ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

As a young girl, I lived in Yugoslavia between the years 1962 and 1964. I went to Yugoslav school and spoke their language, had the occasion to meet several scholars like Prof. Rudolf Bicanic, Prof. Dr. Sonia Bicanic, Prof. Radoslav Katicic, Prof. Gayo Petrovic, Prof. Sveta Petrovic and many others. I did not much understand about all that they were saying from time to time. All I could make out was I was living in a country where something was fundamentally different from ours, where people were bubbling with enthusiasm and striving to build something. I also found that even the Road names and squares like "Socialistike Revolucije" where I was living and "Trg Republike" suggested something different. My young friends also talked to me in a style, which was unknown to me and although they were very cordial to me, I could gather that they stood for something very different in culture, outlook and practice. From the vague impressions that I had at that time gathered they were trying to rebuild their social structure on a new economic system. My several friends belonged to the 'Young Partisan' movement, and they always enjoyed enlightening me on the new wave, their social structure was enveloping.

I remember an occasion of meeting Prof. V.M.Dandekar at a dinner hosted by Prof. Dr. and Prof. Dr.Mrs. Bicanic where the new wave engulfing their economy naturally came up for discussion. Perhaps the germs of this thesis lie in that dialogue, though unconsciously. Later when I took up economics for my study it seemed only natural for me to pursue the interest in the development of Yugoslavia. I was very fortunate in having a teacher like Prof. Dr. Anand Nadkarni, who cultivated my interest in the subject particularly on Yugoslavia. Fortunately for me, the Gokhale Institute of Politics and Economics was on the point of starting the centre for East European Studies and Prof. Dr. Nadkarni suggested that I do my research in this area. The Poona University approved the subject for thesis and finally when the Centre was started I was assigned to Prof. K.K. Dasgupta. Under his able guidance I could gradually grasp the problem and prepare the thesis which I am submitting for my doctorate to the Poona University. I am extremely lucky in having Prof. Dasgupta as my guide. I am so much indebted to him that no words can express my gratitude.

I am equally indebted to Prof. V. M. Dandekar, Prof. N. Rath, Prof. A.S.Nadkarni and the Poona University for permitting me to work on this subject.

The main difficulty in my work was the paucity of books and literature. This was made available to me by the Yugoslav Embassy at Delhi and the Yugoslav Consulate at Bombay. I am very grateful to them and their staff.

(iii)

I must particularly thank Mr. Vladimir Rajh, Mr. Ristic, the Consul General at Bombay and Mr. S. Brelecic, the Trade Commissioner. They have not only helped me in obtaining literature but have also gone through the manuscript and offered their valuable opinions which have been incorporated in this study. I am also grateful to Prof. R. Doctor for helping me in some of the technical matters.

I also take this opportunity to thank the members of the Staff of the Servants of India Society's Library without which I would not at all have been able to complete my work.
