FOREWORD

THE following pages have been written not merely with the purpose of recording the journeyings and investigations undertaken by the Royal Statutory Commission. My intention has rather been to provide for those who are interested in the Indian Constitutional Problem material which, together with other available sources of information, I venture to hope will assist them to form opinions upon whatever recommendations may ultimately be submitted to the Imperial Parliament.

I am also anxious to make it clear that in preparing this, my own version of the genesis of the Simon Report, I have not entered into consultation with any of my former colleagues on the Indian Statutory Commission. The responsibility for the statements, views, and opinions expressed therein is mine exclusively.
