The present study is the outcome of a research project I undertook in the middle of 1957. The difficulties I had to face were immense and the completion of the work was delayed because of the circumstances beyond my control.

The study was made possible because of a Research Fellowship awarded to me in July 1956 for a period of two and half years at the Gokhale Institute of Politics and Economics, Poona, in the Ford Foundation Research Training Unit. I have to express my grateful thanks to the authorities of the Institute for their kindness.

The work was carried out in all its stages under the guidance of Prof. N. V. ^NSovani, Joint Director, Gokhale Institute of Politics and Economics, Poona. I take this opportunity to record my deep sense of gratitude to him for his unfailing courtesy and constant encouragement. It was not merely a pleasure but a privilege to work under him.

I very much regret the loss of the valuable survey records gathered in connection with the present enquiry in the recent floods in Poona. However, this did not affect the progress of the work as the final drafts of the report were already completed by then.
