responsibility will be assessed on a capitation basis. If they get a certain number of children from the municipal areas going into schools they will be asked to contribute so much per head per year. In this way all complexity about financial relations will be removed. On the other hand, in order to manage their education properly we shall expect the local boards, the district boards and the municipalities to have a proper machinery for this management. At present you will remember, you know quite well, that our present local bodies are elected for carrying out certain varied kinds of public duties, making of roads, looking after sanitation, markets, and you now devolve on them education in addition. A man who is selected for the general qualification will look to the interests of the people so far as sanitation and such other matters are concerned but he will not be necessarily competent to look to education as such. You will find very often even in municipalities that although there exist school committees at present, several times elections to school committees are not made from the educational point of view only. (An honourable member: Hear, hear.) We propose therefore henceforth to have educational affairs managed by a subordinate body which we call the school board. And this school board will have final powers of educational administration so far as details are concerned. The school board will of course remain a subordinate body of their local authority. But just as the standing committee of the Bombay municipal corporation has certain independent powers, as the syndicate of the university has certain independent powers although it is subordinate to the senate of the university, similarly we want the school boards to have certain independent powers, while the wider policy might be influenced and to a great extent even prescribed on the one hand by the local authorities and on the other hand sometimes by Government if the local authority does not look after it. And you will find that in order to carry this bill through the constitution of the school boards and their formation is one of the most vital points of this bill. If we are not to have these school boards it will probably be impossible to carry the provisions of this bill through in an efficient manner. The constitution of the school board as you will find is made fairly elastic. The school board is to consist of not less than 10 and not more than 15 members, of which at the utmost three can be nominated by the Government. The remaining members are to be elected by the local authority itself. In that way therefore the school board will be subordinate to the local body, but in order to see that all interests are properly represented we have ensured in the Act that the school board shall include representatives of minorities, persons versed in educational matters and in details of educational management, and women. It is not to consist solely of these. It is to include these persons; so that if, for instance, a school board consists of 15 members, three will be nominated by the Government, the remainder will be elected by the district local board. It may be necessary to have one or two Mahomedans on it, one or two women especially to advise on the question of education of girls, possibly one or two men who may be experienced in educational administration, perhaps a retired educational inspector or a deputy educational inspector or a manager of an important private educational institution in that area. Then there might have to be a member of the depressed classes, six or seven of these can be elected by a body from themselves and it will be much easier if there are already people of this qualification on the body of the district local board itself so that they may be elected. But however in order that these interests should be represented we have not restricted the membership of the school board to the personnel of the district local board itself. We have given them wide powers. They can appoint them as they like. All that I can say about the three nominees is that these nominees will be so appointed as to make up for efficiency in the personnel. I myself have no desire to nominate a Government nominee at all if it is found that the board appointed by the district local board is suitable, because we want educational autonomy in the management. Well, this school board will, as I say, see to all the details, and exercise careful control over education. Whether there is the control of the local authorities, you might ask.

First of all, of course, the local authority will have a great deal to say when annually it makes the budget of the local board. The school board will have to submit every year its budget to the local authority. Then, under the rules that are to be made, the local authority will be given certain power of appeal. In particular, the school board administrative officer, whom we propose to create under this bill as the chief educational administrative authority, will have to be appointed by the local body. Dismissal of teachers will obviously have to be subject to an appeal to the local authority and other such important matters will be obviously subject to appeal to the local authority. But you will obviously see that it is not desirable to leave the detailed control of educational matters in the hands of a non-descript body like this, elected generally for an entirely different purpose. The school board is expected to meet once a month and to go into all details of administrative matters. I am talking more particularly of district local boards at present. They will have to possess an efficient executive, and for that purpose the bill provides for the appointment of an educational officer, the school board administrative officer as he is called. This will be a very important person, because in order that educational management may be carried out properly, it must stand or fall with the executive that manages it. Of course, the school board administrative officer will carry out the behests of the school board and the local authority. But, after all, he will have to be on the spot and the efficiency or otherwise of the educational administration will depend upon the efficiency or otherwise of this administrative officer. The board will also appoint teachers and inspectors. You will find a clause about that in the bill, because when I talk of educational autonomy, I intend that a part of the work which Government are at present doing should be delegated to the local authorities themselves. Ordinary supervision and ordinary inspection should be carried out by the local authorities themselves. Government will continue to maintain a few inspectors of its own, but their work will be somewhat different from what it is at present. Those officers will see that the educational management is efficient, that the ordinary rules made by Government are observed, and that the money that Government gives in the form of grants is properly spent. But the detailed inspection that Government is at present doing will be no longer done by Government inspectors, but will be left to the local bodies and the school boards of the local bodies themselves. When I talk of this educational autonomy, from what I have said already you will have understood the position that Government is going to take in this direction. But, after all, the ultimate control on the very fundamental principles of education must rest with Government. No Government can dissociate itself from the ultimate control of the way in which its future citizens are going to grow up. No Government has so far done it and no Government can afford to do it. While, therefore, giving as wide powers as possible to the local bodies, the ultimate control will lie in the hands of Government. It is a question of administrative sanity to see that that control is not made too galling or exercised in too minute a detail. But it should be maintained and something will have to remain with Government. Thus, for instance, the Vernacular Final Examination, the examinations of any training institutions, these will have to remain with Government in order to see that the teachers will at any rate have a fairly good qualification. In any case, it is expected that the inspecting and other staffs will be comparatively small. Audit of accounts will have to be carried out by the Government; for after all, they are paying the piper very greatly indeed. Further, you have to see that the teachers employed by these local bodies are neither sweated nor, on the other hand, pampered. We have got to see to both these aspects. We must see that they will be paid within a certain wide range. Probably we shall have to lay down certain minimum and maximum rates of pay within which teachers will have to be paid. It has been complained that the pay at present given to the teachers is too low or too high. Some people complain that it is too low; some people complain that it is too high. I believe that both these complaints might have a good deal of substance according to the place where they come from. In certain places the pay of the teachers may be too low; in other places the pay of the teachers may be too high. Government, having to do with the whole of the Presidency with its varying conditions, has got to make uniform rules. Those rules appear to be too favourable to certain cases and too unfavourable to others. When we give educational autonomy to local bodies as I have tried to sketch to you, individual variations could be provided for to an almost infinite extent. Any local body will arrange its pay of teachers according to the conditions in their localities. It may be possible that in a village you may be able to recruit a teacher from that very village who will be content to work in his own village—where he has perhaps got his own house and where he can look to some of his domestic affairs in the vacations or in other spare time—on a pay of say Rs. 15. On the other hand, if you impose on every teacher the liability to be transferred to any village in his district a hundred miles away from his native place, where he will have to pay for everything, fuel, milk, water, house-rent and so on, he will have to be paid a wage which will pay for this higher expenditure and he will, therefore, have to be paid a comparatively higher pay. At present, all teachers have got this liability of having to serve in any place that Government chooses in the district and consequently they have to pay them a comparatively high rate. A local body might very easily recruit their teachers on a somewhat modified understanding and they can very easily do it, because they have got a smaller range over which to roam. They can even make a condition with the teacher of not transferring him from his native village. In this way the local bodies may be able to reduce expenditure on their teachers. But, of course, in order to allow for this, we have to give them a very wide range in which teachers of various qualifications may be engaged. Of course, we must not sweat them too much and we must give them something reasonable; otherwise the work that they do will be inefficient. On the other hand, we must lay down our maximum limit, because it may just happen that some local bodies will come forward to pay them too much. Thus, in the matter of teachers a good deal of freedom will be given to the local bodies.

There is one more important point about the question of teachers. We have got at present about 27,000 or 28,000 teachers in our employ. When we give educational autonomy, we cannot also turn out these 28,000 teachers. Government have committed themselves to certain conditions, and all these teachers will not disappear for 30 years. We have got to safeguard the interests of these existing teachers, and therefore, these teachers will be permanently transferred to local bodies under certain permanent conditions. The local bodies may engage new teachers, they can do almost anything with them, but the interest of the present teachers should be fully safeguarded.

Well, Sir, I have explained to you most of the details of this bill. I have not gone into too many details. One point about which a certain apprehension has been expressed is about the last clause with regard to the making of rules. You will find that the conditions in this Presidency are very wide and varied. Rules, if they are too minute and detailed, which may be applicable to one district may not be applicable to another district. Take, for instance, the constitution of school boards. We have laid down its general character. As regards what should be its personnel, how many Mahomedans should there be, how many should represent the depressed classes, and such details have to vary from school board to school board. Therefore, the constitution for each local board has to be laid down separately, in each individual case, and not by regulation in the body of the Act. These will have to be left to Government. Similarly about teachers, about their pay, their standing and so on. This is a thing.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: In this particular clause you have not introduced the words which are to be found usually in all Acts that "Government may by notification in the Bombay Government Gazette make rules for the purposes of this Act, consistently with the provisions of this Act, or subject to the provisions of this Act."

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: In any case, it will be added in the select committee.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I mean, when you spoke of the apprehension of the absence of the words I have mentioned, it may be due to the fact that in their absence the clause might be interpreted to mean that wide and arbitrary powers are given to Government and that Government can make their rules whether consistent or not with the Act. It is a very important point, and when the bill comes for second reading, it will be my duty from the Chair to warn the members as to the defect of the clause if the words are not added.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: You will find in the definition that 'prescribed' means 'prescribed by rules made by the Government for the purposes of this Act.'

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That does not meet my point so far as I can say now.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Anyhow it can be done in the select committee.

Clause 25, sub-clause (2), says:

"In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, such rules may determine the powers and duties of local authorities, school boards and School Board Administrative Officers and their relations with the Government Educational Department and the conditions regarding the pay, qualifications and terms of employment of the teaching, inspecting and supervising staff."

Those are details where it would be better to leave the making of rules to Government, in order to enable them to change those rules so as to suit various places; but if any member wants any particular detail to be introduced in the bill and if it can be conveniently done, I shall not object to it when the bill comes for detailed consideration before the House.

I shall refer the honourable members now to the programme of compulsory education that has been laid down by the committee. You will find in that programme, certain steps are directed to be taken. One of the very important recommendations that the committee has made, which, I think, goes to the very root of the matter, is the question of grants from Government for expenditure on education. I shall read that paragraph, because it is of such a vitally important nature:

"We emphasise the fact that any additional grants for primary education must be of a recurring nature, and not subject to reduction in any succeeding year, and any programme of compulsory education necessarily involves a gradually increasing expenditure reaching a maximum in a certain term of years. A system of hand-to-mouth finance would be fatal to the success of any scheme propounded."

That is a thing that has got to be understood by this House. If we wish to take any step in the direction of compulsory education, or even extension of education, we must make it a point that a step taken forward should not be retraced. That is a very important provision, which I wish this Council to understand. Not only this Council, but succeeding Councils also will have to keep this in view, because otherwise progress in education will be spasmodic, and money will be wasted, and we will not get proper return for the money we spend. We ought to make a beginning and should be able to show, after a certain period, to the other provinces that we have got a fairly successful form of educational system.

[Dr. R. P. Paranjpye]

There is a wide difference of opinion on one point and particularly on the question where the beginning should be made. On the question of policy, the committee recommends that a beginning should be made in municipal areas. On the other hand, my honourable friend from Belgaum district is particularly insistent upon seeing the beginning made in villages. My honourable friend from Belgaum is quite correct in pulling violently the other way when the committee is going in the opposite direction. The proper course to follow is midway between the two : to confine our activities neither entirely to municipalities nor to the villages. We shall have to take both simultaneously. First of all, it is not right that all our resources should be devoted to municipalities, leaving district local board areas untouched. On the other hand, we must see what the result of a wide range of the experiment will be, because the success or the failure of the experiment in the first year or two will determine the character of the step we should take in future. The necessary machinery, I think, will be ready earlier in the municipal areas than in the local board areas—a few months earlier—because municipalities are accustomed to it, while the local boards are new to these things, such as the appointment of school boards, its election and so on. There may be a difference of five or six months' time. Because there is this small difference in time for getting the machinery ready, we will not be justified in cutting out the local board area.

Then, there is the question of the education of girls. On this point, to my mind, the recommendations of the committee are not quite so satisfactory as I should have liked them to be. The committee recommend that the compulsory education of girls can be carried out in the immediate future only in municipal areas—they say 'perhaps only in municipal areas'—and they think that in local board areas the education of girls will have to proceed on an optional basis for several years to come. I do not know whether this is an absolutely correct view of things, but I have strong hopes that just as the demand for primary education, at least in the case of boys, has grown very rapidly during the last 5 or 10 years, at the same rate, or even at an increased rate, the demand for the education of girls also will arise and that in five or six years the members of the committee will be considered as having been too cautious rather than over-confident. But in any case, I might assure the Council that, so far as I am concerned, the education of girls will not be neglected in the slightest degree, and I shall try to do the utmost that is humanly possible to push on this part of the educational programme also. I cannot say anything more than that.

Then, there are several other vexed questions, and in particular my honourable friend the member for the Hindu community of Northern Sind discusses the question of education in Sind and my honourable friend from Karachi also discusses the same question. They bring before us the question of the various difficulties of introducing compulsion especially in rural areas in Sind. The question is complicated, but I have strong hopes that the question is not so insoluble as it appears to be. Of course, one understands that the number of villages in porportion to the population is a little larger in Sind than in the Presidency, but that the number of villages that can afford schools is smaller in Sind than in the Presidency. If we open schools in all those places where it is possible, although we shall not be able to touch as large a population in Sind as in the Presidency, still about 60 to 70 per cent. of the children can be brought under compulsory education. But there is this difficulty, that the larger part of the population being Mahomedan, with particular predilections in favour of the teaching of the Koran, we must go in directions which are fairly acceptable to the people in Sind. You will find at present that the number of local board schools in Sind is comparatively small and in a large number of places the only education that people get is through the medium of the Mulla schools. One might possibly admit that the average efficiency of a Mulla school is perhaps less than the average efficiency of a district local board school, although I know there are several Mulla schools which are as efficient as any local board school. I myself went last year, when I was in Sind, especially to see these Mulla schools : I saw some very good Mulla schools, some moderate Mulla schools and some bad Mulla schools. But there are such classes of schools everywhere, and probably you will find that, seeing that there are a fair number of good Mulla schools, it is quite possible to raise the other schools to this fair standard of efficiency. In any case, in Sind it would not be practicable to open local board schools everywhere and say " Your children will have education only if they attend the local board schools, and not otherwise." We must take the Mulla schools, and if possible give each such school a trained, or at least a qualified, teacher to help the Mulla, and thus make the people appreciate the benefits of education. Thus, the difficulty can to a great extent be overcome. At any rate, we must take the people with us if we are to carry out any wide programme of education. We see that in carrying out this programme of education, difficulties are likely to arise. The report of the committee tells us that the demand for compulsory education is comparatively very strong in the Deccan, Konkan and Karnatak, but it is not quite so strong in Gujarat and is less strong still in Sind. During the course of ten years, of course, we shall have to go over the whole Presidency, but it is possible that the initial steps might deal to a larger extent proportionately with those places in which the demand is stronger—not that the other places ought to be neglected—but perhaps the initial stages might be so arranged that we shall proceed by the path of least resistance. But we hope, and I do hope, that ere long other places which appear to be not quite so enthusiastic about compulsory education will themselves come forward and urge on Government the necessity of having compulsory education in their areas. For, remember that the finances for compulsion have to be met by the taxation of all the people of the Presidency. If, when compulsion is going to be introduced, the benefit of it goes only to one portion of the Presidency, the people from the other parts of the Presidency will naturally complain why the benefit of the tax that they pay should go only to the other places. I expect complaints in this direction, and also expect to have demands coming from all parts of the Presidency that compulsion should be simultaneously introduced in all parts in a uniform manner. Remember also that a wide-reaching measure of this kind can only be worked with the whole-hearted sympathy of the educated classes, and at least the passive acquiescence of the large number of people in the Presidency. We cannot carry on compulsory education with the aid of the police ; we cannot give every child in the hands of the policeman in order to take him to school. That we cannot do. We must expect the people to acquiesce. We want our people to be educated to the benefits of education and it is to the credit of the non-Brahmin classes in the Deccan and the Karnatak that they have educated their own brethren to this need, and we do not expect that there will be any difficulty on their side ; at any rate, if there is any difficulty, the leaders of this class will not give the people the slightest encouragement. We are told that in Sind and Gujarat we are likely to meet with difficulties. I hope that those difficulties are of an ephemeral character. In fact, we find that Gujarat is the best educated part of this Presidency. In connection with certain other figures, which I was collecting in answer to a question by my honourable friend from Ahmednagar, I found that in Gujarat there were a larger proportion of pupils in the fourth and higher standards than in other parts of the Presidency: in other words education was more efficient in Gujarat than in other parts of the Presidency. Gujarat, which is so well educated and which contains an Indian State which has given an object lesson in compulsory education, will not be lagging behind.

Then, lastly, Sir, I wish to touch upon certain proposals which will be soon laid before this Council. In order to have compulsory education, we must have the wherewithal. After all, Government is going to take a very large responsibility of a financial character over and above other administrative difficulties. The financial difficulty is very large, but Government has made this proposal with the hope that they carry the Council along with it. We have all heard it said that all that is at our heart can be obtained by retrenchment. I have not a word to say against retrenchment. Retrenchment should be made wherever possible, but, as has been pointed out several times, retrenchment proposals can only take effect gradually; but we cannot wait until all our retrenchment has been effected and then start any new proposals. While, therefore, our retrenchment policy should go on, we must also go on with our constructive programme, and the very first item in the constructive programme is the wide diffusion of education. But, in order to do this, we must be prepared to put our hands in our pockets. The local bodies are being asked to contribute a small portion. We know that their resources are not very large, but still we are going to ask them to contribute a certain portion of the expenditure. A large portion of the expenditure will have to come from Government, but if the Council is bent upon carrying forward the step of compulsory education which, let me again assure the Council, is in the interest of the lower, the backward and the depressed classes and the Mahomedans of this Presidency, we must be willing to put our hands in our pockets. Certain taxation proposals will be placed before the Council. They will not be all brought forward in this session, because the whole programme is spread over ten years. In the first year we shall have to find Rs. 15 to 20 lakhs, in the second year Rs. 35 lakhs, and so on. The burden will be gradually laid upon the Council, but the Council must be prepared to bear that burden, if they believe in the efficacy of education. I have no doubt at all that the Council will rise to the responsibility that is before it. So far as working out the details and carrying out the programme is concerned, Government is entirely at one with members of this Council, but honourable members must place the necessary funds at the disposal of Government, in order that the programme may be carried out. You cannot make bricks without straw, and I hope that when Government will place the necessary proposals before this Council in order that this wide programme should admit of being carried out, the Council will support Government. We have proposed this bill and have accepted in its wide generalities the programme laid down by the committee, and may go perhaps even further than that, because we feel that it is only by the expansion of education and by the introduction of compulsory education that this question can be solved. The proposals have been made in difficult times, but the proposals have been made in the fullest confidence that the Council will be at one with Government in the achievement of this object. I, therefore, hope, Sir, that the Council will pass the first reading of this bill.

Rao Saheb L. V. PARULEKAR (Ratnagiri District): Mr. President, I rise to support the first reading of this bill. In the first place, I must thank the Honourable Minister in charge of the bill for having introduced this far-reaching and important bill. For a long time, there has been a cry both from the classes and the masses for this measure, and, so far as the principle of the bill is concerned, I submit that there cannot be two opinions, except perhaps for Gujarat. (An Honourable Member: No. no.) Then, I will say that there cannot be two opinions so far as the principle of the bill is concerned. Still, I wish to say that I cannot be as optimistic as the Honourable Minister, so far as the carrying out of the provisions of this bill is concerned. The first and most important difficulty that will come in the way of a proper carrying out of the provisions of this bill is the one about the supply of the fuel for this engine. Sir, I will content myself with that aspect of the question, only so far as the municipalities are concerned, of which I have had experience or more than eight years. I see that there are honourable members who have worked out statistics to show what expenditure will be necessary to make compulsion successful. The local boards will not be in a position to make any provision for it unless Government comes to their aid. Anyhow, so far as I am concerned, I will simply content myself with referring to the municipalities, as they will first come in for the operation of this bill. Now, it is true that in 1917 there was an Act introduced called the Patel Act which gave the option to the municipalities of introducing compulsory education. But, how is it that the municipalities are still lagging behind in the matter of taking advantage of that Act and introducing compulsory education in their areas? Everybody knew of the necessity of introducing compulsory education. If any municipality was in a position to do so, they would not have put it off. The only change in the present bill is, what was formerly optional has now been made compulsory. But iron cannot be turned into gold. We are exactly in the same position as we were in 1917; perhaps, in some cases worse. Under the circumstances, the question is not that there was no Act which made it compulsory on the municipalities introducing compulsion. When the previous Act on the subject was passed, we did try to see whether it was possible to introduce that scheme. All kinds of plans and estimates were prepared, and the question was gone into to see whether even in future it might be possible to introduce such a bill and take advantage of the Education Act. Attempts were made not once but several times to take advantage of the Act, but it was found absolutely impossible. Our experience has been that even under this Compulsory Education Act it is difficult to introduce this system and incur greater expense. You may pass any enactments you like, you cannot change the system. My submission, therefore, is that unless that clause about the contribution of one-half is suitably changed, it will never be possible for all the municipalities to introduce this bill and only those municipalities which have the means to go in for it will do so.

By certain clauses power has been given to Government to call upon a municipality to introduce compulsory education and any municipality that fails to do that has to bear all the responsibilities and other consequences fall upon that municipality. How is Government to determine whether a municipality is in a position to introduce compulsory education? How is that action of Government to be controlled? There is no provision made in this bill for that. On the one hand, you have the word of the municipality and on the other you have the word of Government. Who is to decide between these two? My suggestion, therefore, is that we should not give power under this bill to Government to compel any municipality to start the compulsory system should such municipality not be in a position to carry it out. So far as the constitution of the school board, the powers of the school board and the duties of the school board, are concerned, I submit that so far as a municipality is concerned, there is no necessity of appointing a school board at all. As far as the district local boards are concerned, I am inclined to be in favour of such a scheme because the school board will then be constituted of members who come from distant parts of the district, sometimes from a distance of 120 miles or so, there are very few meetings and the members are not able to manage the affairs properly, their duties may be so numerous and various that they may not have the time to devote to education. But, so far as municipalities are concerned, their areas are always very small, they know the wants of the people in their areas and they can very properly manage their own schools; they have been doing so and it has never been stated that municipalities have been unable to manage their schools efficiently.

Another thing: there are three different sub-committees which have got to be appointed by the municipalities—one is the committee specially devoted to the administration of school matters, known, of course, as the school committee; the other is the hygienic committee for public health. So there is a special board under the control of the municipality. The school committee knows what to do and always is in touch with the people of the municipality or the general body always can control and see, and advise and also go to the the schools themselves and study the circumstances. We can clearly see that such an amount of amalgamation or combination of this school committee and the general board is caused that, instead of rather giving them power of having a part of their own body set apart for a particular purpose, we are attacking the independence of the body.

Now, Sir, there is one difficulty. Suppose there is one municipality of 10 or 15 members in which there are elected members and some members nominated by Government. Then we are to use from that body some elected and some nominated members. Then again, we are told that we are to elect another body out of that body. So far as this election is concerned, the main body, namely, the local authority, is responsible. But subsequently instead of one there are two bodies and that means this body elects the other members and Government should also nominate certain persons. Now, I do not understand how that is independence. Then again, we have a third body and there again this body is to again appoint another officer who is to be the supervising officer of the school board. So my submission is that it is not necessary, so far as municipalities are concerned, to have this power of election and nomination to the other board. I do not understand why we should not have persons in that body chosen by the municipality only. Then it is said minorities should also be represented on that board. Then again it is stated that the remaining members shall be elected by the local authority and shall include persons of experience in education and also women. Well, if there is no woman available, then, what? There again, there will be difficulty. Here we have in the municipalities communal representation so far as we can see. Then subsequently, it is stated that all schools that there are under smaller municipalities should be under the local boards who can look after the revenue administration so far as these school boards are concerned. Then, it is also suggested that in these school boards also there should be communal representation. Now, so far as the general body is concerned, the present school committee is already responsible to it and that is one way of doing things. So then, why this different body like the school board under the local board ? Then again we see that one body appoints another body. Then, there is a third officer and that is one man who is called the supervising officer.

Now, as regards communal representation, how can there be communal representation in the school board ? If we ought to have communal representation there, we will have to see that there are sufficient numbers of each community proportionately.

Then, there is the question of independent powers. These independent powers of the school board are the so-called powers of the municipality. I submit, Sir, this kind of constitution is altogether uncalled for. So far as the municipalities are concerned, there is no necessity of appointing a separate school board at all. Municipalities can do away with the school board as they have already got their own school committee.

The next point that I would urge is that of the educational autonomy. The independent powers that are given to the municipalities are in regard to change of the administrative control. These are the things which I should like to be considered. If you go into the bill clause by clause, I will show you just now that in every clause there is the controlling hand of Government and also in all cases. There are some 26 clauses which deal with these powers. Out of them 13 clauses are clauses of no importance. So far as my point is concerned, they are consequential clauses or are such that they may be considered to be unimportant. They are of an innocent kind. For instance, clauses 16 to 26 are the clauses which rather penalise the parent and also refer to the application of rules regarding these penalties. Clauses 1 and 2 are clauses which give the definition and clauses 4, 9 and 12 are also clauses of similar sort. But now, besides these clauses, I will show that at every point there is the right of interference on the part of Government and you will see that instead of giving independence, or educational autonomy as it is called, the powers of the municipalities or municipal boards have been restricted and a separate educational authority under the control of Government has been created in the supervising officers, and the municipalities have been made to lose their independence. In the first place, in clause 2 we find " local authority " means a district local board or a city municipality which is authorized by the Government to manage its own schools and includes in the case of Aden the Executive Committee of Aden. Now there Government take upon themselves the responsibility of defining or making rules about municipalities which can manage their schools and which ought not to manage their own schools. Why should this distinction be made ? If certain municipalities are unable to manage their own schools, then there are other sister institutions to whom education can be entrusted and it will be a matter of mutual arrangement between the municipality and those institutions. Why should Government make a distinction between the municipalities which can manage their affairs and those which cannot. So, that is taking away the power which the municipal law gives to the municipalities of managing their own schools. In this bill that power is taken away and they are given no option. It has been made compulsory on these smaller municipalities to entrust their education to these school boards of local boards and they have been asked to make provision for the educational expenditure. Now, why is all this obligation necessary if there is to be educational autonomy ? Then clause 3 relates to the constitution of the school boards. In these school boards some people shall be nominated and some are to be elected and this school board has also nomination by Government. Then, coming to clause 4 that clause deals with the powers and duties of the school board. It is stated there that the powers and the duties of the school board shall be as prescribed, and, as I understand it "prescribed" means by the rules made under clause 36 of the Local Boards Bill. Now Government wish to frame these rules in particular and there is a provision which states that such rules shall be determined by the local authority of the school board, by which I understand the administrative officer of the school board.

Now, Sir, coming to clause 5, we see that according to that clause certain municipalities are to hand over their schools to the management of the district local boards. There also we see it says:

> "Every municipality which is not authorised by the Government to manage its own schools shall on the date to be notified by the Government in this behalf transfer to the district local board of the district in which it is situate all primary schools, etc."

Then again, the next portion of the same clause says as regards contribution by the municipality,

> "Such amount as may from time to time be fixed by the Government on the basis, etc."

The ratio of the amount to be paid is always to be fixed by Government. We see that the members of the municipality have no voice. Time and notification are also not left to the party concerned, namely, the municipality, and the proportion also is to be fixed by Government.

Then we come to clause 6, which says:

> "Where in any municipality a school committee has been appointed.....the control of that committee of primary education shall from a date to be notified by the Government in this behalf cease."

The date is fixed by Government and from that particular date the control of the school committee is to cease. Then we come to clause 7.

> "The local authority shall with the previous approval of the Government appoint an officer who shall be called the School Board Administrative Officer."

Here the greatest complication lies in the words "with the previous approval of the Government". We have seen that there was much complication in connection with the pay of teachers, etc., at one time Government saying "You must pay at such and such a rate, and you must appoint such and such persons to those posts". Very well, then. Why should we not appoint our own person? And if it works satisfactorily, you may give some compensation. Then again, what is the reason for Government's sanction? We do not understand the reasons. We have no grounds to know what are the reasons for which sometimes sanction is given and for which sometimes sanction is withheld. Very well, then. This approval is an important thing!

Then comes clause 8. I am reading consecutive clauses. Sub-clause (2) says:

> "A local authority, if called upon by the Government so to do, shall within a time to be specified by the Government submit a scheme to provide compulsory elementary education in such area as above and in the case of children of either sex or both sexes as the Government may specify."

I have already spoken about the time having to be specified by Government. Now here is a power which has been given to Government rather to penalise any local authority, any municipality or a local board, and without any reason.

Then, clause 9. It is about the particulars to be contained in the scheme to provide compulsory elementary education. It is more or less a formal clause.

[Rao Saheb L. V. Parulekar]

Then we come to clause 10, which says:

"The Government may after such enquiry as shall seem necessary either sanction such scheme with or without modification or refuse to sanction it".

Government is the final authority. Sanction is to be given, modification is to be asked for, or sanction may be refused also.

Very well. Let us pass on now to clause 12 which refers to cases where compulsory education is introduced. So far as making education compulsory of both boys and girls is concerned, the Honourable Minister in charge says it can be done in any municipality. But we know sending of girls to school has much to do with womanhood. I mean women will not always agree with men. Sometimes, we know, whatever has been said by the husband is not liked by the wife, or the women in the house, and it will be sometime before there will be agreement between the views of the men and the views of the women. Therefore, when a girl is to be sent to the school, the father may like it, but the mother may not like it, and there will be discontent among all the women or the greater portion of the women, so far as this clause is concerned. We are thoroughly familiar with the state of things in the mofussil. When such things are likely to happen even in the towns, what about the mofussil places, villages and so on? Therefore, it cannot be said that compulsory education for girls can be easily introduced.

Then clause 13. If a scheme is to be modified by a local authority, it cannot be modified except with the sanction of Government. What has Government to do with it? Government can at any time withdraw it, or modify it or do anything of that sort.

Then again, we see in clause 15 that

"The subjects, curricula, books and standards of teaching of approved schools shall be as prescribed but may be altered by the school board with the sanction of the Government to suit local requirements".

Everywhere we see now "as prescribed" or "as approved".

Now, Sir, in an innocent clause like a clause to give the meaning of "reasonable excuse", clause 17, Government has gone so far as to have control over the distance where there is no approved school. That is, the distance how long a boy has to travel for attending a school is to be determined by Government. I fail to understand, Sir, why in such a trifling matter even, Government should have the power or control. Can we, after reading this, say that this bill is really liberal? I fail to understand how we can consider it a liberal measure when the wording of the bill is what it is.

Then come clauses 18 to 22, with which we have need to do very much. In connection with this clause 19, I have to say one thing, that giving any power to police patels is simply abusing a clause.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Which clause is it?

Rao Saheb L. V. PARULEKAR: Clause 19, Sir. Under it, powers are given to the police patels. Now, we know, Sir, what kind of persons these patels are. Sometimes, I can say, they are simply coolies! They do not know how to read or write, and if some complaint is lodged to them, they will consider it an order from Government to do something. They do not know law; they do not know how to read or write. They get some friends in the village or in the municipality to explain to them what is contained in any communication sent to them. As an alternative for this, it may not be right that complaints should be decided by any members of the school board or that they should be the arbiters and the judges. But there are village panchayats or taluka local board members, and members of the taluka local boards or panchayats may be substituted for them. What is the use of giving powers in this matter to a patel? So far as we know, there would be a procedure for taking down evidence, taking down the defence and all sorts of things. Very well. This is unnecessary bother, first give the power to a person who is altogether incompetent and ignorant, and subsequently go against him.

Now, Sir, I come to the clause of "Appeal", clause 22. That is a penal clause.

In clause 23 again, we see:

"The Government may by notification in the Bombay Government Gazette exempt any particular class"—Government and not the municipality nor the district local board or any other person but the Government—"or community in any area of compulsion or part thereof, from the operation of this Act",

Then, clause 24 deals with compulsory power and is somewhat similar to clause 8. Clause 8, sub-clause (2), and clause 24 are of the same sort.

Then comes clause 25. The rules have to be made as regards the constitution of school boards by all of us concerned from the municipality down to the district local board.

Now, Sir, I have dealt with all clauses of the bill. There is not a single instance where the control of the Government does not appear. It is Government Educational Department in another shape: the curricula are to be fixed and duties are to be fixed, and everything else is to be fixed, by Government. There is not a single thing in which Government will not on some ground or other interfere. My submission, therefore, is that unless all these things are modified consistently with the object of really giving independent power, this bill as it stands will have to be modified to a great extent. With these remarks I am supporting the first reading of this bill, as I have already pointed out, with diffidence.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Sir, I rise to congratulate the Honourable Minister on the very lucid statement he has made in introducing this very important bill for a further advance in the method of primary education. We have on the statute book a permissive legislation, but he has taken a bold step to take us to the stage of compulsion. I really feel that it is a bold step in many ways. I really feel that this bill should have come some years ago, in the years of our prosperity, when we had good balances of four and five crores, when Government, local bodies, and municipalities did not find themselves in a financial crisis as they find themselves now. In spite of that unfavourable circumstance, I welcome this bill and assure the Honourable Minister the whole-hearted support of this House in the bold adventure that he is taking. But at the same time, when we are to give the whole-hearted support of the province, of the people outside this Council, I have only one doubt and it is this. I do feel that, apart from financial considerations, there is an atmosphere which is uncongenial to the introduction of this bill at this time, and without going into those conditions, I will only say this that when the Honourable Minister appeals to the people outside this Council for whole-hearted sympathy, I, on their behalf, appeal to him that he will take more opportunities (I wish he had taken more opportunities), of going amongst the people and mixing with them, finding out their grievances and trying to ease the situation, which is extre ely trying. One question I had once put with regard to the incidents of the Ahmedabad and Surat municipalities, and the reply I got was that they did not want to co-operate with us. What I said at that time I make bold to repeat: "Even if the people non-co-operate, it is not the duty of the Ministers to non-co-operate with people".

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. The honourable member is taking advantage of the first reading of this bill for the purpose of going into matters which are irrelevant and do not bear upon the principle of the bill.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: I only refer.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I do not mind what the honourable member is referring to. It is for him to respond to my ruling.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: I do respond.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I do not want to curb freedom of discussion. The honourable member will understand that he will be within perfectly legitimate limits when he says that the bill is introduced at a time when the Honourable Minister may not expect the whole-hearted support of the people; but to diverge into the duties of the Minister to go amongst people, to ease the situation, and all that, is irrelevant and may carry us into a very wide field of discussion. There may be other occasions to do so, but not on the first reading of the bill. The honourable member understands, I suppose.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: I take this opportunity of congratulating the members of the committee that went about in the Presidency in such a short time, putting themselves to great inconvenience, took evidence and met people, although there also conditions were not favourable, and submitted a very helpful report, which the Honourable Minister has rightly said would be a guide, not only to this presidency but also to other presidencies.

Now, as regards the constitution of the school board, I understand that the city municipalities will have more control in all these matters than the local bodies and smaller municipalities, which, being new, will have to be guided, rather than be allowed to guide themselves. I welcome that observation. But, Sir, the school board that will have to be appointed by the local board and smaller municipalities together will have to be enlarged. A school board consisting of 10 or 15 members to look to the wants of a large population, for instance of 8 lakhs as in my district, is rather too small, and it cannot be called a fair representation of the people of the particular district. I submit, in the select committee care should be taken to see that each taluka is represented, and that small municipalities also are represented. Looking to the population of 8 lakhs in my district, is it possible to expect that a board consisting of 15 people will be in a position to manage educational administration, and convince the people that their education is in safe hands? Therefore, it will have to be enlarged, and even doubled perhaps. As regards the control, I do agree with the Honourable Minister that Government cannot divest itself of the ultimate control. I see that in the bill he has tried his best to give as much autonomy as is consistent with efficiency. But, I feel at the same time, Sir, that our Honourable Ministers, I mean the Minister for Local Self-Government and the Minister for Education, should take early steps to associate themselves with a standing committee of this House, as has been done in other provinces. That would give a better guarantee that Government will be responsive to the views of the members of this House.

[Mr. G. B. Trivedi]

This is only a suggestion from me. In other presidencies it has been done and I think it should be done in our Presidency also.

Now, I come to the question of finance which, as the Honourable the Minister has put it, is the root of the whole thing. I submit that after the assurance that the Honourable Minister has given to the House that the present contributions from Government will not decline and that the new expenditure only will be divided in the proportion of two-thirds and one-third, the House has breathed a sigh of relief. But even then you will see, Sir, that the proportion comes to 75 and 25 per cent., and I still feel that it will go very hard on the local boards to find the 25 per cent. of the expenditure. I do not for a moment maintain that the local boards are unwilling to tax themselves. It will be our duty, the duty of each of us, to go to our districts and convince the people that if we want compulsory education, for which we were asking so far, we must put our hands into our pockets and find the money. But my difficulty, Sir, is that while on the Government side their sources of revenue, are new and expanding (I see from the report of the Education Committee that they have suggested a number of sources of revenue)—I again repeat what I said in the course of the discussion on the Local Boards Bill—our sources of revenue are limited: the Honourable Ministers should make representation, whether it be to the Imperial Government or the provincial Government. If we in Thana district are allowed to tap the forest revenue and the salt revenue we will find enough of money at least so far as my district is concerned. In the absence of power to tap these great sources of revenue my district will find it impossible to find enough money. Thus, while Government have got new sources of revenue, the district boards' hands are tied. And I will not be surprised if after welcoming the bill for a time, they ultimately come to Government and say that they are unable to find even the 25 per cent. that they are asked to contribute. Therefore, I want the Honourable Minister, even at this late stage, to consider whether it is not possible for him and the other Ministers combined to represent to the provincial Government to let us have certain sources of revenue, or to approach the Imperial Government and get us back our sair revenue.

And then, coming lastly to the question of retrenchment and construction, I am whole-heartedly with the Honourable Minister in thinking that although this House has recommended retrenchment in all possible ways, yet new sources of revenue must be found. But if this Council agrees to take steps to tap these new sources of revenue for compulsory education, I do feel and I do insist that those new sources should be earmarked for education. At the same time, I hope Government will go on with their retrenchment policy. I do feel also that it is our duty to find new sources of revenue to enable the Honourable Minister to find the required revenue. It will be the duty of this House to sanction his proposals. But there our power ceases. Again, I shall have to refer to the atmosphere that is prevailing outside, and I do appeal to the Government, both transferred and reserved, that they should take early steps to ease the situation outside, so that people will whole-heartedly welcome this bill and will be ready to take steps themselves and give the sinews of war to the Honourable Minister for the new experiment that he has started.

With these words I support the first reading of the bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Council is adjourned to 2 p.m. on Monday, the 2nd October 1922.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. Questions.

GRANT-IN-AID TO DISPENSARIES.

Rao Bahadur G. K. CHITALE (Ahmednagar District): Will Government be pleased to give the amount of grant-in-aid given to dispensaries in urban areas in each district and the number of dispensaries and the amount given as grant-in-aid to district local boards in rural areas?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: The information asked for is contained in Statement H appended to the Report on Civil Hospitals and Dispensaries for the year 1920, copies of which are supplied to the members of the Legislative Council.

Office Attendance of Collector of Broach.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): Is Government aware :—

(a) that the Collector and District Magistrate, Broach, hardly ever attends his office for transacting either his revenue or magisterial business ?

(b) that parties and pleaders have on that account to attend at his residence far away from the town and that they are on that account put to considerable inconvenience and great expenditure ?

(c) Is it a fact that a pleader of Broach of long standing called at his bungalow on 29th August 1922 at 1-10 p.m. to present to him a criminal application on behalf of his client ?

(d) and that the District Magistrate not being in office, he waited outside the compound of the bungalow till 3 p.m. without being called in ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: The information will be called for.

Lady Assistant Surgeons.

Mr. D. D. GHOLAP: (a) How many women are assistant surgeons within the Presidency proper ?

(b) To what castes do they belong ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: (a) Seven.

(b) Five Parsis and two Christians.

Secondary Teachers' Training College.

*Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI (Bombay City): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) the total number of students in the Secondary Teachers' Training College ;

(b) the total number of students that drew higher salary than the teachers in this college during the last five years, e.g., 1917 to 1921 ;

(c) what these teachers drew before they were admitted in the Bombay Educational Service ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: (a) 34.

(b) and (c) These parts have already been answered.

Teaching of Urdu.

*Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI (Bombay City): Will Government be pleased to state whether a teacher has been appointed in Elphinstone High School and a Professor in Elphinstone College to teach Urdu ? If not, why ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: With reference to the concluding portion of the reply given at the last session, it is reported that the number of boys taking Urdu at the Elphinstone High School, Bombay, does not justify the appointment of a separate Urdu teacher.

Delay in payment to the Food Contractor, J. J. Hospital.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA (Bombay City): Will Government please say whether it is a fact that the contractor for the food supply for the patients in the J. J. Hospital did not get his bill paid on one occasion last year until after a delay of nearly five months ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: It is not a fact.

---

*This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

INDIAN POLICE OFFICERS.

*Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District): Will Government be pleased to furnish a list of Indian Police Officers of and above the rank of Sub-Inspectors who have passed the Matriculation or School Final Examination together with their present appointment and the various districts in which they hold their posts?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: A statement† giving the required information so far as obtainable without an undue expenditure of time and labour is laid on the table.

SEPARATION OF EXECUTIVE AND JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District): How far has progress been made in the separation of judicial and executive functions of Government in the Presidency in accordance with the resolution of this Council in this matter?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: The Commissioners of Divisions and the Commissioner in Sind were consulted as to the practicability of reducing the ordinary magisterial establishments and of transferring the magisterial work to subordinate judges at places where there are subordinate judges' courts. The replies of Commissioners have been received and are being considered by Government.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: Will Government be pleased to state when the matter will be decided?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: I cannot say. It depends very largely on the financial situation.

BUILDING GRANT FOR URDU GIRLS' SCHOOL AT HUBLI.

*Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District): Will the Government be pleased to state:—

(a) Whether it is a fact that the Hubli municipality has been applying for a building grant for the building of Urdu girls' school in Ganeshpet?

(b) If so, since when has the municipality been applying for the grant?

(c) Has the grant been paid to the municipality?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) This part has already been answered.

(b) and (c) The Hubli municipality first applied for a free building grant in respect of a house purchased by it for its Urdu girls' school No. 1, in December 1917. The municipality was asked by the educational inspector in his No. 8339 of 15th December 1917 to get the building inspected by the sanitary authorities and the Superintending Engineer and to communicate to him their approval as to its suitability for school purposes. No reply was received by the educational inspector from the municipality till July 1920 when that body repeated its request for a free grant. The application for a free grant of Rs. 10,953 received from the educational inspector, Southern Division, with his No. B.—7820 of 11th November 1920 was submitted to Government with the Director of Public Instruction's No. 19672 of 10th March 1921. The preliminaries required by the building grant rules have not yet been settled and no grant has been paid to the municipality.

*This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1922, when an ad interim reply was given.

† Vide Appendix V.

MAHOMEDAN GAZETTED HOLIDAYS.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): Will Government be pleased to state why Mahomedan gazetted holidays, public and sectional, are not to be included in the list of holidays for being observed in the civil courts ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: The grant of holidays in the civil courts is within the discretion of High Court.

BUILDING OF BHALEJ SCHOOL.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): Are Government aware that the building of the Bhalej school in the Kaira district was built for Urdu and Gujarati boys' school, and that the Urdu school is shifted to the old building which is not commodious and that the Gujarati girls' school is accommodated therein ? Will Government be pleased to state why ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Enquiries are being made.

EXPENDITURE ON VERNACULAR TRAINING COLLEGES AT DHARWAR.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) the expenditure incurred for the vernacular training colleges at Dharwar, Dhulia, Poona and Ahmedabad and Urdu training classes at Poona and Ahmedabad in detail for the years 1921 and 1922 ?

(b) What was the amount by which stipends which used to be given at the Urdu classes at Poona and Ahmedabad were reduced during 1921-1922?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The information has been called for.

EXTRA COST ON URDU CLASSES.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): Will Government be pleased to state the extra cost involved in developing the Urdu classes into independent classes as per Government Resolution, Educational Department, No. 657, of 23rd December 1921, as compared with the extra cost involved in giving effect to the resolution of Anjuman-e-Islam, Ahmedabad, forwarded to the Government in July last ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Information has been called for.

ENGLISH TEACHER TO URDU SCHOOLS.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): Will Government be pleased to state whether any English teachers to first grade local board Urdu schools in Northern Division has been attached similar to one provided in Central and Southern Divisions ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: No.

PROMOTION OF PERSIAN TEACHERS.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): Will Government be pleased to state whether any Persian teachers in Government high schools have been promoted to the post of assistant deputies as they advance in service ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Enquiries are being made.

INCREASED WORK OF MAMLATDARS.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK (Deccan Sardars and Inamdars): (a) Are Government aware that in a large number of cases of assistance suits, discretionary fines are not imposed on the inferior holders, with the consequence that the number of assistance suits and the work of mamlatdars has increased ?

(b) If so, have any orders been issued to check the tendency of inferior holders to delay the dues of inamdars ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: (a) Information will be called for.

(b) Orders have been issued from time to time.

INDEBTEDNESS OF SARDARS AND INAMDARS.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK (Deccan Sardars and Inamdars): Will Government be pleased to state whether any steps are taken by Government to ameliorate the condition of indebtedness of some of the sardars and inamdars in the Deccan and the Karnatak ? And will Government be pleased to state the policy, if any, followed in this respect ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: No.

INCOME OF REGISTRATION DEPARTMENT, SIND.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA (Karachi City): Will Government be pleased to state what is the income of the Registration Department in Sind as compared with the other Divisions of the Presidency and the proportion of cost of the department in the whole Presidency excluding Bombay ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: The information has been called for.

STIPENDS FOR URDU TRAINING CLASSES.

Mr. B. P. PATEL (Ahmedabad District): Will the Government be pleased to state—

(a) the total number of stipends for Urdu training classes available with the Government in the Presidency according to Government Resolution, Educational Department, No. 657 of 1921;

(b) how many of these were actually utilised in the Presidency proper;

(c) what was done with the balance;

(d) why were not the stipends all utilised by the divisional inspectors;

(e) how the total number 240 has been distributed at Poona, Hubli and Ahmedabad ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The information has been called for.

SHIFT SYSTEM IN URDU TRAINING CLASSES.

Mr. B. P. PATEL (Ahmedabad District): Will Government be pleased to state whether the Urdu training classes at Poona and Ahmedabad can be made independent by using the scheme of shift system ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Enquiries are being made.

STIPEND-HOLDERS AND DEPUTED TEACHERS IN URDU TRAINING CLASSES.

3. Mr. B. P. PATEL (Ahmedabad District): Will Government be pleased to state—

(a) the total number of stipend-holders and the deputed teachers per different year in the Urdu training classes in the Presidency;

(b) the total number for each of the year fixed by the department for these classes per division ;

(c) the total number of stipends intended to be spent by the department for these classes as per Government Resolution, Educational Department, no. 657 of 23rd December 1921 ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : The information has been called for.

Duty Allowance for Staff of Training Colleges.

Mr. B. P. PATEL (Ahmedabad District) : Will Government be pleased to state as to when the duty allowance for the staff of the training colleges of the Presidency will be sanctioned ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : A duty allowance has already been sanctioned ; it has been attached for the present to 38 posts in the training colleges, which have been made interchangeable with the posts of assistant deputy educational inspectors.

Criminal Tribes Act.

*Mr. A. N. SURVE : (a) Would Government be pleased to lay on the table copies of Government orders and notifications relating to the "Fatgudis", a tribe declared criminal under the Criminal Tribes Act and inhabiting Bassein and Mahim talukas of the Thana district ; and to state :—

(i) the number of Fatgudis registered under the said Act ;

(ii) the number of prosecutions (together with their results) instituted against the Fatgudis for being absent at the night roll-call during the different years commencing from the time when they were declared a criminal tribe under the said Act to the year 1918 (inclusive) ?

(b) Is it true that the Fatgudis residing within the jurisdictions of the police-patils of the different localities of the town of Bassein are restricted by a recent order from going beyond the limits under the jurisdictions of their respective police-patils even by day-time ?

(c) Had they complained against this order and requested the Collector of Thana to cancel it ?

(d) Would Government be pleased to place on the table a copy of the petition referred to in the preceding question together with the reply given by the Collector to it ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : (a) Fatgudis in Thana district were declared as a criminal tribe under Government Notification, Judicial Department, No. 7113, dated 21st October 1915. Their movements were restricted to Mahim and Bassein talukas under section 12 of the Criminal Tribes Act under Government Notification, Judicial Department, No. 2887 of 1st May 1916. The rules under section 20 of the Criminal Tribes Act were sanctioned in the Government Resolution, Judicial Department, No. 7667, dated 29th November 1918, and Government Resolution, Home Department, No. 8389, dated 27th August 1921. Copies † of Government notifications and orders are placed on the Council table—

(i) the number registered is 209 (150 in Mahim and 59 in Bassein) ;

(ii) there was only one prosecution in 1918 ; the accused was sentenced three months' rigorous imprisonment.

---

* This question was asked at the meeting held in July 1921, when an ad interim reply was given.

† Kept in Secretary's office.

(b) It was so but the District Magistrate has exempted all registered Fatgudis pro tem from this provision.

(c) and (d) Copy * of the petition from the Bassein taluka together with copy of the reply given by the Collector is put on the Council table.

Description of Visapur Jail.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI on behalf of Mr. PURSHOTAMDAS THAKURDAS (Bombay): (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to a small pamphlet published at Sukkur by Mr. Bhojraj M. Ajwani describing what are called by him 'Tortures' of the Visapur jail?

(b) If the reply to the above be in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to put on the table a statement giving their refutal, if any, of the various statements made in the said pamphlet?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: (a) and (b) Government have appointed a committee to enquire into the management of the Deccan Extra Mural Prison, Visapur. The Committee has been authorised, as part of the terms of reference, to receive and enquire into complaints of ill-treatment by present or former prisoners, and such persons including the writers of the pamphlet, will have an opportunity of substantiating their statements. Government do not propose to make any further statement pending the results of the enquiry.

Poona Municipality's Address to Hakim Ajmal Khan and Pandit Motilal Nehru.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Is it not a fact that the sum of Rs. 500 unanimously voted by the Poona City Municipality for expenses in connection with the presentation of an address to Hakim Ajmal Khan and Pandit Motilal Nehru in the third week of July last was disallowed by the Commissioner?

(b) If so, what were the grounds on which his disallowance was based?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN HIDAYATALLAH: Attention is invited to section 56 (m) of the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, under which unnecessary expenditure of this kind requires the previous concurrence of the Collector. This the Collector, in the exercise of his discretion, refused to grant, because the visitors were touring the country in the interest of civil disobedience, and because the proposed expenditure appeared to be an act of extravagance on the part of a Municipality demanding and receiving large grants-in-aid from Government.

Gambling Dens in Kurla District.

2. Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Has the attention of Government been drawn to the existence of gambling dens in Kurla Suburban District?

(b) What steps have been taken to check the evil.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Government have no information but have forwarded the question of the member for such steps as should prove necessary to the District Magistrate.

---

* Kept in Secretary's office.

Appointment of Advisory Board.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Will the Government be pleased to state what steps they have taken for appointing an advisory board to assist the Honourable the Minister of Education as suggested by the joint select Parliamentary committee on the Government of India Bill 1919 ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The matter is under consideration.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: Is it not a fact that a similar question was put in July 1921 and the reply was the same ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: I do not remember.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Honourable member by his supplementary question is giving information and that is contained in the official records of the Legislative Council to which every honourable member has access. Such questions cannot be allowed. He may ask any supplementary question arising out of the original question and its answer.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: Cannot Government say when this will be done ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: No.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: Even after one year ?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That is argument.

Treatment of Political Prisoners.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Will the Government be pleased to state what action they have taken to give effect to the resolution passed by this Council at its July session on the subject of the treatment of political prisoners ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: A reference is requested to the reply given to Mr. C. M. Gandhi.

Acquisition of Land in Salsette and Trombay.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Will Government be pleased to make a statement as to the progress made by them in the matter of acquisition of lands in Salsette and Trombay ?

(b) Have they come to any decision as to what land is to be acquired and what is to be released ?

(c) If so, will they be pleased to state when they intend to inform the land owners of the exact position in which they stand ?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: (a) The information is being collected.

(b) and (c) Government have no intention at present of withdrawing from the acquisition of any of the lands notified for acquisition in Salsette and Trombay. As regards settlements with existing owners, the Member is referred to the answer given to Major Fernandes' question No. 1 at the session of March 1921.

Reduction in Higher Staff of J. J. Hospital.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether they have made any reduction in the higher staff of the J. J. Hospital, Bombay, on account of their retrenchment policy ?

(b) If so, what is the reduction made ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : No.

NUMBER OF SAFES PURCHASED IN REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District) : (a) Will Government be pleased to state how many safes were bought by them during the last 5 years in the Revenue Department ?

(b) How many of these were of foreign make ?

(c) And how many of Indian manufacture ?

(d) And how many of the latter were bought from Messrs. Godrej and Boyce ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Information will be called for.

RESTRICTION ON REMOVAL OF INJAILI TREES.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District) : (a) Is there restriction in Thana District on the removal of (1) branchwood of Injaili trees and (2) parched leaves by carts ?

(b) Does this restriction cause hardship to cultivators for rab purposes ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Information has been called for.

LEVY ON CULTIVATORS.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District) : (a) Are any fees levied on cultivators in Thana district putting up dams, for agricultural purposes, to divert in their fields rain water passing through Government forests ?

(b) If so, what is the justification for this levy ?

(c) Is this causing discontent amongst cultivators ?

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Inquiry is being made.

POPULATION AND ADEQUACY OF POLICE IN CERTAIN VILLAGES.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District) : (a) What is the population of Tarapore in Mahim taluka and Chinchane in Dahanu taluka ?

(b) What was the strength of police force in these villages in 1921, and what is it now ?

(c) Have people of these villages complained against the total absence of police there ?

(d) What steps have the Government taken to meet the demand of these two places in this matter ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : There is no police station or out-post at Tarapore. The strength of the police outpost at Chinchane at the end of 1921 was 2 head constables and 3 constables unarmed. This outpost has since been removed in the general scheme of retrenchment in Police expenditure in the Thana District.

No such representation has been received by Government.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI : Is there no reply to my question (a) ?

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : The average crime during the last three years was only 19. The outpost has been removed under the retrenchment scheme upon this important fact. I have not enquired about the exact population. That is no doubt within the knowledge of the honourable member.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: I want answer to my question (a), in order to see what the population of these villages is and whether there was any necessity for police at all.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: The information is surely within the reach of the honourable member. He represents the Thana district.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: What is your question?

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: I want answer to question (a) as regards the population of those villages.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Honourable the Home Member says that the information required in question (a) is as accessible to the honourable member for Thana as to any member of the public, and that, therefore, it is not necessary for Government to ransack all their records for this purpose. The honourable member for Thana may take the answer for what it is worth.

Grant of Gurcharan Land.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): (a) Will the Government be pleased to state on what conditions about 3,500 acres of Gurcharan land at Mahim taluka were given to Mr. Motibhai Bhikaji?

(b) Is the land now in possession of Mr. Jamshedji Khudaram Irani?

(c) How much of this land is used for fishing purposes by Mr. Irani?

(d) Has he built a dam for the said purpose?

(e) Does the dam prevent the rubbish of the village from being washed away by the sea water?

(f) If so, what steps have Government taken to get the dam removed?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Information has been called for.

Presidents of District Local Boards.

Mr. P. N. ADHAV (Satara District): Will Government be pleased to supply the following information:—

(a) Names of the presidents, district local boards, presidents nominated by Government?

(b) If there are a majority of Brahmin presidents, has Government ever tried to find out other than Brahmin candidates suitable for the post?

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN HIDAYATALLAH: (a) The accompanying list* gives the names of the presidents, district local Boards.

(b) So far as Government are aware, the majority of presidents are non-Brahmins.

Admission of Students to Government High School.

Mr. P. N. ADHAV (Satara District): Will Government be pleased to give the following information:—

(a) Number of students admitted into the Government High School, Satara, from villages in the district outside Satara city and camp from March to June 1922?

(b) Number of free and half-freeships available for pupils of—

(i) Advanced classes,

(ii) Marathas,

(iii) Depressed classes?

* Vide Appendix W.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The information has been called for.

House Surgeons in Civil Hospitals.

Mr. S. K. BOLE (Bombay City, North): Will the Government be pleased to state—

(a) Why the posts of house surgeons at the big civil hospitals are not given to qualified Indian doctors ? and (b) Why should Indian hospitals have Anglo-Indian military assistant surgeons as house surgeons ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The matter is under consideration.

Agricultural Experimental Farms.

Mr. S. K. BOLE (Bombay City, North): (a) Will the Government be pleased to state whether agricultural experimental farms are being worked at a great loss ?

(b) Are the agriculturists any way benefited by these experiments ?

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: (a) Agricultural experimental farms are not run as business concerns and cannot be run at a profit.

(b) Yes.

Appointments of School Masters in Satara District.

*Mr. B. V. JADHAV: (a) Will Government be pleased to state how many new appointments of school-masters were made in the Satara district since January 1st, 1921 ?

(b) How many of these were Brahmins; and (c) What was the number of applications from Brahmins and from others ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: (a) 60 since January 1921 to 31st July 1922.

(b) 25.

(c) The number of applications from Brahmins and non-Brahmins was 350 and 500 respectively.

PRIMARY EDUCATION BILL (BILL No. XVII of 1922).

(Debate on the first reading resumed.)

Mr. G. C. BHATE (Kolaba District): Sir, I feel I must heartily join with my honourable friend from Thana in congratulating the Honourable Minister for the bold step he has taken in introducing the bill. The magnitude of the question is evidenced by the able report of the committee appointed for the purpose and it is a matter of commendation that the Honourable Minister has been able to put before the Council this bill in such a short time.

As the House knows the bill embodies two main principles: the first is compulsory elementary education, and the second point is to make better provision for the management and control of primary education in the Bombay Presidency. So, we shall have to look at this bill from these two points. The Honourable Minister has told us in his opening speech that the bill is a framework. That statement of his has a great potential value. From that statement it appears, that the main principles being accepted the select committee will take into consideration any suggestions that may be made in the debate. At this stage of the first reading therefore we are to see how far the principles of the bill are acceptable. Looking from that point of view, it appears that the bill has removed voluntary compulsion introduced by the Act of 1918. According to the Act of 1918, it was left to the option of the municipalities to which alone it applied to introduce compulsion. In his opening speech the Honourable Minister has told us that that Act was a failure ; and therefore the smaller municipalities have not been allowed the right to manage their own schools and have a school committee of their own. As regards that failure, the reason was not that there was any apathy on the part of the people for compulsion, but because of the financial difficulties of the municipalities themselves. From my own experience I say had the Government come forward at that time with liberal grants, as it is now provided in the bill of two-thirds of the total expenditure, many municipalities would have taken advantage of that Act. In my own municipality, we prepared a programme and asked Government to assist us with grant amounting to two-thirds of the total expenditure as it was found impossible to go in for compulsory education without such substantial increase in the usual grant. As the Government refused to increase its grant, the matter had to be dropped there. The failure is not, therefore, due to the apathy of the people but on account of the financial stringency of the municipalities. Now, this voluntary compulsion has been removed by clause 8 of the present bill. This clause is divided into two parts, one which relates to the duties of local authorities, and the other to the duties of Government. As regards this clause 8, the first thing that strikes the observer is that this clause makes no mention about the maximum period within which compulsion must be introduced. Suppose a local board does not do anything after the passing of this Act for five years and the Government also does not do anything, what is the remedy under the Bill ? Nothing. My submission therefore is that provision should be made that Government should ask the local authorities to introduce compulsion, within a certain period and if they fail, Government must do it.

Then, I come to clause 10. Even as regards this clause something must be said. The clause runs thus :

" The Government may after such enquiry ....."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : May I remind the honourable member that I have allowed free scope to the discussion and also reference to particular sections for the purpose of illustrating general remarks on the principles of the bill : but he cannot take every section piecemeal and then find a principle in it and then say it ought to be amended. That will be good matter for the second reading and the select committee. I think the honourable member for Ratnagiri has set a good example to show how the general principles can be discussed with reference to particular sections, and I think if the honourable member follows his example he will be on safe lines.

Mr. G. C. BHATE : Sir, what I was going to say was that clause 10 leaves it in the hands of Government whether to sanction a scheme or not. It is quite vague, which is not desirable. Clause 11 deals with the payment that Government have to make for financing the scheme. There is no mention about any definite extent to which the Government will finance the scheme. The Honourable Minister in this introductory speech has said that the Government will give the present grants plus two-thirds of the new expenditure in the case of the local boards and one-third of the new expenditure in the case of the municipalities. Now, this statement must form a provision of the Act itself, so that the local boards could rest assured that if they took upon themselves to introduce compulsory education they would get the present grants plus two-thirds of the new expenditure.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is there any precedent either in India or elsewhere, where out of the general revenues a specific portion is earmarked by a statute for a particular object or item of expenditure? Is that constitutional? My attention was called by the honourable member for Ahmedabad to the Goschen Act, but it turned out that it was a finance bill. In the case of a finance bill which emerges out of the budget and is voted by Parliament on the recommendation of the Crown, a particular portion of the budget estimates is appropriated for some specified purpose such as education, but there such bills are annually introduced as a corollary to the budget resolutions. I cannot allow the Council and the Government to be let in unawares on a point like this. However, I will allow a discussion of the questions, but I only warn the Honourable the Minister in charge, who, when and if this bill passes the first reading, will be the chairman of the select committee, to bear that in mind.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: On that point, I would like to know whether clause 11 is constitutional.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Government can propose a proportion. When they propose, it is presumed that the proposal is made on the recommendation of His Excellency the Governor as required by Rule 30 (1). Such a proposal creates a charge upon the public revenue and must receive the recommendation of the Crown before it can be entertained by the House.

"Accordingly if any motion or bill or proceeding is offered to be moved, whether in the House or in a Committee, which requires but fails to receive the recommendation of the Crown, it is the duty of the Chair that no question can be proposed on the motion or to direct the withdrawal of the bill" (May: 457).

The question is whether a specified portion of the revenue of the taxpayer can be proposed to be set aside for a particular purpose by a bill at the instance of an honourable member who is not a member of Government. I should like to know what the Honourable the Finance Member has to say in the matter.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Your ruling is most excellent, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: It is not a question of its excellence.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: You are absolutely correct, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: It is a constitutional question. Can the legislature fix a particular proportion of the general revenues to be appropriated for a particular purpose and fix it for a longer period than one year beyond the year's budget? Suppose there is a deficit in a particular year and Government have no money sufficient for the purpose, then what is Government to do? It must disobey the Act of the legislature. The question is whether the Council can agree to such a thing even if the Honourable the Minister in charge comes with a recommendation from His Excellency. I may be right or I may be wrong. It has not been done in any Act of Parliament that I know of. I have tried to go into the question, and that seems to me to be the position, as at present advised. I ask the Council and particularly the Honourable the

[The President]

Minister in charge to bear that in mind should the point arise if and after this bill passes the first reading. I give no final ruling now.

Mr. G. C. BHATE: What I submit, Sir, is that if there is no constitutional difficulty, it ought to be laid down in the Act itself that the present grants will be maintained by Government and that two-thirds of the new expenditure in the case of local boards and one-third of the new expenditure in the case of municipalities, will be borne by Government.

Then, when we come to the management clauses, we see that the management of the whole primary classes, that is, from Infant class to the VII standard as they are at present, is it to be managed by the school board which is to be formed under this bill when it becomes law. Now, as regards this management, one thing that strikes me is that the management of the primary schools by the municipalities has been taken away by this bill. As regards this matter, however, there is a recommendation of the Compulsory Education Committee that the management can be taken out from the hands of the smaller municipalities. However, they say in their report at page 37:

"We are in favour of the schools of all smaller municipalities being managed by district councils or a committee thereof, but we feel that some of them may consider that authority which they already enjoy is being taken away from them and for this reason we are disposed to give them the option of continuing to manage their schools directly subject to the approval of Government."

That is the recommendation of the committee and I think that recommendation ought to have been embodied in this bill. If a municipality is unwilling to manage the schools, well and good; the management can be transferred. But if a municipality is willing to manage their schools, then, of course, the management ought not to be taken out of their hands and some provision should be made in the bill on that score. In the opening remarks of the Honourable Minister it was said that municipalities with a population of 50,000 and above would be considered larger municipalities and all other municipalities where the population is below 50,000 would be considered as small municipalities. So a municipality like that of Roha will be considered a small municipality for the management of schools. So I say some provision on the lines of the recommendation of the committee should be made in this bill.

Then, as regards the last clause, about the rule-making powers, which the bill proposes to give to Government, all the vagueness in the clause ought to be removed. As regards the rules, one suggestion that can be made is this, that whatever the rules might be as framed by Government, they should be placed before this Council and they should be approved by the Council before they take the force of law. With these words, I strongly support the first reading of the bill.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI (Bombay City): Sir, the early years of this century form the landmark of the national demand for compulsory education in this country. It is, indeed, gratifying to see the introduction of this bill for compulsory primary education into this Council, for this bill gives Bombay the first honour, in the length and breadth of this peninsula, of introducing such a measure. The souls of the great men who fought in the battles for compulsory primary education in this country will smile when this bill is passed into law, of course with the necessary modifications. Dadabhai Naoroji, Telang, Ranade, Gokhale and Pherozeshah Mehta gave their best in insisting on the birthright of free education to the masses. Their names can be blessed, Sir, with happy memories. Their battles remind us.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I crave leave to remind the honourable member that this historical survey is instructive and interesting, but it is not relevant to the present debate concerning the principle and the general provisions of the bill under consideration.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI: I am thankful to you, Sir, for your remarks, but the importance of this bill.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. I hope the honourable member will accept my ruling and abide by it.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI: I do submit, Sir, that this bill is an important measure, particularly when it reminds us how the primary education has been delayed to this stage. The primary education movement, Sir, was formerly wrecked on the rock of bureaucracy, on the ground of barren finances and also on the ground of want of concord and harmony amongst the Hindus and Moslems of this country. To-day, Sir, we find that out of these three obstacles, the present bill has only to steer through the barren desert of finances, for which I am afraid this bill will suffer a great deal. It is not that we shall not be able to carry it into the statute book, but I am afraid that its practical working might be delayed for want of funds. Sir, in 1903, in the budget discussion of the Imperial Legislative Council also it was made clear that compulsory education—for the ignorance of the great majority of the people is the fundamental cause of their extreme poverty—was quite necessary, and that for the good of the country compulsory education must come. It was in 1912 that the Honourable Mr. Gokhale of happy memory introduced a bill for compulsory education, which, however, failed. Then in 1917 Mr. Patel's bill was passed of which this bill, Sir, is an enlarged edition. Mr. Patel's bill, Sir, had made a provision for compulsory education only in the municipalities, but this bill, Sir, goes a bit further and extends the scope both to the municipalities and the local areas. I beg to submit, Sir, that as the bill is worded to-day, in some of its aspects it is a retrograde bill as compared with Mr. Patel's bill. For, let us examine it with respect to the financial position of the local board areas. On page 10 of the report of your committee, Sir, it is said that "the total grant now amounts to the expenditure minus local fund cess and fee receipts". The Honourable Minister in charge of the bill has, therefore, rightly said that the local board areas are practically supported in the compulsory education movement at the expense of the Government. But the Honourable Minister of Education has given us the exact proportions of financal liabilities, namely, 12 per cent. will be obtained by the local boards themselves by one anna cess and 88 per cent. from the Government. Now, according to this bill, it is provided, Sir, in clause 11 that—

> "The Government shall agree to bear half the recurring annual cost of the scheme if the local authority is a municipality and two-thirds of the said cost if the local authority is a district local board not exceeding however half or two-thirds, as the case may be, of the cost as estimated by the local authority."

I beg to submit that this provision of finance for the maintenance of education in the local board areas is indeed a retrograde motion. For, before this bill was introduced, or, as I might put it, at present they are getting more than two-thirds or practically the whole amount whereas the Honourable Minister in charge of the bill provides only two-thirds from Government and one-third is to be found by the local authority. Now, Sir, if the Patel Act has failed, it is for the lack of finances, and unless greater facilities as regards finances are offered to the municipalities and district local boards, I submit, Sir, that this bill will also remain a dead letter. As regards the district local boards at least, I hope the Honourable the Minister in charge of the bill will see his way to increase the grant from the Government to the local board areas to a larger extent than is provided for in this bill.

Now, I come to the position of municipalities. Municipalities are supposed to be very favourite with the Honourable the Minister in charge of the bill. He has given them neither a decrease nor an increase. I must say the Honourable the Minister in charge is fully aware that the future powers for taxing the localities under the Local Boards Act are not so immense as they are under the Municipal Act. The power to secure money and the ability to gather more money for the purposes of compulsory education are more on the side of the municipalities as compared with the power and ability of the district local boards. I submit, therefore, that the Honourable Minister will see that sufficient provision is made by reducing the grant from the Government to the municipalities and increasing the grant to the district boards. Now, Sir, the facilities for education in the municipal area are much greater as compared with the facilities in the local board areas. It is the district, Sir, that contributes mostly towards the provincial exchequer; therefore, the district has got the right to have the first demand on the provincial exchequer for primary education. I therefore submit, Sir, that considering the facilities which are existing in the municipal areas compulsory primary education could be enforced in those areas at a cheaper cost as compared with the district local board areas. I hope therefore the Honourable Minister will see his way to take more from the municipal areas and give it to the district local board areas.

Then, Sir, as regards the question of Mahomedan compulsory education, I may say the Presidency proper will not have much difficulty, but as regards the Province of Sind the question of compulsory education forms a problem by itself. That province is very conservative and orthodox, and that being so, if proper measures are not taken, compulsory education in that province will not be profitable as it is desired. It has been stated in the report of the Compulsory Education Committee that the Mulla schools in Sind have been doubled and they are said to be improving and it is also stated in the report that if the unsatisfactory ones are weeded out, others might be recognized for compulsory education. I am afraid without the means of Mulla schools the question of compulsory education in Sind cannot be solved. My honourable friend from Sukkur (Mr. Pahalajani) has stated in his note on the special features in Sind that the Mulla schools are all fraud. Well, fraud or no fraud, if the school board of the local bodies is composed of most of Mahomedan members I will have no fears to entertain, and Mulla schools will no doubt in that case have proper searching and handling from the members of the school board. In his dissenting minute the honourable member for Karachi city (Mr. G. H. Kassim) has very well said that the people in Sind are conservative and that the Mulla schools are necessary in so far as they contribute not a little to the disarming of popular prejudice against education by pandering to the popular desire of religious instruction. Mulla schools, Sir, give elementary education to Mahomedans and they are therefore necessary so far as primary education of Mahomedans is concerned. I have no doubt that the school board which is to be created under this Primary Education Bill would improve upon the Mulla schools, and I am sure the Honourable Minister in charge of the bill would like to bring Mulla schools under the recognized schools—or approved schools—in that part of the Presidency, namely, the province of Sind.

[Mr. Ibrahim S. Haji]

The education of Mahomedans in the Presidency proper needs no comment from me as the Mahomedans of the Presidency proper are quite in touch with a large majority of their Hindu brothers who I am sure are willing and prepared to move with the spirit of the age, and I am quite sure that when proper facilities are given for their education in the rural schools,as also in the municipal schools, they need have no grievance. I submit, Sir, that Mahomedan members will not be disappointed to have this compulsory education in the Presidency proper.

The question of girls' education is still a greater problem with the Mahomedans. Special provisions and facilities will have to be made in this matter if this Council decides that compulsion must also fall upon girls. I am of opinion that no differentiation should be made between the stronger and the weaker sex. It is in the interests of the nation and the country at large that the boys and girls should have their training at an early age. Both should have equal facilities and particularly the sex which is susceptible to great religious instruction and sentiment. And therefore, I submit, facilities have to be provided in a larger way in the case of girls than in the case of boys. If necessary precautions are taken and provided for either by means of rules which are to be made under this bill or by means of insertion of a clause in this bill, I am sure my community will rise to the occasion for getting on in the interests of the country. Sir, as the reforms scheme has opened the way for self-government to this country, one would certainly expect a responsible Minister to bring in a measure of this sort and I am quite sure this House will congratulate the Honourable the Minister in charge for having introduced such a popular measure at the early stage of the reformed council. (The honourable member at this point commenced to read a quotation which was inaudible.)

"* * * *I cannot help feeling that when the principle of compulsory education is carried out successfully and the idea is realised without obstruction, the India of to-day will be to-morrow a second Empire as a self-governing state in the British Commonwealth. Education in India is twice-blessed—it is a blessing to the masses and a blessing to those....."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Are you reading a speech or a quotation from somebody else's speech ?

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI: I am reading a quotation.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Long quotations are not allowed. The Council would no doubt be delighted to have your own views instead of quotations from speeches of others which are available to all of us elsewhere. Quotations, so long as they are concise—one or two sentences—are allowed, but not a long quotation.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI: Finally I submit to this House that sooner or later this movement for compulsory education will be placed in a manner that will have to create extra taxation for this particular work. This is the most crucial point on which the success of this bill lies. But how is it to be solved ? I beg to submit, not by means of further taxation on the masses but by means of complete and strict retrenchment in the top-heavy administration of Government.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District): Mr. President, the bill before the House is a very important piece of legislation. I may say it is of first-rate importance. In order that it may be completely acceptable to the people and in order that it may do complete and whole-hearted good to the people of this Presidency, it requires certain modifications and changes in certain important respects. This bill, I am quite sure, if it is worked out in a right and monetarily liberal spirit both by the local bodies and by the Government in co-operation with each other, will cause considerable changes in the condition of society in this Presidency, and will bring benefit of the three R's to every village and every hamlet and to the house of every labourer and every peasant in this Presidency. It will help to create an independent and intelligent public opinion which is so much needed in this critical time in the history of India in the absence of which there is felt a serious handicap often-times in the smooth administration of the Presidency.

Now, Sir, coming to the object of the bill, the first sentence in the statement of objects and reasons runs as follows: "The object of the bill is to give effect to the recommendations of the special committee". May I say, Sir, the object of the bill as stated in the statement of objects and reasons does not contain the whole truth but it is only partially true? In this connection, I refer to two most important recommendations of the special committee. The first recommendation lays down the introduction of compulsory education as the ideal and goal to be aimed at. The second and most important recommendation refers to the line of action, it sets up a time limit within which this ideal or goal should be an accomplished or realized fact. Looking to the provisions of the bill, one could see that this time limit is conspicuous by its absence. On this point, I am inclined to be a little pessimistic about the results of this bill. Was it not in the absence of such a provision in the Act of 1918 that the failure of that Act was caused, and may I not think that the absence of time limit will cause inaction both in the local bodies and in the Government in successfully working out this Act? Therefore, I hope that the select committee will see its way to insert a time limit in the provisions of this bill.

Sir, the Honourable Minister of Education has told us that this bill will be worked out in the spirit of recommendations made by the special committee. Sir, with regard to the recommendations of the special committee, I am not in agreement with some of them, specially with regard to the introduction of compulsion or of the establishment of schools in villages which are now school-less or unprovided with schools. If the bill is to be worked out according to the lines chalked out by the special committee, the result would be, as some members have said, that it will be offering food to those who are already fed and starving the hungry. Sir, is it not a special concern of this Council that we should first bestow attention on and provide facilities for educating the children in those villages which are still unprovided with schools even after 150 years of British rule in this Presidency? And are these villages to go unprovided with schools when compulsion is to be applied in those villages and towns which are already provided with schools? Here, Sir, I cannot but refer to the able and masterly minute of dissent recorded by the honourable member for Belgaum, wherein he has made out a very strong case after advancing facts and figures and giving cogent reasons for showing and convincing that we must first establish schools in places and villages which are school-less now. Looking to the facts and figures given in the report, it will be seen that there are nearly 26,000—speaking in round numbers—towns and villages in this Presidency. Out of these, as has been pointed out in the report, 16,000 villages are still unprovided with schools; there are only 10,000 towns and villages provided already with schools. Is it not our duty, is it not our imperative duty I ask, to see that the 16,000 villages are first provided with schools, before we launch upon a scheme of compulsion in villages and towns which are provided already with schools ? It may be said that some of these villages are so small that it is not possible that any school could flourish in them. But, looking to the fact that nearly half of them, that is nearly 8,000, contain a population of more than 250 that argument is untenable and unsound. At any rate, those of them which contain a population of more than 250 and which are not provided with a school should be the first care and concern of any scheme either of compulsion or of the voluntary principle to be adopted under this bill. So, I beg to submit to this House that the question of the provision of schools for these villages ought to be the first and foremost concern of any scheme now or hereafter.

Now, coming to the question of the policy laid down in clause 11 of this bill, I may at once say that the Government have made a complete departure from the policy they have hitherto adopted. When the bill of 1918 was under discussion in the Council, Government gave the Council distinctly to understand that they would not make any agreement as to bearing any extra expenditure in connection with the introduction of compulsory education. We see in this clause Government have made a bold departure from the old policy and they agree to bear half the recurring annual cost of the scheme if the local authority is a municipality and two-thirds of the cost if the local authority is a district local board. This is a very salutary principle, and the Government deserves the gratitude of this Presidency for this bold departure from the old policy.

Now, Sir, with regard to the question whether this policy will be sufficient to make this scheme fructify in the case of municipalities, this is a very important question. Up to this time, the policy of the Government had been to bear half the cost of primary education in municipal areas. Under the Act of 1918, the Honourable Minister of Education has told this House, only four or five municipalities hitherto have been able to introduce compulsion within their areas. As has been pointed out by many honourable members it was not owing to the opposition of the people that many municipalities had not been able to introduce compulsion but that it was due to one reason and one reason alone—it was on account of their financial inability that the Act of 1918 was not applied by the municipalities in their respective limits. I know, Sir, that many municipalities approached Government for increase of grants, and, in the majority of cases, the reply was one and the same—want of financial ability of Government to assist municipalities. Up to this time the policy of the Government was to finance the municipalities to the extent of half of the cost of primary education. Looking to the provisions of the bill, it will be seen that the old ratio is to be kept up. With regard to the expenditure which Government is going to bear in the case of municipalities, Government undertakes only to bear half the expenditure on primary education. This policy takes us no further. If this ratio is going to be adhered to, I am afraid that compulsion will not be applied as zealously or as soon and as speedily as they would otherwise have done. So, unless Government comes forward with more liberal grants to meet the case of municipalities, it will not be possible for them to apply compulsion in their areas in the near future.

I now come to the question of management as provided in this bill. In this connection, I want to point out one thing, and that is that clause 6 provides that wherever a school board is established, then the existing primary school committee in any municipality shall cease to have any control over the primary education. I think, Sir, that this clause is unnecessary in the case of the big municipalities. Up to this time, these big municipalities have been looking to the management and control of primary education in their areas, and they have been successfully working out the provisions of the Act. Now, simply because compulsion is to be introduced in their limits, to take away from them the control which they at present have over the management of their schools, and to entrust it to a school board, the constitution of which will be quite different from that of the school committee, would be casting a slur upon the present management of primary education by the municipalities. The new school board will also add to their expenditure. If the school board is brought into existence, it will demand a new administrative officer, and his special establishment and the municipalities will have to bear all this unnecessary and additional work. If the present school committees, which came into existence under section 28 of the District Municipal Act, are empowered to have the control and management of primary education in their limits, the municipalities, having a secretary, a chief officer, and so many other administrative officers, can entrust the work of supervising and the management and control to all or any of these various administrative officers of the municipality. So, there is no necessity, in the first place, for dispensing with the existing school committees in district municipal areas, and, secondly, there is no need to appoint a special officer in the case of municipal areas.

Now, Sir, coming to the question of the constitution of the school board, it is really a good idea that the management should be entrusted to a body which may be constituted separately and distinctly from the district local boards, but I take exception to the method of constitution of the school board. It is laid down in clause 3 that the board shall consist of not less than ten and not more than fifteen members. Of these, the Government appointments may not exceed three, and the remaining members are to be elected by the local authority and are to include persons experienced in education, women, representatives of minorities, etc. That is to say, supposing a district local board resolves to appoint a school board of fifteen members, three will be nominated by Government; then there remain twelve; out of these twelve some places will have to be set aside for women, some places for persons experienced in education, some places for representatives of minorities, and if some municipalities are included, then some places will have to be set aside for the representation of municipalities. Practically it may come to this, that although a district local board has to find the money for the introduction of compulsion, so far as the management of the schools in their area is concerned, they shall have to appoint persons not from amongst themselves, but they shall have to appoint persons, the majority of whom will be outsiders, and not members of the district local board. Also, the word 'minority' which has not been defined in the bill may lead to endless complication and needless difficulties. So, it will be necessary to modify the provisions of this clause by at least mentioning that after setting apart a certain proportion of places for women, for persons experienced in education, and for representation of minorities, and municipalities, the rest of the members shall be from among the members of the board. Otherwise, if outsiders are to come in in an indirect way, and if the district local board is to be made wholly elective, then I certainly say that the elections will not arouse the necessary enthusiasm, and that good persons will not stand as candidates for election, for the important reason that the management of the schools will be entrusted to other persons, and that they will rather stand as candidates for election to the school board only. I concede that the school board is essential; but, as I have pointed out, the method of its election and constitution will, I hope, be looked into and amended by the select committee.

I now come to another important question that has been provided in the bill, namely, the question as to how children's attendance shall be enforced in schools. Machinery has been provided for the infliction of punishments. In the first place the patels are given this power and then the magistrates. Looking at the fact that people in this Presidency regard infliction by a magistrate of punishment as something like a slur cast on their character and reputation, may I suggest that the powers given under this bill to the magistrate of inflicting punishment may be transferred to the school board or to a special committee to be appointed by the district local board for this purpose? With these few remarks, I give my support to the first reading of the bill.

Rao Bahadur R. M. NILKANTH (Ahmedabad District): Sir, the bill before the Council is a courageous step towards the introduction of compulsory elementary education and as such it is a welcome measure. The administration of compulsory education cannot be separated from the general administration of primary education and it is proper that the two things have been combined in the bill. But, in doing so, the bill has trenched upon the powers vested at present in municipalities in the matter of primary education. This is not exactly what the Compulsory Education Committee has recommended. It states in its report:

> "The District Councils, City Municipalities, and such non-city Municipalities as have been specially approved by Government shall be the Local Educational Authorities for the purpose of primary education within their respective areas."

The bill, however, transfers the management of primary education from non-city or town municipalities to district local boards and in the case of city municipalities the bill restricts the administration of primary education to such bodies as have been specially approved by Government. I submit that this is not a sound principle. Town municipalities may be made to hand over primary education to district local boards, as the former cannot afford its cost. But city municipalities have got financial resources and they have acquired the requisite experience to manage and control primary education in their areas. In England at one time elementary education was in the hands of separate school boards, but the arrangement now is that every county council, every council of a borough with more than 10,000 inhabitants, and every council of an urban district with more than 20,000 inhabitants is a local education authority "for purposes of elementary education". I submit that this bill also should embody that principle with such reservations as may be necessary. The city municipalities must be allowed to manage their own primary education with the proviso that in special cases Government may have power to transfer the subject from their hands to those of local boards. For this purpose, city municipalities may not be those defined as such in the District Municipal Act but those with a population of 30,000 and more. As regards the smaller municipalities which are not allowed to have any direct hand in the management of primary education these bodies must be severally represented by at least one representative for each on the school board which will be formed by the district local board to manage primary education in their area. In the body of the bill a distinct provision ought to be made to that effect. In the school board matters concerning finance, education, etc., will have to be decided. Unless these small local bodies are distinctly represented on the board, I do not think they will have any interest in educational matters. Besides it is not fair to leave a municipality unrepresented on the board which will spend money for which the municipality will have to find money by levying taxes.

Further, the term of the school board has not been defined in the bill. No doubt there is a definition of the school board's term in the Local Boards Bill, but in this bill the term has not been fixed. As the bill stands, it is quite possible for a district local board to have two school boards under the two enactments, one with a fixed term and another without any term.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Surely the honourable member is a lawyer, and he ought to know that there is a definition in an Act of this legislature. If there is no definition of that term in any other Act, the definition in the previous Act will govern the interpretation of the later Act. The two bills seem to be intertwined, at any rate, for the purpose of education. The honourable member need not trouble himself about it. I assure him.

Rao Bahadur R. M. NILKANTH: With regard to the powers of making rules and powers of internal administration some of my honourable colleagues have rightly pointed out that there is too little left for the local authorities. Even in the case of the administrative officer, his pay and power are to be prescribed by Government while the local authority has to pay him and take work from him. I beg to submit that the local authorities which have to find money for expenditure on primary education must also have the right to make their own rules and regulations. The Government may have its determining voice. Under the District Municipal Act the municipalities are given power to make rules with the sanction of Government. This bill however leaves the whole power of making rules in the hands of Government entirely. The power of making rules in a similar manner should be given to local authorities under this measure, and that will give greater freedom to them. Government might make model rules which local authorities might adopt with such alterations as may make them suitable to their needs.

Coming to the question of finance, I do admit that it is right that the local bodies which want, or which are required by Government to introduce compulsion must find the money for it, but the present bill has no scheme for that principle. The local authorities, either a district local board or a municipality, must be given statutory power to levy an educational cess. Such a course will enable them to realize their responsibility in the matter. I do not think that it is proper that the local bodies should be called upon to meet expenses on education from their general revenues. Local bodies have other statutory duties, and revenues raised by taxation for the discharge of those functions ought not to be diverted to the purpose of education, particularly when compulsory education is introduced. I may point out that the smaller municipalities and district local boards are unable even to pay their teachers. They have little money for the performance of other duties. The general revenues of local bodies should not therefore be mixed up with the resources and funds required for the purpose of introducing compulsory education.

Coming to the question of control this bill gives the whole power to Government, and the local authority, whether a local board or a municipality, can be compelled after default under the provisions of this Act, but there is no provision for compulsion in case of default by a school board. The school board is quite independent after it is once constituted. I submit that the local authority which finds money for the primary education and is responsible for the scheme, ought to have some voice in the administration of the school board, and some supervision over the school board. The bill ought also to provide that Government will be able to compel the school board to perform its duties.

[Rao Bahadur R. M. Nilkanth]

Again, the bill does not provide when Government should consider a district ripe for compulsory education. Of course the report of the committee points out that different parts of the Presidency are not uniform in this matter: there are several districts which are backward and several districts in which the demand is not insistent. I admit that it is not possible to have a statutory time limit for this measure. I hope that the various recommendations of the committee will be carefully considered by Government in exercising their powers of compulsion. With these remarks, I support the first reading of the bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Before I call upon non-official members, let us have an official speech. I will call upon the honourable member, the Director of the Labour Office (Mr. Shirras).

Mr. G. FINDLAY SHIRRAS: Mr. President, it will be admitted that the speech of the Honourable Minister on compulsory elementary education was worthy of the reputation which he has already won in this House. It was one of moderation and strength and well considered. The speeches of honourable members who have criticised the proposals have also been full of good things and have been free of all personal malignity. I propose briefly to place before the House one or two facts which appear to me not to have been sufficiently dealt with, and I hope that when all facts of the case have been considered by the House, the bill will be sent unanimously to the select committee.

I think that I can speak for my official colleagues sitting behind the Government front bench when I say that we are proud to stand with the Minister in what is perhaps, if not the most important, at least one of the most important of the bills that have ever been introduced in any Legislative Council in this country since the Reforms.

Before I refer to these points I should like, Sir, to state that the Compulsory Education Committee has produced a report which is a State-paper of first importance. It is a fine, massive, and comprehensive piece of work, and no one who has read it would wish it to blush unseen and to waste its fragrance on the Secretariat air. The report was signed on the 15th of May and the bill which I hope to show to be sound in principle has been presented with the least possible delay.

Before proceeding to put forward certain statistical facts of compelling interest for the consideration of the House, I desire also to emphasise generally the necessity of improving our present position. I had the honour of being one of India's representatives at an Imperial Conference which met in London in 1920, and I remember the questions put to me by a representative of Australia at that Conference regarding the extent and causes of our backwardness in literacy. I felt, I may say, the necessity of our pushing along quickly with compulsory primary education if we are to obtain a high place in the councils of the Empire and if we are to accelerate the pace to attain Dominion self-Government.

[Mr. G. Findlay Shirras]

Since I came to Bombay, I have been almost daily brought into contact with difficulties which can be cured only by more and better education, and that education, I fear, must be of a compulsory kind. The greatest need in our labour problem at present is the need of better education. Education will make a decent life for all. A national higher standard of living cannot be obtained by an act of volition; its achievement depends upon economic possibility and that economic possibility in turn depends on education. It is useless to disguise that fact, however disagreeable it may be. Strike after strike occurs in Bombay and the worker is frequently at a loss to know the cause of the strike owing to lack of education. Again many petty tyrannies of life are engendered by ignorance. A few days ago there was a case, for example, of a hundred women striking in a mill because the forewoman was said to have exacted four annas per month from each woman worker. If I may be allowed to quote from the report of the lady doctor appointed in connexion with maternity benefits—the report was published in the Labour Gazette of September issued a few days ago—the House will see how much in another direction is put up with owing to sheer ignorance.

"In outside chawls I have several times verified the overcrowding of rooms. In one room on the second floor of a chawl measuring some 15 ft. × 12 ft. I found six families living. Six separate ovens on the floor proved this statement. On enquiry I ascertained the actual number of adults and children living in this room was 30. Bamboos hung from the ceiling, over which at night, clothes and sacking were hung, helped to partition each family allotment. Three out of six of the women who lived in this room, were shortly to be delivered. All three said they would have the deliveries in Bombay. When I questioned the District Nurse, who accompanied me, as to how she would arrange for privacy in this room, I was shown a small space of some 3 ft. × 4 ft. which was usually screened off for the purpose. The atmosphere at night of that room filled with smoke from the six ovens, and other impurities would certainly physically handicap any woman and infant, both before and after delivery. This was one of many such rooms I saw. In the rooms in the basement of a house conditions were far worse. Here daylight with difficulty penetrated, sunlight never, and sunlight we know is inimical to the life of most pathogenic organisms."

The Honourable the Surgeon General will bear me out in this appalling state of affairs which I hold compulsory primary education alone will eradicate. Had we compulsory primary education to-morrow, these facts would not continue to exist and the efficiency of the worker would be far greater than hitherto. A higher standard of life would exist and with it better conditions of living and increased productivity on the part of the worker. Take the case of Scotland as a good example. Ever since the 16th century education in Scotland has been pushed forward with great keenness. It was probably the first country in the world to have compulsory primary education. The country was poor, but since the time of John Knox in the 16th century, wherever there was a church there was a school. And what was the result? Even the cultivator benefited, as did the higher classes. He saw the advantages of improved cultivation. Before the introduction of root crops, every year he had to kill cattle and sheep and cure them before winter set in as there was no food, generally speaking, to keep them over the winter. But when these root crops were discovered—the people there were much better educated than elsewhere—they took to them and they are comparatively well-off to-day. This brought great wealth to Scotland which is by the way only one-third of the population of this Presidency. The same will happen in the case of this country. The more one studies these facts, the more one realises how our future prosperity is bound up with this important question.

But now, Sir, the main object of my remarks this afternoon is to put before the House several statistical facts, which have so far not been referred to,

[Mr. G. Findlay Shirras]

The latest census figures show us a very disappointing picture. Only 13·8 per cent. of the males of all ages of this Presidency can both read and write a letter in any language, as against 12 per cent. ten years ago. Only 2·4 per cent. of the women, females of all ages, in the Presidency are literate, as against 1·4 per cent. ten years ago. This is, I think, every one will agree, a very unsatisfactory state of affairs and the increase between the two decennial censuses is not so great as it ought to be. And if you look further into it, you find in Surat city for example, which heads the list for literacy, 32 per cent. only as literate. Poona city comes next, with 26 per cent. Bombay city and Ahmedabad, which come next to Poona, have got 24 per cent. Karachi has only 20 per cent. Again, there is a great difference between literacy in the towns and the districts. For example, in Ahmedabad city the literacy of both males and females is 24 per cent.; in the district it is only 10 per cent. In Poona city the literacy is 26 per cent.; in the district it is only 6 per cent. In Sholapur town 13 per cent. as against 4 per cent. in the district. In Karachi it is 20 per cent. in the city as against 3 per cent. in the district. And if you take the main divisions of the Bombay Presidency, you will find that literacy varies considerably. You will find Gujarat higher up in the list—very much higher than most people would expect—with 22 per cent. of literate males and and 4 per cent. of females as against 20 and 3 per cent. ten years ago. There is a large gap between Gujarat and other parts of the Presidency, specially in the Deccan and in the Karnatak. In the Deccan 11 per cent. are literate males and 1 per cent. females as against 9 per cent. males and less than one per cent. females ten years ago. In the Konkan the percentage of literacy among males is 11 as against 10 at the 1911 census; for females the increase is from ·9 in 1911 to 1·7 in 1921. In the Karnatak 14 per cent. of males and 1 per cent. of females are literate asagainst 11 per cent. males and one half per cent. females ten years ago. In Sind only 8 per cent. of the males are literate and the percentage is the same as ten years ago. Only 2 per cent. of the females in the whole of Sind are literate as against less than one per cent. ten years ago. That fact clearly shows that the bill cannot be delayed a day longer.

If you take the selected castes of the Presidency, you find the greatest difficulty. Take the Marathas. The Maratha community has only got 6 per cent. literate, as against the Vani (Khadayata) with 75 per cent. The Kaysath Prabhu has 73 per cent.; the Bhatia 72 per cent.; the Audicch Brahmin 70 per cent.; the Deshasth Brahmin 66 per cent.; the Chitpavan Brahmin 63 per cent.; the Ghanchi 60 per cent.; the Gaud Saraswat Brahmin 57 per cent.; the Shia Bohra 57 per cent.; the Sunni Bohra 44 per cent.; the Lohana (Sind) 34 per cent. These are the most literate castes according to the last census. In other castes literacy is terribly low. Among the Marathas it is as I have said only 6 per cent. and among the Mahars it is very much lower still—only 2 per cent. Surely no one is satisfied with this state of affairs. With illiteracy like this the treasure house of light is barred to many. The precious beauties of the Gita or the Koran must be to many unknown.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI: Is the honourable member quoting from the census report?

Mr. G. FINDLAY SHIRRAS: Yes, I am.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: What is the question asked by the honourable member from Bombay?

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI: My question was, is the honourable member quoting from the census report?

Mr. G. FINDLAY SHIRRAS: Yes; I quote, Sir, the figures of the census report, which is the only official source.

The conclusion, then, is, Sir, that the principles enunciated in the bill are sound. Some of us seem as it were to try to get water from a well and are not getting water at all. Others are receiving much too little to quench their thirst. What we do require more than anything else is the pure sweet water of compulsory elementary education, and I feel considerable pride in that this Council is adding another pebble to the cairn of India's future prosperity. After all, Mr. President, few realise the depth of the average British official's feelings towards the land in which he has made his home, and how deeply he feels as a loyal citizen of India for the welfare of his adopted country. Most of us spend the greater part, if not the whole, of our working life in this country. Our life's work is here, our struggles, our greatest joys and for some, alas! our deepest sorrows. We feel as civil servants that the whole future of India is bound up with more and better education, and to effect this we must have a bill somewhat on the lines of the one which is placed before us by the Honourable Minister. I think it is unnecessary to say that we should put aside all our selfish interests and passions and traditional prejudices and value the importance of equanimity. You all know the beautiful abhang of Tukaram which begins:

"Shāntīparate nāhī sukha."

Calm is life's crown; all other joy beside is only pain.
When passions rage and we are wrung with woe and sore distress,
Comes calm, and then—yea, Tukā knows it—lo! The fever vanishes.

Well, Sir, we have to look at the whole question with equanimity. All things considered, I think the House should unanimously vote for the first reading of this bill.

Mr. M. W. PRADHAN (Thana District): Sir, I rise to support the first reading of this bill and I do so because the bill, just like the Local Boards Bill, really goes to show that the reforms are not hollow but full of progressive realities. I think, Sir, I ought not to forget to congratulate the learned Education Committee, which was wholly manned by the honourable members of this House and whose elaborate report is so prolific in the suggestions and recommendations all round that the Honourable Minister, well-known for his quick grasp, took no time to conceive and deliver this bill to the House. (Laughter.) It has been urged, Sir, that the bill is not a panacea that will succeed in curing the disease of ignorance in every district and area alike, and that, too, when it is desired to have uniformity and equity in the incidence of taxation. But it will be conceded, Sir, that no matter what changes are made in the select committee when this bill attains that stage—and I have no doubt that it will—a nation-building legislation like this present bill will have to be given sufficient time to make it harmonise with the divers environments that are already existing throughout this Presidency. I entirely support the constitution of the school boards holding as I do the whole bill as an experiment. I feel, Sir, that the bill is long overdue in principle but I do hope that the Honourable Minister will not rest content until he is able to provide for a higher type of technical and scientific instruction with a view to turning out experts in this country. For, Sir, it is not the quantity of instruction merely but also the quality of instruction on which the progress, evolution and salvation of a country depends.

[Mr. M. W. Pradhan]

Referring to the honourable member, the Director of Labour Bureau who cited an instance when he said that this bill is intended to provide for the three R's—I fail to understand the meaning of it—he said that these three R's which this bill is intended to provide for, will remove the shocking instance of thirty souls living in one room 15 × 12. I fail to see, Sir, how the instruction which this bill is intended to provide for will remove that evil. Therefore I say that it is not merely the quantity of instruction but also the quality of a far higher order that will elevate any country. With these remarks, I congratulate both the Honourable Minister and Government on bringing forward this bill at this stage and I support the first reading of this bill.

Major C. FERNANDES ( Bombay City, South ) : Mr. President, I do not feel the slightest hesitation in supporting the first reading of this bill. The bill follows closely the lines suggested by an important and representative committee consisting of members of this house and appointed by the Council, and if I have judged aright, there can hardly be any objection whatever to the provisions of the bill. The bill to my mind constitutes a long step and an important step forward in the matter of compulsory education, the achievement of which has for long and for good reason been the dream of our politicians. The constitution of a school board for every local authority is a very welcome feature of the bill and I think this will be very much appreciated by the generality of the people. I note with pleasure, and so will I hope many in this House as well as outside it, that it is the intention of this bill to invest the school board with greater authority in the matter of compulsory education than is at present exercised by the local boards and the municipalities. I fervently hope that the people will come foward with an alacrity to avail themselves of the advantages of this measure. It will indeed be a great misfortune if for lack of endeavour on their part the benefits of this bill should not be wholly achieved. Much will of course depend upon the ability and the readiness with which Government would be prepared to supply the necessary funds. It is unfortunate that the bill has been introduced at a time when the finances of the country are not in a flourishing condition but there is no cause for despair. I do hope that the necessary funds will be found.

The bill provides that in the area where compulsory education is adopted, education shall be free and the management be left entirely to the school boards. I do not know if this provision will do away with all the obstacles. I have heard it said often that the cost of books is becoming increasingly prohibitive and beyond the means of the poor parents. I believe the matter has been brought to the notice of Government and I hope every effort will be made to diminish the cost of books and other requirements of children. It is only then that we could hope that the way of compulsory education will be made easy.

I wish to take this opportunity of referring to the case of primary school teachers. The wages recommended in their case by the committee appointed by Government in 1920 were no more than a living wage.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Is that relevant to this bill ?

Major C. FERNANDES : I shall show, Sir, how that is connected with the bill before the House.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : It all depends on how you connect it with this bill.

Major C. FERNANDES : I merely wish to say that I feel that the special committee has not dealt with this question with the sympathy it deserves, and I think we ought to take this opportunity of, at least, giving them what that committee suggested and which apparently would meet with the wishes of the people concerned, namely, the primary school teachers. Their case seems to me rather hard and in the present economic conditions, I think we ought to allow them at least a living wage. It is very important that the people should be kept contented with their lot so that we can get better work from them and also that we may attract a suitable class of men to the service.

[Major C. Fernandes]

As I have said already, the bill to my mind is not a contentious one but one that should readily command the acceptance of this House; but there is one point, however, I would like to refer to, namely, cause 19 which empowers a police or revenue patel to convict and fine a person who infringes the provisions of this bill. There is of course an appeal to a magistrate provided to prevent abuse of power given to the patel; but I think it would have been perhaps better if we had given this power to a committee or a village panchayat as in that case there would be fewer chances of abuse and hence fewer occasions for appeal. But this is a matter which ought to be taken up by a member who could reflect the sentiments of villagers better than myself. I do not wish to pursue the matter further. With these words, I gladly give my support to the first reading of the bill.

Mr. A. N. SURVE (Bombay City, North): Mr. President, when first I received this bill, my impression was one of great disappointment. I thought that when we were asking for bread, a stone was being given to us. I thought that this bill was a mere repetition of the bill of 1918. That bill, we are all aware, did not achieve what was expected of it. The other reason of my disappointments was that the half and two-thirds grants which this bill gives to the local bodies being less than the present grants would act as a check upon the spread of education. I was also under the impression that urban areas were being preferred to the rural areas, where education was very badly wanted. Again, the Government, we all know, is handicapped at present on account of financial stringency, and it led me to believe that the efforts of Government were not likely to be very zealous in the spread of education. But, when I heard the honourable mover of the bill, much of my misunderstanding was removed. First he explained to us that the proportion was to apply to the new or additional cost only, and it was his intention to give simultaneous attention to the urban and rural areas. Next, he was in favour of adopting the ten years' programme laid down by the majority report, and he assured us that Government was earnest about the spread of education. Sir, having received these explanations, my attitude towards this bill was changed. At first, I was disappointed, but now I think that there is no cause to be apprehensive, and it is our duty to help the Honourable Minister in carrying out his intentions. I shall now make a few suggestions.

With regard to the school board, we are told that the school board is to consist of from ten to fifteen members. Out of these, three are to be Government nominees. We do not know whether these nominees are to be officials or non-officials. If they are to be officials, I emphatically protest against their being placed on the board. To place official members on the school board would retard the spread of education. Official members always look at things from the point of administrative convenience, they introduce much red tape, and their presence generally acts as a sort of check to the enthusiasm of other members. For this reason, I think that, at least in the initial stages, the other members of the school board must have a little more freedom, and the Government nominees should, as far as possible, be non-officials. Then the school board is to contain women. It is a very desirable thing to have qualified ladies on the board. But I am very doubtful if we will get enough qualified ladies in all districts. Therefore, I think women should not form an essential component of the board. If they can be found, by all means we should accept their advice and co-operation, but if they are not available, then we must not delay our operations till we find them in sufficient numbers. Then, about the minorities, the school board is to have a representative of the minorities. May I ask why the Maratha and allied castes also should not be represented? You may say, they are in the majority, but I am afraid that the representatives of these castes may not find a place on the school board. Therefore, I think it is better to have representatives both of the backward as well as of the depressed classes on these boards. Then, I should like that the members of the school board should be elected from among the members of the district board. If the majority of the members of the school board is to consist of outsiders, then there will be no link between the school board and the district board, and at the time of the budget there would be friction.

Next, I come to the question of grants. The present grant is 88 per cent. and the grant on the additional cost will be 66⅔ per cent. Under this arrangement, the local boards are likely to suffer great disadvantage. First of all, under this bill, they are going to lose the income which they at present derive from the fees, and in addition to this loss they are saddled with the additional burden of introducing compulsory education. Additional substantial sources of revenue are not given to them and I am afraid that it will be an impossibility for the local boards to introduce compulsion. One of the clauses of the Local Boards Act lays down that that body is to discharge its obligatory duties to the extent of the funds at its disposal. If the funds are not enough, how are they to discharge this duty which this bill casts upon them?

After recess.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: I was saying, Sir, that the local bodies will not be in a position to provide for the educational wants of the people under the conditions mentioned by me before we adjourned. In a village there were about 100 students and these students had to wade through water for about a distance of 2½ miles during the rains to attend a school. The villagers even consented to build a school at a cost of Rs. 2,000, and with the greatest trouble a teacher was given to them. The moment the number of students reached 90 the teacher said that he was not going to register names of any more students, because he was not able to manage the already existing number. As a matter of fact, these thirty or forty students were shut out. This happened in a village in the district of Ratnagiri. So this distinctly illustrates how, because the local body is not in a position to provide the necessary facilities for education, the students are obliged to waste their precious time of youth.

Then, the next thing I wish to refer to is about the default of local bodies. We are told that if a default is made by a local body the Government will appoint an officer, and he will carry out the programme. Sir, I beg to say that the Government officer will carry it out, if there is money in the hands of the local bodies. The clause states that if any local body makes default, the officer appointed by Government will carry out the scheme and that the expenses should be paid by the local authorities to Government. My whole idea is that, instead of giving power to local bodies, the Government should reserve in their hands the power to levy taxation and give liberal grants to local bodies. The first local board bill was discussed in 1882 or somewhere thereabout and the idea underlying that bill was that the local bodies were brought into existence for decentralisation of power, the Government was to accept the responsibility of giving them funds, and the local bodies were expected to carry out the work in their respective areas. That idea must be emdodied in this bill also. We cannot expect local bodies to levy taxes and carry out the programme of education.

[Mr. A. N. Surve]

The amount of grant which the Government is to give is to remain fixed irrespective of the increase or decrease in the number of students.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Not when the number of students increases.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: The fine which the committee has recommended is Rs. 5 but the bill provides for only Rs. 2.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I remind the honourable member that he is going into details not affecting the principle of the bill? Whether it should be fixed at eight annas or one rupee may be left to the select committee to consider and can be discussed here at the second reading of the bill if it passes the first reading.

Mr. A. N. SURVE: I have come very near to the end of what I have got to say. The Honourable Minister has given us several assurances, and I hope the select committee will see that they are embodied in the bill. Lastly, I congratulate the Honourable Minister for the several good points in the bill. The two points which appeal to me as most important are that where primary education is to be made compulsory it is also made free to children of both sexes, and secondly it gives liberty to local bodies to fix the subjects and the curricula, which is a good thing. To conclude, I support the first reading of the bill, and I wish it to be understood that I give my support to this bill on the understanding that the assurances given by the Honourable Minister will be carried out in full.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District): Sir, I join the chorus of congratulations that have been offered to the Honourable Minister for the courageous and bold step he has taken in introducing a piece of legislation of national importance from the point of view of the masses. Though the Honourable member, the Director of Labour, said that Englishmen have stood for the masses, I think it is this reformed Council that is responsible for the measure. While congratulating the Honourable Minister, I am afraid I have to say that the provisions of the bill are somewhat meagre, and indefinite, and too meagre to give the public an idea as to the period within which compulsion is to be made universal; and secondly, how and in what manner better arrangements are made for the progress of primary education. I understand the object of the bill is two-fold: to bring about universal compulsion—within what time will be decided later—so far as elementary education is concerned, that is, the infant standard and standards I to IV. The second object is to make improved arrangements for the supply of primary education—that is what is stated in the statement of objects and reasons. I submit the legislation proposed is not sufficient compared to the magnitude of the task. We have to remember, Sir, that provisions relating to primary education are now found not in one single enactment by itself but scattered over various laws and resolutions passed by Government. The committee specially appointed for this purpose has recommended at page 42 of its report:—

"We propose that a separate and comprehensive Primary Education Act should be framed, dealing with the whole question of the management of primary education and containing in addition the provisions necessary for the introduction of compulsory education."

Having regard to these facts, it was expected that in this bill Government would make all points clear. I therefore propose to examine all the provisions and point out whether and how far those provisions are sufficient and in what particulars they are deficient. I propose to divide my remarks under four heads: first of all, the constitution and powers and duties of the school board; secondly the procedure which is laid down to make elementary education compulsory; thirdly the financial aspect, i.e., the division of the expenditure between the provincial Government and the local authorities, and lastly, provision of teachers, inspectors, etc.

Now, dealing with the first point, namely, the constitution of the school board, I may at once say that I entirely approve of the constitution of a separate school board. And in expressing my approval I wish to say that from my experience of the school committees, I think it is necessary to have experienced men of education in them. Unless a separate board is constituted, it seems to me that the members generally elected to these boards are likely to lack in that quality and ability which is necessary to carry on a department of education as it were. It will be remembered that very wide powers are to be entrusted to these school boards. Even when the old Local Bodies Bill was being discussed it was pointed out by men like Sir Pherozshah Mehta that it was necessary to have educated men represented on the municipalities in order to carry on the administration efficiently. Now, Sir, even in those days it was recognised that some kind of qualification based upon education was necessary. Now, we are going to have only one uniform qualification for election to municipalities. We must face facts boldly: it is no use ignoring them. Knowing the illiteracy which prevails among the masses and remembering that the population is great, I think there is a necessity for the present at any rate of having a separate board competent to deal with the whole question of primary education. Now, I have a word to say about the constitution of these boards. The board is to consist of ten to fifteen members, of which not more than three shall be appointed by Government, and the rest shall be elected by the local authority. I think that the number is somewhat limited. It has been apparent from the previous speeches in this House that smaller municipalities who will be deprived of any authority to control education in their areas will have to be given some representation. In fact the section says that the board shall include representatives of minorities, and if the local authority is a district local board, representatives of municipalities in the district which are not authorised by Government to manage their own schools. Take for example, my own district. It contains eleven talukas and seven or eight municipalities. If the school board is to be a separate entity, it stands to reason that some of the municipalities, if not all, should have a representative on the school board. With the limitation put on the number of members of the school board—it is only 12—the difficulty of representing all municipalities is obvious. Then there are the taluka boards to be represented. There is, in my humble opinion, not enough scope for the representation of all these interests, and I would ask the Honourable Minister to widen it so as to give a chance for a somewhat fuller representation. In my opinion the smaller municipalities should have at least each one representative on the school board to represent their interests.

[Rao Bahadur R. R. Kale]

As regards the point raised that no official should be allowed to be put in on these boards, I beg to point out that nomination is not so very objectionable. The nomination is to be made by the elected members of the district local boards, and therefore it will be extremely improbable that there will be any unnecessary official element on the board. My only suggestion is that the board should consist of a larger number of members.

Having dealt with the constitution, I shall now turn to the powers and duties of these school boards. In regard to that there is only one clause, clause 4, which says:

"The powers and duties of the school board shall be as prescribed. It shall perform the duties of the local authority for which it is constituted in respect of primary education and if the local authority is a district local board, it shall also perform the like duties of the municipalities in the district which are not authorised by the Government to manage their own schools. The school board shall also enforce the provisions of this Act."

Excepting this one clause, there is absolutely nothing to indicate what the powers and the duties are, for which rules have to be provided. There is another clause later on, clause 15, which says:

"The subjects, curricula, books and standards of teaching of approved schools shall be as prescribed."

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Read the next part of that clause.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: Yes, what is it? It says:

"but may be altered by the school board with the sanction of the Government to suit local requirements."

So the school board has to perform the duties and powers in respect to education. But that is too vague, and I submit, Sir, if you refer to clause 15, it will be seen that there you have a small indication of the subjects which will be the subject of rules. The clause reads:

"The subjects, curricula, books and standards of teaching of approved schools shall be as prescribed."

There even, you will see that it is only "The subjects, curricula, books and standards of teaching of approved schools." Now, "approved school" is defined as follows:—

"Approved school" means a place in which instruction in elementary education is given and which is for the time being approved by the school board."

So that, it does not include a full primary school. The difficulty is that you have, therefore, not even the power, vague as it is, of prescribing the curricula, books, and so on, in respect to primary education as a whole. I mean this is a defect which appears to me rather serious. My point is that you have an opportunity here that has to be taken—in fact that has been seized already, in a way—of laying down certain indications of the duties and powers of the school board which should be laid down. For instance, if you refer to the English Education Act, you will see, Sir, that section 2 says:

"It shall be the duty of a local educational authority so to exercise these powers as to make or otherwise secure adequate and suitable provision by means of central schools—

(1) for including in the curriculum of public elementary schools, at appropriate stages practical instruction suitable to the ages, abilities and requirements of the children;

(2) for organising in public elementary schools courses of advanced instruction for the older or more intelligent children;

(3) to make or otherwise secure" and so on.

The point is, here are the purposes of the rules laid down in the Act itself, and my humble submission to this Council is that some such similar provision should be embodied in the Act itself indicating the purposes for which the rules are to be made. No doubt, the matter is to be left to rules, but generally speaking, whenever the rule-making power is given to a certain body—the Government in this instance—it must indicate the purposes for which the rules are to be made. If that is so, then the public have something before them which serves as a sort of guide to them. And if you will turn to the recommendation of the Education Committee, you will see, Sir, exactly what is stated there at page 43 is as follows :—

[Rao Bahadur R. R. Kale]

" We recommend that the curriculum should be modified and simplified where necessary so as to bring it in closer relation with the pupils' environment."

It will be seen, therefore, if a special Act is now being enacted and if, as has been made clear in the preamble itself, provision is to be made for this compulsory elementary education and better management and control of primary education—by which I understand upper primary education—I think, Sir, that this is going to be an Act which is consistent with the system of national education. I call it national in the sense that it affects the well-being of the whole nation. This is of national importance and, therefore, I call it a national system of education. In the English Education Act, the preamble reads :

" With a view to the establishment of a national system of public education available for all persons ".

I submit, Sir, we have an enactment here somewhat similar to this. There will be time when it will be developed gradually and it will be time then to introduce modifications from time to time as circumstances permit. But there must be a skeleton or frame-work in the bill itself to make us alive to the necessity of laying down certain purposes in order to serve as a guide on which the whole scheme of national education is to be built, and having regard to the cry raised with regard to the defects of the present system of education, which have also been recognised in the Montford Report and which are—" The system has failed to train Indian boys for practical work, to train their character owing to the absence of moral "—and I may add religious—" education, to train the rural Indian to become a more practical farmer instead of an indifferent clerk." These are the defects which have been pointed out. So far, Government have tried to get a number of clerks. The time has now come when the number of clerks obtained is too large to serve their purpose, and now that rural areas are to be taken in hand for education, we ought not to follow the same method even in these elementary standards which has served us in the past, but we must make a departure and we must lay down the standards, curricula, etc., suited to the agricultural needs of the country. Most of the people affected by this Act certainly will be the agricultural population. Therefore, I think I have made myself clear as to what I desire in this connection.

Then, there is clause 25 about the rules. That clause, Sir, also to my mind is not very clear, nor sufficiently wide. It says :

" The Government may by notification in the Bombay Government Gazette make rules for the purposes of this Act."

As was pointed out by you, Sir, it does not say " consistent with the provisions of the Act." That is a matter which requires to be set right. But the purposes mentioned here are confined to " determining the powers and duties of local authorities, school boards and school board administrative officers and their relations with the Government Educational Department". That is exactly what is stated in the earlier part of the clause, but the subsequent part of the clause says : " and the conditions regarding the pay, qualifications and terms of employment of the teaching, inspecting and supervising staff". No other purposes are indicated. Only the pay, qualifications and terms of employment of the teachers, inspectors and supervising staff are the things which have been specifically stated. I know it may be argued the clause is wide and wide power is given to you to make any kind of rules under the Act. That is so; but I think it is necessary, when a rule-making power is given and especially as when those rules are framed they come at once into operation without this Council having any opportunity to discuss them, that we should make everything clear as to the purposes for which the rules are to be made. This power of rule-making is a very high-handed instrument given to the executive. It is a blank cheque given to the executive to do what they like. There is no further real check over them. There ought to be a standing committee in a matter of this kind. However, my submission is that our purpose will be served if some indication is given in the bill itself as to the purposes for which the rules are to be made, like a suitable arrangement for attending to the physical condition of children, discipline and punishment for non-attendance of children, and, last but not least, the moral condition also, which is a very important factor in my humble opinion. All sides ought to be placed in the forefront in the programme that is going to be laid down. Hitherto there has been a complete neglect, I know, because a foreign Government refuses to interfere with religion and they have kept themselves aloof. But I submit that the principles which are common to all religions, those eternal verities of religion and morality, should at least be made to form part of the curriculum. I am aware of the press note issued lately by Government, but I submit that some provision ought to be made by which we should see that side by side with state education, there ought to be religious and moral education at least wherever there may be a desire for such education.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The question whether religious and moral education should form part of the curriculum is an administrative matter not embodied in this bill and not relevant to its principle, which is all that can be discussed now.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: Sir, the English Education Act, says that it shall be the duty of the local educational authority to make provision for including in the curriculum all sorts of matters. It is section 2 which will show that in the enactment we can point out the various matters for which provision is to be made in the system of education.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That is all right in general terms, certainly; but all these questions whether religious and moral education should be introduced and whether the teaching should be in vernacular and so on are administrative matters not within the principle of this bill. I quite admit that in general terms you may refer to them to elucidate the principle of the bill.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: In general terms it may be said, and some provision might be made; and looking at the history of English national education, one finds that this question of religious education has occupied the attention of the educational authorities. However, I will not dilate more on this point. I only submit that the purposes should be enumerated and that they should form the guide for those who make rules.

After having finished with the first part, namely, the constitution of the school board as well as its duties, I will now proceed with the second point, and that is the point as to how far compulsion can be introduced so as to make elementary education universal in a given time. Complaints have been made by member after member that although the report of the Compulsory Education Committee has laid down certain time, why that limit should not be stated in the provisions of this bill. Personally I do not know why such a provision cannot be made in any sections which deal with these points, namely, sections 8, 9, 10 and 24. These are the sections which deal with the procedure to be followed for the purpose of achieving our aim, namely, bringing about compulsory education. Now, as one honourable member has said, this bill is an enlarged edition of the Patel Act, and unless and until you lay down that it is the obligatory duty of the local boards or of Government, I do not think that the end is likely to be achieved. There are two ways of doing this: one to say so in the clause itself, clause 8, that it shall be the duty of the local bodies and not merely "a local authority may by resolution, etc." and secondly, when we go to clause 10 it says Government may sanction such a scheme. Then clause 11 says "If the scheme is sanctioned, etc." Clause 8 (2) also says "A local authority if called upon by Government so to do, etc." So that even there there is that "if". If a local authority declares by a resolution, then Government should make it obligatory. So everywhere you find that conditional nature, and you stop with a power which is discretionary and there is nothing obligatory, and therefore there is no mandate in the Act itself as it is. In the absence of that the result may be—I do not say it will be, but that it may be—that judging from the results that we have so far seen from the working of the Compulsory Education Act in municipalities every one of us finds that in one thing or the other the same results may ensue. I therefore submit that there should be a time limit put upon the local authorities to introduce compulsory education from time to time so as to make it universal throughout their jurisdiction. "There shall at the end of two years", make it that way, or if not, say "if a local authority fails to do so, then Government must be made to have that obligatory duty cast upon them". It will not do to make it only discretionary to Government also. There should be cast an obligation to insist upon the local authority to bring about that stage. So I submit that these are the two remarks which I wish to make so far as clause 11 and the other clauses which relate to this matter are concerned.

Then I come to the third point, and that is the point of finance. With regard to that honourable members have already expressed their views. I have calculated, Sir, some statistics so far as my district is concerned. The assurance given by the Honourable Minister came upon some of us as a great relief, namely that the grants to local board schools hitherto given shall be maintained, because it is now 85 per cent. whereas you reduce it to two-thirds hereafter. Otherwise we would have been in a worse position by this Act. Therefore, as I said, it was a great relief to some of us when the Honourable Minister made that announcement that the previous percentage of the grant, namely 85 to 90 per cent—it varies from 85 to 90 per cent—the percentage which is now being given to the board, will be maintained and that it is only with regard to the new areas that will come under the operation of the Compulsory Education Act further on, that the grant will be limited to two-thirds only. Taking that assurance, I think it is necessary to embody it in the enactment itself. After all, this is the Council, this is the Ministry which is now in power and which has now given certain assurances, but unless we have them embodied in the statute itself, I submit that it is not safe merely to leave things in that manner because the consequence will be that it will not be very wise to rely upon the mere assurances. Even now in the local boards in my district our resources are limited and it is not possible to carry on without the grant. For the last two or three years we have been receiving demands from 100 villages for new schools and a demand for 250 teachers for being employed in the existing schools, but our resources are limited and we have called upon Government to meet our needs. Hundreds of applications have been pouring upon the district local boards—I hope my honourable friend, the Director of Public Instruction, will bear me out on the point—and Government is not going to give us anything more. And for that reason if on the voluntary basis people are prepared to go in for more schools, still their wants will have to be set at rest for which funds will have to be found but to supply which Government have no money to spare. If the same condition of things continues, my fears are that it is no use saying that Government's coffers are empty and that therefore Government cannot help. It is my firm conviction that the duty of providing compulsory and free education must be looked upon by Government in the same light in which they look upon police, law and order, and the other departments of administration, in the light of an unavoidable and solemn duty imposed upon Government to carry out which they should try to find funds either by taxation or otherwise. What I would suggest is, as I have stated, that clause 8 should be amended in such a way as to say :—

"A local authority may by resolution declare its intention to bring about compulsory education, but in doing so, it should say that it should submit a scheme to provide for free and compulsory education within the areas subject to its jurisdiction in such a manner that the whole of the said area within its jurisdiction shall be brought under compulsion within, say, seven years, or as the report recommends, within ten years within the whole of its area."

And the next clause which reads something like this :—

"A local authority if called upon by the Government so to do...."

should have the "if" omitted and I would suggest something like the following:

"A local authority shall be called upon by Government...."

These are two ways in which I would suggest that the bill should aim at achieving the desired object.

If as my honourable friend the Minister of Education has suggested that we must have education, compulsory education for girls too, then even with his present offer it is hardly possible to meet the existing wants of education so far as boys are concerned. I have made some calculations which go to show that even if the whole rate of one extra anna local cess, which is the maximum given to local boards, is devoted to education—of course there are many small rates such as water rate and other rates which are required for the general needs such as roads, etc.—the rise of one anna in the local cess is allowed, making the total cess two annas; if the further one anna is devoted to education, I know so far as my district of Satara is concerned, there comes a deficit of Rs. 8,000—a small deficit no doubt, but I have not taken into account the non-recurring expenditure. I have taken into account only the recurring expenditure. At present we have about 38,000 boys in schools. The number will be 40,000 more and on that I have made the calculations. Therefore I say if girls also are to be educated, then the figures rise enormously. The expenditure for compulsory education will be Rs. 6,48,000 because at present the proportion of school-going girls is very small, because if there are 40,000 boys now, there are only 5,000 girls in the whole of my district. The expenditure will be Rs. 6,48,000 for girls and Rs. 4,08,000 for boys or a total of about 10½ lakhs. The present four pies in the rupee plus the twelve pies permissible will give our local board Rs. 1,25,000. The rest of the money therefore will have to be provided for by Government. Therefore, you will see what the extact position will be. I would therefore most strongly urge both on the

[Rao Bahadur R. R. Kale]

Honourable Minister and the honourable members of this House that unless and until the provincial Government undertakes to finance the educational policy, it will be impossible for local boards to make any progress at all in the direction of making primary education compulsory and universal. That is the conclusion to which one is driven and therefore if you are going in for compulsory education, you will have to make the necessary provision out of provincial revenues in the same way as you are making provision for police, law and order and other branches of the administration. You must realise this question from the standpoint I have placed before you and insist upon so much money being continued for the purpose—I mean so much money must be reserved out of the general revenues for compulsory primary education.

The Honourable Minister has told us that Government are going to continue the old proportion. So far as the local boards are concerned, the same proportion may continue, but so far as municipalities are concerned, we shall be in a worse position. I think honourable members understand what I mean. At present municipalities are getting only one-half. Under the bill they will get two-thirds if they are merged in the district board. Their contribution is at present less. In the case of local boards it is more than two-thirds, it is 9-10ths, but here it is 50 per cent. whereas the grant now will be 66 per cent., so that if you are going to continue the old proportion, so far as the local boards are concerned, you are giving them immense relief, but so far as the smaller municipalities are concerned, I think their position requires to be carefully considered.....

Mr. O. ROTHFELD: May I point out.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Unless the honourable member for Satara who is in possession of the House gives way, the honourable member (the Registrar of Co-operative Societies) should not interrupt.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: I am not going to give way. Then, the further difficulty which I want to place before the House is this, that municipalities which have already introduced compulsion in primary education will not be much affected by this bill. Only those municipalities which have not taken advantage of the existing Act will be affected by the passing of this bill. We in Satara have introduced compulsory education, so our schools will not be affected; it is only the schools which are to come into existence under the scheme which will benefit by getting the two-thirds grant. It must be made quite clear that the provisions suggested by me must be made in the Act itself; it is no use relying upon any reference in the speech of the Honourable Minister—the speech of the Minister can be and has been criticised and honourable members are aware that we have been often told that speeches of Ministers are no part of the statute and therefore no speech of any Minister can help you. Therefore, particular provision must be made in the Act itself, and the matter should not be left to mere individual statements.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: How would you provide for it in the bill?

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: I am coming to that. Clause 11 of the bill lays down the grants which Government will give where compulsion is introduced. In order to carry out my intentions a proviso may be added as follows:—

"Provided that the present expenditure upon local board schools as found on the day the Act comes into force shall be maintained."

[Rao Bahadur R. R. Kale]

By making that provision in the Act, the successor of the present Minister or anybody else will have no power to go back upon it in the future. Therefore, as I say, a proviso should also be added saying that it will not apply to municipalities, provided that the grants to municipalities will be wholly revised so as to bring them to two-thirds, if the smaller municipalities are merged in the local boards, as the Honourable Minister proposes to do. There are smaller municipalities, and some of them have introduced compulsion in the face of great opposition and at considerable sacrifice. They cannot be expected to continue to do so for ever. We have, for instance, all along been expecting that if primary education were introduced compulsorily, the grant from Government would be increased to two-thirds. I submit, therefore, that there should be another proviso added that municipalities which have been merged in the district local boards should be given two-thirds grant. That is a matter for the Honourable Minister and the representatives of the bigger municipalities to consider, and the principle that the grants to the municipalities should be two-thirds, whether past or future, should be incorporated in the bill so far as regards the provisions relating to grants are concerned.

There is also the question of fees to be considered. Primary education is to be made free only in the elementary stages, that is up to standard IV. From the fifth standard onwards to the seventh, fees will of course have to be levied. In that case, there is also the contingency that the number of boys in the higher standards of the primary course will increase, and that must also be calculated. At present Rs. 9 is the expenditure for a boy attending the first four primary standards and Rs. 12 is the expenditure for the higher standards, because the teachers are more qualified and better trained. In order to meet the expenditure, fees will have to be levied in the higher standards. Of course as the provision in the bill stands at present, by implication there would seem to be no objection to collecting the fees or raising the fees, to meet the additional cost that will be entailed by the expansion of the higher primary education. But I think there should be specific provision for that in the bill, and that may also be a point for consideration.

Now, I turn to the last question, and that is the provision of teachers, inspection, and so on. Here also, complaints have been made by honourable members that it is entirely left to rules made by Government. This is rather a very halting clause. When, under the existing Municipal Act, a municipality has the power of making rules—no doubt they require the sanction of Government—I should think that they should now not be deprived of that power. It is rather a revolutionary change. I say that this should be specifically mentioned in the bill, especially as the Honourable Minister in his speech made it clear that the local bodies may fix the salaries of their teachers, and so on. But where is it in the bill ? According to the present provisions of the Act, the municipalities have nothing to do with it. Government is to dictate and we have simply to carry that out. I submit that that will not do. We must have the power to make rules ; the local authority must be empowered to make rules ; otherwise the local authorities will be merely carrying out the mandates of Government. Instead of granting them greater freedom, you deprive them of what little scope there is for their freedom. Their powers must be laid down in such a manner that they must have some freedom. Unless there is that, no local authority can, really speaking, do anything. We have no control over the teachers. What happens now is that the teachers say " It is the Government to whom we look to for payment and promotion. They fix our salary." If the local body wants to take any action, they say "We do not care." If the present state of things is allowed to be continued, they will always look to Government as before and not to the local authority. The Honourable Minister said the local boards had not that power. Therefore, I am for an independent body. We are not asking the local board to be invested with these powers. But an independent body must be constituted which will consist of experienced men, officers, experts and other persons, and at least in this matter they should have greater power. Now that under the Local Boards Act there is going to be a board which is common to both municipalities and local bodies, there is no objection whatever to empowering them to make rules and submitting them to Government for sanction in the usual way. They must have some freedom in their hands. Otherwise their powers will be only nominal, and their authority will also be nominal. No doubt they have got the authority to enforce attendance and to appoint a committee for that purpose. But that is another question. I find, Sir, that the district board cannot extend its operations of work throughout the district, beyond enforcing attendance and things of that sort. Therefore some more powers must be given. As I have said, there is provision here for enforcing attendance, and the power is given to the local committee. You may also give the local committees some more powers. Beyond sanctioning the budget, they have no other power, except enforcing attendance. The district board may appoint a small committee out of the members of the taluka boards which will look not only to enforcing attendance but to other things. There must be some body in the taluka to do some other acts also, and therefore I submit that if the powers are widened, it will also satisfy the feeling of the taluka board members that they have no power whatever, excepting the sanctioning of the money, once for all. I submit therefore that these are the few points which I thought desirable and necessary to be placed before the House, and I hope the Honourable Minister will take into consideration the fact that more latitude is given to members the better it is for him in improving the bill in the select committee. Subject to these remarks, I support the first reading.

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL (Broach District): Sir, I support the first reading of the bill. In doing so, I wish to join my voice in the congratulations to the Honourable Minister for introducing this important bill. The three principal points in the bill are: first compulsion; secondly, the school board and the machinery for carrying out the programme, and thirdly, about finance.

About compulsion, the first principle, we are all agreed that without compulsion no progress can be made in primary education in the whole of India. Mr. Gokhale introduced the first bill on primary education and it was stated by the then Government that the bill was far in advance of the times. It is my humble opinion that the bill was quite in keeping with the times, but the Government of India.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: All that is gone. We are now dealing with the present and not the past action of the Government.

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL: If that bill had been passed, we would have been by this time on the high road.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: There is no use crying over spilt milk. We are now boiling the milk we have in hand.

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL: No member of this honourable House has objected to the principle of this Bill. The only objection that has been urged was with regard to the formation of school boards as well as the contributions which the local bodies are to make as their share for undertaking this responsibility. Coming to the question of the introduction of school boards, we must all accept it, because the administration of education by the local bodies is not in a satisfactory state. This is a sort of independent educational body composed of experts as well as rural area population which is necessary to concentrate and focus attention on the spread of education. But I am at one with the honourable member from Satara (Rao Bahadur Kale) in regard to the fact that the power to make rules and regulations should not be left in the hands of Government. I, therefore, respectfully submit that the fundamental powers of the local board in relation to the school board should be defined in the body of the bill; otherwise it will lead to difficulties.

Coming now to some other important points, I wish to point out that much consideration ought to be paid to the question of age. In India, especially amongst the poor classes, children of the ages of 5 and 6 are very tender, and even boys and girls of that age of lower classes toddle about in streets in nature's nude innocence and children of even 3 and 4 are fed on their mothers' breasts. I think that 6 and 7 will be the proper age for compulsion with regard to primary education. I am much pleased to find that in section 23 provision is made to exempt particular classes from compulsion. I know as a matter of fact in certain areas like Kanara and Nasik and the Panch Mahals there are hill tribes who wander about and whose children will not listen to their parents. If you introduce compulsion in their case, it will do more harm than good. Too much rigidity in enforcing compulsion will make the measure either inoperative or oppressive. Also I request the select committee to take into consideration the peculiar circumstances of rural areas. The children of cultivators are very useful to them during harvest season. The case of labourers in municipal areas does not apply to rural areas, for labourers in municipal areas earn good wages and can afford to send their children to school, while in rural areas the children of the poor are a great help to them in their occupations. Regarding education for women, we must not be in a great hurry. Caution must be observed, and pace will have to be accelerated very cautiously and very slowly, especially as regards the education of Mahomedan girls. In this case it is not so much the spread of education, not so much compulsion as the encouragement by scholaships and by the free gifts of books and slates which will attract girls to schools. I am in favour of Mulla schools. They learn the Koran. It is much better to have Mulla schools than to have no schools at all. As regards the constitution of the school board we require more experts of the educational department and an adequate representation from the rural boards. It is the rural boards that have to pay the bill and they require to be adequately represented. Regarding the framing of the rules, I entirely agree with the honourable member for Satara that the powers of the school board and the district board should be clearly defined in the statute.

Now, coming to finance, the whole crux of the question, compulsory education will prosper or fail according as the Government and the people willingly and heartily co-operate or not, and it all depends on their capacity to raise further taxation. During the course of the discussion, it has been mentioned that two-thirds of the new expenditure in the case of local boards and one-half in the case of municipalities will be borne by Government. But I would point out that the district boards have to meet various other demands and their running current existing charges are very high. I fail to see how even with the power of raising additional taxation they will be able to meet their share of the additional cost. It is all very well to be proud of this Education Act, but when the time comes to count the cost, most of the municipalities and the local boards will be at a considerable disadvantage. I hope Government will consider this point. The resources of Government and of the local boards and municipalities are quite different. Government have got large resources and with favourable seasons and favourable crops their revenues would be augmented very much, and even additional taxation might be imposed. But that is not the case with municipalities and district boards. I would deprecate any movement which is calculated to restrict the powers of local boards in regard to the maintaining of dispensaries and roads, and attending to other amenities of life, such as bringing relief to the poor and the sick who are undermined by ill-health and disease. If the worst came to the worst, I would spend all the money I had for these purposes rather than for accelerating the pace of compulsory primary education. If Government want to introduce this measure, as pointed out by the last honourable member who spoke, they must bear the cost according to their resources. The local boards and municipalities, as I have already pointed out, are willing to shoulder the responsibility according to their powers, but I appeal to the Government that they must share the cost according to their resources and capacities.

Having said this much, I wish to say a few words to honourable members as regards what we should do. As we are accepting the principle of compulsion, we must accept the responsibility to pay a part of the bill. In spite of our difficulties, we have already accepted the principle and the way to carry out our programme is to start a propaganda, as I said when the Local Boards Bill was being discussed, to change the mentality of our people and to change the mentality of our leaders. We are too apt to economise and always fight shy of additional taxation. We must impress on them that times have come when Government having limited resources cannot meet all the cost of the bill and that we must also contribute our share. If this spirit is engendered in our own people I am sure that we shall succeed in raising, if not the whole, at least in raising some part of the sinews of war which are required for the spread of compulsory education. If this is done, I am sure our people will respond to our appeal, and I know this from my own experience. The time has come when we must start a propaganda among the villagers. If we tell them what our wants are and tell them what our difficulties are and the difficulties of Government, I am sure our mission will be crowned with success.

Khan Bahadur D. B. COOPER (Satara District): Sir, I rise to support the first reading of the bill and to congratulate the Honourable Minister on the very wide sweep of his bill. The problem of compulsory primary education is a very difficult one; indeed more so on account of the financial stringency of the times. The famous committee appointed by Government for the purpose was sharply divided on some fundamental points, and the Council surely will appreciate the endeavour which the Honourable Minister has made in this bill to reconcile the conflicting points of view so far as practicable. The first point of difference was regarding where compulsion should start from, the majority declaring themselves from the city municipal areas, non-city municipal areas, and villages, one after the other in their order, while the dissentiates stood up for quite the reverse order. The policy of the bill is to make no such distinction and to favour a simultaneous attack on illiteracy from all sides, or in the alternative to cast on the local authority all the responsibility and odium of introducing a distinction, if it so desires. It is all very well for the impartial tone of the bill. But let us consider whether it will be within the scope of practical politics for a local authority to introduce universal compulsion all at once. The financial outlook before this agency remaining what it is to-day, and so long as the improvements theoretically effected therein by the new District Local Boards Act fail to materially alter it in practice, the local authorities will not be able to avoid going in only for a gradual conquest of illiteracy in point of the areas under its control. It is up to the legislature therefore to lay out some policy for the local authority to adopt and to follow. I have not the shadow of a doubt that the Honourable the Minister in charge has the interest of universal literacy at heart.

(At this stage the Honourable the President withdrew and the Deputy President occupied the Chair.)

I therefore appeal to him to see whether for the purposes of the introduction of the compulsory principle a programme beginning with villages which are quite innocent of the luxury of knowing what a school is like, and ending with the areas of city municipalities, where the voluntary principle is already making nearly satisfactory progress every year, is not more feasible than a reverse programme or a simultaneous start everywhere. There is nothing in the bogey of popular opposition anywhere, as the committee are unanimous in holding, so far as I am able to see. Why, then, push partially literate areas further up, and completely transform them first, leaving the backward areas intact meanwhile, and then come back and help the backward areas ? I beg to propose, therefore, that the question of small villages, for whose education not a pie has yet been spent either by the Government or by any local authority, should be taken in hand at first and the new district local boards should have no option but to leave compulsion alone.....

(At this stage the Honourable the President resumed the Chair.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : May I remind the honourable member that he is plainly reading his written speech ?

Khan Bahadur D. B. COOPER : The new local boards should have no option but to leave compulsion alone as regards the non-city or the city municipal areas handed over to their care, until they satisfactorily carry out the compulsion programme for villages.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The honourable member does not seem to take my hint.

Khan Bahadur D. B. COOPER : I therefore am one of those who would at once urge that the compulsion should start from the villages instead of taking its order from the municipal areas first and then coming downwards. Secondly, it must be made compulsory for the local authority to start compulsion from the villages. It is no use leaving it to their good and sweet will.

Before leaving the subject, Sir, I solicit the Council's attention to the fact that the demand for primary education is so strong and insistent in the mofussil that there is more danger in refusing than withholding compulsion where there is no provision existing at present for the education of an area. I may be permitted to cite the instance of my own district, Sir, and you will be able to see,

[Khan Bahadur D. B. Cooper]

Sir, that out of the 1,342 villages we have got schools in only 565 villages and 772 villages are without schools. The percentage of the pupils in these village schools is only 4·3, whereas the honourable member, the Director of the Labour Bureau, has just pointed out that in the cities the average is from 20 to 26. On these grounds, Sir, I solicit that if anybody deserves the attention of this Council for the compulsion of primary education, it is the villages first and then the city areas. Sir, in my own district, as I have just said, there are 14 villages which have got a population of more than 1,000. There are 140 villages which have got a population of upwards of 500, and these villages have no school, 89 villages have already applied for new schools and schools in 191 villages are already under-staffed. Therefore, I again urge that if compulsion is at all introduced, the principle of compulsion being accepted, it should be introduced into the villages first, as there is such a keen demand for it.

As regards the second point, the financial point, I would just like to bring to the Council's notice, Sir, that the main sources of our revenue of this Presidency are five, namely, (1) land revenue, (2) excise, (3) stamps, (4) forests and (5) registration. The total of these heads, Sir, is nearly Rs. 13 crores. The working expenditure of these five heads is Rs. 2 crores, and it leaves a balance in the hands of Government to the extent of Rs. 11 crores. Sir, you will be pleased to notice that out of the eleven crores of rupees the greater portion of the revenue is received from the agricultural class. That is the class which pays the most and receives the least benefit of the reformed Government. For that reason, Sir, I would like to point out that this eleven crores of rupees is spent mostly on police, medical, public health, industries, miscellaneous civil works, pensions and gratuities, and so on, leaving aside education, for which only Rs. 1,66,00,000 is spent, and out of that Rs. 1,66,00,000, primary education receives Rs. 1,00,00,000. Whenever a question of new taxation crops up, we generally go back and ask the agriculturist to contribute, as we want this extra revenue for the benefit of the agriculturists. But what about the revenue that the agriculturists already pay into the pockets of the Government? I therefore suggest, Sir, that instead of asking the agriculturists to contribute towards this compulsory education, we must first provide their legitimate demands out of the general revenue. We know that it is very difficult for the Government to make the two ends meet under the present circumstances. Even if that be the case, when the expenses for primary education are met out of general funds, whatever deficit then comes, the Council will be quite prepared to sanction any new tax which Government wants to impose. After withholding education to the agriculturist for years and years, as in my opinion it ought to have come not 25 years ago but 50 years ago, the point of burdening them further with a tax deserves serious consideration. It was the accepted policy of Government to give education to their subjects and that duty Government—allow me to say—has not performed during the past so many years, and, as they have now come forward with this bill for the good of the poor people, it is for them to see that these poor people's money is spent for their demands first and then whatever is wanted, Government may make their own arrangements to make up. I do not mean to say that the additional revenue should be wholly paid by Government, but, according to my calculation, Sir, the total expenditure of my district from the provincial receipts is Rs. 3,71,046 and from the local board receipts it is Rs. 77,604, that is, in the proportion of 82·6 per cent. against 17·2 per cent. We are quite prepared to pay our share of 17·2 from our local board, out of the extra cost that will be incurred to educate our agricultural class. With these remarks, Sir, I support the first reading of the bill and request the Honourable Minister to consider this point of finance more carefully in the select committee.

Khan Saheb A. M. MANSURI (Ahmedabad and Surat Cities): Sir, I rise with a mixed feeling of gratification and disappointment when I rise to have my say on this bill. I feel gratified because this bill aims at giving legislative effect to the desire and demand of the people for providing the means of education. But, when one examines the provisions of this bill, clause by clause, one is really disappointed that the bill is not to be so much welcomed as it is spoken about. The bill appears nothing but a hollow frame-work because there, it is left to the sweet will of the local authority and the sweet will of the Government whether to really introduce this compulsory education or not. Sir, looking to the financial difficulties of the local bodies and to the indifference of the leaders of the people who are now in a mood of non-co-operation with Government, I am afraid there will be no strong public opinion to bring pressure on local authorities and on Government to introduce this compulsory education. Sir, in this bill if you examine you will find that in one of the clauses it is said that the local authority "may" declare its intention to introduce this compulsory education. It further goes on to say that Government "may" sanction and entertain such a scheme or refuse to entertain such a scheme at all. So it appears clearly that it is left to the sweet will and pleasure of both the local authority and Government whether to introduce this compulsory education or not, or it is left for more prosperous times to come. Sir, later on it takes away the power from the larger municipalities who hitherto had made their school boards very satisfactory and which are conducted in a very able manner, and I do not see eye to eye with the Honourable Minister when this bill tries to snatch away from them their legal and legitimate power which they have enjoyed since last so many years. Further this bill provides for a very heavy penalty which it is very difficult for the agriculturist and the labouring classes to meet, because they ought to utilize their children to help them to earn their living. Sir, in the case of default, the local educational authorities have power to take the charge of and to hold all the money that they possess and to raise further taxation for any deficiency that might arise or occur. Sir, the best course in this case I would suggest is—and I would have been persuaded in this matter to congratulate the Honourable Minister if Government had come up with the proposal—to levy an educational cess and invest this money for elementary compulsory education and spend this amount after education from the so raised provincial fund.

Sir, this bill further provides that the school board shall include persons experienced in education. It clearly means, not less than the broad day-light, that this majority of the members will be those retired pensioners and Government servants who have had their experience in education, because in these areas you find very rarely persons whom you can really call, as the terms of this provision imply, educated persons. So under one plea or another these Government officers will be there on the board and really those tax-paying rustics will have practically no voice and no representation on the so-called local school authorities. Sir, in conclusion, I fully believe that the bill on the whole is an unsatisfactory one and not calculated to provide for the aim in view. It is very much like the proverb ye lakdáká ládoo he, dekhne ká he, khane ká nahi he, i.e., "this is a sweet ball of wood, it is to be looked at but not to be eaten." It is very much like that and I wish the Honourable Minister in charge, when the bill goes to the select committee would make adequate provision for all those little or big discrepancies as the Honourable Minister might think fit in the select committee. With these few remarks, I beg to resume my seat.

Mr. F. B. P. LORY: Mr. President, I am not one of those who think that the introduction of this bill will bring the millennium or that a new heaven and a new earth will immediately spring from under-ground. But, Sir, I think, that the remarks which were made and the figures which were quoted by the honourable member who sits on my left are sufficient to show that the present system of voluntary education has not been entirely satisfactory in its results. I believe, Sir, that the condition of the people of this Presidency in all spheres of their national life can never be put in a satisfactory position unless and until they have a system of universal compulsory education. We want two things. We want more education, and we want better education (Honourable members: Hear, hear). Now, Sir, I do not agree with those honourable members who have said that the desired end can best be brought about my multiplying schools on the voluntary basis. What we suffer from is the fact that as the result of the schools we have, the standard of literacy is abnormally low. And the only possible way to raise the standard of literacy to the required height is to make education compulsory. We know, Sir, that of those who enter our primary schools a very small percentage ever become literate—something like 82 per cent. of the boys who enter primary schools fail to continue in the schools until they have passed the fourth standard, which is considered to be the test for literacy, the test of education which is likely to provide continued literacy.

Turning, Sir, to the other fundamental principle of this bill, I should like to say a few words on the question of the transfer of control to the school boards which are to be constituted by the bill. Now, Sir, there may perhaps be some honourable members who are not aware of the fact that under the present Local Boards Act the whole of the control of primary education vests in the Educational Department; under rule 7 of the Rules under that Act the power of appointment, punishment and promotion, and practically all other powers as regards teachers, as well as the disbursement of all educational funds, vest in the Educational Department. Now, Sir, it is proposed to transfer the whole of that control, subject to certain safeguards, to the school boards. Some honourable members have cavilled at the amount of control which Government propose through this bill to continue to exercise over primary education, but, as the Honourable Minister pointed out, it is necessary for Government to continue to perform their first duty, which is to ensure that satisfactory provision is made for the education of the masses. Many witnesses, whose evidence was such that it deserved full consideration at our hands, expressed considerable doubt before the Compulsory Education Committee as to the wisdom of the proposed measure of transferring the whole of the control of primary education to the school boards. I have called attention to this because I think this House ought to realise how very important is this provision of the bill. In calling attention to this principle of the bill, I should like to show this House by quoting certain figures exactly what this Government has, through the Department which I have the honour to represent, done for primary education in this Presidency. Out of a total expenditure of 149 lakhs on public instruction from the provincial revenues in the year 1920-21, the Bombay Government spent no less than 77 lakhs on primary education. The whole of the rest of India put together only spent 134 lakhs. Bombay spent 52 per cent; the next Presidency was Madras, which spent 36 per cent. and after that the Central Provinces with 33 per cent. Honourable members will thus see that this Presidency has spent proportionately on primary education far more than any other.

Then, Sir, I might quote a few figures to show the number of children attending primary schools. The percentage of pupils in primary schools to the population in this Presidency is 4·1, i.e., a higher percentage than that in any other province in India. Madras comes second with 3·6.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I ask the honourable the Director of Public Instruction how this is relevant to the first reading of the bill. It may be relevant in so far that Government, having regard to what it has done up to now, may be expected to work out this bill in right earnest and not to make it illusory as some honourable members in their speeches have foreshadowed. It may be relevant in this way. Is that the point?

Mr. F. B. P. LORY: The point I wished to make was to impress on the honourable members of this House the importance of the work which is being transferred by this bill to the school boards.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Then, I have no hesitation in saying that it is irrelevant. I think the House would be grateful if the honourable the Director would address himself to the relevant points of the bill. The honourable member could make it relevant for the purpose of replying to the charge which has been brought that Government neglected primary education up to now and what assurance is there that it will be more earnest hereafter? From that point of view, I can see some relevancy but that case the honourable member has given up. I hope I have not broken the honourable member's thread of argument.

Mr. F. B. P. LORY: Sir, many criticisms have been made by honourable members against the various provisions in the bill, and as the Honourable Minister has said, I have no doubt they will be considered in the select committee, and the Honourable Minister will no doubt himself deal with those points to which a definite answer is required. But I must say that I have been somewhat astonished at the criticisms which have been made by certain honourable members who think that every detail of the scheme for the introduction of compulsory education, every detail of the financial provision to be made can possibly be included in terms of a legislative enactment. I would ask honourable members whether it is within the wit of any man to provide a bill which could possibly make provision for such a complicated and detailed scheme as would be necessary.

Some honourable members have objected to the constitution of the school boards. An honourable member told us just now that he would rather see the school board composed of the poor and the uneducated than see it filled by retired educational officers. Now, Sir, I hope that it will be possible to find for these boards many gentlemen who have had practical experience of educational institutions and who possess a working knowledge of the needs of education. But, Sir, I submit that, if such members cannot be found, then it would be better that this power was not given to the school boards at all. It is necessary, it is essential, that the school boards, who are to have the power of control, should contain a sufficient number of members who have a practical knowledge of education and of educational matters.

[Mr. F. B. P. Lory]

As I have said, Sir, I am sure that any reasonable criticisms which have been made will receive consideration from the Honourable Minister, and, if it is thought desirable to make any alterations in the details of the bill, they can be made in the select committee.

Mr. O. ROTHFELD : Mr. President, when I tried to catch your eye just before the last honourable member who spoke, I am afraid that it was with the intention, which appears to be very far from your own intention, of moving a closure. I feel now, in any case, that it would be very unfair to move the closure, especially as there are several gentlemen who desire to address the House, and, I have no doubt, efficiently contribute to the manner in which the scheme is to be put into practice. But I feel sure that all of us in this House are absolutely agreed with the primary purpose of the bill, which is compulsory education. I gathered also both in and out of the House that what I might call the minor principles of the bill have also met with general assent, and the most which honourable members desire to do is to express their views on the smlaler details as to the application of the principle, for the information of the select committee and the Honourable Minister. I had therefore proposed to move the closure, because I had thought that very possibly these details had now been sufficiently discussed. But, as I have said, at the present juncture, it would be unfair even to suggest that, and I am very glad to have this opportunity myself of mentioning one point, and, I hope, setting an example to honourable members who will follow me, in brevity. The point is one which was....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Not merely brevity, but absence of repetition.

Mr. O. ROTHFELD : The point is one brought forward by the member from Satara. It has been briefly alluded to by the Sardar from Broach. I trust that I will not be accused of repetition as I shall lay emphasis on it and in other matters of detail. But before doing so, I wish to express my gratification which, I am sure, every member in this House and especially the honourable members on the front bench must have felt, at that clear assurance which the honourable member from Satara gave, that whatever taxation may be imposed for purposes of education, he would accept it at once.

But the point which he made to which I wish to reply refers to the school boards. Now, the constitution of the school boards has had a good deal of criticism already in this House on this bill, and it had also a great deal of criticism on the kindred bill, namely, the Local Boards Bill. The clauses in the two bills, as regards this matter, are parallel ; they do not meet ; there is a slight discrepancy between them, and it will be for the select committees on the two bills to reconcile them. The select committees will have to consider exactly the constitution of the school board and the administration of education not only in the local boards but the municipalities in this Presidency. But the honourable member from Satara rose on this point to dwell, and perhaps at somewhat exhaustive length, on the absolute necessity of ensuring that the school board was filled, at least to a very large extent, by what he described (to quote his own words) as the intelligentsia. In Europe the term "intelligentsia" connotes a rather offensive meaning such as we hesitate to apply here. But I think that the honourable member for Satara, Rao Bahadur Kale, used that expression as being one of praise and not of reproach. I therefore venture also to make use of it. Now I am certain that the honourable member has not interpreted correctly the views of the House in this matter. I concede that there should be some persons on the board who have got experience of educational questions and the method of work connected with them. That, I am sure, was all that was intended by the Director of Public Instruction. It may be desirable to appoint to some extent on the board persons well acquainted with educational problems; but to say that the majority of the members of the board should consist of persons with intellectual attainments and sound experience of educational questions is not practicable. I do not think that the honourable member for Satara, Rao Bahadur Kale, would intend to apply the same rule to other walks in public life. I do not think he would be prepared to move a resolution that no man should be appointed a magistrate unless he has first graduated in forgery or murder. The most important point that should be considered with regard to the constitution of the board is that it should be representative of the district for which it is constituted, that it should be representative of the people who pay and who in the past have perhaps been insufficiently considered. It is the rural population that requires the amplest representation on the board, but I can assure the honourable member from Satara that he grievously misinterprets the temper of this House and of the country if he thinks they will remove the control of trained expert officials in order to replace them by an oligarchy, however intelligent.

Rao Bahadur G. K. CHITALE (Ahmednagar District): Sir, it is rather difficult to speak on a subject some of the conclusions of which were arrived at by some of us. However impartial we may be it will be said that we want to ventilate our individual views here. I want to avoid that position. I am therefore coming to examine the question in such a way as to place before the Council a full conception of the whole measure. I will endeavour to do so, and I do not know how far I shall succeed in it.

Now, Sir, we must take stock of things as they are. You have now two Acts, the District Municipal Act and the Local Boards Act. There are two local authorities, different in name, and having different functions. The District Municipal Act has already requisite machinery ready to provide for the necessary sources of revenue, and has ample powers of management and control of primary education. I wish to emphasise these two different positions. I say that primarily this bill deals with the lower primary stage. The upper primary stage is outside the scope of this bill. You have also to remember that this present bill is a complement to these two Acts. In the Local Boards Act, there are certain functions but there is no authority for making primary education compulsory. No doubt, there was the Patel Act, but it was optional and it has broken down completely in my opinion in the crucial test. As regards the Local Boards Act, the House will recognise that the district local boards have no sources of revenue. The only source of revenue which was earmarked for education was 4 pies, and this was placed at the disposal of local boards. Practically no powers were given to these boards as regards control or management, and the Director of Public Instruction was right in emphasising that management, control and everything else was done by the Educational Department. I put it to the House whether we want to undertake the responsibility of managing primary education, and if we do so, we should not provide the necessaries for it. The contention of my honourable friend is absolutely correct that if the local bodies provide the funds, they must have a voice in the management. But that difficulty will disappear as soon as the present filtered method of election is done away with and the members of the school board are elected by the representatives of the taxpayers themselves. I wish to draw the attention of the House to clause 50 (d) of the Local Boards Bill which is at present before the select committee:

> It shall be the duty (you will find that the word used there is "shall") of local boards so far as the local fund at their disposal will allow, to make adequate provision for the areas respectively subject to their authority in regard to the following matters, namely, the provision of suitable accommodation for, the visiting and maintenance of, and the training of teachers for, primary schools, and the general development and extension of primary education.

You must not forget therefore that the Local Boards Bill in making this an obligatory duty by clause 50 (d) has already provided for the general development and extension of primary education. If any detailed provisions are considered necessary, I have no doubt that the Local Boards Bill select committee will meet our wishes. But I want to emphasise the position that it is not true that in this particular bill there is no provision made for the development of primary education. The present bill is the supplement of other Acts. Those Acts will remain as they are and they will have to be read along with this bill. This is an enabling measure and gives the local authorities ample powers for achieving the object they have in view, viz., increasing the literacy and also making universal education spread as early as possible. It has been argued that this bill does not put any limitation of years, and the Honourable Minister is criticised that he has confined himself to the municipalities and urban areas only and not in the first instance to schoolless areas. I wish to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the bill extends to all areas in the Presidency and it has left to the local authorities themselves to make out a scheme and send it for sanction to the Government. Is it not a more logical position for Government to take than that Government should themselves be responsible for introducing compulsion in any local area? The recommendations of the Primary Education Committee have been cautious because they had to go on the evidence before them. The committee did its best to ask as many people to come forward and to put forward their views. What the committee have attempted to do is to focus the opinions of the witnesses themselves as far as possible. I hope you will allow me to say that that was the correct position for them to take. It was their duty to put forward the views of the witnesses who gave evidence before them and not to put forward their own views. Now, Sir, it is a very melancholy fact which oppresses my mind for more reasons than one that in the most advanced province in the Presidency, advanced whether in education or in wealth, there was the greatest opposition to elementary education being made compulsory. Not only that, but when I examined a Provincial Service officer of the rank of a Collcector who came forward and opposed tooth and nail the introduction of compulsory primary education, I was surprised that an officer in that position should have given such evidence, and I was wondering what was at the back of all this....

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: I rise to a point of order, Sir. Are the remarks of the honourable member for Ahmednagar about the evidence of a Government servant before the committee in order?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I do not think there is any point of order. Witnesses are examined before committees and when they come and offer their evidence, they certainly lend themselves to criticism. I have not yet observed any personal attack on the officer who gave evidence. Official views are certainly open to comment.

Rao Bahadur G. K. CHITALE: What I beg to point out is that it is no use imputing any motives to me. What I said was that in an advanced province like Gujarat when, from very experienced Government officers who came forward to give evidence when they were examined as witnesses, we found that result, it set me thinking, and I thought whether it was not best to examine this particular measure with more care. When, therefore, motives are imputed to me, you will please bear with me when I put before you the result of the evidence before the committee. On page 56 of the report, let us see what is stated as regards the views of these agricultural people, who cannot speak for themselves here and who, as a matter of fact, answered the three questions put to them directly. What do they say? You will see that the committee found it difficult to get at them. We tried our best and you will find that the result is summarised on page 56. Only three questions as given on page 53 were put to them. You will find that the committee, without troubling them with details, asked them three simple questions. I will draw the attention of the House to them. The first question was: "Are you in favour of a system of compulsory primary education?" "Will you send your children, girls as well as boys, between the ages of 6 and 11 to school, if there is one in your village?" A simple question put to an agriculturist. The second question was: "Do you think the people of the class to which you belong"—the classification is given of the castes or classes there—"would support a compulsory system of primary education and would send their children to school if there was one near their village?" (The distance is mentioned.) "If a compulsory system of primary education is introduced, do you understand that, if any child absents itself from the school, its parent or guardian would be liable to a fine, and do you accept this system and do you think that people of your caste will approve of it?" This was the third question. Now, these three simple questions were put to simple minds, and you will find the result of the analysis on page 56. You will find, Sir, there that even in the Deccan, where the total number examined was 346, the number in favour was 219 and the number against was 127, that is, one-third of these people were opposed to compulsion even in the Deccan. "You will have to allow yourselves to be fined if you don't send your children between 6 and 11 to the school. You will have to bear also taxation." All these questions were put to them in that direct manner, and you will find even in the Deccan one-third of the people questioned were against it. Then, take Karnatak. Very few people came forward of this class to give evidence there. You will find the total number was only 71 and it will be difficult to generalize from only so few. In the Deccan it must be said to the credit of those people that at least a large number came forward to give evidence. In the Karnatak only 7 came forward, and even there you will find that, as regards the third question and the second, 45 were for the questions and 26 against. Then, take Gujarat. We had a large number, 257, out of which only 40 were for and 217 against question No. 1. On question No. 2, 40 for, against 217. On question No. 3, for 23, against 234.

Now, Sir, I only put forward these figures before this House to say whether we are here for voicing our own individual views or to put before this House views of the people whom we represent. If that position is admitted, that we are here to voice the views of those whom we represent, my individual view does not come in. All I ask is, whether a little more caution, if I may say so, in not making compulsion altogether straightway applicable everywhere in rather a hasty manner, as proposed by the bill itself, is correct or not, and whether that position ought to be accepted in principle or not.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Before we adjourn for to-morrow, I should like to mention that it will be our duty to attend to-morrow at 5 p.m. the "At Home" party at Government House, which is in the nature of a command. We shall have to rise at 4 o'clock as the "At Home" party comes off at 5. Therefore, I propose, subject to the assent of the House, that we should sit to-morrow at 12 noon and go on till 4 o'clock. Does that meet with the wishes of the House ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : There is the Finance Committee meeting to-morrow.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The committees should yield to the convenience of the House. The demands of the House are superior to the demands of any committee. We have to attend the party at Government House at 5 o'clock and therefore we must meet earlier to-morrow than the usual hour. Therefore, the Council is adjourned till 12 noon on Tuesday, the 3rd October and will sit till 4 p.m.

PRIMARY EDUCATION BILL (BILL No. XVII OF 1922).

(Debate on the first reading resumed.)

Rao Bahadur G. K. CHITALE (Ahmednagar District): Sir, the present reformed constitution itself provides that if Government machinery is to be replaced by any power, the present control will have to be transferred to the electorate. It is the electorate which in years to come will come into power as the present system of Government gradually gives way. That means that the present administrative power will be so transferred to the electorate, namely, voters, and as the present voters' list as proposed in the Local Boards Bill is the same on which the local Council is recruited, you will find what a potential power the district local boards possess. I wish to point out, Sir, that the members who will be elected to the district local boards will be elected, returned, by the very voters who will also send two representatives of the district local boards to the Council. So then, the district local boards will be elected directly by the voters who will have also the further representation of two members on this Council. You will, therefore, see that if the members are of one mind, any strong Government can be made to bend to the will of the electorate. That is in fact the constitutional position. I am asking, Sir, if that is not the correct position to take, that instead of Government or we ourselves dictating to the electorate certain powers or certain things, whether it is not a proper process in the proper evolution of our constitutional system, rather than having an arbitrary measure from Government not based on the will of our own people.

Then, I would draw your attention to the report of the Primary Education Committee, from which you will see that this measure has been conceived in the proper spirit which has been put before it by the witnesses which appeared before it. Now, Sir, you will find that, as far as a very large proportion of our Mahomedan friends are concerned, very few of them came before the committee. That is a fact to be much regretted, but mere regrets are no good. You will find that, as far as even the Deccan was concerned, there was only one Mahomedan non-official witness. Is it not a regrettable fact that, when we ask Government to push through a measure of this importance, one important community, as far as their views are concerned, should be conspicuously absent in pronouncing what it thinks about such a vital measure ? You will find also at page 55 of the report that in Gujarat we come across very curious results. Out of a total of 59 witnesses, there were 6 for and 56 against as far as the first question on page 53 was concerned ; on question 2 there were 6 for and 53 against ; on question 3 there were 4 for and 55 against, and I was amused at the comment that was made by the honourable member for Ahmedabad representing the Mahomedan constituency, when he criticised the present measure as giving them stone when they asked for bread. Is the committee or is the Government not right in insisting upon caution when no materials have been put before the committee by a very large class of people whom this measure must affect in almost every-day life? I am putting it to you, therefore, whether the present bill is not conceived in the right spirit of the evidence that was placed before the Government and before the committee. If that is appreciated, much of the point of this criticism will be taken away—I hope it will, at least in the case of many of the honourable members who have spoken.

Then, Sir, I take up another position. There has been unfortunately a regrettable misconception of the scope of the bill. I say " regrettable " because, whatever the views of the committee have been, the Honourable Minister has done his best to get hold of the clear independent opinions and to base the measure on the views as were found in the evidence. May I know from any honourable member here in this House whether the Government has said anywhere within the four corners of this bill that this compulsory education shall not apply to the areas in which there have been no schools ? I shall be very much grateful if any honourable member will do that. It is not a fact that the bill has been framed in such a way that those who have food are being more liberally fed and those who are hungry have to go starving. I have read the bill very carefully, and I shall be much obliged to my honourable friends who will follow me if they point out any clause in which the recommendations of the committee in that behalf have been made. The committee has rightly taken up the line of least resistance. There is the responsibility thrown by this measure on the local boards which are in future to be made responsible to the people in the proper sense. Then, the Honourable Minister says that the district local boards should make out a scheme. Supposing a district local board knowing all its responsibilities goes forward and says that it will make this scheme applicable first to the area which is schoolless and takes the financial responsibility for carrying out this programme, may I know whether in any clause of this bill there is anything under which Government can say that that scheme shall not be put into force? It is not so. The only thing is this, that when we criticise a measure, we must have the right scope and conception of that measure before us. Therefore, much of the point will be taken away from my honourable friend from Belgaum's minute of dissent when the responsibility is thrown on the district local board itself in selecting the proper areas. That is the next point I wished to make.

As I have been saying, the district municipalities are governed altogether by another Act. You will find that this bill excepts city municipalities as a class. The city municipalities are governed by the District Municipal Act and as a class they have been excepted by this bill. I draw attention of the House, Sir, to the definition of the expression "local authority". "Local authority" means a district local board or a city municipality which is authorised by Government to manage its own schools. My conception is that the city municipalities, as far as they are governed by the District Municipal Act, appoint their own school committees. May I ask if there is any misconception on the point that the Honourable Minister will be well advised in having as far as possible a personnel of almost the same persons on this bill as on the Local Boards Bill so that the two measures will be made to fit in?

Another thing I wish to point out in this bill is this: those of us who have been in the actual administration of these local board areas and school boards and also city municipalities feel strongly that some of the smaller municipalities find at present the educational expenditure they have to incur on schools so heavy that, as a matter of fact, they find themselves unable to meet any other expenditure such as for sanitation, roads and so on. Take the instance of any town municipality in any district that has an income of about Rs. 5,500; as their expenditure on the present schedule of teachers' salaries may come to about Rs. 6,000, naturally they complain of course that this expenditure has been forced upon them and that they are not able to make both ends meet and therefore some of the municipalities have made proposals that it would be much better if their schools were handed over to the district local board, so that they will have a lighter schedule of taxation and they will have larger resources available for meeting the wants of their people so far as roads, sanitation and water-supply are concerned. Now, if you examine the present state of the finances of smaller municipalities in any district, you will find the same thing. All that this measure does is that if any of these municipalities like, they can go to the district local board and say that they want to hand over primary education to the district local board: then again, instead of getting half of the new expenditure, they will get two-thirds. It is said that in this arrangement some independence of these small municipalities will be sacrificed, but that is left to their choice. There is no intention in this bill to deprive them of their present powers, irrespective of their wills.

Then I come last, Sir, to the question of control and management, which has been rather a vexed question. I am prepared to say that the proposed measure for powers and control may appear halting, and I would have liked them to be more clear and the position of local bodies and that of Government defined in a more pronounced manner. But the position is this. The present method of management of primary education is open to very grave objection. There has been departmentalism all through, and that has to be put an end to, and you will have to substitute that by some system under which the people and the Government will have some degree of supervision and some degree of control. The position under the bill is this. The district local board shall elect a district committee which will manage the primary education and it shall have an administrative officer who will be appointed after consultation with and with the sanction of the Government. I think it is much better to have a committee elected by the district board, so that the committee being a delegate of the board, will be properly controlled by the board. It could be argued that by that system some persons whose presence may be absolutely necessary the district local board will not be able to get. The district local board will naturally elect from its own members, but I am sure that they will also try to reserve one or two places out of these to others who have special knowledge of education. For instance, it is just possible to have a retired deputy inspector of schools on the board to give his views. All this measure enables the district local board to do is to get such men if they are not elected. Then again, it is necessary, in order to give primary education as free and full a scope as possible, to have the attendance or the honorary services of some educated woman. Now, in several districts you find such women, but I do not know whether our country is so advanced as to elect women to the district boards : my own view is that they will not be elected. So far as girls' education is concerned, I think the district local boards will be decidedly in a better position if they are able to elect a woman to their school board. If the select committee can find any better method of achieving this object than is provided in the bill, I am sure the Honourable Minister will be able to accept their recommendation. We have now a responsible Minister and I am absolutely sure that he will square up all differences that are not important.

Then, there remains the question of finance. There are two opposite views which are absolutely irreconcilable. One view is that it is the duty of the Government to find all the money that is required from the general revenues. It was argued by the honourable member for Satara that there were 11 crores available and on that 11 crores primary education should have the first claim. I am afraid the figures he gave were not very convincing. You will find, Sir, that out of the 13 crores, 3 crores are already earmarked, for instance 1 crore of the land revenue is earmarked for inamdars, etc. ; and they are only double entries. Out of the balance about 5 crores or 5·7 crores are earmarked for the services generally. I am giving only broad figures. Then, there remain 4 or 5 crores with which we have to meet Public Works expenditure, expenditure on water-supply, education and what not. It is precisely for that reason that this House insisted on having a cut of 60 lakhs, and a cut of 60 lakhs has been achieved. Now, we want 2 crores for primary education being made compulsory, but I know of no resources from which Government can meet it. It is unreasonable to say that Government have somewhere a very big chest of money from which large sums of money can come at any time. The Honourable the Finance Member has said that there is no such chest. It is, of course, possible for Government to raise it by additional taxation, and, if you give Government the challenge, they will accept it : they will say " Give us the power to tax, and we will get you the two crores. " You know also that the Government in this bill offer a grant which though small is yet sure. I am not sure also whether the alternative suggested to you to tax yourselves within certain schedule of taxation, the sanction for which will have to be obtained, is not a better method than asking the Government to tax you in a particular way, which I have already referred to. I leave it to you to judge. As far as Government is concerned, perhaps they might accept any position which the House or the select committee suggests. Government's resources are unlimited and they will be able to put on taxes. If I were given a choice, I would accept the other alternative making Government responsible for two-thirds of the expenditure and making the local bodies responsible for the remaining one-third. This grant-in-aid of two-thirds should be the minimum, so that in any district, such as Ratnagiri, or in any other district where you cannot find the money required by means of taxation the grant-in-aid might be raised above two-thirds. The Honourable Minister on the administrative side should not be stultified in giving you more grant-in-aid. At the same time, I would rather like that this two-thirds grant-in-aid is relaxed in areas which can bear more taxation. I think that the two-thirds grant-in-aid, irrespective of liability to calamity and famine, and the capacity to bear taxation, will not be accepted by all. Some honourable members appear to be taking too narrow a view of the matter, and I may be considered to be speaking on behalf of my district. Naturally they are anxious that my district should not come forward for more grant-in-aid, but should be satisfied with the maximum limit of two-thirds grant-in-aid. If in the opinion of Government it is justifiable, then it is all right. The Government will sit there in judgment over all the local bodies and distribute the resources. The point I wish to make out is that there should be a little of 'give and take' policy. I do not think I need any more occupy the time of the Council, and I hope my views will be understood in the spirit in which I have expressed them.

Khan Saheb I. A. SAHERWALA (Northern Division): Mr. President, I rise to utter a note of warning against compulsion being introduced in backward districts like the one to which I belong. In my district there are two municipalities, one at Godhra and another at Dohad. The expenses on education at Godhra, when I had the honour of being its president, amounted to about Rs. 15,000, but at present, owing to high cost of living all round, and consequently the necessary increase in the teacher's pay, the expenses for education have risen to Rs. 30,000—a circumstance which has reduced the municipality to the unhappy position of not paying the teachers for the last five months. If this is the plight, Sir, without compulsion, I leave the honourable House to judge the extent of the municipal bankruptcy if compulsion is introduced.

In Panch Mahals district, to which I belong, there are many small villages and some big ones. The main population consists of Bhils, Kolis and Nayakdars, who are cultivators, and therefore would not care to send their children to schools.

I object, Sir, to clause 8, sub-clause (2), which provides for Government's interference, if the district local board does not care to make any such compulsory scheme. I also want that the district local board should elect the whole of the school board.

Again, Sir, although I see some Mahomedans are prepared to send their girls to school, I emphatically submit to the honourable Council that the Bohra community, to which I have the honour to belong, is strictly prohibited by religion to send their girls to schools. I therefore very appealingly urge that the penal clauses regarding girls' attendance at schools must not remain on the statute book.

[Khan Saheb I. A. Saherwala]

If, in spite of all these protests, compulsory education of boys at least is introduced, I would submit that, so far as my district is concerned, only the revenue arising out of forests should be utilised to meet the increased charge to some extent on account of compulsory education.

With these words, I oppose the principle of compulsion underlying this bill and resume my seat.

Mr. D. D. GHOLAP: (Addressed the House in Marathi): Mr. President, many honourable members have spoken on this bill which is being discussed in this Council for the last three days, and they have all congratulated the Honourable Minister, for what reasons I do not know. I am sorry I cannot agree with them in that respect. Last year when a resolution on the subject of compulsory education was brought forward in this Council, and I addressed the Council with regard to that, many honourable members thought that I was speaking on behalf of the depressed classes only, but any remarks which I shall have to make on this bill will, I trust, not be construed in that sense.

During the last session of this Council when my honourable friend from Satara (Mr. Jadhav) moved his resolution regarding the establishment of committee for the recruitment of non-Brahmin backward classes for Government appointments, speaking on the same I clearly pointed out how the Brahmin bureaucracy worked against the interests of the backward and depressed classes. In this bill also, I am sorry to say, the present conditions are attempted to be perpetuated, and I wish to try to tell the House how the provisions of this bill will work to the detriment of the depressed classes. It has been provided that the school board will consist of the members of the district local board. When the Local Boards Bill was being discussed in this Council a few days ago, I pointed out how the depressed classes are neglected there. It was not conceded that even nominations must be made independently from the depressed classes in local self-governing institutions, and I feel that there is not the least chance of that community being represented on the school board. It has been provided that the school board shall consist of fifteen members, out of whom three will be nominated by Government; the remaining persons are to include women, representatives of minorities and persons experienced in education. Supposing that ten out of the twelve are to be elected, the depressed classes will not have a chance there. Considering the fact that the depressed classes constitute a substantial part of the community, it is surprising that Government should prefer to look after the interests of women rather than those of the depressed classes. In the villages, the Brahmins being in the minority will be represented by nomination, and there being no experienced men in the depressed classes, there will be nobody to look after their interests. I submit that it is not fair to make no provision for the representation of the depressed classes in any direction.

Those municipalities which have not the right of looking after the schools will have to transfer their schools to the district local boards, and the expenditure will depend upon the number of children attending schools from the local boards, the share borne by Government being in proportion. Many honourable members have said that many of the smaller municipalities have not been able to take advantage of the Patel Act, because most of their funds are spent in sanitation and other matters. They have no funds to take advantage of the compulsory principle. Under this bill, I do not think the municipalities will go a step further, and in order not to spend money on education, some of them may go even to the extent of seeing that the number of children attending schools is not increased. In my opinion, it should not be left to the will of Government to introduce compulsion or not in any area as they please.

In clause 18 it has been provided that an officer should be appointed to increase the number of children attending schools. It has also been provided that if a child of school-going age does not attend school, the parents should be prosecuted and fined by a patel. But I think we are all aware how the patel harasses the people in the villages. I think it is not right that this power should be in the hands of one person or in the hands of the patel.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Who should have the power?

Mr. D. D. GHOLAP: A magistrate should have the power. Clause 23 of the bill says:

"The Government may by notification in the Bombay Government Gazette exempt any particular class or community in any area of compulsion or part thereof from the operation of this Act."

But I regret very much to say that my honourable friend from Ahmednagar, who was on the Education Committee, on which I had also the honour of serving, has pointed out that three questions were sent out to the ignorant people living in the villages with a view to ascertain their views on the proposed compulsory education measure and that those people did not give a favourable opinion with regard to it. But I would like to point out that the revenue officers, the police officers, and other officers of Government, who called these poor villagers to give evidence on these questions, probably did not give any previous indication to them as to why they were being called, and what was the object of it all. They did not tell them beforehand on what they were being invited to give evidence, and it is just possible that those poor village people, not knowing the exact object for which the evidence (that is, their opinions) was being taken and not knowing even the reasons for which they were called, may have got frightened, either through their own ignorance or by anybody's influence, and probably gave an unfavourable opinion. They probably thought that there was some particular object in the Government officers calling them to give evidence on the subject, and that they might come into trouble with them if they gave their opinion strictly according to their own real views and desires.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT (In Marathi): The honourable member was a member of the Education Committee and is now attacking the Government officers. He practically complains that they had perhaps coerced the witnesses into giving a particular opinion, instead of their own real opinion. The honourable gentleman as a member of the committee had an opportunity when the committee examined the witnesses to cross-examine them and ask them whether they had been either tutored or coerced by any officers of Government or by anybody else to give a particular view before the committee. Did the honourable gentleman cross-examine any witnesses in that way and try to ascertain whether they were frightened owing to any officers' influence or direction?

Mr. D. D. GHOLAP: No; I myself did not raise that point.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Therefore, the honourable gentleman should not on mere suspicion make any insinuation or any charge against any officers of Government or anyone else. That was a matter for the committee.

Mr. D. D. GHOLAP : No, Sir ; I did not make such a charge against the officers, and my remarks were specially directed to the evidence of such of the villagers as did not come before the committee at all, but appeared before the taluka or the district officers and gave their evidence there. They may not have given their real and sincere opinion before those officers through sheer fright due merely to their ignorance or simple-mindedness. That is what I meant and intended by the remarks I made. My point is, if those people were not told beforehand the nature of the questions that were going to be put to them and the reasons why, then it would not be right or proper on our part to form any conclusion or judgment on the basis of what those people said to those officers on the spur of the moment.

Now, Sir, my honourable friend from Panch Mahals seemed to suggest that in certain villages there, there are a great number of Kolis, Bhils and such other people, and that they are all uncivilised and will not take to education, and therefore compulsory education should not be applied to them. He further seemed to suggest that, if they did at any time take to education, then there would be difficulty for the other people in securing the services of coolies, etc. Well, if that is the object we should aim at, that particular classes or castes who may have been following any particular profession, at present or in the past, should not take to education or should confine themselves to those professions, then what would be the position of the untouchable and the backward classes ? There would be no encouragement to them at all in the matter of education, which is absolutely necessary for everyone of us. Therefore, my submission to the Council is that there should be special provisions in the bill to safeguard the interests of the untouchable and the backward classes.

These, Sir, are the views which I desired to bring before the House for their consideration on behalf of the untouchable and other backward classes, whom I have the honour to represent in this House. I am voicing their feelings as well as my own in this matter and I felt that their interests would not be served unless I put forward these suggestions before the Council. I have accordingly brought them to their notice and hope the select committee will give their earnest and careful consideration to all the suggestions I have made.

Mr. P. R. CHIKODI (Belgaum District) : Sir, this bill is a measure which marks an important departure in the system of primary education. But, Sir, I doubt very much whether this measure, which claims to introduce compulsion, will be successful in its working at all. For, the principle of compulsion that is intended to be introduced is very important in this way, that the removal of illiteracy is the fundamental duty of the State, and whether this bill goes to remove the illiteracy is the test by which the success of the measure is to be judged. Judged from that point of view, I think the measure is the most disappointing one that has been introduced in this House. Now, Sir, much has been said by my honourable friend from Ahmednagar on the point that the wishes of the village people ought to be consulted and that, in accordance with those wishes, a bill ought to be introduced in this House. But I say, if it is the fundamental duty of the Government or the State to remove illiteracy, then whether the villagers will it or not, compulsion must be introduced. That view I hold—and hold very strongly—and to that view my honourable friend from Ahmednagar has not given me a direct answer. I should like to put it again to the House whether such villagers, namely, the Bhils, the Mahars, the Kolis, and so forth, whose evidence has been taken not by the committee but by the District Magistrates or the Collectors, with the help of one official and another non-official gentleman, are in a position to say whether the fundamental principle of compulsory education is or is not to their interest. Is any man in the street, ignorant as he is, competent to give his opinion on such an important principle? It is for those who are driving the ship of State and who have got at heart the interests of the country as a whole to give their opinion on this principle. They are to judge whether a particular measure is for the interest of the country or not. When we are, therefore, considering this measure, it is no use saying that the Mahars, Mangs, Bhils and others were or were not for compulsion. Even supposing that we should select a line of least resistance in a matter of this kind, I would say, quoting from the very figures which the Honourable member for Ahmednagar district (Rao Bahadur Chitale) quoted, that the situation is more favourable than it is supposed to be, and Government ought to have taken a bolder step than it has taken. For, Sir, I calculated the figures this morning with a view to ascertain the probability or strength of the favourable opinions of these backward communities, and I find that the percentage of the witnesses who gave evidence in favour of compulsion comes nearly to 70 per cent. in the Karnatak. These communities, it should be noted, are only confined to such classes as the depressed classes or the wild tribes in the jungles. I would ask every honourable member of this House to go through the names of those who have given evidence in this connection, and then he will find that they are not of the communities as the backward communities such as Marathas, etc., are generally taken to be. Even for these communities, the percentage in the Karnatak is 70 per cent., in the Konkan it is 69·2, and in the Deccan 62·1. As regards Gujarat and Sind, I find, as I have stated in my dissenting minute, from the evidence that is recorded, that there is less favourable opinion as regards compulsion, but if you go behind the evidence and if you judge by yourselves, I would say that Gujarat also is very favourably inclined towards the introduction of compulsion. This is evident from the recorded evidence of persons who are capable of giving an intelligent opinion. My honourable friend from Ahmednagar district said that Gujarat was against compulsion, because a certain Government servant came before the committee and told them that it would be to a certain extent impossible to apply compulsion there. But, Sir, it is very hazardous to generalise in that way. I would ask my honourable friend from Ahmednagar district why he should not take into consideration the evidence of another equally enlightened and educated gentleman from Gujarat. That gentleman was in the Educational Department and, although he has resigned his post now, is still engaged in educational matters. He stated in his evidence before the committee that he was a Gujarati himself and being an educational officer toured through all the parts of Gujarat and was of opinion that Gujarat was prepared for the introduction of compulsory education. He might be wrong or he might be right. But the fact is there.

Then, Sir, in Sind also I do not think the situation is worse than in other parts; but, as I have already said we are to judge here as the custodians of the rights and interests of the ryots and we are to suggest such legislation as will be useful not only to them, but to all else who inhabit the country. If we look at this question of compulsion from this point of view, I am sure this House will come to the only conclusion that a bolder step for the introduction of compulsory education should be taken, and I hope the select committee will amend the bill in that way and also will effect changes in various clauses.

Then, Sir, I come to the point of programme.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Does the honourable member suggest that the bill ought to be framed on the lines of total compulsion and not restricted as now in the bill ?

Mr. P. R. CHIKODI : Yes, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I am enquiring as a point of order, so that there may be no difficulty hereafter. You say, in the select committee the principle may be enlarged. I do not think that the principle can be enlarged if this bill passes the first reading, because if this bill passes the first reading, the principle affirmed will be compulsion on more or less restricted lines and you cannot enlarge it afterwards.

Mr. P. R. CHIKODI : The Honourable Minister in charge appears to suggest that this bill provides for compulsion without any restriction. Am I right ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : No ; with restrictions.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : I rise to speak on the point of order, Sir. It appears to me that the best procedure on the point of order would be to regard "compulsion" and "free education" as the only principles underlying the bill leaving it to the House at the second reading to regulate the manner in which compulsion should be applied. It may be that the select committee may decide to restrict its application to a narrower limit than is provided in the bill. They might decide to enlarge it. So long as the principle is unaffected, its application may be regulated according to the views of the House at the second reading.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : All I rule now is that when once the principle of the bill has been affirmed at the first reading, it cannot be enlarged, that is to say, you cannot widen its scope. Whether you can enlarge it in such a way as not to enlarge the scope is a matter into which the select committee will have power to enter.

Mr. P. R. CHIKODI : I say, Sir, that the bill is really not a measure of compulsion, but it is a semi-compulsory measure and this, Sir, will make my point clear.

If you refer to clauses 8 and 9 of the bill you will find that "a local authority may by resolution"—it does not compel anybody to introduce compulsion,—and secondly, in the actual working of this bill, it will amount to this, that the local board might not introduce compulsion, say, for a couple of years, and then it is also not known whether Government will call upon that local authority to introduce compulsion. If it does, so far so good, but if it does not, what is the remedy ? I cannot say that the Honourable Minister in charge of this bill will always be at the head of the Educational Department; he gave us an assurance the other day that he would do this and do that. One cannot be sure ; what we want is a definite guarantee in the wording of this bill itself that compulsion will be introduced at a stated time under stated circumstances. Then only I would say there is real compulsion.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That is a matter which can be dealt with in select committee. Then in the matter of the question of principle, which is one of compulsion, I find if there is any restriction upon that principle in clause 8, it is of a discretionary character, namely, "the local authority may by resolution declare its intention to provide compulsory elementary education in the whole or any part of the area subject to its jurisdiction" and so on. It is left to the local authority. That is a matter which may be dealt with in select committee.

Mr. P. R. CHIKODI: The programme is the next point which I now take up. This point was first debated in the committee and much time was lost in arriving at a conclusion, and I believe strongly that this Council should lay down a definite time limit in the bill itself—at least five or ten years.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is it necessary to pursue that point further after my ruling on that point, namely that that is a matter which can be discussed in select committee and afterwards at the second reading?

Mr. P. R. CHIKODI: The next point of importance is the finance, and I say, as I have said in my minute of dissent, it should be a charge upon the general revenues of the province. I am very glad to note that Government have indirectly acknowledged that principle when they have put it in clause 11 that they shall agree to bear half the expenditure and so on. That principle, Sir, that it should be a charge upon the general revenues, Government have acknowledged and I particularly ask this House to remember this departure of policy by Government. It is a departure, because up till now Government did not agree that they were responsible for primary education and held that it was not one of their obligatory duties that the masses should be educated. If we read the proceedings of the Legislative Council when the Patel Act of 1918 was discussed, the then Honourable Member in charge of that bill clearly stated that it was the duty of the municipalities to find money for it and that, if Government gave a grant, it was only as a matter of favour. Government have now changed the policy—which is most welcome—Government have now come forward to admit that this charge should be upon the general revenues of the province and all that I ask is, say so boldly and in an open manner. That is all I want, and not what the Honourable Minister in charge of the bill said that Government were giving 88 per cent. or 90 per cent. Very well, if that is so, why don't you say that Government shall bear all the expenditure and take a contribution from the municipalities and local boards? Why don't you do it? These bodies only pay one-tenth while Government pays nine-tenths. If that is so, let Government say clearly that they shall bear all the expenditure and take a contribution from the municipalities and local boards and in this way.....

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The local bodies have to manage education.

Mr. P. R. CHIKODI: I am talking of providing elementary compulsory education. It is the Government's primary and imperative duty, it is the duty of Government to treat compulsory primary education as a national concern of the State. As regards any other kind of education of a higher character, of course, you may leave it to local bodies if you like, municipalities or local boards. The first necessity is that every citizen should be educated. That duty is binding upon Government and, if that is binding upon Government, they ought to bear the expenditure—the whole expenditure—and see that every citizen, every man, every woman, whether that person be a coolie or a bhangi, ought to be made literate. If that is acknowledged, it will be better and for that purpose, I think all the representatives of the backward communities will vote any taxation. I only want that that principle should be acknowledged and incorporated in this bill. Every one will support it. I think I am right in saying that every one will vote for any proposals of taxation if more money is needed for that purpose. The honourable member from Ahmednagar said that the impression is prevalent that Government have a large chest from which any amount of money can be drawn whenever required. We do not want the honourable member from Ahmednagar to come and tell us that. We know the budget just as well as he does. We also know that where there is a will there is a way. We know that if Government want to do a particular thing, they do not go and ask people when and how they should find money, but they proceed with the thing they want to do—they do not go to villages and ask every villager "How shall we find the money or how shall we do this thing or that"? We know that when once Government determine to carry out a certain thing, they will do it, whether people agree to it or not. I ask, why should not the same attitude be adopted in the case of this compulsory primary education also ? I say that it is better if Government recognise their imperative duty and come forward and bear the whole expenditure, and thus make the way smooth for the introduction of compulsion. It is necessary, as the honourable member the Director of Labour Bureau said, that no moment should be lost, and, if that is so, it is absolutely necessary that the necessary funds should be furnished by Government and compulsion should be immediately introduced—otherwise we shall not be better off, but shall remain as we are now, and our position will not be improved. Supposing we intend to apply compulsion immediately, the first year is taken up in taking census of the children and then we shall have to ascertain what the cost will be; then we shall have to choose what taxes will have to be imposed. When all these preliminaries are being gone through, the board goes out of office and who knows what the new board will do ? The Council may also go out of office. So it is absolutely necessary that the burden should be taken by Government themselves and then the expenditure should be borne by Government. If that is so, the local authority, whatever it may be, will be able to introduce compulsory education immediately.

Those are the views I want to place before this House and I hope the House will accept them. With these remarks and also with a hope that the suggestions that I have thrown will be attended to in the select committee and also in the second reading of the bill, I support the first reading of this bill.

Khan Bahadur S. N. BHUTTO (Larkana District): Sir, while supporting the first reading of the compulsory Education Bill, I would like to bring to the notice of this House that so far at least as the Mahomedans in the province of Sind are concerned, the move regarding female compulsory education should be very cautious. If you remember, Sir, while the Committee was recording evidence, at their sitting at Karachi on compulsory education the only witness, who was one of the representatives of people that were examined, was K. S. Dilmurad Khan Khoso, President, Jacobabad municipality, who opposed the principle of compulsory education—in fact the only one who really represented the true views of the Mahomedan population of Sind on the subject. Though he was criticised by the so-called enlightened educated class of people, whose anxiety is simply to secure advertisement for themselves, the only way from their point of view to build a reputation for themselves, and ignore the realities. Therefore, I suggest that there should be a provision in the bill that in the case of those communities who are opposed to female compulsory education, on their application they should be exempted from the operation of this Act. Sir, for example, I would give my own instance—I would not agree to send my girls to schools, but would rather provide for their education at home. However strong I may be on the point, I may be absolutely in favour of female education but, Sir, I do not belong to the city of Karachi or Bombay or Ahmedabad where social customs are not so rigidly enforced, so that I could have my own way. I dare not ignore the wishes of the masses, those thousands and thousands that follow me. I am bound to respect their views as their leader; otherwise there is every chance of my being outcasted. Time may come, when one can have his own way but as the circumstances are, it appears to be far off. For these reasons it is absolutely essential that there should be some provision in the bill which will make the application of compulsion optional in the case of female Mahomedan population in the province of Sind from which I come. Otherwise no number of magistrates will suffice to cope with the prosecutions unless a special staff is appointed at a great cost to harass and intimidate respectable class of people, which will not be a wise and proper course to adopt.

So far as finance is concerned, I do not think there should be any trouble. The public will have to find the money, whether they are taxed directly by the Government or by the local authority. It is all public money. Government does not create its own funds. People want compulsory education and the control, and they must share the burden of responsibility. With these remarks I support the first reading of the bill.

Rao Bahadur S. D. GARUD (West Khandesh District) : Mr. President, I may be permitted to join the previous speakers in congratulating the Honourable Minister on the introduction of this bill. He has in these days of financial stringency really taken a bold step to meet the universal desire for compulsory education. It is too late in the day to argue on the advantages of compulsory education; and it would be trying to convince the already convinced. There was practically a universal desire to have compulsory education when the Patel Act was passed. I was in this House along with the honourable mover of the bill, and we know with what enthusiasm it was received and with what enthusiasm it was passed. But subsequent years have also shown us that the Act was wrecked on the hard bed-rock of finance. When the Act was passed the Dhulia municipality also joined in the universal enthusiasm, and took up at once the question of submitting an application to Government. But, when we examined our resources, we came to the conclusion that there was no chance of introducing that Act in our city unless Government came forward with a grant of two-thirds of the expenditure. Government then were only sitting on the fence and had taken up the attitude of critics: they were in no mood to help local bodies to really put that Act into operation. Therefore the first application was objected to not only on this ground, but on several grounds. The matter was under consideration until His Excellency came to Dhulia in August last. He brought us the glad tidings that the Government had given their sanction to the introduction of that measure. Now, we are on the eve of cancelling that old measure and of introducing the measure before us which is more practical and liberal.

The two things which I take exception to in this measure are the question of the cost and the question of control. In the first place when the Municipal Act of 1883 and the Local Boards Act of 1884 were passed, when they were transferring the responsibility of education to local bodies, Government had to consider what share of the cost they should ask local bodies to contribute. The commentary on the Municipal Act of 1883 makes a note that the municipalities were only expected to pay about 4 per cent. of the cost of education and the rest was to come from Government. The Act of 1884 came to a definite understanding with the local bodies. It stated that the district local boards shall contribute one-third of their revenue for education and the balance should be met by Government. It is on account of this statutory provision that Government had been, in certain cases, put to the necessity of contributing 90 per cent. of the cost in the case of district local boards. In the case of municipalities the Government have undertaken to finance the municipalities to the extent of half the cost only recently. So gradually, what was a provincial burden was transferred to local bodies, and it is now being regarded as the sole burden of the district local board. This is a hard position to take. I agree with my honourable friend Mr. Chikodi when he said.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You should not refer to another honourable member by his name. I have ruled that.

Rao Bahadur S. D. GARUD: I beg to apologise, Sir, for this small dereliction, and to be permitted to proceed. I agree with the previous speaker that this ought to be a provincial charge. The resources of Government are unlimited, and the expenditure on compulsory elementary education ought to be a provincial charge. They can introduce taxation, and the Council will not have any objection to sanction taxation for this purpose. At the same time it is difficult in the case of local bodies to devise in the first place the ways and means for taxation, and to impose it in such a manner as to meet with the approval of Government. If the local bodies were to take upon themselves the responsibility of raising fresh taxation, they will have to be very careful in suggesting the sources. This difficulty ought to be considered by Government. Again, I shall take the case of the Dhulia municipality. When the Dhulia municipality found it impossible to introduce compulsion without the two-thirds grant, they applied to Government for permission to impose certain taxes. The Government allowed the municipality to raise fresh taxation. It is not that every local body will be able to raise by taxation the requisite amount, and thus improve substantially its resources. The Government then offered to give half of the expenditure as grant, and the municipality promptly accepted it. In the case of fresh taxation, in the first place, it needs expert assistance to devise fresh adequate sources and the sources are often not at hand. It is not possible to find persons with the resquisite expert knowledge in local bodies. I, therefore, submit that Government should take upon themselves the burden of financing compulsory primary education and leave the local bodies to give them a contribution of one-third of their revenue as was done in the old Act. The Government can show sources of taxation which will improve substantially their resources and insist upon their taking advantage of those sources and if their financial resources are improved Government can even reduce the grant. The expenditure on compulsory primary education ought to be a provincial charge.

Under clause 11, Government have limited their liability, and say that they will bear half the cost of the scheme in the case of municipalities and two-thirds of the cost in the case of district local boards. This proportion is not based on the actual cost, but on the basis of the estimated cost, when the scheme is sent up to Government for sanction. I submit this is very hard on local bodies. For they have not at hand the expert advice and assistance which the Government can always command. It is rather too much to expect local bodies to finance their programme of compulsory elementary education, and to be accurate in their estimate of the cost.

Then, the question is with regard to control. The Government have practically taken into their own hands the whole control under this bill. I wish it had been delegated to local bodies and that the provisions with regard to control had been more liberalised. I hope the select committee will take into consideration these two points. When the local bodies are to find the money required for the scheme, it is but fair that they should have the full power to formulate their rules.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is it necessary to repeat this argument? It has been made by several honourable gentlemen who have spoken before now.

Rao Bahadur S. D. GARUD: I content myself with emphasising that particular point. When Government liabilities are limited with regard to contribution, they might leave the power of making rules to local bodies instead of the Government being troubled in every instance with the necessity of examining all the schemes.

Finally, what we did expect was a preamble which would state, not that it is necessary to provide for the management and control of primary education but that it is intended to provide for the extension of compulsory education in the Bombay Presidency within a certain number of years. The whole country was anxious to see a definite programme of compulsory education to be achieved in the whole of the Presidency within a certain number of years.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Has the honourable gentleman considered what the object and nature of a preamble in a bill and an Act are? The preamble is intended merely to state existing facts and is not an enacting clause. What the honourable gentleman wants in the preamble should come in by way of a clause in the enacting portions of the bill.

Rao Bahadur S. D. GARUD: I merely suggest this to Government. I know that the preamble is not part of the legislation and as such not enforcible. I wish merely that the pious wish which was expected of Government had been there, merely to show the object with which Government undertook this particular legislation. Otherwise, if this is going to remain a dead letter as the Patel Act has remained up to now, there would not be much gain. I therefore submit that this particular wish and opinion of the public will be taken into account and carried out by amending the preamble, or incorporated in the bill in any other way that may be necessary, by suitably amending the bill in the select committee. There is no doubt that in some instances, some portions of the country and some castes of the population would not perhaps receive compulsion with enthusiasm, but when we are recommending to Government to introduce an Act to enforce compulsion, it is necessary that that Act shall be enforced in the first instance on castes who have shown no desire to take to voluntary education. For example, if we examine the figures given by the committee which was recently appointed, we find that Brahmins are foremost in taking advantage of the voluntary system of education. The Mahomedans come next, and the backward classes come last. If we are to exempt from the operation of this Act any portion of the community, I would submit that Brahmins should be exempted altogether. Mahomedans in those areas where they have taken advantage of the voluntary system or are showing signs of taking advantage of the voluntary system should come in for exemption next. The backward classes should come in for compulsion under this bill first, because they are the communities that most require compulsion, and really it is for their benefit that this bill is being taken up and is being pushed forward. Those communities which are taking advantage of the voluntary system would hardly have needed any such bill at all. Therefore, I think it is fair to those communities that they should be allowed the benefit of the exemption for which provision has been made in this bill. I therefore heartily support the first reading of the bill, and I hope that the discussion in this Council will help the select committee to modify the bill in such a manner as to make it acceptable to the various interests concerned.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I only wish to say with reference to what has fallen from the honourable member who has just resumed his seat, that I hope it will be borne in mind by the select committee that it is not competent to the committee to introduce a preamble which does not exist in the bill as introduced, and if the suggestion made as to limiting the period within which compulsion ought to be applied is to be accepted, it ought to come in in the enacting parts of the measure. The preamble is governed by those parts and may be amended in the select committee accordingly.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Sir, so many congratulations have been showered upon the honourable member who has introduced this bill that I do not think he requires any from me. We have been waiting and waiting for the introduction of compulsory education for the last forty years. Forty years ago, the Satyashodhaks were foremost in demanding compulsory education, but their cry was a cry in the wilderness. The Government of those days did not recognise the necessity of giving education compulsorily. Then the late Mr. Gokhale.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have already ruled that this historical survey is not relevant.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I bow to your ruling, Sir. I had already skipped over a period of twenty-five years in one sentence of a dozen words, and I would have passed over the remaining fifteen years in another short sentence and thus summed up past history.

The Maratha Educational Conference and other conferences have been crying for compulsory education so long, but Government did not recognise its necessity till last year, when the Honourable Minister, if I mistake not, declared that compulsory education was outside practical politics. I am glad that Government have seen fit to change their opinion in the short period of eighteen months, and they have received encomiums for the introduction of this bill.

A committee was appointed, and the statement of objects and reasons of this bill pompously declares that the object of this bill is to carry out the recommendations of that committee appointed to consider the question of compulsory education. But, Sir, I am very sorry to find that beyond this first sentence of the objects and reasons and beyond the use, two or three times, of the words "compulsory education" in the bill, the majority of the recommendations of the committee have not been accepted. I am very sorry to find that the time limit set up by the committee—and it was an important recommendation of the committee—has not been accepted by the Government. That committee laboriously drew up a scheme, but that scheme has been set aside. The bill before the Council asks local authorities to provide their own schemes and submit them for the approval of Government. I do not know how many years will be wasted on account of this provision in the bill and so I cannot say whether compulsory education will be available to the masses of the Deccan, who have been very peremptorily asking for it, for many years to come. So I would insist that some provision ought to be made in the bill for a time limit. When the report of the committee was under the consideration of Government, I had the honour of having a talk with the honourable gentleman who has introduced the bill and I could gather from him that Government were determined to have education made compulsory within the period of ten years, and then a scheme was shown to me which gave what would be the expenditure incurred by Government year by year. From Rs. 1,83,00,000, the present expenditure, in ten years it would rise to Rs. 2,93,00,000—an increase of Rs. 1,10,00,000, and I was under the impression that this bill would carry out the promises that were held forth. But I am sorry to find that the present bill is very disappointing.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Those figures are in the report.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: They are.

Now, Sir, I come to the second provision in the bill, that is, the machinery provided for bringing in compulsory education. The bill leaves it to the district local boards and the city municipalities, to determine when and to what area they would apply compulsion. That, Sir, will leave the question open as to whether the whole area under the district local boards will come under compulsion or when the city municipalities will take it up. Provision has been made, of course, that the education scheme ought to be submitted within a certain time and, if it is not submitted, Government is going to take the thing up. But, Sir, when you once entrust a thing to a local body, that local body, if it is not willing to take up the matter at once, will find out excuses and ask for time and extensions of time, and years and years may roll on before the scheme comes forward for consideration of Government. At the same time, I want to bring to the notice of this House one salient point. The Local Boards Bill provides for the formation of school boards. The school boards are to be elected by the local boards and one ought to bear in mind that the elections of some local boards have taken place just now this year and some took place last year. So these local boards, according to the new Act, will not be in working order for at least three years and in some places two years. Till then this bill will be hung up and will not come into operation. The members of the local boards elected under the old Act will not be empowered to take up the question. They will not feel they have the mandate of the electorate to levy additional taxation and they will be unwilling to take up the question of taxation and I think three years will be lost before a start can be made. For that purpose, Government have to take up the question of bringing reformed local boards into existence without any loss of time, as was done in the case of the City of Bombay Municipal Bill.

As for the financial clauses, Sir, I think the principle of this bill is really not the principle of introducing compulsion. The real principle ought to be the responsibility of Government for providing education to its subjects, as has been pointed out by my honourable friend from Belgaum. For many years, Sir, the British Government did not recognise the responsibility of educating their own subjects. England left that to the local bodies and the British people themselves were so much advanced that the local bodies took that question up, and in England education is generally held to be within the jurisdiction or within the province of the local body. When the Local Boards and the Municipal Acts were introduced into India, legislation was wholly in the hands of the British officers and it was but natural for them to introduce the principles which were followed in England. But now the time has come, when the local legislatures have been democratized, that the right principle, according to our ideas of the responsibility of Government and of the people, ought to be announced and brought into operation. I think, Sir, the British ideal of throwing the whole burden upon the local bodies is quite unsuitable to this country, because this country is far backward in education and in civil ideals. This country has suffered most for want of education and the people as well as the Government are greatly hampered by the illiteracy of the masses. It is a national calamity, Sir, that education is so very backward and it will be to the advantage of the nation as a whole if education is spread broadcast, and therefore it ought to be the duty of Government to make education a question of national importance. Therefore, I say, Sir, that the principle of national responsibility ought to be recognised by Government and therefore no responsibility should be thrown upon the local bodies. The local boards, Sir, are asked to provide for a third part of the expenditure in this bill. I was told that the honourable mover of the bill has given assurances that the sums spent upon education up till now will be forthcoming from Government coffers and that only one-third of the additional expenditure that would be required to make education compulsory in the villages and other places will be expected from the local boards, while two-thirds will be provided by Government. It is not a very generous offer, Sir. Up to this time, nearly seven-eighths or nine-tenths of the expenses on education have been borne by Government and only one-eighth or one-tenth has been left to the local boards. The same proportion of responsibility ought to be taken up by Government because, as I pointed out, it is a national question and it ought not to be left to the choice of the local body. At the same time, there is another difficulty, Sir. The local boards have been given powers under the bill to tax. But, Sir, it will be very difficult for the members of the local boards to pass any taxation for fear of unpopularity. They have been given the choice of adding the one anna cess on the land revenue. It may suffice in certain districts where land revenue is tolerably large. But in poorer districts like Ratnagiri, Kanara and other districts, that one anna cess will not suffice to provide the one-third and the poor men's huts cannot be taxed, and even if they are taxed, the expenses of collecting the revenues from those houses will be so very exorbitant as to make its imposition of no practical use. The local boards, Sir, will be in a very deplorable condition on this account. As I have said, the agriculturists will not be unwilling to pay the additional anna per rupee; but they will rather pay it to Government if they take the responsibility of giving education. It will be more difficult for the members of the local boards to levy that tax. We are not unwilling to bear taxation, Sir, but we think the people will bear it more calmly and resignedly if it is levied by the provincial Government and not by the local boards and therefore members of the local boards will be unwilling to impose unpopular taxes. At the same time, I want to point out an anomaly or rather an injustice. From the figures quoted by my honourable friend the Director of Labour Bureau, we see that Gujarat is very highly educated. Of course, it is not fully educated. Much is desired no doubt in this province of Gujarat, but it is the most educated province. It means that a larger portion of the expenditure on education is now spent in Gujarat. Is that not so ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Certainly.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: So, that is doing injustice to other provinces of the Presidency. What I am going to say is that injustice will be done now on this account. A larger portion of the revenue is spent in Gujarat on primary education, and a smaller portion on the Deccan and the Karnatak. Now, according to the scheme of the honourable mover, the sums that have been paid up till now will be continued, and only one-third of the portion that will be required to supplement the educational budget will be levied from the rural districts. That means that from Gujarat a smaller sum will be required to complete their education while from those districts in which education is at a very low ebb and consequently where lesser sums are being spent under the head Education, larger sums will be required, as they will have to be provided with education to a larger extent. (Honourable members: Hear, hear.) That is an injustice and that injustice ought to be removed. I need not quote figures, Sir, because they are not available to me, but it is quite plain that where larger expenditure is incurred now, smaller expenditure will be required and only one-third of that required small expenditure will be levied by the local boards of Gujarat and two-thirds will be provided by Government; while in the Deccan where small expenditure is incurred up till now, a larger amount will be required and one-third of that larger portion will have to be paid by the district local boards, which are poor and which are unable to pay. Is it a punishment, Sir? Does the Honourable Minister want to levy higher taxation on the backward districts of the Deccan and the Karnatak for remaining backward so long, and is he so very lenient to the districts of Gujarat because they are forward? It is just like "More shall be given unto him that hath,

And from him that hath not, will be taken away what little he hath."

I strongly protest, Sir, against that principle, and I think it will be much better if the financial clauses of the bill are revised. I would therefore request the Honourable Minister to withdraw the present bill and to redraft it on sounder lines.

Then, Sir, I come to the formation and the constitution of the educational boards to be elected by the local boards. The bill says that they shall consist of not less than ten and not more than fifteen members, and that these fifteen members are to include men experienced in education, women and representatives of minorities. I understand at least two may be required from amongst the women.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Plural includes singular.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Then there will be experts. I think one expert will suffice.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Possibly.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Then there will be representatives of minorities. Which minority, Sir, may I know?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: They will be from the different parts of the country according to the nature of the population.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: It is certainly rather vague. In the district of Satara, Mahomedans will at least require one seat and the depressed classes will require perhaps two according to their proportion in the population. And then, there are about eleven talukas, and they won't get even one seat each and then, what about the representatives of municipalities? So I think this provision limiting the number of the members of the board requires a good deal of consideration and a good deal of change if the board is going to be really representative. That point has been sufficiently dealt with by my honourable friend from Satara and I need not waste the time of the House on it. My honourable friend the Director of Labour Bureau has obliged this House by quoting facts and figures. According to him the percentage of education among the Marathas is very low, that is, less than four per cent., and one reason of that is the paucity of teachers from the non-Brahmin classes. And if the recruitment of teachers is to be left to the Brahmin bureaucracy and is to be carried on on the same principles as have been followed hitherto, then good-bye to compulsion and good-bye to the hope of the spread of primary education among the rural classes. It was only yesterday, Sir, that the honourable mover favoured me with facts and figures on one point, namely, last year sixty posts of vernacular teachers were filled by the deputy educational inspector out of which 25 places were given to.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. How is it relevant to the provisions of this bill? The honourable member will allow me to say that he is now going into administrative matters which do not bear upon the question under debate. The question of the appointments of teachers will open a very wide field for discussion straying away from the Compulsory Education Bill.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I am coming to that, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You should come to it at once.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I am sorry that I cannot make myself more clear. I wish to point out that if things are to go on in the way they have been going on up to this time, then it will be quite useless.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I put it to the honourable member, is that relevant? It is outside the question before the House.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I bow to your ruling, Sir, and simply say that great injustice has been done to our community.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: If you say that the school boards and all these institutions which are intended to manage this question of compulsory education are so constituted that teachers of non-Brahmin classes will have no fair field and that therefore the principle of compulsion will be illusory in practice, if you put your grievance that way, perhaps it may be relevant.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Thank you, Sir, for your suggestion. It is the intention of Government to give compulsory education to all classes, but I have found that the masses have not the chance of getting education except at the hands of teachers recruited from among them. As long as school boards started by the municipalities and the local boards have not a strong majority of non-Brahmins and backward communities and as long as the teachers recruited are not from those backward communities, so long, Sir, any amount of compulsory education or any other scheme will not be beneficial to the masses. There are instances.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You need not illustrate that point. Please pass on to some other points if you will kindly listen to me. In the way you have put it already, I think sufficient emphasis has been placed upon the point.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: To recapitulate.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: No recapitulation, please.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: To sum up.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: There is no need of summing up either and repeating. Please pass on to some other points.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: The first thing is that Government ought to make compulsion available within a certain number of years. Government have failed to do that in this bill. Another thing is the formation of the school board: that is very defective. The third, the apportionment of financial responsibility, is the worst of all and it requires a thorough change.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You mean that education should be nationalised?

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: The paramount question is nationalisation of education. Therefore, I would ask Government to withdraw this bill and bring in a better bill. Government ought to shoulder the whole responsibility.

The Honourable the PESIDENT: Now, you are going back to a point which you have already exhausted.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: I want to bring in the point about the administrative powers that are going to be given to the local boards. The argument might be raised that the local boards are now empowered to elect the school board, and that if they want to enjoy higher powers they ought to be saddled with greater responsibilities to provide funds. I say, Sir, that local bodies ought to be left to deal with matters of local concern only. Education ought not to be looked upon as a matter of purely local concern and Government should take up the management from the local bodies and make education national.

With these words I call upon the Honourable Minister for Education to withdraw the bill and to bring in a fresh one.

Mr. S. K. BOLE (Bombay City, North): Sir, I want to be very brief. I shall confine myself to the three principles introduced in this bill, namely, the principle of compulsion, the principle of management and the principle of finance.

Taking the principle of compulsion first, you may be aware, Sir, that last year in this very House when the Honourable Minister wanted to refer the question to a committee, I pointed out that it was very late in the day to appoint a committee like that.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You are not dealing with the bill.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: I am criticising the report of the committee.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You may criticise the report, but not go into the history of it. You may criticise the report, but even that criticism must bear upon the provisions of the bill.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: I submit, Sir, that compulsion is necessary in the case of the depressed classes and the backward classes, as voluntary efforts have proved futile. The report of the committee says on page 12:

"Among these witnesses from the Deccan, Konkan and Karnatak, a large majority favoured the introduction of compulsion and said that they and their friends were prepared for the infliction of penalties if they did not send their children to school."

Further on:

"On the whole it appears that there is a genuine desire for education among the masses themselves in the Deccan, Konkan and Karnatak and that the movement in favour of compulsion is not confined to the leaders of the communities. We might even go further and say that among the Marathas and some other classes there seems to be a real demand for compulsory education, which they look upon as essential to their social and political progress."

[Mr. S. K. Bole]

The social and political progress not only of this class, but also of the whole country, has been hindered by its backwardness in education. My honourable friend the Director of the Labour Office has also said that, unless there is compulsion in the case of these classes, there will be no improvement among them. It will be seen from the report of the Industrial Disputes Committee that the social and welfare workers in Bombay and elsewhere have also said the same thing. As regards the note of caution sounded by some honourable members, the report makes some appropriate remarks:

"On the other hand,....."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The report is in the hands of every member.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: I want to illustrate my remarks. I am only following the precedent of some of my honourable friends who have quoted from the report.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I do not want to come in your way, but the House would like to have your views.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: The report states:

"On the other hand, a few cultivators from these areas who appeared before us vehemently protested against any measure of compulsory education, giving as a reason their poverty and the need of their children's earnings. Their difficulties can, to some extent, be met by fixing the school hours and vacations to suit the needs of agriculture."

I would go even further and say that the curriculum of these schools might be so arranged as to suit their vocations.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That is a matter of administrative detail, which cannot be gone into when we are dealing with principles of the legislation. The question of curriculum is one of administration and not legislation in this bill, unless there is some principle of the bill involved in it.

Mr. S. K. BOLE: Then, as regards the depressed classes, it has been pointed out in the report that there is keen desire among them that the principle of compulsion should be introduced. I am glad that the Honourable Minister, who had some misgivings when he appointed the committee, is now satisfied and has accepted the principle of compulsion in the bill. Now, as regards the cultivators' children and the children of the labouring classes, I would say that they should not be made the earning machines of their parents. I submit that no exception should be made in the case of the depressed classes and the labouring classes. Exceptions may be made in the case of the higher classes: I would go even further and say that in the case of municipal towns fees should be extracted from the higher classes.

I think it is the duty of the State to provide adequate provision for compulsory education. I also think that the State should also provide the necessary funds. As for management and machinery, I have no objection to their assigning the management to the local boards and municipalities or the new school boards provided all these bodies are well represented by all the major and minor communities. As regards funds, I think if funds are not provided, the bill will remain a dead letter much the same as the Patel Act. I submit, therefore, Sir, that the State should provide the necessary funds from the provincial revenues, and unless that is done no progress will be made. Local bodies and Government will fight among themselves as to the share of their contribution, and the masses who are in great need of education will go without education. They would be like the children in a labourer's family where the father and the mother fight over a certain cause and the children have to go without food. Under these circumstances, I submit that the State should make adequate provision for the necessary funds from the provincial revenues. The State has been spending large sums of money on education, but those who have benefited so far are the higher classes whose percentage of education is 60 per cent., 70 per cent. and 80 per cent. So provision should be made for further expenditure to be incurred on the education of the backward classes. Then we can curtail expenditure a good deal by recruiting teachers on low salaries. I think any number of teachers will be forthcoming from the non-Brahmin communities even if we curtail the salaries. If Government will be pleased to accept my suggestions, they will be able to do with less expenditure than what they have been incurring up till now.

I do not know whether I should support the bill or ask the Honourable Minister to withdraw it and to bring in a new bill. But I have no objection to this bill being passed, provided amendments are made in the bill according to my suggestions. With these words I resume my seat.

Mr. K. B. NIMBALKAR (Nasik District): Mr. President, I regret I cannot associate myself with some of the speakers who spoke before me in congratulating the Honourable the Minister for Education for introducing the bill for compulsory primary education in the manner and shape in which it has been done.

It is an admitted fact that the Government have taken upon themselves the duty of educating the masses. It is not a new fact, but as far back as 1854, this policy was enunciated. This was approved by the commission appointed in the time of Lord Ripon's Government in 1882, and to-day we see the Government taking upon themselves that duty of educating the masses by compulsion. But, at the same time, if we look to the arrangement made with regard to finance, it is disappointing. By the use of the word, 'shall' in clause 11, the Government have taken upon themselves to meet two-thirds of the expenditure, but, even then Sir, Government have not taken upon themselves the responsibility to meet two-thirds proportion of the actual cost. The Government have only undertaken the responsibility to meet two-thirds of the estimated cost when the scheme is sent to Government for approval. It is our daily experience that estimates, however accurate, will have variation later on when the scheme is actually put into practice, and the local body, if the actual cost exceeds the estimated cost, will have to pay more than its one-third share of its expenditure. The bill is based on the recommendation of the committee that was appointed for the purpose. I was one of those who had raised objection against the composition of the committee, because some of the members of the committee themselves were against compulsion. To-day even the same opinion is heard from at least some members. Yesterday, the Council was asked to refer to appendix B. to show that the masses were really not for compulsion. It was said:

"Three simple questions were sent to different Collectors, and they were asked to take the answers to those three simple questions."

My contention is that it cannot be taken as the opinion of the masses. According to the report, answers to those three simple questions were got among others from 70 Chambhars, 107 Mahars, 78 Mangs, and 3 Marathas—Marathas 3 only. After getting the answers, it is now stated that the majority of the masses are against compulsion. Certainly, if Marathas and other similar communities who are backward in education had been examined, the result would have been different. From the answers received, and referred to in the report, it cannot be said that the masses are against compulsion. The witnesses were taken in greater number from such classes as are likely to give a reply in the negative. Taking this as an instance it is argued that the masses in certain districts are not in favour of compulsion, and that the members representing the different constituencies here are expressing their individual opinions and not the opinions of their constituencies. Certainly this inference is not true. The backward communities, especially in the Deccan, are for compulsion. Not only that, but they are prepared to pay taxes up to a certain limit. Up till now, the local boards were getting much more than two-thirds of the expenditure by way of grant from Government. The Honourable Minister says that even after you introduce compulsion you will get the same proportion for the present staff and the new proportion to the increased expenditure. I do not know whether all the members of the committee were of this opinion. I think that this ratio is based on the one that once existed in England ; but it is not realised that there is no comparison between England and India. To compare India, purely an agricultural country, with England, a prosperous and industrial country, is no comparison at all. The local bodies there may be in a position to meet even more than one-third of the expenditure. So, if the Government want to take upon themselves the responsibility of educating the masses and introduce compulsion for that purpose, I wish to impress upon them the fact that there is no use merely passing an enactment, but they should see that proper and adequate provision is made for meeting the charges. What I mean is that they should bear the same proportion as they were hitherto doing with regard to local bodies. Even after that, the Government have taken only a little share. In the case of municipalities which will be transferred to the local bodies, I think these local bodies will be expected to spend one-third, while the municipalities which will be transferred to these local bodies will be asked to contribute their own share, that is half, and Government will have to pay only one-sixth. So, as regards finance, instead of coming forward with liberal hands, Government has taken back, and only introduced the principle of compulsion. The effect of this will be that, though the masses are clamouring for compulsion, the burden that will be thrown upon them will be so much, that taking into consideration, as the honourable member from Thana said, the opinion outside this House which cannot be ignored and which may take advantage of this fact of extra taxation, it might lead to disappointment. It is an admitted fact that everybody wants compulsory education, but in order to make it practicable, there must be a sufficient provision made by Government.

As regards other points, I do not think that I should deal with them, because they have already been discussed by the previous speakers. With these words, I resume my seat.

Mr. S. P. LIGADE (Sholapur District) (Addressed the House in Marathi) : Mr. President, as regards the usefulness of this bill, there is little to be said, but as regards its construction, I must express my dissatisfaction on behalf of the agriculturists. The agriculturists have undergone many hardships so far, they have paid the local fund taxes, but as far as education among them is concerned, there will not be one graduate from the backward class to a thousand from the advanced communities. The reason for this is quite clear. The educated classes, who have been in charge of the administrative machinery of education, have done nothing for the benefit of the agriculturists. On account of these difficulties, although they have been paying the taxes, the agriculturists have not been able to take advantage of education. Now-a-days, there has arisen that feeling among the agriculturists that, unless they have educated men who are able to plead their cause, their interests will not advance, and in order to achieve this, they have come to realise that compulsion is necessary for them. In 1909 when I was a member of the district local board, I brought forward a resolution that compulsion should be introduced. In the year 1911, the late Mr. Gokhale brought forward. .....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Past history has no concern with the present bill. You may say anything that you have got to say with regard to the bill itself.

Mr. S. P. LIGADE : The construction of this bill ought to be such that the agriculturists will benefit by it. The bill provides for compulsion in local boards. Experience tells us that there will be two kinds of members on them. If an uneducated member is elected, he does not know what should be done for his constituents. If the member is educated, he neglects the uneducated, and devotes himself entirely to the cause of the already educated. If this is the case in the smaller municipalities, one can very well imagine how the interests of the backward classes will be looked after in the bigger local boards. I trust the Honourable Minister will take this fact into consideration.

As I have already said, there are very few graduates among the agriculturists, and although they have been paying the local fund cess and even when that cess is doubled, they will not be benefited to the same extent. On the other hand, there is every chance that they may not remain contented. One very often sees Government introducing beneficent measures for the good of the people even against the protests of the people. In the matter of education also the same line of policy should be adopted. I do not see why Government should not bear the whole of the expenses, and unless Government undertakes the duty, nothing can be done for the good of the agriculturists. If the present awakening among the agriculturists is not taken advantage of by Government, and they are not provided with free and compulsory education, the agriculturists will think that Government is doing nothing for them, but everything for the educated classes. Therefore, I think that the educated classes should be taxed, and Government should undertake the duty of educating those who have remained uneducated so far. I can assure Government that the readiness to accept compulsion is there. If the agriculturists are educated, good use can be made of their knowledge, and it will not be possible for interested parties to mislead them. I submit, Sir, that compulsion in primary education is absolutely necessary in the best interests of the country and people everywhere are quite anxious to have it. They are also quite prepared to tax themselves, to a certain extent, if that is found necessary. Even the poor ignorant people, as a whole, do feel that they ought to be able to read and write, as they realise the advantages of education by observing the few who are educated. I hope, however, that having regard to the views expressed by several of my honourable friends and also by myself on this bill, as it contains several defects, that the Honourable Minister will consider the advisability of withdrawing this bill and bringing forward a more satisfactory bill in its place. In any case, I would request the Minister to give his careful consideration to all the points that have been made during this debate, when the bill is considered in the select committee.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I think I have called upon all the honourable members representing the backward classes, so far as I know. Is there any other honourable member for the backward classes who wishes to address?

Rao Saheb P. G. HALKATTI (Bijapur District): I wish to speak, Sir, on this bill. In supporting this bill, I wish to make only one remark. According to clause 8 of the bill, "A local authority may by resolution declare its intention to provide compulsory elementary education in the whole or any part of the area subject to its jurisdiction." According to clause 9, a local authority has to submit its proposals to the Government in the form of a scheme. So Government has given power to the local authority to frame its own scheme. I fear that by this method there will be as many schemes as there are districts as regards compulsory education. One district may have one kind of scheme for compulsion, while another district may have another scheme. Hence I fear that by giving this authority to the local boards wholesale, there will be a number of schemes coming forward from the district local boards which destroys unity of educational development in the Presidency. The details of the scheme are referred to in clause 9. Looking to this clause, the subjects therein mentioned are certainly very complicated. For instance, sub-clause (d) requires a local board to form a schedule of existing and proposed teaching, inspecting and supervising staff. Then, under the next sub-clause (e), the manner in which provision will be made for the compulsory elementary education in the vernaculars of the children has to be mentioned. Well, I doubt, Sir, whether all these functions can be efficiently performed by the present district local boards, because these require very intricate knowledge of the working of schools. They require specialists in education. I doubt whether the local boards and the municipalities, as they are constituted now, will be able to formulate an efficient scheme of compulsory education. Hence my submission is that this function should not have been put on the local authorities but on the educationists who are specialists in this matter. Again, the local authorities while estimating the cost have to consider the question of pay of teachers, inspectors and supervising staff. This is also a difficult task. So, without having a definite idea as to all these matters, it is impossible for these authorities to prepare a workable scheme. Under the present circumstances, there is absolutely no basis for the local boards or the municipalities to form a scheme in the proper sense of the term. The proportion of two-thirds and one-third as regards expenditure has been laid down in the bill under clause 11, but on account of the above indefiniteness we cannot determine whether we shall have to provide in the bill two-thirds, three-fourths or the whole of the costs to be met by the local authorities. So I think Government should have placed a comprehensive scheme of compulsory education, with all its details with respect to expenditure and everything, and then we would have been in a position to understand whether this bill of compulsory education could have been brought into effect. Instead of doing that, Government have delegated all these matters to the local boards. I think, from the constitution, nature and the purse of the local boards and the municipalities, they will be at a loss to know how to form a workable scheme which can be effective. So I think Government ought to lay before the Council, even if this bill is passed, within a short time a complete workable scheme for compulsory education, mentioning in detail the curriculum, pay of teachers and everything and then only this bill can be brought into effect. This is a defect in the bill and this I point out to the Government. But as I am in agreement with the general principles of the bill, I support it.

Mr. R. G. SALGAR (Sholapur City) (Addressed the House in Marathi): Mr. President, I heartily support this bill No. XVII of 1922 which has been introduced by the Honourable Minister. As regards the defects of this bill—and there is no doubt there are many—as several honourable members have dilated upon them at length I do not wish to take up the time of the Council in going over the same ground. I have only a few suggestions to make.

In the first place, I submit that primary education should be made compulsory both in the case of boys as well as girls and it is not a good policy to hold this compulsory education back even from girls. If our women are well educated, they will be a great help to us in connection with domestic matters, such as home sanitation, looking after the health of the children, etc. It is, therefore, absolutely necessary to make primary education compulsory both in the case of boys as well as girls. Now, coming to the report of the Primary Education Committee which was appointed by the Honourable Minister, as the chairman of that committee was a gentleman experienced in all these matters, it would have been a great help to us if the chairman had given us his own views with regard to all these matters.

Then, the first suggestion that I want to make is this that Government should take charge even of all the unaided schools. At present the aided schools receive a grant-in-aid of Rs. 3-3-0, while the unaided schools get no grant at all. Unless Government takes under its control even the unaided schools, the Compulsory Education Act won't be a success, because some parents might say that they are sending their children to these unaided schools while Government having no control over these unaided schools, it won't be possible for them to find out whether the children are attending these schools or not.

As regards the increase of taxation for the sake of increasing the grants to primary schools, my suggestion is that Government should make some retrenchment in the non-voted departments. There should also be a tax on the race-course and entertainments. Then again, the provincial Government should press the imperial Government to give them their full share in income-tax. The local fund cess should also be doubled. But besides these, there should be no increase in taxation.

Then, coming to the point as regards the areas in which primary education should be made compulsory, I submit, although the report of the committee suggests that it should be made compulsory first in municipal areas, that there is not so much need of doing it in the municipal areas, as in all the municipal areas which are city areas you will find most of the children attending schools, and therefore the real need for compulsion is in the rural areas. We know that there are nearly 10,000 villages which have no schools and in which if schools are opened, they would go on very well, and it is these rural areas that need this compulsion in the first place. Then, as regards the school boards which are proposed to be created, I must say they are quite unnecessary. Our present school boards of municipalities are really doing very useful work as per reports till now, and I do not see any necessity of having separate and independent school boards as proposed in this bill. With these remarks I resume my seat.

Mr. P. N. ADHAV (Satara District): Mr. President, the bill before us as presented by the Honourable Minister in charge is for compulsory education and primary education. Being a representative of the backward Maratha community, I am concerned more with compulsory education, and we are to see whether the compulsory education falls within practical politics. I take the bill as it stands and, as it is presented to this House, it requires some modification. The compulsion, as stated, is more on a voluntary basis than what it ought to be. Besides what we find from our own experience is that, if the bill is accepted in the present form, we will find that it will be inoperative. For instance we started compulsory education in the Satara Municipality nearly two years ago. Now, before starting compulsory education in our city we had to send our proposal and a detailed statement of the funds that we had, and all those details which are more or less required by the present bill. Then Government asked us what taxes we were going to levy to meet the extra charge. We then proposed certain taxes. Government said they did not fall under the educational requirements and that they must be transferred to some other appropriate heads. Then Government asked us to bring up our proposals for further taxation and then they said they would consider the proposal. So in this way we lost about two or three years. After that, compulsory education was brought into force in the city. And then we were given to understand if our resources fail when we have taxed to our utmost limit Government may help us by the two-thirds grant. But we are asking for that much grant often and often, and our demand has so far not been complied with. What I am afraid of is that the present bill is more on a voluntary basis. Whenever Government finds that the local authorities are required to be provided with funds and Government is not in a position to do it, they can always say that they are going to reject the proposal and so it will be a long time before our expectations can be realized. Now yesterday the Honourable Minister in charge of Education said that Government has increased this expenditure on primary education to a certain figure and if I remember aright, it is 52 per cent. and it is a much higher figure than that of any other province in India. I would point out that the expenditure has really increased during the last two or three years.

If we take the figures for 1920-21, we find that on primary education Government spent Rs. 73,91,000 and in 1922-23 they have budgetted for Rs. 1,09,00,000. That shows that Government have come forward with a higher grant, but are the masses benefited by it? I think not, because all the increase more or less has gone to support the reorganisation schemes that have been brought into force and has been used for the provision of increase of pay of teachers, and there has been practically no increase in the students that are under instruction. So, when the question of funds is considered, the powers that are given to the local boards are limited. The powers are so few and practically the largest lump, the largest lot that we are going to expect is from the agriculturists, and when we consider that we have got in the Deccan about three famines every ten years, we shall always have to give some remission in collection of the cesses and so bearing this in mind, there will be always some remission and suspension of revenue and whenever schemes come from special areas for introduction of compulsory education, there will be some hitch or other placed and no compulsory education can be brought into force.

Again, if you look to the present state of things, if the local boards are given a free hand, if they are allowed to entertain teachers, efficient and qualified, to carry on these duties of teachers in village schools, they will probably be able to find a large number of men coming forward to serve on a smaller pay, but the attitude taken up by the Government at present stands in the way. If I come back to the Satara Municipality, we find that we are not able to support the pay of the teaching staff, which according to the new scheme will be going from Rs. 20,000 to Rs. 32,000, and on account of that if Government is not coming forward with a helping hand, probably the Satara Municipality shall have to withdraw its scheme. So if the local boards are given a free hand to entertain their staff—I do not mean the pay of the present staff should be reduced, they must get the pay sanctioned for them—but when they entertain any new staff, they must entertain them on a much smaller pay if those men are willing to serve on that pay and.....

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: We are going to look into the question.

Mr. P. N. ADHAV: In that way we will be able to solve the difficulty a little, but the resources of the local boards—the local fund cess which is mostly to be derived from the agriculturists—will be available and Government has already ordered and empowered local boards to levy toll taxes and other taxes such as water cess and so on, but all these will not contribute any large sums. So I think as at present Government contributes about 85 per cent. of the total expenditure on primary education, they should continue this grant and plus this, whenever there is need, they must help local boards with the necessary grants.

My honourable friend from Ahmednagar yesterday gave some reference from the appendix in the Education Committee's Report to show that the masses were not ready, or it was against their wish to introduce compulsory education. I think he is wrongly impressed by the figures that he has read or gone through in the schedule. If he knows his district properly and if he knows the Marathas properly—I can assure this House that I have been attending several Maratha Educational Conferences and we have been sending Government resolutions requesting them to introduce free and compulsory primary education in the mofussil for the last ten or fifteen years. This is quite sufficient to show that before this bill was conceived or contemplated we had the idea, the Marathas in general from all districts had the idea, to accommodate and adapt themselves with free and compulsory education. So there should be no misunderstanding, when the Government has come forward with a bill for free and compulsory education, that the Marathas are in any way opposed to this idea. I therefore think that if the bill is brought forward in a modified form so as to suit the financial circumstances the Marathas will be all ready to take advantage of this bill and I therefore support the first reading of this bill.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA (Karachi City): Mr. President, I am in favour of the first reading of the bill with certain modifications and alterations. Looking to the importance of the city of Karachi which I represent in this Council, I should rather like to confine my remarks to the wants and requirements of that city only. I think some of my honourable colleagues in this House may be thinking in their minds that by the introduction of compulsion under this bill we shall be flying from the frying pan into the fire. I find that the bill does embody certain principles which would lead to the education of the masses to a great extent where it is absolutely necessary. I note from the speeches of my honourable friends which have been delivered since yesterday or the day before, that there seems to be a fight between Brahmins and non-Brahmins in the Presidency proper, but I may say, Sir, with a good deal of pleasure that in Sind such a fight is absolutely wanting. We in Sind have got backward classes as well and yet the feeling between the two classes is so cordial and pleasant that when any question of public importance arises, we join hands and do whatever is possible. I say, Sir, that in Sind the feelings between the two communities are so cordial and pleasing (which I say is wanting in the Presidency proper).

Sir, Karachi ought to be placed in a category quite different from that of the local boards and municipalities. Karachi—I do not know whether honourable members are aware—has been seeking for a separate Municipal Act for itself. I heard that the bill was ready and was going to be sent to the municipality for any remarks that it may have to offer. Sir, Karachi is a cosmopolitan place just as Bombay. The city of Karachi contains people of different classes and creeds, and people who speak different languages, such as Urdu, Marathi, Gujarati, Sindhi, Hindi, English and Makrani as well. We get people from Baluchistan and the frontier as well. Those that have seen Karachi will, of course, know that in every quarter in the Karachi City there are different castes and creeds of people living. Now, if compulsory education is introduced into the city of Karachi, the Karachi municipality will be obliged to open schools of different denominations in one and the same locality or quarter, with the result that a good deal of additional expenditure will be thrown on the municipality of Karachi. Now, the Karachi municipality is trying its best to promote education within its limits and is doing its best to open schools in different parts of the city, but so far as the Mahomedan community is concerned, the Karachi municipality have to face some kind of difficulty on account of the existence in the suburbs of some Mahomedans being opposed to compulsory education. But the greatest difficulty is with regard to girls. I think most of the members of the Council must be knowing that Sind is a purda nashin province, and that there is a good deal of reluctance on the part of the Mahomedan population to send their girls to public schools. The municipality has opened girls schools and those girls schools are strictly under purda. The difficulty is to get ingress into the schools to see how far education is properly given. The Karachi municipality is doing its best to give education to girls, including girls of the Mahomedan community. But if compulsion is introduced just now, I am afraid so far as the Mahomedan community is concerned the municipality will have to spend a large sum of money to afford facilities to the girls to go to the schools. I therefore submit that so far as the financial aspect of the question is concerned, the Karachi municipality ought not to be placed on the same level as district municipalities; in other words, the Karachi municipality should not be allowed only one-half of the expenditure as in the case of the district municipalities. The Karachi municipality has been getting one-half of the expenditure already, but it has been finding it difficult to make two ends meet even with this one-half.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I put it to the Honourable member whether this is a point for the first reading—that a particular municipality in respect of a particular sect or section of the community should be exempted and saved from the burden of expenditure—when it is entirely a question of administration provided for by some clause of the bill? Is it not a question of detail?

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: My suggestion is that compulsory education should not be introduced in the city of Karachi as is suggested in the bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I quite see your point; but with reference to it, clause 23 says:

"The Government may by notification in the Bombay Governmnet Gazette exempt any particular class or community in any area of compulsion or part thereof from the operation of this Act."

The municipality or the local board may say that they are not prepared to introduce compulsion and Government can exempt them. I have nothing to do with the point of view you are pressing, and which you are entitled to present to the Council, provided it is relevant to the debate upon the first reading of this bill. All I say is that it is not relevant.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: That is not my main point. I say again, Sir, that Karachi has been already over-taxed and it will not be possible for the people of Karachi to contribute much more towards the additional expenditure for the introduction of compulsory education into the limits of Karachi. As I submitted to you the other day, Sir, the rules recently sanctioned by the Government under the Land Revenue Code revising the ground rent have been.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: This is a point not affecting the principle of the bill. It affects only a particular city and is really a legitimate point for the select committee and the second reading.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: I am discussing this point, Sir, particularly for the information of the select committee.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have given sufficient latitude. The honourable member will oblige me by coming to the principle of the bill. I think he has said enough on the point that Karachi ought to be treated with indulgence.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: Will it be relevant if I discuss the question of the constitution of the board?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Certainly.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: So far as the constitution of the school board is concerned, I am of opinion that this innovation should not be introduced, so far as the city of Karachi is concerned. I submit that the Karachi Municipality does not require a separate school board. The Karachi Municipality has been looking after its education very well.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member puts the point in such a manner that it is difficult for me to say that it is relevant to the principle of the bill. If the point is that the constitution of the school board is objectionable because it will affect several municipalities prejudicially and Karachi is cited only as an instance, then the main principle comes first and the case of Karachi comes in as a mere illustration. But that is not how it is put by the honourable member.

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA: What I beg to submit is this: so far as the constitution of school board is concerned, every municipality is going to be affected by it, and Karachi municipality also will be affected by it. In Karachi we have our own school board, which has been doing its work very well. The Honourable the Minister for Education has more than once remarked that Karachi has been managing its education very satisfactorily.

(The Honourable the President at this stage withdrew and the Deputy President occupied the Chair.)

[Mr. Dipchand T. Ojha]

So far as the constitution of the school board is concerned, the Karachi municipality should have the right of electing its own school board, as it has been done hitherto. I said before, and I shall repeat it again, that if the school board is independent of the municipality, the result will be that the municipality will find it hard to meet the requirements of the school board.

As regards the control over school boards, I am told that the municipalities are not to lay down what powers the school board should enjoy, and what powers the municipality should have so far as education is concerned. I submit, Sir, that the rules framed under any enactment ought to be subjected to the scrutiny and approval of the Council. The reason why we should be consulted is this: we are now living in reformed Provinces where the Government is working through a transitory stage with the consent and co-operation of the Government to a final stage of the government of the people, by the people, for the people. I submit, Sir, that this spirit of the reforms should not be forgotten when we begin to consider the policy whether or not this Council should have any right to be consulted so far as the rule-making power of Government is concerned. I submit that the select committee will bear in mind that Karachi is a cosmopolitan city, and next to Bombay in importance, and as such it should not be made to suffer on account of this bill so far as the financial aspect of the question is concerned.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): Sir, after so many speakers who have given their opinion on this bill, I do not think that it is necessary for me to dwell upon the details of the bill at length. However I wish to refer to one or two points that have been touched upon by some honourable members. My honourable nominated friend from Satara (Mr. B. V. Jadhav) stated that the Deccan got less contribution from Government for education than Gujarat. This statement is incorrect, for contrary is the case and if the honourable member will look to the report on the administration of the local boards he will find that though the local cess for Northern Division comes to Rs. 6,51,450, Government grant for education to local boards of that Division comes to Rs. 14,77,000, while the local rate for Central Division is Rs. 5,53,754, and Government grant Rs. 19 lakhs. In Southern Division also the local rate is 6,53,000, and the grant about 17 lakhs. It will appear therefore that Gujarat gets much less than its due.

Another point which my honourable friend from Ahmednagar referred to was that Gujarat was not particular about compulsory primary education. I do not think that it is the deliberate opinion of the people of Gujarat. Whatever might be the circumstances there, under, which the witnesses may have given their views, Gujarat members are quite prepared for any scheme of compulsory education. Of course, from financial grounds, it is evident that Gujarat is over-taxed, and in order to carry out any scheme of compulsory education it may not be prepared through sheer inability; but the people there do not lack a desire at least for expansion of education.

(The Honourable the President at this stage resumed the Chair.)

Again, one of the reasons why Gujarat is opposed to compulsory education programme may be that they do not like the present methods of education. The point was touched upon by the honourable member, the Director of Public Instruction, who said that there was a lot to be said against the present method of education .....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I think I stopped the honourable member, the Director of Public Instruction, when he was going into that, and there the matter ended. There is no use referring to a matter which has been ruled out of order.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: I shall then leave it there. But I wish to say that might be one of the reasons why witnesses in Gujarat thought that the introduction of this type of compulsory education would not be to the benefit of their country.

If anybody having experience in Gujarat matters just asks any gentleman there why he is not sending his children to school, the reply will be "What is there to be learnt at school? The boys will learn something better at home". From that, the natural deduction that can be made is that education has not been made attractive by the educational authorities.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member is now branching off into irrelevant points, because in the first place we are not concerned with the character of the education. The question is whether education should be compulsory and whether it should be free. Secondly, if that is the ground upon which the witnesses came to the committee and said they did not want compulsion, instead of answering the point, you are strengthening it. However, I am not concerned with that. I hope the honourable member will concern himself with the relevant points.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: They must have some prejudice in Gujarat. What I want to say is that the Gujarat people are prejudiced against the present system of education, and if that system.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Do you mean that the people in Gujarat are not against compulsion as such, but they are against compulsion sought to be introduced now by the British Government, because of certain causes, such as the unsatisfactory character of the education that Government imparts and so on?

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Yes, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Then you are opposed to the bill. But we are not discussing now the British policy and quality of education in India. If you confine yourself to the relevant points of the bill, that is all that is in order.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Now, Sir, regarding the bill itself, I rather think that those districts which are not likely to have compulsion introduced in them would find it reactionary, reactionary in this respect that the normal progress as outlined by the Honourable the Leader of the House from his seat as the Education Member of the past Council, is abandoned by the present Minister in this bill. In the case of my own district, I should think we were going at a normal rate of progress, but after the introduction of this bill, all our progress will be checked, unless of course my district is taxed further, which we are not in a position to bear. We shall have to be satisfied with the Rs. 4,50,000 grant now being given by Government. I think therefore that it is reactionary as it does not take into account and holds out no hopes or promises to all those districts which want to have a normal progress in primary education.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: You don't want to pay for it and still you want to have it.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: I refer to the promise of the Honourable the Leader of the House, who was the Education Member of the Government under the old Council. There was no question of fresh taxation then. He stated that the rate of progress would be that all those villages having a population of 1,000 would be provided with schools in so many years, then those having 500 souls and so on. If my memory is correct, I think he made a speech in which he said that within a very short time Government were going to undertake the educational programme on a very large scale and that on a liberal scale, and the results of that policy have been felt in the districts. In my own district the progress has been from about Rs. 2,00,000 grant to Rs. 4,50,000 Government grant in a short period. That progress, I am afraid, will be stopped if the bill in its present form is passed. So, some hope should be held out to those people who do not desire compulsion but expansion.

As regards other matters, my honourable friend from Satara has so elaborately stated them that I do not intend to make any further remarks on them, except this that the jumbling together of rural areas and urban areas under one local authority would perhaps come in the way of good progress, because we do not want the same curricula for urban and rural areas; these latter require a rural setting.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That is a matter of detail and may be left for the select committee and at the second reading in this House.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: With these remarks, I support the first reading of the bill.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI (Ahmedabad City): Mr. President, I accept the principle of compulsion underlying this bill, and I support the first reading in so far as it offers to the House, at the further stage when the select committee may be appointed, a basis for discussion. The bill, however, proposes certain machinery for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the bill, and in regard thereto I feel that the arrangement proposed is not what it ought to be. The bill proposes to establish school boards in the place of the existing local educational authorities. In the case of municipalities, district and city, the Act provides, under section 28, for school committees and the Local Boards Bill provides a school board also under it. We have, under the present Local Boards Act, so far as the local board is paymaster and contributes one-third of the local cess, a local educational authority, though the powers of management are limited; so that, at present, that is the position. Now, however, all the existing local educational authorities are, under the provisions of the bill, to have their powers transferred to school boards which may be created. Let us see what the movement in this direction in England is. The movement there is that the school boards which were established by the Education Act of 1870 were abolished by the Education Act of 1902, and that arrangement was reaffirmed by the Education Act of 1918 as well as by the Education Act of 1921, and the county councils, county boroughs and boroughs were all declared to be local educational authorities. I feel that while the moverment there is from school boards to local educational authorities, this bill proposes an arrangement which is rather retrograde. It proposes to take away powers from existing local educational authorities and to vest them in school boards which are to be constituted.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Were the school boards in England absolutely independent? These school boards here are not absolutely independent.

Rao Saheb HARILAL D. DESAI: In England the school boards, between the years 1870 and 1902, were independent, but, by the Act of 1902 and the subsequent Acts, the local educational authorities have been empowered to elect educational committees and to delegate their powers to them, and here the constitution of the school board appears to be such as if they were to be independent, and in certain cases they will be independent altogether. At least in the Local Boards Bill, which we are going to pass, there is nothing to indicate that the school board will be under the supervision and under the control of the district local board as a whole. My point is that, while we have got existing local educational authorities, a bill of this character ought to provide, as they have provided in England by the Education Act of 1918 and of 1921, for combination and co-operation of several local educational authorities for the purpose of forming joint committees or having joint managers for advancing and progressing elementary education on national lines. That is the movement there and, viewed from that standpoint, I believe the proposals in this bill are a little retrograde. But I believe that it would be open, as it is a question of machinery, to consider this question, in the select committee and at the second reading, whether the existing local authorities may not be allowed to have their powers and at the same time they may not be vested with powers to combine and co-operate by forming joint committees, as they are empowered to do in England.

The next point, Sir, to which I wish to advert, is the point with reference to the powers of management and control. Several honourable members have referred to that point, that the bill leaves everything to Government to prescribe. With reference to that, I wish to refer to what had happened in 1883, when the present Local Boards Act and the District Municipal Act of 1884 were before the Legislative Council. At that time it was said that the time had not then come when teaching, discipline, management and direction of schools, and appointment, remuneration, promotion and dismissal of teachers could be handed over to local bodies. It was, however, then promised that probably gradually an increasing share in control and management would be given. However from 1884 onwards up to now, nothing in that direction has been done and, after 38 years, we have this bill before this Council under a reformed constitution from an Honourable Educational Minister in charge of a transferred department, in which he leaves everything to Government to prescribe. That, I believe, is a very unsatisfactory part of the bill. The Honourable Minister may have his own ideas, but he may not be in a position to carry them out, being not in office for the full time which may be required for it, and there may be another gentleman who may take his place who may not share his views. Under such circumstances, would it not be right that in this year of 1922, when we are at a distance of 38 years from the promise made during the debate on the Local Boards Act of 1884, I say, is it not possible, to prescribe general lines by which there would be devolution of power, with reference to management and control, to the local educational authorities for the purpose of carrying out the principle of compulsion and at the same time for the better management and control of primary education.

Then, Sir, I would refer to the question of finance. Upon that point several honourable members have said much. I only wish to refer to one particular part which has not been emphasized. Clause 11 refers to the recurring cost—half the recurring cost and two-thirds of the recurring cost—of a scheme. Now, if you look at the recommendation of the committee appointed for this purpose, you will see that they divide the subject into two parts,

[Rao Saheb Harilal D. Desai]

(1) compulsion or (2) extension on a voluntary basis. Now, whether you take the one case or the other, in every case there will be some non-recurring cost and a lot of recurring cost also. For non-recurring cost there is no provision in the bill. Schools have to be built and furniture has to be provided. That will be a part of non-recurring cost, for which the local educational authority is not likely to get anything from Government, and, in the case of compulsory education, you will require a staff of inspectors, you will require additional staff in various branches, and that would add to the cost. And yet, what we find is, whether there be normal extension on a voluntary basis or whether there may be compulsion, still district local boards and district municipalities are only to get what they do get at present for the existing arrangement. For future extension, whether on a normal basis or on a compulsory basis, they will be getting two-thirds or half, as laid down in the clause. That, I believe, will put the local educational authorities in a very difficult situation, and that also requires further consideration. I do agree with the views expressed by my honourable friend the Registrar of Co-operative Societies that these school boards, if they are to be separately established, ought to be manned by men of common sense and experience, and ought not to be run by cranks in education, and pedagogues only. I share his views and at the same time say that the honourable member from Satara never meant to convey that he was in favour of having on the school boards only men experienced in education.

The last point that I wish to refer to is with reference to the power which Government want to reserve to themselves to appoint any person to carry out a scheme or to continue the scheme and to levy the necessary taxation in case of a defaulting local educational authority. I submit, Sir, that in England that power has been denied and that provision has been abolished, and I think that it would be a very objectionable provision to allow it to remain in the bill which is before us. With these words I commend the bill to the acceptance of the House for the first reading.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): Sir, at this late hour after several honourable members have spoken on this bill the first important point that I want to bring to the notice of this House is the unsatisfactory character of the bill so far as clause 8 is concerned. The feeling that I had after I read this bill for the first time was that this bill is hardly a great advance on the Patel Act. Clause 8 says "Local authorities may by resolution declare their intention to provide compulsory elementary education, etc." Now, however anxious or enthusiastic some members of the local board may be, I am afraid the chances are that on account of the present state of the finances of the local authorities they will never make up their minds to declare in favour of compulsory primary education. Then the next clause says under certain circumstances Government should take on themselves the duty. Now so far as the Honourable Minister who has introduced this bill is concerned, if he continues to be in office.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I with all respect say that this is merely repetition? Those two arguments have been used by nearly every honourable member who has spoken before now. (Honourable Members: Hear, hear.) Surely we ought to have some freshness of argument. I hope honourable members who are to address the House to-morrow will not repeat arguments that have been frequently used.

The Council is now adjourned till 2 p.m. on Wednesday, the 4th October 1922.

PRIMARY EDUCATION BILL (BILL No. XVII OF 1922).

(Debate on the first reading resumed.)

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): Sir, I was pointing out yesterday that clause 8 did not go far enough. I would like to have that clause amended somewhat on the lines of section 11 of the English Education Act of 1921. That section runs as follows:

> With a view to the establishment of a national system of public education available for all persons capable of profiting thereby, it shall be the duty of the council of every county and county borough, so far as their powers extend, to contribute thereto by providing for the progressive development and comprehensive organisation of education in respect of their area, and with that object any such council from time to time may, and shall when required by the Board of Education, submit to the Board schemes showing the mode in which their duties and powers under this Act and sub-section (6) of section two of the Blind Persons' Act, 1920, are to be performed and exercised, whether separately or in co-operation with other authorities,

[Mr. C. M. Gandhi]

I think, Sir, that if this Act is to be more widely used and is not to be a dead letter as the Patel Act has been up to now, the Act ought to be amended in such a manner as to throw on the local authority the duty of spreading compulsory education within a given time. I would have liked to have that clause 8 amended on somewhat.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: This suggestion has been made already by several honourable members. Properly speaking it is a point for the select committee and for the second reading and not for the first reading. But I allowed it for full freedom of debate. Now I should not allow its repetition.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: Then, Sir, I would also like to have the preamble modified.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. That again is out of order. The preamble, as I said yesterday, is governed by the enacting clauses of the bill, and can be modified if the clauses are modified; the preamble is a follower of the clauses and simply states an existing fact.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: I was only going to say.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have ruled it out of order. You have to accept my decision.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: I accept it entirely, but the rule says that the preamble may contain a fact which is a fact established or accepted by this House. I say, Sir, that this House has accepted it as a fact that compulsory primary education is the goal to be aimed at. I say, therefore, Sir, that this preamble ought to contain a fact established by this Council, namely that compulsory education will be the goal of this Council to be attained within a particular period.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That is already the principle of the bill—that is its goal. The honourable member need not waste time over what is a fact and is not disputed.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: Subject to what I have already said, Sir, I welcome this measure, knowing as I do the difficulties of the Honourable Minister in drafting a bill in which he had to try to meet divergent opinions.

The majority of the committee were of opinion that compulsory education should begin from places where education has spread the most. The other members are of opinion that it should begin at once from those areas where it has not made any beginning at all. The bill as submitted has tried to meet these divergent opinions in the only way it was possible to meet them. It is not, however, true to say, as some honourable members have said, that Gujarat is not keen on compulsory primary education. No doubt I am aware that members from Gujarat advised caution particularly in view of the fact that Gujarat is now passing through critical times so far as education is concerned. The fact to which the honourable the Director of Public Instruction referred, namely that Gujarat was educationally the most advanced province of the Presidency, and the fact that the city of Surat was the first to take advantage of the Patel Act, shows that the Gujaratis are equally keen for compulsory primary education. It was suggested that in view of the fact that Gujarat was already advanced in education, and that Gujarat was so far unduly pampered, so far as education was concerned, in times gone by, some of the money which was till now devoted to Gujarat could be profitably diverted to other provinces of the Presidency. I say, Sir, these views are not correct. The conclusion which the honourable member from Ahmednagar drew, namely that Gujarat was lukewarm, was based upon the evidence of a solitary retired official who was a Mahomedan, and knowing as we do that even in Gujarat, Mahomedans do take kindly towards the education of girls, it was hardly proper to generalise from the evidence of that solitary Mahomedan gentleman. Gujarat is mostly a commercial country, and the trading classes know the advantages of literacy. Therefore, Gujarat has made all possible efforts to advance literacy in that province so far as they could, and some of the best schools in the Presidency will be found in Gujarat. So that, it is not right to say that Gujarat is not for compulsion and Gujarat should not have the same advantages of the spread of education as the other parts of the Presidency. Then, Sir, it was stated that, in view of the fact that Gujarat was favoured considerably more in the past, the funds which could be devoted to Gujarat may be as well diverted to other districts. As to that, I submit the figures are quite the other way. If you refer to the latest Government publication, on the administration of local boards in the Presidency, you will find that the Northern Division got a contribution of Rs. 16,62,000 from Government, the Central Division Rs. 21,32,000 and the Southern Division Rs. 17,00,000, and in the case of municipal expenditure also the Northern Division got about Rs. 65,00,000 and the Central Division Rs. 67,00,000; so that, it is not true that Gujarat has got any undue share of the provincial revenue from Government, so far spent on education. I do not like to bring in any parochial considerations in a matter like this, which ought to be looked at from a broad national point of view. But, when all things are considered, one cannot help feeling that Gujarat has so far rather been unfavourably and badly treated.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order. The past is past. We are now dealing with the present and the future, and therefore we need not cry over the insufficiencies of the past either as regards Gujarat or as regards other districts.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI: I bow to your ruling, Sir. Then, coming to the machinery provided, I feel that we have taken, so far as this bill is concerned, a retrograde step. I think the difficulty of the Minister has arisen because of the fact that he took the definition of a municipality bodily from the District Municipal Act. On account of certain difficulties in the working of the District Municipal Act, a city municipality had to be defined there in that manner, and because many more city municipalities had to be created for the purpose of thrusting chief officers on the municipalities, many municipalities which ought not to be city municipalities are now, under section 181, city municipalities. I do not think there is any charm in retaining the definition of the word 'city municipality' which has been given in the District Municipal Act. We can define city municipalities for the purpose of this Act, and make the definition apply only to municipalities with a population of 30,000 or more and also include therein all such urban municipalities as are going to come in; so that, we shall thereby bring in all those local authorities so far as urban municipalities are concerned who have been working the school committees fairly satisfactorily.

There are other provisions of the bill which, as has been said by many of the honourable members who have previously spoken, require to be looked into in the select committee, and I hope when the select committee meets we shall be able to set them right.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA (Bombay City): Mr. President, from the point of view of the Mahomedans, the introduction of this bill is indeed a very great reform, and posterity will remember with gratitude the present Government for the bold step that they have taken in introducing this legislation, with the object of making elementary education a universal one for the masses of the Presidency. I trust, Sir, that in practice this will be achieved at an early date. I am sure, speaking for the Mahomedan community, that no community would welcome this measure much more than the Moslem community as I believe that the conditions of the Mahomedans on the whole, in all spheres of life, will never be placed on a more satisfactory basis unless and until education spreads among the masses on a very extensive scale, for I believe that elementary education is the foundation of lifting the whole of the community to a higher sphere of life. Admittedly, the standard of literacy among the Mussalman community is very low, and the only way to raise it is to make education compulsory in that community.

When, at a time like this, when the selfless leaders of the Mussalman community are working to facilitate education for their brethren, I should not allow a remark made in this Council by my honourable friend the member from the Panch Mahals, go uncontradicted and unchallenged. My honourable friend from the Panch Mahals said yesterday in this Council that "Islam prohibits girls from going to school". Sir, this is far from the truth. There is not a single chapter, or a verse, or a line in the Holy Koran favouring any such idea as was suggested by my honourable friend. On the other hand, it has been ordained by our revered Prophet to all his followers to acquire knowledge even if they have to go to the far distant land of China. Surely, Sir, it cannot be contended for a moment that going to school in one's own native town or village is more difficult as going to a far off land like China. My honourable friend knows that in every town and village, wherever there is a Bohra population, in Gujarat, Kathiawar or the Deccan, there is a madressah attached to the mosque, and there both boys and girls receive secular education, and I am proud to say that, so far as my community is concerned, to which my honourable friend from the Panch Mahals also belongs, education in that community both for the boys and the girls, is almost universal. You will not find a single Bohra child, either a boy or a girl, who does not attend a madressah or a school. Of course I admit that so far as the girls are concerned, they are withdrawn at the age of twelve from the school or madressah, and therefore this bill, which restricts compulsion to the age of 11, cannot possibly conflict with the religious susceptibilities of any section of the Muslim community.

I would like to make one more remark, namely, although the committee recommends that compulsion should be applied only to boys at present I go a step further and say that it should be applied to both boys and girls simultaneously so that universal education may become a reality. There should not be any half-way house in reaching this goal.

Having regard to all these manifold advantages that are likely to accrue to the Bombay Presidency by universal literacy, I trust that Government will not be deterred by any obstacles or impediments in the way of applying the policy of compulsion in a whole-hearted manner and thus attaining the goal desired at an early date.

Mr. LALBHAI AMBARAM (Surat District): Mr. President, on account of sickness I had no idea of taking part in this debate, but when the wind has been blowing only in one direction totally, I think it my duty to bring to the notice of this House my views on this matter. Mr. President, this bill has been introduced with the sole object of removing illiteracy from this Presidency. Now, in order to achieve that object, a committee was appointed by this House.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : It was not a committee of this House but it was a committee appointed by Government.

Mr. LALBHAI AMBARAM : A special committee was appointed and in order to carry out the views of that committee, the Honourable Minister thought it necessary to embody in the bill the clause of compulsory education. As far as I have understood the members who have already spoken, I have come to the conclusion that this sort of compulsion is needed specially in the backward classes and not in the forward classes. Then, I believe that this provision of compulsion in the bill will not meet with success as far as my experience goes.....

[At this stage the debate was interupted under Standing Order IV, 1(4).]

Death of Sir BHALCHANDRA KRISHNA, Kt.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have with deep regret to announce to the House the sad news of the death of Dr. Sir Bhalchandra Krishna who was for several years a valued and prominent member of the Legislative Council of old of this Presidency. I am quite sure that this House will join with me in expressing our deep sense of regret at the sad loss which has been sustained by India in general and this Presidency in particular. Sir Bhalchandra was for nearly forty years a public leader in this Presidency, identified with various kinds of useful activities for the good of the country ; he was a member of the Bombay Municipal Corporation for more than thirty years, down to a few years ago when he retired from that civic activity on account of his ill-health. He was for some time President of the Bombay Municipal Corporation and, combined with his practice which was very large, were his exertions in several directions of public usefulness. As a member of the Legislative Council of the Bombay Presidency of old, he represented for several years the University of Bomay and during the first period of the plague, when Lord Sandhurst was the Governor of Bombay, he rendered to the Government valuable service in coping with that dire epidemic. The country has lost a most useful citizen, a generous soul, one who was loved by all and who never spared any exertion on his part to render himself useful to the country at large.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA : Mr. President, I desire to associate myself with the sentiments to which you, Sir, have given expression. I have had the privilege of working with Sir Bhalchandra on many public associations and I know how zealous he was in the discharge of his public duties and in his desire to render the best service he could to his country. I trust that the whole House will associate itself with you, Sir, in the observations you have given expression to.

PRIMARY EDUCATION BILL (BILL NO. XVII OF 1922).

(The Debate was resumed.)

Mr. LALBHAI AMBARAM : Before we resort to compulsion I say, Sir, that there are other methods which ought to have been applied before resort to this last measure. Mr. President, the lower classes in India can be governed or can be easily governed by love, sound advice and inducement. If the Council wants an instance in support of my opinion, I would gladly inform the House that in one of the talukas in my district the people were so backward that they did not know what education was. I must express my hearty thanks to the missionaries and also thanks to the revenue officers who joined with the officers of the Educational Department. In order to make the people realise the importance of education, the missionaries and those officers adopted the methods above stated rather than compulsion.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Is it necessary to go into all that ?

Mr. LALBHAI AMBARAM : Because I am against compulsion.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : It may be, but I do not know how you can bring in the missionaries ?

Mr. LALBHAI AMBARAM : I am simply giving an instance in support of my conclusion.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Very well, let me follow your argument a little more to see its relevancy.

Mr. LALBHAI AMBARAM : With the help of the Revenue Department, the educational authority started a boarding school house, and gave other educational facilities, in order to make the people understand the benefits of education. What I want to impress upon the House is that India is not a country for compulsion, and a compulsory law will bring discredit both to Government and the people. (Honourable Members : No. No.) I am stating the existing state of things. Well, Sir, we have been under the British rule for the last 100 years and it is strange to say that there are still people in this Presidency who have not learnt what the advantage of educaton is, and the Government have not been able to impress upon the people of this Presidency that education is essential to their progress. For these reasons, I am strongly of opinion that there should not be any compulsion so far as the backward classes are concerned.

There is also one other point which I wish to bring to the notice of this House in connection with compulsory primary education. In certain localities there is a movement urging the people to understand that the education given at present is bad, that it is more expensive, that it spoils the health of children, and lastly that that kind of education leads to slavery. So long as this impression is not removed I am afraid no progress will be made, and compulsion, which is the goal of this bill, will hardly be attained.

There is one more point which I wish to refer to. Suppose all these people are compelled by a statute to send their children to school, what guarantee is there that there will be no fraud, which the people may commit with the help of schoolmasters ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : What fraud ?

Mr. LALBHAI AMBARAM : I am coming to that. Suppose I have got a boy whom I do not wish to send to school. I ask the teacher to enter his name. I will not send my boy to school for many reasons. I shall say that I am ready to send the boy to the school, but the boy himself absconds. What is the guarantee that such frauds will not occur ? I have come across such cases where schoolmasters are asked.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : That is a question of administration, not legislation; and you need not trouble yourself about it.

Mr. LALBHAI AMBARAM : I merely touched the point.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : You touched it and I have touched it out as not relevant.

Mr. LALBHAI AMBARAM : Then I go to the question of free education. Well, Sir, to my mind, the provision that I find in this bill is not sufficient,

[Mr. Lalbhai Ambaram]

In one of the clauses it is stated that the local bodies should not levy any school fee for boys going to school. If there is a provision that the local bodies should not levy an educational cess, then it can be called free education. When the people are asked to pay an additional educational cess, where does free education come in ? I am aware of what has happened in Surat, where compulsion was introduced. There an educational cess was imposed, and there was a great agitation about it. It was levied at the rate of half an anna on each rupee of the municipal tax which a person pays. I will just quote an instance. Suppose I pay Rs. 100 as municipal tax, and I have no school-going children. I have to pay Rs. 3-2-0 every year as educational cess, while my neighbour who pays Rs. 2 as municipal tax is asked to pay 1 anna as educational cess. It is for this reason why the step taken by the municipality is not much liked by the people there.

Mr. P. R. CHIKODI : It is a matter of detail, Sir.

Mr. LALBHAI AMBARAM : I am simply giving an instance.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : How many children has your neighbour got ?

Mr. LALBHAI AMBARAM : Five.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : How much do you pay ?

Mr. LALBHAI AMBARAM : I have to pay Rs. 2-3-0 ; but I have no school-going child.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : I think the honourable member from Belgaum is quite right in saying that it is a matter of detail. The honourable member for Surat now addressing had better stop at that.

Mr. LALBHAI AMBARAM : Well, Sir, my point is.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Please abide by my ruling. The time of the Council should not be wasted on such matters of detail at this first reading.

Mr. LALBHAI AMBARAM : Now I come to the third point, namely, the formation of school boards. Well, Sir, according to the experience that I have got, these boards, as has been described here, will hardly be in a position to do any useful work. This board is composed of people elected by the several boards, municipalities, minorities, and so on. Looking to the report of the Educational Department in regard to local boards, I find there is a complaint that the non-officials are not taking any interest or much interest in the matters relating to local boards. So I have no reason to hope for good work from this board, and, as the Honourable the Director of Public Instruction told us the other day, there is no use creating a board if there are not proper men available. Sir, it is a very hard task to find out what is proper and what is not proper. Everybody, human nature being what it is, would come forward for such honour. But my experience leads me to say that those among the members of the board who are advanced in education have got lots of other matters to attend to ; they hardly get sufficient time even to attend meetings of a board. On the contrary those who have not got sufficient education will always remain nervous to do anything. So I am not of opinion that the House should bother itself with the idea of starting a school board.

Now, I want to deal, Sir, with the fourth point, namely, the appointment of a separate executive officer for the school boards.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That is entirely a matter of detail, it does not affect the principle at all. Even if you delete that officer, the principle of the bill will remain.

Mr. LALBHAI AMBARAM: Just as you please, Sir. Then, in clause 20, paragraph (2), I find concurrent jurisdiction of two authorities. Instead of those authorities, if the duty of making a complaint were entrusted to the schoolmaster, it would serve the purpose well. With these remarks, I oppose the main principle of the bill, namely, compulsory education.

Mr. B. P. PATEL ((Ahmedabad District): Sir, the introduction of compulsory education means that a large sum of money is required. I submit that, in the beginning, Government should come forward to meet all the expenses and when the people—the masses—gradually get the taste of education and realise the value of it, then gradually Government should withdraw the grants of money and ask the local bodies to find the money themselves. I submit, in this way, most of the recommendations made in the Education Committee's report can be gradually and successfully carried out.

I support the shift system recommended by the committee in their report, because by means of that system more accommodation will be found in the beginning.

I suggest that the age limit of school-going children should be between 5 and 11 years, because in that way the ignorant parents will not be able to take their children to fields in their infancy.

It is high time that this bill be immediately introduced and passed into law. With these words, I support the first reading of the bill.

Mr. D. B. DALAL (Panch Mahals District): Sir, I beg to support the motion of the Honourable Minister. We all accept the main principle underlying this bill and there is no question about it. But Sir, I come from a district which is most backward in all respects, that is, agriculture, trade, commerce and education, and is inhabited to a great extent, by Bhils and other forest tribes, who eke out a precarious livelihood from forest produce, grass, timber, mhowra flowers and mhowra seeds, and a precarious food crop from agriculture. Excellent as the measure is for introducing compulsory primary education, where there are people plunged in ignorance and darkness such as the Bhils and other forest tribes, I think legislation ought to introduce such a mitigating measure that it will not work injuriously on the people and defeat the object which we all have in view. The Bhils, Sir, in spite of the penal clauses, will not send their children to the school and the penal clauses, I am afraid, will be a dead letter in the long run so far as these forest tribes are concerned. I therefore suggest that the penal clauses and some other sections consequential on those clauses may be modified by the select committee in such a manner that the children of the Bhils and Naekas may have an opportunity to help their parents during the mhowra and crop seasons on which the existence of the whole family depends.

Besides, Sir, in my district I do not think that girls should be brought under compulsion in the commencement. And the course of studies to be adopted in my part of the district should be such as is peculiar to these tribes and as would give them the taste for the three R's, i.e., reading, writing, reckoning.

Then the next suggestion that I wish to make is as regards the question of finances. Sir, the responsibility of primary education lies mostly on the shoulders of Government rather than on the shoulders of the local boards and the aid which Government is going to give them is I think rather very unsatisfactory, and I think an advanced Government of this type should at least give in the beginning all the expenses. In a district like the Panch Mahals the Honourable Minister is well aware what prospect there is to raise money for this increased expenditure, and I hope he will note the helplessness of the local bodies to impose any more taxes and also of the people to bear the burden of any more taxes. With these remarks I support the first reading of this bill with a hope that the select committee will consider the different suggestions made by honourable members who come from the backward districts like my own district.

[Mr. D. B. Dalal]

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE (Poona District): Mr. President, I will not take up much time in addressing honourable members on the present bill. This bill, Sir, is a further instalment or a continuation of the Patel Bill which the Council passed in 1918. The great difference between the two bills is that in the case of the Patel Bill it was left optional to the city municipalities to go in for compulsory education or not as they wished. In the case of the present bill, the local authorities have the option of preparing the scheme for compulsory primary education in their areas but if they do not exercise this option, then Government have the right to intervene and prepare a scheme by means of their own officers. If a local body fails to come up to the expectations of Government, and if it does not prepare a scheme for compulsory education, Government have reserved the power of preparing the scheme themselves and of recovering the cost of that scheme from the local body. I think, Sir, that this is going a little too far. What I think is that in the case of compulsory education responsible local bodies ought to be allowed to have free scope to exercise their own option.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Or not.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE: If a local body does not choose to have compulsory education in its area, I do not think Government should thrust themselves in and say to that local body "You are wrong, we will force this compulsory education scheme on you." I think this will make compulsory education unpopular, and Government ought to abandon that position. A local body that is willing to accept the scheme should be allowed to introduce it. The power that is given to Government by this bill to interfere themselves and to prepare a scheme for a local body against the wishes of that body should not, I think, find place in the provisions of the bill. In the previous speeches, assertions have been made by several honourable members that the countryside is prepared for compulsory education. My experience is quite otherwise. In the remoter portions of a district, away from the taluka towns and from the principal town of a district the feeling of the rural population is decidedly against this compulsory education. They do not want it and they are not prepared to pay any taxes for it. I have myself made detailed inquiries in the Poona district in two or three outlying villages and the result of these inquiries is that Mahars and Mangs and other backward classes are dead against this bill. They do not want compulsory education. I think, therefore, that we ought to go on very cautiously if we want education to spread generally without discontent. The position that was taken up by the Honourable the Leader of the House when he was in charge of the Education Department is in my opinion the right position to take up as regards these backward classes. We ought to multiply the number of schools for these backward classes as much as possible and spread education among them on voluntary basis and when it is spread to a sufficient extent the principle of compulsion should then be introduced.

[Dewan Bahadur K. R. Godbole]

Now, let us see whether financially it is possible for us to have compulsory education throughout the whole of the Presidency. I decidedly say that this will be beyond the financial capabilities of this Presidency. The figures that have been given in the report of the Compulsory Education Committee show that on the 31st of March 1921 the number of children attending primary schools in this Presidency outside Bombay City was 5,05,000 and the number of children that were out of school and that were not studying on that day was something like 17,60,000. Now the cost of educating these 17,60,000 children means an expenditure of 3½ crores of rupees per year. Now I will ask the honourable members of this House to say whether the Presidency will be in a position to produce 3½ crores of rupees per year, for the spread of primary education during the next eighteen or twenty years. I do not think they will be in a position to do that. Therefore the attempt to spread primary education throughout the whole Presidency excluding the city of Bombay and to bring every child under the primary education scheme is a problem that is beyond the financial capabilities of this Presidency and it should not be attempted. Even in the scheme that has been outlined in the committee's ten years' programme, universal primary education is not attempted. According to the programme the present number of boys in the primary schools which is 6,00,000 will at the end of ten years, if the whole programme is carried out, be increased to 10,69,000, but even this number will be about 80 per cent. of the school-going population of the whole Presidency. In the case of girls the results will be still more meagre. The number of girls attending primary schools at present is 1,53,000, and the number that will be attending schools after the ten years' programme is carried out will be 3,68,000 girls, and that will be only 33 per cent. of the girls that ought to attend primary schools if the compulsory education programme is to be carried out in full.

So, even after these ten years of the programme we do not make very much progress in the spread of primary education. This ten years' programme assumes that the local boards will spend 29 lakhs of rupees on education per year instead of the present 9 lakhs. For the local boards to be able to spare the 20 lakhs of additional expenditure on primary education, they must have an additional income of 60 lakhs per year. This is because the local boards are responsible not merely for education; they are responsible for sanitation, for medical relief, for development of the district by means of additional communications and so on. When they produce an income of an additional 60 lakhs per year they will be able to spare 20 lakhs for primary education. Now, knowing what we have been able to do hitherto and judging by the resources that are and that will be at the disposal of the local boards, I do not think that in ten years the local boards will be able to secure an additional revenue of 60 lakhs, out of which 20 lakhs can be spared for education. I think, therefore, that the ambitious programme that is put forward in the bill will be wrecked on financial grounds. I am therefore of opinion that we ought to go more slowly.

I think compulsory education in the first stages ought to be confined to population centres of 5,000 and upwards, i.e., the 202 towns according to the census of 1921, and also to places that have recognised organisations in them for carrying out the provisions of the Compulsory Education Act—I mean places having smaller municipalities or village panchayats.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I ask the honourable Dewan Bahadur whether it is necessary to dilate on this point, when the bill itself,

[The President]
while recognising the principle of compulsion, says that it is competent for Government to exempt any particular place or community? These are all matters of detail, I should think.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Yes.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE: The only point I wanted to bring out was the leakage of education that is taking place and the necessity of preventing it. In my district I have been going round villages away from taluka centres, and I find that scholars who have studied up to the fourth standard, have by now lost what they have learned.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: We are not now dealing with the question of leakage, but the principle of the bill.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE: What I mean to say is that primary education should be made compulsory in large village centres only.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That I say is an administrative measure provided for by the bill itself.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE: But the bill proposes to go in for smaller villages also.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That is possible, but they may be exempted. The bill says you can apply it anywhere, but you can also exempt any particular locality.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE: The point I am making is that it should not be applied to smaller areas.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Do you want a provision in the bill itself?

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE: If possible, the operation of the bill should be confined to larger towns.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You want it in the bill itself, instead of leaving it to administrative regulations?

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE: Yes.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: If you had put it in that way, I would not have interrupted.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE: I think that the scope of the bill ought to be confined to large population centres and not extended to smaller population centres.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: You think the bill ought to do what it now leaves Government to do by regulations?

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE: If possible, I want the bill to run on the lines pointed out: its scope should be confined to large population centres and to villages that have municipalities or village panchayats in them. One particular reason for this is that if compulsory education is confined to these centres, there will be no leakage, because in these large places we can establish libraries, circulating libraries and other means of spreading cheap literature among the villagers who will then be able to keep up what they have learnt under our compulsory education scheme. As I was telling the House, in the case of outlying villages a lot of education that has been given is at present practically lost. The other day, I visited an outlying taluka village. There were six agriculturists in that village who had studied up to the fourth standard; they admitted to me that after four or five years they had lost most of what they had learnt except Balbodh reading and writing and a little of arithmetic; the Modi that they had learned was gone.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: There again, you are coming to a point with which we are not concerned on the principle of the bill.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE: The point I am making is that if you confine your compulsory education to big villages, by means of libraries, circulating book clubs, and so on, we can keep the education that we will be giving, and what we have given will not be lost. That will be the advantage. So, I think it will be a good thing if compulsory education is confined to large population centres of the Presidency in the first instance leaving the smaller population centres and villages to be dealt with later on, that is, until in the ordinary course of the propaganda of the Education Department education has already spread in those areas to some extent.

These are the remarks I had to make regarding the present bill.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Sir, I regret to say that the scope of the bill as presented to the Council is inconsistent with the intentions of the Honourable Minister as he himself has expressed them. The Compulsory Education Committee was appointed on the 15th July 1921, and on the 2nd August 1921, this Council accepted after considerable discussion a resolution that compulsory education is the goal to which the Government must declare its adherence. When the Committee was appointed, to it was referred the question, marked as question no. 1, to consider and report on the desirability and practicability of introducing free and compulsory education in municipal and rural areas. After the policy was declared by the Government through the Honourable Minister, the Honourable Minister expressed openly in this Council in answer to my question that the first point referred to the Compulsory Education Committee had to be abandoned. We have the consolation of having in charge of education a Minister who takes a personal interest in the progress of education. He referred to that same committee a few other points, and amongst them the most important was no. 4, namely, to submit a definite programme showing the various steps which should be successively taken so that a complete system of free and compulsory education may be introduced within a definite period, and you, Sir, will bear out this fact that that committee engaged itself for a considerable time over the determination of that one, single, simple question. And, Sir, the intention of the Honourable Member in charge, the Minister Dr. Paranjpye, as to what he wanted to do is clear when we refer to what he said in this Council. These are his words:

> "I want the committee to lay down a definite programme which will be carried out. I cannot really think that members of the Council expect me to come out with a cut and dried scheme in a few months, involving such large questions, without adequate consideration, without adequate consultation with people holding all shades of opinion."

Further, in the same speech, he said:

> "Then I come to the remarks of my friend Mr. Gupte. He appeared to think that in Mr. Patel's bill the question of compulsion has been once for all settled. He will find that the question before us is far wider than that Compulsory Education Act. It is not optional compulsion that we are now thinking of; it is compulsion to be enforced on every municipality, whether it wants it or not, and to be enforced on every village in the Presidency of Bombay."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Who said that?

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: The Honourable Minister, at the time of replying to the discussion on the resolution.

Now, Sir, I am naming him, because it is the personality that is behind the bill that intends to introduce compulsory education but it is not the bill that gives that scope to compulsory education as it is now placed before the Council.

Now, with this declaration of policy, with this declaration of principle, with a committee absolutely charged, I say, with fixing the programme showing the various steps to be taken so that a complete system of free and compulsory education may be introduced within a definite period in the Presidency, and with the intention of the honourable member that he will be glad to see it introduced in every municipality and little village in the Presidency, I would ask the Council to consider whether the wording of this bill—not the intention of the proposer of the bill which never would appear before our posterity—answers the undertaking and the promise of the Honourable Minister. If it does, I have nothing else to say, but I would certainly say, Sir, that there is not a word in the whole of the bill which respects the findings of the Compulsory Education Committee appointed by him, for whom he declared extreme respect on the 2nd of August. I fail to find, except a small, little matter about the school board, any matter in which the opinion of the Education Committee has been reproduced in the bill. That committee stood charged with suggesting detailed proposals for any legislative and administrative measures necessary for the purpose, including the machinery required to carry out any such measures, and that committee, headed by you, Sir, reported as follows:

"Legislation in respect of primary education is at present to be found in the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, the Bombay Local Boards Act, 1884, and the Bombay Primary Education (District Municipalities) Act, 1918."

This bill does not differ much from those Acts. The committee goes on to say:

"We propose that a separate and comprehensive Primary Education Act should be framed dealing with the whole question of the management of primary education, and containing in addition, the provisions necessary for the introduction of compulsory education.

"The general relations between Government and local bodies in respect of primary education which are at present laid down in the rules framed under the Municipal and Local Boards Acts might well find a place in a Primary Education Act."

That committee, therefore, gave its absolutely distinct and clear opinion that rules will not do, that the Government changes the rules from time to time, and abrogates to itself the function of providing finances at its sweet will, and that therefore rules must be done away with, and unanimously recommended that every such thing must find its place in a comprehensive Compulsory Education Act. The committee advised legislation and the form of that legislation. A responsible committee headed by an Honourable Judge of the High Court, who is expected, I think, to know exactly what he means by the words "rules made by the Government" made that recommendation. But we find that all the most important points referred by the Honourable Minister to that committee, when the bill was drafted, remain altogether neglected. We find this bill contains 24 clauses, and amongst them there is only one important clause, namely, clause 8. There is no other clause of importance at all, and the effect of even this clause 8 is obliterated by clause 10, which leaves the Government the power to grant and refuse; we stand now, Sir, not one inch in advance of the Patel Act of 1918 so far as the principle of compulsion is concerned. That Act, in section 5, gave the option of compulsion—that is the word the Minister used in the last discussion—to municipalities. Clause 8 of this bill is in no way different. Section 5 of the old Act provided that any municipality may resolve to have compulsory education. Exactly the same word has been used here, the same section quoted in the margin as its model, it may if it chooses; a local authority may resolve that compulsory education be introduced. I will put it to you, Sir, I put it to the honourable member himself, if he has framed in his own handwriting the bill, whether he can differentiate between section 5 of the old Act and clause 8 of the present bill, whether he would be prepared to tell you that clause 8 of the bill confers any further authority on the local board than section 5 of the Patel Act gave. I say and I repeat that the whole of this bill has been framed on the bases of the Patel Act, that it has been framed by the legal experts of Government who did not divine or penetrate into the mind of the Minister himself who, I know, is extremely zealous for the introduction and the extension of compulsory primary education. But, so far as the wording of the bill is concerned, apart from the personality of the honourable mover himself, I would respectfully and most emphatically submit that there is not a word about compulsion, and there is nothing compulsory either upon the Government or any local authority to introduce it. I am looking to the wording of clause 8. Do you find anywhere, does the Honourable Minister find anywhere, one word to the effect that " it shall be the duty of any local authority, except when called upon by Government so to do ", that it shall be the duty of any local authority, of any municipality or such and such authority, such and such municipality, to introduce within its limits compulsory education within any particular or defined time limit? All that it does in a later clause is " if the Government "—the word " if " is there, a two-letter word " if "—if the Government calls upon any local authority to do so and if the local authority does not, then what the Government do may to enforce its wishes in that direction, if it wishes, namely, introduction of compulsory education. So the whole provision in the Act is based on the word " may " in clause 8. My honourable friend from Belgaum has already dealt with this question, but I only put it to you and the Honourable Minister, whether there is one single instruction—one single finding—reasoned finding—detailed finding—given by the Primary Education Committee which laid down the principle that the introduction of compulsion ought to be obligatory on the local education boards, I put it to you whether any of the suggestions have been embodied in the bill of 24 clauses that has been placed before this Council. The difficulty is clear —but my honourable friend the Minister in charge would tell us that every provision is made for compulsory education because there is a certain clause which enables Government to frame rules and force education. I think, Sir, the time to accept such undertakings—for all these hopes—is fast disappearing, because these are matters which depend upon the personality of each member of Government that comes and goes. If there is no clear and definite wording in the clauses of the bill, there will be nothing for the Council, when a new Minister comes in, to fall back upon—there will be nothing that any community or any portion of the population can do to call upon Government to do so. Therefore, Sir, my first complaint against the wording of the clause is that there is no definiteness in the wording of clause 8, the most important clause of the bill. I would therefore suggest to the Honourable Minister to bring in an entirely new bill bearing upon it the impress of the personality of the Honourable Minister whose oral address three days ago was far more definite, and declaratory and admirable though rather apologetic than the wording of this tiny and indefinite bill. You will see, Sir, that so far therefore as the recommendations of the committee are concerned, they have not been heeded. I know that the very first two lines of the statement of objects and reasons contain the words that "the bill is based upon the recommendations of the committee appointed for that purpose". I heartily wish it was so. I heartily wish I could support that statement. I heartily wish that the Honourable Minister in charge hereafter could support that statement by quoting chapter and verse. I cannot find there is anything in the bill to support that statement. I do not want to go into details. The main principle of the bill apart from compulsion is the creation of the district education board. That is disposed of in one single clause, without going into the detailed powers that may be given to that board, without even intending to follow the recommendations of the Primary Education Committee that went to considerable length in investigating the whole matter and even laid down in detail that the powers of the local boards must be more extensive than those of the present school boards of district local boards and municipalities. Though all these recommendations are detailed, the scheme that is submitted to the Council in the bill is contained in one clause, indefinite and undefined. If the powers of this education Board are not defined, I do not understand how the Honourable Minister can feel that the recommendations of the Primary Education Committee have been translated into his present bill. I may point out, Sir, that the Primary Education Committee was selected out of the members of this House—it did not consist of two or three members of this Council and the rest of the world—it was made up exclusively of members of this House headed by the President of this Council. That committee examined numerous witnesses and received considerable advice. I will not be guilty, Sir, of even self-boasting if I say that is a well-considered document worthy of respectful consideration ; I do so because I am confident that all Members of Government themselves admit that this report contains valuable information and is an important document. To set aside all that, to pay no attention to that committee's report, is a matter which will discourage in future any committee of this House coming into existence on the initiative of the Honourable Minister or any other Member of Government. It is with a feeling of pain and surprise that I rise to state my conviction about the imperfect nature, the incompleteness, of the bill that is presented to this Council. If clause 8 had established the principle, acknowledged the principle that Government on the 2nd of August 1921 did acknowledge, then the bill would answer its purpose, but I think, Sir, you have ruled that all these matters are for the select committee ; we must submit to that ruling, but I feel, Sir, that it will be difficult for any select committee to introduce compulsion by language when the present wording of the clause does not contain that principle. I feel most diffident, Sir, how this can be done. I believe it will be most difficult for the select committee to alter the wording of clause 8.....

[Mr. B. G. Pahalajani]

[Mr. B. G. Pahalajani]

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Why should it be difficult for the select committee to modify clause 8 ?

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI : I am positive that the whole principle of the present bill as it should be is only in the preamble where compulsion is mentioned and nowhere in the rest of the bill where no such purpose or even a word of compulsion is mentioned. Personally, I think, Sir, that the matter of principle ought to have been acknowledged in the clauses themselves before going to the select committee.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have followed your argument very closely but when you say that it will be difficult for the select committee to modify the principle, am I to understand that if you try to modify clause 8, then it will be such a transformation of the bill that when it comes on the report stage before the Council, I shall have to rule it out as a new bill altogether?

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: If, when this bill comes back from the select committee, all the recommendations of the Primary Education Committee are embodied therein, the bill when it comes here will acknowledge the principle—the imperative principle—which at present is not acknowledged in the bill before us and is altogether absent from it.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I want to know whether your point of view would not be met by simply substituting "shall" for "may" in clause 8 in the select committee. How does your point bear on the principle of the bill?

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: It won't be met because, as I have said, it is a most important matter that is involved. I am only placing my point of view though in a different way. My chief point is this, that point 4 being referred to the committee for purpose of laying down a definite programme and the committee having given a definite—quite definite—answer it seems doubtful whether that answer can now be embodied in clause 8.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: We will come to that, but let us now take the point at the very threshold of the whole question which you have raised. Clause 8 is as you say the pivot of the whole bill. The principle is there. The title of the bill is "A bill to provide compulsory elementary education". One would think from it that compulsion is the rule and voluntariness the exception. Your argument, as I understand, is that, instead of following the title, the bill by its provisions, particularly clause 8, makes the voluntary principle the rule and compulsion the exception. Is that your point, that the bill is a fraud when it by its title purports to legalise compulsion?

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: It is for you to say so, Sir. Out of respect to the Honourable Minister, I refrained from saying so.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: By "fraud", I meant it in the legal sense, not the usual.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: That is what I intended. The bill does not express the intention conveyed by the preamble.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Assuming your view to be correct, the title being there, it is open to the select committee to modify clause 8 by putting it as you desire and to make compulsion the rule and voluntariness the exception. That is entirely a matter of modification, and does not arise now.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: I am only placing it before the Council.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have followed your argument very closely. At the opening of your speech, when you referred to it, I pointed out that it could be remedied in the select committee. After that assurance is it necessary to proceed with that point?

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: I shall give up the point. I wanted to place before the House the imperfect nature of the bill, and that the select committee will have to mutilate it and bring it before the Council in a perfect form. This Council will be hardly able to recognise the baby that traddles back to the floor of this House.

The second point I want to bring to the notice of the Council is this: the Compulsory Primary Education Committee discussing the financial position of primary education says :

"(So far as India is concerned) Both Government and Local Authorities have, or had 'flexible' sources of taxation, i.e., taxation which can be readily increased or decreased by a fixed amount. Government can increase the Income Tax or the Customs and Excise duties, while the local body can modify the rate of house-tax."

The paragraph discusses the likely source of income in India : but so far as the resources of the municipalities and local boards are concerned, it proceeds to state :

"There is the house-tax in Municipal areas, but the application of this tax to rural areas is not feasible, as the power of levying such a tax has been assigned to the Panchayats, and the amount realised which is not likely to be large, can be expended for other purposes. The Local Fund Cess could perhaps be raised within well defined limits, but the yield will not be very large. The other taxes which can be readily increased or decreased are the Income Tax, Customs duties and the Salt tax. All these taxes are reserved for the Central Government."

I may also draw the attention of the Council to the remarks made by the then Government Member in charge against the Patel Bill :

"One of the important duties of every municipality under section 54 (p) is to make reasonable provision for establishing and maintaining primary schools.....Well, here are at present powers which the municipalities possess. Why have they not been able to carry out those powers in the way in which they would like to do ? Because, as everybody here has admitted, of want of means.....for everything connected with primary education, there are so many wants, and their revenue is so limited that they do not find any other way out of the difficulty except to ask Government to come to their aid. Well, therefore, honourable members, and particularly representatives of municipalities ought to bear it in mind, that it will be impossible for municipalities to work out this bill if you leave it to them to raise funds for educational purposes under the powers given by the bill, namely, trying to raise a fund for educational purposes from the sources which are mentioned in section 59 of the Act."

These were the remarks made by Sir Mahadev Chaubal in 1917. Section 59 is the only enabling section which gives power to municipalities to levy taxes. It specifies insignificant taxes from which income can be raised. The Government of India has made the following declaration in a resolution in February 1913 as regards primary education being the first charge on the State :

"The proposition that illiteracy must be broken down and that primary education has, in the present circumstances of India, a predominant claim upon public funds represents the accepted policy no longer open to discussion."

That is the policy that the Government of India have accepted, and that is the policy accepted by every local Government now since 1917. If law and maintenance of order is a charge on the public revenues, I ask whether the Honourable Government Member in charge of law and maintenance of order will ask a special provision to be made in an Act or law that funds be provided for his department. If we accept the statement of the Government of India as correct that primary education is a charge on the State, then clause 11 is unnecessary. Insertion of a separate clause will be necessary to the effect that it shall be the duty of the Government of Bombay to provide for compulsory primary education, and it shall be the duty of the Government of Bombay to do it within a particular number of years in particular areas. This is practically the suggestion which the Primary Education Committee placed before the Minister advocating that proper legislation should be taken in that behalf. And, Sir, unless those words appear, unless a certain definite undertaking is placed, on the record of a solemn Act, I do not think the intentions of the Government—the good intentions of Government—will not find a loophole to escape from the responsibility that otherwise lies only in theory upon the Government. Now, such definite words, such definite undertaking, must be put down in this bill and the Honourable Minister ought to have bound this Government, in this bill, to carry out that undertaking within a specific period. The Honourable Minister ought to have bound the Government to carry the undertaking beyond his life-time as a Minister, or beyond the life-time of this Council or beyond his life-time in this world. If law and police have to be maintained by the Government, whatever may be the financial circumstances or the means at their disposal, so has primary education to be maintained by Government, whatever may be the financial circumstances, and we want, Sir, the Honourable Minister to record in this bill, or in this Act when the bill comes to be an Act, the solemn undertaking of Government that it shall accept that charge of maintaining primary education, and that no departure from that principle would be allowed, and that definite charge must be created by actual words in the bill, that definite charge must be placed in the bill, with a certain definite programme laid down—a programme which the Honourable Minister had declared he wanted to place before the House on some previous occasion—for furthering and promoting primary education. That has to be acted upon, and I submit that this bill is so imperfect that, when it comes from the select committee to you, you will find many details have to be filled up which never perhaps were imagined before. I again repeat that somebody is responsible for the improper reading, or the insufficient reading, of the compulsory education committee's report. And, if that report had been carefully digested, it would have been seen that all the matters that were necessary for providing compulsory primary education in this Presidency were there. I therefore submit that, when it returns from the select committee, it will then at least bear the impress of the objects propounded by the Honourable Member in his speech with which this bill was placed for its first reading before this Council.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Mr. President, at the behest of the Honourable Minister for Education, I rise to offer a few remarks chiefly on the financial aspect of the question now under consideration. But, before I come to that, I would ask permission to digress for a moment into this question of the interpretation of the report of the Compulsory Education Committee which the last member, the honourable member from Sukkur, has placed before this House. Sir, I hope that every honourable member of this House has thoroughly studied this report; if he has not done so, he should study it with the greatest attention. For my own part, I can only say that I have read it in a very different sense to that in which it has been taken by the honourable member from Sukkur. I understand the honourable member from Sukkur to say that the Honourable Minister has disregarded that report in the preparation of this bill. I think that is a very wrong interpretation of the report. I would only quote one sentence from the report. I understand that the honourable member from Sukkur says that absolute, universal compulsory education was required immediately.....

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: I say it must be carried out in several stages.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: And should have been included in the bill. Well, Sir, I think the pivot of the report is contained in these three lines:

"We suggest that the local educational authorities should be empowered to introduce compulsion into villages which have no schools at present within three years after a school has been started in the village if funds permit."

[Mr. H. S. Lawrence]

Now, Sir, if that does not leave option to the local educational authorities, I do not know what words mean.

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: On what page is it?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Page 22. It also renders the progress dependent on funds, which is an obvious necessity and a fundamental condition. But, Sir, if I were able to lift the load of pessimism which oppresses some of the honourable members here in regard to the financial question, I should indeed be proud and gratified. But I am not sanguine, for some share the apprehensions of the honourable member from Kaira, who, like the famous wife of John Gilpin, that citizen of London of credit and renown, has a frugal mind. Nothing will induce him to agree to any additional taxation on any terms whatever. But, Sir, when we hear of Government being called upon to produce all the funds necessary for meeting the cost of compulsory education, we must remember the change recently effected in the financial position of the district local boards. Means of taxation, which previously were not open to them, have been placed at their disposal. If, instead of supplying revenue from the provincial exchequer, we hand over to district local boards certain resources which were previously reserved to the provincial Government and give them full permission to raise their revenue by that means, do we not assist district local boards as effectually as we could by subventions from the public revenues?

Now, Sir, it is a matter of indifference to the taxpayer whether taxes are raised by Government or raised by the local authorities. As one honourable member from Sind pointed out, it is no use talking about further education, which must necessarily mean further expenditure, if you do not provide the means of getting it. On the other hand, the burden of the taxpayer is not affected, whether it is the district local board which imposes the levy or the Government; in either case the taxpayer has to find the money from his pocket. But there is a further point of view, Sir. The power of self-taxation is the foundation of self-government in England and in every country in the world, and it is by the readiness of local authorities to undergo self-taxation and to accept the sacrifice that that entails, whether in this country or in any country in the world, that their readiness for self-government is estimated, and to have that opportunity now is, I submit, a point of very great importance to this country. I do not suggest for a moment that the fact that the Government have accepted, as they do in this bill, the liability for doubling the cost which local funds contribute, is any sign of generosity on the part of Government. There is no question of generosity or niggardliness, one way or the other. The money has to be found either by the local authorities or by the Government, and it comes out of the same source.

This report, Sir, is, I venture to say, a public document of the greatest value, for which this Council is deeply indebted to the committee over which you, Sir, presided. We find there a faithful picture of the difficulties which we have to encounter and constructive suggestions as to how those difficulties should be overcome, and ultimately it guides us gently, but firmly, to the inevitable conclusion that we cannot introduce compulsory education on a wide scale without very considerable increases of public taxation. There is one other method no doubt possible which has been suggested by the honourable member from Satara who I understand took exception to the present system of the appointment of schoolmasters on what he considers to be an extravagant scale of salary. It is quite conceivable, Sir, when one follows up his suggestion that it may be possible to secure schoolmasters living in their own villages who would be content, as I believe they were content twenty years ago, to educate the village children on a very much reduced cost. That power again, Sir, the power of retrenchment and of making the funds available to carry further, will be placed by this bill in the hands of the school boards. That, Sir, I submit is a power of the greatest advantage. On the one hand in recent years we have been pressing forward centralization and efficiency in this department as in other departments, and there is no doubt whatever that that has entailed very much heavier expenditure. It is possible that this Council when it carries out its wishes on a wider scale may be able to adopt a simpler system of administration, which may have its natural results in every department. Sir, I suggest the first department in which that desirable consummation may be achieved may be in the Education Department and through the agency of the local authorities which this bill proposes to set up.

Another form of pessimism has been the reluctance to take responsibility for the administration of this education and a certain carping criticism of the department that is now to be handed over to the local bodies. Sir, I think the Director of Public Instruction was perhaps unduly modest when, as I understood him, he criticised the value of the department the control of which is being so greatly surrendered. Sir, I do not think that a department which controls some 25,000 schoolmasters and gives education to, I think, seven and a half lakhs of students, which carries out duties on such an enormous scale without any appreciable complaint efficiently, quietly, sympathetically, I do not conceive that that department has anything to apologise for. I entirely agree with the principle of this transfer of control. If Sir, I may be permitted a personal word I may add that it was one of the principal recommendations of a committee over which I had the honour to preside in 1915. When one hears that this bill is a retrograde measure, I would suggest that there is another standpoint from which it may be regarded. Indeed, Sir, this Council is securing through the district local authorities control of a remarkably efficient institution and Government have no cause to depreciate its value when handing over its control to this new authority. A good deal of criticism has also been directed towards the constitution of the school boards. But Sir, I desire to offer my opinion for what it is worth that the school board is the replica of the district local boards and that there is no cause for apprehension that the important powers possessed by the school board can be exercised in any way at variance with the policy desired by the district local boards from which it derives its authority. Some honourable gentlemen suggested that it might take some time before the district and the school board might come into power. That, Sir, is a question for the consideration I believe of the select committee examining the Local Boards Bill and there is no reason, Sir, which I am aware of why the arrangement should not be made to introduce the district local boards and the school boards under this new system in the coming year.

I do hope, Sir, that if honourable members will look at this bill in its broad aspect, they will realize the enormous power for good and efficient service to their country that will be conferred upon the local boards and the local educational authorities if they adopt this bill.

Mr. E. M. PROES: I move the closure, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I accept the closure.

After Recess.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Mr. President, I am exceedingly grateful to the large number of members of this Council who have welcomed the bill—at least the main principles of the bill. The great interest that has been taken in this bill is clearly shown by the large number of members of this House who have spoken on the bill. A large number of them have made their valuable suggestions many of which will be considered in detail by the select committee. I shall only refer, Sir, to a very few of the points which have been made by some of the honourable members, and I shall try to classify them under various headings.

There are a certain number of members who might be regarded as practically entirely opposed to the principle of compulsion: they are not many, but only a few. The first honourable member to speak—I do not see him here—was the honourable member representing Ratnagiri district. While not actually opposing the bill, he practically opposed every clause of it. From the remarks that he made it appears that the word 'Government' was on his brain. Wherever there was the word 'Government' in any clause, he thought that that clause ought to be altered. Now, I do not think that simply because the word 'Government' appears in any clause, we ought to object to that. We must see what that clause is and why the word 'Government' has been introduced into that particular clause. One or two others also opposed the bill practically wholesale, and one of those members was the honourable member for Surat district. I cannot help having a feeling of admiration for the whole hearted way in which he opposed it. I always like to see a die-hard in all his true colours, and the honourable member for Surat district was thoroughly opposed to the principle of compulsion, nay, even to the principle of education itself. Then my honourable friend from the Panch Mahals was also lukewarm in the welcome that he gave to this bill: in particular he was opposed to that portion of the bill which refers to the education of girls. Then there is my honourable friend, the member for Poona district, and he was also almost wholly against the bill, if it was to bring universal compulsion. He appeared to think that if compulsion is to be introduced at all, it should be introduced only in cities, towns and bigger centres of population. Now, to this, the honourable members specially representing the backward classes legitimately object, saying that that would only mean giving food to those who have, and refusing it to those who have it not. I feel that, while certain opportunities are open to residents of towns and comparatively large centres of population, they are altogether non-existent in the case of people in the smaller villages. Of course one can see practical difficulties in the case of the introduction of compulsion in very minute villages. If a village cannot possibly, even by compulsion, produce even fifteen or twenty children, it would be very difficult to have a school and therefore compulsion in that village. But if there is a village which, at least under compulsion, can produce 20 or 25 children, it is, I submit, a very proper place where we shall do something to bring education to their doors; and it is from this point of view that my honourable friend from the Belgaum district has been so insistent, and I think rightly insistent, that in any programme of compulsory education we should not neglect thes villages. After all, the villages form the backbone of the whole country, and it is no good restricting our efforts to the larger centres of population, because they do not fully represent all the people of this country. Therefore, although we can understand that there may be practical difficulties, still it is the part of statesmanship to see how those difficulties are to be overcome, and not rest satisfied with the fact that those difficulties are existing and that we should do nothing to remove them. I do not believe that the large opinion of this Council nor the large opinion outside this Council will agree with my honourable friend from Poona district in his contention that we should confine the operation of this bill to towns and comparatively large centres of population.

While there are these three or four honourable members who are practically opposed, more or less, to the principle of compulsion, there is a certain number of my honourable friends who have practically opposed this bill, because they think that it does not go far enough, and among these I might put my honourable friend the nominated member from the backward classes from Satara, the honourable member for Nasik district, for Sholapur district, and also to a certain extent my honourable friend representing the depressed classes. Now, while I understand that it may possibly be complained that this bill does not contain everything that may be conceived with regard to compulsory education, still I submit that this bill provides the machinery for reaching that goal within a very short time. I have already explained in my speech that Government, as a whole, as at present constituted, accept the programme on the broad lines laid down in the Compulsory Education Committee's report, and I do not think that any Government can do anything more than that. It is not possible for any Government mainly constituted on elective principles, whose councillors are elected for three years only, to get itself committed by any legislation so firmly to any one particular policy that it cannot be overthrown afterwards. I have already said in my speech that I not only expressed my own opinion, but expressed the opinion of the whole Government as at present constituted. I cannot say what will happen to the Government or to the Legislative Council eight years hence. If we want to have such a binding rule upon the Bombay Government and the Presidency of Bombay, it ought to come from outside. It may very well be that if Parliament passes any law of that nature, then that will be binding upon the Government, and we cannot do anything against it; or it might be the Government of India passing a law that may be binding upon us, and we cannot change it. But if a programme is to be laid down, a programme which is to go on for a score of years, I do not know in what way it can be made binding on the Government for all that time. This Council might lay down a programme of that nature. But, remember, while laying down that programme we shall have to make provision for a large number of other measures. For instance, if we are to have a programme for ten years, we must have certain new taxation gradually raised. We must have some kind of taxation this year, possibly another kind of taxation next year, another one in the third year, in the fourth year, and so on. I put it to the Council whether they can pass an Act relating to taxation which is to come into effect eight years hence. I am not a lawyer, but I would ask members of this Council whether it is possible to lay down a programme in this cut and dried manner, every step of which shall be complete, and which cannot be upset afterwards. If such a thing were possible, I submit that this one Council might once for all determine the progress of this Presidency for a hundred years to come, and lay down a programme like this. What I would like to say is this: this is our policy at present, and we have no intention of altering it, and the guarantee of that policy is in the hands of the people who control the persons who have the reins of Government in their hands. The policy has been laid down in the speech with which I opened the first reading of this bill. It is a speech not by the Minister of Education personally, but it is a policy which I have laid down on behalf of Government, and that, I think, is as solemn a declaration as can be made by any Government which is constituted on the representative principle. Whether that policy will be carried out afterwards by the Government that will come into existence at that time, or the Legislative Council to which that Government is wholly responsible, I cannot say. I do not think it is possible for us to say whatever any new Council may think of our present policy, that that policy will be for ever binding upon it. I have already stated that as far as this Government can bind itself solemnly and as far as it has got the support of the present Legislative Council, this policy will be decidedly followed, and I do not think that any Government or any legislature can introduce an Act, and bind all future Governments in perpetuity.

Now, Sir, I think that there is another class of supporters who have supported this bill only to half the extent, that is, only so far as the education of boys is concerned. My honourable friend from the Larkana district and one or two other honourable members also have opposed the principle of compulsion so far as girls are concerned. Now, the programme that is laid down in the report of the committee does not apply immediately, or even during the course of ten years, to all girls in this Presidency. I have already expressed the hope that, when the education of boys is widespread and the compulsory principle has been applied to them, we shall get public opinion more and more on our side, so that the application of the principle to girls will be much easier, and, as I have said already, we hope that it will be possible to apply the principle to girls as soon as possible, and all steps will be taken by Government in that direction. Things that were impossible a few years ago have become possible now. The progressive spirit in the Moslem community itself, I observe, is not unanimous on the point and I welcome in this connection the assurances of my honourable friend from Bombay. I hope that any opposition that there may be to the principle of compulsion in the case of girls among Mahomedans will disappear. I myself consider, Sir, that the application of the principle in the case of the education of girls will be far more efficacious than in the case of boys. It is a trite saying that the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world. In fact, I might say that where the father is educated the children may remain uneducated, but where the mother is educated, there will not be a single case where the children will remain without education. I thus attach far more importance to the education of girls than to that of boys. However, I am quite certain that my honourable friends' whole-hearted sympathy and enthusiasm will by and by modify what little opposition there may be among Mahomedans to the application of the principle of this bill to girls.

Now, Sir, a great deal has been said about clause 8, and my honourable friend from Sukkur has also taken objection to it. I do not really know what objection could be taken to that. If it were only a case of interchanging the second into first, I might possibly say that there may be something in it. But the first part calls upon the local bodies to put their houses in order first of all. I think that is a more politic way of doing it. We do not want to tread on their toes violently. We call upon them to do the thing themselves; if they do not, then we take power to make them do various things—first of all to frame a scheme, then to carry it out, and then to continue to carry it out. If they fail in doing any one of these things, Government reserve to themselves the power of having it done paying for it and recouping its expenditure in the manner laid down by rules in that behalf.

I am told that there is no word "shall" in clause 8. The answer to that I have already given when I said that it means laying down a principle—a definite principle. If it was a question of introducing compulsion just at this very moment all round, then the word "shall" would have been quite appropriate. If we say that education shall be made compulsory in any and every local area and Government shall ask any local authority to make out a scheme at this very instant, then it may be possible, but when that programme is to be introduced in the course of ten years, then we obviously must leave to Government or the local bodies the choice to a certain extent.....

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI: Where is that limit of ten years laid down in the bill?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: The programme has to be carried out gradually. Government therefore will have to select the places where introduction of compulsion is to be commenced in the first year, then the places for the second year, then the places for the third year and so on. Should there not be any choice left to Government in this manner to see what places have got to be selected this year, the next year and the third year? If you were to say that compulsion must be introduced all over the country at once, what would have to be done is to prepare a list of these 26,000 villages and print it in the form of a schedule to this bill—it must be put in the schedule to indicate that so many villages should be taken up the first year, so many the next year and so many the third year and so on. Frankly, it was not possible in the time that was at our disposal, during the course of a few days or a few weeks that were at my disposal and at the disposal of the legal advisers of Government, to draft a bill of this kind. I further feel that it would not have been proper to bind down in this definite manner that such and such village should have compulsion at the end of the year 1930. Then, if we had laid down that programme, that programme would have been practically useless because we cannot say what circumstances may arise at the end of ten years. All that we can say is that we have laid down a Government policy, that during the course of ten years that programme will be carried out and the actual steps of that programme will be carried out as the funds at the disposal of Government, the actual demands of local bodies and various other circumstances permit.....

Mr. P. R. CHIKODI (Belgaum District): Have Government laid down a definite programme anywhere in the bill?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: That is the policy laid down by Government. I have said so three times. I do not know of any legislation whereby you can bind your successors so definitely.....

Mr. P. R. CHIKODI: It is not in the legislation anywhere.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: About this point of the time limit, several members have spoken. My honourable friend from West Khandesh also has spoken in the same manner. What I have said so far has been on bahalf of Government; it remains for the future legislatures and those who will hold the reins of Government in times to come to see whether the policy is carried out in its entirety or whether any modifications are desirable. So much as regards the general objections to the bill.

I now come to the few objections made by some other members who have spoken. My honourable friend from the Bijapur district said that under these clauses various school boards would make various schemes and our educational system would lose its uniformity. If I am not wrong, that was one of his points. Now, I put it to him and also the honourable members of this House that it is one of the objects of this bill to allow educational freedom to various local bodies. In any case, Sir, there is no finality in educational matters, there is great room for educational experiments. In fact although we have encouraged private education bodies according to our Grant-in-aid Code to propose changes in the present curriculum, our only regret has been that there has not been so much interest shown by the educational institutions in our Presidency or in our country and people are not coming forward to make experiments. The Educational Department has never been opposed to any proper educational experiments if any one wants to make them, but by allowing this freedom to our local bodies to have their own educational system, we may possibly find that various bodies will be making various experiments unhampered by any cast-iron rules and regulations and it is in this way that we want to encourage people to make experiments for the common good, and I hope therefore that the Council will see that this want of cast-iron rules in the language of the clause, instead of being a fault, is as I believe, one of the great merits of this bill.

Then, Sir, a great many members have talked about the constitution of the school boards. We were told that in the case of larger municipalities, the school boards will supersede the present school committees. In the case of those large municipalities which will be allowed to manage their own educational affairs, I think rather that the school boards to be constituted will not supersede the present school committees, but that those committees in fact will evolve themselves into the new school boards. Those school committees have a rather defective constitution at present. They are appointed out of the members of the body itself; it may happen that a body contains no proper personnel for the school committee, it may be necessary for that school committee to have a representative, say, of the depressed classes and there may be no member of the depressed classes on the local body itself....

Rao Bahadur S. D. GARUD (West Khadesh District): They can be appointed under section 31.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: They can only be co-opted to a certain extent, but I would point out that up till now that right has very rarely been exercised by local bodies, and therefore the new constitution of the school board in the case of these larger municipalities will be a better constitution. You will find that these school boards are to be elected, except for the three nominated members, by the local bodies themselves, and then we lay down a direction that such a school board shall include men experienced in education, representatives of minorities and women. It means that if the local body has got people of this complexion on its board, it is obvious that preference will be given to those men, but if there are no men of educational experience or there is no representative of the depressed classes on the original appointing local body, then the local body would have to go out of its own body to appoint such persons. I do not therefore think that this section is really so bad as it is thought to be. If the personnel of the local body itself is properly constituted and it contains proper men, then it need not go out of its personnel for appointment of the school board and the opportunity we are now giving for the school boards to be constituted of the right type of men will, I feel confident, be fully availed of. The liberty we are now giving to school boards as regards recruitment of teachers will be enlarged under this bill. Government will have nothing to do with the recruitment of teachers. At present teachers in city municipalities are supposed to be Government servants—they are supposed to be lent to those school committees. Henceforward in the case of new teachers—of course we shall have to safeguard the interests of our teachers who are already in service, but so far as recruitment of new teachers is concerned—there will be perfect independence allowed to the new school boards. In order to exercise these wider powers, properly constituted school boards will be necessary.....

Mr. DIPCHAND T. OJHA (Karachi City): Will they make any contribution towards pension or provident funds ?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: They will of course have their own provident or pension fund for the teachers they engage ; in the case of persons who are already in Government service, they will contribute to the pension fund, because you cannot dismiss all these 25,000 teachers all of a sudden ; but in future when larger responsibility is to be given and when the local bodies are to be compelled to introduce compulsory education later on in order that this compulsory education should be possible, we must obviously let the school boards contain representatives of all classes. And you will find also that the school committees, although many of them are doing very good work just at present, are in several instances not properly constituted. I know these elections, most of which are conducted on party considerations. In one particular case, for instance in the election of the school board in the Poona municipality, there were two parties, there was much 'give and take' and the vote for a candidate was given on his undertaking to vote for a particular thing in favour of the party that supported him. The result was that a man who could not even write his vernacular was elected to the school board in preference to a distinguished educationist like the late Prof. Limaye of the Fergusson College. I just wanted to show how elections are being carried out. The constitution I have now proposed will ensure at least that some persons conversant with educational questions will be on the board, while there will be others also who know the needs of the area. I do not agree with the observation of the honourable members that the constitution of the school board is unsatisfactory. Some members stated that the number is too small. I leave that point to be decided by the select committee and in the second reading. The committee which is practically to carry out executive functions of this nature should not be large. If it consists of 30 or 40 members, as it would have to be if every taluka has to be represented, if every small municipality has to be represented, and every minority has to be represented, I do not know how the work of the committee will be carried out properly. While we should see that the committee is not too small, we should also see that the committee is not unwieldy. Even the standing committee of the Bombay corporation, the legislation about which we passed the other day, consists of 16 members. For the work that is contemplated to be done by the school committee, it should not be more than 15. The smaller municipalities cannot all expect to be represented on it. There are municipalities in towns with a population of 5,000 or 6,000, while there are taluka areas containing 50,000 and 60,000 or even a hundred thousand people. If the talukas will have a representative on the board, I do not think it proper that these small municipalities, because they happen to be municipalities, which are after all glorified villages having interests of a rural nature, should all be represented on the board. The constitution as framed in the bill is as a whole satisfactory, although detailed changes can be made in it in the select committee. (An Honourable Member: What about minorities?) The minorities will not be the same in all districts. In some districts like those in the Deccan, Karnatak and Gujarat the depressed classes are numerous and they will have to be represented in every one of these districts. In some districts like Ahmednagar, Christians are in an appreciable minority, and it will be necessary to have a Christian member. We cannot lay down all these details in the Act, as each will have to be considered separately. That is why all these details have been left to Government.

Then, Sir, the honourable nominated member for the backward classes from Satara raised the point that election to local bodies in many cases has already taken place under the old Act, and consequently they cannot have school boards, according to the revised constitution, until their term has expired. I do not know whether lawyer members of the Council accept the contention that the old local boards will not be competent to elect a school board according to this bill. But it is quite possible in the select committee, and in the second reading of this bill or the Local Boards Bill, to introduce a provision that as soon as these bills are passed, the local boards and the school boards should be formed according to the reformed constitution. This suggested itself to me even before the honourable member made this suggestion, and I suggested to my colleague, the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government, that the liberalised constitution must be brought into operation as early as possible.

My honourable friend, the representative of the depressed classes, stated that the minority which is intended to have a representative under this clause is the Brahmin community which is in a numerical minority everywhere. I wish to impress upon him that the interest of Brahmins so far as education is concerned is quite different from that of the other classes, and especially the depressed classes. This particular clause is solely for the benefit of those classes who cannot come by election. If, however, it comes to pass at any time that no Brahmin is elected to the local body, then I do not think that my friends, the representatives of the non-Brahmin communities, will object to see a Brahmin get a seat on the school board in virtue of the clause about minorities. I assure the honourable member for the depressed classes that the interests of those classes are very dear to us and that this condition about the representatives of minorities has been inserted in their interest. I do not think I need talk any more about the constitution of the board. But one thing I should like to mention is that, although the school boards have been given independent powers, they are generally subordinate to the parent body. It is the case in every other constitution. On general principles they would be subject to the decision of the local bodies concerned. In certain cases the power of appeal is given to the local board. Practically the whole control will be in the hands of the parent body which controls the purse strings. But in the detailed administration you cannot expect a body which is not elected mainly for the purpose of education to have this control. Also the widest aspects of the policy will be in the hands of the Educational Department.

A good deal has been said about the financial clauses of this bill. I felt that the explanation that I had given ought to have been sufficient to allay the very wide fears that were entertained when this clause was read first. After all, the Honourable the Finance Member and the honourable member from Sind also rightly said that if taxation is necessary for the educational expenditure, it is a very minor question indeed as to who will impose the taxation, whether the local body imposes it or whether Government imposes it. (An Honourable Member: It is better if the local body imposes it.) In certain cases it may be that the local body may more profitably impose it; in certain other cases, particularly if education is widespread on a uniform basis, it may be that Government may be a better agent for the imposition of taxation. The tax-payer, the ordinary man in the street—or shall I say the ordinary man in the field—considers how much money goes out of his pocket in order that the educational progress can be achieved, and he will not very much mind, when the tax collector comes, whether it is imposed by the local body or by the Government. I do not think it is a matter of very great importance. I know my honourable friend from Satara proposes that Government itself should impose this 2 anna cess by increasing it from the present 1 anna cess instead of the local body. My honourable friend probably contemplates that by this means the local body will escape a large amount of odium that will come upon it on account of the imposition of this cess. Well, that may be all right for the honourable member, who is probably a member of a local body. (An Honourable Member: He is not one.) I hope he will be one soon. But, Sir, it is not contemplated that this anna cess will be raised to 2 annas immediately all over the Presidency. The programme is to be carried out during the course of ten years, and we do not want, unless the local body desires it itself, that this 2 anna cess should be raised immediately from the passing of this Act. They can raise it by stages according to the conditions of each local body. Then, Sir, there was another honourable member, the honourable member from Belgaum, who appeared to think that this financial arrangement was rather one-sided—that Government pays a certain portion and the local body has to make up the balance. He appeared to think that a better arrangement would have been that a local body should be asked to pay a fixed contribution and the Government should make up the balance. I, however, think that you have got to see in whose hands the final management of the schools remains. Under this bill, and according to the rules to be made under this bill, the management is to be in the hands of the local bodies.

Mr. P. R. CHIKODI: In the hands of the school board.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Whether it is in the hands of a district local board or in the hands of a school board subordinate to it, it is in the hands of a body different from Government. We have to provide for an economic management. It is not very pertinent to the question, but I may point out that a great difficulty has arisen in the case of the educational arrangement which Government has made in the case of the Bombay municipal corporation. The control is in its hands and Government contributes to it without having a word to say as to the way in which that expenditure is to be incurred. When these bodies come forward with a scheme, they should do so with a proper circumspection. They can easily forward a scheme to Government and say that the expenses will be so much per head. That will be a proper way of making a scheme. But when they expect an expense on a child of, say, Rs. 18 per annum and send an estimate of Rs. 18 per child, if it comes to Rs. 25 afterwards, they will have to pay the balance of Rs. 7 on each child, because it would be due to their want of circumspection in estimating the cost. I feel, Sir, therefore, that this financial arrangement is proper. In the bill we have laid down the legal liability of Government to pay half the recurring cost in the case of a municipality and two-thirds the recurring cost in the case of a local board, when compulsory education is introduced. But it is nowhere laid down that it is the only contribution that Government shall make. For instance, if the Legislative Councils of the future can find more money in the public coffers, they can ask Government for bigger contributions to local bodies in the case of necessity. Nowhere is it laid down in that clause or any other clause that Government shall not pay a bigger contribution.

Mr. P. R. CHIKODI: Two-thirds of the estimated expenditure or of the actual?

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Two-thirds of the cost of the scheme. That scheme should be properly made and the estimates should not be exceeded. We do not want the estimates to be exceeded, because they will make the whole management absolutely irresponsible. We cannot go on in this manner on irresponsible estimates.

My honourable friend from Ahmedabad district wants an educational cess. If he consults the Local Boards Bill, he will probably find that this is a cess which could be legitimately imposed by the local bodies themselves if they desire it. They will probably have no objection to imposing an educational cess in order to carry out education. But that may be possible in one case and may not be possible in another case. Therefore, you cannot lay it down as something obligatory all over the Presidency.

Mr. President, the honourable member for the depressed classes took some hypothetical exception to clause 23, about the power to exempt certain classes, and he appeared to think that this clause will be made use of in order to keep education from the depressed classes. Now, there has been no idea at all of this nature, and I believe no Government worth the name—certainly not the Government as at present constituted—will allow any scheme to go through which makes an exemption in the case of the depressed classes. It is particularly for the backward classes that we want to introduce compulsion. The advanced classes practically do not want it. About 80 per cent. of their children are already going in for education and Government is keen that the backward classes should improve themselves by means of education. This clause, as I said in my opening remarks, is put in order to cover certain exceptional cases that may arise. For instance, in any scheme in Sind or in villages where the whole population is practically Mahomedan, it may not be possible to have any school other than the Mulla school for the purpose of carrying out compulsion and you cannot obviously compel a Hindu parent to send his child to attend a Mulla school, where the study of the Koran is enforced. It is for the purpose of overcoming such practical difficulties that that clause has been put in. It is not intended to keep any backward classes or the depressed classes away from the benefits of education. I do not wish any exemption at all to be allowed in favour of any backward classes; never. In fact, I do not wish to accept even the recommendations of the committee about the facilities to be given to the children of the depressed classes in attending schools. I may tell him that only a few days ago I had an offer of Rs. 10,000 for the purpose of building two primary schools but the donor said that these two schools should not be open to the children of the depressed classes. I said if that was the understanding, Government is not going to accept the offer. I may tell the honourable member that Government have not the least idea of using this clause in order to hurt the feelings of the depressed classes. If at all we want to help the depressed classes it is in order to raise them from their present depressed condition so that the depressed classes may no longer remain depressed. I think my honourable friend will take away from his mind all the ideas of a sinister motive on the part of Government or educational authorities in introducing a clause of that nature.

My honourable friend, the honourable member for Poona district, asked what about the leakage in education. Now I would point out to him that there is this leakage because there is no compulsion. At present children attending infant classes go as far as the first or second standard only, and there is no way to compel them to remain in school for five years, that is, up to the fourth standard. It is because we have felt that a large amount of money which is spent on account of these children is wasted, because the amount of education they get in the first two or three years is not effective in removing their illiteracy or stopping them from relapsing into illiteracy, that we wish to make five years the minimum schooling under this compulsory education bill.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE : I was instancing wastage in the case of boys who study up to the fourth standard.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : I believe that ordinarily a boy who has been in school for five years and has passed the fourth standard is not likely to relapse into illiteracy. There may be such unfortunate instances here and there occasionally but as we are advancing in our democracy he would have to read a large amount of political literature when votes are asked, and I do not think that if a boy leaves his school after the fourth standard he will relapse into illiteracy. There is no doubt that at present illiteracy is very great, and in any case it is for the purpose of removing this illiteracy that this measure is introduced.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The Honourable Minister will not, I hope, go any further into that question of leakage.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : There is finally, Sir, the complaint about the rules. What I said already is that the rules are to be made on the broadest possible lines. There will of course be a large amount of freedom which will be left to the local bodies, and I do not think when the rules will come out the members of any local body will feel that these rules do materially restrict the responsibilities and duties of these local bodies and the school board, but certainly some rules have got to be made. It would not be possible to include all those rules which will be applicable to all parts of the Presidency without any change. It is therefore for that purpose that the rules are to be made. If however the select committee finds that certain broad principles can conveniently be embodied in these rules, I should have no objection to any such modifications if they are proposed. Government will lay down the broad lines of those rules and the local bodies will make their own detailed rules to suit their own separate purposes. As I said, the select committee can go into all these details. I say on the whole I am satisfied with the welcome that is given to this bill. But I might, Sir, in one sentence, refer to the complaining note about several of the clauses—the cry of complaint that has been made by several honourable members. They appear to feel that everything should be done by legislation and by this bill, and I submit, Sir, that even if the bill be the most perfect of its kind it will not achieve everything that we want unless there is popular sympathy and popular demand behind it. No legislation will achieve any public object if the public does not support whole-heartedly such legislation. The bill can be altered by the select committee but the Council will have to keep a close eye on the educational progress of this country. I submit that this bill provides only the necessary framework of which the necessary details can be fitted in by the local bodies themselves. But it must be understood that on a proper system of education depends our country's advance. We have enfranchised large numbers of people of this Presidency. As was said about England by a distinguished English statesman, in this country also we must educate our masses. This bill, if properly worked out and carried out mainly by the enthusiasm of the people in all parts of the Presidency will do something to achieve that end. On educational progress depends our complete national progress and our Council also will to a great extent justify its creation by its work in this educational progress. On the whole it will be agreed that this bill has something to do to attain that end. Hence Government as a whole thought it best to bring forward a bill of this nature even in times of the prevailing financial stringency; Government as a whole thought that such a step ought to be taken, that sacrifices ought to be made and it is for the Council to say whether they will make these sacrifices and do this day-to-day work as contemplated by this bill when it goes to the select committee and when it will emerge from it. I have great hope that this Council will pass, Sir, the first reading of this bill. (Loud applause.)

Bill read a first time. Question put and agreeed to.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Mr. President, I move that this bill be referred to a select committee consisting of 18 members, of which seven will form a quorum and that the report be submitted before the next session.

Question put and agreed to.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: I move that the select committee do consist of the following members:

The Honourable Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ghulam Hussain
Mr. J. C. Ker
Mr. F. B. P. Lory
Rao Bahadur G. K. Chitale
Rao Bahadur R. R. Kale
Mr. B. V. Jadhav
Mr. P. R. Chikodi
Rao Saheb D. P. Desai
Khan Bahadur D. B. Cooper
Mr. B. G. Pahalajani
Khan Bahadur S. N. Bhutto
Rao Saheb P. G. Halkatti
Mr. D. D. Gholap
Khan Saheb A. M. Mansuri
Mr. Mahomed Salahuddin K
Mr. S. T. Kambli

[Dr. R. P. Paranjpye]

Rao Saheb Harilal D. Desai, and the Minister in charge of the bill.

Rao Bahadur S. D. GARUD : I propose that the name of Rao Bahadur Kale be omitted and the name of Sardar Mutalik be inserted instead.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK : I do not want to serve on the committee.

Rao Bahadur S. D. GARUD: Then I beg leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment by leave withdrawn.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI : I propose that my name be omitted and Mr. Gandhi's name be inserted instead.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE : If the honourable member himself wants the change, I accept the amendment.

Amendment carried.

Question as amended put and agreed to.

[Proceedings interrupted under Standing Order IV : 2 (4).]

Appreciative Reference: Mr. D. R. Norman, Secretary, Legislative Council.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Before we proceed to the next item on the agenda, the Council will allow me to inform the honourable members that I desire to make my warm acknowledgments to Mr. Norman, the Secretary to the Legislative Council, who is leaving us shortly in a day or two and who will be succeeded by Mr. Dadiba C. Mehta, Joint District and Sessions Judge of Poona. Mr. Norman took up the duties of the office of Secretary when this Council was inaugurated, and the responsibility, heavy as it was, of initiating and organising system in the office fell upon him personally, and from the very beginning down to now he has shown, as I know by my intimate connection with him, organising capacity of an excellent character. (Hear, hear.) More than that, he has co-operated with me from the very beginning, from the moment that I took up the responsibilities of my office, in a whole-hearted manner; he has been ever loyal, ever devoted, always sympathetic, and as anxious as myself to secure the independence of the Legislative Council and to constitute, in the midst of difficulties, its office as a self-contained organisation. (Hear, hear.) We have not yet attained that ideal : we are striving towards it; and I acknowledge my debt of gratitude to Mr. Norman for helping me in striving for that ideal. I do not wish to say more than this, namely, the office of Secretary is not a bed of roses. But if I have succeeded in winning your confidence to any extent, may I take the liberty to say that it is due, if not solely, certainly partly, to the complete harmony with which Mr. Norman as the Secretary to the Legislative Council has worked with me ? (Hear, hear.) To me separation from him is a personal loss. I think I may say I have won his affection as he has won my affection. I part from him with regret, and all that I can say from the bottom of my heart is summed up in this one sentence: Mr. Norman has been a model Secretary, and his successor, Mr. Mehta, I hope, will prove his worthy successor. (Cheers.)

A BILL TO IMPOSE A DUTY IN RESPECT OF ADMISSION TO ENTERTAINMENTS (BILL NO. XX OF 1922.)

First reading.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE : Mr. President, I rise to move the first reading of the Entertainments Duty Bill.

As this Council will remember, it was introduced last March by the Honourable Mr. Cowasji Jehangir, but the first reading was then refused. Government, however, have been led to believe that this Council have seen cause in the intervening six months to change their opinion, and they have therefore decided to place the bill before the Council once again practically unaltered. The need for additional revenue will, I suppose, not be questioned by any member of this House. The House has just agreed to the introduction of the Compulsory Education Bill; and we are advised by the Honourable Minister for Education that he expects to spend next year an additional sum of about 16 lakhs of rupees on primary education, and that there will undoubtedly be further increases year by year. It is contrary, Sir, to the principles of sound finance to earmark the proceeds of any special tax to any special purpose. That is a most important principle, which the Honourable the President himself has recently brought to the attention of the Council.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Subject to this: on the recommendation of the Crown and by the Minister of the Crown it can be done. It is perhaps subject also to another condition: you cannot earmark it for a period of years, because it may have to go into the annual budget. However, in the main principle the Honourable the Finance Member is right. I only wanted those reservations to be borne in mind, lest I should be misunderstood in future were a point of order raised.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Government, however, recognise that there is an intimate connection between this taxation and the fresh demands for compulsory education. There can be no earmarking, and there can be no definite guarantee given. The proceeds received from this taxation will go into the ordinary public exchequer, and from that exchequer we hope to be able to meet the additional expenditure that will be required next year, and also any expenditure that may be required in the current year.

The House is now fully conversant with our financial position as it was disclosed in the budget last March. I need not go into any detail on that point, but I would just remind the House of the precarious character of our position, of the fluctuations to which our revenue is liable in the chief sources which are derived from Land Revenue, Excise and Stamps. We cannot rest content until our revenue is more broadly based; until we have secured resources which are not all liable to diminution simultaneously, and, so far as possible, solid resources which will not be subject to fluctuation at the very time when the strain on the public exchequer increases most severely. Through the exercise of severe measures of retrenchment and the additional revenue from stamps and court-fees, which was sanctioned by this House last March, we have been able to put together a budget for the current year which just balances, but which leaves us no margin for the necessary growth of expenditure. There is therefore no possibility of our being able to meet additional demands for primary education from our existing resources, and we are therefore driven to the necessity of asking for money by this bill.

It is proposed to levy a small tax by means of a stamp on all tickets of admission to places of public amusement, with certain exceptions in regard to charitable, educational or scientific exhibitions, not conducted for profit. The bill is confined to towns having a population of 100,000 and over. The payments are moderate, ranging from half an anna on cheap seats below 4 annas in cost to one rupee on every Rs. 10 of expensive seats.

The principle which this House is asked to accept on the first reading is that it is right and proper to levy revenue by means of an entertainments tax. The amount of the tax to be charged and the method by which it shall be levied are subsidiary points, which will be fully considered by the select committee which will be appointed, and which will be the subject for discussion in this Council on the second reading. I need not therefore take up the valuable time of this Council, every minute of discussion in which has, according to an interesting estimate which I have seen, been computed to amount to a cost of Rs. 10 in actual payments by Government, by any detailed exposition of each section.

We have considered the experience which has been gained in the levy of a similar tax in England, and the provisions which have recently been inserted in an Act of the Bengal Legislative Council. We have based this bill on those precedents, and we have therefore concluded that the most convenient method of levy is by means of stamps on the tickets of admission. Provision will, however, be made in the discussion in the select committee for dealing with such exceptional cases as institutions which grant admission by means of lump subscriptions or where certified accounts can be accepted showing the total amount of money received in virtue of admission.

I have said, Sir, that we have taken into consideration the provisions of the Bengal Act. I have no doubt that some honourable members have studied this Act, and they may have observed that we have not included any provision in this bill in regard to taxing the receipts of the totalisator of the Turf Club. In case any member may have permitted any suspicions of the action of Government in this respect to enter his mind, as I notice some members occasionally do entertain such suspicions, I should like to dissipate them at the very outset. The reason for the difference in the treatment of this subject by the Bengal Government to that which we propose lies in the possession by this Government of powers under the Race Courses Act No. III of 1912, which power the Government of Bengal do not possess. Under this Race Courses Act this Government are enabled to grant a license to the Turf Club on such conditions as they think fit. We have been considering the amount of revenue which we should derive from some such imposition upon the receipts of the totalisator. We have given warning to the Turf Club that such a levy will be made next year. Government have not considered it just or expedient to make that levy without notice in the current year; for the financial commitments of an institution of the magnitude of the Turf Club are necessarily prepared in advance, and we consider that it would be contrary to sound policy and precedent to make such demands which would interfere drastically with the arrangements of an institution of such magnitude. But this House may be satisfied that Government have no intention of omitting to draw upon this source of revenue. The amount that may be so derived and the method by which it should be obtained are now under discussion with the Turf Club, and I am not in a position to make any further statement on that particular point.

From the statistics which were obtained regarding admissions to cinemas and theatres, it has been estimated that provided the attendance does not fall off, a sum of some eighteen lakhs of rupees would be secured; and it may perhaps interest the House to know that special enquiries were made regarding admissions to the race course, and it is anticipated that a sum of some two lakhs would be obtained from this source. Admissions to the race course of course come under this bill though the totalisator does not.

On the other hand, we have of course been warned that the result of this tax will be to keep people away from places of amusement, that attendance will fall off very greatly, and that we shall not obtain the revenue which we hope for. We can only say that this is a matter regarding which men will entertain anticipations of good or evil according to their own possession of an optimistic or a pessimistic temperament, according to their constitutions and temperaments. If the Council believes that this is a good tax; that it will fall only upon persons who voluntarily undergo it by seeking admission to places of amusement; that it can be collected without any serious interference with the public convenience, or without any considerable cost by way of special establishment, I say, Sir, if the Council is convinced of this elementary proposition as this Government are convinced, I would ask that the first reading of the bill be agreed to, and I will then propose that a select committee be appointed who will be prepared to consider all objections and to adjust the machinery proposed by Government to greater perfection in detail.

Mr. R. G. SALGAR (Sholapur City) (Addressed the House in Marathi): Mr. President, supporting as I do the first reading of this bill, I strongly recommend that the whole income that would be derived from the passing of this Act should be devoted solely and entirely to the propagation of education. The tax of half an anna on tickets worth up to four annas should in my opinion be increased to one anna for the simple reason that people paying four annas for tickets are generally from the lower and poorer classes. The danger to these classes from visiting cinemas is that they pick up the art of murdering, they learn how to commit thefts successfully and avoid arrest. Theatrical performances are usually immune from a criticism of this kind—on the contrary much good results from dramas staged even before illiterate masses.

My experience of Bombay has led me to the conclusion that people residing in that great city do not care whether they have to pay Rs. 2 or Rs. 4 for a ticket of admission to a theatre. The scale of tax on such tickets should be increased from six to eight annas, because these people do not hesitate to pay even Rs. 5 for a ticket so long as they can get admission. With these suggestions, I resume my seat.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District): Mr. President, this bill introduces a novel form of taxation. I say it is a novel form of taxation in this sense that we in this Presidency are unaccustomed to it heretofore. The bill proposes to levy a tax on a somewhat graduated scale on amusements such as theatrical shows, cinema performances, etc.

(At this stage the Honourable the President withdrew and the Deputy President occupied the chair.)

It is a tax not on necessaries of life but on expenditure of money on matters of luxury. Sir, those of us who may think that we are overburdened with taxation may well try to avoid the payment of this tax by resorting to the simple expediency of not resorting to such places of amusement. Sir, this Council voted for additional taxation in the March sessions last on court-fees and stamps, that is, the Council voted for additional taxation on matters of absolute necessity and now, Sir, when the Government is called upon to incur a large expenditure of money on such an important subject of nation-building as the introduction of compulsory education, it is but fair and just that this Council should readily vote for a measure of taxation as the one now before us, which proposes to levy a tax on objects of luxury to provide Government with necessary funds. As to the exact amounts of the tax which should be levied on various kinds of denominations of tickets, that is a matter which I submit should be left for the decision of the select committee, and I hope the select committee will go into that question. With these words, I support the first reading of this bill.

[Mr. S. T. Kambli]

(The Honourable the President at this stage resumed the Chair.)

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): Mr. President, I accept the principle of the bill. This Council has just passed the Compulsory Education Bill and it will not be proper for this Council to throw out a finance bill of this sort especially when the Honourable the Finance Member himself says that the proceeds that will be derived from the operation of this bill will be devoted to compulsory education, but I should think that a clause to that effect should be introduced into the bill itself.

Again, Sir, there is one more point that I would just like to place for the consideration of the Council. There is a proposal for leave to introduce a bill for amending the Race-Courses Licensing Act.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That has nothing to do with the bill. You cannot refer to an impending legislation by anticipation.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: I was going to say that it would be better to have this bill postponed till the fate of that bill is decided especially in view of the fact that the Deputy President is coming out with a still bigger purse. Again, Sir, I am sorry to find in this bill that poor people who generally buy four-anna tickets for entertainments will have to pay an additional half-anna. Mill-hands and such other poor people largely resort to entertainments for recreation purposes. I ask the Honourable the Finance Member whether he cannot exempt these poor classes from the additional payment of half anna.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Honourable the Finance Member has no power to do so. It is for the Council. He is not the legislator.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI: Then, I leave it to the consideration of my colleagues to see whether this class of poor people should not be exempted. With these remarks, I resume my seat.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District): Sir, I rise to support the first reading of the bill, and in doing so I have to state to the Council that I was one of those persons who opposed the first reading of this bill, when it was brought before the Council the last time. The reason which was given at that time for opposing the bill was that unless the Government were prepared to undertake any new reforms, the Council would not be well advised in going in for fresh taxation for meeting the ordinary expenditure of the administration. That principle, I think, was accepted by the House, and on that ground and not on the merits, this bill was thrown out. Now, Sir, the circumstances have changed. The Council has now passed a very important measure which is calculated to mark the first step in the direction of reforms. This Council must now supply the sinews of war for the purpose of carrying out those reforms.

I have one word to say with regard to what the honourable member from Kaira, Rao Saheb Dadubhai Desai, said about the Race Courses Bill. The Honourable the Finance Member himself stated that there was some correspondence going on and that the race courses should be brought under the operation of.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: It is very inconvenient to introduce consideration of some other bill. It must be made plain as to how it is relevant. Otherwise, racing, golfing and everything else will come in for discussion, and it will open a very wide field of debate. We must restrict ourselves to the consideration of the principle of the bill before the House.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: I think golfing, etc., also comes under entertainments.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Does the bill include horse race also?

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: I was going to say that the first reading of the bill will not be the proper time to suggest something of that sort, and I was replying to him.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I told him that he was not relevant.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: I was saying that consideration should not delay the bill, because the Honourable the Finance Member said that the race course matter was under the consideration of the Government.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member who is going to bring it may not bring it.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: If there is no immediate prospect of introducing any such measure, I would suggest to the Honourable the Finance Member to include in the present bill race courses as an entertainment. That is the suggestion which I am going to make. At the first reading of the bill, the principle should be laid down. Let one of the entertainments be the race courses.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Honourable members will be at liberty to insist at this stage upon that being brought in as part and parcel of the bill as a principle of the bill.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: I think, Sir, it ought to come, and I think it could be included under the term 'entertainment'.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I think this bill applies to all those amusements the primary idea of which is entertainment. In the case of horse racing can we say the idea of entertainment is primary, seeing that the primary object is the breed of horses, and even as an entertainment, it is not entertainment pure and simple, but betting and making money? I doubt if race courses are within the scope of this bill.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: May I say a few words, Sir?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Yes.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Government considers admission to the race course to be an admission to a place of entertainment and for that purpose admission of persons to a race course on payment is held by Government to be an entertainment.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is there any provision in this bill?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: In clause 2 (a) it is held that:

"'Entertainment' includes any exhibition, performance, amusement, game or sport to which persons are admitted for payment."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: If Government have included it in the bill, it is a different matter. I was going by the title of the bill and, as I have already pointed out on several occasions, the titles and the preambles of the bills are worded in some bills so as to put the Chair on a wrong track.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: As I say, Sir, the scope of the bill ought not to be restricted, but you can extend it to an entertainment of this kind which is arranged for by a horse race, and if my impression is correct, Sir, under the English Act, this kind of entertainment is subjected to a tax. So, under those circumstances, I was not quite able to follow the honourable member from Kaira when he said that a separate bill is being brought forward by another honourable member, a private member. My submission to the Council is that that matter can be included in the present bill. No doubt, the details of it may not have been perhaps worked out, but I think, as this is only the first reading of the bill, by the time the bill emerges out of the select committee, there will be enough time to consider whether the particular entertainment can be, or is being, brought under the operation of this bill, and, with that reservation, I have no hesitation whatever in supporting the first reading of this bill.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Is horse-racing considered to be sports?

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Yes; it is.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI (Bombay City, South): Sir, it is very difficult to oppose the imposition of this tax on entertainments. When I, Sir, came here, I thought I would oppose the bill, but, as the proceeds as explained by the honourable mover are to be expended for the furtherance of compulsory primary education it becomes a very difficult task for me to oppose it. Sir, I am one of those who feel that a certain amount of amusement and relaxation is necessary to relieve the drab and monotony in the lives of the working class people, and it is this class of people who will be greatly affected by this bill and it will be a great hardship to them. It will perhaps be said, Sir, "What does it matter? It is only a question of half an anna or so?" But we know, Sir, that this class of people would rather pay more for other vices than pay this half anna as a tax on entertainment. Not only our people, Sir, but I have read some years ago that in Great Britain when a tax was levied on coffee—only half a penny more—people went to tea houses and deserted the coffee houses. This is the mentality of this sort of people—just the sort of people we have in our midst here, Sir. Taking the city of Bombay, which is a great source of income in this connection, I must say I do not know how the honourable mover works out the figures and arrives at a conclusion that the proceeds of the cinemas and theatres would come to 18 lakhs. My information is, Sir, that except the Royal Cinema, in the City of Bombay all the theatres and cinemas are being run at a considerable loss. There is only one cinema—the Royal Cinema as I said—which is working at a profit; all the rest are working at a considerable loss. In a short time I will not be surprised if all the cinemas and theatres will have to be closed down on account of continuous loss, and the whole blame will then be levelled at this bill! They are in the worst condition at present; all are being worked I repeat at a considerable loss.

An HONOURABLE MEMBER: Your information is wrong.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI: That is my information. It may be right or it may be wrong.

Mr. President, take the example of the United States.

It is by this tax that 2,100 cinemas had to be closed down there. Some of these were to be turned into shops, godowns and garages and one into a city morgue.

[Dr. K. E. Dadachanji]

Take the example of Great Britain. Those who have read the March issue of the "Cinema" (newspaper) will have seen that there was a mass meeting held in London in Lyric Theatre where there were so many members of Parliament present, and a resolution was passed asking that it should be seriously considered whether the tax should not be abolished, as it was introduced only as a war measure.

Mr. President, it was urged in the meeting there that a tax which strangles and holds in check a growing industry is radically wrong in principle. It is a new industry and this sort of industry should not be burdened by taxation, unless it is absolutely necessary to do so as in the case of war and very urgent financial cases. But, for the purpose of giving money for primary education—compulsory education—I do not think that such a new industry should be overburdened with taxation for this sort of ordinary expenditure. Mr. President, we must take the example of that which is going on in the case of other parts of the world where there has been introduced such tax. The case of Java nearly approximates to our case and in Java this tax is primarily responsible for the slump.

I wish, Sir, that an enquiry was made by appointing a committee or something of the kind and we ought to have learnt the condition of the cinemas and the theatres in the Presidency of Bombay. That would have given us a good idea. We cannot now say whether the proceeds would be Rs. 8,00,000 or Rs. 10,00,000 or anything like it. As far as I know, the Madon Theatres, Limited, for instance, have paid no dividend whatever to their shareholders for the last year. I do not know whether the honourable mover has made enquiries into all these matters. I know the Madon Theatres, Limited, have paid no dividend. Sir, I came with the intention of opposing the bill, but when I understand that the income is to be spent on primary education, it becomes a very difficult task for me to oppose it, and if by imposing this tax you will be able to derive even only Rs. 8,00,000 or Rs. 10,00,000, I should be very glad. But I request, Sir, that the lower seats—from 4 anna seats to 12 anna seats—ought to be exempted, so that the poor labouring classes should not be affected by this sort of tax. It is being urged by certain leaders of the working class people in the city of Bombay that these work people—these labouring classes—are exempted from paying the income tax, and in order to level up that exemption, this tax is being imposed. I do not agree with that view myself, but it is being urged by the leaders of the working class people in Bombay. I hope, Sir, that in the select committee the lower seats will be exempted or it should be said that instead of this tax the easy method would be to levy a tax on the lines of income-tax on the owners. Perhaps the income-tax on the proprietors may be doubled. There won't be any difficulty about that as the figures are there, the proprietors are there and no account would be necessary; also no interference by the police would be necessary for that purpose and it would also not give a handle to the lower grade police officers, to open a door for corruption. So, I say that if you want to levy this entertainments tax, exempt the lower classes and levy a tax on the proprietors on the lines of income-tax; that will shift the burden from the labouring classes. If we prevent them from enjoying these sorts of entertainments they are sure to take up to intemperance and other vices.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: What would you get for two pices?

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI: Well, there will be so much temptation, even for a small sum that you cannot imagine. It should be remembered that the cinemas have educative value. This suggestion of mine, namely, whether these lower classes who pay upto four annas should not be exempted, may be taken into consideration by the select committee. Of course if it could be done, then the income-tax paid by the proprietors should be doubled. With these remarks, I will resume my seat.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: May I ask the Honourable Member in charge of this bill whether the title of the bill and the preamble have been borrowed from the English Act? I enquire because I see section 2 is, on the margin of the bill, stated to be taken from the English Act in defining "entertainments" where you bring in sport also. Therefore I desire to know whether the words of the title and the preamble have also been reproduced from the English Act.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: The title, Sir, is from the Finance (New Duties) Act of 1916. It is an Act to impose duties on admission to entertainments.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The title then is worded in a general term so as to include racing. That follows the English Act, but the preamble does not and ill-assorts with the title. Instead of bringing in entertainments first, it brings in theatres, cinemas, and concludes with the larger words, viz., "other public places of entertainments", so as to raise the ajusdem generis principle of interpretation. It is my duty, I think, to point out that the title, the preamble and the definition clause should consist with one another so that there may be no difficulty either at this first reading or at the second.

Rao Bahadur S. D. GARUD (West Khandesh District): I rise, Sir, to support the first reading of the bill. I think when the bill was vetoed by the Council on the last occasion it was vetoed more because it was thought that this source was contemplated for primary education and that it was being exploited for the current administration of Government and not because this source of taxation was not approved. That theatres, cinemas, and entertainments such as the race course should be taxed, is I think generally accepted, and that was not the reason for which that bill was thrown out. Government have since then shown a very earnest desire to make retrenchments wherever possible and have given an undertaking to retrench their expenditure to the extent of Rs. 60 lakhs. Now it is quite fair that they should have some money for their legitimate expenditure; otherwise we shall see retrenchment running amok in all departments, reducing efficiency and leading to a great deal of inconvenience. It is therefore necessary that Government should have this source made available now particularly when they undertake to see that this money is expended for the purpose of primary education for which it was first pointed out to Government as a possible source of taxation which would be approved of. I therefore think, Sir, that there should now be no difficulty in supporting this measure and in passing it into law.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIWALA (Bombay City): Mr. President, I am one of those who supported this bill last time when it was thrown out by this Council and I am glad to see that those members who opposed the bill then have come round to support it this time. I was equally glad to hear the Honourable the Finance Member making it clear that the Turf Club is not going to be left alone as it was done in the past, and they are going to get something like two lakhs of rupees out of the admission tickets to the race course. Also, if I understand the Honourable the Finance Member quite rightly, they are going to have, besides taxing the admission tickets, from the Turf Club something substantial and I hope the amount that may be agreed upon will be placed in the budget of the next year and the arrangement will be completed before then. I may tell honourable members that the Turf Club has had a very easy time for all these years both in the city of Bombay and in Poona, and in view of the huge profits it is making, the public of this Presidency rightly grumbled, and it is a matter of gratification to see that Government have come round to get a small share out of their fortune by way of taxation for our expenditure.

Khan Bahadur S. N. BHUTTO (Larkana District): Sir, while supporting the Entertainments Duty Bill, I beg to state that I differ from my honourable friend from Bombay. Sir, my personal experience of Bombay is that sometimes when we go to the theatres and the cinemas at the last moment we cannot get seats even for Rs. 2 or Rs. 4. That means that even if the charges are raised to Rs. 2, Rs. 3 or Rs. 4, the theatres will be full and the proprietors of threatres will not lose. Moreover the money that will be raised will go to a good cause, that is the cause of education. On that understanding we have just passed the first reading of the Compulsory Education Bill. Sir, this bill is going to affect the people going to theatres. Therefore there is no compulsory exaction; it is only voluntary payment. I assure my honourable friend from Bombay that it will not affect any proprietor of cinemas or theatres. Then an honourable member said that the income from theatres ought not to be utilised for education. Well then, let this be utilised to prosecute thieves and dacoits, and the money set free can be utilised for education.

Mr. IBRAHIM S. HAJI (Bombay City): Sir, I rise to oppose the first reading of this bill. It will be in the memory of this House that only 7½ months ago this Council accepted the principle that this tax is not necessary, and the argument in support of that position was that Government had not shown to this House that complete retrenchment had been adopted and that further reduction in expenditure was not possible. To-day, Sir, the financial position is still a Chinese puzzle to us. We are in the middle of the financial year, and evidence is not before us to judge what the position will be at the beginning of the next financial year. We have no facts and figures about expenditure on one side and revenue on the other, and, therefore, this bill stands on the same footing as it was in the early part of February. My honourable friend says that the incidence of this duty will fall on the cinema proprietors. The incidence of this tax will necessarily fall on the persons who are resorting to these pleasures; for example the persons going to the cinemas will have to pay the extra anna or two annas on each admission ticket and not the proprietors. Thus we shall be stopping the only places of amusement for the masses. If the Government want to have money for the purpose of spending on education or other good purposes, even now it is possible for them to give a guarantee or an undertaking that this amount will be earmarked for primary education or for the carrying on of the policy of total prohibition. But not a single word has come from the Government. In the absence of any such undertaking, I submit to this House that by consenting to the raising of this extra money from the pockets of the poor, we shall be only filling the purse which is utilised to maintain the "steel frame" and to give them extravagant allowances and high salaries over which this House will have no control. Sir, under these circumstances, I beg to move, under Standing Orders, Part IV, clause 4 (1),

[Mr. Ibrahim S. Haji]

"That the consideration of Bill No. XX of 1922 be postponed to the next budget session."

The reason why I ask this House to postpone the consideration of this bill is this: we do not yet know our financial position; the facts and figures of our financial balance will be available in the beginning of the next financial year, and before then the House will have time to consider whether our expenditure is justified by our revenues or whether there is any possibility of further reducing expenditure. The last time this bill was discussed the Government gave us an assurance that they had done their best to effect retrenchment, but that there was no way out. But when the bill was thrown out, the next day Government gave an undertaking to effect a retrenchment of 60 lakhs. If this bill is thrown out now, this House will have further opportunities of understanding the financial position of the Presidency.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Standing Order referred to says:

"The President after permitting, if he thinks fit, a brief explanatory statement from the mover of the motion, and, if the motion is opposed, from the member opposing the motion, may, without further debate, put the question thereon."

Does any member wish to oppose this motion?

Rao Bahadur G. K. CHITALE (Ahmednagar District): Mr. President, I oppose the motion, and in doing so I have no hesitation in saying that this House will almost unanimously throw out the amendment. (Honourable Members: Hear, hear.) It appears to me perfectly clear that this special pleading ought not to be allowed to prevail in this House. I say special pleading, because this House has committed itself to a very great responsibility indeed in passing the compulsory education measure, and delaying it would be very detrimental to the fame of this House and to the promises which have been given by Government. To my mind, Sir, this entertainment tax is such an equitable measure that it should have preceded the other taxation proposals which have been passed in the form of increased rates for court-fees and stamps. It was only by ill-luck that this bill had to wait for another six months under the Standing Orders. Those six months are over; we have just now passed a measure of great responsibility, and I have no doubt that without much argument this House will throw out the amendment almost unanimously.

(Amendment negatived.)

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA (Bombay City, North): Mr. President, I am afraid that I cannot see eye to eye with the honourable members who spoke last, my honourable friend from Bombay representing the Mahomedan community, neither with my honourable friend on my right, the member for Bombay City (South), who differs in his views on this subject with me just as much as the north is away from the south. I do not, for a moment, believe that this taxation if levied will act harshly on the poorer classes, on whose behalf an attempt has been made to show that it will inflict hardship on them as well as on the cinema proprietors. Sir, we know that the income derived from this tax will go for a purpose which will help the poorest of the poor classes, I mean to meet the expenditure of compulsory education a bill for which has just passed the first reading in this House. It is for the masses that the tax will be collected. It is not for the richer classes, who can look after themselves. In levying any tax we must see that the middle and the richer classes pay it in preference to the poorer classes and we must also see that it does not fall on the prime necessities of life which the poor must have for their existence. Here is a tax which is only intended to be imposed on amusements. We always care to spend on amusement when we have extra money in our pockets. If we are rich, we can spend more, but if we are poor, we can spend in proportion to our income. It is a tax on amusements and not on any necessities of life. Therefore, even if the poor attend the cinemas, it will not be depriving them of anything except a small sum of money which will go towards uplifting them in the world. Sir, my friend the honourable member from Bombay representing the Mahomedan community said that it was only 7½ months ago that the Council had voted against this taxation and that, therefore, it is too soon to reconsider the same. It has been said by several honourable members here that if the House then was against this taxation bill, it was not on account of their opposition to the principle of the bill, which we were all agreed was a sound one, but it was on account of the attitude taken up by the Government members, who would not give out the exact sum which they would be able to retrench from the budget. It was that which exasperated the feelings of honourable members, and led them to veto the tax, and that they did, with the very salutary result, because in the afternoon when the Government members assembled they declared that they would be prepared to retrench their expenditure to the extent of Rs. 60 lakhs. It was that attitude of the Government members, and that alone, speaking for myself, that induced me to vote against this taxation bill on the last occasion, and not because it touched the pockets of the poor, or caused hardship to the cinema proprietors.

My honourable friend from Bombay representing the Mahomedan community said that the financial position as explained by the Honourable the Finance Member was a Chinese puzzle to us. But I ask, what more explanation could satisfy one than the one that was given by the Honourable the Finance Member in his speech? He said that through the exercise of severe measures of retrenchment and with the help of the additional revenue from stamps and court fees which were sanctioned by this House last March, Government have been able to put through the budget for the current year which just balances, but which leaves no margin for the necessary growth of expenditure in the next year. Besides that, we have just now passed the first reading of the Compulsory Education Bill which would require a large sum of money, at least for the first year, Rs. 16 lakhs. Where are we to get this from? It is for that purpose, if not for any other purpose, that we should unanimously support the first reading of this bill.

Then, Sir, another fallacious argument was advanced by my honourable friend, the member from Bombay. He said that the incidence of this tax will fall on the poor, with the result that we would stop the only source of amusement to the masses. I question, Sir, whether our action will at all prevent these poor classes from enjoying the cinema show. Of course, if they want to have some amusement, they may have it at the cost of a small sum of money, which is collected for a very good cause, and therefore it should not deter us from doing our duty towards the masses. I say that under the pretext of protecting the masses, the cinema proprietors do not desire the levying of the tax. That is what the argument of my honourable friend (Mr. Haji) means. We have to see whether the masses do actually suffer by this tax in the matter of the necessities of their life. If that is not so, then I do not think they should grumble to pay a little more for their amusements, especially as the sum collected will go towards a very salutary cause of uplifting the masses.

I have already said that I do not see eye to eye with my honourable friend on my right that the cinema industry which is in a prime condition will be strangled by this taxation. I am afraid I do not agree with him there.

Dr. K. E. DADACHANJI: It is not my opinion. It is the opinion of the mass meeting held in London.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA: My friend says it is the opinion of the mass meeting in London. How far that may be true, I do not know. There may be certain circumstances there which do not apply to Bombay. In Bombay the poorer classes will not be deterred from attending cinemas, if they could afford to do so, because it does give them some amount of pleasure. If half an anna or an anna more goes out of their pockets to get that pleasure, I do not quite see why my honourable friend should say that it would prevent the masses from attending the cinemas or that the cinema industry will be strangled. As regards his argument that the theatre companies do not prosper, and therefore they should not be taxed, I say, Sir, that there may be one thousand and one reasons why a theatre company does not prosper. We know several theatre companies have failed on account of bad management, on account of corruption or neglect. For one thing or another a theatre company may not get on well. That must not prompt us to veto this bill and prevent us from passing the first reading of this bill which has as its object the providing of compulsory and free education.

Sir, I do not think I shall say much on this subject except that I will draw the attention of the Honourable the Finance Member to clause 5 of the bill wherein it is laid down :—

"If any person is admitted for payment to any place of entertainment and the provisions of section 4 are not complied with, the person admitted and the proprietor of the entertainment to which he is admitted shall, on conviction before a Magistrate, be liable in respect of each offence to a fine which may extend in the case of the person admitted to rupees fifty and in the case of the proprietor to rupees five hundred and the proprietor shall in addition be liable to pay any duty which should have been paid."

I am afraid, Sir, that this may prove a source of considerable undeserved harassment to the poor masses. We know that large mass of people are illiterate—they can hardly read or write; they know hardly what they are doing. When they want to go to cinemas, they pay for their admission ticket and go in; they hardly know whether a stamp has been affixed to the ticket or not. That they should be made to pay a fine up to Rs. 50 for their ignorance of the law does not seem to me to be quite fair. I think the select committee should look into this aspect of the question.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That is a matter of detail.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA: I am only giving an instance.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That does not affect the principle of the bill.

Dr. S. S. BATLIWALA: As I may not be in the select committee, I wished to draw the attention of the Honourable the Finance Member to this matter, Sir. With these words, I support the first reading of the bill.

Mr. M. W. PRADHAN (Thana District): I move a closure, Sir.

Honourable Members: Closure, closure.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I accept the closure.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): I want to oppose the first reading, Sir.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: I have already accepted the closure, and therefore will now call upon the Honourable the Finance Member for a reply.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: Mr. President, I have been more than satisfied with the reception which has been accorded by this House to the bill before it. The details of the method or machinery will be fully discussed in the select committee and the point to which the honourable member who spoke last has drawn attention will be given special consideration in the select committee. I think there is nothing further that I may add and will therefore ask that the first reading of this bill be agreed to.

Bill read a first time. Question put and agreed to.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: I move that a select committee consisting of fifteen honourable members be appointed with a quorum of five members, the committee to report within a period of six weeks.

Question put and agreed to.

The Honourable Mr. H. S. LAWRENCE: I propose that the following honourable members of this House be appointed on the select committee in question:—

The Honourable Mr. C. V. Mehta, Rao Bahadur G. K. Chitale, Mr. S. K. Bole, Mr C. M. Gandhi, Mr. F. Clayton, Mr. F. Nelson, Mr. M. A. Havelivala, Dr. K. E. Dadachanji, Mr. Kanji Dwarkadas, Mr. P. J. Mead, Mr. F. C. Griffith, Mr. G. A. Thomas, Mr. Mohomed Salahuddin Karimuddin, Mr. G. B. Trivedi and the mover in charge of the bill.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Mr. President, I beg leave to withdraw in favour of the honourable member from Bombay, Mr. Ibrahim S. Haji.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Honourable members cannot resign in favour of other members unless they move an amendment to that effect.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI: I beg to move that my name be withdrawn from the select committee on Bill No. XI of 1922 and that the name of the honourable member Mr. Ibrahim S. Haji be substituted for mine.

Amendment carried.

Bill referred to Select Committee. Question as amended put and agreed to.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The Council is adjourned till 2 p.m. on Thursday, the 5th October 1922.

Thursday, the 5th October 1922.

The Council re-assembled at the Council Hall, Poona, on Thursday, the 5th October 1922, at 2 p.m., the Honourable the President, Sir NARAYAN GANESH CHANDAVARKAR, Kt., LL.D., presiding.

(Presentation of Petitions.)

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District): Sir, I have to present a petition from Mr. Manohar Pandurang Khopkar, Joint Principal, King George's English School, Dadar, Bombay, on behalf of the managers of aided schools in this Presidency. The petition prays that the grants-in-aid to secondary schools should not be reduced. A resolution has been submitted on the same subject, and the managers pray that their prayer should receive the consideration of the members of this Council.

Petition ordered to be placed upon the table.

DISCUSSION OF MATTERS OF GENERAL PUBLIC INTEREST.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Sir, I wish to move for the acceptance of this Council a resolution in the following terms:

"This Council accepts the invitation of the Government of India to nominate one representative to the Court of Visitors of the Institute of Science at Bangalore, and resolves to proceed to the election according to the procedure laid down by the President."

This question has been referred to the Council on account of the communication recently received from the Government of India. There was an enquiry held by an influential committee, presided over by Sir William Pope into the management of the Institute of Science at Bangalore. They have made a very satisfactory recommendation as regards the constitution of the body for the management of that institution. According to the old arrangement the governing body consisted of a patron, vice-patrons, and a court of visitors. That constitution is going to be altered, and in future it will consist of a patron, a court of visitors, and a standing committee of the court and a council. The court of visitors will contain one nominee from the Legislative Council of each of the provinces, Bombay, Bengal, the Punjab, the United Provinces, Bihar and Orissa, Assam and Burma, and these are to hold office for three years. In former days, the Viceroy was its patron and the Governors of provinces were vice-patrons. The office of these vice-patrons is to be abolished, and each Legislative Council is to elect a representative to the court of visitors. If the Council accepts the invitation and the privilege, it may then proceed to elect a member according to the procedure to be laid down by the President. It is a formal resolution.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE (Poona District): Mr. President, I think the Council should readily agree to the proposal that is placed before it by the Honourable the Minister for Education. The Bangalore Institute of Science is a very important institution in this country, where science in its higher branches and its application to the industrial requirements of the country is closely studied. There is a lot of research work carried on in that institution, which industrially is of a very important character. I think the privilege given to this Council to nominate a member to represent this Presidency should be accepted by this Council.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): I agree with the views of the honourable member who preceded me, and I wish to ascertain from the Honourable Minister for Education whether sending a member will involve any further obligation on this Council. If it is merely a privilege which we are going to have, nobody will be more glad than myself to welcome the privilege.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Sir, no such obligation is involved. The ordinary expenditure in connection with the representative to be sent from this Council will have to be incurred. If any proposal is made later on—there is nothing at present—you can ask your representative to enlighten you on the matter. At present I do not think any obligation is intended. The institute has got its own funds, and a governing body representative of the whole country is to be created. It is a privilege, I should consider, given to this Council to send a representative. I hope the Council will accept this.

Question put and agreed to.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Names of candidates proposed by honourable members may be sent before 2 o'clock to-morrow, and at 3 o'clock the election may be proceeded with. If the House thinks this unnecessary, then any honourable member may propose a name, and the House may elect him at once.

[The President]

Rao Bahadur G. K. CHITALE (Ahmednagar District): Is the Honourable Minister eligible for this?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: There is no statutory disqualification. Any honourable member of the Council is eligible.

Rao Bahadur G. K. CHITALE: Then, why not proceed to elect now?

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): I propose that the Honourable Dr. R. P. Paranjpye be elected as the representative of this Council to the Court of Visitors of the Institute of Science at Bangalore.

Rao Bahadur G. K. CHITALE: I second the proposal.

Question put and agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

"Supplementary grant of Rs. 2,00,000 for construction of bungalows for Government officers at Ahmedabad."

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Sir, I move for a supplementary grant of Rs. 2,00,000 to be added to the grant which has already been sanctioned by the Council under 41, Civil Works, namely, Rs. 1,17,41,000. Now, this Rs. 2,00,000 is wanted for the purpose of building bungalows for certain officers at Ahmedabad. We had approved in 1919 a scheme for the construction of bungalows for Government officers at Ahmedabad, and for that purpose certain lands were acquired which cost Rs. 4,00,000. But that scheme was subsequently revised and it was decided to restore the lands to the owners, who will pay us Rs. 4,00,000. The building of these bungalows was left to the housing committee, and that committee has decided to build about nine bungalows for Government officers, which will cost Rs. 2,00,000. Therefore, I request the Council to agree to this grant of Rs. 2,00,000. Though we propose to spend Rs. 2,00,000 at present on these bungalows, we shall receive Rs. 4,00,000 from the re-sale of the lands, and we shall earn interest on that Rs. 4,00,000. I hope therefore the Council will accept this demand.

Dewan Bahadur K. R. GODBOLE (Poona District): Mr. President, I am a member of the housing committee referred to; the committee has gone into this question fully and they have satisfied themselves that these additional seven bungalows are required at Ahmedabad. The designs have also been examined by the committee and they are satisfied that the accommodation provided in the designs is really required. I think, therefore, that the Council should pass the demand that has been made.

Question put and agreed to.

"Supplementary grant of Rs. 44,100 for payment of arrears of pony allowance to the village establishment in Sind."

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Sir, I beg to move that a supplementary grant of Rs. 44,100 be sanctioned. This is merely a formal matter. The liability was incurred before the end of last year and as it was not paid, the amount which was provided in the last year's budget lapsed. This liability has, therefore, to be met during the current year and the amount required has to be provided. It does not in any way increase Government's liability. It merely means a book entry. Last year's grant lapsed to the balances and the amount has now to be taken from such balances.

[Sir Ibrahim Rahimtoola]

Question put and agreed to.

"Supplementary grant of Rs. 10,389 for (a) retention of the post of Under Secretary in the Revenue Department from 1st to 16th March 1922, (b) creation of a temporary appointment of Under Secretary in the Revenue Department from 17th March to 31st July 1922 and (c) creation of a permanent appointment of a Junior Assistant Secretary in the Revenue Department from 1st August 1922."

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Sir, I beg to move that a supplementary grant of Rs. 10,389 be sanctioned. This sum consists of three items. The first item is for Rs. 682, which represents the pay of Under Secretary in the Revenue Department from the 1st to 16th March 1922, inclusive. The second item consists of Rs. 5,157, which represents the cost of a temporary appointment of Under Secretary in the Revenue Department from 17th March 1922 to 31st July 1922 on a pay of Rs. 950 plus duty allowance of Rs. 200; and the third item consists of Rs. 4,550 which represents the creation of a permanent appointment of a Junior Assistant Secretary in the Revenue Department from 1st August 1922 on Rs. 650—50—850.

The appointment of Under Secretary has been abolished with effect from 17th March 1922 in consequence of the reconstitution of the superior staff of all the departments in the Secretariat. Experience has, however, shown that one more gazetted officer is absolutely necessary in the Revenue Department to cope with the volume of work both in the reserved and the transferred departments. The services of the holder of the post were accordingly retained on a temporary basis up to 31st July 1922; and an appointment of a permanent additional Assistant Secretary has been created thereafter. The appointment of the Assistant Secretary is on a lower scale as the duty allowance of Rs. 200 is not payable to him.

Question put and agreed to.

"Supplementary grant of Rs. 11,300 for the project for trenching of the spent wash from the Khanapur distillery and the expenditure on the working of the spent wash pumping plant."

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Sir, I move for a supplementary grant of Rs. 11,300 to be made over to the head 6, Excise from the head 41, Civil Works. This is simply a transfer from one head to another, namely, from the Public Works to Excise. This item of Rs. 11,300 is to be transferred to Excise for expenditure on the working of the spent wash pumping plant of the Khanapur distillery.

Question put and agreed to.

"Supplementary grant of Rs. 1,000 for accommodation to policemen in plague-infected areas."

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Mr. President, I move for a supplementary grant of Rs. 1,000 for accommodation of police in plague-infected areas. We took a grant of Rs. 500 only but our estimate was unduly optimistic, and it has been reported that we shall want another Rs. 1,000, the chief offender in the matter being Belgaum. I therefore propose that this extra Rs. 1,000 should be granted for this purpose to the head 26, Police.

Question put and agreed to.

"Supplementary grant of Rs. 2,100 (Rs. 300 per mensem) to be paid towards the maintenance of the Satara Museum with effect from the 1st of August 1922)."

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Sir, I move for a grant of Rs. 2,100 for the purpose of maintaining the Satara Museum, with effect from the 1st of August 1922. Sir, the question can be simply explained in this manner.

[Dr. R. P. Paranjpye]

Honourable members are aware that Rao Bahadur Parasnis of Satara has got a very valuable historical museum, which is all his own collection. The museum is no doubt very valuable. It contains an amount of exhibits which are hardly seen anywhere in the world. But a private museum cannot be obviously maintained for a long time at the expense of a private gentleman, and Rao Bahadur Parasnis is not a very wealthy gentleman to be able to keep this museum for a very long time. Some years ago, he represented the matter to Government and asked them to make arrangements by means of which this museum will be available for the benefit of the public. At that time an arrangement was come to, that a building was to be built at Satara by Government at a cost of about Rs. 3,00,000 and the maintenance of the museum was to be partly at the expense of the district local board of Satara and the Satara municipality. The cost of the building was to be over Rs. 3,00,000. The building was actually taken in hand and a certain sum of money had been spent on that building which has been erected up to the plinth, but Government have got no money at present and is not likely to have money in the immediate future to complete the building. In the meanwhile the expense of maintaining that museum in the present building is being borne by Rao Bahadur Parasnis himself. If the original programme had been carried out, Rao Bahadur Parasnis's responsibility would have been transferred to Government, but as Government is unable to take up that responsibility at present, Rao Bahadur Parasnis has continued to maintain it. However, it is now possible for him to maintain it without some help from Government. At present the museum is housed in his own house at Satara and is under very good management. The exhibits are very well exhibited; perhaps not in any ideal manner as compared with other rich museums, but anybody who goes there will find that the museum is well worth a visit lasting more than a day. It contains old historical exhibits of ancient Mahomedan and Maratha dynasties and other exhibits collected from all quarters of the world, and, in fact, the value of the museum can hardly be estimated. If it does come into the market, I do not know how much money that museum would fetch if it is offered to be purchased by an American millionaire or an English millionaire. It is however felt that the museum should not be allowed to be disposed of in that manner. It contains national treasures of the utmost value, and we should try and make an effort to keep that museum for the benefit of the historical students of this country. Of course, several proposals were made to Rao Bahadur Parasnis, and one of them was to allow the museum to be moved to the city of Bombay and be made a part of the Prince of Wales Museum, but from a certain feeling of local partriotism Rao Bahadur Parasnis wants the museum to be in Satara itself. While these matters are under discussion, the request of Rao Bahadur Parasnis has got to be considered that he should at least be given by Government the expenditure that he is incurring at present, which amounts to Rs. 300, in connection with housing the museum, and also on account of a certain amount of establishment which he has employed. As regards supervision, it costs nothing, as Rao Bahadur Parasnis is attending to it himself. It is therefore proposed that this amount should be given to him for this year for seven months. I am not asking for a recurring grant for this purpose, in view of certain negotiations that might be carried on with him. On that I do not wish to say anything at present. I only want a grant of Rs. 2,100 as expenditure for seven months to be paid to him. I have visited this museum twice, and I can assure the Council that the museum is of the most valuable character, and if Rao Bahadur Parasnis is not helped in this manner, one may be sure that the whole treasure of the museum will have to be sold owing to his inability to continue it, and that will be a calamity which honourable members of this Council, in view of the great historical interests of this Presidency, will be very unwilling to submit to, and therefore I hope that the Council will sanction this grant.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District): It is hardly necessary for me, Sir, to say anything at this point, because at present, as the Honourable Minister has stated, the demand is confined to a very small amount for the maintenance of this historical museum. Taking into consideration the unique character and the educational and historical value of this museum, I think the House will be well advised in going in for this small amount for the present. I will only quote Dr. Thomas, the distinguished orientalist and scholar and Librarian of the Royal Asiatic Society of London and of the India House. He writes to Rao Bahadur Parasnis:

"Your beautiful house is a mine of treasure and the very skilful and tasteful arrangement of everything gives additional value to the collection. I am really astonished at the variety and multitude of the chef d'oeuvres which you have brought together. Your museum is, I suppose, unsurpassed in artistic historical interest by anything of the kind in India, and I envy you the enjoyment of living amongst such delights. It will certainly preserve your name and will be an attraction to all visitors in the Presidency."

I am not going to say anything more at this stage, as negotiations are pending. The only reason why Government should contribute something towards its maintenace, as the Honourable the Minister has told us, is that if Government does not keep up the promise they made some time ago and in pursuance of which the building was started, the owner will be obliged to sell some of the valuable exhibits, and it will be a permanent loss to this Presidency and to the country. So, I think, before proceeding to deal with any proposals for a permanent endowment for this museum, the present demand might well be sanctioned by this Council.

Mr. P. R. CHIKODI (Belgaum District): Sir, I rise to oppose the grant of this demand. The collection of historical manuscripts, etc., is no doubt valuable, but after all it is a private property and I do not know how far Rao Bahadur Parasnis will allow the public to have access to, or control over, those collections. It is not good and proper that the public should be asked to maintain and pay for such private historical collections out of public funds. It is said that Rao Bahadur Parasnis is going to sell not all but some of the manuscripts, and if that is the case, it would be better if Government bought some of the collections and placed them in the Government museum. If the Honourable Minister is willing to place on the Council table the correspondence relating to the negotiations he is carrying on with Rao Bahadur Parasnis, the Council will be in a position to consider whether this grant should be voted or not. Till then, I would say that this grant should not be given. On these grounds I oppose the grant.

Mr. J. C. KER: Sir, the honourable member who just spoke is well aware that this collection, although it is the property of a private individual, is open to the public. I happened to be present only a few days ago when the matter was debated in another place, and the honourable member was informed that the collection was open to the public. The collection is one of public value and importance, and if the honourable member is wanting in historic sense, that is ino reason why the Council should vote against the grant. To a collection of this importance there should be given a temporary grant till permanent arrangements can be made.

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL (Broach District): Sir, I wish to support the motion, but before I do so I would like to know whether, if the owner wished, on patriotic grounds, to keep this museum at Satara and not allow it to be transferred to Bombay, it would not be advisable for the district municipality or the local board to give a grant.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): Sir, I rise to support the motion. Even if Rao Bahadur Parasnis keeps the whole museum for himself, which does not appear to be his desire, at least his labours and services would deserve a grant of annuity especially as he has collected these articles from different quarters of the world. He is a public benefactor in this respect. Articles that had belonged to India and which had left this country, he has brought and deposited in Satara. I think he should be given a grant for this, if not for anything else. However, I would just suggest to the Minister that he might buy the whole museum by annual instalments if it is so useful to the country.

Rao Bahadur G. K. CHITALE (Ahmednagar District): Sir, I wish to support the grant on this ground, that Government have given its word, and has passed a resolution, and has allowed a considerable amount, Rs. 30,000 or Rs. 35,000, to be spent out of the three lakhs granted long ago. Does this House wish that the Government should be allowed to back out of the promise on one ground or another, and induce a private individual to throw out a treasure that is certainly very valuable to India? Now, it appears, Sir, that a building has been erected and has been left where it is in an uncared for condition. However that may be, my honourable friend from Belgaum knows almost the exact line of negotiations. Under these circumstances, Sir, we should pass this grant unanimously rather than allow it to pass with some amount of hesitation. I support the grant whole-heartedly.

Sardar V.N. MUTALIK (Deccan Sardars and Inamdars): Sir, it would be as well that I should put in a word with regard to this grant, coming as I do from Satara. To the point raised by the honourable member from Belgaum, I may say the collection is at present open to the public, and no one is refused access to any of the specimens. The collection is the work of one life spent in strenuous endeavour, for more than twenty years. Government promised him not only a building, but also a certain amount of monthly honorarium in addition, and it would be bad faith if Government now refused to maintain that collection. Government have already promised, and I must strongly and whole-heartedly support this motion. I would appeal to the honourable members to support the grant whole-heartedly, to preserve the collection intact.

Mr. C. M. GANDHI (Surat City): I think, Sir, the House will surely be willing to support this motion whole-heartedly, informed as we are that the collection is a very valuable one. I dare say that Rao Bahadur Parasnis has spent laborious efforts to collect the specimens, and if he has collected this treasure of valuable things out of sheer patriotism, I fail to understand, Sir, why he cannot afford to wait for a few months till the negotiations are completed. I do not understand why he should ask rent for his own house. (An Honourable Member: It is a separate bungalow). But it is his own. It would be another matter if we are asked to maintain the museum, but I can never lend myself to accept a proposal which is in the nature of giving him a rent for a building which is his own.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Mr. President, the plain fact is this: Rao Bahadur Parasnis is a historical student, and he knows exactly where the treasures are to be obtained. If you go and buy those treasures in the open market, they will cost you a lot. The expert knows exactly the various nooks and corners where they are to be found. The value of those treasures is not to be fixed by what he paid for them, but what Government would have to pay for them if they had to buy them in the open market. The house in which the collection at present stands is a pretty big house, and if the Government had kept to this old understanding by providing him with a house, then it would not have been necessary to make this grant. We have slept over our part of the contract, and I think it is but right that we should not ask a private gentleman, of no very wealthy status, to continue to keep a museum which, for all practical purposes, is a public museum, because nobody is refused access to it, simply because we have not been able to fulfil our terms on account of financial stringency or any other cause.

With regard to the suggestion of the honourable member from Belgaum about ourselves buying part of the collection, I would like to put it to honourable members whether, if a gentleman is going to sell a portion of his collection, he will obviously not sell it to the best purchaser that he can get, and I am afraid this Government in its wealthiest circumstances would not be able to go into the market and compete with wealthy millionaires who would be prepared to pay even the most absurd and fancy prices for such a collection.

As I have already said, I am asking for a grant only for this year. The amount is to be in the form of rent, because somehow or other we have to have some basis on which to fix the grant. We thought that the amount of Rs. 300 per month was a proper return for the rent of the house and for the charge of the small establishment. It is on that basis that the Rs. 300 has been calculated, and it is on that account that I have asked the House to sanction the grant.

As regards the point raised by the honourable member from Broach, I would point out that the Satara municipality and the district local board promised only to maintain the museum and to pay the expenses of keeping up the museum, but they are not prepared to make any grant for the purpose of a new building. Of course, whether it is to remain permanently in Satara under the altered conditions or not is a question for further discussion, and I do not think that it is worth while telling the Council what line the negotiations will take. All that I am asking for is this grant for a period of seven months. I therefore hope that the Council will support this grant.

Supplementary grant of Rs. 5,500, for the continuance of certain temporary police establishment in the Ahmedabad district.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Mr. President, I move for a supplementary grant of Rs. 5,500 for temporary police in the Ahmedabad district. A temporary force of 3 head constables and 30 constables was sanctioned for four months in the existing budget to deal with the dacoits in Gujarat. Unfortunately, it has been found necessary, owing to the continued prevalence of dacoities in Gujarat, to extend the time of entertainment of these temporary police for another six months. It is hoped that, during the cold weather, it will be possible to deal satisfactorily with these dacoits. I therefore ask the Council to sanction the additional sum of Rs. 5,500 required for these temporary police in Gujarat.

Rao Bahadur R. M. NILKANTH (Ahmedabad District): Mr. President, I rise to support this grant. Unfortunately, dacoities are still going on in many parts of the Ahmedabad district. The dacoits come in large parties possessed of fire-arms, and their methods are accompanied by cruel torture. There is therefore a great sense of insecurity in the countryside, and it is necessary that the police force should be continued.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): Mr. President, I rise to support this grant. I had occasion to visit Dholka last May, and I heard many stories of the people's misfortunes on account of these raids, and people were complaining of not having more police protection in those parts. I hope the Council will pass this grant. At the same time, I request the Honourable the Home Member to make further provision till this insecurity disappears.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: I would merely mention that a very satisfactory arrangement will be made for the catching of these dacoits in Gujarat.

Question put and agreed to.

Supplementary grant of Rs. 2,133⅓ for increment of pay due to Dr. Jamshyd D. Munsiff, Assistant Director of Public Health, from 1st November 1921 at Rs. 133⅓ per mensem.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Mr. President, I move for a grant of Rs. 2,133⅓ to cover the increment of pay due to Dr. Jamshyd D. Munsiff, F.R.C.S., D.P.H., Assistant Director of Public Health, from 1st November 1921 at Rs. 133⅓ per mensem. Sir, Dr. Munsiff was appointed Deputy Sanitary Commissioner in 1913. These Assistant Directors of Public Health were appointed on probation for two years, were confirmed after that period, and got their increment at the end of each five years. But, in view of the approved service of Dr. Munsiff in Mysore, where he was engaged by the Kolar Gold Fields Co., and the good reports that were received from the Political Department of the Mysore Government, this Government excused this probation and the first increment was granted in 1916. The next increment was, according to the understanding of the Government of Bombay and also of Dr. Munsiff, due in 1921, and the Accountant-General also accepted that position. But the Auditor-General raised an objection and said that, though the first increment had been granted in 1916, the second increment could not be granted to him for ten years from the beginning, from the moment he was engaged. That is against all understanding of the Government of Bombay, the Accountant-General and Dr. Munsiff, and on account of a technical objection raised by the Auditor-General, this question has got to be brought before the Legislative Council. We have been told that if the Council passes a resolution to this effect, the grant can be paid—that it is within the powers of the local Government—and therefore I have come forward to ask for this grant. It is only a formal motion to get over the objection raised by the Auditor-General; there is nothing new, and I therefore hope that the Council will pass this grant.

Supplementary grant of Rs. 5,040 for revision of pay of the general duty Circle Inspectors in the Northern and Southern Divisions.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Mr. President, I beg to move for a supplementary grant of Rs. 5,040 for revision of pay of the general duty circle inspectors in the Northern and Southern Divisions, to be transferred from 47, Miscellaneous to 5, Land Revenue.

The proposals for the revision of the pay of general duty circle inspectors in the Northern and Southern Divisions were included in the scheme for permanent measuring staff in those Divisions. The requisite provisions on account of the whole scheme were entered in the last year's list of new items prepared in connection with the "5, Land Revenue" budget note. As it was subsequently found necessary to cut down the expenditure to the lowest level, the provisions, which included provision for the pay revision of the general duty circle inspectors, were omitted. In view of financial stringency, it has been decided to postpone the general scheme till the next year. The question of the revision of pay of the general duty circle inspectors is, however, an urgent one, and Government propose to sanction the revision with effect from 1st March 1920 on the lines laid down for other establishments and to meet the expenditure on this account from the reseve at the disposal of the Finance Department.

Supplementary grant of Rs. 4,950 for travelling allowances to non-official members and witnesses of Protection of Crops and Improvement of Cattle Committees.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Mr. President, I beg to ask for a supplementary grant of Rs. 4,950 to be transferred from 34, Agriculture, to 47 Miscellaneous, for travelling allowances to non-official members and witnesses in connection with Protection of Crops and Improvement of Cattle Committees.

The reason for the grant is explained in the following note:—

When the two committees were appointed by Government it was directed that the charge on account of the travelling allowance of non-official members of the committees and of the witnesses called by them should be met from the grants for travelling allowance at the disposal of the Director of Agriculture. The Accountant-General has, however, pointed out that the expenditure is to be recorded under the head '47, Miscellaneous—Special Commissions of Enquiry.' The total charge estimated is Rs. 4,950 (Rs. 1,500 for the first and Rs. 3,450 for the second committee) and it is proposed to transfer the amount from the provision of Rs. 40,000 for travelling allowance under Experimental Farms under the head "34, Agriculture."

It is in order to pay the travelling expenses of non-official members and witnesses of the committees appointed to consider measures (1) for the protection of crops from wild animals, (2) for the maintenance and improvement of the existing breeds of cattle and of the fodder supply of the Bombay Presidency. It is purely an accounts matter; the amount was provided for under 34, Agriculture, but the Accountant-General states that it must be provided under the head 47, Miscellaneous. I therefore request this grant.

Question put and agreed to.

Supplementary grant of Rs. 25,000 for disposal of the Poona sewage effluent.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA: Mr. President, I have to ask for a supplementary grant of Rs. 25,000 to be transferred from 41, Civil Works, to 34, Agriculture, for disposal of the Poona sewage effluent.

This provision of Rs. 25,000 has been made under the head 41, Civil Works, in order to provide for the expenses in connection with the sewage effluent at Poona. The Accountant-General has held that this amount ought to be debited to 34, Agriculture, because the sewage effluent is being used for purposes in connection with experiments on certain crops. It is therefore requested that this amount be transferred from Public Works to Agriculture.

Question put and agreed to.

Supplementary grant of Rs. 3,23,500 for the pay of the Sanitary Engineer and his staff including expenditure on sanitary works.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Mr. President, I beg to move for a supplementary grant of Rs. 3,23,500 to be transferred from 41, Civil Works to 33, Public Health, for the pay of the Sanitary Engineer and his staff including expenditure on sanitary works. This is merely a formal transfer from one head to another. The Government of India have decided that provision for roads and buildings only should be made under the head 41, Civil Works. Consequently, the provision for the pay of the Sanitary Engineer and his staff, including expenditure on sanitary works, has to be made under the appropriate head, namely, 33 Public Health. Hence this transfer.

[Khan Bahadur Shaikh Ghulam Hussain]

Question put and agreed to.

Supplementary grant of Rs. 2,300 for formation of a Criminal Tribes Settlement in Satara district.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD : Mr. President, with your leave I rise to anticipate item 12 and to move item 13 for a sum of Rs. 2,300, for the formation of a Criminal Tribes Settlement in the Satara district. Item 12 refers to the education of the settlers and item 13 to guard of the settlers and the formation of the settlement. I may briefly explain, Sir, that crime in the Satara district is largely put down to Mangs and Ramoshis. There has been a gang which has been for years past a terror to the eastern parts of the district, and it is now reported that there is another gang forming which proposes to be a similar terror to the residents of the southern parts of the district of Satara. The Criminal Tribes Act was applied to the district, and the minor forms of restraint of registration and roll call were put in force. These minor forms of restraint however have proved futile, and it is now proposed to establish a criminal settlement for the worst offenders near the Bhatgar water works. This will give them regular employment at reasonable rates in a favourable climate with good prospects of their reclamation. It is hoped by this means that the crime of the district will be materially reduced at a comparatively small yearly cost of Rs. 5,000, and this will also enable us to carry out with equanimity the extensive scheme of retrenchment to the tune of over Rs. 20,000 in the police force of the district. I, therefore, recommend that item No. 13, Rs. 2,300 required this year for establishing a criminal tribe settlement in Satara be sanctioned by the Council.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District) : I rise to support the grant asked for. By this measure, not only the cost on police will be reduced, but also the enormous cost the Government have been incurring in launching cases before courts is likely to be saved to a great extent. The last gang which was tried in the Sessions Court of Satara is an instance and that has cost Government a lot of expenditure. The case had to be tried first in the original court and then in the Sessions Court. If these gangs are not allowed to be at large, it will not only reduce crime but also reduce further expenditure on trials. In the interest of economy and the interest of people, the measure that is now proposed should be undertaken, and the establishment of a criminal settlement will, to a great extent, remove this evil. I heartily support the demand.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV : Sir, I would like to have some more information from the Honourable the Home Member on this point, whether he intends to form a criminal settlement for the Ramoshis of the whole district or for the Man taluka from which there has been much trouble. The Mang and Ramoshi tribes are giving the greatest trouble. The grant intends to remove this trouble, and there should be no objection to the grant. The Criminal Tribes Act has been in force against them, and in many instances men of those tribes who wanted to lead honest lives have been put to very great inconvenience on account of the operation of this Act. It is no wonder that many honest men among them have fallen into dishonest ways, and swollen the ranks of thieves and dacoits. The remedy for this will lie in giving them more opportunities of reforming themselves, and if they fail to do so then sending them to some criminal settlement.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK (Deccan Sardars and Inamdars): Sir, I rise to support this grant. As the honourable nominated member from Satara said, only the Mangs and Ramoshis of Man taluka are gving the greatest trouble, and they should be sent to the criminal settlement. Those who know the condition of Satara will realise how difficult it has become to maintain law and order in the southern part of the district. Gang after gang is formed. Therefore, it is absolutely necessary to send not only these tribes but also other people who take part in this disorder and breach of peace.

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: I have only this to add, Sir. We have under consideration the general rules regarding the registration and roll call of members of the criminal tribes. We will also be careful in selecting the worst of them for the settlement at Bhatgar to have due regard to the claims of each and every taluka of the district of Satara.

Question put and agreed to.

Supplementary grant of Rs. 500 to provide education for the inmates of the new Criminal Settlement.

The Honourable Dr. R. P. PARANJPYE: Sir, I rise to ask for a supplementary grant of Rs. 500 for educating the inmates of the new Criminal Tribe Settlement whom my honourable friend has caught.

Question put and agreed to.

"Supplementary grant of Rs. 8,311 for a criminal tribes settlement at Khanapur."

The Honourable Mr. M. H. W. HAYWARD: Mr. President, I move for a supplementary grant of Rs. 8,311 from reserve to 25, Jails and Convict Settlements. This is another case of a criminal tribes settlement. It has been in existence at Khanapur for a number of years and the inmates of the settlement are employed on Forest Department work. It has hitherto been paid for by the Forest Department budget. It has, however, been now considered that it would be fairer if it were paid for by the Jail Department budget. We were all agreed about this, and unfortunately in the agreement we both forgot to make provision for this item in the budget. Therefore, there was no definite estimate included either in the Forest Department budget or in the Jail Department budget. The settlement at the same time was in existence, and was going on and had to be paid for. We went into the cost and we managed to reduce it by about Rs. 3,000 to Rs. 18,811. We have managed to find Rs. 10,500 out of the money provided under Criminal Tribes Settlements, but we have not been able to get the remaining Rs. 8,311. The Criminal Tribes Settlements grant, therefore, being insufficient to the extent of Rs. 8,311, I have to ask that the Council will sanction this amount from the reserve.

Rao Saheb D. P. DESAI (Kaira District): Sir, it is surprising that such a large institution or department was quite forgotten at the time of framing the budget, and I see from the remarks made in the statement that the inmates of this criminal tribes' settlement are employed by the Forest Department on some forest work. I want to know whether they will have to be paid for their labour by the Forest Department or not. Again the charge appears to have been met from the reserve; I thought the reserve would not be touched, but every Member of Government seems to have taken advantage of it, and I wonder whether anything is left of it or not.

Question put and agreed to.

"Supplementary grant of Rs. 14,800 for grant-in-aid to the veterinary dispensary at Sukkur."

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Sir, I move for a supplementary grant of Rs. 14,800 for a grant-in-aid equal to a moiety of the cost of the veterinary dispensary at Sukkur.

A building grant of Rs. 17,606, equal to half the cost on account of the construction of the dispensary at Sukkur, was paid by Government in the year 1920-1921. This amount of Rs. 14,800 represents half the amount awarded by the land acquisition officer on account of compensation for the land acquired for the dispensary, which is to be paid with interest till the date of payment. The award was received by the district local board on the 22nd March 1922, but the board did not apply for payment of the Government share before the 31st March 1922 from the last year's budget grant, when provision was available. No provision has been made in the current year for building grants to veterinary dispensaries, and if this money is not paid this year, it will then be claimed with interest. Therefore, I request that this amount be transferred from the reserve to the head "34, Agriculture."

Mr. B. G. PAHALAJANI (Western Sind): Mr. President, I would mention for the Honourable Minister's information that the award which has been made by the land acquisition officer has been referred to the District Court on the application of the owner. Therefore, the statement that, if the money is not paid now, interest will have to be paid cannot be correct, because the owner has refused to accept the amount of the award, and until that amount is settled by the District Court, no interest can be charged. I am cognisant of these facts because a similar application, not in terms of the amount, but one-fourth of the amount that was necessary, was made to the municipality to which I belong. The municipality also was of opinion that, as the amount was undetermined, all that they had to do was to pay one-fourth of the amount. Therefore, so far as this statement represents exactly the compensation that has to be paid, it is not correct, because it is sub judice yet under the Land Acquisition Act, and the District Judge has not yet adjudicated as to the exact amount that is to be paid or the exact claim that is to be met.

The Honourable Khan Bahadur SHAIKH GHULAM HUSSAIN: Sir, I do not know from where my honourable friend has obtained this information. The officials concerned have stated that there is a demand made for the amount, and we are told that, unless that amount is paid, we shall have to pay interest on it.

Question put and agreed to.

"Supplementary grant of Rs. 40,000 for construction of a sea-wall at Gogho."

The Honourable Sir CHIMANLAL SETALVAD: Sir, I beg to move for a supplementary grant of Rs. 40,000 under "27, Ports and Pilotage" for the construction of a sea-wall at Gogho. Honourable members will see, Sir, that it is clearly a question of transfer from one head to another. The Government of India have decided that provision for roads and buildings only should be made under the head "41, Civil Works." Rs. 40,000 was provided under that head for the construction of a sea-wall at Gogho and it has now to be transferred from "41, Civil Works in charge of Public Works Officers" to "27, Ports and Pilotage". No addition is proposed.

[Sir Chimanlal Setalvad]

Question put and agreed to.

"Supplementary grant of Rs. 19,500 for completion of the work of demarcating boundaries between districts in Sind."

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Sir, I beg to move that a supplementary grant of Rs. 19,500 be made for completion of the work of demarcating boundaries between districts in Sind.

An estimate for the work amounting to Rs. 30,572 was first sanctioned by the Chief Engineer. The estimate was afterwards revised to Rs. 35,784 which the Chief Engineer was competent to sanction. The additional allotment is, therefore, required to meet this excess. The total allotment for the completion of the work now required by the Chief Engineer is Rs. 19,500. The sum of Rs. 15,500 is provided under item 120 under "41, Civil Works Provincial" current budget. It is now proposed to transfer the whole amount of Rs. 19,500 (Rs. 15,500 already provided for plus Rs. 4,000 additional) from the Public Works Department budget to the Civil budget, i.e., from "41, Civil Works, Provincial" to "5, Land Revenue."

NON-OFFICIAL BILLS.

BILL FURTHER TO AMEND THE BOMBAY HEREDITARY OFFICES ACT, 1886.

(Motion for leave to introduce the bill.)

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District): Sir, I beg leave to introduce the bill further to amend the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act. Sir, section 2 of Bombay Act V of 1886 lays down that, in case of watan properties, every female member of a watan family except a widow of the last male holder is postponed in order of succession to every male member of the family in fact, however distant he may be in the line of succession. That is the law that has been laid down by section 2 of Bombay Act V of 1886. By the amending bill. ....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: The honourable member should merely ask for leave to introduce the bill and sit down. I shall then put the motion for leave to introduce the bill, and if any honourable member says he desires to oppose that motion, I shall call upon the honourable mover for a brief explanatory statement, and after that for a brief opposing statement from the honourable member opposing.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI: Sir, I beg leave to introduce this bill further to amend the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act V of 1886.

Mr. G. C. BHATE: Sir, I formally oppose the motion for leave to introduce this bill.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA: We ought to have some explanatory statement from the mover, Sir.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Sir, I rise to a point of order. The honourable member for Kolaba district says he opposes formally, but I do not know what that form is.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That does not matter. The honourable member for the Dharwar district may now make a brief explanatory statement as the motion for leave to introduce the bill is opposed.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI: Sir, in order to explain why I beg leave to introduce this bill, I shall be obliged to refer to section 2 of Act V of 1886. By that section, all female members of a watan family except a widow of the last male holder are postponed to every male member of the watan family however distant he may be in the line of succession. That is to say if A is a last member of the watan family and he dies leaving behind him his mother and paternal grand-mother and some distant cousin, that distant cousin will inherit the property to the exclusion of the mother and the paternal grand-mother. Sometimes the result has been that the mother and the paternal grand-mother who otherwise would have been entitled to succeed to the property of a widowless and childless watandar would be obliged to go to a civil court to sue in forma pauperis for their maintenance from a distant cousin of the last male holder. This creates, and has created, very serious injustice to the widowed members of the watan family. To remove this injustice I propose to make an amendment in section 2 of the amending Act of 1886 by inserting the words "mother" and "paternal grand-mother" after the word "widow". So the section when amended will read thus:

"Every female member of a watan family except a widow, mother and paternal grand-mother of the last male holder will be postponed in the line of succession, etc."

That is to say, widows of the family will be entitled to inherit according to the ordinary law of inheritance. They will not be obliged to depend for maintenance on a distant divided member of the family who will come in under section 2 of Act V of 1886. Sir, the principle seems to be.....

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: That is going into arguments. Only a brief explanatory statement is allowable under the standing orders.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI: My only object is to remove that injustice. The object of Act V of 1886 will not in any way be affected. The object of that Act was that the watan property should not leave the family. By the amendment which is proposed, the watan property would not go out of the family. The mother and the paternal grand-mother are widows of the family, and so the property would not go outside the family and as widows they will be debarred from alienating the watan property to any outsider or stranger. So, to remove the obvious injustice, I propose to add the words 'mother and paternal grand-mother' after the word 'widow.'

Mr. G. C. BHATE (Kolaba District): Sir, I have nothing to say.

Leave to introduce granted and bill forthwith introduced.

BILL TO AMEND THE BOMBAY RACE-COURSES LICENSING ACT, 1912.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Now, as to the next bill, a bill to amend the Bombay Race-Courses Licensing Act, 1912, it has been disallowed by His Excellency under section 80-C of the Government of India Act, which runs thus:

"It shall be not lawful for any member of any local legislative council to introduce, without the previous sanction of the governor, lieutenant-govenor or chief commissioner, any measure affecting the public revenues of a province, or imposing any charge on those revenues."

This section embodies the practice in the House of Commons, which is stated by Sir William Anson in his Law and Custom of the Constiution, as follows:—

"The responsible advisers of the Crown, the ministers of state, are alone capable of proposing that public money should be raised, or if already raised should be spent; and the

[The President]

House would not entertain a motion by a private member for a specific outlay on any object which he might consider deserving of public support. The relations of Crown, Lords, and Commons in respect of money grants cannot be better stated than in the words of Sir Erskine May :—

'The Crown demands money, the Commons grant it, and the Lords assent to the grant; but the Commons do not vote money unless it be required by the Crown; nor impose or augment taxes, unless such taxation be necessary for the public service as declared by the Crown through its constitutional advisers.'

"Such a rule is the great safeguard of the tax-payer against the casual benevolence of a House wrought upon by the eloquence of a private member: against a scramble for public money among unscrupulous politicians bidding against one another for the favour of a democracy."

MOTIONS TO AMEND STANDING ORDERS AS AMENDED BY THE SELECT COMMITTEE.

The Honourable Mr. C. V. MEHTA : Sir, I beg to submit the report of the select committee appointed to consider motion No. III of 1922 to amend Standing Orders, which has been circulated with the agenda. I move that the amendments as reported be adopted.

Motion read clause by clause.

Clause 1.

In Part XI of the Standing Orders—

For Order 1, the following order shall be substituted, namely :—

"A copy of the Budget and the detailed estimates shall be placed upon the table for the use of the members of the Council on the day of the presentation of the Budget and shall also be despatched to each member of the Council at least fourteen days prior to the first of the days allotted for the voting of demands for grants under Rule 27.

"Provided that any delay in the presentation or the despatch may be condoned by the President in the case of any circumstances beyond the control of Government.

"Provided also that at least seven days shall elapse between the first day of the session when the budget is to be presented and the first day of the voting of demands."

Clause ordered to stand part of the motion.

Clause 2.

In Part XI of the Standing Orders, in Order 3 for the words "before the date appointed for the session of the Council at which the motion is to be made" the words "before the first day of the voting of demands for grants under Rule 27", shall be substituted.

Clause ordered to stand part of the motion.

Motion put and agreed to.

DISCUSSION OF MATTERS OF GENERAL PUBLIC INTEREST.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE (Satara District) : Sir, I wish to ask leave for priority to introduce a resolution relating to grants for secondary education. That resolution forms part of my resolutions. It would not take a long time and it is a matter of urgency. The Honourable Minister has agreed to this, and as the matter is urgent and the discussion is not likely to take much time, I propose that I be allowed to move that resolution now.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Is it within the power of the Chair to give you priority ?

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE : Yes, Sir, according to the Standing Orders.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : The President may give priority to any item of such business, that is non-official business.

Mr. M. A. HAVELIVALA (Bombay City) : I wish to point out that priority ought not to be given, unless a special case of great importance was made out. Apart from that, there are other resolutions of equally great importance which ought to be dicussed in their turn.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT : Unless the circumstances are of a very extraordinary character, I do not think I ought to give priority to any resolution.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: Mr. President, the matter is likely to affect the grants this year of a large number of schools who have been carrying on secondary education. They have been carrying on an agitation, and have petitioned this House that the matter may be decided in this session. Otherwise their grants are liable to be suddenly cut off, and it is for the House to consider that this is a matter of urgency; but unfortunately the honourable member for Bombay objects. It is a matter of urgency; I would not have pressed for it otherwise.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: In any case, I think the House will be sitting to-morrow, unless we are going to close to-day?

Honourable Members: No, no.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: In that case, the honourable member for Satara may renew his request for priority to-morrow.

Rao Bahadur R. R. KALE: Very well, Sir.

Rao Bahadur S. D. GARUD (West Khandesh District): Mr. President, the resolution which stands in my name reads as follows:

"This Council recommends to His Excellency the Governor in Council that a committee be appointed to consider the question of readjusting the existing division of Khandesh for revenue and judicial purposes."

Sir, I am encouraged to bring this resolution because of what His Excellency the Governor said to us in his reply to the address presented to him by the district local board of West Khandesh. The district local board of West Khandesh put the case for the partition before him, and we were able to convince His Excellency of the justice of our claim. I wish briefly to read the case as put before His Excellency by the district local board, and it is as follows:

"The uneven partition of the Khandesh district in 1906 left our district local board with an income of Rs. 2,02,000 out of Rs. 5,33,000, with a population of 4,69,743 out of 14,29,197 and with an area of 5,195 square miles out of 10,046 square miles.

"The partition mainly followed the lines of the division which was then adopted for their purposes by the Forest Department. The districts were unequally divided in points of revenue and population, and though West Khandesh....."

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: What are you reading from?

Rao Bahadur S. D. GARUD: I am reading from the address of the district local board, which presents the case for the readjustment of the existing division, and I propose also, with your permission, to read briefly a sentence or two from the reply of His Excellency, which will show the House that His Excellency was convinced that the case which we put before him was just, and I shall then briefly support these salient facts with a few other figures that I have got. The address to His Excellency further stated:

"The districts were unequally divided in points of revenue and population and though West Khandesh is larger than the other district in area, it has a very large proportion of reserved forest and one taluka is mostly taken up by the Mewas estates. The distribution included in the West Khandesh district all the talukas notorious for their bad climate, a poor, ignorant and unadvanced population and a small revenue paying area and gave to the other district all the talukas with a good and salubrious climate, more than double the population which is rich and progressive, and a cultivated area which yields nearly twice the revenue. Thus the responsibility of developing the malarial and backward portions of the old district was transferred to this district local board without the advantage of the income of the other board."

And then we requested His Excellency that the revenue partition be reopened at the time of the judicial division which has yet to be made, and opportunity be taken to make a fair and equal division of the old disrtrict. In his reply, His Excellency said:

"This district, as you say, is in a rather remote part of the Presidency, and some parts of it are wild and inaccessible, with a population which is consequently comparatively poor and ignorant.

[Rao Bahadur S. D. Garud]

"I am glad therefore to have this opportunity of seeing a little of the district for myself and of learning at first hand from you all about your activities, your ambitions and your requirements. In particular, I have been much interested to hear your views with regard to the partition of Khandesh which you characterise as unequal, and I confess that the figures you have quoted do appear strongly to support your contentions that yours is the greater responsibility, while your share of the income of the old Khandesh district is disproportionately small. I will see that this matter is taken up by Government, and I will ask the Commissioner to report his views on the request you have made."

The Commissioner of the Central Division will, I hope, be able to present to the House his views on this matter, and enable this House to come to a decision on this very important question, which has been agitating the minds of people in West Khandesh from 1906. The partition has not yet been complete. It is still open, and the judicial partition of the district, which was to have taken place with the revenue partition, is yet to take place. This will, therefore, be an opportune time to consider whether the old district cannot be more fairly readjusted than it has been in the past. In the past, this division mainly followed, as has been said in the district local board's address, the lines of the division adopted by the Forest Department. In one district there were large tracts under forest, and in the other there was a large cultivated area with very little forest. Therefore, under that division, eight talukas went to one district and 13 talukas of the other were grouped into one separate district for forest purposes, but this division, for revenue and judicial purposes, was entirely unfair to the old district. When this division was adopted for revenue purposes, it was found that it gave to the new district an unusually large amount of revenue, an unusually large amount of the population and an unusually large amount of cultivated area. There are, in the eight talukas which are assigned to West Khandesh, really two talukas which bring in practically all the revenue that is derived from land in West Khandesh. I shall merely refer to a few figures which will show that the partition has practically given one-third of the old assets to the old district, and has given two-thirds of nearly all the assets to the other district. For instance, in 1906 the population in East Khandesh was nearly ten lakhs and the population in West Khandesh was 469,000. The population in 1921 in East Khandesh was 891,000, or nearly nine lakhs and in West Khandesh 560,000. In point of revenue, East Khandesh had Rs. 3,31,000 in 1906 and West Khandesh had Rs. 2,02,000 while in 1921 this revenue of Rs. 3 lakhs in East Khandesh went up to Rs. 8,30,000, and in West Khandesh it remained at Rs. 3,53,000. In point of area too, though West Khandesh is slightly larger than the other district, in point of the number of villages in both districts, and in point of cultivated area in both districts, East Khandesh is practically two times its superior. The number of talukas, as I have just pointed out, was, including pethas, 13 in East Khandesh. There are no pethas now in West Khandesh, because the one there was has been recently converted by readjustment into a taluka, and the pethas in East Khandesh which are two in number will, it is presumed, be converted into talukas by small readjustments, by taking over a few villages from the adjoining talukas, so that the number of talukas in East Khandesh is thirteen and the number of talukas in West Khandesh is eight. All I ask is that at least three more talukas and one petha, namely, Amalner, Parola, and Chalisgaon with Bhadgaon Petha should be given to West Khandesh, so that the old district will have at least eleven talukas, and the East Khandesh district will then under the new arrangement have ten. Even this addition will only add about 274,520 people to the population of West Khandesh and West Khandesh will then have only 131 to the square mile to 273 to the square mile in East Khandesh. The number of courts is six in East Khandesh and three in West Khandesh and the number of members who are returned to the Legislative Council from East Khandesh is three as against only one member from West Khandesh. In fact, East Khandesh is regarded even by Government as perhaps the heaviest worked district in the Presidency and West Khandesh as the lightest worked district. When East Khandesh has separate courts of its own, it will have litigation about 2½ times the amount of litigation in West Khandesh. At present the number of regular suits is about 2½ times more from East Khandesh than from West Khandesh and the same will be the case with regard to other litigation. The population per square mile in East Khandesh is almost twice that in West Khandesh. It is 273 per square mile in East Khandesh. So, East Khandesh is greater than the other district and West Khandesh is much less than that, and it is therefore fair to the inhabitants of the district to readjust this partition now, when the judicial partition comes to be introduced to readjust it in the light of these figures. All that we ask is that the old district gets its fair share of the revenue.

With these words, I hope that since we have been able to convince the head of the Presidency, Government will take a sympathetic view of our demands and try to meet them and remedy this grievance which has been rankling in the minds of the people of West Khandesh for so many years.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Mr. President, I will say at once that I think the honourable mover has succeeded in making out a primâ facie case for consideration.....

Rao Bahadur S. D. GARUD (West Khandesh District): Have I no right of reply?

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: An honourable member of Government has the last word of reply under the Standing Orders. The Honourable the Leader of the House, I take it, is using that privilege. The honourable member for West Khandesh will have in that case no right of reply. Would it not be fairer that the Honourable the Leader of the House should expound Government policy? The honourable mover might then reply and after that the Honourable the Leader of the House might exercise his right of the last word.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: I leave the procedure entirely in the hands of the Chair. If I had been allowed to go on, I think in two minutes the honourable mover would have been satisfied with the attitude Government propose to take and the question would have been disposed of. If you decide that the honourable mover shall have a right of reply, and that I should then speak again, I have no objection.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: A position which is rather unusual has arisen. There is only a speech by the mover of the resolution. No other honourable member from the non-official or official benches has risen to speak except the Honourable the Leader of the House who is the Government Member in charge of the department concerned. The Honourable the Leader, I understood when he rose, was exercising his right of the last word. Hence my suggestion.

After recess.

The Honourable the PRESIDENT: Order, order.

The Honourable Sir IBRAHIM RAHIMTOOLA: Sir, I will say at once that the honourable mover of the resolution has succeeded in making out a primâ facie case. It will I think be necessary to hold a departmental enquiry by Government in order to verify the various statistics which the honourable mover has quoted, with a view to ascertain whether in the interest of efficiency in the administration any readjustment of the existing division of Khandesh for revenue and judicial purposes is desirable. Government cannot of course accept the proposal to appoint a committee to enquire into this matter. I do not think that the House would accept the procedure of Government by committees. It is an expensive thing and leads to delay in deciding administrative problems. The case made out by the honourable mover is one which will receive the careful attention of Government. I assure the honourable mover that Government propose to hold a departmental enquiry to ascertain all the facts and to see if any action is required in the direction indicated. I hope the honourable mover will withdraw his resolution on this assurance.

Rao Bahadur S. D. GARUD: I beg leave of the Council to withdraw my resolution.

Resolution by leave withdrawn.

Sardar V. N. MUTALIK (Deccan Sardars and Inamdars): Sir, I do not propose to move my resolution re revision of survey settlements in alienated villages after the assurance given by the Honourable the Leader of the House, to a question of mine on the subject.

Mr. S. T. KAMBLI (Dharwar District): Sir, I beg to move the following resolution:

"This Council recommends that steps be taken to appoint three probationers to the posts of mamlatdars in the Southern Division of the Bombay Presidency this year from qualified non-Brahmins."

Sir, in the budget as was presented to this Council during the February and March session of the Legislative Council on page 124 of the Blue Book, there was in item No. 2, a provision for entertaining three probationers for the upper branch of revenue service for the Southern Division. When that item came up for discussion, the honourable member for Western Sind, Mr. B. G. Pahalajani, moved for the omission of the item. When that item was taken up for discussion the honourable nominated member for Satara opposed the motion for omission, and the honourable member for Western Sind, Mr. B. G. Pahalajani, asked for leave to withdraw his motion, and the motion was withdrawn, with the result that that item was allowed to stand part of the budget. But, Sir, since then so many months have passed and no steps have been taken for the entertainment of three probationers for the post of mamlatdars in the Southern Division. Sir, looking to the number of posts held by Brahmins and non-Brahmins in this important branch of the Revenue Department in the Southern Division, it will be seen that, though the percentage of population of the Brahmin community to non-Brahamins is in a ratio of 5 to 95, the ratio of appointments held by Brahmins and non-Brahmins in this particular branch of service bears no proportion to the population. In fact, the preponderating element in this important branch of public service is Brahmin. The result has been, so to say, the monopoly of these posts by the Brahmin community, which is numerically very small. The only way to remove this inequality is by making direct appointments to these responsible posts from qualified non-Brahmins, as is done in Sind in the case of Mahomedans with regard to the appointment of mukhtiarkars. The direct appointment to posts of mukhtiarkars from qualified Mahomedans has restored a healthy equilibrium in Sind. So, I beg to submit to this House that a similar healthy result would follow in this important branch of public service in the Southern Division, if my resolution is adopted. The mamlatdars carry a large amount of influence with the villagers. The persons holding these posts are invested with powers to do good or evil. The village population mostly consists of non-Brahmins. There is hardly a house or two of Brahmins in any particular village. So, these posts of mamlatdars should be, according to the ratio of population, held by a majority of non-Brahmins, if the good of the rural areas is to be taken into consideration. I need not, in moving this resolution, refer to the effects of monopoly of service by any particular community. When the villagers have got any grievance, if they happen to go to mamlatdars—I do not refer to any individual mamlatdars, but it has been the lot in several districts in the Southern Division—their grievances are generally disregarded. Sometimes their grievances are misinterpreted. So, in order that officers may have sympathy for the grievances of the villagers, in order to remove their grievances, I beg to submit that this Council should adopt the resolution which asks for "steps to be taken to appoint three probationers to the posts of mamlatdars in the Southern Division of the Bombay Presidency this year from qualified non-Brahmins." I do not wish that efficiency in the least should be impaired. Sometimes it has been urged that efficiency of administration is the condition or consideration by which an appointment should be made. I do not even for a moment desire that efficiency should be impaired in any way. What I mean is that qulaified non-Brahmins should be appointed. So, on this point of efficiency there is no objection to the resolution being adopted. As I have said, the interests and sentiments and feelings of 95 per cent. of the population ought to be respected. If their grievances are to be remedied, I strongly recommend to this House that this resolution should be carried

[Mr. S. T. Kambli]

Mr. L. J. MOUNTFORD: Sir, since the remarks that I made some months ago in this House, I find there has been a considerabe improvement in those figures, which I believe will satisfy this House. I find in the Southern Division, from the number of candidates, Brahmin and non-Brahmin, there is an increased proportion of non-Brahmin candidates. That, I think, will satisfy the honourable member and this House that there is no cause for a feeling of despair. On my list of recruits or candidates I have 87 Brahmins and I have 33 non-Brahmins. We must consider the fact that it is only in recent years that non-Brahmins have taken advantage of education and come forward, I do not say in adequate numbers but in more satisfactory numbers, to fill the higher appointments in the different departments. But, if the House adopts this resolution to appoint three probationers to the posts of mamlatdars from non-Brahmin candidates, we have, first of all, to consider who should be given the posts. The appointments of mamlatdars are made according to the number of talukas and we cannot increase the number of mamlatdars. We have 5 vacancies on an average a year and under the terms of their employment the direct recruits are entitled to 50 per cent. of the vacancies or 2½ a year. Now, we have 87 Brahmin recruits and we have also 33 non-Brahmin recruits including direct recruits, also waiting for their posts of mamlatdars. If we appoint these three probationers, either they must wait until these 33 non-Brahmin recruits could be disposed of, which at the rate of 50 per cent. of the vacancies, i.e., 2½ a year or so would be in 16 years, or they will take their place and destroy the whole of the chances of these 33 worthy non-Brahmins who are qualified for mamlatdars' posts, to their very great disappointment.

Therefore, I trust this House will not support this resolution, but will leave it to Government to look after the interests of all classes and all castes without giving any preference above those who have the right of expectation and whose prospects are most carefully being looked after by Government and most carefully being looked after by the Commissioner.

Sardar Khan Bahadur A. M. DALAL (Broach District): Sir, I am sorry I cannot support the resolution. I support the policy of Government I have great sympathy with the backward classes, but on principle I oppose every member's asking for special rights for certain classes. If anybody requires special rights in the Northern Division in the matter of these posts, it is the Parsi community, who are in a minority there, and there have not been any Parsi mamlatdars or deputy collectors there. But I do not consider it in order to support my own individual community and would ask for even-handed justice for the people. Our people should not fight every time, in season and out of season, and ask Government to reserve seats for their own individual community. We must work and stand upon our own legs, and if we are qualified, there is no reason why Government will not, in the discharge of their duties in having an efficient administration, appoint those whom they may consider the fittest for the work of administration, due regard being had to the matter of giving representation to all communities. With these remarks, I beg to oppose the resolution.

Mr. B. V. JADHAV: Sir, I beg to support the resolution moved by my honourable friend from Dharwar. I am very sorry, Sir, to have again to refer to the grievances of non-Brahmins, but the social economy of the Central and Southern Divisions has been such that, although very large in the number of population, we are the most neglected portion in the official class. I need not say anything about the causes that have led to the neglect of our people. Our people did not take advantage of education so long, but they are now realising the necessity of educating their young men and the Brahmin-non-Brahmin controversy has been becoming bitterer every day in the districts of the Southern and Central Divisions. The Brahmin officers, with a few honourable exceptions, are doing their best to put down the others, and it is but just that the non-Brahmin officers should increase in number. Up to this time, our claims were not put forth with sufficient emphasis and others got a start before us. But now, when we are offering efficient candidates for the higher services, there is no reason why preference should be denied to us. The condition of the Mahomedans in Sind, Sir, was on a par with the condition of the backward communities in the Central and Southern Divisions. The Mahomedans are in a majority in the province of Sind, but in the ranks of officers the Hindus far outnumbered them, and the Mahomedans saw that it was a great injustice to them. Then Government recognised the justice of their claim and passed a resolution that a certain number of mukhtyarkars should be recruited from among the Mahomedans every year. The pursuing of this policy consistently for a number of years, Sir, has helped to recover the balance and has resulted in amicable relationship among the various classes. We do not ask anything more than that. We have been neglected so long, and we pray to Government that we should be treated with the same kind of leniency with which the Mahomedans of Sind were treated.

[Mr. B. V. Jadhav]

And I am quite sure that if this piece of justice is done to us the interest of the two Divisions will not suffer. We claim preference for our efficient young men. We do not want to ask Government to give posts to candidates who are inefficient or otherwise unsuitable. I repeat that only the efficient ones should be given a preference. If Govenment followed a policy of making a list of candidates of both Brahmins and non-Brahmins and appointed men in proportion to the number of applicants from each class, then years and years and decades will pass away before non-Brahmins in sufficiently large numbers can be expected to get in. The other day the Honourable Minister of Education in answer to a question of mine in this House said that last year 60 vernacular teachers' posts were filled in the district of Satara and although there were 500 efficient non-Brahmins, the deputy educational inspector selected only 35 of them and gave 25 posts to the Brahmin candidates whose number in the population is less than 4 per cent. and who are in the educational service more than 75 per cent. But the deputy educational inspector wanted to favour Brahmins and allotted the posts in proportion to the number of applications. According to the figures supplied by the Honourable Minister of Education there were 350 applications from Brahmin candidates and 500 applications from non-Brahmins and the distrubution was in proportion to the number of the applications from each. If this principle, which may appear very sound to some persons, but which does not appeal to me, of allotting posts in proportion to the number of candidates be followed then good-bye to all our hopes of getting an adequate share in the services of the State. We know that the number of graduates and double graduates and treble graduates belonging to the Brahmin community is so very large that for very many years to come the number of applicants from those classes will far outnumber the candidates from the backward communities and therefore, Sir, I pray to Government to pass a resolution or an order on the lines of a resolution passed in favour of the Mahomedans of Sind. With these words I heartily support the resolution brought forward by the honourable member from Dharwar district.

Mr. G. B. TRIVEDI (Thana District): I congratulate the honourable mover as well as the honourable member who preceded me on the moderation with which they have put forward their claims, and I see a great deal of justification when they say that they demand the same privilege that was given to the Mahomedans in Sind. The Government have recognized this principle for one community, and I feel that Government cannot disallow that resolution or that principle, and cannot in justice deny this demand of the backward classes. But, Sir, as the honourable member, the Commissioner, Southern Division, has put it, if it were a practical proposition I would certainly support it. It is but fair that, if a province is inhabited by 95 per cent. of a certain community, as the honourable mover has said, the people should like that they should have in the administration a greater share than they have at present, and from that point of view the resolution has our sympathy. But as the honourable member the Commissioner, Southern Division, showed, we cannot begin with a clean slate. We cannot dismiss the present mamlatdars; and I think with that assurance he will look to the claims of the non-Brahmin community when the next opportunity occurs. I must, after showing my sympathy with the spirit of the resolution, as it is not a practical proposition, say that the honourable mover will be well advised in withdrawing this resolution. With these remarks I resume my seat.
