The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray) : Sir, I lay on the table the information promised in reply* to a question by Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar on the 26th September, 1921, regarding the warrant of arrest against the Khan of Agror :

(i) The warrant issued under Regulation III of 1818 against the ex-Khan of Agror did not apply to his brothers. Up to 1897 the brothers were given separate allowances for their maintenance conditionally on their residing where they were ordered. After 1897, the brothers received shares in the increasing income of the estate, subject to the same condition.

(ii) The wives of the ex-Khan were allowed to join him in exile and his brothers were ordered to live out of Agror and were given separate allowances conditionally on their living where they were ordered, as the Government of India were satisfied that peace in the Agror valley could not otherwise be secured.

(iii) It is not understood what letter of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab is referred to.

(iv) No promise has ever been made by Government that the ex-Khan will be permitted to return to Agror. In 1897, he was distinctly informed that the Government was quite unable to hold out any hopes to him or his family that their exclusion from Agror or from the actual possession of their former lands was intended to be other than perpetual.

(v) (a) The 'settlement' of the valley was ordered by the Regulation of 1891 but was not completed till 1903.

(b) The relations between the British Government on one side and of the Haasanzaïs and Akazai tribes on the other are for the moment satisfactory, but as recently as 1920, these tribes attacked British territory and extensive military operations were with difficulty avoided.

(vi) The question of permitting the ex-Khan to return to Agror has been most carefully considered at frequent intervals by the Government of India and it has been deemed inadvisable to permit such return for the following reasons :

* Vide Legislative Assembly Debates, Volume II, page 989.

Our relations with the Black Mountain tribes are always liable to be disturbed and have frequently been so during the last few years. The return of the ex-Khan would stimulate all the forces of intrigue and unrest, and would undoubtedly disturb the peace of the border.

Secondly, the inhabitants of the valley would be greatly perturbed at the return of the ex-Khan with the prospect of coming again under his exacting and despotic rule after enjoying for the last 20 years a reasonable and sympathetic administration under the regular revenue authorities.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

INDIA ARMY RESERVE OF OFFICERS IN THE UNITED PROVINCES.

1. *Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: (1) Will Government be pleased to state if India Army Reserve of Officers, who were temporarily employed in the United Provinces during the war on recruiting work, were considered to be (a) on military service or on civil duties, and (b) if the former, whether Civil Surgeons and Assistant Surgeons, permanently or temporarily re-employed, who examined recruits for Indian regiments and Labour Corps for War Service, in addition to their own duties, are shown as having performed paid military service?

(2) Will Government be pleased to state if India Army Reserve of Officers and their Assistants on recruiting work, during the period of the war who did not proceed overseas or to the North-West Frontier, or any other area of hostilities, received medals, gratuities or any other allowances in addition to their pay?

(3) If so, do Government propose to sanction the same to officers mentioned in (1) (b)?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (1) (a). Officers of the Indian Army Reserve, employed in the United Provinces or elsewhere during the war on recruiting work or other military work, were considered to be on military service.

(b) When no military medical officer is available, the examination of recruits forms part of the duties of Civil Surgeons and Civil Assistant Surgeons, and their partial employment of such work is not considered to be military service.

(2) Officers of the Indian Army Reserve and their assistants, who were employed on recruiting work during the war, received the pay and allowances authorised for the appointments they held, as well as any gratuities admissible under the rules in force for officers of the Indian Army Reserve; the grant of war medals to these officers was governed by the general rules applicable to officers of the Indian Army Reserve.

(3) As regards the officers mentioned in part 1 (b) above, the grant to them of war medals was regulated by the same rules as applied to Recruiting Officers and Assistant Recruiting Officers. They were not eligible for the gratuities and allowances referred to above. The Government see no reason to alter the rules.

RAILWAY CONCESSION TO LIEUTENANTS AND CAPTAINS OF BRITISH AND INDIAN SERVICES.

2. *Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if Lieutenants and Captains of the British and Indian Services have the concession to travel by rail first class on payment of second class fare, or second class on payment of third class fare? If so, will Government be pleased to state if families of the above officers are included in Form 'E', also the number of servants and the amount of luggage allowed?

(b) Will Government be pleased to state if it is owing to the poor income or pay of the above officers, that half concession has been sanctioned; if so, are Government prepared to sanction a similar concession to retired officers of the Indian Army Department and Indian Medical Department whose pensions may be below Rs. 4,500 per annum, as the cost of living has gone up since pre-war days?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) The use of Form 'E' by Captains and Subalterns of certain British and Indian Services, when travelling at their own expense, only entitles them to travel first class on payment of second class fares. The families of officers are not entitled to the use of Form 'E' and the free allowance of baggage on tickets issued on Form 'E' is 1½ maunds as for a first class ticket. No concessions are allowed in respect of servants.

(b) The relatively low pay which these officers drew was only one of the considerations which influenced the Railway Board in granting the concession.

The Government of India are not prepared to extend the concession to retired officers of the Indian Army and Indian Medical Department.

Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: May I ask a supplementary question, Sir? I would like to ask the Honourable Member in charge of the Department whether families of officers are entitled to travel on Form 'E', or not? And if I may ask another question, why is it that Government refuses this concession to officers of the Indian Medical Department?

Sir Godfrey Fell: As regards the first supplementary question, I have already given an answer: I said that families of officers are not entitled to the use of form 'E'. As regards the second part, I would like to have notice of the question.

Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: May I ask a supplementary question again? I have given notice of this question in the shape in which it appears on the agenda paper to-day, and with your permission, Sir, I would like an answer to that question, if possible, to be given immediately.

Sir Godfrey Fell: I am afraid that I do not quite understand the Honourable Member. I have endeavoured to answer the question as it stood on to-day's agenda. I do not know what the Honourable Member means.

Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: I thank you. I suppose I must now have to submit this question again.

CONDUCTORS AND MILITARY ASSISTANT SURGEONS.*

3. * Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if Conductors and Military Assistant Surgeons on the Employed or Retired Lists are warrant officers, and if the commissions of departmental officers of the Indian Army Department and Indian Medical Department are signed by His Imperial Majesty the King-Emperor of India, or on his behalf by some one else?

(b) If the King-Emperor signs the commissions, do Government propose to direct that departmental officers on the Employed and Retired Lists are not styled or referred to as 'Conductors' and 'Assistant Surgeons' and that necessary corrections be made in Army and Civil Lists?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) With regard to the first part of this question, Conductors of the Indian Army Departments and Military Assistant Surgeons are warrant officers. Military Assistant Surgeons rank as Conductors and Sub-Conductors according to their seniority in the Indian Medical Department. With regard to the second part of the question, the commissions granted to Departmental Officers of Indian Army Departments and to Senior Assistant Surgeons of the Indian Medical Department are issued under His Majesty's Sign Manual and are similar in form to those granted to officers holding combatant commissions. They are signed by two members of the Army Council.

(b) Departmental Officers of Indian Army Departments and Senior Assistant Surgeons of the Indian Medical Department are, by the terms of the commissions granted to them, appointed to be 'Assistant Commissaries' and 'Senior Assistant Surgeons,' respectively, with the Army rank of Lieutenant. These titles, 'Assistant Commissary' and 'Senior Assistant Surgeons,' denote the substantive departmental rank held by these officers, who are correctly described by these titles in Army and Civil Lists. It is not proposed to make any change in these Lists in the method of designating these officers.

PARTICULARS OF STAFF SELECTION BOARD'S EXAMINATIONS.

4. * Rai D. C. Barua Bahadur: Will the Government be pleased to state whether the particulars about the last examination of the Staff Selection Board appeared in any of the newspapers of Assam or Dacca? If not, will they be published in the papers of those provinces when the next examination is held?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The answer to the first part of the question is in the negative, but the Honourable Member's suggestion will be borne in mind at the time of the next examination.

FATHER OF THE SECRETARY OF THE STAFF SELECTION BOARD.

5. * Rai D. C. Barua Bahadur: Will the Government be pleased to say whether the father of the present Secretary of the Staff Selection Board is a Member of the Board?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The answer is in the negative. The question presumably refers, however, to the time when the Secretaryship was held by Mr. R. S. Bajpai, a son of Rai Bahadur Pandit S. P. Bajpai, who is a member of the Board. Mr. R. S. Bajpai only acted as Secretary for a few months from 8th June 1921 to 16th October 1921 and the appointment is now held by another officer.

DISCONTENT IN THE INDIA-RECRUITED BRANCH OF THE INDIAN SERVICE OF ENGINEERS.

6. * Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava: (i) Is the Government aware that there is great discontent and dissatisfaction in the India-recruited Branch of the Indian Service of Engineers on account of the introduction of Overseas Allowance and also the Technical Allowance for the Europe-recruited Branch of the same Service by the Re-organization Scheme of 1920?

(ii) Is it a fact that the India-recruited Engineers all over the country strongly resented this differentiation in emoluments specially the technical allowance, given to one Branch of the Service only and as a protest submitted memorials in August 1920 to the Secretary of State through the proper channel praying for the removal of this distinction?

(iii) Will the Government be pleased to state (a) when these memorials were received by the Government of India, (b) what action has been taken on them so far, (c) whether they have been forwarded to the Secretary of State, (d) if not, what is the cause of delay and (e) when they are likely to be forwarded?

(iv) If the memorials have been forwarded to the Secretary of State, will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of their recommendations?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (i) and (ii). Memorials have been received praying that the technical pay granted to the Europe-recruited branch of the Public Works Department be abolished.

(iii) (a). The memorials were received between September 1920 to July 1921.

(b) and (c). The memorials have been submitted with the Government of India's recommendations to the Secretary of State.

(d) and (e). These questions do not therefore arise.

(iv) The Government of India are not prepared to make any pronouncement in connection with their recommendations to the Secretary of State in the matter.

CHARGES AGAINST ALI BROTHERS.

7. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Will Government please state what were the charges brought against the Ali Brothers and other co-accused in the recent trials at Karachi?

(b) What were the charges proved against them and which disproved?

(c) Is it a fact that the principal charges against them fell through?

(d) Is it a fact that the Advocate-General, Bombay, and the Indian Members of the Executive Council of Bombay gave their opinion against the prosecution?

(e) Is it a fact that the Honourable the Law Member of the Government of India was called into Council at Bombay in connection with this case?

(f) Is it a fact that the prosecution of the accused was sanctioned under the advice of the Honourable the Law Member?

(g) What has the whole case cost the Exchequer?

(h) What fees were paid:

(i) to Mr. Ross-Alston of Allahabad,

(ii) to Mr. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor for Sind, beyond his regular pay,

(iii) to Mr. Parsram Tolaram, Assistant Public Prosecutor?

(i) Is it a fact that any of the prisoners in jail is ill? If so, which?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a), (b) and (c). They were prosecuted under sections 120-B, 131 and 505 of the Indian Penal Code. Bharat Krishna Tirathji was acquitted on all charges and the remaining accused were acquitted on the charges under sections 120-B and 131 and convicted under section 505 of the Indian Penal Code. The prosecution of Mahomed Ali and Shaukat Ali under sections 124-A and 153-A of the Indian Penal Code, respectively, was authorised, but was subsequently withdrawn in view of the conviction of the brothers under section 505.

(d) The Advocate-General of Bombay was consulted on the legal points in the case and he was of the opinion that the prosecution could be successfully instituted. It would be contrary to all constitutional practice to make any statement regarding the opinion of individual Members of an Executive Council.

(e) No. The Law Member of the Government of India had a consultation, subsequent to the issue of orders sanctioning the prosecution, with the legal advisers of the Bombay Government only with regard to the legal points involved.

(f) No.

(g) The Government have no information.

(h) Rupees 16,000 were paid to Mr. Ross-Alston. The Government have no information regarding the fees paid to other Counsel.

(i) The Government have received no information to this effect.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : May I ask a supplementary question, Sir? Could not the information with regard to the cost be obtained by the Government? I gave sufficiently long notice?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Do I understand the Honourable Member to ask what was the cost incurred by the Bombay Government?

Mr. W. M. Hussanally ; Yes.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : If that is the question, then I would suggest, that the Honourable Member should obtain the information from the Bombay Government direct, but if he so wishes, I am quite prepared to write and ask for it.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : I should like, Sir, to have that information here, if possible.

Mr. President : Order, order. The Legislative Council of the province of Bombay exists for that purpose. This Assembly must respect the rights of its sister Legislature.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Is not the action taken under the sections now enunciated by the Honourable the Home Member contrary to the terms of Her Majesty Queen Victoria's Proclamation, which was re-affirmed by Their Majesties King Edward VII and King George V?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : That is a matter of opinion. In my judgment, no action which has been taken is contrary to the Proclamations.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Is it not a fact, Sir, that there is a clear clause in the Proclamation of the Late Queen Victoria that none of Her Majesty's subjects should be prosecuted on account of their religious beliefs?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I am not aware that there is anything in the Proclamations to which the Honourable Member refers which precludes the Government of India from prosecuting for sedition or for other offences against the Penal Code.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Nothing would appear either from the statements made by Mr. Mahomed Ali that there has been a breach of the Penal Code?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Does the Honourable Member mean that there has been no breach of the law? Certainly, the judgment shows there was a breach of the Penal Code.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: May I ask a supplementary question, Sir, arising out of part (i) of the whole question? Will Government be pleased to inform the House if the question of giving treatment to political prisoners different from that which is given to ordinary criminals is under consideration?

Mr. President: I think the Honourable Member must give notice. It does not strictly arise out of the question.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: May I ask another supplementary question, Sir? Was any fee paid to Mr. Ross-Alston from the funds of the Government of India?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I believe that half of the fees paid to Mr. Ross-Alston was paid by the Government of India, but I will verify that point.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: May I know, Sir, how much it was?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I have just told the Honourable Member that Rs. 16,000 was the total fee paid to Mr. Ross-Alston, and the moiety of Rs. 16,000 is Rs. 8,000.

YEARLY EXTRA COST OF THE SIMLA EXODUS.

8. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) What is the yearly extra cost of Simla exodus of the Government of India and all other Departments and offices which visit Simla every year?

(b) What other Departments and offices besides the Government of India migrate to Simla every year?

(c) What is the necessity of such offices and Departments migrating to Simla?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: It is presumed that the question refers only to the Government of India Secretariats and Attached Offices and does not extend to offices such as those of the Punjab Secretariat.

(a) In reply to a question asked by Mr. Beohar Raghbir Sinha last September, the cost of the annual move to and from Simla was stated to be approximately Rs. 3,87,000. The items included in this estimate do not perhaps correspond exactly with the items mentioned in the question. But the figure is sufficiently accurate and the collection of the precise information asked for would involve an amount of trouble which the Government of India are not prepared to take.

(b) A list is being compiled, and when it is ready, I will supply the Honourable Member with a copy.

(c) These offices have to be in constant touch with the Departments of the Government of India to which they are attached and it is essential for efficient working that they should move, in whole or in part, with the Government of India Secretariats.

TELEPHONE CONNECTION BETWEEN SIMLA AND DELHI.

9. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that Simla and Delhi have now been connected by telephone?

(b) If so, at what cost?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a) Yes.

(b) The cost of erecting the circuit was :

	Rs.
Cash	1,48,420
Stores	2,82,611
TOTAL	4,31,031

CURTAILMENT OF GOVERNMENT ESTABLISHMENT IN SIMLA.

10. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Do the Government propose to consider the feasibility of curtailing their establishments in Simla?

(b) Do they propose to consider the desirability of curtailing the number and strength of other Attached Offices and departments visiting Simla with a view to economy?

(c) Are Government prepared to appoint a small Committee of officials and non-officials to go into this question and make recommendations?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a), (b) and (c). It is understood that the question refers to the move to Simla during the hot weather of the Government of India Secretariats and the offices of Departments directly under the Government of India. Government are not at present prepared to consider the suggestions of the Honourable Member, as suitable offices and residential accommodation is not yet available in Delhi.

INDIAN MUSSALMANS AND THE KHILAFAT.

11. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Are the Government aware of the state of feeling among Indian Mussalmans over the Khilafat question?

(b) If so, what steps have the Government taken to advise the Home Government to allay such feeling by settling the Khilafat question to the satisfaction of Mussalmans at an early date?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the replies of His Excellency the Viceroy to the Addresses of the Moslem Deputations which waited upon him recently at Delhi and Calcutta, respectively.

OFFICE HOURS FOR APPRAISERS AND EXAMINERS IN THE KARACHI CUSTOMS OFFICE.

12. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that Government have fixed office hours for Appraisers and Examiners in the Custom Office at Karachi from 9-30 A.M. to 6-30 P.M.?

(b) If so, what are the reasons for these long hours?

(c) Is it a fact that merchants applying for the services of Appraisers between 9-30 A.M. and 10-30 A.M., or between 5-30 P.M. and 6-30 P.M., on overtime cannot get them on the ground that those hours are duty time for those officers?

(d) Are merchants therefore inconvenienced and have to pay extra fee because appraising cannot be finished before or after duty time now fixed?

(e) Do Government propose to consider the advisability of fixing duty time for the class of servants from 11 A.M. to 5 P.M., as in other offices?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: (a) In 1903, the Government of India, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State and in the interests of the commercial public, fixed the hours of duty for the Appraising and Examining staffs from 9 A.M. to 6 P.M., but empowered Local Governments to vary these hours according to local requirements. The Government of India have no further information as to the practice prevailing at Karachi.

(b) These hours were fixed in the interests of the general public.

(c) and (d). The Government of India have received no complaints that merchants are unable to obtain the services of Appraisers during duty time, nor that merchants are inconvenienced under the present rules.

(e) No.

WORKING HOURS FOR PREVENTIVE OFFICERS.

13. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) How many hours are Preventive Officers expected to be on duty by day and by night?

(b) Will Government consider the advisability of curtailing the hours of their duty looking to the arduous nature of their duties?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: (a) No Preventive Officer is required to work ordinarily more than an average of 9 hours a day or 54 hours a week during the free time from sunrise to sunset. Work in excess of these hours is compensated by the payment of overtime fees.

(b) The answer is in the negative, as no curtailment of the hours of duty of Preventive Officers can be effected without either (1) an increase of establishment which will entail a heavy burden on the public revenues or (2) more overtime work which will impose a prohibitive charge on merchants and shipowners.

OVERTIME RATES FOR APPRAISERS AND OTHERS IN CUSTOMS OFFICES.

14. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) What are the rates for overtime work fixed by Government for Appraisers, Examiners and Preventive Officers in various Customs Offices in India?

(b) What are the reasons for different rates in different places ?

(c) Will Government consider the advisability of assimilating these rates in all Custom Houses ?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : (a) The rates for overtime work fixed by Government for Appraisers, Examiners and Preventive Officers vary from port to port according to the nature of the services and the time when they are required (e.g., on ordinary working days or on holidays). It is therefore not possible to give the information required by the Honourable Member in detail.

(b) and (c). The rates in force have been imposed to meet local conditions. The question of securing uniformity in regard to such rates in all ports is already under the consideration of the Government of India.

PASSENGER SHEDS ON PLATFORMS ON THE NORTH-WESTERN AND BOMBAY, BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAYS.

15. Mr. W. M. Hussanally : (a) Is it a fact that only few stations on the North-Western and Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railways have passenger sheds on platforms ; and, in consequence, passengers are exposed to the inclemency of the weather ?

(b) Will Government consider the advisability of gradually building such sheds at all important stations ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) All important stations on the North-Western and Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railways have passenger sheds on or adjoining the platforms.

(b) It is not considered necessary to provide covered accommodation on the platforms at road-side stations in addition to that provided in the waiting sheds. The provision of additional covered accommodation depends upon funds being available.

RAISED PLATFORMS ON THE KOTRI-ROHRI LINE.

16. Mr. W. M. Hussanally : (a) Is it a fact that there are no raised platforms on the Kotri-Rohri line on the North-Western Railway ?

(b) Will Government be pleased to consider the advisability of making raised platforms on this line for the benefit specially of women and children ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) No. There are raised platforms at 10 out of the 28 stations between Kotri and Rohri, North-Western Railway.

(b) The remaining 18 stations on this section have rail level platforms. Raised platforms are only provided at stations where the volume of traffic justifies their adoption and as funds are available.

REFRESHMENT ROOMS FOR INDIANS ON THE NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

17. Mr. W. M. Hussanally : (a) How many refreshment rooms for Indians are there on the North-Western Railway ?

(b) Will Government consider the advisability of providing all important stations with such refreshment rooms ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) There are seven Muhammadan and eight Hindu refreshment rooms on the North-Western Railway. In addition, a dining car runs by 17 Up and 18 Down trains for the convenience of Muhammadan and Hindu passengers travelling between Delhi and Lahore.

(b) The question of providing additional refreshment rooms at Samasatta and Rohri is under consideration, otherwise it is considered that the existing facilities are sufficient for present needs.

PAY OF PREVENTIVE OFFICERS AT KARACHI.

18. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Will Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that in the reorganization scheme of the Preventive Officers at Karachi the pay of Preventive Officers has been fixed at Rs. 120—10—300?

(b) Have the existing incumbents of the posts been allowed to reckon the whole of the substantive service as Preventive Officers for the purpose of increments in the time-scale?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state if the Appraisers and Examiners will be given the same concession?

(d) If the reply is in the negative, will Government be pleased to state reasons?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: a) and (b). Yes.

(c) and (d). The proposals of the Local Government are still under the consideration of the Government of India.

PROMOTIONS FOR APPRAISERS AND EXAMINERS.

19. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that Appraisers and Examiners have been recommended by the Local Government for a maximum of four promotions only although their service may be 20 years?

(b) If the reply is in the affirmative, will Government be pleased to state if the recommendations by the Local Government were based on the recommendation of the Telegraph Committee?

(c) Have the recommendations of the Telegraph Committee been given effect to in the case of telegraphists?

(d) If the reply is in the negative, will Government be pleased to state what recommendations have been made by the Local Government and what is the reason of their not recommending Appraisers and Examiners for as many increases in their length of service as in the case of Preventive Officers?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: (a) Presuming that the Honourable Member's question refers to the Karachi Custom House, the answer is in the negative. Part (b) of the question therefore does not arise.

(c) The Honourable Member is referred to the Resolution of the Government of India in this Department No. 1629, dated the 30th April, 1920, which was published in the Gazette of India.

(d) Does not arise.

APPRAISERS AND EXAMINERS AT KARACHI.

20. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that Appraisers and Examiners at Karachi have (all but one) risen from ministerial to non-ministerial posts?

(b) Is it a fact that if these men are not allowed a promotion for every year's service and not allowed to count $\frac{1}{3}$ rd of their total ministerial service for such promotion, they will not be able to rise to the maximum?

(c) Is it a fact that there is a great discontent among them on account of the scheme submitted by the Local Government for the sanction of the Government of India?

(d) If the reply is in the negative, will Government be pleased to state what the facts are?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : (a), (b), (c) and (d). The Custom House establishment is under the administrative control of the Local Government and the Government of India have no information on the subject.

REVISION OF PAY OF THE BOMBAY CUSTOMS HOUSE AND THE KARACHI STAFFS.

21. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally : (a) How many times have the pay and prospects of the staff of the Bombay Customs House been revised since 1912?

(b) How many times have the pay and prospects of the staff in Karachi been revised during the same period?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : (a) The pay and prospects of the staff at the Bombay Custom House were revised in 1914 and in 1920-21.

(b) The pay and prospects of the staff at Karachi were revised in 1911. The Preventive Staff was again revised in 1920 and the question of revising the pay and prospects of the other branches of the office is now under the consideration of the Government of India.

FREE QUARTERS FOR PREVENTIVE OFFICERS AT KARACHI.

22. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally : (a) Is it a fact that Preventive Officers at Karachi are provided with free quarters, while those who are not given quarters will be given house-rent?

(b) What rent is proposed for them?

(c) Will that amount secure a decent house in Karachi suitable to their status in life?

(d) Will Government be pleased to give the reasons why no house-rent allowance is given to Appraisers and Examiners?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : (a) Yes.

(b) The amount allowed is 10 per cent. of their pay. There are no fresh proposals on the subject.

(c) The Government of India have no information on the point, but I would point out to the Honourable Member that the concession is not intended to cover the whole cost of renting a house.

(d) It is necessary for administrative reasons that Preventive Officers should live near their place of work. The same necessity does not arise in the case of other branches.

TIME-SCALE PAY FOR CLERKS IN THE KARACHI CUSTOMS HOUSE.

23. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally : (a) Is it a fact that clerks in the Karachi Customs have not been recommended for the time-scale of pay, i.e., one promotion for every year's past service?

(b) Is it a fact that the clerks in the Post Office have been given this concession?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state why it is proposed to treat clerks of the Karachi Custom House differently from the clerks in the Post Office, both being Imperial Departments?

(d) Are Government aware that according to Appendix A of Government of Bombay, Financial Department, Circular No. 438, dated the 25th June, 1920, the pay of all clerical establishments in Karachi except Postal Department is based on the scale now framed as below:

Those getting Rs. 37-8-0 now will get Rs. 45 in the scheme.

Those getting Rs. 51 now will get Rs. 59 in the scheme.

Those getting Rs. 59-8-0 now will get Rs. 60 in the scheme.

Those getting Rs. 68 now will get Rs. 70 in the scheme?

(e) If it be so, have the Government noticed that many of them will get under the scheme less than what they now draw inclusive of their allowances?

(f) Are Government aware that the cost of living in Karachi is greater than in Bombay?

(g) Are the Government aware that as the pay and prospects of the clerical establishment in the Custom House are not attractive, qualified men do not join the Department, with the result that more than half the staff is non-qualified?

(h) Are the Government aware that the mercantile firms offer better pay?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: (a) and (b). Yes.

(c) The conditions of service in the two Departments are essentially different.

(d) to (h). The Government of India have no information.

DISCONTENT AMONG INDIAN AND ANGLO-INDIAN EMPLOYEES OF THE KARACHI APPRAISING DEPARTMENT.

24. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Are Government aware that the proposals regarding the Appraising Department sent by the Local Government have created a strong discontent among the Indian and Anglo-Indian employees of the Department?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: If the Honourable Member refers to the Karachi Appraising Department, the answer is in the negative.

ONE CADRE FOR APPRAISING AND PREVENTIVE SERVICES.

25. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that while the highest pay proposed in the Appraising Department is Rs. 725, that in the Preventive service is Rs. 500 only?

(b) Will Government consider the advisability of joining the two services into one cadre for purposes of promotion and prospects, so that the men might have more rapid chance of rise and to the same extent?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: (a) Yes.

(b) Government do not consider it desirable to join the two services into one cadre, as the nature of the work involved and the qualifications of the officers concerned in each case are essentially different.

UNIFORM SCALE FOR PREVENTIVE SERVICE IN CALCUTTA, BOMBAY AND KARACHI

25. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that the work of the Preventive Service in Calcutta, Bombay and Karachi is similar?

(b) If so, what are the objections to having a uniform scale for all these places?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: (a) Yes.

(b) The obvious objection to having a uniform scale is that in fixing such scales, allowance must be made for differences in local conditions and cost of living.

RECRUITMENT OF PREVENTIVE OFFICERS.

27. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that according to the recent orders of the Government of India the Chief Collector has been authorized to recruit Preventive Officers on a starting salary of Rs. 160, but those officers who are already in the Department cannot be given a start of Rs. 160 by him, although he may like to do so in the case of deserving officers?

(b) Have any new recruits been taken on Rs. 160? If not, why?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: (a) Yes. The higher initial pay of Rs. 160 is given to a new recruit only when his age, standing or experience warrants the concession. The Collector of Customs has power to allow existing incumbents to reckon the whole of their substantive service as Preventive Officers for the purpose of increments in the time-scale.

(b) The Government of India have no information on the point.

TRANSFER OF THE CANTONMENT AREA OF HYDERABAD.

28. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Since how long is the question of the transfer of the Cantonment Area of Hyderabad for the removal of the City congestion been pending before the Government of India?

(b) Is it a fact that Sir Horace Mules (then Mr. H. C. Mules), Collector of Hyderabad, first mooted it in 1903?

(c) Is it a fact that the Honourable Mr. F. G. Pratt (when Collector of Hyderabad) took up the question again in 1911 and submitted two schemes for the removal of congestion which were approved of both by the Bombay Government and the Government of India?

(d) Did the Government of India then offer certain lands to the Municipality which they declined?

(e) If so, what were the terms offered to the Municipality and what were the reasons of the Municipality for refusing the offer?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) The first definite proposal for the transfer of the Cantonment to another site was made to the Government of India in 1918.

(b) Sir Horace Mules, when Collector of Hyderabad, addressed the President of the Hyderabad Municipality in 1903 with regard to the congestion prevailing in the city of Hyderabad, but he did not suggest the removal of the Cantonment as a means of relieving the congestion.

(c) The Honourable Mr. Pratt, when Collector of Hyderabad, submitted a scheme for the relief of the congestion in the City of Hyderabad (Sind) in 1908. In doing so, he referred to the suggestion that the Cantonment should be removed and stated that this had been found to be impracticable. His scheme, which fell under two divisions, was generally approved by the Government of Bombay.

The Government of India were unable to accept the proposals as they stood, but offered to assist the Municipality in various ways.

(d) and (e). Yes, subject to certain conditions. The Municipality were offered the land free of charge for 30 years, and at the end of that period were to have the option of buying the land outright as revenue-free property, or to retain it at an annual rental. In the event of the Municipality deciding to purchase the land, the purchase value was to be made up of its value in its undeveloped state, calculated on the amount for which the land could then be acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, omitting the 15 per cent. payable under the Act for compulsory acquisition, plus the value of the land revenue assessable at the end of the 30-year period capitalised on the basis which might then be in force for the capitalisation of land revenue. If, however, the Municipality decided to retain the land at an annual rental, the rent payable would be composed of an interest charge, at a rate not less than that at which the Government might then be raising money, on the value of the land in its undeveloped state as defined above, plus the land revenue assessable from time to time.

The Municipality refused these terms, on the ground that the Ganjo Takar site and the other scattered areas of unoccupied land lying on the outskirts of the town had been subsequently found to be unsuitable, either because their development would be very expensive or because their extent was too small. The Municipality considered that the cession to them of the site at present occupied by the Cantonment offered the only satisfactory solution of the question of the expansion of the City.

REMOVAL OF THE HYDERABAD CANTONMENT.

29. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally : (a) Did a deputation of the Hyderabad Municipality wait upon His Excellency the Governor of Bombay at Karachi in March 1921 and urge the removal of the Hyderabad Cantonment ?

(b) If so, what reply was vouchsafed them ?

(c) Did the Hyderabad Municipality solicit permission to send a deputation to His Excellency the Governor General in connection with the removal of the Hyderabad Cantonment about October 1921 ?

(d) If so, what was the reply ? Did His Excellency receive the deputation ? If not, why not ?

(e) What are the objections to the removal of the Cantonment to another locality ?

(f) Is it a fact that the Municipality has offered to recoup Government with all expenditure that may be incurred ?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) and (b). The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to part (a) of the reply given on the 21st September last to Question No. 423 asked by Mr. Shahani.

(c) and (d). The Government of India understand that the Hyderabad Municipal Committee asked for permission to send a deputation to His Excellency the Viceroy about August 1921, but that the Bombay Government informed the Committee that the proposed deputation would serve no useful purpose as the Commissioner in Sind had then been asked to consider in all its aspects the question of the transfer of the Cantonment to a new site, in consultation with the local civil and military authorities, with a view to arriving at an early settlement of the problem.

(e) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to part (d) of the reply given on the 19th September last to his Question No. 284 and also to part (b) of the reply given to Question No. 423 asked on the 21st September last. Stated briefly, the objections are, firstly, that the present site of the Cantonment is suitable and convenient ; secondly, that there is no other site in the neighbourhood which would meet the requirements of the military authorities ; thirdly, that military considerations do not permit of the removal of the troops to another station.

(f) The Government of India have no information on the subject.

COMMITTEE FOR THE REMOVAL OF THE HYDERABAD CANTONMENT.

30. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally : (a) Are Government prepared to appoint a small Committee consisting of representatives of the Military, the Civil authorities and the Municipality to decide the question of the removal of the Hyderabad Cantonment finally within the next six months?

(b) If not, will Government state when they are likely to finally settle this question ?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) and (b). The Government of India are not prepared to appoint a Committee of the nature suggested by the Honourable Member, as it has now been definitely decided to drop the proposal to remove the Cantonment of Hyderabad (Sind) from its present site.

ELIGIBILITY OF INDIAN BOYS FOR VACANCIES IN THE LOCO. AND OTHER DEPARTMENTS OF THE OUDH AND ROHILKHAND RAILWAY.

31. * Haji Wajihuddin : (i) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to a notice of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway at page 21 of The Pioneer of 24th July, 1921, advertising an examination for filling vacancies for Firemen in the Loco. Department, open to European and Anglo-Indian boys not under 15 and not over 17 years of age ? If not, will the Government kindly look at it and be pleased to state if Indian boys are similarly eligible for a similar examination or not ? If they are, will the Government be pleased to mention the paper in which it was advertised ? If not, why are Indian boys not eligible ?

(ii) Have the Government seen a notice of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway at page 21 of The Pioneer of 24th July 1921 advertising an examination for filling vacancies in the Loco., Carriage and Wagon and Electrical Departments open to European and Anglo-Indian boys between the ages of 15-17? Is a similar examination open to Indian boys? If not, why not?

(iii) Are the Government prepared to admit Indian boys to the examinations mentioned in the preceding parts if they are not eligible already?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (i) Indian youths have not hitherto been advertised for as the requisite number of Indian firemen has been obtained by recruiting from the cleaner class of the running shed staff. The question of obtaining educated Indian apprentice firemen by examination is, however, being looked into; in the past, there has been no evidence that youths of this class would be willing to undergo the needful training in firing.

(ii) and (iii). Practical training is given by the Railway to Indian mechanical apprentices from the United Provinces Government Technical Schools and a joint scheme for providing an up-to-date technical school in the vicinity of the Locomotive Workshops is being considered in conjunction with the Local Government. Indian mechanics are thus being catered for separately and there is no necessity to open the examinations in question to Indians.

RELIGIOUS OBJECTION TO PHOTOS FOR PASSPORTS BY MUHAMMADAN VISITORS AND PILGRIMS TO EGYPT, ETC. ●

32. Haji Wajihuddin: (a) Is it a fact that under the Passport Rules Muhammadan visitors and pilgrims to Egypt, Mesopotamia and other foreign places, except Hedjas are bound to provide half-tone photos when applying for such passports, which are affixed to the passports?

(b) Does the Government know that such practice is highly objectionable for Muhammadans on religious grounds?

(c) Will they kindly take early steps to have this grievance removed on religious grounds?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray): (a) The Honourable Member's question seems to be based on a misapprehension. Entry into a foreign country is regulated not by the Government of India's Passport Rules, which relate to entry into India only, but by the rules and regulations of the foreign country concerned. Passports are now demanded on entry by most foreign countries, and among these the insistence on a photograph for purposes of identification, as in India, is almost universal.

(b) The Government are aware that prejudice on this score still lingers among certain Mussalmans, but the increasing resort to photography seems to show that it is fast dying out, especially among the class to which most would-be travellers belong. As the Honourable Member is doubtless aware, the Government have secured special exemption for pardahnashin ladies travelling to certain countries, and have made an express provision in their Passport Rules for the exemption of pardahnashin ladies travelling from those countries to India.

(c) The Government have no means of controlling the Passport regulations of other countries, nor do they propose to make any representations on the subject. For even if they could secure the desired modification in favour of Mussalmans, which is very doubtful, it could only be at the cost of the introduction of other regulations not merely more elaborate and harassing but also invidious.

“INDIANISATION” OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

33. * Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the scheme, if any, which they have framed for the “Indianisation” of the Indian Army?

Sir Godfrey Fell: The Government of India have under consideration a scheme for the Indianisation of the commissioned ranks of the Indian Army. They have not yet arrived at any conclusions on the subject regarding which they are in communication with the Secretary of State, and they are not prepared to lay any papers on the table.

ALLEGED BURNING OF MOPLAH HOUSES.

34. * Mr. Mahmood Schamnad Sahib Bahadur: Is it true that several Moplah houses in Tirurangadi and other places in the martial-law area have been burnt by the military and the police?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Moplah houses have on occasion been burned as a military operation.

EVACUATION OF VILLAGES IN ERNAD AND WALWANAD.

35. * Mr. Mahmood Schamnad Sahib Bahadur: Is it true that the authorities in Malabar had ordered the evacuation of most of the villages in Ernad and Walwanad even as early as September last and the swelling of the number of refugees is due to that order?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: It is not true that the authorities in Malabar have ordered the evacuation of most of the villages in Ernad and Walwanad. Actually orders in an opposite sense have been issued.

COMMITTEE ON THE MALABAR TRAIN TRAGEDY.

36. * Mr. Mahmood Schamnad Sahib Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that all the Members of the Committee appointed to inquire into the Malabar train tragedy have been taken from the martial-law area?

(b) If so, will Government state the reason for this?

(c) Is Mr. Knapp as Special Commissioner for Malabar responsible for the administration of martial-law in Malabar?

(d) If so, why has he been made President of the Committee?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I would refer the Honourable Member to the statement made by the Honourable Sir Lionel Davidson in the debate which took place in the Madras Legislative Council last week. This debate was reported in the Madras papers of the 14th December.

TRANSFERS OF GENERAL SCALE TELEGRAPHISTS.

37. * Mr. Mahmood Schamnad Sahib Bahadur: (a) Is it a fact that many long transfers were, of late, made of general scale telegraphists in CIVIL GUARDS.

41. * Mr. K. Ahmed: Are the Government aware that a body of persons called Civil Guards, composed of some Indians as well, alleged to be law-abiding citizens, have offered their services for keeping peace and order in the country, with the approval of the Government?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The answer is 'Yes'.

TRANSFER OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE CONTROL OF ADEN.

42. * Mr. K. Ahmed: (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table all the correspondence passed between them and the Aden Chamber of Commerce and others concerned, with regard to the transfer of the Administrative Control of Aden from the Government of India to the Colonial Office or to the Egyptian Government as the case may be, including all others, they have had hitherto with the Secretary of State for India as well?

(b) Is it a fact that the Aden Chamber of Commerce and some others as well, are under the impression that Aden should be transferred to the Egyptian Government?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to state in full the attitude of the original and permanent residents of Aden with regard to the transfer or otherwise severance of connection with India? Do they want to remain under Arab or Egyptian Government or keep connection with the Government of India?

(d) Is it a fact that Aden was all along politically a part of British India and under the Governor of Bombay and most of the Arab Chiefs along the Coast of Aden are under the political control of the British Government? Will the Government be pleased to state in full the religion, literature, art and other notable features, historical and geographical, of the majority of the original residents of Aden?

(e) Do Government propose that Aden should remain under the Government of India as it has hitherto been, considering the situation, the literary, historical, religious, racial and social importance of the people and residents of Aden?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Saprú (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray): (a) Copies of the correspondence with the Aden Chamber of Commerce and other public bodies are laid on the table. His Majesty's Government were duly apprised of the debate and Resolution in the Council of State last September on the subject. As their answer is still awaited, it would not be in the public interest to lay the correspondence with His Majesty's Government on the table.

(b) The answer to the question, as it stands, is 'No'. But the wording is obscure, and I am in some doubt whether the question, as it stands, is really the question the Honourable Member meant to put.

(c) The answer, so far as Government are aware, emerges from the papers I lay on the table under (a).

(d) If by 'all along' the Honourable Member means the years from 1839 onwards, the answer is 'Yes'. As to the latter half of the question, he will, I trust, pardon me if I express my inability to give a full statement of the religion, literature, art, and other notable features, historical and geographical, of the original residents of Aden. But if by 'original' he means the Arabs, I shall be happy to refer him to standard books of reference on the religion, history, literature, art, and so forth, of the Arab race.

(e) I would refer the Honourable Member to my answer under (a).

Telegram dated the 5th March 1921.

From—The Vice-Chairman, the British Indian Colonial Merchants' Association, Bombay.

To—{ (1) The Private Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy.
(2) The Secretary to the Government of India in the Department of Commerce.

The Committee shocked at the announcement said to have been made by the Premier on 28th February that Indian Government will have no footing at Aden. This news has caused great resentment and irritation to Indian merchants generally. The Committee strongly protest against the policy of the Imperial Government in trying to dismember Aden Administration from the Indian Government without obtaining the views of Indians and presumably of the Indian Government as well, although from the beginning and up to now for many many years Indian Exchequer and Indian enterprise have borne heavy costs for its administration and development. The Committee request Government of India to take immediately effective steps to prevent this dismemberment and to appease the public mind in time. Addressed Private Secretary to the Viceroy, Viceroy's Camp; copy delivered Registrar, Private Secretary to the Viceroy, Delhi.*

No. T.-628, dated Bombay, the 17th March 1921.

From—J. K. MEHTA, Esq., M.A., Secretary, the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau, Bombay.

To—The Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign and Political Department.

It has come to the notice of this Chamber that Aden is to be transferred from India to the Colonial Office. The local Colonial Merchants' Association has also sent a telegram of protest to the Government of India, a copy of which they have sent to my Committee. My Committee will be much obliged if you kindly let them know if it is a fact that Aden is to be transferred to the Colonial Office, in which case my Committee beg to raise a strong and emphatic protest. The Times of India Year Book observes in its issue of 1920 that the Aden Settlement was until 1918 subject politically to the Government of Bombay, but it has now been handed over to the Foreign Office. Any elucidation of the present position of Aden will be much appreciated.

No. 479-E.B., dated Delhi, the 5th April 1921.

To—{ (1) The Vice-Chairman, the British Indian Colonial Merchants' Association, Bombay.
(2) J. K. MEHTA, Esq., M.A., Secretary, the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau, Bombay.

With reference to your [1] telegram to the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy and the Secretary to the [2] letter No. T.-628, dated the 17th March 1921, Government of India in the Department of Commerce, dated the 5th March 1921, I am directed to state that the question of the transfer of Aden betrays the Indian merchant when he believes in the good intentions of the Government. We may here mention that as a result of the Great War, the British Colonies have been allotted certain territories and Islands belonging to the enemies, while in the case of India she is being robbed of the territories which her people have brought and developed for the British Empire. Such treatment will naturally tend to shatter all their belief in the talk of India's equal partnership in the British Commonwealth and the full citizenship of the British Empire.

It will not be out of place to point out here that the landed estates of the Indian Merchants at Aden are enormous and the Indians have settled down and have made that country as their land of adoption. The Indians settled there, have so much built up their trade that they at present command the major portion of the Red Sea Ports business, and for this object some of the great Firms have established their Head Offices at Aden since a number of years.

We also beg to point out here, that the British Europeans scarcely form a part of the population and they are merely temporary residents carrying on trade as Shipping and Coaling Agents; and it was these few who were instrumental in passing the Chamber's resolution, probably under the same belief that the administration was being transferred to the Government of Egypt.

Lastly, we think it our duty to bring to Your Excellency's notice a rumour that is afloat that even if the administration of Aden be transferred to the Colonial Office, the military expenditure of the country and, furthermore, the naval expenditure on the port of Aden, will wholly or to a great extent fall on the Indian Treasury we are sure the Government of India will not only protest against and resent any such proposal, but, on the other hand, will demand a share of the present and future military and naval expenditure from the Colonial and the Imperial Treasury as this gateway is and will be maintained for the safety of the Empire. It is our firm belief that under any circumstances the civil administration of Aden can safely and fairly be kept under the Government of India, even if the military and naval administration be transferred to the Imperial Government, but we make bold to point out, that as suggested in Esher Committee's Report if the Commander-in-Chief of India is going to have direct communication with the Imperial Staff, then there is not the slightest reason for snatching away Aden from the Government of India. We therefore request the Government of India to publish the conditions under which the administration is proposed to be transferred to the Colonial Office.

In conclusion, we pray to Your Excellency who is upheld as the model of British justice and fairplay and who has been specially sent here to govern this country justly and to satisfy the aspirations of the Indians, that Your Excellency's Government will strongly put forth the Indian case and advocate the Indian point of view in the Imperial Councils of the British Empire and will thus prevent the transference of an important seat of commerce which was up to now developed at the cost of the Indian Exchequer and by the Indian people.

We beg to subscribe,

Your Excellency's most obedient servants,

We have the honour to bring the following to your favourable consideration.

We, the Indian and Arab merchants, trading at Aden, supported the Chambers' Resolution for transfer of Aden to the Colonial Government simply under the belief that the Government had decided to transfer Aden to the Egyptian Government and we preferred

As you are shortly proceeding to Egypt, we respectfully urge that our views be placed before the responsible authority.

We therefore earnestly trust, the Government of India will be pleased to publish the full conditions under which the administration is proposed to be transferred to the Colonial Office.

In conclusion, we pray Your Excellency who are regarded as a model of British Justice and Fairplay and who have been specially sent here to govern this country justly and to satisfy the aspirations of the Indians, that Your Excellency's Government will strongly submit the Indian case and advocate the Indian point of view in the Imperial Councils of the British Empire and will thus prevent the transference of an important seat of commerce which up to now has been undoubtedly developed at the cost of the Indian Exchequer and by enterprise, patient industry and capital of the Indian people.

Extract from a copy of the Resolutions for transmission to the Secretary of State passed at a meeting of the Council of the Western India National Liberal Association on the 20th August, 1921, Bombay.

TRANSFER OF ADEN.

The Council of the Western India National Liberal Association consider the contemplated transfer of Aden from the Indian Government to the Colonial Office as detrimental to the interests of India on political, administrative and financial, grounds. They strongly support the representation of the British Indian Colonial Merchants' Association to His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council on this subject and urge on the Government of India and the Secretary of State for India the continuance of the status quo in regard to the civil and political administration of that port, not merely because Indians have played a great part in the development of it and constitute over one-fourth of its population, but also because of its strategic and political importance to India for own defence when she attains her full Dominion status within the British Commonwealth.

Dated the 29th August 1921.

From—FAIZ B. TYABJI, Esq., for Self and Co-Secretaries, Bombay Presidency Association,

To—The Secretary to the Government of India in the Foreign and Political Department.

I beg to enclose a copy of a Resolution passed by the Council of the Association at its meeting held on the 24th instant in connection with the transfer of Aden to the Colonial Office, and trust that the Government will pay due consideration to it.

The Council of the Bombay Presidency Association beg strongly to oppose the contemplated transfer of Aden from the Indian Government to the Colonial Office, as being distinctly detrimental to the interests of India and of the Indians settled in Aden and the country around Aden who have played a great part in its development and constitute over one-fourth of its population. The transfer is opposed on political, administrative, financial and strategic grounds. The Council need not dilate on these grounds as the same are more fully stated in the representation of the British Indian Colonial Merchants' Association to His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council on this subject and which the Council entirely endorses. The Council therefore respectfully but strongly urge on the Government of India and the Secretary of State for India, that the civil, military and political administration of Aden be continued as heretofore.

No. 180, dated Bombay, the 2nd September 1921.

From—The Honorary Secretaries, British India Colonial Merchants' Association Bombay,

To—The Private Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy.

We have the honour to inform you that our Association has submitted some time back a representation to His Excellency the Viceroy through the Governor of Bombay, regarding the contemplated transfer of administration of Aden to the Colonial Office.

We beg to bring to your notice that the most influential bodies in Bombay, representing various interests and shades of opinion have all with one voice protested against this proposed transfer as detrimental to India on political, administrative and financial basis; this clearly be seen from the copies of the resolutions passed by the Bombay Presidency Association, the Western India National Liberal Association, the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association, the Reform Conference and the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau.

Our Association is pained to find that the Government had not taken special steps to ascertain the views of the Indian trading community concerned, as is evident from the reply which the Right Honourable Mr. Montagu gave to Sir T. Bennett in the House of Commons; and, therefore, our Association begs to put its most emphatic protest against the handing over of Aden to the Colonial Office without consulting the views of those who have played a great part in its development and who contributed over one-fourth of the population. My Association is further grieved to find that the Indian public is utterly kept in dark by the Government regarding the financial clauses under which the transfer is to be made; and judging from the speech made by the Secretary of State for Colonies, while moving a vote to the Colonial Office in the House of Commons on the 14th July, 1921, my Association is under the belief that this transfer would involve heavy Military expenditure and that India will have to bear tremendous financial burden for maintaining a fortress of first-class consequence to India.

Our Association therefore hopes that His Excellency the Viceroy will be pleased to consider the case from the Indian point of view, after ascertaining the opinion of the Indian Commercial Community in particular and the public in general. We may point out to you, in this connection, that the Government have not even taken the consent of the Indian Legislative Assembly.

In conclusion, my Association prays that His Excellency the Viceroy will not perpetrate an act of grievous injustice and inequity by allowing this transfer and thus will not be a party in creating another contested problem as in British East Africa, as it is sure to follow the transfer in spite of the assurance of the Secretary of State for India that 'the Government accepted without reservation the condition of the Government of India that its transfer should in no way impair the interests and status of Indians who should receive precisely the same treatment as other subjects of His Majesty'. We fervently hope that His Excellency, during the present state of the country and under his just régime, will act in the best interests of the Indian Empire.

Extract from the House of Commons' Report, 14th July, 1921

DURING A DEBATE ON THE COLONIAL OFFICE VOTE.

Mr. Churchill.— There is another possibility of a reduction of expenditure in Aden. The India Office has very kindly handed Aden over to the Colonial Office, and my acceptance of the gift has only been delayed by the financial negotiations, because India has hitherto paid a great part and I certainly should not be serving the interest of the British Tax-payer if I assumed the whole burden without any of the funds which are necessary to maintain a fortress of first-class consequence to India, but I hope for a happy solution; in fact, I think, that in a very few days we shall have reached an agreement. And the moment that Aden is transferred to the Colonial Office, it will be possible to amalgamate the administration of Aden and Somaliland. Somaliland and Aden are really the most happy marriage that could be made. They are really necessary to one another. The high ground, five or six thousand feet high, in Somaliland will afford a hill station to which the British soldiers in Aden under the most trying conditions all through the summer could go company by company in one night's journey across the sea to Somaliland. You could not have a more harmonious minor proposition, and if this amalgamation be carried out in such a way as to effect, perhaps a saving of £200,000 to £300,000 a year in the reduction of Military expenditure, it will repay the trouble which it takes to arrive at such a conclusion.

Copy of the messages sent by Mr. Jehangir B. Petit on behalf of the Council of Imperial Indian Citizenship Association, to the Secretary of State for India and the Government of India.

'The Council of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association strongly protests against contemplated transfer of Aden from India Government to Colonial Office, London, and prays that Aden should continue to be administered as at present by Bombay Government.'

'The Council of Imperial Indian Citizenship Association strongly supports protest of British Indian Colonial Merchants' Association against transfer of Aden from India Government to Colonial Office, London, and prays Aden should continue to be administered as at present by Bombay Government,' 5th July 1921.

Copy of the Resolution passed by the Council of the Western India National Liberal Association at a meeting held on the 20th August, 1921, under the presidency of the Honourable Sir D. E. Wacha.

'The Council of the Western India National Liberal Association consider the contemplated transfer of Aden from the Indian Government to the Colonial Office as detrimental to the interests of India on political, administrative, and financial grounds. They strongly support the representation of the British Indian Colonial Merchants' Association to His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council on this subject and urge on the Government of India and the Secretary of State for India, the continuance of status quo in regard to the civil and political administration of that port, not merely because Indians have played a great part in the development of it and constitute over one-fourth of its population, but also because of its strategic and political importance to India for her own defence when she attains her full Dominion status within the British Commonwealth.'

Copy of the Resolution passed by the Bombay Presidency Association.

'The Council of the Bombay Presidency Association beg strongly to oppose the contemplated transfer of Aden from the Indian Government to the Colonial Office, as being distinctly detrimental to the interests of India and of the Indians settled in Aden and the country around Aden who have played a great part in its development and constitute over one-fourth of its population. The transfer is opposed on political, administrative, financial and strategic grounds. The Council need not dilate on these grounds as the same are more fully stated in the representation of the British Indian Colonial Merchants' Association to His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council on this subject and which the Council entirely endorses. The Council, therefore, respectfully but strongly urge on the Government of India and the Secretary of State for India that civil, military, and political administration of Aden be continued as hithertofore.'

Extract from letter No. T-989, dated the 16th June, 1921, from the Secretary, Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau, to the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India, Simla.

I am directed by my Committee to say that they strongly support the representation sent by the British Indian Colonial Merchants' Association to His Excellency the Viceroy, through His Excellency the Governor of Bombay, dated the 15th May, 1921.

Copy of the Resolution passed by the Reform Conference held in Bombay under the auspices of the National Home Rule League on the 30th August, 1921, Mrs. Besant presiding.

'This conference considers the contemplated transfer of Aden from the Indian Government to the Colonial Office as detrimental to the interests of India on political, administrative and financial grounds. It strongly supports the representation of the British Indian Colonial Merchants' Association to His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council on this subject and urges on the Government of India and the Secretary of State for India the continuance of the status quo in regard to the civil and political administration of that port not merely because Indians have played a great part in the development of it and constitute over one-fourth of its population, but also because of its strategic and political importance to India for her own defence, when she shall have attained her full Dominion status within the Indo-British Commonwealth.'

TRANSFER OF ADEN TO COLONIAL OFFICE.

A copy of the undermentioned paper is forwarded to the Foreign and Political Department:

Extract from a letter from the Deccan Sabha, Poona City, dated the 2nd October, 1921.

Extract from a letter from the Deccan Sabha, Poona City, dated the 2nd October, 1921.

I am desired to forward for your information the following two Resolutions passed at a recent meeting of the Council of the Deccan Sabha:

'In view of the very large Indian interests created in Aden since its conquest in 1839 by an officer deputed by the Government of Bombay, the Council of the Deccan

Sabha protests most emphatically against the proposed transfer of its administrative control from the Government of India to the Colonial Office and trust that the step, fraught as it is with far-reaching consequences to the well-being of the people composing the Settlement, will not be carried out without consulting the wishes of the people concerned and giving the Indian Legislature an opportunity to examine it in all its bearings.

QUESTIONS IN THE VERNACULAR.

43. * Mr. K. Ahmed: In view of the fact that the Members of this Assembly can take part in the debate of a Resolution or a Bill in their vernacular language commonly spoken by them, will the Government be pleased to state whether they can put in the vernacular questions starred and unstarred in this Assembly including the supplementary question they may desire to put arising out of any question or questions and the answers of such questions of this Assembly? If the answer is in the negative, will the Government be pleased to explain the principle and reasons of such refusal?

Mr. President: The procedure which governs questions is under the sole control of the President. I therefore propose to answer this question. Rule 14 declares that the business of the Assembly shall be transacted in English provided that the President may permit any Member unacquainted with English to address the Assembly in a vernacular language. I interpret this rule as meaning that Members unacquainted with English may put their questions, including supplementary questions, in the vernacular. Up to the present moment, I have not yet considered it necessary to issue instructions in this matter. If any specific need for such instructions arises, I am prepared to take steps to meet it.

COUNCIL SECRETARIES WITH KNOWLEDGE OF THE VERNACULARS.

44. * Mr. K. Ahmed: Do Government propose to appoint Council Secretaries qualified to interpret the vernacular languages used by the Members and thereby facilitate the business of the House?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I invite a reference by the Honourable Member to the provisions of section 43-A of the Government of India Act. The appointment of Council Secretaries is a matter to be decided by the Governor General and is not a business of the Governor General in Council.

GHUTTIYARI SHERIFF STATION OF THE EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.

45. * Mr. K. Ahmed: Are the Government aware that at Ghutiyari-Sheriff station on the Canning branch of the Eastern Bengal Railway line the platform is much lower than the foot-board of carriages and it being the pilgrim station many people, specially the females, find great inconvenience in alighting from the train?

(b) Do the Government propose to give proper warning to the local authorities to supervise their work duly, so that in case any step is to be taken for improving the station platform or otherwise wanting in any other stations, may report on the subject in order that the inconveniences of the passengers may be removed?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) Ghutiyari-Sheriff station has a medium height platform 1'—2" above rail level. The lower foot-board of the passenger carriages is generally level with the platform and no special difficulties are experienced in alighting from trains.

(b) No special action is thought necessary.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Is it not a fact that there is no raised platform and the ladies going there are not helped to alight?

If that answer is in the affirmative, I am very thankful to the Honourable Member. But if it is in the negative, I ask for a definite answer.

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: I have nothing to add to what I have already said.

MALDA RAILWAY STATION.

46. * Mr. K. Ahmed: (a) Are the Government aware that Malda Railway station on the Eastern Bengal Railway line is situated far away from the town of Malda, the District Headquarter across the river Mahananda, and that near the station on the road leading to the town there are jungles from where tigers come out and attack passengers going to and coming from the railway station?

(b) Is it a fact that owing to their long-felt grievances of the people of Malda, frequently memorials are being made to the authorities and the Governor of Bengal?

(c) Do the Government propose to take immediate steps and relieve the passengers and the people of Malda of the great danger and inconvenience, by either removing the railway line near the city or clearing the jungles and bridging the river to help the passengers going to and coming from the railway station?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) The railway station at Malda is situated at a distance of about 1½ miles from the town, the Railway Administration has received no reports of any passengers having been attacked by tigers.

(b) Government are not aware of any memorial about the so-called long-felt grievances having been received by the railway authorities, or the Governor of Bengal.

(c) It is not possible to shift Malda station from its present site. The clearing of the jungle along the road and the bridging of the river are matters which concern the District Board and not the Railway.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Has the Government, Sir, inquired of the Local Government? Are the Government in a position to answer that question without making any inquiries?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: No.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Will the Government be pleased to do that?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: I don't think it is the business of the Government.

Mr. K. Ahmed: To start with, the railway has been stationed in the middle of the jungle. The railway authorities will do nothing and the people are being eaten up by tigers. May I ask an answer to my question, Sir?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : I have already explained to the Honourable Member that there have been no reports of any passengers having been eaten by tigers and the Government are not aware of any memorials having been sent in.

Mr. K. Ahmed : I repeat the same question again; Sir. Has the Government taken the trouble to inquire into the matter whether anybody has been eaten up or not? Is not there any jungle on both sides of the station which is situated unnecessarily too far from the town of Maida?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : If the Honourable Member will give us a specific case, I am quite prepared to inquire.

Mr. President : Order, order. The Honourable Member must be aware that there is a Standing Order which prescribes that those who make statements in their questions must make themselves responsible for the accuracy of them.

Mr. K. Ahmed : I am quite responsible, Sir. I know the facts and I am asking on that responsibility. Without having made any inquiries with regard to the question, how can the answer be given by the Honourable Member in charge?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : I just want to say, Sir, that if Mr. Kabeer-ud-Din Ahmed will quote to us any specific instance of any man having been eaten up by a tiger, we are quite prepared to go into the matter.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Will the Government be pleased to make inquiries with regard to the jungles, Sir, situated on the road leading to the station?

Mr. President : I drew the Honourable Member's attention to the Standing Order which imposes on the Member asking the question the responsibility for the accuracy of the statements made in his question. I ask the Honourable Member to consider the meaning of that Standing Order in relation to the questions which he has just been asking.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri : May I ask Mr. Kabeer-ud-Din Ahmed, who comes from Malda, if he can undertake to shoot the tigers going about the station or scare them away?

Mr. K. Ahmed : I am neither the Chairman of the Railway Board nor any high officer of the State Railway, and I am not responsible for that.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION FOR CHAPAI, NAWABGANJ, ETC.

47. * Mr. K. Ahmed : (a) Are the Government aware that the people of Chapai, Nawabganj and Kansat, specially the merchants as consignors and consignees of goods and parcels at the stations of Amnura and Rahanpur on the Eastern Bengal Railway, are under great disadvantage and inconvenience for a long time for the want of telegraphic communication, the above mentioned railway stations being far away from the localities?

(b) Is it a fact that for a long time complaints are being made and memorials were sent to the Government of Bengal on the subject without any result?

(c) Do the Railway Department propose either to remove these stations at some suitable places, advantageous to the people, or confer with the Telegraph Department to consider the desirability of joining those important places by telegraphic communication ?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) Both Amnura and Rahanpur railway stations are open to the public for receiving telegrams.

(b) The Government of India are ~~not aware~~ that any complaints or memorials on the subject have been sent to the Government of Bengal.

(c) It is not possible to shift the stations from their present sites but the desirability of opening telegraph offices in the towns referred to in (a) of the Honourable Member's question will be considered.

TRANSFER OF A VILLAGE FROM BIHAR AND ORISSA TO BENGAL.

48. * Mr. K. Ahmed : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state whether a memorial signed by over 500 of the residents of the village within the Police Stations Rajmahal and Barharwa in the District of Santal Parganas in Bihar and Orissa Province has been received by the Government ?

(b) Do the Government propose to transfer the area under these two police stations to the Province of Bengal immediately ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) A copy of the memorial has been sent to me personally, but the memorial has not been sent officially to the Government of India.

(b) Government do not propose to take any action until the memorial is transmitted by the Local Government.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Will the Government of India be pleased to forward those memorials to the Local Government to make necessary inquiries ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : I have explained that a memorial on this subject is, I believe, being sent by certain persons through the Local Government to the Government of India, and we are awaiting receipt of that memorial from the Local Government. In the meantime, an advance copy has been sent to me by name because I am supposed personally to be interested with the areas. We are at present awaiting the receipt of the memorial from the Local Government with the opinion of that Government on the proposal and I believe that this is the proper and reasonable course.

Mr. K. Ahmed : I am very much obliged for this satisfactory answer, Sir.

COSTS OF THE TREATY WITH AFGHANISTAN.

49. * Mr. K. Ahmed : Will the Government be pleased to state in full and lay the particulars on table as regards the exact amount of the costs of the treaty with Afghanistan from the beginning to end, date by date, which Sir Henry Dobbs, his committee, the Government of India and others have incurred from the Indian Exchequer ?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (on behalf of the Honourable Mr. Denys Bray) : From December 18th, 1920, when the Kabul Mission assembled at Peshawar, up to the end of December, 1921, the total cost of the Kabul Mission including the estimated cost of such items for which final charges have not yet been presented but excluding the telegraph material which is to be presented to the Afghan Government amounted to Rs. 3,85,594. It will not be in the public interest to lay the particulars date by date on the table.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Will not the public realise the situation and appreciate the answer of my Honourable Friend, if date by date the items of expenditure are given ?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru : I have already stated that it will not be consistent with the public interest to answer that question.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

INDIAN APPRENTICES IN THE JAMALPUR RAILWAY WORKSHOP.

1. Rai G. C. Nag Bahadur : (a) With reference to clause (b) of Question No. 157 asked by Mr. K. C. Neogy on the 15th September last, and the answer given by Colonel Waghorn, will Government be pleased to state whether the Indian apprentices, while entering the Jamalpur Railway Workshop, are at liberty to use the gateway hitherto used by European and Anglo-Indian apprentices ?

(b) Do Government propose to issue definite instructions to this effect ?

(c) With reference to the answer to clause (d) of the said question, do Government propose to consider the desirability of adopting the method of payment in vogue in the case of the Indian apprentices in the case of the European and Anglo-Indian apprentices as well, in view of the merits of the said method as stated by Colonel Waghorn in the said reply ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) and (b). It has been ascertained that there is no objection at all to Indian apprentices of the special grade and 1st class using the gateway referred to. In fact some of them do already.

(c) The matter is not one for Government to consider. The Railway Company is at liberty to arrange for the disbursement of the pay of their staff in such manner as they see fit. Payments are usually made in the manner considered most suitable and expeditious in regard to the class and numbers of staff to which they are applicable.

APPOINTMENT OF THE HONOURABLE MR. C. A. INNES TO THE VICE-ROY'S EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.

2. Rai G. C. Nag Bahadur : With reference to Government of India Home Department, Notification No. 2128, dated the 10th September, 1921, appointing Mr. Charles Alexander Innes, C.S.I., C.I.E., to be a temporary Member of the Council of the Governor General of India in the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Honourable Sir Thomas Holland, will the Government kindly state whether seniority in service or other reasons have determined the choice of the authorities in making the temporary arrangement ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The gentleman named in the question was appointed to the post because in the opinion of the Governor General in Council his appointment was in the public interest.

RATIONS FOR INDIAN SOLDIERS.

3. Sardar Gulab Singh : (1) Is the Government aware :

- (a) That the issue of gur for making tea to Indian soldiers of some non-silladar regiments is objected to except as emergency rations ?
 (b) That the Indian soldiers are dissatisfied with the supply of impure ghee at present ?

(2) Has Government considered the question of having regimental management for the supply of ghee in such regiments as desire it ?

(3) Is it a fact that in boards for matters about rations the Indian officers are not sufficiently represented ?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (1) (a) Gur is issued as a standard ration for Indian troops except :

- (1) During some of the hot and moist months of the year when sugar is issued as a substitute, and
 (2) When sugar is cheaper than gur.

Experience has shown that gur is readily acceptable.

(b) Government are not aware that the Indian soldiers are dissatisfied with the ghee supplied. The greatest care is taken to obtain ghee of pure quality and the strictest tests are applied before it is passed as fit for issue to Indian troops. The price of the ghee supplied to the Indian troops has averaged about Rs. 112 per 100 lbs. for the past 12 months.

Complaints are rarely made, and if made are invariably attended to.

(2) Yes. It is undesirable, however, from the point of view of the Indian soldiers' health and physique, that regimental arrangements should be made for the purchase of ghee.

When, as a temporary measure, a money allowance was allowed in lieu of ghee it was found that the ghee purchased by the troops in the Bazaars was impure, often adulterated as much as 40 per cent., and possessing in many cases little or no food value. This entailed loss to Government who were getting a relatively small return for the money.

With a ghee supply supervised as at present the State receives full value for the money spent and the individual soldier a pure and wholesome article of food. Careful control and scientific tests cannot in practice be effectually enforced under any system whereby units purchase their own ghee.

(3) Boards presided over by a medical officer and on which Indian officers are represented are provided for in Army Regulations.

(i) These boards are assembled under the orders of the Officer Commanding Station, and in practice one Indian officer of each of the classes of men by whom the rations will be consumed is included on the boards.

(ii) The Officer Commanding any unit (advised by Indian officers in all cases where necessary) is required to reject any apparently unsatisfactory supplies tendered to his unit.

(iii) Indian officers are detailed to accompany Inspectors in the supply service and advise them when inspecting depot stocks.

These safeguards are simple and are found to be effective in practice. They are identical in the case of British, Indian and mixed units.

EDUCATIONAL STANDARD FIXED BY THE STAFF SELECTION BOARD FOR WAR-SERVICE CANDIDATES.

4. Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal : (a) Is it a fact that the condition of minimum educational qualifications fixed by the Staff Selection Board for outside candidates to appear at their examination for 1st Division of the Secretariat and attached offices was relaxed in the case of certain candidates with war services ?

(b) If so, was there any public announcement made to this effect to enable all concerned to avail themselves of the privilege ?

(c) If the reply to (b) is in the negative, do the Government propose to consider the advisability of extending this concession to other deserving Undergraduates with war services who passed for the 2nd Division but could not apply for the 1st Division for want of information on the point ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) The answer is in the negative.

(b) and (c). In view of the answer to (a) these questions do not arise.

PROPORTION OF CERTAIN RAILWAY APPOINTMENTS HELD BY SIKHS.

5. Bhai Man Singh : (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the posts of Assistant Traffic Superintendents, Traffic Inspectors, Claims Inspectors on Railways held by Sikhs as compared with Hindus, Muhammadans and Christians ?

(b) Do the Government propose to consider the question of appointing Sikhs (new candidates or those already in service) to these posts ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) A statement giving the information asked for is placed on the table.

(b) It is not possible to make communal distinctions in appointing Indians to the Railway establishments. The most suitable candidates are selected both on first appointment and for promotion subsequently.

Statement showing the posts of Assistant Traffic Superintendents, Traffic Inspectors, and Claims Inspectors held by Sikhs as compared with Hindus, Muhammadans and Christians on the North-Western Railway.

ELECTRIC INSTALLATION IN CANTONMENTS.

6. Bhai Man Singh : (a) Is it a fact that a large electrical installation has been started at Peshawar and smaller ones at Nowshera, Jamrud, Risalpur and Attock, and that a similar installation at Ambala is under construction ?

(b) In what other cantonments have electric installations been provided or started within the past two years ?

(c) In what other cantonments are new installations under contemplation ?

(d) How much money has been spent on these installations and how much more is estimated to be spent ?

(e) How much of this money will be spent in this year ?

(f) Having regard to the assurance given by the Government to keep the military expenditure as low as possible, do the Government propose to order that the expenditure on electric installations and similar luxuries be stopped or deferred till financial conditions improve ?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) Yes.

(b) Small temporary installations have been provided at the Quetta Station hospital ; Rawalpindi hospital and some of the barracks ; Agra hospital ; Fyzabad hospital ; Kohat ; Bannu ; Dera Ismail Khan ; and the Aden hospital and certain other buildings.

(c) A list is laid on the table.

(d) The approximate Capital cost of these electrical installations up to date has been Rs. 55,00,000.

It is estimated that approximately 1½ crores will be required to complete the present electrical programme.

(e) If the scheme progresses as rapidly as is anticipated, the sum expended will be approximately Rs. 8,25,000.

(f) The policy of introducing electrical installations into hospitals, barracks and other regimental buildings was accepted so long ago as 1903, when the Secretary of State for India approved of annual expenditure on the provision of joint electrical systems for lighting and punkah-pulling in large stations. Since that date the policy has been to introduce these amenities into the various cantonments, as far as funds have permitted.

The Army in India Committee, in paragraph 47 of Part V of their Report, emphasised the necessity for better lighting and cooling arrangements in British barracks and, in paragraph 83 of the same part of the Report, advocated the provision of free lighting, on an adequate scale, throughout Indian troops lines. The Government of India are of opinion that it is essential to improve both barracks and lines in this respect, so as to maintain the health and, consequently, the efficiency of the troops, whose health and spirits cannot but be adversely affected by occupying barracks which are ill-lighted and badly ventilated. The importance of having a good electric lighting system in hospitals, both with reference to the comfort of the patients and in connection with operations, etc., cannot be over-estimated.

List of the Cantonments in which it is proposed to install Electricity.

Allahabad; Cawnpore; Lucknow; Sialkot; Rawalpindi; Jullundur; Multan; Agra; Jabulpore; Quetta (lighting only); Bangalore (lighting only); Hyderabad (Sind); Nasirabad; Kampur; Benares; Ahmednagar; Dinapore; Secunderabad; Muttra; Campbellpore; Fyzabad; Rurki; Mhow; Rangoon; Karachi and Poona.

ELECTRIC LIGHTS AND FANS FOR INDIAN TROOPS IN AMBALA CANTONMENT.

7 Bhai Man Singh: (a) Is it a fact that the benefits of the electric lights and fans to be put up at Ambala Cantonment are intended to be confined to the British section of His Majesty's troops and that it is not proposed to extend the same to the quarters and residences of the Indian section of these troops?

(b) Is it further a fact that poles for carrying cables have already been put up in the Staff Road and Mall Road, etc., and has the putting up of poles on other roads of Ambala Cantonment been stopped, and if so, does this mean that the roads occupied by British officers only are to be lighted and they alone will receive private connections?

(c) Has the same scheme of putting up the poles in the British quarters only been adopted in all other cantonments where these installations are started?

(d) Is it not a fact that Indian troops and Indian officers at Ambala have invariably to remain there all the year round and have thus to stand the rigour of the hot weather, whereas the British troops are often sent up to the hills to avoid the heat of the plains?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) The proposals are as stated, except that it is intended to supply the Indian troops hospital with electricity.

(b) The Government have no precise information as to the progress that has been made with the erection of poles in the Ambala Cantonment. All work, however, has been stopped pending the revision of the present scheme for the electrification of the Cantonment.

(c) In the electrification of cantonments the usual practice is to provide electricity in British and Indian hospitals, in British troop lines and in streets. It is not proposed to extend the policy of electrification to Indian troops lines until funds permit.

(d) It is not the fact that Indian officers and other ranks have invariably to remain at Ambala all the year round. The rules permit of Indian officers and other ranks being granted leave liberally during the hot weather months. As regards British troops, a certain number from each unit especially the younger men are, as a rule, sent to the hills for the hot weather months, or a part thereof. The choice of the individuals to be sent is governed by medical considerations.

ELECTRIC INSTALLATION IN THE AMBALA CANTONMENT.

8. Bhai Man Singh: (a) Is the Government aware that there is a great complaint at Ambala Cantonment that pressure is being brought on the proprietors of the bungalows situated in military lines where electricity is to be supplied to have electric house connections therein ?

(b) If so, do the Government propose to issue orders to the effect that the house proprietors are at liberty to have electric house connections or not, and to give broadcast publicity to such orders ?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) The Government of India have no information on the subject. As, however, it is clearly desirable that when electric power is available in a cantonment, privately owned bungalows should also share in the benefits of the scheme, the owners of such bungalows are invited and encouraged to instal electric fittings. When this is done, it is the invariable rule to increase the rent of the bungalow.

(b) The Government do not consider it necessary to issue any orders of the kind suggested.

LAW RELATING TO THE MANUFACTURE OF COTTON THREADS IN BOMBAY.

9. Bhai Man Singh: (a) Is it a fact that there is a law in the Bombay Presidency prohibiting the manufacture of cotton threads of a finer thinness than that of a fixed standard ?

(b) Is there such a law in England ?

(c) If so, are the standards of thinness prescribed by both the laws the same ?

(d) If there is a difference, what is the reason for it ?

(e) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the Act relating to this matter with all amendments ?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: (a) No such law is in existence in India.

(b) The Government of India are unaware of the existence of any such law in England.

2. The remainder of the question does not arise.

SPECIAL OFFICER WITH THE RAILWAY BOARD.

10. Bhai Man Singh: Will the Government be pleased to state :

(a) Has there been a special officer with the Railway Board during the last three years ? If so, on what special duties has he been employed ?

(b) In what way has he improved the system of the railway working and its offices and what savings in the staff (European and Indian) and costs have been effected through him ?

(c) What has been the total cost of the said officer and his establishment during the last three years ?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the suggestions and improvements made by him together with the final orders thereon by the Government ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a), (b) and (c). The Honourable Member is referred to the answer* given by me on the 19th September, 1921, to Khan Sahib Mirza Muhamad Ikramulla Khan on the same subject.

* Vide Legislative Assembly Debates, Volume II, pages 435-434.

(d) The Government do not think it necessary to lay on the table a copy of all the suggestions and improvements made by Mr. Heseltine.

RATES OF FODDER AND FOOD GRAINS IN OTHER COUNTRIES.

11. Bhai Man Singh : (a) Have the Government of India any information about the rates of fodder and food grains prevalent in other countries which grow wheat and other food grains ?

(b) If not, will the Government be pleased to make inquiries in the matter ?

(c) Do the Government propose to consider the advisability of importing food grains from other countries if that could be cheaper taking into consideration the very high prices now prevalent in various parts of India and specially in the Punjab ?

Mr. J. Hullah : (a) and (b). The Government are regularly supplied with information regarding wheat prices. They have also a certain amount of information regarding prices of rice and no further inquiries are contemplated.

(c) As the Honourable Member must be aware, the importation of a large quantity of foreign wheat into India has already taken place. It does not appear that any other food grains largely consumed in India could be imported at prices lower than those prevailing in this country.

MAHARATTA NATIVE COMMISSIONED OFFICERS IN THE MILITARY DEPARTMENT.

12. Mr. K. G. Bagde : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state :

- (i) The number of the Maharatta Native Commissioned Officers—Jamadars, Subadars, Risaldars and Risaidars—serving in the Military Department as combatants ;
- (ii) The number of such officers who have been recommended by the Soldiers' Board for grant of land for their meritorious services in the past war ;
- (iii) The number of such officers, if any, who have been refused such grants only because they happen to be residents of some Native States; and if so, why ?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state :

- (i) The number of Native Maharatta Commissioned Officers who have been given King's Commission—honorary Captainship excluded—eligible for higher rank and pension in the Indian Army ; and
- (ii) The number of the Maharatta candidates selected direct for such commissioned posts ?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) (i) The number of Maharatta Indian commissioned officers serving in the Indian Army on the 1st January, 1921, was 207.

(ii) The number of Maharatta Indian officers who have been recommended by the Indian Soldiers' Board for grants of land on account of distinguished service rendered during the Great War is 93.

(iii) The Government know of no instance in which a Maharatta Indian officer recommended for a grant of land under the special War Reward scheme has been refused such a grant for the reason that he is a resident of a Native State. The latter part of this question does not, therefore, now arise.

(b) (i) Five Maharatta Indian officers have been granted Honorary King's Commissions of the kind described.

(ii) One Maharatta candidate has been granted a permanent King's Commission.

ERECTION OF BUNGALOWS AND A HOTEL IN POONA.

13. Mr. K. G. Bagde : Will Government be pleased to state :

- (a) Whether they have received offers to build bungalows on the Hill, opposite to the Rifle Range, Poona, and a hotel on the vacant plot of ground in front of the Polo Ground, Poona ;
- (b) Whether they will place them on the table ; and
- (c) Whether before accepting these offers they intend to invite offers from the public ?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) Yes.

(b) The Government are not prepared to lay the papers on the table.

(c) The matter is under consideration.

ADDITIONAL EXPENDITURE DUE TO THE ENHANCEMENT OF PAY AND PENSIONS OF GOVERNMENT SERVANTS.

14. Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney : (a) What addition to the annual expenditure of Government has been made :

(i) by increasing the pay and allowances of its present servants in all Departments ;

(ii) by increasing the pensions of certain officials, or classes of officials, who retired after 23rd July, 1913 ?

(b) What reason is there for the recent raising of the pensions of Chaplains, and that, too, with arrears from the 1st April, 1919 ?

(c) Are those who have retired from service and are in receipt of pensions still to be regarded as Government servants, subject to the rules of Government regulating the conduct of public servants ?

(d) Do the Government of India propose to define the position and responsibilities of retired servants of Government and issue such rules as will secure for them suitable positions ?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : (a) (i) The additional expenditure involved in the revision of the pay of the superior civil services in India, whether paid from Central or Provincial revenues, is approximately Rs. 1½ crores per annum. I am unable to furnish information as to the additional cost of revision of pay of all subordinate appointments throughout India.

(ii) From calculations made early last year, the results of which were placed on the table of the House in September last, the additional cost charged to Central revenues on account of increase in pensions paid in India and England to the officers referred to by the Honourable Member, was approximately Rs. 19,100 and £13,200, respectively.

(f) The increase in the pensions of Chaplains on the Indian Ecclesiastical Establishment was sanctioned by the Secretary of State after considering the revised scale of pensions for uncovenanted services in India and with special reference to the revised scale of pensions payable to the Chaplains of the Royal Army Chaplains Department in England.

(g) The Government Servants' Conduct Rules do not apply to pensioners, but under Article 351, Civil Service Regulations, the right is reserved of withholding or withdrawing a pension or any part of it, if the pensioner be convicted of serious crime or be guilty of grave misconduct.

(h) The Government of India see no reason for taking the action suggested. The proposal is in any case one which is primarily for the consideration of Local Governments.

PETITION FROM MR. G. N. NAIDU FOR COMPASSIONATE ALLOWANCE.

15. Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: (a) Is it a fact that the petition of appeal against the order of the Government of Madras (G. O. No. 4-Mis., dated 4th February, 1921, Finance, Persian Department) refusing to grant a compassionate allowance, submitted by Mr. G. Narayanaswamy Naidu, late Receiver, Niladawole and Medur Estates, Kistna District, Madras Presidency, for transmission to the Government of India, was withheld by the Government of Madras, under rule XI (3) of the rules for the submission of memorials to the Government of India?

(b) Is it a fact that thereupon, the said Mr. Narayanaswamy Naidu brought to the notice of the Local Government that rule XI (9) and not XI (3) applied to his memorial and that his memorial came under the exception contemplated by rule XI (9), and yet the Local Government refused to send on the memorial?

(c) Will Government be pleased to call for the memorial and deal with it?

(d) Is it a fact that Mr. G. Narayanaswamy Naidu was on foreign service drawing a salary of Rs. 650 a month and that he was subject to the rules regulating the pensions of the servants of the Government of India?

Mr. J. Hullah: (a) and (b). The answer is in the affirmative.

(c) The Government of Madras were asked in October last to forward the memorial to the Government of India and it is now under consideration.

(d) The answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. With regard to the latter half, Mr. Naidu was subject to the ordinary rules regarding pensions laid down in the Civil Service Regulations.

STAFF SELECTION BOARD EXAMINATIONS AND STANDARD OF QUALIFICATIONS FOR EUROPEAN, ANGLO-INDIAN AND INDIAN CANDIDATES.

16. Dr. Nand Lal: (a) Is it a fact that according to the rules of the Staff Selection Board, European and Anglo-Indian candidates having passed the Senior Cambridge Examination are eligible for the 1st Division of the Secretariat Offices without possessing a University degree which is necessary for Indian candidates ?

(b) If so, do the Government propose to consider the advisability of extending this concession to Indian candidates as well to remove the racial distinction ?

(c) Is it a fact that the total number of marks and position of the passed candidates of the Staff Selection Board has not been made known to them (candidates) ?

(d) If so, do the Government propose to remove this complaint at an early date to enable the candidates concerned to see that due justice is done to their claims according to the relative position secured by them in the examination ?

(e) Is it a fact that travelling expenses were sanctioned for the journey performed by candidates called by the Staff Selection Board for interview at various centres ?

(f) If so, will the Government be pleased to say whether all such candidates were paid this travelling allowance, and if not, why not ?

(g) What steps were taken by the Staff Selection Board to make this concession known to the candidates concerned to enable them to claim the travelling allowance due to them ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) Yes.

(b) The educational qualifications required for Upper Division appointments were fixed provisionally for the purposes of the first examination, and the suggestion of the Honourable Member will be considered by the Staff Selection Board. The distinction was not made on any racial grounds but with a view to secure men with the highest qualifications obtainable for the pay offered from both communities.

(c) The Staff Selection Board's examination was a qualifying and not a competitive examination. Candidates were informed whether they had qualified or failed. They were not arranged in order of merit.

(d) In view of the answer to (c), this question does not arise.

(e) Travelling expenses were only sanctioned by Government in the case of candidates summoned for interview from other provinces.

(f) The total number of candidates paid travelling allowance was seven, representing candidates for interview from Bihar and Orissa, Central Provinces and Assam, which provinces were not visited by the Board.

(g) Any candidate summoned from another province (except those from the neighbourhood of Delhi) was informed by the Board at its interview that he was entitled to travelling allowance. And in most cases the Secretary then and there helped the candidates to fill up the claims.

BOY SCOUT MOVEMENT.

17. Bhai Man Singh : With reference to the question asked by Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda on 30th January, 1920, regarding the Boy Scout Movement, will the Government be pleased to state whether the Circular referred to in the reply given by the Honourable Khan Bahadur Mian Mohammad Shafi, was sent to the Local Administration of the North-West Frontier Province? If not, why not?

Mr. H. Sharp : The reply is in the affirmative.

RECRUITMENT OF HEADMASTERS IN THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.

18. Bhai Man Singh : (a) Is it a fact that the Government contemplated recruiting Headmasters of Kohat and Dera Ismail Khan Government High Schools from military men through Formation Commanders, and that the selection was to be made by the Commander, Waziristan Force, to whom the applications were to be forwarded by the 30th June last?

(b) Were any applications received and the appointments made?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to state the reasons why the selection was not to be made by the Director of Public Instruction, North-West Frontier Province, and why it was thought necessary to be made through the Headquarters, Waziristan Force?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to state when were the grant-in-aid rules first promulgated in the North-West Frontier Province by the Director of Public Instruction?

(e) Have they undergone revision since then, if not, why not?

(f) Did the Director of Public Instruction, North-West Frontier Province, surrender any of his budgetted amount to the Local Administration during the years 1918-19, 1919-20 and 1920-21? If so, how much each year?

(g) What is the amount of grant-in-aid for a primary teacher in the aided schools in the North-West Frontier Province?

(h) Do the Government propose to consider the question of revising the grant-in-aid rules at an early date in view of high prices?

Mr. H. Sharp : (a) The reply is in the negative.

(b) Two applications were received from some military officers about to be demobilised, but they were not eventually submitted to the Government of India as the Secretary of State had in the meantime secured the requisite officers in the United Kingdom.

(c) The Director of Public Instruction, North-West Frontier Province, has no power to make final selections for permanent appointments in the Indian Educational Service. Nor can they be made by any other authority except the Secretary of State.

(d) The grant-in-aid rules in force in the North-West Frontier Province were published in 1913.

(e) The rules in question have not since then been revised for the reason that up to very recently no revision was considered necessary or practical.

(f) The reply is in the negative in so far as the years 1918-19 and 1919-20 are concerned. In the year 1920-21, however, a sum of Rs. 66,000 was surrendered chiefly from the building grants and was devoted to the general revision of the pay of teachers.

(g) Rupees 12 and Rs. 8 per month, respectively, for every trained and untrained teacher in aided primary schools.

(*) Grants for secondary schools, both for maintenance and equipment, are already very liberal, but those admissible in the case of primary schools require some enhancement. The question of amending the grant-in-aid rules relating to the latter is accordingly engaging the local Administration's attention.

INDIANS ON THE STAFF OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA SECRETARIAT.

19. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Is it a fact that out of 647 Indians employed in the Government of India Secretariat, 499 belong to the Punjab and Bengal while only 147 belong to the rest of India?

(b) Do the Government propose to fill future vacancies by appointment of suitable candidates from those Provinces which are not adequately represented having regard to their extent, population and importance, and to send this suggestion to the Staff Selection Board for necessary action?

(c) How many persons belonging to the United Provinces have been recruited to the Secretariat within the last 3 years and given permanent posts?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) Yes.

(b) The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given on the 10th September, 1921, to Mr. J. Ramayya Pantulu's question (No. 72) on the subject.

(c) 12 permanent.

2 provisionally permanent.

1 on probation.

25 temporary or officiating.

UNIVERSITIES IN THE UNITED PROVINCES, PUNJAB AND BENGAL.

20. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: How many Universities are there in the United Provinces and how many in the Punjab and Bengal?

Mr. H. Sharp: There are four Universities in the United Provinces, one in the Punjab and two in Bengal.

KASGANJ-AGRA RAILWAY PROJECT.

21. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Will Government be pleased to lay upon the table all papers connected with the Kasganj-Agra Railway project?

(b) What is the total length of the projected Kasganj-Agra Railway and at what intermediate places between Kasganj and Agra are stations proposed to be constructed?

(c) What is the estimated cost of the Kasganj-Agra Railway project and what is the estimated annual income?

(d) Are the Government prepared to construct the Kasganj-Agra Railway? If so, when?

(e) In case the Government are unable to undertake the construction of Kasganj-Agra Railway at their own cost, are the Government prepared to permit somebody else to do it?

(f) When was the Kasganj-Agra Railway project started and what progress has been made in regard to it?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) The papers connected with the project referred to are very voluminous, and the Government of India do not propose to lay them on the table.

(b), (c), (d), (e) and (f). The project was put forward in 1913 as an extension of the Rohilkund and Kumaon Railway and the line was surveyed in 1914-15. The project report and estimate, prepared as a result of the survey, showed that the line would be 74.70 miles in length and provided for stations at the following intermediate places between Kasganj and Agra:

Nandou.
Anwalkhera.
Bhains.
Khalilganj (Jalesar).
Pondri.
Awagarh.
Bausa.
Etah.
Murthara.
Amanpur.
Babupur.

The line was estimated to cost Rs. 46,61,555 and to yield an annual return thereon of only 4.26 per cent. Under present conditions the cost would be very much in excess of this figure.

The Kasganj-Agra Railway was projected as a metre gauge line, and its construction would be contrary to the Government's policy of restricting the extension of metre gauge railways to certain areas.

DISMISSAL OF HEAD CONSTABLE BISHAMBHAR DAYAL.

22. Mr. B. H. Jatkar: Will the Government of India be pleased to state:

- (a) Whether one Bishambhar Dayal, Head Constable of Delhi Police, who had served for over 16 years, was dismissed from service by the Senior Superintendent of Police, Delhi, on suspicion that he was implicated in a criminal offence, and his appeal to the Chief Commissioner was disallowed?
- (b) Whether the man was put on regular trial in a Criminal Court and was acquitted?
- (c) Whether according to the Police rules and general rules about conduct of Government servants, the Head Constable could not be dealt with departmentally and dismissed even after he was acquitted in a Court of Justice?
- (d) Whether the Government propose to take into consideration his long service and reconsider his case?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Bishambhar Dayal served in the Delhi Police from June 1906 to November 1917.

The order of the Senior Superintendent of Police, Delhi, dated 17th November, 1917, dismissing Bishambhar Dayal from the Force ran as follows :

'H. C. Bishambhar Dayal has been tried and acquitted of the offence of rape. The Magistrate, however, though judicially not satisfied as to the man's guilt, is morally certain that he is guilty. The whole nature of the case as revealed by the evidence is revolting and for a man to have taken advantage of his official position as this man has is a stigma on the Delhi Police. For such as Bishambhar Dayal there can be no extenuating circumstances and no mercy shown. He has violated the trust placed in him and shown that he is not fit to be a police officer.

I order that he be dismissed from the force with effect from 10th November, 1917.'

The man's appeal to the Chief Commissioner was rejected on 3rd February, 1918, and the dismissal confirmed after a careful examination of all the facts of the case.

In the circumstances the Government of India consider the order of dismissal a proper order, and do not propose to reconsider the case.

PASTEUR INSTITUTES IN INDIA.

23. Mr. B. H. Jatkar : (a) How many Pasteur Institutes are maintained in India at Government cost and at what places ?

(b) What is the amount of expenses incurred every year over each of these institutes ?

(c) Are the Government prepared to give those who claim to have devised remedies for rabies proper facilities to go to any such Institution and prove the efficacy of their medicine ?

Mr. H. Sharp : (a) There are no Pasteur Institutes maintained entirely at Government expense. There are, however, four Pasteur Institutes in India which are maintained partly at Government expense and partly by contributions from local bodies, Municipalities, Indian States and private individuals. These Institutes are at Kasauli, Rangoon, Shillong and Coonoor.

(b) The expenditure incurred during the year 1920-21 by Government on these Institutes, as obtained from the latest annual reports, is as follows. (Except as regards Kasauli, the matter does not directly concern the Government of India.):

	Rs.
Kasauli	31,000
Rangoon	20,000
Shillong	57,519
Coonoor	12,000

In addition, the pay of the Directors of these laboratories is met in the case of Coonoor, Shillong and Rangoon by Local Governments and in the case of Kasauli from the Central revenues.

(c) The Government of India are prepared, in the case of the Kasauli Pasteur Institute with which alone they are directly concerned, to give to those who claim to have devised cures for rabies, facilities to prove their efficacy under the following conditions :

- (1) They must produce reliable evidence of actual cure of definite cases of rabies.

- (2) They must cure in the presence of the Director of a Pasteur Institute definite cases of rabies in animals, the person claiming to possess the remedy paying the necessary cost of the trial.
- (3) If the remedy should pass these tests then, before Government can allow it to be tried on human beings, the claimant must declare the composition of his remedy, which, if found to be as stated, will be tried on human beings who agree to try it, and the results will then be published.

WATER TAPS IN GOVERNMENT QUARTERS AT SIMLA.

24. Rai G. C. Nag Bahadur: (1) Will the Government be pleased to state how many water taps have been provided in each unit of the houses for :

- (i) Europeans at the Bemloe and the Park estates in Simla, and at Summer Hill.
- (ii) Indian Clerks at Phagli ?
- (2) Is it a fact :
- (a) That the number of water taps in the existing houses at Bemloe, the Park and Summer Hill has been reduced, while it has been decided to reduce the number of taps in the case of existing quarters for Indian clerks at Phagli.
- (b) That it has been decided not to provide any water taps in those Indian Clerks' Quarters which have been constructed recently ?

(3) If the reply to 2(a) and (b) is in the affirmative, will the Government be pleased to state the reason for reducing the number of water taps in the existing quarters and for not providing taps in quarters recently constructed ?

(4) Will the Government be pleased to state for what reasons it has been decided to reduce the number of water taps in the Indian Clerks' Quarters only and not in the case of houses at Bemloe, the Park and Summer Hill ?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (1) Number of taps provided per units :

(a) (i) Park estate—5 taps.

Bemloe estate—Class A—4 taps.

Class B—4 taps.

Class C—3 taps.

Class D—3 taps.

Summer Hill—4-roomed married quarters } 2 taps in each.
3-roomed married quarters }

(ii) Phagli—2 taps in each quarter, except in those constructed this year where there are none.

(2) (a) Yes.

(b) Yes.

(3) Shortage of municipal water-supply.

(4) (a) One tap was temporarily removed from each of the old quarters at Phagli for the following reasons :

- (i) Shortage of water in Simla.
- (ii) Water consumption in the Phagli clerks' quarters was greatly in excess of the free allowance and it was hoped that the removal of one tap would reduce waste of water.
- (iii) Water was required for the water closets of the new quarters under construction at Phagli, and this was granted by the Municipal Committee on the condition that one tap was removed from existing quarters.

These taps will be replaced when the water-supply improves.

(b) No reduction in the number of taps provided was made in the European Clerks' quarters at Summer Hill as it was decided not to put in water closets or taps in the new quarters under construction, but to provide instead outside stand posts and commodes. The European clerks and the Members of the Council of State and Legislative Assembly quartered out at Summer Hill are therefore much worse off than the Indian clerks at Phagli.

No taps were removed in the houses on the Bemloe and Park estates as building operations were completed on these estates, and as the quantity of water consumed was very little in excess of the free allowance. Had building operations been in progress, some reduction in the number of taps would have had to be made. In any case, no true comparison can be drawn between the clerks' quarters at Phagli and the Officers' houses at the Bemloe and Park estates as they are separately classed and differently rented.

FURTHER RELIEF TO SECRETARIAT STAFF ON THE LINES OF ARMY HEADQUARTERS REORGANISATION.

25. Rai G. C. Nag Bahadur : (a) Is it a fact that in reorganisation of Army Headquarters offices a fixed sliding scale of immediate increase was granted to all members and they were then allotted their respective positions in the time scale. If this is so, will Government be pleased to state whether they intend to grant similar relief to all members of the Civil Secretariat?

(b) Are Government aware that there is discontent among a large number of the staff on account of the high cost of living and of their getting little or no relief in the reorganisation? If so, do Government propose to devise any scheme other than counting the past service which would do away with the many anomalies at present created; and would ensure the extension to all of a uniform rate of increase?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) All members, who were serving in the Army Headquarters offices on the 1st of April, 1920, were given an increase of 20 per cent. on their old rates of substantive or sub. pro tem. pay on that date, and their initial pay on the new time-scale of pay was regulated accordingly, subject to certain provisos. There is no intention at present of giving further improved terms to members of the Civil Secretariat.

(b) Government have received memorials expressing discontent with the revision of pay in the Secretariat. It is not intended to revise the system on which those serving in the Secretariat were brought on to the time-scale, as the improvements recently effected are considered adequate.

HAILEY COMMITTEE'S REPORT ON THE IMPERIAL SECRETARIAT SERVICE.

26. Rai G. C. Nag Bahadur : (a) Will Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the Hailey Committee Report containing the recommendations for increase of salary of the Imperial Secretariat Service ?

(b) Is it a fact that as the result of the introduction of the time-scale, in certain cases, men who had on account of their approved merit earned higher rates of pay, are now made to draw lower rates of pay than their juniors, and that consequently merit, which has always been considered as the chief criterion for advancement, has been ignored ?

(c) If so :

(i) What steps are the Government taking to help such men to retain their seniority in position and particularly in pay ?

(ii) Do Government propose to consider the "next below" rule ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) I will give the Honourable Member a copy of the Report.

(b) and (c). The purport of the question is not clear, but so far as can be judged, no cases of the kind have occurred. An automatic time-scale is bound in certain cases to give more preference to seniority over merit but this tendency is corrected, so far as possible, by the system of an efficiency bar.

DISTRESS IN BURMA OWING TO RISE IN THE PRICE OF RICE.

27. Mr. P. P. Ginwala : (a) Is the Government aware that there is much distress, especially among the poorer classes, in Burma owing to the sudden and excessive rise in the price of rice ?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state whether it proposes to take any, and if so what, action to alleviate such distress ?

Mr. J. Hullah : (a) and (b). Since notice of this question was received there has been a very substantial fall in the price of rice and paddy in Burma, and in view of this fact and of the favourable character of the rice crop in Burma the Government of India decided to remove all restrictions on the export of rice from Burma, with effect from the 13th December, 1921, as announced in their press communiqué of the same date.

MEMORIALS FROM THE POSTAL CLERICAL STAFF FOR A UNIFORM RATE OF TIME-SCALE OF PAY.

28. Mr. Muhammad Faiyaz Khan : (a) Is it a fact that since the announcement of the time-scale of pay, Government have been receiving further memorials from the Postal Clerical Staff throughout India praying for a uniform rate of time-scale of pay, viz., Rs. 60—200 in 18 years ?

(b) Is it a fact that that was the time-scale of pay suggested by most of the European and Indian witnesses who appeared before the Postal Inquiry Committee ?

(c) Does the Government propose to consider the memorials with reference to the scale so suggested ?

(d) Is it a fact that there are different scales of pay and promotion for men and women postal clerks doing the same duties? If so, will the Government be pleased to state the reasons for the distinction?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a) Yes. Some telegrams on the subject have been received from the staff.

(b) A reference is invited to paragraph 4, Chapter II of the Postal Committee's Report.

(c) For the reasons given in paragraph 8, Chapter II of the Postal Committee's Report, Government do not propose to consider the prayer made in the telegrams.

(d) There is a difference in the time-scales of pay, in that the minimum for women is higher and the maximum is reached within a shorter period; but there is no difference in status or as regards promotion. The difference in pay is not confined to the Post Office, but exists in all Departments of the Government of India. The Honourable Member's attention is invited to the Report of Mr. Sharp's Committee issued with Home Department Resolution No. 165-C. of the 29th November, 1916, in which the reasons for offering a higher pay to women are fully explained.

DIFFERENT RATES OF PAY FOR POSTAL CLERKS AND TELEGRAPHISTS.

29. Mr. Muhammad Faiyaz Khan: (a) Is it a fact that the postal clerks and signallers and departmental telegraphists working in one and the same Department, controlled by one D. G., having equal educational qualifications are given different rates of pay?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to state the reasons why the postal clerks and signallers are started on a lower scale of pay?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a) No. The position is not correctly stated.

(b) The matter has been clearly explained in the replies given to part (b) of Rai Bahadur T. Mukherjee's unstarred question No. 5 on the 22nd September, 1921, and to Mr. B. H. Jatkar's unstarred question No. 41 on the 26th September last, to which the Honourable Member is requested to refer.

DISTRESS OF POSTAL CLERKS OF SIMLA OWING TO INCREASE IN PRICES OF FOODSTUFFS.

30. Mr. Muhammad Faiyaz Khan: (a) Is it a fact that the Postal clerks of Simla have been petitioning for an immediate increment in their local allowance from Rs. 25 to 40 per mensem on account of very high cost of living in Simla, and the sudden abnormal increase in prices of foodstuffs?

(b) If so, what steps do the Government contemplate to remove the distress immediately?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a) and (b). Government have received a telegram to this effect. In addition to the sanctioned local allowance, postal clerks in Simla have been granted grain compensation allowance at the rates and under the conditions sanctioned by the Local Government with effect from the 1st August, 1921, on account of the temporary rise in the prices of grain.

EXTRA ALLOWANCE FOR POSTAL CLERKS.

31. Mr. Muhammad Faiyaz Khan : (a) Is it a fact that the departmental telegraphists, in addition to the common local allowance, draw an extra allowance in the shape of house-rent to the extent of Rs. 35 per mensem?

(b) If so, what are the reasons for this concession not being extended to the postal clerks and signallers?

(c) Do not the Government contemplate to extend the concession to them?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) There is no common local allowance for telegraphists. Local allowances are granted at a few frontier posts and remote stations. House-rent allowances are granted to telegraphists where free quarters are not provided, varying according to locality and length of service from Rs. 15 and Rs. 20 to Rs. 30 and Rs. 45 for single and married men, respectively.

(b) Paragraph 22 of the Report of the Telegraph Committee, 1920, states that the efficiency of the service requires that the staff should live in the vicinity of the telegraph office where quarters are procurable only with great difficulty and at prohibitive cost. This concession has not been extended to postal clerks and signallers, because the conditions of the service do not require that they should ordinarily live in the immediate vicinity of the post office.

(c) Government do not contemplate the extension of this concession to postal clerks, but the Director General is considering a scheme for providing quarters for them where necessary.

POSTS FOR PASSED CANDIDATES OF THE STAFF SELECTION BOARD.

32. Babu Braja Sundar Das : (a) Is it a fact that the Staff Selection Board has not been able to provide during this year permanent vacancies for more than 2 or 3 out of the hundreds of its passed candidates and not even temporary or officiating posts for more than half of them?

(b) If the answer to (a) be in the affirmative, will the Government be pleased to say when and how the passed candidates are likely to be provided with permanent posts after probation of one year as promised to them in the preliminary notification of the Board?

(c) Do the Government propose to see that no further examination or recruitment takes place—either direct or through the Board—until all the already passed men have been provided with permanent jobs either in the Imperial Secretariat or in other Government offices?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) No. Full information regarding the number of appointments made up to the 21st December, 1921, is contained in the statement which is laid on the table.

(b) The question does not arise.

(c) A further examination will be held when the number of passed men on the Board's books is inadequate to meet likely demands in the near future.

The rights of those candidates who have already passed the Board's examination will be fully safeguarded.

RECOGNITION OF WAR SERVICES BY THE STAFF SELECTION BOARD.

33. Babu Braja Sundar Das : (a) Is it a fact that there was a column for war services in the Application Form prescribed by the Staff Selection Board? If so, will the Government be pleased to say in what respect preferential treatment was given for military services rendered by the candidates concerned?

(b) Is the Government prepared to reconsider the cases of those men who did not apply for the 1st Division and could not thus be passed in the 1st Division although they had recognised military services and good clerical experience to their credit?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) Yes. Candidates who had approved war service to their credit were granted the concession authorised in paragraph 3 of the Government of India, Home Department, Resolution No. 1099, dated 8th August, 1919.

(b) Special consideration was paid by the Board to those who had rendered military service, and Government think it unnecessary to ask the Board to reconsider individual cases of the kind referred to, if such exist.

IMPROVEMENT IN STARTING PAY FOR THE SECOND DIVISION OF THE SECRETARIAT OFFICES.

34. Babu Braja Sundar Das : (a) Do the Government propose to lessen the difference in the rates of starting pay for the 1st and 2nd Divisions of the Secretariat offices (i.e., Rs. 200 and Rs. 100, respectively)?

(b) Do Government propose to consider the question of raising the minimum pay of the 2nd Division clerks from Rs. 100 to 150?

(c) If the reply to (b) be in the negative, will the Government consider the advisability of appointing a Committee to report on the matter after due consideration of the cost of living of a Secretariat clerk?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) Government consider the difference between the initial pay of the 1st and 2nd Divisions appropriate to the difference in the qualifications required of the entrants to the two divisions.

(b) and (c). Government see no necessity for changing the existing initial rates of pay in the two divisions.

(d) The existing rates of pay were fixed as a result of the recommendations of a Committee which inquired into all the circumstances, including the cost of living, and the appointment of a further Committee is thought unnecessary.

POSITION OF THE SECRETARY OF THE STAFF SELECTION BOARD.

35. Rai D. C. Barua Bahadur: (a) Will the Government be pleased to say whether the present Secretary of the Staff Selection Board is a whole-time officer?

(b) If the answer is in the negative, how much of his time is devoted daily by him for the Staff Selection Board's work?

(c) In case he does not devote any time outside the usual office hours, is he entitled to get any extra remuneration?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) No.

(b) Under the existing arrangement about one hour a day on the average, except when an examination is being held and during the periods immediately before and after the examination.

(c) The officer who performs the duties of Secretary does so in addition to his own work, and Government consider it only reasonable that he should be compensated for the additional work by extra remuneration.

EXEMPTION OF ANY ASSISTANT OR CLERK FROM STAFF SELECTION BOARD'S WRITTEN TEST.

36. Rai D. C. Barua Bahadur: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state whether any assistant or clerk, who has rendered temporary service under the Government of India for the past two or three years without any break and who has rendered field service for one or two years is to be exempted from the written test of the Staff Selection Board?

(b) Has the Board made any such exemption?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) and (b). The answer is in the negative.

DUTIES OF ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF THE CENTRAL BUREAU OF INFORMATION.

37. Rai D. C. Barua Bahadur: (a) Will the Government be pleased to say what work is done by the Assistant Director of the Central Bureau of Information?

(b) Do the Government propose to consider the question of replacing the present Assistant Director by a competent office Superintendent drawing lesser rate of pay than that now drawn by the present incumbent?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: As the title of his office implies, the Assistant Director, Central Bureau of Information, aids the Director in the discharge of his duties, which are now far too heavy for one individual. So far from being merely responsible for office correspondence, as the question suggests, the Assistant Director is in general charge of the relations between the Central and Provincial publicity organisations. He assists in the production of the various publications of the Central Bureau, supervises the Press cutting work, English and Vernacular, and acts as Secretary of the Advisory Publicity Committee. He is in general charge of the work of communicating information to the public departments, as well as to Members of both Houses of the Legislature who may consult the Central Bureau of Information. Government do not think that this work could be discharged by a Superintendent on a lower rate of pay than that enjoyed by the present incumbent of this office.

CLERICAL STAFF IN THE BUREAU OF INFORMATION OFFICE.

38. Rai D. C. Barua Bahadur: (a) Will the Government be pleased to say whether the clerical staff employed in the Bureau of Information Office have passed the Staff Selection Board's examination?

(b) If not, why have they not been replaced by passed men of the Board and why has that particular office been exempted from the examinations of the Staff Selection Board?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) The answer is in the negative.

(b) The Superintendent of the office being a retired official, the question of his passing the examination of the Staff Selection Board does not arise. The stenographer has passed the Board's examination for the 1st Division. The general assistant was appointed prior to the constitution of the Staff Selection Board and has been employed ever since in the office. As there was no question of his qualifying himself for appointment in any other office, it was not necessary for him to take the Board's examination. The typist and the despatcher were engaged, respectively, from the 22nd of April, 1921, and the 8th August, 1921. At that time no clerks passed by the Board were available. No examination of the Staff Selection Board has since been held. They will be required to take the Board's next examination when held. The Section dealing with newspaper work consists of a trained journalist and four assistants who were appointed because of their technical qualifications and therefore were not required to pass the Board's examination under the terms of the Government of India Resolution No. 2366, dated the 15th September, 1920. The official Photographer also falls in this category.

It will thus appear that the office has not been exempted from the operation of the Staff Selection Board.

REVISION OF THE SIMLA ALLOWANCE CODE.

39. Rai D. C. Barua Bahadur: (a) Will the Government be pleased to say when the Simla Allowance Code fixing the Simla House Rent Allowances was last revised?

(b) In case it was done some time ago, does not the Government propose to revise it now on account of the general rise of house rent in Simla?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The existing scale of house rent allowances was sanctioned in 1907. A recent inquiry into the rent actually paid by the clerical establishments indicated that the allowances were on the whole adequate, and Government do not therefore think it advisable to revise the scale.

EXTRA REMUNERATION FOR OVERTIME WORK DONE BY GOVERNMENT OF INDIA CLERKS.

40. Rai D. C. Barua Bahadur : (a) Will the Government please say whether the clerks, assistants, etc., under the Government of India are required to work in the office after 5 P.M., and also required to come to office during the holidays?

(b) If the reply is in the affirmative, will the Government be prepared to allow them extra remuneration according to their pay for such work?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : As regards work after 5 P.M., the Honourable Member is referred to parts xi and xiii of the statement laid on the table in reply to Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's question of the 10th September. Assistants and clerks as well as stenographers are whole-time servants.

The practice as regards holidays is laid down in the Office Memorandum of the 30th September, 1901, of which I lay a copy on the table. Government consider its terms sufficiently liberal, and are not prepared to take up the question of granting extra remuneration to those whose presence on a holiday may be necessitated by a rush of work in any Department.

No. 5411-16.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

PUBLIC.

Simla, the 30th September, 1901.

OFFICE MEMORANDUM.

The undersigned is directed to forward a copy of the letters addressed to the Governments of Bengal and the Punjab, Nos. 5234 and 5236, respectively, dated the 16th September 1901, and to communicate to the Finance Department the principles which should in future regulate the grant of holidays to ministerial establishments in the Government of India Secretariats.

2. The holidays to be given may be divided into four classes. The first two classes are (i) those prescribed by section 25 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 (XXVI of 1881), and (ii) those declared by the local Government by notification under that section to be public holidays. The third class of holidays are holidays announced by the local Government to take effect in Government offices either in respect of all classes of Government servants, or in respect of the class who observe the fast or festival on account of which the holiday is announced. Lastly, there are local or special holidays, such as the Sipi Fair day or the last Saturday of the month.

3. The general rule in respect of the first two classes of holidays mentioned above should be to close an office entirely, subject to the conditions (i) that a holiday notified under the Act may be stopped in the case of any individual guilty of idleness or inattention to duty, unless the day in question is deemed specially sacred by the members of the religion which the offender professes, and (ii) that very urgent work may be required on a holiday provided that a man who has to attend on a holiday shall get another one in its place, and that, if possible, a man of the religious persuasion which observes the holiday shall not be called upon to work on it. In the case of holidays given on account of a local fair such as the Sipi Fair, or on the last Saturday of the month on the ground that the state of the work permits of a holiday, all establishments should be allowed, subject to the conditions laid down in the case of holidays under the Negotiable Instruments Act, to take full advantage of the holiday.

4. On holidays announced by the local Government, the general rule should be to close an office only where the absence of the persons on whose behalf the holiday is given will prevent the work of the office from being properly done. To this rule, an exception should be made in respect of the Christian holidays which should, if possible, be granted to all establishments, whatever their race or creed.

5. As regards the grant of 'notified' or 'announced' holidays, the rule should be to observe the holidays declared in the Calcutta Gazette, while the Government of India are at Calcutta, and those declared in the Punjab Gazette, while the Government of India are at Simla. In respect of the Durga Puja holidays, however, the practice hitherto adopted in some offices, of giving a whole holiday on every Saturday in September and October in lieu of them, should be followed—the Hindus only being allowed additional holidays on the two special Puja days.

In following the list of Hindu holidays published in the Punjab Gazette, it would be advisable, if the same festival is notified on different dates by the Governments of Bengal and the Punjab, to observe the date published in the Calcutta Gazette, as the majority of Hindu clerks in the Secretariats of the Government of India are natives of Bengal.

(6. The undersigned is to request that the substance of the general principles stated above may be communicated to the Heads of offices subordinate

REVISION OF PAY IN THE OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL, INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

41. Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal: (a) With reference to the answer given by Sir William Vincent on 26th September, 1921, to Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer's question No. 237, will the Government be pleased to state the reasons for granting less and in some cases practically no increase to the members of the Office of the Director-General, Indian Medical Service?

(b) Have Government taken any steps to grant them percentage increase to the full extent sanctioned over the amount drawn on 1st April, 1920, and if not, why not?

Mr. H. Sharp: The percentage increases sanctioned by the Government of India for the members of the office of the Director-General, Indian Medical Service, aimed at placing the men on stages of incremental pay which would give them immediate increases not exceeding 30 per cent. of their pay to those drawing Rs. 100 and less a month, 25 per cent. to those drawing pay at more than Rs. 100 but not more than Rs. 200, and 20 per cent. to those drawing more than Rs. 200 a month. The percentage increase was, however, sanctioned generally and could not be applied rigidly in every individual case. The intention was that no one should be allowed by the increase to go beyond efficiency bars unless he would in the ordinary course have passed those bars. In certain cases it was not possible to grant the full percentage increase for the following reasons :

- (a) the increase granted placed the clerk on the maximum of the grade beyond which no promotion was possible at the time ;
- (b) the clerks concerned had to be placed at a suitable stage of the progressive grade and the percentage increase worked out at a lower rate ; and
- (c) the increase was based on the substantive pay and although there was no apparent increase over temporary acting salary there was an actual increase of pay.

REVISION OF PAY IN THE OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL OF OBSERVATORIES.

42. Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal : (a) Is it a fact that the members of the Office of the Director-General of Observatories (Meteorological Department) were granted percentage increase of 20, 25 and 30 per cent. and those with over 20 years' service of 40 per cent. over their monthly average salaries of one year drawn from 1st April, 1919, to 31st March, 1920?

(b) If so, is the reply given by Mr. Sharp, in No. 53, dated the 26th September, 1921, with regard to the 2nd part correct?

Mr. H. Sharp : The reply to (a) is in the affirmative.

(b) The reply given on the 26th September, 1921, referred to the general lines applied in the case of all attached offices. The deviation adopted in the case of the office of the Director-General, Observatories, was intended to meet special circumstances.

TOTAL PENSIONABLE SERVICE OF THE STAFF OF THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL, INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

43. Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal : Will the Government be pleased to state the total pensionable service of each member of the Office of the Director-General, Indian Medical Service, on 1st April, 1920, and the total service at which they will reach the maximum of their grades?

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

TOTAL AMOUNT OF RESERVES AND TREASURY BALANCE.

44. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing :

(1) the total amount of the following reserves and balances up to the 1st of January, 1922 :

(a) Paper Currency Reserve, (b) Gold Standard Reserve, (c) Treasury balances of the Government of India ;

(2) how much of the above reserves and balances are held in England and in India at present and in what form, either as sterling loans or securities, as gold or rupees, or as temporary loans ; and

(3) at what rate of interest these reserves are invested in the sterling securities ?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : (1) and (2). The figures required by the Honourable Member are published in the Press, and the information so far as available can be obtained from the Gazette of India or financial journals. I shall be glad to show him where to look for it.

(3) All the securities in the Paper Currency Reserve and most of those in the Gold Standard Reserve consist of British Treasury Bills with rates of interest varying from time to time according to the date of purchase. The other securities in the Gold Standard Reserve consist of Exchequer Bonds and Colonial Government Securities at 5 per cent. to 5½ per cent. and about £2½ million worth of Consols at 2½ per cent. and 2¾ per cent. and Transvaal Stock at 3 per cent.

STERLING SECURITIES HELD BY DIFFERENT COUNTRIES AND BANKS.

45. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to state what different countries, banks, or private firms hold our sterling securities, and the total amount held by each at present ?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: It would be extremely difficult to ascertain who are the actual holders of our sterling securities ; in any case it would necessitate a prolonged inquiry, and I do not think that the matter is of sufficient importance to justify the trouble and expenditure involved.

CASH BALANCES OF THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA HELD IN ENGLAND.

46. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing :

(1) the cash balances of the Government of India held in England for the years 1912 to 1922 ;

(2) the names of the various firms to which these balances were lent in London during these years ?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : (1) I lay on the table a statement showing the cash balances of the Government of India held in England.

(2) I have no information, and could not obtain it without having a laborious examination made of the Bank of England's books, which I do not feel justified in asking for.

ASSISTANT TRAFFIC SUPERINTENDENTS IN THE NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

47. Baba Ujagar Singh Bedi: (a) How many Assistant Traffic Superintendents are there in the North-Western Railway?

(b) How many of these posts are now vacant and held by officiating subordinates?

(c) Are these subordinates Anglo-Indians?

(d) Did the Traffic Manager, Lahore, recommend six of these subordinates to be confirmed as Assistant Traffic Superintendents and did the Railway Board refuse to agree?

(e) Have these six posts been filled up yet? If not, why are such large number of Assistant Traffic Superintendent's posts not being filled up?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) The sanctioned scale of the North-Western Railway provided for 39 Assistant Traffic Superintendents, and against this scale there are 39 permanent officers. This number of appointments is about to be reduced as a consequence of the formation of a local Traffic service, vide (d) below.

(b) None of the posts are substantively vacant, but in the room of officers on leave or officiating as District Officers there are certain subordinates officiating as Assistant Traffic Superintendents.

(c) With one exception these officiating Assistant Superintendents are Anglo-Indians or Europeans.

(d) and (e). As explained above, there have, hitherto, been no permanent vacancies in the sanctioned cadre against which officiating subordinates could be confirmed. But following the reorganization of the Engineering Department, the Traffic Department has been reorganized and while the number of appointments on the old superior cadre will be reduced gradually as vacancies occur, a local Traffic service of Assistant Traffic Superintendents has been constituted in the Railway Board's Resolution No. 370-E.—21, dated the 31st August, 1921. To this service the permanent appointment of selected men officiating as Assistant Traffic Superintendents will now be made. The recommendations of the North-Western Railway have already been considered by the Railway Board and terms of appointment are now being fixed; the number of first appointments to be made must, necessarily, be few as the excess under the old cadre has yet to be absorbed.

INDIANS AND LOCOMOTIVE DEPARTMENT IN THE NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

48. Baba Ujagar Singh Bedi: (a) Is it a fact that there is no Indian (with one exception) in the whole of the Locomotive Department in the North-Western Railway? If so, why?

(b) Do the Government propose to admit, in future, Indians into this Department?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) There is no Indian in the Superior Branch of the Locomotive Department on the North-Western Railway. The reason for this is that hitherto it has not been possible to get qualified candidates of the class and general standard of education and training necessary to occupy these appointments.

(b) If candidates with the necessary qualifications are forthcoming, Government will certainly admit them into this Department.

PASSENGER TRAINS BETWEEN MADRAS AND PALLAVARAM.

49. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (i) the number of passenger trains that run between Madras and Pallavaram,
- (ii) the speed at which they run and the time taken to cover the distance,
- (iii) the number of first and second class coaches attached to each train,
- (iv) the number of first and second class passengers that travel by these trains on an average per day?

(b) Do the Government propose to arrange for quick traffic between these two stations and also to increase the number of these trains?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) A statement is being sent to the Honourable Member which gives the required information.

(b) Until the line between Madras Beach and Pallavaram stations is doubled, it is not possible to take any action in the directions suggested. An estimate of the cost of doubling this section of the railway is now being revised.

DOUBLE LINES BETWEEN MADRAS AND CHINGLEPET.

50. M. K. Reddi Garu: Do the Government propose to consider the advisability of laying double lines between Madras and Chinglepet—a distance of 38 miles, in order to avoid the time lost at each station in the crossing of trains?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: The question is mainly one of finance. If arrangements can be made by the Government of India to finance a programme of Railway capital expenditure over a series of years, the question of including this work in the programme will certainly be considered.

OVERCROWDING OF THE SOUTH INDIAN RAILWAY TRAINS.

51. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) Are the Government aware of the very great discontent and agitation in consequence of overcrowding of the South Indian Railway trains and the insufficient accommodation given to the third class passengers?

(b) If so, do they propose to institute an inquiry into the causes of the overcrowding of trains and the measures necessary to give relief to the travelling public?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given on 10th September, 1921, during the session of September, 1921, to Question No. 144 asked by Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanyam on the same subject.

(b) The Government do not think that any useful purpose would be served by an inquiry. The Honourable Member has, no doubt, seen the Railway Finance Committee's report. If the recommendations of the Committee in respect of the provision of funds for capital expenditure are approved by the Legislature, the Government hope that the conditions of travel of 3rd class passengers will be improved in the next few years not only on the South Indian Railway but on all railways.

INCOME AND EXPENDITURE OF THE SOUTH INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

52. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the income and expenditure of the South Indian Railway Company since the year 1915—and the average profits earned by this company during these years?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: A statement showing the gross earnings and working expenses of the South Indian Railway and the share of surplus profits and the percentage of return earned by the South Indian Railway Company for the last six years is placed upon the table for the Honourable Member's information.

TOTAL PENSIONS PAID BY GOVERNMENT TO OLD PENSIONERS.

53. Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: (1) What are the totals of pensions in (a) each Province and (b) the Government of India paid per annum at present to the old pensioners (i.e., those who have not benefited by increases to former pensions, under any new order) who draw pensions from Rs. 2,001 to Rs. 4,999 per annum?

(2) What are the totals of pensions in (a) each Province, or (b) the Government of India paid per annum at present to the old pensioners (i.e., those who have not benefited by increases to former pensions, under any new orders) who draw pensions of Rs. 5,000 per annum (plus Rs. 1,000 per annum in special cases of Commissioners, Inspectors-General, etc.)?

(3) What would be the total initial cost per annum to (a) the Provincial Governments and (b) the Government of India, of an increase of 15 per cent. in existing pensions referred to in part (1)?

(4) What would be the total initial cost per annum to (a) the Provincial Governments and (b) the Government of India, of the enhancement, as granted to those who retired from 23rd July, 1913, on existing pensions referred to in part (2)?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (1) and (2). The collection of the details required by the Honourable Member will involve considerable work in all accounts offices throughout India, and I do not feel justified in putting this additional work upon them at a time when they are already extremely busy with the preparation of the budget. Steps will be taken, however, to supply the Honourable Member with the information during the course of the summer.

(3) and (4). I regret that I cannot undertake to arrange for the preparation of such calculations for Honourable Members.

INDIA'S CONTRIBUTION TOWARDS THE EXPENSES OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

54. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) With regard to the expenses of the League of Nations, is it a fact—

(i) that India is obliged to pay as much as independent nations like Japan, Italy and China; if so, what is the proportion to be contributed towards the total expenses of the League by each one of these nations and India?

(ii) Is it a fact that Self-governing Dominions like Canada, Australia, South Africa, and Newfoundland contribute only a fourth of what India is asked to pay?

(b) Are the Government aware that there is already discontent in the country regarding the award of the Imperial Conference that India should get only 1.20 per cent. while the Dominions get 4.35 per cent. of the reparation receipts?

(c) Do the Government propose to take any steps in the matter?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Saprú: (a) (1) The Second Assembly of the League of Nations at its meeting held on 5th October, 1921, decided on a provisional allocation of the expenses of the League amongst Member States with effect from January 1st, 1922, based on the population on 31st December, 1919, and net revenue for the year 1918. This scheme replaced the original plan under which these expenses were borne by Member States in accordance with the apportionment of the expenses of the International Bureau of the Universal Postal Union. It is to remain in force pending the submission of a final scheme in 1923 by a Committee appointed for the purpose. India, Japan, Italy and China are placed in class II and will contribute 65 units (i.e., 1,654,786 gold francs) each. Under the original plan India was placed in class I.

(ii) Canada is placed in class III and will contribute 35 units (i.e., 891,038 gold francs). Australia and South Africa are placed in class IV and will contribute 15 units (i.e., 381,873 gold francs) each. Newfoundland is not a member of the League.

(b) The Government has received no representation to this effect.

(c) In view of the fact that the allocation of reparation receipts has been finally settled, the Government do not propose to take any action under this head. As regards India's contribution towards the expenses of the League of Nations the representatives of India on the Assembly have succeeded in getting India reduced from class I to class II of the contributing States and will no doubt endeavour to protect her interests when the matter comes up again before the Assembly.

CREATION OF AN INDIAN BAR.

55. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table all correspondence and opinions relating to the Resolution re Creation of an Indian Bar which was moved in the Legislative Assembly on 24th February, 1921?

(b) What further action is proposed to be taken in the matter?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Government do not propose to lay the papers on the table, but when the correspondence is complete Government will probably print copies which will be available for those Members of the Assembly who are interested in the subject on application to the Home Department. The various authorities were consulted on the question in May, 1920, and many replies are still outstanding. For this reason Government are unable to say what further action they will take in the matter.

OUDH RENT BILL.

56. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Are the Government aware that the Oudh Rent Bill was passed in the United Provinces Council in the teeth of strong opposition by the representatives of the tenants and that its passage into law will be resented by the tenants?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table representations made on behalf of the tenants by certain members of the United Provinces Legislative Council or Members of the Select Committee on the Oudh Rent Bill?

(c) What action, if any, has been taken or is proposed to be taken by the Government in the matter?

Mr. J. Hullah : (a) The reply to the first part of part (a) of the question is in the affirmative. It is believed that certain parts of the legislation are welcome, and others unwelcome, to the tenants.

(b) Copies will be supplied to the Honourable Member.

(c) The matter is under the consideration of His Excellency the Governor General.

POSITION OF MEMBERS OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL IN RELATION TO GOVERNOR GENERAL'S ASSENT TO PROVINCIAL LEGISLATION.

57. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Are any Honourable Members of the Government consulted, in practice, whether formally or informally, generally or individually by His Excellency the Governor General before assenting to or withholding assent from any law passed by any Provincial Legislature?

(b) Was any Honourable Member of the Government so consulted with reference to the Oudh Rent Bill?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru : (a) and (b). There is no provision of any law or rule which requires the Governor General to consult any Member of his Executive Council before he assents to or withholds assent from an Act passed by a local Legislature and it is entirely within his discretion to do so or not as he pleases. The Government of India are not therefore in a position to reply to the question.

LISTED POSTS IN THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE.

58. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table detailed information and papers showing how far and in what manner has the Resolution re Listed Posts in the Indian Civil Service adopted by the Legislative Assembly on 17th February, 1921, been given effect to and what is the present proportion of members of the Provincial Civil Service in such posts in each Province?

(b) In case full effect has not been given by any of the Local Governments to the said Resolution, do the Government of India propose to inquire from such Local Governments their reasons for not so doing and place the same on the table?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given on the 15th September, 1921, to Rai Bahadur Girish Chandra Nag's question on the subject.

The replies of certain Local Governments are still due. When the replies of all Local Governments have been received and examined, the Government of India will consider the question of laying the correspondence on the table.

EXPORT OF GOOD BREEDS OF CATTLE.

59. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Will the Government be pleased to state what practical step has so far been taken to carry out the Resolution of the Legislative Assembly passed on 2nd March, 1921, re export of good breeds of cattle?

Mr. J. Hullah : The replies of Local Governments who were consulted in the matter are now under consideration and it is hoped that a decision will be reached very shortly.

ULTIMATE COURT OF APPEAL IN INDIA.

60. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table all information and papers including correspondence, opinions and proposals regarding the Resolution of the Legislative Assembly adopted on 26th March, 1921, re Ultimate Court of Appeal in India?

(b) What further action is proposed to be taken in the matter?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Government do not propose to lay the papers on the table, but when the correspondence is complete they will probably print copies, which will be available on application to the Home Department for those Members of the Assembly who are interested in the subject. The various authorities were consulted on the subject on the 9th May, 1921, and some replies are still outstanding.

(b) The action to be taken must depend on the nature of the replies

CAPITAL RETENTION COMMITTEE AT ALLAHABAD.

61. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Are the Government aware that a Capital Retention Committee has been formed at Allahabad?

(b) Have Government received any representation from the Capital Retention Committee of Allahabad urging against the action of the United Provinces Government in their attempts to remove the capital of United Provinces from Allahabad to Lucknow, virtually, and regarding the construction of a new Council Chamber at Lucknow and not at Allahabad? If so, will the Government be pleased to lay the same on the table?

(c) What action, if any, has been taken or is proposed to be taken by the Government of India in the matter?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) and (b). Yes; a copy of the memorial addressed to His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General in Council will be supplied to the Honourable Member if he desires. Government see no sufficient reason to lay a copy on the table.

(c) The memorialists have been informed, through the Local Government, that the Government of India accept the statement made by His Excellency the Governor, in reply to an address presented to him on the 23rd July, 1921, that there is not and has not been any question of transferring the capital from Allahabad to Lucknow. The Government of India have also communicated to the memorialists their decision that the location of the Council Chamber is a matter for the Local Government and their Legislative Council to settle.

INDIANISATION OF THE POSTS OF SECRETARIES, DEPUTY SECRETARIES, UNDER SECRETARIES, ETC., IN SECRETARIATS.

62. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) How many of the Secretaries, Under Secretaries, Deputy Secretaries, etc., in the Government of India and the Provincial Secretariats, as given in the statement in answer to my question number 48 printed at page 66 of Volume II of the Legislative Assembly Debates, are Indians and how many are non-Indians?

(b) What steps have been taken or are proposed to be taken to Indianise the posts referred to above by employment of suitable persons to the said posts whenever possible?

(c) How many postings have been made to the posts referred to above within the last 6 months in the Central and Provincial Governments and how many of the said posts were given to Indians?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) and (c). The information is being collected in so far as the Government of India Secretariat is concerned, and will be furnished to the Honourable Member when complete. As regards provincial Secretariats, it is suggested that Honourable Member might obtain the information required from the various civil lists. The Government of India have no information beyond what is contained in those lists.

(b) The Indianisation of the posts alluded to will proceed pari passu with the Indianisation of the services from which they are filled. The Assembly has been informed on more than one occasion of the steps which have been taken in the latter connection.

APPOINTMENT OF INDIANS OTHER THAN BENGALKEES AND PUNJABIS IN THE IMPERIAL SECRETARIAT.

63. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: In view of the statement printed at page 187, Volume II, Legislative Assembly Debates, showing that 647 Indians are employed in the Government of India Secretariat (besides 252 Europeans and Anglo-Indians) of whom 499 Indians belong to the Punjab and Bengal while only 51 belong to the United Provinces, and very few or none from other Provinces, do the Government propose to consider the desirability of filling future temporary or permanent vacancies by suitable Indians belonging to the United Provinces and Provinces other than Bengal and the Punjab?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given to-day to a similar question on the subject.

CONDITIONS FOR THE TRANSFER OF A PROPERTY HELD ON ORIGINAL TENURE.

64. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that when applications are made to the Cantonment authority in Karachi for the transfer, of a property held on original tenure from one owner to another, the owners are informed that applications will be considered provided they are prepared to recognize the proprietary right of Government in the land and that they are willing to execute leases on Form B?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to quote the authority under which such conditions are tried to be enforced?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) and (b). The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given on the 22nd September last to his Question No. 556.

IMPROVEMENTS TO AND REBUILDING OF HOUSES ON PLOTS OF LAND HELD ON ORIGINAL TENURE.

65. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that sanction to various applications for effecting improvements, alterations and additions to and rebuilding of houses on plots held on original tenure within the Cantonment Area of Karachi, and for transfer of such property from one owner to another were made conditional unless and until the applicants executed leases on Form B, chapter XXI, Cantonment Code, 1912?

(b) Have any such leases been executed, and have about 41 houses in the Cantonment limits of Karachi been affected thereby?

(c) If so, will Government be pleased to state under what authority the owners were asked to sign such leases?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) and (c). I would invite the attention of the Honourable Member to the reply given on the 22nd September last to his Question No. 556.

(b) As I pointed out in that reply, occupants, whose title to the land is considered doubtful, are asked if they are willing to execute leases in perpetuity for their original holdings as well as for extensions. The Government understand that the landlords of 35 houses in the Cantonment of Karachi have executed leases in Form 'B' in respect of properties transferred to them by their previous owners.

EXPULSION OF THAKUR AMAR SINGH.

66. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is the Government aware of the expulsion of Thakur Amar Singh, a resident of Mhow Cantonment, under Section 216 of the Cantonment Code?

(b) Is it a fact that the expulsion order was issued after Thakur Amar Singh had given evidence in a police corruption inquiry? If so, is there any connection between the evidence he gave in the inquiry and his expulsion?

(c) If the reply to the latter part of question (b) be in the negative, will the Government state the reasons for which the expulsion order was issued?

(d) Is it a fact that Thakur Amar Singh has been seeking for an opportunity to explain his case to the higher authorities but no opportunity has been given to him so far?

(e) Under the circumstances, do the Government propose to direct an inquiry to be made into the case?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) Yes.

(b) and (c) In March, 1914, Thakur Amar Singh, with certain others, accused an Inspector of Police of taking bribes. As the result of a careful inquiry, it was found that all the complaints that had been made were absolutely false.

In June, 1914, Thakur Amar Singh was expelled from the Cantonment of Mhow, as his presence in that Cantonment was considered, by both the local civil and military authorities, to be prejudicial to good order and military discipline. Thakur Amar Singh appealed against this order, but His Excellency the then Commander-in-Chief, who is the appellate authority in cases of this kind, saw no reason to interfere. The General Officer Commanding, 5th (Mhow) Division, after consultation with the local civil authorities, permitted Thakur Amar Singh to re-enter the Cantonment on the 24th December, 1915, and he has not since been expelled.

(d) The Government of India have no information on the subject. It may be mentioned, however, that Thakur Amar Singh is at present awaiting trial in the Indore jail on a charge under section 131 of the Indian Penal Code.

(e) No.

CANTONMENT MAGISTRATES AS COURTS OF SMALL CAUSES.

67. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that at some stations Cantonment Magistrates are also Courts of Small Causes for such cantonments?

(b) Is it a fact that sometimes intricate questions of law have to be decided by them?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) and (b) The replies to both parts of this question are in the affirmative.

INDIANS IN THE MILITARY WORKS SERVICES.

68. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that Indians are as a rule excluded from the Military Works Services?

(b) In view of the progressive policy of Indianisation of all services, will Government be pleased to state if they propose to Indianise the Military Works Services also?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) The reply is in the negative, except that Indians are not at present appointed to the Barrack Department.

(b) The question of Indianising the Military Works Services, as well as other services, is being considered.

INDIANS ON THE STAFF OF GENERAL OFFICERS COMMANDING.

69. Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Have the General Officers Commanding any Indians on their staffs?

(b) If so, how many and what positions do they occupy?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) Yes.

(b) Four Indian officers are attached to the staffs of the General Officers Commanding-in-Chief, Commands, as Aides-de-Camp. In addition, one Indian officer is attached to the General Staff Branch, Army Headquarters, as Assistant Translation Officer; and there is one Indian Staff Officer at the Cavalry School, Saugor.

ADMINISTRATION OF LAND CUSTOMS IN THE FRONTIERS OF PONDICHERY.

70. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) With regard to the British and French villages in the frontiers of Pondicherry will the Government be pleased to state if it is a fact (1) that groups of British villages are entirely surrounded by French villages and similarly some French villages by British villages; (2) that in some border villages one side of the street is British and the other French; (3) that the British residents who go to purchase vegetables or paddy in an adjacent French village have to take the things purchased to the British customs to get them assessed to duty, at a distance of four or five miles away?

(b) Are the Government aware that even goods carried by free pass duty cannot directly pass on to their destination but should go via a land customs British chauki which in some cases is at a distance?

(c) Is there any proposal on the part of the Government to cancel the land customs duty on the produce and indigenous manufactures in these frontiers?

(d) Are the Government aware that on account of these land customs duties much hardship is felt by the subjects of both the British and French villages situated within this frontier?

(e) Are the Government further aware of the great discontent and agitation in these frontier villages for some relaxation of the rules applicable to sea customs, especially in the matter of land customs?

(f) In 1916 when the tariff rates were raised, did Sir William Meyer, the Finance Member, state that he had some idea of mitigating this troublesome land customs duty? If so, how far has this suggestion been given effect to?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: The Madras Inland Customs Act, 1844, is a local Act administered by the Government of Madras. The Honourable Member should, therefore, apply to that Government for detailed information on the subject of his question. The Government of India are aware, however, that the frontier is intricate and ill-defined and they have no doubt that the administration of land customs is harassing both to British and to French subjects living near the frontier. The whole subject has recently been examined and the question of improving the arrangements is at present under the consideration of the Government of Madras.

CASE OF BABU TARAPADA MUKERJI.

71. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) Is it a fact that some of the statements made by one Babu Tarapada Mukerji in his speech as the President of the All-India P. and O. and R. M. S. Conference held at Lahore, have been taken objection to by the Post Master General of Bengal as being untrue and disloyal?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the correspondence that passed between Babu Tarapada Mukerji and the Post Master General of Bengal?

(c) Is it a fact that Babu Tarapada is threatened with dismissal, if he fails to make a public apology to the Government?

(d) Is this Tarapada Babu the same gentleman on whose transfer to Burma there were protests and memorials to Government? If so, what has become of his transfer?

(e) Is it a fact that the Government desire to get rid of him at any cost, because he is the chief moving figure in the P. and O. and R. M. S. Associations of Calcutta?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a), (b) and (c). The facts of the case are as follows:

On the 9th October, 1921, Babu Tarapada Mukerji, who was President of the All-India Post Office and R. M. S. Conference, made a speech at the opening of the Conference at Lahore. The speech was previously printed and circulated and a copy of it is laid on the table.

This speech contained serious mis-statements and was calculated to cause disloyalty and disaffection amongst the postal staff and was of an objectionable nature generally. The Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs, although he considered that Babu Tarapada Mukerji had rendered himself liable to severe disciplinary action amounting to dismissal, decided to give him an opportunity to express his regret and called upon him through his superior officer, the Postmaster-General, Bengal and Assam, to make a public apology or else resign the service. A copy of the Director-General's letter to the Post Master General, Bengal and Assam, with its enclosure, is laid on the table.

Babu Tarapada Mukerji replied to the charges made and refused to apologise or resign. A copy of his letter is laid on the table.

The Director-General was, however, willing to give Babu Tarapada Mukerji another chance and had an interview with him on the 17th November in Calcutta. He told him that he was prepared to overlook his conduct on this occasion if Babu Tarapada Mukerji wrote him a letter expressing regret for certain objectionable passages in his speech. At the close of the interview, the Director-General understood that such a letter would be sent and he agreed that as soon as he had received it, he should issue orders allowing Babu Tarapada Mukerji to rejoin from leave and take up the appointment of Sub-Postmaster, Amherst Street, Calcutta.

The Director-General was surprised to receive no communication from Babu Tarapada Mukerji on either the 18th or 19th November and he telephoned to the Postmaster-General, Bengal and Assam, to call upon him for his letter of regret. On the 20th November, the Director-General received a letter from Babu Tarapada Mukerji, a copy of which is laid on the table. On receipt of it, orders were issued dismissing Babu Tarapada Mukerji from the service with effect from the 20th November.

(d) Yes. The Honourable Member's attention is invited to the reply given by me to a question put by him on September 21st last. Babu Tarapada Mukerji was not, however, actually transferred. He was on leave and was appointed to act as Sub-Postmaster, Amherst Street, Calcutta, upon rejoining duty.

(e) The reply is in the negative, and there are no grounds whatever for the insinuation made.

ALL-INDIA (INCLUDING BURMA) POST OFFICE AND R. M. S. CONFERENCE.

Held at Lahore on the 9th, 10th and 11th October, 1921.

PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS OF BABU TARAPADA MUKERJI, DELIVERED ON THE 9TH OCTOBER 1921.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Secretary and Members of the Reception Committee and brother Delegates :

I am deeply sensible of the honour that you have done by electing me President of the second session of the Conference of the All-India (including Burma) Post Office and R. M. S. employees. I know my own shortcomings, and in all humility recognise my unfitness to discharge the very responsible duties of the President of an Assembly, composed of men coming from all parts of India and Burma, gathered together to form decisions on momentous questions, and to mature plans for carrying those decisions into effect. I am sadly conscious of my limitations and I have not the conceit to think that I deserve the trust you have reposed in me. Now that you have chosen me to preside over your deliberations, it would be false modesty to hesitate. But at the outset I prefer to tell you, brothers, that I seriously count upon your help to pilot me successfully through this difficult task; and it encourages me to think that you will most willingly render all possible help. Last year the Honourable Mr. Kharparde, a political leader of all-India reputation, than whom a better champion the poor Post Office and R. M. S. employees can hardly find, was at the helm of the first session of the Conference held at Delhi, and with what signal success you all know; and you have called upon me to step into his shoes!

2. My election as President is not, however, without a special significance of its own. I have passed my life in the subordinate service of the Post Office, and am still in harness. I have lived the miserable life of the subordinate staff, and it has become almost a part of my existence. In choosing me you have chosen one of your fellow sufferers to lead you; you have grasped the true spirits of Labour Union; you have demonstrated that you are prepared to accept the leadership of one who has been the object of persecution on account of the active interest he has taken on behalf of brother officials; you have honoured one whom the Director-General wanted to harass by illegally transferring him from Bengal to Barina; you have shown to the world that you have confidence in your own brothers and are prepared to depend upon your unaided strength for your salvation.

3. I have come here under the deep shadow of an impending domestic calamity. I had thought that I would not be able to leave alone, in Calcutta, my dying wife and come to Lahore to attend the Conference. But when I was told that you had chosen me President, it sent a thrill through me, not only because I was the recipient of such unique honour, but because it revealed that you have learnt to place full confidence in yourselves and no longer hang upon extraneous help. I could not bear the idea of damping your ardour by refusal and I, therefore, readily responded to your call, of course with the full consent of my ailing wife. With my poor equipments and in the present state of my mental anxiety, I shall be guilty of many shortcomings, but I earnestly hope you will not mind them and you will lend all possible help in the discharge of my duties to make me a success.

4. The Punjab has, from time immemorial, been the gate-keeper of India, and as such she has had to bear the first shock and the brunt of fight in all struggles for national existence. It is, therefore, in the fitness of things that in our struggle for emancipation from the slavery, economic or otherwise, that prevails in the Post Office and R. M. S. service, our stalwart brothers of the Punjab should play a worthy part, and the first two sessions of the Conference should be held in the Land of Five Rivers. We are grateful to our Punjab brothers for their earnestness and spirit of sacrifice manifested in the fact of their having invited the Conference for two successive sessions.

5. Let us take a brief survey of the events happening since we met at the last Conference. The much-talked of Postal Committee's report has been published to give us an insight into the mentality that formulated a scheme of revision grotesque in the extreme, absurd as absurd can be, and insulting to the dignity of labour. It is, by this time, familiar to you all what monster the mountain in labour has produced, of which many of you are probably victims.

6. The Postal Committee starts with the very curious and insulting proposition that 'all concession is of the nature of a gift, and this being so, it is for the donor to decide what the measure of the gift shall be.' This tantamounts to saying that the employers are donors and the workers are beggars and they must, therefore, be satisfied with beggar's doles. I am astonished and you are astonished that a Committee of responsible men appointed by a civilised Government in the twentieth century, can so far forget themselves as to place workers in the category of beggars at a time, when labour has become self-conscious enough to contemplate taking 'Direct Action' even in affairs of State. Perhaps our crime of age-long silence in the past is responsible for such humiliating remark, or, it may be, that the Committee wanted to give a quietus to the growing manifestation of life in the Post Office by reminding the employees that they were no better than beggars, bound to accept without a murmur what charity the Government as donors were pleased to give, and it was useless to clamour for more.

7. Ah! Brothers, workers are not beggars; they are the salt of the earth, they are the only people who produce wealth. Wealth consists of the labour imprinted on material substance; and in the absence of workers, where is the labour to come from which is necessary to create wealth? Those who do not work are parasites sucking like vampire the life-blood of society and are battenning on the wealth produced by the workers. Is it not amusing that the wealth produced by workers should be appropriated, and then the producers of wealth be called beggars and then the pittance doled out to them, so that they may keep the body and soul together for further production of wealth for the benefit of others.

8. Consider, brothers, what this world would be, were the workers to stop work. Not a grain of cereals would be produced, not a yard of yarn would be spun and woven, not a brick would be laid, not a tenement would be built. Those bloated, over-indulged finely draped figures airing their best manners to their own class, would have no food to allay hunger, no clothes to cover the body, no home to afford shelter; and they would soon cease to exist to call workers beggars. Brothers, shake off the hypnotic spell, the somnambulism of past life, wake up and be self-conscious, appraise your value at its real worth, do not remain forgetful of the dignity of labour, realise your own strength, and march on double quick to the goal, 'heart within and God overhead.'

9. Brothers, what better could be expected from the Committee, constituted as it was? Through your Associations you sent up the names of certain persons on whom you had faith, and who could represent your view-point, had they been given a place on the Committee. But the Government religiously excluded every person whom you nominated, and selected men on whom you had absolutely no faith. You cannot be bound by the findings of a Committee with which you had nothing to do, and who had nothing to do with you.

10. The Committee had rejected the evidence given by your witnesses as worthless and conflicting and unreliable. They were, however, scrupulous in comparing and weighing the schemes prepared by different Postmasters-General, and considering other reports emanating from the Government side. Even in doing so, the Committee brushed aside higher scales proposed by certain Postmasters-General, when a lower scale was proposed by another. The fact of the matter is that the Committee was dominated by one idea in framing their scheme, and that is to keep down any considerable increase of expenditure, and they make no secret of this view in their report.

11. The consideration of economy is, however, cast to the four winds when the question of raising the pay of the upper strata arises. You will be surprised to learn that in the course of twelve months more than one revision has been sanctioned for those who are paid by thousands instead of by tens, but when the poor underpaid, overworked subordinate staff is concerned, that is another matter. The soulless cruel cant of 'demand and supply' then comes in, family budget is discarded, evidence of those affected is declared extravagant and unreliable, comparison is made with commercial firms, as if the Government are to follow, instead of setting example to, capitalist profiteers in the matter of remuneration to the employees, and every quarter is ransacked for the justification of denying what constitutes the real living wage in the present time.

12. If we have a look at the scale of wages in the pre-war time and the advance sanctioned to compensate the increased cost of living in England, we may form a fair idea of the difference of treatment we receive from what our brothers in the British Post Office get. In England a postman at the age of 18 years, on first appointment, used to get, before the war, 20 shillings per week, but on account of increased cost of living at present he is paid 53 shillings per week. Two very striking features rivet our attention: firstly, the pay of a postman on first appointment is Rs. 175 in Indian money; and secondly, the increase of over 160 per cent. granted on pre-war pay. The maximum pay sanctioned for clerks in the Indian Post Office varies from Rs. 120 to Rs. 140 to be attained after a service of 25 years, if they are at all able to cross the two efficiency bars, to be rigorously enforced after 10 and 18 years' service. They have to start on an initial pay of Rs. 35, 40 or Rs. 45 or Rs. 50 as the case may be, against Rs. 175 for a postman in England. Congratulate yourselves, brothers, on your good luck! Your increase has been limited to 50 per cent. and most of you have got only a very small increase, and many have even been adversely affected.

13. This increase of wages in England was not confined to the cadre of postman alone, the clerks got their wages enhanced in like manner. To pay the enhanced rate of wages, the British Post Office had to work at a loss of ten million pounds in the first year the increased pay was sanctioned. To make up the loss the British inland postage has been raised for letters to 2d and for postcard to 1d, equivalent in Indian money to two annas and one anna, respectively. If we look to the Indian Postal Administration, what do we find? Year after year large surplus revenue is appropriated by the Government, and in this way over five crores of rupees out of Postal revenue has been saved in the course of eight years. It has been the declared policy of Government both in the days of the East India Company and after the transference of the administration to the Crown that no surplus revenue would be derived from the Post Office; but the large savings year after year do not give indication of the promise having been kept.

14. Brothers, we are to thank ourselves for the shabby treatment we have been receiving. We have been content to be silent workers for ages, for which such eulogium was bestowed on us by Sir Arthur Fanshawe; and this crime of silence brought its retribution in the neglect to which we were relegated so long. Instead of being silent workers, had we been a little more clamouring for our rights, then the Government would not have sweated us in the manner they have done. It is time we take lessons from past experience, and carry on our fight for all that makes life worth living.

15. The burning question of the day is the question of bread and decent living. Are we paid a living wage? Do we get sufficient wages to nourish our children with healthy and nutritious food, to clothe them decently, to house them in proper and ventilated quarters with sufficient accommodation for purposes of decency and healthy moral development, to give them education, to pay for proper medical help, to meet their marriage expenses and various other social obligations, and provide for the rainy day? Ah! Brothers, we all know to what strait we have been reduced. We do not live, but we merely exist to drudge on to sustain life. Brothers, do you consent to live this life if you can help it?

16. Man is something more than an animal. He cannot afford to pass his days in mere animal existence. He cannot live contented if only his physical needs are satisfied. His moral nature will rise in rebellion if it is altogether neglected. It is impossible to live the life of a moral being who exists for a higher end,—namely, to develop into full manhood and bring it into harmony with the universe and its author—unless he has a mind free from anxiety, and unless he has sufficient leisure for contemplation and introspection. It is, therefore, necessary that the income should be adequate to dispel domestic cares, and time must be available for the development of the higher nature.

17. But what opportunities have we to live a human life in the Postal Service? The pay is too low, in consequence of which we are in a constant state of anxiety, the long hours of duty and the hard labour of office are very exhausting. We are thus reduced to a state of mere animal existence, and even that—not a healthy one. Brothers, we cannot afford to continue as we are, unless we belie our nature. We must, therefore, determine to have our pay increased and working hours reduced. We must fight and fight strenuously to secure what alone can make life worth living. We must make up our minds at this conference whether we shall continue to live as human cattle or 'take up arms against a sea of trouble and by opposing end them.'

18. Brothers, again do I reiterate that we are to thank ourselves if we continue to live this present degraded life. It is the law of nature that we should receive the treatment we actually deserve. We have fallen from our high pedestal and we have lost the consciousness of our true self. We have forgotten that we have a soul which is the essence of God. Once our hypnotism is gone and once we succeed in overcoming mean terror and low selfishness and abject submission to fate, the soul will manifest in all its glory and it will triumph over whatever obstacles may stand in our way.

19. Brother delegates, you had expected a good deal from the Postal Committee; and the animation and activity displayed by the postal officials throughout India and Burma at the time was an index to the high hopes raised by what then appeared as a genuine desire of the Government to do justice to the long neglected subordinate staff of the Post Office. Your hopes have been shattered, your expectations have been cast to the four winds, and you stand to-day in a position hardly better than when the Committee was appointed. I ask you, brothers, as to whether the disappointment has broken your spirit, or whether it has given you a new impetus to redouble your energy and give no rest to the Government till our legitimate claims are fully satisfied?

20. If you are convinced in your heart that the recommendations of the Postal Committee are humiliating and unsatisfactory, if you feel you have been very shabbily treated, and you deserved better, and if you are determined to obtain what you have a right to claim, only one course is open to you, and that is summed up in the one word 'Organise.' Organise if you want real living wage, organise if you want to have your working hour reduced, organise if you desire better treatment from your superior officers, organise if you want that the authorities should consult and consider your opinion on all administrative measures affecting you.

21. Simply because the Postal workers' organisation was still in a liquid state, that the Postal Committee could dare to characterise the workers as beggars, to openly give expression in their report to the view that the witnesses chosen by the workers were unreliable, to prepare schemes of revision altogether inadequate, grotesque and ridiculous in the extreme. Had the Committee found the Postal Organisation as strong as the Telegraph Association, they could have changed their tune and sung quite a different song. We should take lessons from the attitude of the Government towards the telegraphists. Simply because the Telegraph Association is a very powerful body with strong financial backing, every member of which is alive with class consciousness ready to do in concert whatever circumstances demand. The Telegraph Committee, of which the President was the same Mr. Haseltine who presided over the Postal Committee, recommended almost everything demanded by Mr. Barton of the Telegraph Association, and Government accepted the recommendations without demur. They do not dare to call the Telegraphists beggars, or to characterise the witnesses as unreliable.

22. Take it from me, brothers, that petitions and memorials and supplications will count for nothing so long as you do not organise yourselves in a manner to convince the Government that you will no longer stand nonsense. This organisation, when perfected, will be ten times more powerful than the Telegraph Association. But there are difficulties in the way. We have scattered units spread over the length and breadth of the country; and so much the stronger must be our efforts to enthuse them with the spirit of Association, and secure them to the service of the common cause. The spirit of Association is already in the air, there is a universal awakening in the Post Office, spirit of unrest has captured the entire Postal Service, every one is eager to contribute his mite for the furtherance of the common cause. The ground is ready; only some daring spirits are wanted to sow the seed and reap abundant harvest.

23. Organisation to be effective, must be centralised. Scattered Associations with very loose ties to bind them is useless for action and the authorities know it well. Unless, therefore, we can concentrate our scattered forces to be set in motion by some one central authority we may rest assured that our efforts will not be crowned with full success. The All-India (including Burma) Post Office and Railway Mail Service Union is intended to supply the place of the central authority. To make the All-India Union a reality demands a good deal from us. We must rise superior to provincialism, we must broaden our outlook, we must cultivate a spirit of trust, we must be identified with the All-India Union wherever it may be located, we must fully develop class consciousness, we must have implicit faith in the All-India Executive; in one word, we must strongly feel that we are for the Union, and the Union is for us. So long as we cannot thus identify ourselves fully, the Union will lack the full strength necessary for our salvation.

24. Brothers, our weaknesses arise from the fact that we have forgotten our true selves. From this forgetfulness of the self are engendered the vices that mar our life. Flunkeyism, cowardice, selfishness, treachery, supineness, and insincerity—these are the tools used by Beelzebub to asphyxiate the soul. Brothers, beware of them, shun them as viper's breath, train the mind to be impervious to the devil's wiles, and there is no power that can deny you the rights and dignities of man.

25. Now comes the question as to what are the requisites to make organisation successful. I cannot do better than repeat the advice given by Colonel Wedgwood, one of the labour leaders of England, at a meeting of the Postal employees in Calcutta. The first requisite, he said, was a strong feeling of class consciousness. The bond of all unions is this feeling of class consciousness. We all belong to the Postal Service, and we are, therefore, brothers. We may come from different provinces, we may speak different tongues, we may be separated by wide areas extending over thousands of miles, but all this difference must disappear before our common brotherhood. We may have our private disputes, tempting offers may be in work to seduce particular officials to create divided interest, but we must rise superior to all these. Private quarrels never so bitter, and temptation never so powerful, should not alienate us from our allegiance to brother officials and make us traitors to our cause. This feeling is class consciousness, without which no organisation worth the name is possible.

The second requisite is that no official should stand aloof from our Union. Union is strength, and we cannot afford to have division in our camp. In the interest of service as much as for individual interest, every one should join the Union with heart and soul, so that our demands may have behind them the united strength of the entire body of officials.

The third requisite is to create a substantial Reserve Fund. Brother delegates, full purse constitutes the sinews of war, and no special emphasis is at all necessary on this point. You all know that without a strong financial backing, satisfactory work cannot be done.

The fourth requisite is to give publicity to our grievances through the press. The labour organisations in the West have their own organs for their purpose. In India we had, until lately, practically no organ of our own entirely devoted to the interest of Postal and R. M. S. employees. This want has now been supplied to a certain extent by the 'Labour', a monthly magazine issued under the auspices of the Provincial Association, Bengal and Assam. If the All-India Union could undertake to issue its own paper or, failing that, recognised the 'Labour' and gave it sanction to assume the All-India character in name as it has already done in its methods, it would be better still. The organ of the Union should be very largely subscribed, so that every employee may have opportunity to acquaint himself with the activities of associations and become familiar with the progress of ideas.

The fifth requisite is to influence the members of the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State with a view to bring pressure on the Government. The value of help in this direction will, however, depend to a great extent on the strength of our organisation. The members are in a position to render help no doubt, but their help will not be very effective, unless our organisation becomes powerful.

26. These are the five requisites for a successful organisation. I wish to add one more to the Colonel's list—I mean a proper sense of discipline. I said in my speech at Mymensingh the Colonel does not appear to have laid emphasis on the point, simply because discipline is so spontaneous in England, although the spirit of discipline is almost moribund in India. Discipline requires that when you have a duly elected Executive you must abide by their decision in all matters which are within their competence. If you find the Executive going wrong you have the choice to elect a fresh Executive; but you cannot consistently with the principles of discipline, keep an Executive body in office and override their action. Then discipline demands that when there is a difference of opinion, the minority must abide by the verdict of the majority; there must be no secession. 'I do not agree with you on a particular question and I cannot, therefore, act with you'—this spirit is subversive of discipline. If my view does not find favour with the majority, I must subordinate my views to the views of the majority, and loyally work whole heartedly for the common cause. This is discipline. Brother delegates, the spirit of discipline is still weak in us, and it is, therefore, so very necessary always to remember that without discipline no organisation can stand and work with success.

27. The Government do not forget to reiterate, in season and out of season, that a strong Committee was appointed to investigate the grievances of Post Office officials. The Government have accepted their recommendations; what cause of complaint have we then. We must admit that the Committee was strong enough to call workers beggars, strong in their anxiety to recommend as little as possible, strong in declaring the witnesses chosen by the workers as unreliable, strong in rejecting the unanimous demands of the men, strong in accepting whatever was suggested from official quarters, strong in murdering logic and facts, strong in preparing absurd and grotesque schemes.

28. Most of you have, I hope, gone through the memorial submitted to His Excellency the Viceroy by the Secretary, Provincial Postal and E. M. S. Association, Bengal and Assam Circle, which contains a criticism of the Committee's report. The Committee richly deserved the castigations it has received. After a prolonged sitting, the Committee produced a scheme, which contains within itself its own condemnation. Junior men would get higher pay than senior men, a graduate newly appointed would march four years in advance of graduates in service. A graduate appointed paid probationer before December 1919 would be entitled to the initial pay of a Reserve clerk, but a graduate made paid probationer after December 1919 would start on an initial pay 4 years in advance in the time-scale, what greater absurdities could be conceived to discredit the report of the Committee.

29. The distinction made between first class and second class Head offices is based on reasons inconsistent with facts. Neither it is true that cost of living in places with first class Head Offices is higher than places with second class Head Offices, nor it is a fact that work in a first class Head Office is more arduous and more difficult. Then a first class Head Office may be reduced to a second class Head Office and vice versa as it has happened before and what scale of pay would then apply is a problem for the gods to solve. The curious part of the whole affair is that the Committee made this fanciful distinction on their own initiative or on the initiative from official quarters, without caring even to question the workers' witnesses what they had to say on the subject. The fact of the matter is that the committee did not care a jot for the opinion of workers' witnesses, and the fact of calling these witnesses was a mere form and nothing else.

30. I refrain from giving a full catalogue of the absurdities as they are too numerous. We are ashamed of the committee and the Government should be ashamed of the committee. We reject the findings of the committee, and the Government should do likewise as the only honourable course.

31. Now, brothers, we should consider what we actually want and determine what we should fight for. To my mind four things are necessary to establish the subordinate service in the Post Office on a correct basis. The first thing we must have is adequate and decent wages; the second thing, curtailment of hours of duty; the third thing, moderation of punishment and good treatment from superior officers; and the last thing that we must have is a voice in the administration in matters affecting the subordinate staff.

32. At the last conference held at Delhi we agreed that the scale of pay for clerks and sorters should be uniform, and we formulated our minimum demands. I do not think anything has happened since then to alter our views. We must fight for the minimum irreducible demands we determined after mature consideration. I think it was time that we took up the question of irreducible minimum wages for other classes of employees in the subordinate service as well.

33. Brothers, time-scale of pay for the subordinate service is meant to give a living wage. Efficiency bars are out of place where living wage is the question. Efficiency bars are, therefore, inconsistent and anomalous and out of place in the time-scale of pay in the subordinate service. In the superior services pay is determined, not by the standard of living but to attract men of superior stamp and to give dignity to high officers and it is, therefore, in the fitness of things that there should be efficiency bars in the time-scale of pay in the superior services. Brothers, we cannot, therefore, tolerate any bars in the time-scale of pay in the subordinate service of the Post Office.

34. The reduction in the hours of duties is of equal importance. Under existing conditions one is required to work very long hours, generally from 10 to 12 hours daily. The responsibility of Post Office duty is very heavy. Hard labour for inordinately long hours with considerable money responsibility reduces the men to a state of physical and mental paralysis; and it should not be allowed to continue for a day to the detriment of the service if we can help it. The authorities are, however, altogether callous. In the year 1919-20, the work of the Post Office increased over 11 per cent. and only 1·8 per cent. increased staff was sanctioned. Where is the wonder then that the manipulating staff should be harder pressed year after year. With the question of reducing hours of duty is involved the question of revising the Time-Test. We must press for workers' representatives in any committee that may be appointed to revise the Time-Test.

35. The question of punishment is another matter which we must take up in earnest. The superior officers treat their subordinates not as public servants but as public slaves. One who cares to know can easily find for himself, if one visits an important Post Office at a busy hour, how showers of abuse and insult pour down on the devoted heads of the clerks, as a most natural thing. Even assaults are not a very uncommon occurrence. But the clerks do not get protection from the Department they serve. They have to exercise Job's patience even under extreme provocation, lest their official career be ruined.

36. The Postal Administration is conducted by working on the terror of the subordinate staff. Circulars and instructions issued by the authorities always carry a sting in the tail and the sting is in the shape of a warning that 'mistake or failure to carry out instructions will be severely punished.' This betrays a mentality that has no faith in the sense of duty and loyalty of the workers, but depends entirely on the terror of punishment. Like slave owners, the Postal Administration always keeps the rod uplifted to get the work done. What is calculated to demoralise the men more than this? The authorities do not believe in the innate goodness of man. They appear to hold that man was not created by the Good God, but by the forces of Evil; and the evil propensities so inherited can be restrained only by the use of the rod.

37. Draco, the ancient law giver of Athens, is not dead. He lives in spirit in the Postal Administration. Have you missed a letter? You must be fined—you must bleed. Have you, through pressure of work, failed to exercise the necessary scrutiny prescribed in the Manual rules?—you must bleed, you must pay heavy penalty in fine and you must be degraded. Have you the hardihood of allowing your manhood to rebel against insults, abuses and assaults? You must bleed and your career is blighted. Any the smallest thing will be on record against you, and it will bar your progress beyond the efficiency bars, and your dream of entering the selection grades will vanish into the air. The Director-General, in his book recently published, admits, to quote his own words, 'Every official in the Department is supposed to have the contents of these four volumes of Manual at his finger's ends, but in reality few have ever read them through; and any one who attempted to obey all their instructions would find himself sadly hampered in the exercise of his duties.' But what of that? This frank admission by Mr. Clarke does not at all count when punishment is determined, and it goes on merrily as ever. We must seriously take up this question of punishment and the treatment due from superior officers. We cannot allow our manhood to be destroyed by such constant terror of punishment hanging like Damocles' sword over our head.

38. Brothers, our position will not be quite satisfactory, unless we can secure a voice in the Postal Administration in matters affecting the subordinate staff. The authorities have the knack of launching into schemes, hasty and defective; and the manipulating staff have to suffer. You know what happened when the despatch of Value Payable Money Order forms to offices of destination was abolished, what confusion it caused, what trouble it brought to the workers, what serious inconvenience it caused to the public, and how at last the old system had to be reintroduced. The abolition of Savings Bank Ledger maintained in the Audit Office was another instance of serious blunder, which generated endless difficulties and occasioned the ruin of many promising careers.

39. The disintegration of the Calcutta General Post Office and separation of the Sorting work to form a separate Sorting office under the control of the Deputy Postmaster General, R. M. S., was also a huge blunder. After a chequered career and various somersaults, the Calcutta Sorting has been restored to the control of the Presidency Postmaster. These blundering experiments have proved unqualified failures. But they involved a lot of wasteful expenditure and caused endless trouble to the workers. Such blunder can be easily avoided if the representative Associations of the workers are consulted, and due weight given to their opinion. For purposes of good administration, for the prevention of wasteful expenditure and for saving the workers from unnecessary troubles, we have a right to claim that in all administrative measures affecting the subordinate staff the All-India (including Burma) Post Office and R. M. S. Union should be consulted.

40. It may look ungallant, but I shall be failing in my duty if I do not refer to the invidious preference given to women clerks. They will start on a higher initial pay, much higher even than that of graduates; the rates of annual increments are higher, and there are no efficiency bars for them. All the world over, women clerks still hold a place inferior to male clerks, and only now a movement is going on in England on behalf of women clerks for an equal status with male clerks. But this natural order has been reversed in the Indian Post Office for reasons best known to the authorities. Are you going to accept this lower status assigned to male clerks or are you determined to remove the stigma of inferiority thus branded on your forehead?

41. Brothers, the tale of our woe is endless and I have touched only the fringe. But I have already inflicted on you a long lucubration to tire your patience. I do not dare to take further advantage of your goodness out of which you have given me so patient a hearing. I shall, therefore, conclude by asking you to remember that you are men, and not dumb driven cattle: you have a soul which is the essence of God and which nothing can repress except your own folly and ignorance and supineness. You have immense potentiality, capable of moving heaven and earth. Organise this power, organise with a purpose, organise with determination, and I promise you success will knock at your door.

Copy of a communication No. 76c-Cons., dated the 13th October, 1921, from the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs, to the Postmaster-General, Bengal and Assam.

I have the honour to say that the following extracts have been taken from a speech delivered by Babu Tarapada Mukerji at the Post Office and R. M. S. Conference, Lahore, on the 9th October, 1921.

Will you kindly ascertain from Mr. Mukerji if the extracts are correct and if he actually used these words in his address.

If so, I have the following remarks to make. The Address was a public one and has been printed for circulation. It is calculated to bring Government and the Postal Administration into contempt with their own employes.

Statements have been made which are unfair and untrue casting ridicule and scorn upon a Committee of Indian and European gentlemen who devoted a great deal of time and care to improve the pay and prospects of the Post Office subordinate staff. The cost of this revision was no less than 1 crore 31 lakhs a year and the result of the heavy increase in expenditure is that the Post Office which made a profit of 75 lakhs in 1919-20 has shown a deficiency of over 45 lakhs of rupees in 1920-21.

Other charges are made against the Administration of the Post Office which the speaker must have known to be untrue, I refer to extracts Nos. 2, 4, 5, 8 and 9.

Mr. Mukerji is a senior postmaster on Rs. 250—350 and has been officiating as Postmaster, Mymensingh. He is now nominated to act as Assistant Postmaster, Calcutta, on

Rs. 350—450, but it is impossible to place an officer in this important position who has publicly brought false and unfounded charges against his superior officers and against the Government. There is no objection to reasonable criticism of any action, but public abuse of the Postal Administration by a responsible officer belonging to it cannot be tolerated. If Mr. Mukerji holds the views expressed in this address, he is disloyal to himself by remaining in the Department. His whole speech is designed to stir up disaffection and disloyalty among the staff and I am sorry to find that any officer of this Department could be capable of such unseemly and disloyal conduct.

Ordinarily no officer who made a public address of this kind could be retained in Government service. But I am willing to give Babu Tarapada Mukerji an opportunity of withdrawing his assertions and expressing regret. If he makes a public apology in the following terms I shall ask Government to overlook the matter upon this occasion. If he refuses to do so, he may be given the option of resigning his appointment or of being removed from Government service.

FORM OF APOLOGY.

I, Babu Tarapada Mukerji, Postmaster in the Bengal and Assam Circle, admit that the extracts given below are correctly taken from my Address delivered at Lahore on 9th October 1921 at the All-India Postal and R. M. S. Conference.

I apologise sincerely for the expressions used in these extracts and for the unfair and unfounded statements which I have made about the Postal Administration and the Postal Committee. I withdraw everything which I have said as reported in these extracts and I promise, as a responsible officer of the Department of Posts and Telegraphs, to refrain in future from stirring up disaffection and disloyalty among the Postal Staff either by speech or actions.

To

THE DIRECTOR-GENERAL, POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS IN INDIA, CALCUTTA.

SIR,

In connection with the conversation I had the honour to have with you at an interview on the 17th November 1921, I have received a letter No. A.-9—T.-14, dated the 19th November 1921, from the Post Master General, Bengal and Assam, requesting me to submit my apology in the course of to-day.

I beg to remind you that I never told you that I would apologise for anything I had spoken at Lahore. I maintained that there was nothing in my speech which was unfair or unfounded.

My transfer from Bengal to Burma was in contravention of the accepted principle of the department; and although the transfer was ordered at the instance of Mr. G. P. Roy, Post Master General, and Rai Bahadur K. P. Sen, Deputy Post Master General, as I understood from you, one would naturally have the conviction that it was an act of persecution to transfer me out of India. I still believe that my transfer from Calcutta Barabazar to Dacca, and my transfer from Bengal to Burma were acts of harassment.

But from the conversation I had the honour to have with you I felt that a publication of the fact has been an exposure which you have taken much to heart, and out of respect for your feelings and position I agreed to express regret for it.

I also agreed to express regret for any strong language that may have been used with reference to Government, although I denied having used any, and you did not point out any particular passage or passages in my speech to which objection might be taken.

I beg most respectfully to say that I have been astonished that the conversation at the interview has been made to appear in a different light in the Post Master General's letter. After the conversation at the interview, it is needless to say that I decline to apologise for any part of my speech delivered at Lahore.

I have, etc.,

To

THE POST MASTER GENERAL, BENGAL AND ASSAM, CALCUTTA.

SIR,

With reference to your letter No. A.-9—T.-14, dated the 19th October 1921, I have the honour to state that I do not remember having said anything unfair or untrue in my Presidential address delivered at Lahore on the 9th October 1921.

2. The Presidential address was a printed document, and I actually used the words printed in it. The extracts forwarded with your letter under reply are extracts from my speech; but it is necessary to read them with context to avoid misconstruction.

3. The statements I made in my speech are none of them unfair or unfounded, so far as my knowledge goes. Unless therefore I am false and disloyal to myself, I cannot subscribe to an apology declaring my speech to contain unfair and unfounded statements.

4. As I have been called upon either to apologise or to resign, I submit it will not be irrelevant if I adduce facts in justification of what I said at the Lahore Conference, and I hope the Director-General will not refuse a patient hearing before he pronounces his final judgment. I will take up the extracts in the order they have been given.

5. Extract No. 1.—The extract is made from paragraph 4 of my speech; but it is altogether misleading if read by itself without reference to the context. The speech as delivered runs thus: 'It is therefore in the fitness of things that in our struggle for emancipation from the slavery, economic or otherwise, that prevails in the P. O. and R. M. S. service, our stalwart brothers of the Punjab should play a worthy part, and the first two sessions of the Conference should be held in the Land of Five Rivers. We are grateful to our Punjab brothers for their earnestness and spirit of sacrifice manifested in the fact of their having invited the Conference for two successive sessions'.

6. My submission is, there is absolutely no exhortation to the Postal officials of the Punjab to acts of disloyalty to the service to which they belong. My speech was only an expression of admiration and gratitude at the spirit of sacrifice manifested by inviting the Conference for successive sessions.

7. If objection is taken to the expression 'slavery, economic or otherwise, that prevails in the Post Office and the R. M. S.' I beg to say that the scales of pay in the P. O. even after the revision are quite inadequate; and this fact had been admitted by Rai Sahib Bawa Teja Singh, Postmaster of Lahore, in his speech as Chairman of the Reception Committee. When one of the chief officers of the Department holds the view that the scales of pay are inadequate, there is no denying the fact that living wage is denied to the men in the subordinate service of the Post Office. Economic slavery means nothing more nor less than that the workers in return for full time labour does not get full living wage. When the officials in the subordinate Postal and R. M. S. service do not get adequate wages, there can be no exaggeration to say that they are under economic bondage or economic slavery.

8. The public know, and whoever has taken the trouble to enquire knows, that the Postal officials have to work long and inconvenient hours. The Postal Committee in their report have admitted this fact. The R. M. S. sorters have in many sections to work more than 10 hours at a stretch in a running train or steamer. This is not economic slavery; but it is a slavery of the worst kind. The Postal officials do not practically enjoy holidays like Government servants in other Departments. They have to work 365 days in the year, and from 10 to 12 hours each day, often with split duty. If this is not slavery, one wonders what slavery really is.

9. From the explanations furnished in the foregoing paragraphs you will be pleased to see that there was no unfair or unfounded statement in the portion of my speech from which extract No. 1 has been made.

10. Extract No. 2.—This extract is incomplete without the addition of the words 'even in affairs of State' as is given in paragraph 6 of the speech. The Postal Committee in their report (vide page 6) lays down the maxim, to quote their own words, 'Any concession is entirely a gift, and this being so, it is for the donor to decide what the measure of the gift shall be.' This, I submit, tantamounts to saying that the workers are beggars, and they must be satisfied with beggars' doles. The Committee by this curious maxim denies the workers the right to claim living wage in return for full time work. The workers are not actually beggars and the employers are not donors. The workers are joint producers of wealth with the employers, and they have the inherent right to living wage as much as the employers. Naturally the strange dictum adumbrated by the Committee came as a surprise, and I and my brother workers were simply astounded.

11. The labourers of Great Britain were dissatisfied with the Cabinet for continuing military operations in the Archangel Region of Russia even after the conclusion of the Great War; and the Executives of the different labour Unions combined and advised the Cabinet to stop all military operations in Russia and to withdraw the troops that were in occupation of the Archangel region, failing which they said they would take Direct Action to make any military operation in Russia impossible.

12. Whatever therefore I said in my speech, from which extract No. 2 has been made, are all based on facts. Days of isolation are past. India no longer slumbers within the confines of her own boundary. She is wide awake to get her inspiration from abroad. The Indian labour world in general and the Indian Postal and R. M. S. officials in particular are alive to the World movement. It was therefore only natural that the Postal Committee's estimate of the Postal and R. M. S. employees should astonish by its contrast with the treatment of labour in Great Britain. I submit I was not therefore at all guilty of unfair and unfounded statement in the portion of my speech from which extract No. 2 has been made.

13. Extract No. 3.—As far as I have been able to ascertain from enquiry, the gentlemen who constituted the Postal Committee were, none of them, nominated by any one of the Postal Associations except perhaps Rao Bahadur S. Bangachari, whose name may have been suggested by the Bangalore Postal Union of which he was President. Those who had got the largest backing from the officials whose case the Committee was appointed to investigate, were, not one of them, given a seat on the Committee. It was therefore idle to expect that the Committee constituted as it was could at all command the confidence of the officials. I therefore cannot see wherein I have made unfair and unfounded statement.

14. It is an accepted principle all the world over that a Committee appointed to investigate the case of workers, should have in it equal representatives of the employers and the employee. The Postal Committee was constituted on quite a different principle,—and the workers' representatives were altogether excluded. If my information is not wrong, my name was suggested by a large number of Postal Associations; Bengal and Assam were unanimous in nominating me; there were other Provinces as well that suggested my name for membership. But I was not given a seat on the Committee. When the Postal Associations despaired of inducing the Director-General to appoint me as a member of the Committee, they approached Mr. Kamini Kumar Chanda, a member of the Imperial Legislative Council (as it was then called). Mr. Chanda wrote to the Director-General requesting him to have me on the Committee. The Director-General's reply to Mr. Chanda is very characteristic and I quote it in extenso to prove by the very tenor of the Director-General's letter that every word I wrote in my speech contained the barest truth. Many of the Postal Associations nominated Mr. P. G. Rogers and Mr. H. N. Hutchinson, Postmasters General. They were high administrative officers of the Department on whom the workers had faith, but not one of them was appointed member of Committee :

No. 5-S.-E. S.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR GENERAL OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS ;

Simla, the 30th—31st March, 1920.

DEAR MR. CHANDA,

In reply to your letter dated the 26th instant I am afraid that owing to a pressure of their official duties it will not be possible to depute either Mr. H. K. Baha or Babu Tarapada Mukerji to the Postal Committee as they cannot spare the time for a Committee which will have so much work to do. I am, however, asking the President of the Committee to call up Babu Tarapada Mukerji as a witness so that he will have every opportunity of expressing his views upon the points at issue. I think you will find the personnel of the Committee thoroughly satisfactory.

Yours sincerely,

(Sd.) G. R. CLARKE.

15. As to the portion where I said 'You cannot be bound by the findings of a Committee with which you had nothing to do, and who had nothing to do with you,' I have sufficient justification for the remark. The employees had actually no voice in the constitution of the Committee, and they had therefore nothing to do with it. The Committee on the other hand did not place any reliance on the evidence given by the witnesses chosen by the workers. The Committee summarily brushed aside their evidence, and built up their recommendations on the statements and papers produced by the Postmasters General and on documents supplied by other departments. Evidently therefore the Committee had very little to do with the men of the subordinate staff.

16. I submit that after the explanations furnished in the preceding paragraphs you will kindly see that I did not make any statement unfair or unfounded, so far as extract No. 3 is concerned.

17. Extract No. 4.—I beg to invite a perusal of the Committee's report, and no explanation will I submit then be necessary to prove that the dominant idea was to prevent any considerable increase of expenditure. The report of the Committee as a whole is pervaded with this idea and I fail to see how I could be guilty of an unfair and unfounded statement in merely repeating the same.

18. Extract No. 5.—A Member of the Bengal Legislative Council stated in his speech only at the Session just closed that more than one revision was granted to the members of the I. C. S., in the course of twelve months, and this statement was not challenged in the Council. This revision may have been in the shape of allowance, etc., instead of increase of substantive pay; but all the same, increase of income due to holding particular class of appointments is revision, whatever name may be given to it. I submit I cannot have done wrong in repeating the statement of a Member of the Legislative Council.

19. With regard to the last portion of Extract No. 5, I beg to invite your attention to the Director-General's reply in the Imperial Council given to an Honourable Member. He brought prominently to the fore the theory of "demand and supply", and he asked the Honourable Member as to why the Government should pay more when clerks could be had for less. Then, I beg to invite your attention to the majority report of the McAlpin Committee appointed to advise the Bengal Government as to the revision of pay of the Ministerial Officers and menials, and to the Note of Dissent by Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur. The majority report took shelter under the theory of "demand and supply", discarded family budget, declared the workers' evidence as unreliable, comparison was made with jail and hostel figures as well as with commercial firms.

20. Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur in his note of dissent met the theory of "demand and supply" by citing the authority of the Public Service Commission who declared the theory inapplicable to the conditions of India. I beg to quote a portion of the Note of Dissent to prove that every word I said in my speech, as far as Extract No. 5 is concerned, contains unexaggerated truth. Says the Rai Bahadur :

21. 'The comparison with Jail figures is bound to be an under-estimate, first, because in a Jail a very large body of men live together, which is not the case in a family; secondly, because in Jails several of the items of living have undergone either comparatively little or no increase. In adopting Jail figures, the important point to be borne in mind is that they do not include the increased cost of labour and the middle-man's profiteering. Paddy, pulses, mustard seed, yarn, etc., are purchased wholesale and prepared for final consumption by Jail labour itself; and while the cost of labour and the rates of profit have increased in the outside world, they have not effected Jails. We know that these are two substantial factors in making up the prices of articles. Again in Jails articles are purchased wholesale, and there is a considerable difference between the increase of wholesale and retail prices. A comparison with Jail figures is fallacious in several other ways. For instance, they do not show increases under the heads house rent, vegetable, doctor's fees, educational charge, etc.'

'Similarly I am not prepared to accept Hostel figures as an absolute basis of comparison, for the very good reason, that as every parent knows, the fixed monthly remittance is supplemented very frequently by the supply of several articles or cash. Moreover, the figures for particular Hostels referred to by my colleagues and quoted in appendices IV and V do not give a fair idea of the increase. For instance, the first item of appendix IV, viz., the Wan Hostel, is a missionary hostel, where accommodation is supplied at a concession rate and there is thus no increase in house rent. The second item, the Krishnagar Hostel, the estimate from which is regarded by my colleagues as most complete, does not include warm clothing and several other items, and here also the house rent is cheaper than it is elsewhere. The greatest defect in figures for the students hostel is that there are regular vacations, and the charges realised for these periods go a considerable way towards making up the deficit in the other period; and, besides, there are always a number of casual absentees, who do not consume food, but nevertheless contribute their share of the common cost.'

22. 'This comparison with commercial firms again is a misleading comparison. In the first place, in determining the rate of admissible increase in the pay of clerks, it was unnecessary to seek comparison with Commercial firms. Government themselves have recently revised the whole of their superior services and some of their subordinate services too; and the rate fixed for these services would give a fair data for comparison for appointments with the corresponding rates of pay in the clerical service. But as this gives a very inconvenient figure, this method of comparison has been avoided by my colleagues. To seek guidance from Commercial firms to determine the rate of wages to be given by the employer to the employee appears to me to be a strange idea, and in matters like these Government should rather lead capitalists than follow them.'

23. Extract No. 6.—This extract has been made from paragraph 21 of my speech. The extract is intelligible only if it is read with the context. It is my personal opinion, and it is the opinion of all postal employees who have given a thought over the matter that the Postal Committee would not have been indifferent to the evidence given by the witnesses chosen by the workers, and would not have adumbrated the curious 'Donor and Gift' theory if the Postal organization had been as strong as the Telegraph Association. To this conclusion I and other postal employees have come to from the very courteous and reasonable attitude of the Telegraph Committee towards the demands of the Telegraph Association and I still hold on to the same opinion.

24. As regards my remarks that the Scheme of Revision was inadequate, grotesque and ridiculous in the extreme, I submit there was no exaggeration in what I said. I have already explained in paragraph 7 that the Postmaster of Lahore, who is one of the chief officers of the Department, declared in his Chairman's speech that the revision was inadequate. I am therefore not alone to hold the opinion that the revision is inadequate. Grotesque and ridiculous the revision certainly is, although it may sound uncharitable to say so. The Director-General, in reply to representations made to him, said that he was helpless if under the revision junior men should get higher pay than senior men. This one confession comprehends all that I said in my speech. A graduate who was made paid probationer prior to December 1919 would under the revision get as his starting pay the wage of a reserve clerk, but a graduate made paid probationer after December 1919 would get a start of four years, and he would always mark four years in advance of the graduate who had entered the Department before him. Then again, as a result of the Committee's recommendations, cases have occurred in which a graduate or an I. A. or I. Sc. would get higher pay if he resigned and got reappointed. I submit that it is no exaggeration to call such a scheme as grotesque and ridiculous; and there was nothing unfair or unfounded in what I said in this connection.

25. Extract No. 7.—This is only a matter of opinion. The absurdities pointed out in the preceding paragraph do not exhaust the list. The distinction made between first class and second class Head Offices is another matter, the absurdity of which is apparent. There are District Head-Quarters with first class Head Office where the cost of necessities is much lower than in places with second class Head Office. Then, Barisal was at one time first class Head Office, and Mymensingh a second class Head Office. The position was reversed afterwards. Now if on account of partition of the Mymensingh District or from some other cause the work of the Mymensingh Head Office does not justify its retention as a first class Head Office, and if it is on that account reduced to a second class Head Office, the question will at once arise as to whether the cost of living at Mymensingh would drop down simultaneously and the pay of the clerks reduced to the standard of a second class Head Office. Similar absurd situation will arise if a second class Head Office is raised to the status of a first class Head Office. When such absurd and grave and serious faults vitiated the recommendations of the Postal Committee, we are naturally ashamed of the Committee, and it is not only my personal opinion but the opinion of the thoughtful public as well that the Government who appointed the Committee should reject instead of adhering to the Committee's recommendations.

26. Extract No. 8.—I only narrated the barest truth when I made the remarks contained in extract No. 8. The Director-General in his book 'The Post Office of India and its Story' makes mention, in the Chapter on Post Office Buildings, of the disgraceful scene of scuffle and petty riots every evening near the windows of important and busy Post Offices for want of space. I have personal experience, and every Postmaster who has held charge of busy Post Offices have personal experience, that the scuffle and petty riot is not confined amongst those who come on postal business. The public go on abusing and sometimes assaulting the window clerks in their irritation; and no protection is afforded against such abuses and assaults. I may mention only one instance that occurred in the Calcutta General Post Office to prove my contention. A European lady came in the afternoon at the window of the Registration Department and she asked the window clerk to accept a registered parcel. The clerk explained to the lady that parcels were accepted in a different place and the one she had presented could not therefore be booked by him, and he requested her to go to the place where parcels were booked. The lady got irritated, and abused the clerk to her heart's content, and came to the Assistant Postmaster in charge and complained against the window clerk. The Assistant Postmaster called the window clerk to know what had happened. When the clerk was explaining to the Assistant Postmaster the real situation, the lady got more and more irritated and in the presence of the Assistant Postmaster slapped the clerk on the face. What protection did the clerk get? Absolutely none. The Assistant Postmaster quietly told the clerk to go and work, and politely asked the lady to go to the Parcel Window and gave his Chsprasi to escort her to the proper place. Simply because the public knew that the clerks get no protection from the Department, that they dare to abuse and assault the clerks even in the presence of officers in charge. The clerks know very well that their career in the Post Office would be ruined if they give way under provocation, and their manhood is thus crushed out of them. The statement contained in Extract 8 is an unadulterated truth, and no language is strong enough to give expression to the deep and pent up feeling of the whole service in this connection.

27. Extracts Nos. 9 and 10.—I beg to take up extracts Nos. 9 and 10 together, as Extract No. 10 is only an amplification of the general observation contained in Extract No. 9. The accepted principle of the Postal Department is to consider an official guilty until he is proved innocent. This has been incorporated in the Post Office Manual for the guidance of investigating and administrative Officer. This is reversing the accepted principles of jurisprudence. Then, the circulars and instructions issued by the authorities are not considered complete without the warning that 'mistake or failure to carry out instructions will be severely punished'. I submit that the threats embodied in Circulars and Instructions can have only one signification, namely, want of faith in the sense of duty of the workers and faith in the efficacy of the terror of punishment alone.

28. The Postal Department has built up its own tradition quite in conformity with the above principle. The officers work under the impression that they must punish and punish heavily for every mistake, if they want to get work from their subordinates. I have had talks with some administrative and supervising officers on the subject of punishment, and some of them admitted that they have to be hard on the men, as otherwise the officers above them would hold them as too lenient. Then, every one of them was sure that in absence of the terror of punishment there would be nothing left to stimulate the officials to exertion. To such an extent has the tradition of working on the terror of punishment clouded the Post Office atmosphere that no count is taken of the most elementary moral truth, that constant terror of punishment serves only to demoralise, and demoralisation and efficiency cannot go hand in hand together.

29. The Director-General in his book 'The Post Office and its Story' has admitted that, to quote his own words, 'the marvellous set of rules known as the Post Office Manual was prepared, which has grown into four healthy volumes. Every official of the Department is supposed to have the contents of these at his fingers end, but in reality few have ever read them through, and any one who attempted to obey all their instructions would find himself sadly hampered in the exercise of his duties.' But, the Director-General's candid confession notwithstanding, there is no mitigation of punishment for failure to adhere strictly to any of the Manual Rules.

30. In the Chapter on 'People and the Post Office,' a very interesting story is related how the letters written by one Abbasali failed to reach their destinations. In the concluding portion of the story the Director-General writes: 'Poor Abbasali was quite perplexed and awfully sorry to know that all the valuable letters written by him for two weeks, sometimes containing cheques even, were thus washed away by the merciless waves; but no less embarrassed am I (Mr. G. R. Clarke) on hearing of the tomfoolery to think of what blame it may sometimes accidentally and unnecessarily entail on a Postmaster.' Here the Director-General admits that unless the truth is accidentally found out, as in the case of the letters written by Abbasali, the officials, although quite innocent and dutiful, are considered in the eyes of the Department as guilty. The Director-General himself therefore indirectly upholds me in the statement contained in Extracts Nos. 9 and 10.

31. Extract No. 10 contains an enumeration and description of the punishments to which the Postal officials are subjected. I submit there is absolutely no exaggeration in what I have said. The truth of my statement can be at once verified if a reference is made to the punishment awarded by Mr. C. D. Rae after his assumption of office as Presidency Postmaster, Calcutta. I am informed that a statement of punishment was compiled some time ago, at the instance of a member of the Imperial Legislative Council. I therefore submit that I made no unfair and unfounded statement so far as Extracts Nos. 9 and 10 are concerned.

32. Extract No. 11.—I submit that the extract, isolated from what precedes and what follows in my speech, is rather unfair to me. In paragraphs 38 and 39 of my speech I made it very clear why I made the statement, and I cannot do better than quote them below in justification of my observation.

33. I said in my speech: 'Brothers, our position will not be quite satisfactory, unless we can secure a voice in the Postal administration in matters affecting the subordinate staff. The authorities have the knack of launching into schemes, hasty and defective; and the manipulating staff have to suffer. You know what happened when the despatch of V. P. Money Order forms to offices of destination was abolished, what confusion it caused to the public, and how at last the old system had to be re-introduced. The abolition of Savings Bank Ledger maintained in the Audit Office was another instance of serious blunder, which generated endless difficulties and occasioned the ruin of many promising careers.'

34. 'The disintegration of the Calcutta General Post Office and separation of the Sorting work to form a separate Sorting Office under the control of the Deputy Postmaster General, Railway Mail Service, was also a huge blunder. After a chequered career and various somersaults the Calcutta Sorting has been restored to the control of the Presidency Postmaster. These blundering experiments have proved unqualified failures. But they involved a lot of wasteful expenditure and caused endless trouble to the workers. Such blunder can be easily avoided if the representative Associations of the workers are consulted, and due weight given to their opinion. For purposes of good administration, for the prevention of wasteful expenditure and for saving the workers from unnecessary troubles, we have a right to claim that in all administrative measures affecting the subordinate staff the All-India (including Burma) Post Office and R. M. S. Union should be consulted.'

35. I have given chapter and verse to show that the statements I made in my speech are all founded on facts; and my criticisms are all fair and reasonable. It was never my intention to bring Government and the Postal Administration into contempt with the employees. The report of the Postal Committee cause universal discontent; and petitions and memorials almost deluged the Directorate and the Government. This, I submit, was not my doing, nor the doing of a few malcontents. It was a spontaneous outburst of the dissatisfaction of the whole body of the subordinate staff at the recommendations of the Committee.

36. The petitions and memorials sent up to the Director-General and the Government did not evoke a sympathetic response; and this seeming indifference was bound to produce certain impressions in the minds of the men, which could not be conducive to the harmonious working of the Department. This simmering discontent was ominous; and I and the Associations with which I am connected wanted to get control over the men instead of leaving them alone to drift with the current, with a view to proceed on constitutional lines for securing redress of their grievances.

37. For this purpose it was necessary to win the confidence of the men whom we wanted to restrain and to acquaint the Government with their view-point and with the feelings so strongly working in them. To win the confidence of the men it was necessary to prove to them that we fully understood their case and were competent to help them out of their difficulties. My speech was carefully drafted always keeping this object in view; and I trust I succeeded in my attempt.

38. If the Director-General kindly condescends to consider my speech from the point of view mentioned above, I submit, he will be convinced that instead of attempting to bring the Government and the Postal Administration into ridicule, my sole endeavour was to create an atmosphere helpful to a mutual understanding. If I have succeeded in this, I have fulfilled a difficult task, and have rendered valuable service both to the Government and to the subordinate staff. If I have failed, it has been due to weakness and incapacity and not from lack of earnestness and zeal in the cause of peace and harmony in the Department.

39. As a senior Postmaster on Rs. 250 to 350, I had not lost touch with the subordinate staff. I possessed the unique advantage of knowing intimately the thoughts and feelings of the men; and I would be false to myself and disloyal to the service to which I belong if, at a critical time, an apprehension of trouble to myself had dissuaded me from an attempt to clear the lowering atmosphere by open and distinct utterances, as I have done.

40. In these circumstances I submit that I have done nothing unworthy of an officer of the Department. I would be false to myself if I were to apologise for doing what my conscience fully approves; I would be false to myself and to the service if I were to tender resignation for doing what I considered as the only honourable and sensible course conducive to the interest of both the Postal Administration and the workers in the Subordinate Service.

I have the honour to be,

Srs,

Your most obedient servant,

local Administration of the Central Provinces

the duties and constitution of a Central Advisory Education Board which it is proposed to establish with the Government of India.

2. The Calcutta University Commission considered that the Government of India perform an invaluable function by defining the general aims of educational policy, by giving advice and assistance to Local Governments and to universities, by acting as an impartial arbiter in cases of dispute, by supplying information, by helping to obtain the services of scholars and by guarding against needless duplication, etc. They proposed that the Governor General should be the Visitor of University of Calcutta and should have power to direct enquiries into its work. They added that, if the Government of India decided to establish a special organization to deal with university questions, the visitatorial function of the Governor General might be performed by the aid of this organization. They further proposed that the Governor General should have similar power over all universities—a power which, as they stated, is inherent in the Governments of all countries. They considered that the Visiting Committee should include at least one distinguished scholar from overseas and that the others should be men of Indian experience. They further indicated the functions which might be performed by the Government of India in paragraphs 54 and 56 of Chapter L of their Report.

3. At the present time, new universities are springing into being, and it is probable that certain local Governments will accept the further recommendation of the Commission that the admission stage to universities should be the intermediate and that secondary and intermediate education should be entrusted to boards separate from the university though including university representatives. This re-arrangement of the existing organisation may however be found unsuitable in some provinces. There is every likelihood therefore that the existing system, which is fairly uniform throughout India and is well understood, will become complicated by a variety of examinations held at different stages for admission to different universities; and this complication will be accentuated by the growth of new universities. Hence, in recent university legislation, visitatorial powers have been accorded to the Governor General and, further, the recognition of the Governor General in Council is required for the recognition of the equivalence of degrees or other examinations which may be regarded as qualifying for admission to newly established universities. It is clearly necessary that the Department of Education should possess some additional agency for formulating the advice which should be tendered to the Governor General or to the Government of India respecting these matters.

4. The adviser of the Government of India is at present the Educational Commissioner. In the new conditions, as described above, the creation of a larger and more representative advisory agency, comprising a non-official element, is desirable. In the opinion of the Government of India, therefore, the time has arrived for constituting a Central Educational Advisory Board which will not only serve the purposes of the visitatorial body proposed by the Calcutta University Commission but will also be in a position to tender advice on matters regarding universities as well as general educational questions.

5. The Government of India desire that it should be clearly understood that this body will possess purely advisory functions. It will be open to the Governor General, should he desire to make a visitation of any university with reference to which he is empowered by statute to make such visitation, to utilise the proposed Board or certain members of the Board for purposes of inspection. But, apart from its use by the Governor General for such statutory purposes, the Board will have no administrative functions. Nor will it in any sense interfere with the control of education, which will be a Provincial transferred subject. It is possible that the Government of India may entrust to it the conduct of certain examinations which they will control, but this question has not yet been decided.

6. Apart therefore from its position as an agency for the 'exercise by the Governor General of his visitatorial powers mentioned above, the function of the Board will, as regards local Governments, be restricted to the giving of advice whenever they ask for advice and, as regards the Government of India, to the assistance of the Department of Education in such educational questions as will still come within the purview of the Imperial Government and may be referred to the Board by the Member-in-charge of Education. The precise duties, which it will be convenient to attach to it, will become clearer after it gets to work. But the following are suggested as among those it may naturally be expected to perform:

- (i) The visitation of universities on behalf of the Governor General as Visitor.
- (ii) The giving of advice regarding the equivalence of examination standards.
- (iii) The scrutiny of any points of university legislation which is either subject to Indian legislation or reserved, when the Government of India refer such points to it.
- (iv) The giving of advice regarding the management of Imperial institutions.
- (v) The production of occasional reports, monographs on special forms of education, etc.
- (vi) The conduct of educational surveys, whenever required.
- (vii) The conduct of such examinations as may be entrusted to it.

For the due performance of most of these functions, it will be necessary to collect a body of authorities who are not merely experts in educational matters but will have knowledge of the conditions in different provinces and whose names will carry weight and influence. The intention of the Board, in fact, is to link the Department of Education more closely with the various official and non-official educational authorities and institutions throughout India.

7. The composition of the Board will be largely non-official. The following constitution has been decided upon:

- (a) The Educational Commissioner with the Government of India as Chairman.
- (ii) An expert member from the United Kingdom (whenever required).
- (iii) Two Vice-Chancellors of universities in India, one of whom will be a whole-time officer.
- (iv) Two Principals of privately-managed colleges.
- (v) Four Directors of Public Instruction.
- (vi) Four non-officials who, though not immediately engaged in education, are interested in the subject.

With the exception of (i), who is appointed by the Governor General in Council and will be the ex-officio Chairman of the Board, the appointment of the other members will be made by the Member-in-charge of Education with the approval of the Governor General. In addition to the above, Departments dealing with technical education in any of its branches will be invited to send representatives to take part in the deliberations regarding any technical matter that may be included in the agenda of a meeting. It is clearly necessary that the chairmanship of the Board should be held by a permanent official with the Government of India. The Educational Commissioner will also be able to conduct correspondence with members of the Board on questions which have been referred to the Board but cannot conveniently be postponed to the next meeting.

8. The tenure of office of the members of the Board will be, in the case of the two Vice-Chancellors, two years, and in that of Nos. (iv), (v) and (vi) three years. But, in order that the whole Board may not change simultaneously, half the first members under each category (iii) to (vi) will retire after two years by ballot or some other arrangement.

9. Meetings of the Board will be held quarterly—the first being held in February next at Delhi—and agenda of each meeting, as approved by the Member-in-charge of Education, will be circulated sufficiently in advance of the date thereof to enable members to come prepared with their opinions. It will be necessary and desirable to conduct some of the business of the Board by correspondence.

SELECTION OF CANDIDATES FOR KING'S COMMISSIONS.

75. M. K. Reddi Garu : Will the Government be pleased to lay a statement on the table to show :

(a) Since the year 1918 how many candidates have been selected to the King's Commission ?

(b) Of these how many have been from Madras ?

(c) Is it a fact that a number of applications were sent by aspiring candidates to the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Governor of Madras : if so, how many such applications have been received and how many of them from the Brahmin community and how many from the non-Brahmin communities including Muhammadans ?

(d) Did the Local Government recommend any candidates to the Central Government : if so, why none of them were selected ?

Sir Godfrey Fell : The statement asked for is laid down on the table. The statement is based on the assumption that the Honourable Member's question refers to the admission of Indian cadets to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst.

(a) 29 Indian cadets have been admitted to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, since 1918.

(b) None.

(c) Since 1918, 141 such applications have been made : of these applicants, 33 were Brahmans and 108 non-Brahmans, including Muhammadans.

(d) Yes. In 1920 and 1921, altogether three candidates were recommended by the Local Government, but all three failed to qualify for admission to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst.

ADMISSION OF INDIANS INTO THE MILITARY ASSISTANT SURGEON CLASS.

76. M. K. Reddi Garu : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that Indians are not admitted into Military Assistant Surgeon classes ; if so, on what grounds ?

(b) Will the Government consider the advisability of throwing it open to the Indians also ?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) The answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. As regards the second part, a reference is invited to the reply given to Question No. 555 asked on the 22nd September, 1921, by Rai G. C. Nag Bahadur. As the duties of Military Assistant Surgeons are wholly confined to the medical care of British troops and their families, it is not considered advisable to throw open the service in question to Indians, who might find difficulty in maintaining discipline in hospitals and elsewhere when the Military Assistant Surgeon is placed in command of British private soldiers.

(b) The reply is in the negative.

ELIGIBILITY FOR I. C. S. EXAMINATION TO BE HELD IN INDIA.

77. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Are the M. As. of the Punjab and the Allahabad Universities eligible to compete at the next competitive examination for the I. C. S. to be held in India in 1922, under the present rules ?

(b) Is it a fact that while M. As. of some of the Indian Universities are qualified to appear at the next I. C. S. examination to be held in India in 1922, the M. As. of other Indian Universities are age-barred ? If so, of what Universities ?

(c) Are the Government aware that for several years, the Allahabad University and the United Provinces Government did not allow any candidate to appear at the Matriculation, Entrance, or School Leaving Examination, who was below the age of 16 years on the date of the examination, which are held in March or April, and therefore M. As. of the Allahabad University who took their degree of M. A. in 1921 would be age-barred for competition at the next I. C. S. examination to be held in India in 1922 ?

(d) Do the Government propose to allow those M. As. of the Allahabad University to appear at the said examination, who shall not have completed the age of 23 years on the 1st of March, 1922, instead of the 1st of August, 1922, as provided for in the rules ?

(e) If it is not within the powers of the Government of India to alter the rules or make any exceptions, are the Government prepared to take immediate necessary action to meet the situation ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e). The Honourable Member appears to be under some misapprehension. The qualification for the Indian Civil Service examination to be held in India this year is not the M. A. degree but the B. A. or B.Sc. degree. The fact therefore that up to the year 1920 the minimum age for the Matriculation or Entrance examination of the Allahabad University has been 16 years, does not appear to impose any special disability on the students of that University; nor does there appear to the Government to be any reason why the age limit should be extended in the case of persons who have taken the M. A. degree of that University.

The rules are statutory rules made by the Secretary of State in Council and cannot be varied by the Government of India.

DISMISSAL OF BABU TARAPADA MUKERJI.

78. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state:

(i) if it is a fact that Babu Tarapada Mukerji of the Postal Department of Calcutta has been recently dismissed ?

(ii) if so, for what reasons ?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to lay all the papers connected with his dismissal on the table ?

(c) Is it a fact that this action of the Government has created a great discontent among the Post Office and the R. M. S. employees ?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a) and (b). The facts of the case have already been explained to the Honourable Member in my reply to his Unstarred Question No. 71 and the papers connected with the dismissal of Babu Tarapada Mukerji have been laid on the table.

(c) Representations have been received by Government from certain Postal Associations.

SPECIAL RAILWAY RATES FOR TRANSPORT OF CATTLE AND FODDER.

80. Rai Bahadur Luchhmi Prashad Sinha: Will the Government be pleased to state whether it is the intention of the Government to approach the Railway authorities for special rates for the transport of cattle, dry and milch, and of fodders?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: Government are satisfied that the rates levied on Indian Railways for the carriage of cattle and fodder are reasonable and, in the circumstances, they do not propose to ask them to quote special rates. Neither fodder nor cattle are liable to surtax.

2. The transport of cattle in times of famine at cheap rates has been tried in the past but was found to be of little use. Fodder is always carried at concession rates in times of famine.

LOW LEVEL PLATFORM AT KIUL JUNCTION.

81. Rai Bahadur Luchhmi Prashad Sinha: (a) Are the Government aware of the low level of platform at such an important East Indian Railway Station as the Kiul Junction?

(b) Are the Government also aware that the passengers, specially ladies and children, are greatly inconvenienced?

(c) If so, will the Government take steps to remove this grievance at the earliest possible opportunity?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) Yes. The existing platforms at Kiul Junction, East Indian Railway, are 1'—2" above rail level.

(b) and (c). The attention of the Agent has been drawn to the matter. But in the opinion of the Government of India there are many other matters which have a prior claim on the funds available.

CONSTRUCTION OF A RAILWAY LINE FROM MONGHYR PURABSERAI TO BARRIAR-PUR, ETC.

82. Rai Bahadur Luchhmi Prashad Sinha: (a) Is it a fact that there was a proposal for the construction of a railway line from Monghyr Purabserai, East Indian Railway Station, to Barriarpur, thence to Kharagpur and Jamui, a Sub-Division in the Monghyr District?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the papers in connection with it?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) The reply is in the affirmative.

(b) Government do not consider that any useful purpose will be served by laying the papers on the table. A reconnaissance survey of the line, carried out in 1914-15, indicated that there was no inducement to construct a line from Barriarpur to Jamooee, but that a line from Barriarpur to Gaighat might prove remunerative. In the present financial situation there is no hope of constructing the proposed line in the near future.

CONSTRUCTION OF A RAILWAY LINE FROM KHAGARIA TO SAMASTIPUR, AND THE GRIEVANCES OF THE LOCAL PEOPLE.

83. Rai Bahadur Luchhmi Prashad Sinha: (a) Are the Government aware that a railway line has been constructed by the Bengal and North-Western Railway from Khagaria to Samastipur without the provision of sufficient number of waterways, thereby causing stupendous hardship and misery to the people of that part of the country?

(b) Is it a fact that even those few culverts provided for on the line are closed up by the Railway authorities during the rainy season and floods, thereby causing the whole cultivated area to go under water and exposing life and property to the ravages of a flooded area?

(c) Are the Government aware of the rumoured intention of the people of that part to institute a damage suit against the Bengal and North-Western Railway Company on account of their disappointment in the matter despite numerous petitions, telegrams and memorials to the authorities to provide sufficient number of waterways?

(d) If so, will the Government be pleased to state what steps they propose to take in the matter with a view to remove the grievance?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a), (c) and (d). The Government are aware that complaints have been made on the subject for some years past, especially in regard to the Khagaria-Roserah section of the line. The question of the waterway on this part of the line was considered by the Local Government in 1913, and the drainage crossings provided were then approved. The question was again considered in 1915, and the Local Government then decided that there was no evidence that the floods of that year were due to the existence of the railway embankment, but in 1918, as an additional precaution the Railway Board sanctioned the construction of two bridges—one of 6 span and the other of 10 spans—at an estimated cost of nearly Rs. 50,000. The Government have no information regarding the proposed suit, and do not at present propose to take any action.

(b) Government are aware that certain culverts are closed by the railway authorities during floods; these culverts, however, were never intended to be flooded openings, but to deal only with impounded water from local rainfall and, even if kept running full the whole time, would make no appreciable difference in a flood.

7 UP AND 8 DOWN MAIL TRAINS ON THE BENGAL AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY AND THE MAHESHKHUNT STATION.

84. Rai Bahadur Luchhmi Prashad Sinha: (a) Is the Government aware that the 7 Up and 8 Down Mail trains on the Bengal and North-Western Railway running to and from Katihar have discontinued stopping at Maheshkhunt, an important trade centre and station containing many public offices, and consequently great inconvenience is caused to the public and officials alike, and repeated representations from those concerned so far seems to have had no effect?

(b) If the answer is in the affirmative, do Government propose issuing instructions to the authorities concerned to stop the said trains at Maheshkhunt station?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) In this connection the Honourable Member is referred to item (c) of Question No. 94 asked by Babu Baidyanath Prasad Sinha in the Legislative Assembly on 29th September, 1921, regarding the alleged slow running of trains and unnecessary stoppages at roadside stations on the Bengal and North-Western Railway.

To meet the desire therein expressed, the Railway Administration introduced a new time table on and from the 15th October, 1921, which allows for one fast passenger train to run through the minor stations on each section of the line where there are more than three daily trains carrying passengers.

7 Up and 8 Down trains connect with the Eastern Bengal Railway fast passenger trains and are considered the most suitable to run as fast passenger trains over the Barauni-Katihar section.

(b) Maheshkhunt is one of the many small stations from which complaints have been received on this account. All the complaints are being collected and considered by the Railway Administration with a view to meeting, as far as possible, the conflicting interests of the travelling public concerned.

In the circumstances Government do not propose to issue instructions to the railway authorities concerned.

NUMBERS, CASUALTIES AND COST IN THE LAST MILITARY OPERATIONS AGAINST THE FRONTIER TRIBES.

85. Rai Bahadur Luchhmi Prashad Sinha : (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the total number of Indians, Anglo-Indians and Europeans, combatants and non-combatants, employed during the last military operations against the Frontier tribes and number of Indians and other people killed, disabled and discharged ?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to indicate the total amount of expenditure incurred in the said operations ?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) and (b). A statement giving the information asked for by the Honourable Member is laid on the table. The statement has been based on the assumption that by 'the last military operations against the Frontier tribes' the Honourable Member is referring to the Waziristan operations. The cost of these operations for the year 1920-21, including the Wana column, amounts so far as is known at present to Rs. 13,09,36,000. The accounts for that year have not yet been finally closed.

Statement showing (i) the number of troops, employed in Waziristan during 1921 and (ii) the number of casualties incurred by the Waziristan Field Force up to date.

(i) The average number of British and Indian troops employed in Waziristan during 1921 are as follows :—

British	2,500
Indian	42,000

No separate figures are available for Anglo-Indians, who are included with British troops.

(ii) The approximate number of casualties incurred by the Waziristan Field Force up to date, is as follows :—

	British.
	Officers.	Other ranks.
Killed	41	10
Wounded	68	28
Died of wounds	6	1
Died of disease	21	46
Accidentally killed	4	1

Total	39	3,809	71

It is not understood what the Honourable Member means by the number "discharged".

INDIANS AND PERMANENT POSTS IN THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

86. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing :

- (a) the number of Indians who have been recruited permanently into the I. M. S. from among the temporary I. M. S. officers;
- (b) the number from each province;
- (c) the number of Parsees, Punjabees, Muhammadans, Bengalees and others so selected;
- (d) the number who have received Military distinctions;
- (e) the total number of Indians who were taken into the I. M. S. during the war?

Sir Godfrey Fell: The statement is laid on the table.

Statement showing the number of Indian temporary commissioned officers who have been granted permanent commissions, etc.

- (a) 85. In addition, 12 Indian officers have recently been recommended to the Secretary of State for permanent commissions.
- (b) and (c). The Government of India have no information on the subject, as no inquiry is made at the time of recruitment as to the province or class to which a candidate belongs.
- (d) 10 officers have been granted military distinctions.
- (e) 1,004.

MEDICAL MEN FROM MADRAS IN THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

87. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to state the number of medical men who were taken into the I. M. S. from Madras and the number confirmed from among them?

Sir Godfrey Fell: Government have no information on the subject. I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given to parts (b) and (c) of his Question No. 86.

SELECTION BOARD FOR THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

88. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the personnel of the Selection Board for the I. M. S. and the general principles which guide the Board in recommending candidates for permanent commission?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that besides other qualifications, the colour of the candidate, the educational qualifications of the wife in the case of married applicants and their fitness to move in European society, are also taken into consideration and candidates are questioned about them?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) I would invite the attention of the Honourable Member to part (d) of the reply given on the 5th March last to Question No. 369.

The guiding principle of the Selection Board is to choose candidates who, judged by their personal and professional qualifications, are likely to prove of the best value to the State.

(b) The answer is in the negative.

REGISTRATION OF OFFICERS IN THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE UNDER THE GENERAL MEDICAL COUNCIL.

89. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to state if it is a fact that officers made permanent in the I. M. S. are compulsorily required to register themselves under the General Medical Council? If so, will the Government be pleased to state the reasons for such a procedure?

Sir Godfrey Fell: The answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. As regards the second part, the procedure is in accordance with the regulations that have been laid down by the Secretary of State on the subject and follows the practice in force in England. In that country no medical man may hold any office under the Crown, unless he has been registered by the General Medical Council.

PREVENTION OF EXPORT OF SPECIAL BREEDS OF CATTLE.

90. M. K. Reddi Garu: With reference to the undertaking given last year by the Honourable Member for Agriculture that he will stop the export of some of the special breeds of cattle from India, will the Government be pleased to state if this has been given effect to; if so, what are the kinds of breeds that are at present prevented from export?

Mr. J. Hullah: The Honourable Member is referred to the reply given by me to-day to Question No. 59 put by Lala Girdharilal Agarwala.

PREVENTION OF THE EXPORT OF OIL CAKES AND OTHER MANURES.

91. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to state if they have any intention to stop the export of oil cakes and other manures from India in the near future?

Mr. J. Hullah: Government can give at the present time no indication of the policy they are likely to pursue in the matter which is now under their consideration.

PRICES OF VARIOUS KINDS OF MANURES.

92. M. K. Reddi Garu: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a comparative statement of the prices of various kinds of manures for the last four years?

Mr. J. Hullah: A statement is placed on the table showing the wholesale prices of different descriptions of manures in Calcutta in the beginning of December of the years 1918 to 1921.

Wholesale prices of different descriptions of manures in Calcutta in the beginning of December of the years 1918 to 1921.

EXPORT OF SANDAL WOOD OIL FROM INDIA.

93. M. K. Reddi Garu : Will the Government be pleased to state :

- (i) the quantity of sandal wood oil exported from India ;
- (ii) to what countries they are exported and in what proportions ?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : The information is contained in the following publications which are issued by the Department of Statistics :

- (1) Annual statement of the Sea-borne Trade of British India with the British Empire and Foreign countries.
- (2) Monthly Accounts relating to the Sea-borne Trade and Navigation of British India.

The annual and monthly volumes will be found in the Library.

PAY OF INDIAN AND EUROPEAN OFFICERS OF THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

94. M. K. Reddi Garu : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state what is the pay of the Indian and European officers of the Indian Medical Service who have been recruited since 1st December, 1919 ?

(b) Whether the Government have come to any conclusion if any oversea allowances are to be granted to the Indian members of the Indian Medical Service ?

(c) If no decision has so far been arrived at, do the Government propose to consider the desirability of restricting the overseas allowances to non-Indians for the present, in view of the need for retrenchment of expenditure ?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) I will furnish the Honourable Member with statements showing the rates of pay drawn by permanent officers of the Indian Medical Service employed on military and civil duties.

(b) Yes. An overseas allowance is admissible to Indian officers of the Indian Medical Service appointed after the 1st December, 1918, when they serve beyond the limits of India as defined in Army Regulations, India.

(c) This part of the question does not now arise.

OVERSEAS ALLOWANCES FOR IMPERIAL SERVICES OTHER THAN THE I. M. S.

95. M. K. Reddi Garu : Will the Government be pleased to state :

- (i) whether overseas allowances are granted to Imperial Services (other than the I.M.S.), and if so, the amount granted to each service, and
- (ii) whether the amount is granted to the Indian members also, whether they are recruited in England or in India ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (i) The Honourable Member's attention is drawn to Appendix A to the Resolution of the Government of India, Finance Department, No. 1559-E. A. of the 16th August, 1921, in which the scales of overseas pay sanctioned for the various Imperial Services are stated.

(ii) Overseas pay, being granted in consideration of the fact that an officer is serving in a country other than that of domicile, is in its very nature not admissible to Indians serving in India. As a special concession, however, it has been granted to Indians who were serving in the Imperial Services at the time when this form of pay was introduced, and will be granted to all Indians recruited in the United Kingdom for the Indian Civil Service during the five years following its introduction.

STAFF EMPLOYED IN PUBLIC SERVICES IN MADRAS DIRECTLY UNDER THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

96. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the number of (1) European officers, (2) the Brahmin officers, (3) the non-Brahmins, in all the departments of Public Services directly under the control of this Government in the Madras Presidency?

(b) If this is not possible at present, will the Government be pleased to lay on the table this statement at the next session at Simla?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The information asked for can, I believe, be obtained from the published lists of the services in question, to which I would invite the attention of the Honourable Member.

EXAMINERS OF THE POSTAL INSPECTORS EXAMINATIONS.

97. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the names of the examiners of the Postal Inspectors examinations from the year 1917 to the last examination and the communities to which they belong?

(b) Is it a fact that a brother of the Deputy Accountant General (Posts and Telegraphs) has been recently recruited to the department; if so, what are his qualifications?

(c) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the fact that none of the non-Brahmin candidates were made to pass this year?

(d) In view of this dissatisfaction that prevails, will the Government be pleased to order the revaluation of the papers of all the candidates by an impartial committee?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: The information called for by the Honourable Member is being collected and will be supplied when available. It would however be convenient if the Honourable Member would state which Deputy Accountant General is referred to.

CREATION OF NEW APPOINTMENTS IN THE ACCOUNTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, MADRAS.

98. M. K. Reddi Garu: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state how many new appointments have been created since the last financial year in the Accountant-General's office?

(b) Of those filled up, how many were given to the Brahmin community?

(c) Is there any truth in the statement that most of those that got these jobs were the relations of the then Accountant-General, Mr. Aiyar?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : On the presumption that the Honourable Member is referring to the office of the Accountant-General, Madras, the following is the reply to his question :

- (a) Since 1st April, 1921, 49 new permanent appointments have been created. In addition 55 appointments, which, prior to the date above mentioned were temporary, have been placed on a permanent basis.
- (b) Of these 104 appointments, 73 have been filled by members of the Brahmin community.
- (c) Mr. Woollam, a European officer, has held the appointment of Accountant-General, Madras, since October, 1920. Mr. R. Srinivasa Aiyar, who, it is presumed, is the officer referred to, officiated as Accountant-General in Madras for some six weeks only in May and June, 1919, after which he served in Burma and Bombay. He has been on leave since October, 1920.

DESPATCH TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE ON THE ASSEMBLY'S RESOLUTION
RE: CURTAILMENT OF THE TEN YEARS' LIMIT RE: FURTHER ADVANCE IN THE GRANT OF SELF-GOVERNMENT.

99. Beohar Raghubir Sinha : (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the reply given by Mr. Montagu in the House of Commons that the Resolution of the Assembly recommending the curtailment of the ten years' limit touching the further advance in the grant of Self-Government, with the Government of India's opinion thereon, has not yet been communicated to him ?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state the cause of delay and when they will be able to forward the same with their opinion ?

(c) Will the Government lay on the table any correspondence that may have passed on the subject with the Secretary of State and place before the Assembly their opinion on the subject when they are able to send up the same ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) Yes.

(b) and (c). It will be remembered that the resolution was discussed in the Assembly on the 23rd and 29th September, 1921. A copy of the debates and of the resolution adopted by the Assembly was forwarded to the Secretary of State on the 13th October, 1921. No reply has as yet been received. Government are at present unable to say whether if a reply is received it will be laid on the table.

CHARGES AGAINST MESSRS K. AND A. BLEWITT.

100. Haji Wajihuddin : With reference to my question No. 117 and the Government reply to it at the last Simla session, will the Government be pleased to state :

(1) whether it is a fact :

(a) that Mr. K. Blewitt was found guilty of an offence with regard to a respectable Muhammadan lady and was let off with a nominal fine ?

(b) that Mr. A. Blewitt, Assistant Station Master, Kalka, E. I. Railway, was summoned by the S. D. Magistrate of Puar (Ambala) in connection with an offence, and that notwithstanding his neglect to attend the Court, he was let off by merely tendering an apology ?

(2) If it is true, what action has been taken by the Railway authority in this connection ?

(3) If none, does the Railway propose to take any now ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (1) (a) The Government of India have nothing to add to the Press Communiqué issued on the subject on the 8th October last.

(b) As the Honourable Member was previously informed, the Government understand that the Assistant Station Master was fined but that on retrial the sentence was quashed.

(2) and (3). The Government of India have no information.

ALLEGATIONS AGAINST SOME GUARDS AND TICKET COLLECTORS OF AMBALA-KALKA RAILWAY.

101. Haji Wajihuddin : Will the Government be pleased to state :

(a) if it is a fact that some cases were started by the police in which some Guards and Ticket Collectors of Ambala-Kalka Railway were accused of stealing some shoes out of a certain parcel and the luggage of the Honourable Raja Moti Chand, C.I.E., Member of the Council of State ?

(b) If it is right, what were the results of these cases ?

(c) If the accused were convicted, will the Railway Company re-employ them ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) In October last two Guards of Ambala and a Ticket Collector of Kalka were arrested by the Police and tried for thefts from luggage and parcels loaded in brake vans.

(b) One of the Guards was sentenced to 12 months' rigorous imprisonment under section 381, Indian Penal Code, and an additional one month under section 411, Indian Penal Code and the Ticket Collector to two months' rigorous imprisonment under section 381, Indian Penal Code, and an additional one month under section 411, Indian Penal Code. (c) What is the total number of women employees in Post Offices ?

(d) How many of them come under the class of Anglo-Indians and Native Christians and how many are Hindus, Mussalmans and Parsees ?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) Women clerks are found to be useful in dealing with the European population, and their employment in towns where there is a large European or Anglo-Indian population (such as Simla), in cantonments and in similar places. Their employment has proved to be a success from an administrative point of view.

(b) Yes, in the lower grades.

(c) The total number of women clerks employed in Post Offices—135.

(d) They belong to the following classes :

Anglo-Indians	93

(d) How and when are such committees formed ?

(e) How are likely applicants to know that the post of a Probationary Superintendent has fallen vacant ?

(f) If not, will the Government take steps to ensure that the existence of vacancies is widely advertised before it is filled up in order to enable the best men available to apply in time ?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) No orders have been issued on the subject.

The matter is under consideration.

(b), (c), (d), (e) and (f). These do not arise.

104. Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: (a) What is the total number of appointments in the grade of Postmaster General in the whole of India and Burma?

(b) How many of such appointments are held by officers of the Indian Civil Service?

(c) And how many by officers promoted from the Post and Telegraph Department? How many are Indians and Anglo-Indians?

(d) How many Indians have held permanent appointments as Postmaster General till now?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a) 10.

(b) 5.

(c) 5. None of the present permanent incumbents are Indians. One Indian is officiating.

(d) 2.

NUMBER OF APPOINTMENTS IN POST MASTER'S CADRE.

105. Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: (a) What is the total number of appointments in Post Master's cadre which carry a pay of Rs. 500 and above?

(b) How many such appointments are held at present by Indians and how many by Anglo-Indians?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a) 26 appointments in the higher grades commencing from the grade of Rs. 450—20—550.

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a) 3.

(b) They are eligible for such promotion.

(c) None of the present incumbents are Indians.

Indians become eligible for the post by seniority.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF POST OFFICES IN NILGIRIS AND OTHER DIVISIONS.

107. Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam: (a) Is it a fact that only European and Anglo-Indian Superintendents of Post Offices are posted to divisions like Nilgiris, the Mysore East and the Mysore West Divisions?

(b) If not, will the Government state the number of Indian Superintendents who held office permanently in those divisions during the last 20 years with the period for which each has been in each of such divisions?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a) No. There is no such discrimination as is implied in the question.

(b) None. No Indian has ever applied for any of these Divisions and the Nilgiris Division, with Headquarters at Ootacamund, is not popular with Indians.

INDIAN AND NON-INDIAN OFFICERS IN THE MILITARY DEPARTMENT ENTRUSTED WITH THE DUTIES OF ROYAL AIR FORCE, ETC.

108. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the number of officers in the Military Department entrusted with the duties of (1) Royal Air Force, (2) Fighting units with machine guns, (3) Army Headquarters, (4) Headquarters of Commands, (5) Brigades, (6) Military Transport Department, (7) Veterinary Department, (8) Ordnance and Clothing Department, (9) other departments, and how many in each case are Indians?

(b) What are the comparative salaries of Indian and non-Indian officers in each department of the Military performing the same duties?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) In replying, on the 20th September last, to an almost identical question asked by the Honourable Member, I pointed out the difficulty in answering that question, owing to the vague and unusual classification of the units of the Indian Army which the Honourable Member had adopted. The same classification has been adopted in the present question, and there is the same difficulty in supplying the information asked for. If the Honourable Member will refer to page 7 of the Estimates of expenditure on military services for the year 1921-22, he will find figures of the number of British officers employed with—(1) Fighting units; (2) Army Headquarters, Headquarters of Commands, Brigades, etc., (3) Animal Transport; (4) Mechanical Transport; (5) Supplies; (6) Medical; (7) Veterinary; (8) Ordnance and Clothing; (9) Remounts; (10) Military Training and Education; (11) Royal Air Force; and (12) Miscellaneous. The total number of Indian officers with King's Commissions is at present 101. Of these, 93 are employed with fighting units, one is Aide-de-Camp to the General Officer Commanding, Peshawar District, one is on special duty in Persia, and 6 are employed with Departments. In addition, there are, approximately, 4,598 Indian officers with Viceroy's Commissions, almost all of whom are employed with fighting units.

(b) Indian officers holding the King's Commission are paid at present at the same rates as British officers of similar ranks.

SUPPLY OF ARTICLES FOR THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

109. Mr. Manmohandas Ramji : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state whether they have submitted to the Secretary of State for India for his sanction the rules for the supply of articles for the public service?

(b) If the answer is in the affirmative, will the Government be pleased to state as to why the rules were not placed before the Legislative Assembly for the expression of its opinion on the same?

(c) If the reply be in the negative, will the Government be further pleased to state whether they now propose to place the rules before the Assembly for their opinion before submitting them to the Secretary of State for his sanction?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : (a) The rules are still under consideration and have not yet been submitted to the Secretary of State for India.

(b) Does not arise.

(c) It is not the practice to place before the Legislature the draft rules on an administrative subject. Honourable Members will, however, have an early opportunity of expressing their opinion on the general policy in the matter of the purchase of stores for Government Departments.

ADDITIONAL EXPENDITURE DUE TO THE INAUGURATION OF REFORMED GOVERNMENT.

110. Beohar Raghbir Sinha : Will the Government be pleased to state the total increase of expenditure due to the inaugurations and working of the reformed Government?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The Honourable Member is referred to the statement printed on pages 39-41 of Volume I (No. 3) of the Council of State Debates. Further figures are being collected so as to bring the information up to date, which will be communicated to the Honourable Member in due course.

BELIEF AMONG THE MASSES IN PLAGUE-INFECTED LOCALITIES.

111. Beohar Raghbir Sinha : Are the Government aware that the masses in certain plague-infected localities generally believe that these epidemics are brought about by Government itself to reduce the Indian population in number and that the enemies of Government are making capital out of this foolish yet dangerous belief, to sap the very foundations of Indian loyalty?

Mr. H. Sharp : No such rumours as those mentioned by the Honourable Member have recently been brought to the notice of the Government of India.

RETURN TO INDIA OF MR. SUDHINDRA BOSE.

112. Beohar Raghbir Sinha : Is it a fact that Mr. Sudhindra Bose, a lecturer in the Iowa University, America, is not allowed to return to India? If so, why?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (1) Yes.

This gentleman is now a naturalised citizen of the United States having applied to renounce his British Indian nationality a few weeks after the outbreak of War. He was refused a visa for the journey to India some time ago at the instance of the Secretary of State, and in view of the information available about him, the Government of India are not prepared to re-open the question. He has not applied to the Government of India for facilities to return to India.

SUPPRESSION OF THE INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.

113. Beohar Raghubir Sinha : Is it the intention of the Government to suppress the Indian National Congress? If so, do the Government realise the consequences of such a policy?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : 'No.'

RECRUITMENT TO THE IMPERIAL FOREST SERVICE.

114. Sardar Gulab Singh : Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table the following facts :

- (a) Is there going to be any recruitment in the Imperial Forest Service this year? If so, what percentage of Indians will be recruited?
- (b) Is it a fact that last year the selection was made at different places, though in the rules and regulations it was written that it will be made at Dehra Dun. If so, will the Government please explain why this extraordinary procedure was adopted?
- (c) Is it a fact that among the selected candidates there were cases who did not pass the qualifying test; and there are cases who passed the qualifying test, were medically fit, and were rejected. If so, is the Government going to give some consideration to those candidates in this year's selection?

Mr. J. Hullah : (a) Yes.

Of the total required for India 40 per cent. are to be recruited in India. Of the number required for Burma 25 per cent. are to be recruited in Burma.

(b) Owing to the fact that the regulations failed to attract applications from a sufficient number of suitable candidates, the date for the submission of applications was extended twice and, as time did not permit of candidates responding to the latest call appearing before the Central Selection Board, nomination in their cases was left to Local Governments. The object was to obtain the number of Indian probationers required.

(c) No standard was prescribed for the qualifying test, consequently it cannot be said of any candidate undergoing this test that he either passed or failed in it. If by 'pass' and 'passed' is meant 'appeared for' the answer is that certain candidates who did so and who passed the medical examination were considered unfit for appointment by the Selection Board.

Candidates qualified under the regulations for the current year will obviously be allowed to apply but it is not the intention of the Government to give special consideration to any candidate.

ADDRESS OF WELCOME TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCE OF WALES.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member) : Sir, the Government of India have received a communication from the Chief Secretary to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, which, with your permission, I should like to read.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division : Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, before the House commences its daily business, I beg to mention that I gave notice on the 22nd of December with regard to an adjournment of the House to discuss the present political situation of the country.

Mr. President : We will come to them. These notices will be in order in a moment or two.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Sir, as I was saying just now, I have received a letter from the Chief Secretary to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, which I propose, with your permission, to read to this House. The letter runs as follows :

‘ I have the honour to acknowledge Mr. Tonkinson’s letter No. 138-Public, dated the 8th November, 1921, forwarding a copy of the Government of India Despatch with enclosures to the Secretary of State for India, dated the 29th September, relating to the Resolutions adopted by the two Chambers of the Indian Legislature regarding the presentation of an Address of Welcome to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. The papers have been laid before His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, who commands me to express his appreciation of the spirit which has animated the Indian Legislature in this matter, and I am to inform you that His Royal Highness will gladly accept the proposed Address.’ (Loud Cheers.)

STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member) : For the convenience of the Assembly, Sir, I should like to make a statement as to the probable business in the immediate future :

Motions will be made to-day recommending that the reports of the Joint Committees appointed to consider and report upon the Indian Electricity (Amendment) Bill and the Indian Factories (Amendment) Bill be taken into consideration. It is hoped that sufficient progress may be made to enable these Bills to be passed by the Assembly during the present month.

If the report of the Joint Committee on the Indian Income-tax Bill can be presented by the 16th of January, Government hope that the consideration of the Report may be taken up on Monday, the 23rd of January.

Government propose that the Code of Civil Procedure (Amendment) Bill relating to fraudulent suits should be referred to a Select Committee on the 18th of January.

Select Committees have already been appointed on the Indian Emigration Bill and the Indian Limitation Act (Amendment) Bill, and it is hoped that the Select Committees will be able to present their reports on the 18th and 23rd January, respectively.

Lastly, a Bill to incorporate a University at Delhi will probably be introduced about the 18th of January.

RESOLUTION RE: THE ABANDONMENT OF THE POLICY OF RÉPRESSION.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member) : To-morrow, various motions for the amendment of the Standing Orders will be placed before the Assembly by different Members, and, further, there will be a debate upon a Resolution to be moved by Munshi Iswar Saran, of which, I think all Honourable Members have had notice.

Several Honourable Members : No.

An Honourable Member : Only hearsay.

If any Honourable Member seeks to have the debate postponed on that account, then, we shall have to consider the point. I am, however, surprised to hear Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar say that he has not received notice of the motion, because he has put in an amendment to the Resolution.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras : Nominated Non-official) : May I offer a word of explanation, Sir? In the letter which I wrote to the Legislative Secretary, I said that I had not received notice of the Resolution, but that I had heard orally from Mr. Iswar Saran what the language is likely to be, and on that statement I sent in my amendment. I have not yet received notice.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : It was impossible to circulate notices to all Honourable Members, and if any inconvenience has been caused, we are quite prepared to consider the question of postponing the debate. But though official notices could not be sent out, we advertised the fact widely in the press. It has been in the Indian News Agency telegrams and, I think, in all the newspapers, that this Resolution would be taken up on the 11th.

I do not in any way seek to inconvenience Members in this matter. And, if there is any feeling that any other course should be taken or that the discussion should be postponed, we are quite prepared to consider the question.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas (Sind : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : I think myself every Member knows the wording of the Resolution. It is a very urgent Resolution and no inconvenience will be caused by taking it up to-morrow.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division : Muhammadan Rural) : Reuter's report is not gospel truth. There should be atleast twodays' notice before a certain Resolution is taken up, and without having that, certainly this House will not agree to proceed with the Resolution at such a short notice. I am within the four corners of my right to move for an adjournment of the

[Mr. K. Ahmed.]

House to have a discussion on the present political situation. I am entitled to do that under the rules.

Mr. President : I will take that point in a moment.

CONGRATULATIONS ON HONOURS.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : Before the Assembly proceeds with the usual business of the day, it is my gratifying privilege to perform a very agreeable duty and that is to convey to you, Sir, the warmest felicitations of the Assembly and its congratulations on the high honour which His Majesty the King-Emperor has been pleased to bestow on you. (Cheers.) To my mind, it is not an ordinary, routine, conventional honour bestowed upon you as merely the President of the Assembly, but it is also an honor to us. No one has worked harder than Sir Alexander Muddiman in making the reforms possible, none has worked harder than you in making them a success since they came. Your experienced tact and firmness have set the pace to the Assembly, and even from unwilling quarters I think the proceedings of the Assembly have extolled appreciation. You have set the pace, and it has been your privilege to do so, also to the Provincial Councils which have noticeably benefitted by it and we wish you God-speed in the arduous labours you had in Burma of late.

You have wished us a happy New Year. We fully reciprocate your good wishes and hope that it will not only be a happy but also a fruitful New Year, and that we shall see another important stage, under your capable leadership, in the progress of the reforms. It will be gratifying to you, Sir, to know that in England your work is as well appreciated as here, and not the least gratifying feature of the record of this Assembly will be that you have so well presided over its early deliberations. (Loud cheers.)

(At this stage Mr. K. Ahmed rose.)

Mr. President : Order, order. I will come to that in one moment:

Gentlemen of the Assembly, I appreciate very warmly indeed the congratulations conveyed to me in the words of Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary. The honour conferred on your President is one which, I think, we all recognise as the signal mark of the appreciation by His Majesty the King-Emperor of the auspicious beginning made by the Legislative Assembly in the new Indian constitution. As you know, it is the custom that when a ship in the Royal Navy or a regiment of the Army has performed a feat in an action at sea or in the field, some signal distinction such as the Victoria Cross is conferred upon it, and officers and men alike partake of the honour. In such a case, the regiment meets, or the crew of the ship assembles on the lower deck, to decide who shall wear the coveted decoration on behalf of his comrades.

The exact procedure has not perhaps been followed in this case; but I assure you, that though I am the bearer of the honour, my colleagues in this Chamber are all partakers in it (Hear, hear.) It has thus a significance beyond any meagre personal merit. May I repeat, while I express my deep personal appreciation of the manner in which this vote of congratulation has been moved by Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary, and while I am moved by the words which he has used of me, that this Assembly, and the world outside, knows that this token of appreciation by His Majesty the King-Emperor is a possession which belongs of right to all in this Chamber who have borne a share in laying the foundations of Indian Self-Government.

I thank you, gentlemen. (Cheers.)

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : If Munshi Iswar Saran's Resolution relates to the general situation of the country, I should like to withdraw the notice of adjournment which I gave on the same subject, because there will be a fuller discussion on a motion like that, than on a motion for adjournment.

Mr. President : I should not like to pass from the pleasant interlude brought into our business by my colleague on my left here without conveying my personal congratulations, and I think the congratulations of the Chamber to the Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey, the Finance Member, on the mark of appreciation which His Majesty the King-Emperor has conferred upon him for his public services to the Indian peoples and to the British Empire.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Finance Member) : I am very grateful to you, Sir, for conveying on behalf of the House its felicitations to me on the honour which I have received at the hands of the Sovereign. An honour conferred by the Sovereign, the fount of all honour, must always be received with gratitude, respectful gratitude, by the recipient and if he can feel in addition that that honour is appreciated by those among whom he has worked for the most responsible period of his official life and to whose interests he has endeavoured to give his whole-hearted devotion, then, Sir, the honour is redoubled.

Sir, I thank you.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : Before we commence the business of the day, I
12 noon. should like to convey the congratulations of this House to the Honourable Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi (Cheers) on the honour which has been conferred upon him by His Majesty the King-Emperor. He is not a Member of this House, but he is a very familiar figure amongst us. We take great interest in his Department, and he has frequently been amongst us and has evinced his sympathy for any motion that has been brought before this House for the advancement of education, and, to the best of his ability, tried to promote the interests and meet the aspirations of the educated community in India. We have always appreciated the spirit in which he has taken part in the debates in this House and the sympathetic response which he has always extended to public opinion as voiced by us. On behalf of the House I, therefore, convey our hearty congratulations to the Honourable the Education Member. (Cheers.)

The Honourable Mian Sir Muhammad Shafi (Education Member) : Sir, I am deeply grateful to my friend, Mr. Chaudhuri, for the kind congratulations which he has conveyed to me on behalf of my friends of this House. Not being a regular Member of this House, the position occupied by my colleague on my right (Sir Malcolm Hailey) and myself is entirely different. But I can assure all my Honourable friends of this House that I take as keen an interest in the success of the proceedings of this House as I do in the Council of State to which I have the honour to belong, and, in consequence, I appreciate the message of congratulation which has been conveyed to me.

PANEL OF CHAIRMEN.

Mr. President: Under Rule 3, I appoint :

3. Dr. H. S. Gour

4. Mir Asad Ali Khan Bahadur to complete the Panel of Chairmen to which Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar and Mr. McCarthy were appointed in the Simla Session.

COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE INTO THE FUNCTIONS OF THE DEPUTY PRESIDENT.

Mr. President: The Legislative Assembly is aware that the position of the Deputy President requires examination. In Simla, I made a statement of the general principles governing the functions of this officer and I now appoint a small Committee, over which I shall preside, to report to me upon the manner in which the duties of the Deputy President may be enlarged. The Committee will consist of

The Honourable Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru,

Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer,

Dr. H. S. Gour,

the Deputy President, and myself.

The report of the Committee will be laid upon the table in due course and, though it will be primarily drawn up for the guidance of the President and the Deputy President, the Legislative Assembly will be duly consulted regarding any action which may be necessary to give formal effect to its recommendations.

RULING ON STANDING ORDER No. 38.

Mr. President: I have a statement to make regarding Standing Order No. 38. A question has arisen since the adjournment of the Legislative Assembly, regarding the interpretation of Standing Order No. 38, which authorises a Member in charge of a Bill, when that Bill has been introduced, to make one of three motions in regard to it. The first two motions, namely, that it be taken into consideration or that it should be referred to a Select Committee, raise no controversy. It is the third motion 'that the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion' on which I desire to review and amend a ruling given in Simla.

It seemed to me at that time, that where, under Standing Order No. 38, any one of these three motions was passed, the Legislative Assembly should be held committed to the principle of the Bill, but, as the result of representations made to me from various quarters, I have come to the conclusion that this interpretation of the Standing Order may lead to serious inconvenience.

A Bill is circulated for opinion in order to provide the Assembly with material for a judgment upon the principle involved. I therefore propose to recall the ruling of 20th September, 1921, recorded in the Official Report of the Legislative Assembly Debates, Tuesday the 20th September, 1921, Volume II, pages 588, 589 and 592. After due consideration, I am of opinion, that the Assembly in passing the motion referred to should not be committed to the principle of the Bill to which it refers, and that, therefore, the motion that a Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion stands in a different category from the other two motions prescribed by Standing Order 38. It follows, therefore, that it will be undesirable to maintain the ruling then made. It will be for the proposed Select Committee on the Standing Orders to judge whether the statement I have now made should be embodied in a formal amendment of Standing Order No. 38.

NOTICE OF MOTION UNDER RULE 11.

Mr. President: I have received notices from four or five Members of their desire to move the adjournment of the business of this House in order to discuss a matter of urgent public importance. The notices have been cast in various ways, but they all refer in more or less general terms to the political situation in the country.

Now, in the first place, that question, namely, the political situation in India, is raised in a series of Resolutions of which notice has been given by different Members of this House, and I must take it for granted, that these Resolutions will before long come up for discussion. Therefore, the notice which I have received of the desire of Honourable Members to move the adjournment of the House must be read as an attempt to anticipate the debate which would otherwise arise on those Resolutions. On that ground, therefore, I am bound under the Rules and Standing Orders to rule that that notice is out of order. I should add that a case of this kind, which is of a general character, is not sufficiently definite—in the sense in which the word 'definite' is used in the Standing Order—to justify the interruption of business and, therefore, on that ground also the motion cannot be accepted. A matter to be 'definite', 'urgent', and 'of public importance', in the sense in which these terms are used in the Standing Order, must have arisen suddenly in the manner of an emergency. Now the political situation to which these notices refer has arisen over a series of weeks, indeed one might say, over a series of months; and it would make no material difference to the discussion whether it were taken to-day, to-morrow, next week or even next month. At all events, it is not of sufficient urgency to demand the interruption of the ordinary business of the Assembly in order that a debate may take place to-day. On all these grounds, therefore, the notices given are not in order. I hope the House will not misunderstand me when I say, that the matter is not urgent. Upon the political urgency of the matter the Chair has not pronounced, but in respect of the technical use of the word 'urgent' in the rule, there is no doubt whatever in my mind that these motions do not satisfy that requirement.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : I understand that there is a general feeling in the House that the House should be allowed an opportunity to discuss the policy of Government with regard to the present political situation. Sir William Vincent said just now that permission has been given to Munshi Iswar Saran to move his Resolution to-morrow. I am one of those who heard of the Resolution for the first time last evening from Munshi Iswar Saran at Raisina, and not knowing the exact terms of the Resolution we have not had the opportunity of sending appropriate amendments. I have, however, submitted an amendment by anticipation. I had not seen the Resolution before I came here this morning. I think it will satisfy the House if a suitable opportunity is given at an early date next week to discuss Mr. Iswar Saran's Resolution. Mr. Iswar Saran having given notice of the Resolution in very general terms, I think that amounts to a motion for adjournment of the House, and if that has been accepted by the Government, I do not see any necessity of bringing forward any motion for adjournment now. I should like Sir William Vincent to give us a suitable day next week, as many Members are not present here to-day who would certainly like to take part in the discussion. (Cries of 'To-morrow'.)

[Mr. J. Chaudhuri.]

That being so, no useful purpose will be served by bringing forward any motion for the adjournment of the House to-day.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I shall be the last person to accept the view of my friend, Mr. Chaudhuri, because, Sir, if the wording of the Resolution, which we are not aware of, is such that we will be shut up from discussing the matter at great length,—that is, the matter with regard to the present state of political situation in India—there will be some objection; objection will be raised with regard to that. So it is better for the Honourable Home Member, Sir, to enlighten us with regard to the wording of that Resolution. And, secondly, Sir, there is a strong suspicion in the mind of the public as well as of Honourable Members here present, as to how is it and why is it that Munshi Iswar Saran's Resolution was accepted by the official Member in charge, in the absence of or without the knowledge of the public, and outside the ordinary course. Sir, that being the ground, the matter fixes itself on the circumstance of the Honourable Member's movement in this Honourable House. And it raises the suspicion that there is some mutual arrangement between the Government of India and my friend, Mr. Iswar Saran, who has been allowed to move the Resolution in question.

Maulvi Abul Kasem (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, we are here to understand the debate. So far as I am concerned, it may be defective education or something more, but my Honourable friend's arguments are unintelligible to us. The Honourable Member, Sir, may either speak in vernacular or in English, but he must speak in a language which is intelligible.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Sir, that is rather usurping the function of the President.

Mr. President: Order, order. The Chair is quite able to take care of itself. The Honourable Member will kindly put his point of order as precisely as possible. What point does he wish to discuss?

Mr. K. Ahmed: The point is that under these circumstances, as the matter stands, with regard to the Resolution which we are asked, should be moved to-morrow; there is a strong suspicion in the mind of the people, and I daresay without knowing it, Sir, without an acquaintance with the wording of the Resolution, we cannot accept the view of Mr. Chaudhuri.

Munshi Iswarj Saran (Cities of the United Provinces Non-Muhamadan Urban): Sir, I rise to offer a personal explanation. It was about 10 days ago that I sent this Resolution to the Secretary of the Legislative Assembly. I did not write or speak about it to any Member of the Government of India. In fact I did not write even to any personal friend about it. About three or four days ago, I received a telegram, I believe, from Sir William Vincent, saying that the Government of India was willing to allow the discussion of my Resolution on the 11th of this month, and inquiring whether I would agree to its discussion on that date. I at once wired back to Sir William Vincent that I was agreeable, and it was for the first time to-day since the date on which I sent my Resolution that I met Sir William Vincent in this Chamber. Sir, I shall say only one word more. If I am misunderstood, if it is imagined, to quote the words of the Honourable Member over there, that this Resolution is the result of a friendly arrangement, then I shall content myself by merely saying that I treat the insinuation with the contempt that it deserves. Sir, my record of work in this Council, and may I add, my record of public life extending over a period of about a quarter of a century, is a sufficient answer to such insinuations either of the gentleman over there or of anybody else. As long as I am here, I have got to do my duty regardless of the frowns of officials or the misunderstandings of people like the Honourable Member who has just spoken.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member): Sir, I should like now to read to this Assembly, the terms of the Resolution which it is proposed to discuss to-morrow, because there is some uncertainty about its terms. It runs:

"That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council the immediate abandonment of the policy of repression inaugurated in the country."

Now, if the Assembly thinks that a Resolution of this kind was proposed in collusion with Government, all I can say is, that I shall be very much surprised. The actual position was this. I received information from various Members of their intention to move the adjournment of the House. We had also received notices of various Resolutions on what is called the repressive policy of Government. I was aware, on my interpretation of the rule and on an examination of the notices of Resolutions, that a motion for adjournment would be out of order. I was anxious to give the Assembly,—indeed I think the Assembly will want it—an opportunity of debating this question at the earliest opportunity. I therefore took up a Resolution which in terms was directly hostile to the action taken by Government and of a very comprehensive nature, and I put it down for the earliest date possible. If I am in any way to blame for taking that course, I regret it. All I can say is, that there was no question of any collusion, and what I did was for the convenience of this Honourable Assembly.

I may say, there is another Resolution of Mr. Rangachariar which is down, I think, in the list for the 12th, dealing with a different aspect of the same question, and it was not therefore necessary to consider that Resolution for the 11th. I am, however, entirely in the hands of this Assembly in the matter. I have taken what I believe to be an honest and open course, in order to afford the House, which might have been debarred from securing a date to discuss this matter,—an opportunity of doing so at the earliest opportunity. If there are any complaints regarding my action, I can only express my regret for having gone out of my way to meet what I believed was a general wish.

Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney (Nominated Anglo-Indian): Sir, as one of the Members of this House who submitted an application for an adjournment of the House to discuss this question, I gladly accept your interpretation and would urge that the Honourable the President's views on the motion for adjournment be equally applied to the Resolution under discussion. I do think that Members of this House should be given an adequate time to consider such an important matter, and it was only in yesterday's Pioneer that I saw that the Resolution would be put up. To put it up in such a way, I consider, is distinctly contrary to Standing Orders, for it does not give Members an ample opportunity for considering the subject. I therefore put it for the consideration of the Honourable Home Member and this Honourable House that the subject be postponed for a few days at least so as to give to Members desirous of talking on the subject a better and fuller opportunity of considering their views and placing them before the House.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I would oppose the proposal for an adjournment of this most important question. It is an urgent question: indeed we consider it so urgent that we think we should interrupt the business of the Assembly; the country is going wild over the state of affairs; and it will not do for us, the representatives of the people, to sit quiet without deciding this most important point. I am glad that Mr. Iswar Saran has given notice of this Resolution and I am thankful to Government for having placed it at as early a date as possible, because, I, knowing Mr. Iswar Saran as I do and having had a consultation with him in Calcutta in regard to this very matter, I knew he would not give notice of any Resolution which would not be acceptable to us. I am glad to know that the Resolution of which he has given notice speaks worthily of Mr. Iswar Saran. I therefore think, Sir, that it would be futile to move any motion for adjournment of it, and I urge that this motion may be taken up to-morrow without fail, and, if possible, Sir, that it should be given precedence over other business posted for to-morrow.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I am not called upon at this stage to give my views with regard to the Resolution that is tabled in the name of my friend, Mr. Iswar Saran; but without discussing the merits of the Resolution I endorse the view expressed by my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, that the subject is of such vital importance that it would be a pity if the House did not discuss it at as early a moment as possible. I was one of those who gave notice of a motion for adjournment and I gladly accept in place of that motion the motion that has been placed for discussion by Mr. Iswar Saran. I repeat Sir, that I do not commit myself to any view for the present. I accept that motion, only because it provides sufficient scope for the House to discuss the matter thoroughly to-morrow. I hope Sir, that the Honourable the Home Member will make it possible for us to discuss this matter to-morrow as early as possible.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas (Sind: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I rise, Sir, to draw the attention of the Assembly to one particular aspect of this question, and that is this: this is not the first time that a misunderstanding has arisen with some Members as to the action of Government when the Government has actually obliged the House by going out of their way to allot an official day for non-official business. On a previous occasion, a similar misunderstanding arose. On this particular occasion, so far from accusing Sir William Vincent of any collusion or sinister motive, I think we ought to be thankful to him that he has selected the earliest day for the Assembly to express their views on a subject which is foremost in the hearts of all of us. Therefore, Sir, I want to bring it to the notice of the Assembly that Mr. Kabeer-ud-Din Ahmed's remarks are not only out of place but they are actually against the interests of the House. In future, I think, there will be no such misunderstanding, because if the Government go out of their way and allot an official day for non-official business (and that business being in the nature of an attack upon the Government) then the result of such opposition as Mr. Kabeer-ud-Din Ahmed has made to-day will be that Government will not do such a thing in future. That is one aspect of the question before the House.

As regards the adjournment of this question, I do not agree with Colonel Gidney that this is a subject which should be adjourned. We actually had a meeting—a non-official meeting—at which Lieutenant-Colonel Gidney was also present, when we had an informal discussion on this very subject. I therefore do not think that the subject will be sprung as a surprise on any Member of this House. Of course I know that Mr. Kabeer-ud-Din Ahmed has only arrived at 10 O'clock to-day and he is therefore ignorant of that meeting. I therefore strongly protest . . .

Mr. President: I have allowed a discussion to go on for the last quarter of an hour which is entirely out of order, in order to arrive at the sense of the House on this question. But I should like the House now to come to a decision on the matter. There is actually no motion before the House. If I gather the sense of the House aright, Members want a discussion at the earliest possible moment. I imagine that the Home Member will take the discussion as put down for to-morrow unless there is very strong dissent from that course. Therefore, unless that dissent is shown now, the arrangement stands.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind: Muhammadan Rural): I rise to support the proposal made by my Honourable friend, Colonel Gidney. The only reason why I want an adjournment is, that the House now is not full up and a very large number of Members who are absent would like to join in a debate of this important character. I know nothing of the private conference which was held yesterday. I was not invited to that conclave and I do not know what decision my friends in that conference have arrived at. I was never called to that meeting and did not attend.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas: I spoke to you about it.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: You merely informed me that you wanted to hold a meeting; I was not asked to attend. Therefore, I think, Sir, that an important matter like this should not be rushed through as we know nothing about the Resolution except what the Home Member has just now read to us. We should like to have a little time for consideration of the subject and also to give our friends who are absent an opportunity of arriving and taking part in the debate. There is nothing lost by an adjournment for about a week, of an important matter like this.

Mr. President : Unless some Honourable Member feels strongly enough to move a motion, I must bring this discussion to an end now.

Bhai Man Singh (East Punjab : Sikh) : I move, Sir :

'That the discussion of Munshi Iswar Saran's Resolution should not take place to-morrow'.

In the first place, the Honourable Sir William Vincent has only just now read out the Resolution to us. I quite appreciate the fact that the subject is a very important one and requires immediate attention; but if it could have been postponed for a month since the inauguration of Government's present policy, it could very well be put off for a few days or a week more. There is no reason to say that the subject is of importance and that it must be decided to-morrow if not to-day. If the subject is an important one, it is also one which requires the fullest consideration. All the Members have a right to have due notice of the Resolution at least some time before to enable them to read it, to consider it, to think over the actual words of the Resolution and see if they want to send in any amendment to it or not. It is not the point that we know the subject or that we know that repression is there; what we wish to consider is in what words we are to oppose or to support this policy. We have only just now heard it and, of course, there is absolutely no time to go thoroughly into it. My Honourable friend, Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas, said that we had a meeting yesterday. I was present in that meeting. If I mistake not, there were not more than a dozen Members . . .

Mr. President : Order, order. I cannot allow references to private meetings. It is obvious that Members who are present at such meetings will probably differ as to what had occurred and these differences have no place in our debates.

Bhai Man Singh : My Honourable friend had said, Sir, that at this meeting, this Resolution was considered; therefore, I referred to that meeting. Further, Sir, we also see that the attendance to-day is very poor. It is not a subject of such importance that we cannot afford to wait for two or three or four days until we get a fuller House. Therefore, Sir, I would request the Honourable Members that we should postpone the discussion of the Resolution till, say, the 15th or 17th of this month.

Mr. K. Ahmed : To cut short the debate, Sir, as it was I who raised the question, I will now explain . . .

Mr. President : Order, order.

Maulvi Abul Kasem : I understand that Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar has given notice of an amendment to the Resolution moved by my Honourable friend, Munshi Iswar Saran. We have had no notice of that amendment. If that amendment is to be taken up for discussion to-morrow, then, I think, in fairness to us, we ought to have notice of that amendment. If that amendment is not to be considered to-morrow, then I think, time ought to be allowed for that amendment to come up for consideration and discussion. The question is an important one, and every one of us is anxious to hear the debate, and many of us to take part in it, but, at the same time, in order to get the definite and mature judgment of the House, I think the House ought to have sufficient time to consider the Resolution and its wording. As I read the Resolution, it is very wide and exhaustive; at the same time, an opportunity should be given to all Members to know the nature of any amendments of which notice may be given, so that the whole question may be considered in all its aspects and discussed when the time for discussion comes. As the Honourable Member, Bhai Man Singh, has said, as these things have been going on for several weeks, the sky will not come down if we do not discuss it to-morrow morning. We may discuss it any day this week or in the earlier part of next week, whichever we choose. I hope and trust, however, that as an official date was given, if another date is selected, it will also be an official day and that non-official Members will not be inconvenienced by taking one of their days for the discussion of this matter.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member) : We have gone as far as we could to meet the Members of the Assembly in giving an official day to-morrow for this debate, but I cannot guarantee that the state of the public business will permit of our doing that again. I am quite ready to do what I can to meet Honourable Members, but I cannot give any such undertaking. We squeezed this motion in with great difficulty to the exclusion of official business to-morrow. Speaking for the Government, we are indifferent whether this debate comes on to-morrow or whether it comes on later. All I wanted to do was to give the House an opportunity of debating it as soon as possible.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : May I inquire whether it would be permissible to send in notices of amendments now. We do not know what Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's amendment is. I am prepared to move an amendment myself.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : I should raise no objection. I have only just received Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's amendment myself, but I suppose copies of it will be sent out to Members to-day.

Mr. President : Before putting the question, I should like to point out to the House that the course of this discussion has placed the Chair in a somewhat difficult position.

I can accept a Resolution and put it down within the period of notice, that is to say, before the necessary days have expired, if I get the consent of the Government; but, in this case, the position is reversed. The Government, on behalf of non-official Members, approached me to allow the Resolution to be moved within the period of notice, that is to say, to suspend that particular Standing Order; and I was moved to do so largely on the ground that there were so many notices handed in asking for a discussion of this question at an early date and that, in view of the agreement between the non-official Members and official Members in this House, I should therefore allow this motion to be moved. As a matter of fact, the notice does not expire until the 14th of January, but I have no more opinion on the subject as to which is the proper date to take it than Government has. I am prepared to take the discussion to-morrow or to take it within the period of notice, if it is convenient to the Honourable the Home Member, but it seemed to me when I was approached by Government on this subject and informed that it was the desire of so many Members that the debate should take place at the earliest possible moment, that it was essential for me to meet that desire if I could.

I therefore put the question :

'That the proposed debate on the Resolution standing in the name of Munshi Iswar Saran be not taken to-morrow, but be taken on a date to be agreed upon by the Home Member and the non-official Members of this House.'

The Assembly then divided :

Mr. President : Before I announce the result of this division, I want to know whether any objection is raised to the procedure under which it was taken.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas : I think, Sir, there has been a good deal of confusion with regard to the voting. People who wanted to vote for the postponement, I saw them going on this side, others I saw going on the other side ; and whatever may be the decision, I hope, Sir, you will rule that the division be taken again.

Mr. President : The Honourable Member says that he observed that ; if there is any Honourable Member who actually did that, will he rise in his place and say that he was a victim of that misunderstanding ? If so, I am prepared to take the division again.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala (Agra Division : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : I went on one side, Sir, first, and then I went to the other side and so, I think, there was no mistake in the end.

Mr. President : What did the Honourable Member wish to vote for ?

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : For the postponement.

Mr. B. A. Spence (Bombay : European) : I voted on the other side first of all and then I was told it was wrong and then I went and voted 'No'—not for postponement ; you have just now told me that I voted 'Aye' ; I ask for another division.

Mr. President : I am satisfied that there was a misunderstanding which was due to a slip of the tongue on my part in calling 'Ayes to the right and Noes to the left'. I put the question again :

'That the debate upon the Resolution standing in the name of Munshi Iswar Saran be postponed from the 11th January to a date subsequently to be fixed.'

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : May I draw your attention, Sir, to the fact that there are a number of strangers in the body of the House, in the side galleries, during the division. I saw a lady in the corridor and one or two other people who certainly are not Members of this House. I wish to know whether this is in order.

Mr. President : The entry of persons into the Chamber itself or any part of it, except that to which admission is made by tickets, viz., the galleries above, is forbidden. Those who, not being Members of the House, are admitted to the lower galleries and corridors are the messengers and others engaged in the business of the House and certain officers of Government whose presence is required for the assistance of Members of the Executive Council and Secretaries engaged in the business of the Chamber. The presence of any other person is forbidden.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee (Industries Secretary) : I may state, Sir, that the lady who was in the corridor is an officer of Government who is here to assist me during the proceedings later on.

Mr. President : Then her presence here is perfectly in order provided she has the authority of a Member of the Government who is present, but not in other cases. I am grateful to the Honourable the Home Member for drawing my attention to it, because in a Chamber so constructed considerable laxity of practice is apt to arise and must be severely controlled.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : I may add, Sir, that the two other gentlemen who were there are there to help me in connection with the business before the House to-day.

Mr. President : I may add for information that when a division is taken, all persons, including persons to whom a courtesy right of access is allowed, must vacate the corridors and passages so that there may be no interference of any kind with the liberty of Members voting during a division.

The Assembly then divided as follows :

THE INDIAN ELECTRICITY (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee (Industries Secretary) : Sir, I beg to move :

'That the Report of the Joint Committee on the Bill further to amend the Indian Electricity Act, 1910, be taken into consideration'

[Mr. A. C. Chatterjee.]

The House will recall that this Bill was introduced in the House last March and was referred by it to a Joint Select Committee of the two Houses. The Select Committee met in September last and devoted much care and thought to the provisions of the Bill and has suggested a certain number of changes which we hope will secure the smooth working of the revised Act when it is finally placed on the Statute Book. I should like to take this opportunity on behalf of the Government, and I hope I may be permitted on behalf of the Assembly also, to thank the Members of the Select Committee for the labour that they bestowed on the Bill. They were most of them business men and it meant a serious call on their time in devoting the time that they did to the Bill. The report of the Select Committee was presented to the House in September last, and I now move that the Report be taken into consideration.

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 1 to 4 were put and carried.

Clauses 5 to 10, as amended by the Joint Select Committee, were then put and carried.

Clause 11 was put and carried.

Clause 12, as amended by the Joint Select Committee, was then put and carried.

Clauses 13 to 16 were then put and carried.

Clauses 17, 18 and 19 were put and carried.

Clauses 20, 21 and 22 were put and carried.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : Sir, I move :

‘ That in clause 23 of the Bill, as amended by the Joint Committee :

(1) sub-clauses (a), (b) and (c) be re-lettered respectively (b), (c) and (d) and before sub-clause (b), as re-lettered, the following be inserted, namely :

‘ (a) after the word ‘ where ’ where it first occurs, the words ‘ after distributing mains, have been laid down under the provisions of clause IV or clause V and the supply of energy through those mains or any of them has commenced, shall be inserted.’

(2) the word ‘ and ’ at the end of sub-clause (c), as re-lettered, shall be omitted and re-inserted at the end of sub-clause (d) as re-lettered ; and

(3) the following sub-clause shall be added, namely :

‘ (e) in the fourth proviso :

(i) for the words ‘ in the event of any requisition being made for a supply of energy from any distributing main of which ’ the words ‘ if any requisition is made for a supply of energy and ’ shall be substituted ; and

(ii) for the word ‘ it ’ in clause (a) the words ‘ the nearest distributing main ’ shall be substituted.’

Sir, we are indebted to Sir Vithaldas Thackersey for pointing out to us an oversight which also escaped the attention of the Select Committee when it first drafted its report. Clause 23 of the Bill which amends clause VI of the Schedule to the Act, as it stands at present, might involve the serving of a requisition for the supply of energy directly after the granting of a license and before any works had been or could have been laid down. Nevertheless the licensee would have been bound by law to comply with the requisition.

It will be observed that under clause IV of the same Schedule the licensee is given 3 years in which to lay down what are generally known as compulsory works. Similarly, clause V of the Schedule only operates after 2½ years from the commencement of the license. Part (1) of the amendment will make it clear that until works have been laid down and supply actually begun, a requisition for supply will not be binding.

The second and third paragraphs of the amendment are merely consequential and I hope, that the amendment will be passed unanimously by the Assembly.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey (Bombay Millowners' Association : Indian Commerce) : Mr. President, I wrote a minute of dissent to the Report of the Select Committee pointing out the inconsistencies that arose owing to certain modifications in clauses 5 and 6, and, in order to meet my objection, Government propose to amend those clauses by the amendments which are now before the House. I am satisfied that these amendments meet the case and hope they will be accepted.

Sub-clause (1) of the amendment was put and carried.

Sub-clause (2) of the amendment was put and carried.

Sub-clause (3) of the amendment was put and carried.

Clause 23, as amended, was put and carried.

Clause 24 was put and carried.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : Sir, I beg to move :

'That in clause 25 of the Bill after the words 'the said Act' the following words shall be inserted, namely :

'(a) after the word 'where' the words 'after distributing mains have been laid down under the provisions of clause IV or clause V and the supply of energy through those mains or any of them has commenced' shall be inserted; and (b).'

The reasons for this amendment are the same as were mentioned by me in dealing with the amendment standing in my name relating to clause 23 of the Bill.

The motion was adopted.

Clause 25, as amended, was put and carried.

Clauses 26, 27, 28 and 29 were put and carried.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : Sir, I beg to move :

'That the Bill, as amended, be passed.'

The motion was adopted.

THE INDIAN FACTORIES (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Mr A. C. Chatterjee (Industries Secretary) : Sir, I beg to move :

'That the Report of the Joint Committee on the Bill further to amend the Indian Factories Act, 1911, be taken into consideration.'

This Bill was also introduced into this House in March last and was referred by it to a Joint Select Committee of the two Houses. That Committee sat for several days in September last and devoted a considerable amount of time to a very careful examination of the provisions of the Bill. The Committee was composed of all shades of opinion and consequently it was impossible to obtain a unanimous report from it, but, on the whole, in regard to the main provisions of the Bill, there was considerable unanimity. The Committee has made certain changes in the Bill as it was originally introduced, and, on the whole, we think those changes are desirable. The Report of the Select Committee was presented to the House in September last and I now move that it be taken into consideration.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey (Bombay Millowners' Association : Indian Commerce) : Mr. President, the Members must have noticed that two of my colleagues with myself appended a minute of dissent to the Report of the Select Committee on two or three sections and in order that our position on the points may be clear, I should like to address the House a few words on the general question.

It is a matter of congratulation to the Government of India that they have legislated on the lines of the Washington Convention even before some of the other Governments have moved in the matter, and more particularly the British and the Japanese Governments. It must also be a source of satisfaction to the Government of India that the Indian Industrialists have not only accepted the limitation of the hours of work of adult workmen, but they have also supported the proposals. Even before the Washington Convention, the textile mills had reduced their hours of work from 12 to 10 a day, while most of the other kinds of factories ordinarily work less than ten hours a day and many of them work not more than eight hours. While the principle of sixty hours a week is accepted, it must be remembered that occasions often arise when exceptions shall have to be made to this rule. These exceptions, after full inquiry by the Factory Commission in 1908 were included in the Act. All these sections have been removed in the proposed Bill and provision has been made in the Bill to define the exceptions by rules made by the Local Governments. I do hope that a full inquiry will be made by the Local Governments in framing the rules so that no inconvenience or loss should occur to the industries.

Government have taken this opportunity of revising some of the other provisions in the existing Act. They have raised the minimum age of child labour from nine to twelve which is a very desirable improvement indeed if only we provide facilities for their education. But the objectionable feature introduced in the Bill is to raise the age of half-timers from fourteen to fifteen. I hardly think Government realised the serious consequences of this change. In the first place, it is going beyond the Washington Convention or the law now in force in England, Japan and other civilised countries, where, after the age of fourteen, the boy is allowed to work up to the maximum of ten hours. In fact, under the English Law, the boy, if he possess certain educational tests, can work the same hours as young persons from the age of thirteen and the reason is quite clear. It is at the age of fifteen that a boy is taken as an apprentice or helper in the workshop and the restriction of half-time working would be most harmful on such boys. The effect would be the workshop managers who never employ half-time workers will cease to employ these young boys and thus the boys will miss not only the opportunity of earning for his own living, but also of getting the training in the workshop at least for a year. He will never be satisfied with half pay and he will perhaps go for work in other classes of manual labour where in all probability he will have to work harder for his living without getting the training. For the boys employed in textile mills, those who have got experience know that the class of work which these boys generally do there can hardly be called hard labour. Such boys are usually employed on ring frames where all that they have to do is to piece up the thread when it breaks and to remove the yarn when the bobbins are full. It is difficult to say that Government is doing a service to these boys by these proposals.

As regards the girl of fifteen, the effect of the proposed legislation would be much more harmful. As this House knows, the Indian girl attains age much earlier than in other countries and I leave this House to judge whether it is better for a girl of fifteen to be working with her mother and mother-in-law in departments such as reeling and winding where the work is easiest and the atmosphere very healthy, or, to be away from the presence of her guardian and working as day labourer in the sun or building work or such other coolie work. It must be remembered, that a girl of fifteen, often married, will never be satisfied with half pay when she can earn full wages elsewhere. Even assuming that her guardians would prevent her from working away from them on other classes of work, would it be advisable to keep these young women with the boys of fifteen in the waiting rooms of the factory or at home unattended by their guardians? Any one who has worked in the Factory will insist that the best thing for her is to be working with her mother.

How would these young boys and young women feel when they are informed by the manager, that although persons of their age in England and other civilized countries can work ten hours a day, their Indian Sircar ma-bap has ordained that they shall only earn half the wages, and if they cannot live upon that, they must become the ordinary coolie on the road. I hardly think, that they would thank the Sircar ma-bap for their great anxiety for their welfare.

It should not be forgotten that this innovation has been introduced without consulting a single labourer of that class. It will not do to say that they do not know their interests. Persons of that age know their interests as much as any other person. Even in the United Kingdom, the wishes of the labour are first consulted. It will be news to this House that because of the opposition of certain sections of the British labour, that the British Government have not yet been able to accept the terms of the Washington Convention. My Honourable friend, Mr. Chatterjee, has just returned from England and when I asked him why it was that even the British Government have not yet accepted the terms of the Washington Convention, he replied that it was because the Railway workmen were opposed to the limitation to their hours of work under the Washington Convention. They did not want to be deprived of the wages that they are earning by working overtime. Whatever may be the reason, the fact remains that the British Government have to accede to the objections of the workmen, while we are now attempting to deprive the young boys and girls of their living and the opportunity of their training by this proposal.

I, therefore, would propose when the Bill is taken, clause by clause, to retain the provision of the existing Act limiting the age of half-workers to fourteen. The other amendments, of which I have given notice, relate to the definition of the word 'Factory' in order that playgrounds, school-rooms, etc., should not form part of a factory and follow the English definition.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras : Nominated Non-Official) : Sir, I rise at this stage to suggest to the Honourable Mover that this matter be put off till the day after to-morrow, for this reason : Mr. Joshi who is representing the interests of the labourers has been unavoidably obliged to be absent from the meeting to-day. I believe he has telegraphed to Mr. Chatterjee that he will be here to-morrow and, therefore, if this matter is taken up the day after to-morrow, he will be in a position to put forward his view of the matter, which, I do not think, can be quite as well put by anybody else. Mr. Joshi has been devoting his whole time to the consideration of this question and any Bill passed without his assistance would be regarded as inadequate. I, therefore, suggest to the Honourable Mover that this matter be adjourned till the day after to-morrow.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes (Commerce and Industries Member) : I must point out, Sir, that if Mr. Joshi is not here to-day, it is Mr. Joshi's own fault. The Select Committee's Report was circulated three months ago and though it is true Mr. Joshi went on public duty to the Geneva Conference, all the other people who went to Geneva have now returned, and I understand that the reason why Mr. Joshi did not return till later was that he indulged in private travel on the continent. At the same time, I recognise of course that Mr. Joshi's advice on a Bill of this kind is of great value. But the House must remember that Mr. Joshi was a Member of the Select Committee and had the fullest possible opportunity of giving his advice there. We have no desire at all to press this Bill unduly quickly through the House, but I cannot at this moment give a definite answer to Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's request for, in a matter of this kind, I must consult the Leader of the House. With your permission, if I may make the suggestion, I should suggest that the adjournment be taken now and that I may be permitted to give a reply to Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar after the adjournment.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey : Sir, I have not the slightest objection whether the debate is adjourned to to-morrow or the day after. Owing to the notice I received of this business coming up to-day, I made my own arrangements in such a way that I must leave Delhi on the 12th. I have no intention of hurrying up this matter. The further discussion may be taken up on the 11th or the 12th or later on in the month, but I hope that the adjournment will not be in such a way that the whole arrangement one makes after getting notice is upset.

Mr. President : The Honourable Mr. Innes has undertaken to consult the Leader of the House in the matter of the proposal for adjournment made by Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar. I propose, therefore, now to take the adjournment for an hour, at the end of which the Honourable Mr. Innes will probably be in a position to give the House the information it desires.

This Assembly now stands adjourned till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : I fear, Sir, that I must oppose Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's request for a postponement of this debate.

I find that Mr. Joshi cannot be here till the 12th and that on the 12th Sir Vithaldas Thackersey has to go away for a considerable period. That being so, it is a question whether we are to sacrifice the convenience of Sir Vithaldas Thackersey or the convenience of Mr. Joshi, and seeing that Sir Vithaldas is here and has given notice of several amendments, I do not think that it would be fair in the circumstances if the House acceded to Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's request. In the circumstances, I hope, that he will withdraw it.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I withdraw it.

The motion :

'That the Report of the Joint Committee on the Bill further to amend the Indian Factories Act, 1911, be taken into consideration,' was adopted.

The motion that clause (1) do stand part of the Bill was adopted.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey: I beg to move :

'That sub-clause (a) of clause 2 of the Bill be deleted.'

It provides that for the word 'fourteen' the word 'fifteen' be substituted in the original Act.'

Section 2 of the original Act runs thus :

'Child' means a person who is under the age of fourteen years,' and the proposal in the Bill is that 'child' should mean a person who is under the age of fifteen. That is the difference. I have already explained to this House how it would be a hardship on the boys of fifteen and the girls of fifteen if this new clause was passed. I have said that we as mill-owners are not much affected by this change. We do not mind what the House decides. I am putting this solely in the interests of boys of fifteen. I assure you, I have authentic information that if these boys of fifteen are not allowed to work full-time, the workshops would not have them. They can only join workshops at sixteen and for a year they will have to seek other manual labour. I do not know whether in the present industrial development we are right in insisting that these boys of fifteen should be prevented from joining workshops, when all English boys are allowed to join.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala (Agra Division : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : I support Sir Vithaldas Thackersey's amendment. It would be in the interests of the labourers as well as of the capitalists, and it was for this reason that I had already made clear my intention in the beginning as to the proposal. We have to compete with foreign trade and unless we can put our whole strength into the mills it would not be possible for us to compete. Moreover, if there is a labourer who has got a son of, say, fifteen, and if that son gets only half the wage, it means that the family gets only one and a half times. On the other hand, if the boy is allowed to work full-time, the family can double it, and, in this way, they will be richer and happier. On these grounds, I submit, that the amendment is a sound one.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I am unable to support the motion made by Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey. What we have to consider is whether it would be in the interests of the boys. It is not a question as to what they desire. The question is as to whether the Government and the mill-owners should not see that these boys do not suffer in after-life by being compelled to work for the full period during their early years. That is the real question we have to consider. The Honourable Member from Allahabad just now referred to the fact that the trade being in its infancy in this country it is likely to suffer if these boys are not allowed to work. That is a fallacious argument. I think we have in this country enough of manual labour and I do not think that the interests of trade are likely to suffer by these boys being regarded as minors. Even as against their own wishes it should be the duty of this House to see that these boys are properly protected. I take it that that is the attitude assumed by Government and I think it is a correct attitude. As far as possible we must see that these boys are not sacrificed to the interests of capitalists. I therefore oppose the motion of Sir Vithaldas Thackersey.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam (Madras ceded Districts and Chittoor: Non-Muhammadan Rural): It is all very well to say that the object is to protect these boys from being employed in factories, but the question is, what is it that these boys do before they enter the factories. Do they come from communities or from families which can well feed and support these boys at home and allow them to grow healthy and strong. That is not so. They generally belong to poor families and if a boy does not do any work he is not properly fed. So, if you prevent a boy from entering a factory before he is 15, you first deprive the family of a regular means of livelihood. If the boy is to be allowed in some kind of labour till that period, he will be employed in some irregular work and, therefore, the question of raising the age to 15 will not be a safeguard. Let us stick to 14 and leave it there.

Mr. Jannadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): I rise, Sir, to oppose the amendment that has been brought forward by my Honourable friend, Sir Vithaldas Thackersey. I appreciate the solicitude that Sir Vithaldas Thackersey, in spite of being a mill-owner, shows for the labourer, but, Sir, even though the labourer demanded that his son should be admitted before the age of 15 as a full-time worker in the factory, I venture to submit, that it is the clear duty of the State to legislate that he shall not do so. Sir, this House is probably aware that so far as Indian labour is concerned, there has been a complaint from all quarters from men who have gone into the question very thoroughly that the life of the Indian labourer is very short. The climatic conditions in India are unfavourable to life in the factory, and if boys are allowed to work inside the factory just at a time when they should grow and are allowed to make themselves machines for producing money for their parents, then, I do not think, there is any wonder that the life period of the Indian labourer should always remain short. I do not think, the boy who certainly should be given an opportunity to grow into a well-built man in the future, should be made a victim either of the ignorance of his parents or of the interests of the capitalists. The clear duty of the State here is to intervene and say, however much the ignorant parent may demand, for the purpose of earning money for himself, that his boy shall be a full-time worker, however much the mill-owner, either because of his solicitude for the ignorant labourer or from the point of view of self-interest demands that the boy should be allowed to work as a full-time worker, the clear duty of the State, it seems to me, Sir, is to say that the boy shall not be a full-time worker. In admitting boys of this age as full-time workers we are checking their growth. We are preventing them from having the opportunity of living the life outside the factory which shall make it possible for them to breathe the healthy air. We are stunting the growth of the future labourer of this country. I do not think, it is in the interest of the country, that this state of affairs should be allowed to continue. At the same time, the argument that he is prevented from earning a livelihood does not hold water. He is allowed to remain a half-time worker and if my friends, the mill-owners, are solicitous about not depriving the boy of the means of livelihood, they can surely increase the wages in spite of the fact that the boy remains a half-time worker. I should much rather see the solicitude translated into action in this way. Make the boy a half-time worker, increase his wages and, in the hours in which he is free, give him facilities for out-door life and for education which will fit him to be a better citizen. That seems to me to be the proper course for the mill-owners to take. That seems to be the proper translation into action of the solicitude that they have been good enough to show about the well-being of the labouring classes. I submit, Sir, that the Committee has gone thoroughly into this question and they have come by a large majority to the conclusion, that it is not in the interest of the labourer that the boy under 15 should be allowed to work as a full-time worker. I submit, therefore, that the House will throw out the amendment of Sir Vithaldas Thackersey.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: I wish to take this opportunity of thanking Sir Vithaldas Thackersey for the general welcome that he has given to the provisions of the Bill. We had some difficulty in both Houses in getting the Convention relating to the minimum age of employment of children passed, but at that time the good sense, the feeling that both Houses have for the interests of the workers and specially of juvenile workers, prevailed and the Resolutions that were placed before this House in February last were passed. The employers have accepted that position, and there has been no serious opposition to the question of raising the minimum age of employment. In the Select Committee, as well as here, opposition has been displayed to the proposal of the Government that the maximum age for half-timers should be raised at the same time. My task has been considerably lightened by my friends, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar and Mr. Jannadas Dwarkadas, in stating the arguments in favour of the proposal that has been made by Government. I should like to correct one or two statements that were made by Sir Vithaldas Thackersey in his first speech. He said that in England even now a child of 13 is allowed to work if he passes some educational qualifications. That is not true. Under the latest Statute, that of 1920, a child under 14 is absolutely prohibited from undertaking any employment of any kind. There has been some confusion in the minds of Members here regarding the English law.

The definition of a child in England applies to cases where employment is prohibited. The definition of a child in our law applies to cases where work for half-time is allowed. There is no real analogy between the two. I entirely challenge Sir Vithaldas Thackersey's statement that we are going beyond the English law in this matter. The English law even now is and has always been far in advance of Indian law so far as the protection of children goes. As Mr. Jannadas has already pointed out, the main object of the Government in framing this proposal was a humanitarian one, and also it was designed to increase the efficiency of Indian labour. It is quite untrue to say, that the labouring classes will not accept this proposal. As a matter of fact only quite recently a meeting of the Trade Union Congress was held at Jharia. I was not in the country at the time, but I have seen an account of the proceedings, and I have seen, at least so far as I can remember, that no protest was made at that Congress or at any meeting of labourers. I know that a very large number of meetings of labourers have been held all over India during the last 12 months since this proposal was adumbrated, and I have seen no opposition to this proposal of Government. On the other hand, I have seen many instances of complete approval of this proposal. Also, Sir, I should like to say that if we always waited for the consent of the labourers or of the capitalists to the protection of women and children, social reform in these directions would never be adopted in any country. I should like to make it clear, that under the existing law, up to the age of 14, a certificate of physical fitness is required before a child is allowed to be employed. As soon as he attains the age of 14, a certificate of physical fitness is no longer required, whereas a boy of 14 or a girl of 14 would, under our proposals, be at once liable to be employed for 11 hours every day. As Mr. Jamnadas has pointed out, we in India suffer from the inefficiency of labour. He has mentioned the short life of the Indian labourer. As a matter of fact, if you go to the mills and factories in India, you will very seldom see anyone above the age of 15 employed. If you go to any factories in any other country of the world, you will see a man up to the age of 60 or 70 employed in these factories. The whole design of this proposal is to secure that these boys will have a shorter period of work during the day and will therefore grow to be healthy labourers, and probably their longevity as workers will be increased, and thereby the capitalists will really benefit instead of suffering. Sir Vithaldas Thackersey has said that we are going beyond the English law. He was a Member of the Factories Commission of 1908, and that Commission, following the English law on the subject, proposed a young persons' class. We have at present no young persons' class in India. In England, there are certain special rules regarding young persons between the ages of 14 and 18. I believe, in Select Committee, at least so far as my recollection goes, a suggestion was made to the Members who represented the employers that we might have a young persons' class. That suggestion was not accepted by the Members representing the employers. Because we have no young persons' class, it therefore behoves us all the more to protect the child just at that age when he or she is growing into a man or a woman. Sir Vithaldas has mentioned the case of girls. He thinks it would be a great hardship for girls of 14 not to be allowed to work full-time. I join issue with him. (A cry of '15'.) We are allowing girls of 15 to work full-time. It is only a question of whether we are to allow a girl of 14 or 15 to work full-time. I entirely join issue with him. As a patriotic Indian, I think it is our duty to see that girls grow sufficiently strong in order to become healthy and capable mothers. We shall not secure that unless we prevent their being worked for 11 hours a day or 10 hours a day just at that age. In England, there exists a young persons' class; it is true that they can work under the law up to a maximum of 55 or 60 hours a week, but Sir Vithaldas is aware that by arrangement between the employers and employes in every trade in England, and in practice all over Europe, the maximum hours of employment of any man does not exceed more than 48 hours a week and in England it does not exceed more than 44 hours. That is in the case of adults. Children or rather young persons as a rule work much smaller hours, and there are many other restrictions on the employment of young persons,—restrictions relating to simultaneous meal times, restrictions relating to overtime, restrictions relating to dangerous and unhealthy industries. We wanted to make our law fairly simple in order that both employers and the factory inspectors might be able to administer it properly. Therefore, the Government in 1911, when the present Factories Act was passed, deliberately came to the conclusion that a young persons' class was undesirable in this country; and I do not think that employers would thank Sir Vithaldas Thackersey if he now suggests a young persons' class in this country. The employers would suffer just as much as anybody else if a young persons' class was introduced, because the Indian system of shifts would have to be altered, and it would be one system of shifts for children on half-time, another system of shifts for young persons, a third system of shifts for grown-up persons. I do not think, Sir Vithaldas would welcome the proposal for a young persons' class. If we do not have a young persons' class, I think personally that it is essential that the age should be raised from 14 to 15. However, we are in the hands of the Assembly. The Government have made their proposals: it is now for this House to say whether they will protect the interests of these young children, or whether they will leave the age as it is at present at 14.

I may mention one other point, Sir, before I sit down. Sir Vithaldas has referred to a private conversation that he had with me yesterday 3 P.M. as to the reasons why the Washington Conventions regarding hours had not been ratified in England. I gave him my own opinion. That is certainly not an authorised version of the British Government, and I should like that to be made quite clear.

I hope that the House will come to a careful decision in this matter.

Mr. President: The question is:

'That sub-clause (a) of clause 2 of the Bill be deleted'

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey: I want to reply to certain points raised in the debate and, I think

Mr. President: The Mover of an amendment has no right of reply.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey: The original proposition

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member has already had an opportunity of making two speeches virtually on the same subject and has made full use of his opportunity.

The original question was:

'That clause 2, as amended by the Joint Committee, stands part of the Bill.'

Since which an amendment has been moved:

'That sub-clause (a) of clause 2 be deleted.'

The question is:

'That that amendment be made.'

The motion was negatived.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey : Mr. President, I beg to move :

'That at the end of sub-clause (b) of clause 2 of the Bill the following be inserted as clause (c) in the proposed definition of 'Factory,' namely :

(c) Where a place situate within the premises or precincts forming a factory is used solely for some purpose other than the manufacturing process carried on in the factory, that place shall not be deemed to form part of the factory for the purposes of this Act, but shall, if otherwise it would be a factory, be deemed to be a separate factory and be regulated accordingly.'

Mr. President, my reason for putting this amendment is this : in the old Act there was no limit to hours of work for adults. It was only in textile factories that the maximum hours of work was fixed. Now we are introducing the limit of hours of work to 60 hours a week in all factories, and, therefore, it is absolutely necessary in urgent cases to provide for working outside recognized working hours for instance, in jute mills and in some cotton mills it is necessary to empty wagons at once as soon as they arrive or else demurrage is levied ; and sometimes we have to make deliveries on Sundays of bales of cloth or yarn. On other occasions coal is received on Sundays and clerks and gatemen have to attend. For this reason it is absolutely necessary that we should define what the precincts of the factory is. We have not the slightest objection to limiting hours of work to 60 hours a week in the factory ; but if we have a class of work outside the working of the factory which comes into the same category of work which is not limited in other warehouses, we should not be prevented from meeting the convenience of merchants in the delivery of goods, when it arrives outside normal hours. I therefore think it is absolutely necessary that the definition should make this point clear. At the same time it is quite clear that if the other portion is virtually like a factory that portion becomes a separate factory.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : Sir, I regret very much that I should have to oppose this proposal also, although I have very great sympathy with Sir Vithaldas' difficulties. But he has given out the real reason for which he wants this amendment to go through. The object is to exempt certain classes of persons who work in a factory from liability to the provisions of the law. I do not think Government can very well support Sir Vithaldas in this proposal. He no doubt has copied the wording of his proposal from section 149 (4) of the English Act. But, in England, every workshop, every factory, no matter what class of work is carried on, no matter what number of persons is there employed, no matter whether power is used or not, becomes a factory. This separate portion of the factory under the Indian Law will have to come under the special provisions of our definition of a factory in order to become a factory ; in our law we are proposing that at least 20 persons should be employed and power should be used in order that a place may be classed as a factory. So that, if power is not used in the portion that will be cut off, it won't come under the definition of a factory. Therefore if Sir Vithaldas' amendment is carried, a large number of people employed within factory precincts who ought to be under the ordinary law under the factory law—and who would not have then to work for more than 60 hours a week and would get many other privileges, would not have any of these privileges. I am afraid, for these reasons, I must oppose this amendment.

Mr. President : The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Clauses 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 were added to the Bill.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey : Mr. President, I beg to move :

'That in clause 10 of the Bill the following proviso be added to the new section 19-A, proposed to be inserted in the Indian Factories Act, 1911, namely :

'Provided that yards, playgrounds and places open to the public view, school rooms, waiting rooms and other rooms belonging to the factory in which no machinery is used or manufacturing process carried on, shall not be taken to be any part of the factory within the meaning of this enactment.'

These words also are taken from the English Act. Section 19-A, as introduced by clause 10, provides that :

'Where in the opinion of the Inspector the presence in any factory or any part thereof of children, who, by reason of their age, cannot, under the provisions of this Act, be lawfully employed therein, involves danger to, or injury to the health of, such children, he may serve on the manager of such factory an order in writing prohibiting the admission of such children to the factory or part thereof.'

Now, as we have passed the previous section, 'factory' means the compound also and it will include the school room, the yards, playgrounds. I think if you wish the mill-owners to provide some facilities for children's playgrounds or schools, this definition is absolutely necessary. Otherwise, they shall have to do away with all these facilities which the mill-owners are willing to give to the children.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : I regret very much that I have again to oppose this amendment. This clause of the Bill, the new section, 19-A, was framed by Government in deference to the views expressed by the Factory Inspectors employed all over India. They informed us that the largest number of accidents in the mill precincts in which children were concerned arose from tram and rail sidings running inside the factory precincts. No attempt was made to protect these tram and rail sidings, and children ran all over the place and very often met with accidents. As I say, the clause was designed to prevent such accidents. The wording of the clause is very clear. It is only when the Inspector is satisfied that there will be danger or injury to the health of the children that he will pass an order. Surely Sir Vithaldas does not think that the Inspector will pass arbitrary orders. Apart from that, an Inspector's order, which is merely an executive order, is open to appeal under section 50 of the Act. By clause 30 of the amended Bill we have provided that this order will be open to appeal to the Local Government. I hope this explanation will satisfy Sir Vithaldas. If an Inspector passes an arbitrary order, the order will be open to appeal and I hope Sir Vithaldas will not say that the Local Government will also pass arbitrary orders in cases where really no danger is involved to little children.

The motion was negatived.

Clauses 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17 were added to the Bill.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : Sir, I beg to move :

'That in clause 18 of the Bill as amended by the Joint Committee for sub-section (3) of the proposed new section 30 the following shall be substituted, namely :

'(3) In such circumstances and subject to such conditions as may be prescribed, nothing in section 21 of section 22 shall apply to work on urgent repairs.'

[Mr. A. C. Chatterjee.]

It has been brought to our notice, Sir, that the wording of sub-section (3), as amended by the Joint Committee, is liable to be misunderstood. We understood that the object of the Joint Committee was to allow a special privilege in the case of urgent repairs that might be necessary anywhere, but, as a matter of fact, the words used have been 'urgent repairs executed in any factory.' It has been brought to our notice that this will prevent urgent repairs being executed, say to a ship which has just come into port, or to a railway engine, or anything of that sort, and so we thought that a little re-drafting was desirable. At the same time we thought that it would be better, if we were extending the privilege to work of urgent repairs everywhere, that we should allow the Local Governments to give this privilege subject to such conditions as they may prescribe. We also found that if we made this slight addition, it might enable the Government of India and the Indian Legislature to ratify, when the time comes for ratification, the Convention passed at the recent International Labour Conference held in Geneva with regard to the weekly day of rest. The Government of India have not yet received a copy of that draft Convention in a formal manner, and the question has not yet been fully considered, but we thought that if this slight alteration, which I think will meet Sir Vithaldas Thackersey's desire, were made, it might be possible to ratify the Convention if the Legislature and the Government of India thought fit to do so on general merits. We also think this amendment is desirable on its own merits, irrespective of any consideration of the Convention passed at Geneva.

I therefore beg to propose that this amendment be made in the Bill.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey : Sir, there is a further amendment which I wish to make to this section. I accept the words introduced by my Honourable friend, Mr. Chatterjee. I propose :

'That for the words 'in section 21 or section 22' the words 'in section 21, 22, 27 or 28' be substituted.'

As was explained by my Honourable friend, this section is provided for repairs of an urgent character and it may be necessary to relax the restrictions imposed by sections 27 and 28 in respect of the limitation of work to 11 hours per day. It may happen that at the end of the day or the middle of the day urgent repairs may be called for and we may have to employ a man a couple of hours longer in order to complete the repairs. Therefore I propose that sections 27 and 28 be added to sections 21 and 22.

Mr. President : Does the Honourable Member move that as an addition to Mr. Chatterjee's amendment ?

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey : Yes, Sir.

Mr. President : The question is :

'That the words '27 or 28' be inserted after the word '22' in the amendment, standing on the paper.'

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : I will accept that amendment to my amendment.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President : The question is :

'That in clause 18 of the Bill, as amended by the Joint Committee, for sub-section (3) of the proposed new section 30 the following be substituted, namely :

'(3) In such circumstances and subject to such conditions as may be prescribed nothing in sections 21, 22, 27 or 28 shall apply to work on urgent repairs.'

The motion was adopted.

Clause 18, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Clauses 19 and 20 were added to the Bill.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : Sir, I beg to move :

'That to clause 21 of the Bill, as amended by the Joint Committee, the following be added, namely :

'(c) after clause (d) of sub-section (1) the following shall be inserted, namely :

'(e) the weekly holidays fixed under section 22.'

This was really, Sir, an oversight on the part of the Government. When the Select Committee altered section 13 of the Bill and went back to the old provision of the existing Act regarding the weekly rest day we ought to have made this further consequential change, because it is desirable—and I understand it is also the practice in all factories—to post up the days which are going to be observed as rest days. But, I am sorry, Sir, that I forgot to suggest this at the moment and so I am proposing this amendment. This will also enable us to comply with all the provisions of the Draft Convention passed at Geneva regarding the weekly rest day. As I have already said, the Government of India have not really considered those Conventions but if we make this alteration, to which I do not think anybody will take exception, it will comply with all the technical requirements of that draft Convention ; and as I have said already, this proposal is desirable on its own merits and I believe it only embodies in law the actual practice observed in all factories.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey : Sir, I have no objection to accept the amendment proposed, but I want to make one or two points clear. It is our practice to put up a notice board in the office or at the gate of the weekly holidays. At the same time, this holiday is liable to change. We may have to change that day and we give some times a day's notice or two days' notice to the Inspector that we are changing the day to such and such date. Will this amendment prevent us from following the present practice ? It will be very hard on us when we have once fixed a day not to be able to change it afterwards.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : I do not think, Sir, that under the Act as it stands at present—section 36 of the Act—what Sir Vithaldas wants will be contrary to the law ; but, Sir, I cannot say what the Courts will determine later on. I think my Honourable friend, the Law Member, will be able to give better advice. Personally I think there will be no objection at all, so far as I can judge the law.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey : As Members of this House we must surely know the result of any particular amendment we may pass in law. We the mill-owners are quite willing that a notice be put up in the office or at the gate telling the hands what the holidays will be. At the same time, under the existing Act, we have the power and the facility, in case of accident when the mill may have to be closed on some other day, or in case the Lands desire to fix some other day, or in the case of Muhammadan holidays when we do not know ahead on what day it will fall on—at present we can and do change the notice and inform the Inspector of the change. The whole object of this is that the Inspector should know when we are closing so that he may inspect the place. That is absolutely observed under the present practice. If we are now going to be bound down to any dates we may fix beforehand, I would oppose this amendment. The Honourable Member in charge of the Bill says, he is not sure of the result of this amendment. I do not think any Member of this House will accept the position that we do not know what the result of any particular amendment might be in law.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : I do not think, Sir, that Sir Vithaldas' apprehensions are at all well founded. I do not think, there will be any objection to his making any alterations in the dates fixed for holidays. The section, as it stands, does not prescribe that these notices must be posted up a month or a year beforehand. The object is, that some notice should be posted up. That is all that the section says.

Mr. President : The question is :

'That to clause 21 of the Bill, as amended by the Joint Committee, the following be added, namely :

'(c) after clause (d) of sub-section (1) the following shall be inserted, namely :

'(e) the weekly holidays fixed under section 22 "

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President : The question is :

'That clause 21, as amended, stand part of the Bill.'

The motion was adopted.

Clauses 22, 23, 24, 25, 26 and 27 were added to the Bill.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey : Mr. President, I have given notice of two amendments. If the first is passed, it will not be necessary to move the second. If the first is not passed, it will be necessary to move the second. The first amendment is 'that clause 28 be deleted'. Now, clause 28 of this Bill runs as follows :

'For section 46 of the said Act, the following section shall be substituted, namely :

'46. If a child over the age of six years is found in any factory or within the precincts thereof, he shall, until the contrary is proved, be deemed to be employed in the factory.'

The burden is thrown on the Managers to prove that the child was not working in the factory. While there was not the slightest objection to accepting that burden, so long as the factory meant the factory proper, we are now bringing within our proposal schools, playgrounds, etc. We do not know what the result of this new clause will be. The original section 46 was quite clear on this point when the burden was thrown on us, it ran thus :

'If a child over the age of 6 years is found inside any room or part of a factory in which room or part children are employed and in which any manufacturing process or work incidental to any manufacturing process is being carried on, he shall, until the contrary is proved, be deemed to be employed in the factory.'

That was quite all right and we were prepared to take that responsibility. Now it is said that the Inspectors have represented to Government that children run away into the yards, etc., and they were not able to prove that they were working. I don't say that it never happens. It may happen sometimes. But it is a ridiculous proposition that a boy found in a school room, or in the yard should be deemed to be employed in the factory. Such a boy may bring food for his father, and everybody knows that these men sometimes have no food before they begin work, their children bring them food afterwards. We can only comply with this section, the Inspector shuts his eyes to the law. Do you wish that the law should be broken every day? It has been said that the Inspector ought to be reasonable. They are more often reasonable than not. But we have seen cases when the Inspector has not been reasonable. To ask this Assembly to frame a law which will every day be broken, which is broken to-day and will be broken to-morrow is a position that we ought not to accept. Therefore I move that the original section 46 be retained.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas : Sir, I oppose the amendment moved by Sir Vithaldas Thackersey. If I understand it aright, his amendment aims at the deletion of the clause as proposed by the Joint Committee and to keep the clause as it was originally under the Act of 1911.

That is the amendment, I take it. Sir, this question was thoroughly discussed by the Select Committee and the Select Committee by a large majority came to the conclusion, that it was necessary to alter the clause and as a result of the discussion the clause, as it stands now in the amended Bill, was proposed. Sir, the Select Committee, the majority of the Select Committee at any rate, thought that the clause as it stood in the original Act provided a loop-hole, and a temptation, and in most cases it was the experience of the factory Inspectors that mill owners employed boys who were over the age of 6 and when the Inspector went into the precincts of the factory the boy was sent out into the yard or play-ground or whatever the case may be. The reason why the Committee thought it proper to alter the clause was, that they did not want to provide any loop-hole for the mill-owner; nor did they want to provide any temptation for the parents of those children, to use their children as money-making machines at the cost of the health and growth of those poor children. Sir Vithaldas points out that it will entail a hardship on the labourers in the factory because in Indian factories boys over the age of 6 take food for their parents; well, Sir, I have no hesitation in saying that if the necessity for the boys taking food for their parents is likely to be exploited by the mill-owners or by their parents in some cases to use those boys as workers in the factory, I would rather that those boys over the age of 6 who ought to be either in their homes or in the schools should not carry food for their parents. However, the duty of the Legislature, I think, is clear on the point. Everything that tends to the exploitation of boys over the age of 6 for the purposes either of the mill-owners or their greedy parents should be avoided by the Government, should be discouraged by the Government, and it was with this intention that the Committee provided that this clause should be substituted in place of the original clause which provided a loop-hole for the mill-owners and a temptation for the parents at the cost, as I said, of the health and growth of these poor innocent children. I hope, therefore, the House will reject the amendment.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Sir, I think a word of explanation is necessary in regard to this extraordinary provision. Of course it is to a certain extent going against the ordinary principle of law that a person who has been accused shall not be asked to prove that he is not guilty. This was a matter which was very seriously discussed, and I with hesitation consented, but not for the reasons which have been given by Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas. I agreed to this on this ground: it was mentioned to me that it was almost impossible for the Inspector to adduce prima facie evidence whether a boy is employed in a factory or not; whereas it would be easy for the mill-owner by producing books to show that the boy was not employed; it was the easiest possible thing to do and, therefore, I with some hesitation agreed to this provision being made because I thought it was a question of the burden of proof after all, and the burden of proof must be on the person who can easily prove it, and in this particular case it could very easily be proved by the mill-owner producing his books and showing that the name of the boy was not on it.

It is for that reason that I agreed that this clause should be inserted, and I hope that that reason would appeal to the House.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I am very glad that Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar has given some explanation as to why what he properly calls this extraordinary provision has been incorporated. Looking at the report of the Select Committee and the Minutes of Dissent I could not get any light. I am not convinced that what Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar or Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas has said would answer the requirements of the case. I hope no one will take me to be a friend of mill-owners wanting to oppose advance labour legislation; and of course within reasonable bounds, I am all the other way. At the same time, Sir, I feel that unless facilities like those which Sir Vithaldas Thackersey's amendment proposes are provided, labour will be really at a disadvantage, and the growth of child life in which we are all so rightly interested, will suffer. Mr. Jamnadas speaks of their being at home. He might have added about their being at school. But he knows as well as I and many Indian Members here do, that the average labourer has no 'home' to speak of in the proper sense of the term. The father and mother will be both away, and the children generally be left to themselves. I quite sympathise with Mr. Jamnadas that if the parents cannot otherwise arrange for their food being brought to their factories, they well deserve to do without it. But that is not all. I have seen in some mills, I know that infants in arms are brought by the mothers and are left in charge of children older than six years of age as there is no other place to leave them in. I have also seen in schools provided by the mills children who are not and cannot be employed in the mills taking part in the lessons in those schools. Sometimes the schools are outside the factory limits. There of course the question does not arise, but all factories have not equal accommodation and the schools are oftener than not within the factory limits. In those cases there will be a very great hardship, and the father or mother who had to work and nobody with whom to leave these children would be at a real disadvantage on the question of burdens of proof. Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar has suggested that the production of the books by the mill-owner that the children are not employed would be ample answer. Well, an employer who is unscrupulous enough to exploit child labour can well falsify the books and child labour may be employed without its being shown on the books. Therefore, you can never provide against abuse. You have got to take things as they are. The normal Indian labour life is not ideal. I do not know what the ideal elsewhere is, but we do know that very great hardships would occur if it is not allowed for children to be brought in or sent to mill schools or allowed in the playgrounds or yards. We have not heard any facts adduced in support of the change. Of course we have the opinion of the Members of the Select Committee and I am sure we attach proper importance to it, but very convincing facts have to be adduced before a change is necessary in ten years with regard to this particular section of the enactment which has not so far failed to answer its purpose.

With regard to clause 10. of the Bill in connection with which Sir Vithaldas moved an amendment, Mr. Chatterjee pointed out that the Inspector would have to pass an order which would be open to appeal. There the safeguard is reasonable, but here there is or can be no such safeguard. On the other hand, the un-British method of imposing the proof of burden on the employer is resorted to and the way on which it is suggested that one should discharge that burden is open to abuse as much as the employment of infant labour. If a loop-hole or temptation is too great for the employer in one direction, it will be too great also in the other direction. It seems, therefore, that we shall loose nothing by letting the sections stand as it is till at least more convincing facts are forthcoming.

Mr. R. A. Spence (Bombay : European) : Mr. President, I desire to support the amendment moved by my Honourable friend, Sir Vithaldas Thackersey. I have listened with interest to the speech which has just been given by Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary who has put to the Assembly the reasons which I had for supporting the amendment. If Honourable Members will turn to the minutes of dissent, they will see that four Members who were on that Committee, all of whom have a very good knowledge of factory conditions, are all in favour of the retention of the old clause and are against the present clause. Honourable Members will also see that Sir Alexander Murray, Sir Vithaldas Thackersey, Sir Maneckji Dadabhoy and Mr. Lalubhoj Samaldas all specially go against the clause.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas says 'naturally', but those four gentlemen do know something about the conditions which affect the working people, and I maintain with Sir Deva Prasad that the inclusion of this clause will certainly do more harm than good to the labourers. We all know that children go to the factories with their parents. We all know that sometimes the children are left in or near the factories and the necessity there is that they should be properly looked after, and they are more often than not by elder children, and we all know, also, in a great number of cases that the yards of factories are better places for the children to be in than their own homes. I would ask my Honourable friend, Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas, who comes from Bombay, how, during the strikes in Bombay two years ago when cholera spread all over the place, it was that the disease spread so rapidly. It was because of the strikes, because the people were not able to work in their factories which were sanitary. It was because they were in their own homes where there were no sanitary conditions that cholera spread. I think Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas is probably aware, on this particular point in regard to the amendment before the House, that the Bombay Government agrees with the views expressed by Sir Vithaldas Thackersey, and I would ask the House to accept the amendment proposed by Sir Vithaldas.

Mr. President: I would suggest to the Honourable Member that it would be more convenient if he moved the amendment to clause 28. He will have an opportunity of voting against clause 28 itself when I put the clause at the end of the debate. Standing Order 33 precludes a Member from moving a merely negative motion of this character. I therefore think it would be more convenient if he would move the amendment which he proposes to add.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey: Then, Sir, my amendment would take this form

Mr. President: I put from the Chair the question, that the clause do stand part of the Bill, but I think it would be more convenient if the Honourable Member would move the amendment standing in his name and after that he would still be free to vote against the clause.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: There is one difficulty in adopting your course, Sir. In bringing forward my arguments on the amendment moved by Sir Vithaldas Thackersey, I restricted myself to the amendment for deletion of clause 28 and the substitution of the clause as it stood in the original Act. If the clause had been moved as you, Sir, now suggest, I should have certainly taken up arguments which Sir Vithaldas Thackersey was likely to advance. I therefore hope that the amendment for deletion will be dealt with first and then the new amendment taken afterwards.

Mr. President: If the new amendment is taken first and got out of the way, we can get back to the main question. I omitted to point out to the House that Standing Order 33, sub-section (2) says :

‘That an amendment may not be moved which has merely the effect of a negative vote.’

It is therefore unnecessary to put from the Chair the motion that the clause be deleted.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: May I, Sir, then ask if we shall be given another opportunity of speaking if the new amendment is moved?

Mr. President: In so far as the new amendment raises a substantially different point, it seems to me a more restricted version of the same point.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey: Mr. President, I beg to move :

‘That to clause 28 of the Bill the following proviso be added, namely.’

‘Provided that yards, playgrounds and places open to the public view, school rooms, waiting rooms and other rooms belonging to the factory in which no machinery is used or manufacturing process carried on, shall not be taken to be any part of the factory within the meaning of this enactment.’

I explained in my speech the object of the first amendment. The second amendment was necessary because in case the House thinks that we should not give greater latitude we are restricting it only to those children not found in these places.

As has been pointed by previous speakers with a knowledge of law, it would be very dangerous to presume the Manager to be guilty and throw the burden of proof on him. My amendment provides that such a responsibility should not be thrown on him. The House will agree that before putting such a great responsibility on the Managers which is against the common law of the country, greater precautions are necessary than proposed in other sections. As we know, every day children come to factories and they will continue to come. What we want to see is that the law should not be broken but that we should protect the children in a proper way. The Bombay Government themselves approve of the original section.

Mr. President : The original question was :

'That clause 28 stand part of the Bill'.

Since which an amendment has been moved :

'That in clause 28 of the Bill the following proviso be added, namely :

'Provided that yards, playgrounds and places open to the public view, school rooms, waiting rooms and other rooms belonging to the factory in which no machinery is used or manufacturing process carried on, shall not be taken to be any part of the factory within the meaning of this enactment'.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : Sir, speakers who have preceded me have already given the House the genesis of this proposal. It was pointed out to Government by factory Inspectors that the existing provision of the law was practically ineffective. Where a mill-owner or a factory owner or a Manager was contravening the law, then, as soon as the factory Inspector approached the gate of his factory, he sent word and all the children who were working in the work room were sent to the yard or the compound and the factory Inspector found it absolutely impossible to prove that that child or children were actually working and were not merely playing about the grounds of the factory. If you are going to protect the children, it is necessary that the burden of proof should be placed on the person in whose premises the children are found. I do not think Sir Vithaldas is right when he says that the law would be broken every day. As a matter of fact, the factory Inspector would have to satisfy himself that the children were really working in the factory before he initiated the prosecution. If he does not initiate the prosecution after satisfying himself that the children were in the grounds merely for the purpose of playing or because they were carrying food to their parents, I do not think there would be any breach of the law. It is only a question of evidence and not of a breach of the law, so far as I understand the provision. The Government do not go as far as Mr. Jamnadas. We do not object to children carrying food to their parents when the parents are working in factories. Sir Deva Prasad has mentioned the case of infants in arms. Infants in arms are already provided for in the Bill.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary : I was referring to children who were there to be looked after by the older children.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : Well, the infants in arms can be looked after by the older children just as well outside the factory as inside. I do not see any necessity for infants in arms being taken inside a factory to be looked after. They will be in close proximity to very dangerous machinery there. They would be much better off at home even if they lived in the most insanitary chauls in which they appear to live in the advanced Presidency of Bombay.

The real safeguard is, that the Government assumes that the Act will be administered in a reasonable manner by Factory Inspectors. In England the common informer may initiate a prosecution under the Factories and Workshops Act. In India, we have a special provision under the Act that no complaint is to be instituted or is to be taken cognisance of by a Court except with the previous sanction of the Inspector. The Inspector is subordinate to the

[Mr. A. C. Chatterjee.]

Local Government. We assume that the Inspector will act in a reasonable manner. No Inspector would really be able to carry on his duties if he acts in a dishonest manner and sets all the employers against him and initiates prosecutions when there is no real and reasonable ground for a prosecution. That is the real safeguard in these provisions. I have given the reasons which impelled the Government to frame these provisions and it is now for the House to decide whether they will protect the children by having a special provision or leave the provision as it stands at present. We would much rather stick to the existing provision under the Act than have the amendment which has been proposed by Sir Vithaldas Thackersey.

Mr. B. A. Spence: Mr. President, might we have for the information of the House the knowledge from Mr. Chatterjee as to whether this amendment proposed by the Honourable Sir Vithaldas Thackersey is not the same as the law in England, and if it is, why the Government of India should object to this amendment?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: Sir, I have already explained that in England the common informer may prosecute. In India only the factory Inspector can prosecute. The cases are quite different.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Sir, I am afraid Mr. Chatterjee has not on this occasion spoken in his usually convincing manner. It is no answer to the argument that this amendment is copied exactly from the English enactment, and if anything it supports and does not weaken Sir Vithaldas' position what he said with regard to the common informer is not very helpful in a country where the informer is common and may often find the Inspector wrong. Let us not forget that in England, we have the great safeguard, the great assistance, of having schools to which these children not may but must go. Furthermore, if the factory Manager is enterprising enough to be able to get early information and send out the children to the yard, what is there to prevent him from sending them out to the street?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee: It is easier perhaps to send them to the yard. The factory Inspector will be at the gate. He will see the children going out.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: If there is only one gate to the factory, then the factory is not worth the name. They are mostly a sort of rabbit warren like the Secretariat buildings here where the children can troop out on the approach of the factory Inspector to the back alley as well as to the play ground. But that is not the whole question. In a country where we have absolutely no arrangement for the schooling of children, where the labourer's 'home' exists only in imagination and is a scandal and I have not heard that challenged by Mr. Chatterjee or by Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas who may be following me and telling the Assembly that the housing arrangement of the labourer is much better than I am depicting to myself, the question so strongly urged by Mr. Chatterjee did not arise. But even in England, where all the facilities that civilisation has been able to think of in the way of looking after children and labourer has been provided, conditions are anything but perfect and are everyday leading to enormous troubles. Let us not forget, Sir, that the joint family life is breaking up in India. The labourers like—I won't say his betters, but like—other people suffer from this disability, that either the father or the mother by themselves constitute the family, and there is hardly any other member who can look after the children. Then, with regard to the infant in arms, a variety of things has to be done than merely looking after them at home. The mother may have to travel more than once a day a mile or a couple of miles to go and look after the infant in more sense than one and that is not good for her health or for efficiency. But if the infant is close by and in charge of other older children who themselves will be kept out of mischief, I think a great deal of the assurance will be provided for the mother or the father as the case may be and they and the children will live under happier circumstances. You must deal with facts and circumstances as you find them and which cannot be changed merely for the asking. After all, there is such a thing as killing even labour by kindness and you can deal with no question in a detached, isolated and ideal way when it is part of a big organic whole.

In view of some of these considerations it strikes me that even if the Resolution for deletion of the proposed section is not agreed to, the second amendment with all the safeguards ought to be accepted by this Assembly.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: I think, if I may venture to say so, Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary has tried to lead the House off on a side issue. He has advanced against the amendment proposed by the Joint Committee the argument that if the amendment is carried children will not be able to enter into the factory in order to carry food to their fathers or mothers in the factory. (Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: That is not all that I have urged.) His object is, as I understand it, to protect the interests of the children. Now, the whole object of this section is precisely that. We are out in this section to safeguard the children of India. We have just raised the age from 9 to 12 and our object is to prevent children under the age of 12 from being improperly employed in factories. That is the point which the House has got to keep in mind. We have got this section 46 in the existing Act. The Act has been in force for many years and it has been proved to us by experience that the section does not carry out the object for which it was intended. Our experience as gained by the factory Inspectors, and mind you, our factory Inspectors are responsible men,—the experience gained by our factory Inspectors throughout India is that the section is insufficient as it stands. 'All managers who go in for the infringement of the children's regulations have spies stationed at convenient distances to warn off the children..... The news of the Inspector's arrival is the signal for uncertified children to dash into the compound so that the Inspector finds small boys standing about the compound.'

That is the thing we want to put down. We admit that the remedy is a drastic one, but we think we are right in proposing it. We recognise that there is a great deal to be said for Sir Vithaldas Thackersey and also for Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary, and we are quite prepared to leave the decision to the House. All we think is that though we admit the dangers not that I admit that the dangers are very great, it is the right course to adopt, still it is a matter for the House to decide. All I would say is that if the House wishes to make any change it would be very much better not to accept this particular amendment but to let the existing section in the Act stand.

Mr. Jannadas Dwarkadas: Sir, I entirely agree with my Honourable friend, Mr. Innes, that the remedy suggested for the evil is drastic in character, but when there are two evils presented, I should choose the lesser of the two evils and I should rather risk the drastic character of the remedy than leave the poor children of India at the mercy of either, the mill-owner or of their greedy parents. Sir Vithaldas Thackersey has pointed out, that if the clause, as suggested by the Joint Committee, were agreed to by the House, then the people of India would no longer complain that the mill-owners did not provide schools and playgrounds for the children of the employees. I want to ask Sir Vithaldas if he can tell me of any mills in Bombay which provide school rooms and playgrounds within the limits of the factory. (Sir Vithaldas Thackersey: I am sorry I have no right of reply, otherwise I would have given a reply.) At any rate, to my knowledge, there are very few mills where playgrounds and school rooms are provided within the limits of the factories. But, apart from that, if my Honourable friend, Mr. Joshi, had been here, perhaps he would have said, in reply to Sir Vithaldas' argument, that we can no longer agree to the mill-owners providing schools and playgrounds within the limits of the factory, in the first place because we do not want the children to grow in the unhealthy atmosphere of the factory.

Rather than contributing to their growth, it contributes to their decay.

4 P.M.

At the same time, we also think that the day is past when the mill-owner can continue to have his hold over the children of his employees by, if I may venture to say so, these kinds of bribes offered to the children of the employee. There are two ways of making people slaves. You may either kick them and when the child has reached the stage when kicking is no longer tolerated, you pat it on the back and make it a slave. The provision of school rooms and playgrounds within the limits of the factory is a thing which is objected to on that ground in principle. The provision of school rooms and playgrounds is the duty of the State and the State can do it by compelling the mill-owners to provide money for it. I should therefore recommend that this House should not encourage the practice of mill-owners making perpetual slaves of their would-be labourers. There is one more point that I should like to put before this House. Mr. Innes has clearly pointed out that the object of this clause is to protect the children of India. The clause, as it existed in the original Act, has proved absolutely ineffective. In favour of that we have the experience of the factory Inspectors who have told us repeatedly that the object of the Act is not carried out.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey: What about the Bombay Government?

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: I know that the Bombay Government adduces the argument that the clause should remain as provided in the original Act. I beg leave to differ from the opinion of the Bombay Government on this question. I am just answering the arguments brought forward by my Honourable friends, Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey and Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary. The argument adduced that in Bombay the housing arrangements are not good and therefore at present the clause should not be substituted does not hold much water. If the housing arrangements are not good, let the housing arrangements be made much better than they are. The housing arrangements for the labourers in Bombay are a scandal and we do not want that scandal to continue for a minute longer if we can help it. The argument for continuing an Act which would encourage the continuation of the same housing arrangement is, to my mind, arguing in a way which I fail to understand. The vicious circle will go on increasing and there will be no end to it. I think the remedy suggested by the Committee although it is drastic should be adopted by the House so that the necessity for children remaining outside the House will awaken labourers to the need for demanding better housing arrangements and once the labourers demand them I do not think that the mill-owners or the Government can afford not to give them better houses. I submit that for the protection of the children of India and for the welfare and future well being of labour in India it is entirely necessary that the clause, as suggested by the Committee, should be substituted for the original clause.

Rai D. C. Barua Bahadur (Assam Valley : Non-Muhammadan) : Sir, I beg to submit that under no system of jurisprudence does the burden of proof rest on the accused person except in very exceptional circumstances. Now here, although provision has been made for the protection of children by prohibiting the employment of children under a certain age and by regulating their employment in particular ways, no sort of system can do that fully, and perfection cannot be contemplated by the introduction of the proposed provision under review. So it is not desirable in any circumstances that this clause should be retained. Then, Sir, some remark has been made to find certain rooms for the school or waiting room or refreshment room for the children, but it will be a very difficult affair to find such rooms in factories where the area occupied is a very large one, such as tea factories and indigo factories. So when all the facts are taken into consideration and there are rules enough within the provisions of this proposed Bill for the inclusion of tea factories and indigo factories, provision should be made so that those factories or those concerns may not be put to any serious difficulty by the introduction, I mean by the inclusion of those factories in the provisions of this Act. So taking all these circumstances into consideration, I think the proposed clause should be deleted, and that the old law should continue as before.

Mr. President : The question is :

‘That to clause 28 of the Bill the following proviso be added, namely :

‘Provided that yards, playgrounds and places open to the public view, school rooms, waiting rooms and other rooms belonging to the factory in which no machinery is used or manufacturing process carried on, shall not be taken to be any part of the factory within the meaning of this enactment.’

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey : I should like to make one explanation. If the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill will agree to retain the present section 46, I have no wish to press for the second amendment, and shall be perfectly satisfied if the old clause 46 is retained and the new clause is omitted.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : I regret, Sir, I cannot give any such undertaking.

Mr. President : The original question was :

‘That clause 28 be added to the Bill.’

Since which an amendment has been moved :

'That to clause 23 the following proviso be added, namely.'

'Provided that yards, playgrounds and places open to the public view, school rooms, waiting rooms and other rooms belonging to the factory in which no machinery is used or manufacturing process carried on, shall not be taken to be any part of the factory within the meaning of this enactment.'

The question is that that amendment be made.

Mr. President : The question is that clause 28, as amended, do stand part of the Bill.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : Sir, I think that it would meet both the employers and certainly Government if the clause, as now amended, were suppressed and if the original section of the Act, section 46 of the Factory Act of 1911, were allowed to stand. I think that Sir Vithaldas will support me in saying that that will be more satisfactory both to employers and to the Government; and if there is no objection and if Sir Vithaldas is willing to agree, I wish to press that solution for the consideration of the House.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey : Mr. President, I expressed my view in the very beginning that if Government gave an undertaking to retain the original section 46, I would not press my second amendment.

Mr. President : The question is :

'That the clause, as amended, do stand part of the Bill.'

The motion was negatived.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey : I understood that Mr. Innes' suggestion to retain the original section 46 is accepted.

Mr. President : The effect of the decision of the House to-day is to remove the clause from this Bill and therefore to leave the clause of the original Act where it stands.

The question is :

'That clause 29 of the Bill, as amended by the Joint Committee, do stand part of the Bill.'

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President : Schedule II.—The question is :

'That this be the second Schedule of the Bill.'

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President : The question is :

'That this be the preamble of the Bill.'

The motion was adopted.

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : It may be convenient to the House, and, if there is no objection to it, I should like to move, with your permission :

That the Bill, as amended by the Joint Committee and as amended now by the House, be passed.'

The motion was adopted.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Wednesday, 11th January, 1922.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock.
Mr. President was in the Chair.

STATEMENTS LAID ON THE TABLE.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes (Commerce and Industries Member):
Sir, I lay on the table the information promised in reply* to a question by Mr. J. Chaudhuri, on the 30th September, 1921, regarding the exodus of coolies from the tea gardens in Assam.

(a) Most of these questions might more usefully have been put in the Assam Legislative Council, and the Government of India are not able fully to answer them. But I give below as much information as possible.

The Government of India of course were kept in close touch with the facts of the exodus from the Surma and Chargola Valleys, and were kept by the Local Governments concerned constantly informed as to the progress of events. When Sir Thomas Holland visited Calcutta in June last, the Government of India asked the Local Governments concerned to send representatives to meet him in order that co-ordinated action might be taken in arranging for the repatriation of labourers who had left Assam. The Honourable Sir William Vincent visited Assam in order to discuss with the Local Government the political situation arising out of the exodus. The reports of both Sir Thomas Holland and the Home Member were in the nature of notes on the file and cannot be published.

(b) The Honourable Member is apparently not aware of the true facts. Section 153 of the Assam Labour and Emigration Act empowers the Local Government in certain circumstances to cancel labour contracts executed under the Act. But the provisions of the Act relating to the execution of labour contracts were withdrawn from the 1st July, 1915.

(c) The Honourable Member is referred to the Press Communiqué issued by the Government of Assam in which the question is fully discussed.

(d) As has already been stated, the provisions of the Act relating to the execution of labour contracts were withdrawn from July 1915.

(e) The Honourable Member is referred to paragraph 4 of the Press Communiqué of the Government of Assam.

(f) Yes.

(g) No such provision exists in the law nor is any amendment of the law on these lines contemplated.

(h) Yes, for the reasons explained in paragraph 7 of their Press Communiqué.

(i) The cost of repatriating the Mahajarins of the North-West Frontier Province was met from Provincial funds and amounted to Rs. 77,379.

(j) The question assumes that the labourers are not able to obtain a living wage, and the Government of India do not admit that this assumption is correct. It is believed, however, that the whole question of wages of tea garden labourers is under the consideration of the Local Government.

(k) The present constitution of the Assam Labour Board is laid down in section 116-A, clauses (1) to (5) of the Assam Labour and Emigration Act as amended in 1915. The answer to the last part of the question is in the affirmative.

* Vide Legislative Assembly Debates, Volume II, page 1296.

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

(l) As I have already pointed out, all the provisions of the Act relating to labour contracts have been withdrawn.

(m) The question is one for the Local Government and is already under their consideration. They will be furnished with a copy of this question and answer.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member) : Sir, I lay on the table a statement giving the information promised in reply* to a question by Mr. K. Ahmed, on the 30th September, 1921, regarding the average salary of officers of the Indian Civil Service in 1911 and 1921.

Statement showing the average salary of officers (on duty) of the Indian Civil Service of 5, 10, 15, 20 and 25 years' service on the 1st July, 1911, and 1st July, 1921.

Years of service.	Average salary on 1-7-1911.	Average salary on 1-7-1921.	REMARKS.

AMENDMENT OF STANDING ORDERS.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member) : Sir, before we proceed to the next motion, I shall be glad to obtain from you a ruling on a point of order. You ruled with reference to Standing Order 39 that the acceptance by this Assembly of a motion for reference of a Bill to Select Committee means that the Assembly accept the principle of the Bill. A Standing Order made with the consent of the Governor General can only be altered by the Chamber. The provisions laid down in Standing Orders are that draft amendments should be referred to a Select Committee and that when the draft has been referred to a Select Committee the procedure in regard to a Bill should be followed as far as possible. Now when a Bill is referred to a Select Committee, it follows that the principle has been accepted, and I wish your ruling on the point whether a reference to a Select Committee of the amendments which will shortly be placed before the Assembly also involves the acceptance of the principle of them; because, if so, I think that Members generally and certain Government Members, or some of us at least, would like to have more time to consider them. I may say that I myself received notice of these amendments, or some of them—not my own of course—yesterday. If, however, the motion is to allow the Select Committee full liberty to consider the principles of the amendments, then the position will be materially changed.

Another point I should like to know is whether the Select Committee will have power to extend the principle of the draft amendmenst submitted to it. With reference to the particular amendments that have been put before the Assembly, I shall later draw your attention, Sir, to Standing Order 56 which prescribes that the actual draft amendments should be referred to a Select Committee.

Mr. President: The rule which commits the Assembly to the principle of a Bill on referring that Bill to a Select Committee does not apply to these amendments. All that the Committee is instructed to do is to examine these proposals with a view to the amendment of the Standing Orders by the Chamber itself after the Committee has reported. The Assembly is therefore not committed to the principle involved in each individual amendment but solely to the proposal that these Standing Orders shall be amended.

I am not quite sure that I appreciate the second point put by the Honourable the Home Member.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: May I put it again, Sir? The question is whether when an amendment has been referred to the Select Committee, it is open to the Select Committee to extend the principle of the amendment—that is, to make the modification of a Standing Order more general in principle than is contemplated in the amendment as proposed.

Mr. President: Standing Orders 54 to 57 do not contemplate a roving commission to the Select Committee, but it seems to me to be inconvenient for the Select Committee to be strictly bound by the exact terms of each amendment submitted to it. Therefore, without prejudice to a final decision in the matter, which I think must rest with the Chamber itself after the Committee has reported, I should say that the Select Committee which we are about to appoint should have a reasonable discretion.

STANDING ORDERS RE : THE CONDUCT OF NON-OFFICIAL BUSINESS.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: With your permission, Sir, I should like to move the first eight motions relating to the amendment of the Standing Orders in one single motion; these amendments really relate to the same subject and this was in fact the method adopted in giving notice of these amendments; thus, items Nos. 1 to 8 all really relate to one cognate subject and I propose, therefore, with your permission, Sir, to include them in one motion. You have already decided that a reference to Select Committee does not mean that the Assembly is bound to accept the principle of the amendment; so I need not make any detailed statement on that point. If Honourable Members will look at the amendments, they will see that they deal largely with the conduct of non-official business, and, in the first place, I want to draw the attention of the Assembly to the fact that it has now been decided that as far as possible separate dates should be allotted for the discussion of non-official Bills and separate dates for the discussion of non-official Resolutions and the rules have been amended accordingly. I believe that that will be found to be a change which will promote the progress of business and make for the convenience of non-officials. In the past when ballots were held for Bills and Resolutions together, it was found very difficult indeed to ensure a proper despatch of non-official business. Some of the amendments which I propose in Standing Orders are largely consequent on that change in the rules. If Honourable Members will turn to the Standing Orders they will see first that at present a particular precedence is prescribed for non-official Bills on non-official dates in this Assembly. We propose slightly to alter that order; the details will of course be a matter for the Committee and I do not propose to weary the Assembly with the reasons for the various detailed changes which we have made. The general principle, however, is that the more advanced Bills should obtain precedence or priority over Bills less advanced. The only exception that we propose to that is for the presentation of the Select Committee's report on a Bill; and the reason for that is very simple, namely, that this principle is a purely formal business—no speeches are made, and it will not take up any time, whereas if it was put down at the bottom of the day, a necessary but formal item might have to be postponed and the promoter of the Bill would be prejudiced. I do not think there is anything in the amendments of the Standing Orders relating to Bills which the Assembly cannot confidently leave to the consideration of a Select Committee.

As regards Resolutions, the amendments are more comprehensive, and I want to draw particular attention to them. The Standing Orders at present prescribe that precedence should be determined absolutely by ballot. Now, the result of that is, that no matter how important a Resolution is, it often cannot secure a place on the list of business because other Members, with less important Resolutions possibly although they may be personally interested in them, have secured precedence, and the practice has been for Members to come to Government and ask them to give them an official date or on some occasions for Government to approach Members suggesting that the matter is of such public moment that it should be discussed on a particular date. That practice is inconvenient to us and it is inconvenient to Members. It imposes a very unpleasant responsibility upon Government of saying that this Resolution is of such importance that we can admit it and that one is not of sufficient importance. In fact, I remember, during the last Session of the Assembly, complaints were made on this point. What we propose, therefore, to do is to provide a method by which the Assembly itself may secure that priority shall be given to any particular Resolution which has already been admitted upon a date set apart for the disposal of non-official business. The consequence of this will be that non-official business will not be put down on official dates, and we shall be relieved of attacks, such as were made on me yesterday and such as indeed were made on another Member of this Assembly—attacks which, if I may say so, coming from the quarter that they did, I think my Honourable friend, Mr. Iswar Saran, treated a little too seriously. After all, we know what to expect from certain quarters and it is a mistake to take attacks of that character as having any weight at all. Returning to the question of Resolutions, we propose that ballots for Resolutions should be held at least 15 days before the day with reference to which the ballot is held, that is, the day on which the discussion will take place. Further, it is proposed, that within three days of the ballot, Members should be allowed to give notice of a motion to secure priority for a particular Resolution, that is, they are allowed to take their chance first in the ballot, and if they do not succeed in it and the Resolution is one of great importance, they may give notice of this motion . . .

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member mean within three days of the date on which the Resolution will have to be debated?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: No, Sir. I shall explain that later. It is proposed that you should have discretion to admit or reject all such motions. This motion will be taken in the Assembly not less than ten days before the date with reference to which the ballot is held, that is, the date before the discussion, so that Government may have a reasonable notice of any important Resolution. Before the motion is put, 25 Members of the Assembly must support it and that number, as Members are aware, is the same as the number now required by Standing Order 23. Once priority has been given to any Resolution, no more notices of such motions may be put to the Assembly, because otherwise if you allow a number of such notices, you practically do away with the value of the ballot altogether. That in substance is what our proposal is in regard to Resolutions.

The next point is an amendment proposing that not more than five Resolutions, other than Resolutions which have obtained precedence under Standing Order 7 B (2) or are outstanding from a previous day should be set down in the list of business; and it is on this motion that I particularly ask the consideration of Members of this Assembly. I want to appeal to them for some sympathy with Members of the Government. We are often faced at present with a large number of Resolutions in the list, 19 and 20 sometimes. We do not know how far in the list we have got to go. Sometimes Members are not here, sometimes they withdraw Resolutions and the result is that we are called upon, and I am called upon particularly in the Home Department, because I have to meet a great many difficult Resolutions, to prepare 8 and 10 Resolutions for one day; I hope the Assembly will agree with me that that really is unfair to me and that I cannot do justice to the Assembly or to the Government case if I am called upon to prepare myself on such a number of subjects. We seldom get through more than three or four Resolutions in one day, and I have therefore tentatively suggested that not more than five Resolutions should be put down, exclusive of those which I have mentioned, for one day, and I hope that the Assembly will at any rate allow that proposal to be referred to Select Committee where it will be explained in greater detail.

The only other suggestion which I need refer to in connection with this motion is the proposal to amend Standing Order 9. At present this deals with official as well as non-official business. It is unnecessary to provide in this Standing Order for official business as the precedence of Government business is determined by the Governor General in Council under Standing Order 7, sub-order (1), and under present Standing Order 9, as regards non-official business, it is now provided that any non-official business which has not been begun is included in the list of business for the next day of the Session available for non-official business. Now this means that during the course of the Session we get ever lengthening lists of business which can never be completed. I am sure that Members must have seen many such lists. We therefore propose that this Standing Order should be so amended as to provide that such non-official business which has not been begun shall not be included in the list of business for any subsequent day unless it is entitled to priority on that day under the provisions of the Standing Order, that is, unless it is ballotted for and has been given special priority on the subsequent day. The remainder of the amendments included in this particular motion are, I think, consequential to the proposals that I have made. I now move, Sir, for leave to amend the Standing Orders in the following manner. I do not know if you wish me to read these one by one or whether they can be taken as read:

1. For Standing Order 7 the following Standing Orders shall be substituted, namely:

'7. On days allotted for the transaction of Government business the Secretary shall arrange that business in such order as the Governor General in Council may direct.

Arrangement of Government business.

[Sir William Vincent.]

7-A. (1) The relative precedence of notices of Bills given by non-official Members shall be determined by ballot, not less than fifteen days before the day with reference to which the ballot is held, in accordance with the procedure set out in Schedule I :

Precedence of non-official Bills.

Provided that the President may from time to time make such variations in the said procedure as he may consider necessary or convenient.

(2) On a day allotted for the disposal of non-official Bills, Bills which have already been introduced by non-official Members of either Chamber shall have priority over all other business provided that any notice required by the rules or Standing Orders have been given, and such Bills shall have relative precedence in the following order, namely :

- (a) Bills introduced in the Assembly in respect of which the next stage is the presentation of the Report of a Joint or Select Committee ;
- (b) Bills passed by the Council in respect of which the originating Chamber was the Assembly ;
- (c) Bills introduced and passed in the Council ;
- (d) Bills introduced in the Assembly in respect of which a motion has been carried that the Bill be taken into consideration ;
- (e) Bills introduced in the Assembly in respect of which the Report of a Joint or Select Committee has been presented ;
- (f) Bills which have been circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion ; and
- (g) Other Bills.

(3) The relative precedence of Bills falling under the same clause of sub-order (2) shall be determined by ballot, to be held at such time and in such manner as the President may direct :

Provided that Bills falling under clause (g) which remain over from the preceding Session shall, subject to the provisions of sub-order (2) of Standing Order 4, have priority over other such Bills in the order of the date of their introduction.

7-B. (1) The relative precedence of notices of Resolutions given by non-official Members shall be determined by ballot, not less than fifteen days before the day with reference to which the ballot is held, in accordance with the procedure set out in Schedule I :

Precedence of Resolutions.

Provided that the President may from time to time make such variations in the said procedure as he may consider necessary or convenient.

(2) (a) Notwithstanding the result of any ballot held under sub-order (1), any Member may, within three days thereof, give notice of a motion that any Resolution (the terms of which shall be set out in the notice) which has been admitted by the President shall have precedence on the day with reference to which the ballot was held. The President may, in his discretion, admit or reject any such motion.

(b) The President shall fix a date for the disposal of any motion or motions admitted under clause (a), which date shall not be less than ten days before the date with reference to which the ballot was held.

(c) On the day so fixed the President shall, before allowing any motion to be made, ascertain whether the Member in question has the leave of the Assembly to make the same. If more motions than one have been admitted, the President shall determine the order in which they shall be submitted for the leave of the Assembly.

(d) When the proposed motion is reached, the President shall read it and ask whether the Member has the leave of the Assembly. If objection is taken, the President shall request those Members who are in favour of leave being granted to rise in their places, and, if not less than twenty-five Members rise accordingly, the President shall intimate that the Member has the leave of the Assembly and shall call upon the Member in question to make his motion. If less than twenty-five Members rise, the President shall inform the Member that he has not the leave of the Assembly.

(e) No debate shall be allowed on any motion made under this sub-order except by special permission of the President.

(f) The President may, in his discretion, refuse precedence to any Resolution, in Respect of which a motion under the sub-order has been carried, but, if he does not do so, then :

(i) the Resolution in question shall, if notice has been given as required by the Standing Orders and if the Resolution is not disallowed under rule 22, have precedence over all other Resolutions which have obtained priority at the ballot, and

(ii) no further motion under this Standing Order shall be submitted for the leave of the Assembly on that day.'

2. To Standing Order 8, the following clause shall be added, namely :

'(4) Not more than five Resolutions (other than Resolutions which have obtained precedence under sub-order (2) of Standing Order 7-B or are outstanding from a previous day) shall be set down in the list of business for any day allotted for the disposal of non-official Resolutions.'

3. For Standing Order 9, the following Standing Order shall be substituted, namely :

'9. Non-official business set down for any day and not disposed of on that day shall not be set down for any subsequent day unless it is entitled to priority on that day under the provisions of the Standing Orders:
Business outstanding at end of day.

Provided that notwithstanding anything contained in Standing Orders 7-A and 7-B, any such business which has been commenced shall, on the next day allotted to business of that class, have precedence over all other business set down for that day.'

4. For clause I of Schedule I the following shall be substituted, namely :

'1. Not less than seventeen days before each day allotted for the disposal of non-official business, the Secretary will cause to be put up in the Assembly office a numbered list. This list will be kept open for two days and during those days and at hours when the office is open any Member who wishes to give notice, or has given notice, of a Bill or Resolution, as the case may be, may have his name entered once only against a number.'

5. In clause 2 of Schedule I for the words 'on the third day a ballot' the words 'the ballot' shall be substituted.

6. In clause 4 of Schedule I after the words 'all the numbers' the words 'or, in the case of a ballot for priority of Resolutions, five numbers' shall be inserted.

7. For clause 5 of Schedule I the following shall be substituted, namely :

'5. Priority on the list will entitle the Member to have set down, in the order of his priority for the day with reference to which the ballot is held, any Bill or Resolution as the case may be, of which he has given the notice required by the Rules or Standing Orders.'

8. Clauses 6 and 7 of the Schedule shall be omitted.

The motion was adopted.

STANDING ORDER NO. 23 RE : MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : I now move for leave to amend Standing Order 23. This Standing Order provides that motions for the adjournment of the House must be taken before 4 P.M. The amendment* would permit of such motions being taken at an earlier hour at which the business of the day may terminate. It is however provided that the consent of the Members of the Government concerned should be necessary to such a course, and I think that is a reasonable requirement, because if a motion is made at, say half past 11, the Member for Government must have one or two hours to get his papers together and refresh his memory as to the facts. Further, the Assembly is aware that the Governor General has power to disallow a motion for adjournment of the House, and it is necessary again that reasonable time should be allowed to the Member for Government to enable him to approach the Governor General on that subject; should that course be found necessary, I am glad to say that it has never been found necessary in the past. At the same time, it is very inconvenient sometimes to close the ordinary business at 3, and then to adjourn till 4 after wasting an hour's time. I think there is no doubt whatever that this amendment will commend itself to the Assembly.

* 9. In Standing Order 23, after the words 'at 4 P.M.' the following words shall be inserted namely :

'Or, if the President, with the consent of the Members of the Government concerned, so directs, at any earlier hour at which the business of the day may terminate'.

[Sir William Vincent.]

The motion was adopted.

STANDING ORDERS NOS. 31, 34, 38, 39 AND 40.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, if it will suit the convenience of the House, I will move the remaining three amendments* together having regard to the manner in which the previous amendments have been received.

Amendment No. 10.—The proviso to section 67 of the Government of India Act provides that Standing Orders may provide for the meetings of Members of both Chambers appointed for the purpose, in order to discuss any difference of opinion which has arisen between the two Chambers. Such a provision has been made under Legislative Rule No. 40. It is clear, I think, that these meetings contemplate divergent decision having been previously reached in the two Chambers. The object of the meeting is to establish some modus vivendi. But Standing Order 31 really would at present prevent this, because a motion once having been rejected cannot be brought again before the Assembly in the same Session. It is accordingly proposed to amend that Standing Order so as to allow such motions as would be barred by Standing Order 31 if made as the result of a conference held under Rule 40.

Amendment No. 11 is purely formal. When we deal with Legislative Rules and Standing Orders, we should definitely refer in the case of the rules to rules and sub-rules, and in the case of the Standing Orders to orders and sub-orders. At present in Standing Order 34, the word 'sub-rule' is used in two places and the reference is merely to sub-orders. It is proposed to rectify this.

*10. To Standing Order 31 the words 'unless such motion is made as the result of a conference held under Rule 40' shall be added.

11. In Standing Order 34 for the word 'Sub-rule' in both places where it occurs, the word 'Sub-order' shall be substituted.

12. (a) In clause (b) of Sub-order (1) of Standing Order 38 the words 'Composed of such Members of the Assembly as he may name in his motion' shall be omitted.

(b) In Standing Order 40:

(a) to Sub-order (1) the words 'and it shall not be necessary to include their names in any motion for appointment of such a Committee' shall be added; and

(b) in Sub-order (2) after the words 'is made or' the words 'in the case of a motion made by way of amendment under clause (a) of Sub-order (2) of Standing Order 39' shall be inserted.

Amendment No. 12 relates to Standing Orders 38, 39 and 40 which deal with motions for the appointment of a Select Committee. It is proposed to amend Standing Orders 38 and 40 so as to provide that the Members of a Select Committee shall be nominated when the motion for reference to a Select Committee is made save in the case when this motion is moved as an amendment to another motion under Standing Order 39 (2) (a). In such cases it is thought, that though the Assembly might very well be prepared in connection with a particular Bill to accept the proposal that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee, a Member would not have had time to ascertain whether all the Members whom he wishes to select for that Committee would be willing to sit. Nor, indeed, would he have had time to consider who would be the most suitable Members for that Committee. At the same time you, Sir, have held, following the practice in the House of Commons, that before a Member can nominate anyone to serve on a Select Committee, he must ascertain whether the Member is prepared to serve on it; this amendment is designed to obviate the difficulty and I think the amendment will commend itself to the House.

The motion was adopted.

REFERENCE TO A SELECT COMMITTEE.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, I move that the amendments which I have just proposed be referred to a Select Committee.

The motion was adopted.

PROCEDURE IN PROPOSING AMENDMENTS TO STANDING ORDERS.

Mr. F. McCarthy (Burma : European) : Sir, I beg to move for leave to amend the Legislative Assembly Standing Orders in the manner set out in to-day's List of Business. Perhaps Honourable Members would like me to read them out in detail.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: May I inquire, Sir, whether the Honourable Member from Burma proposes to move his amendments in one batch or separately. If he proposes to do the former, one or two difficulties will arise in reference to some of them.

Mr. President: It is hardly necessary to embark on a detailed discussion of each individual amendment in view of the ruling I gave that the Assembly is not committed to the principle of each amendment. I am aware, for instance, in cases where a proposal is made to omit a Standing Order, that it has been made to enable the Select Committee to discuss certain proposals in relation to that order of which definite amendments have not been made. All the Honourable Member from Burma need do to satisfy the requirements of our procedure, is simply to move that the amendments be referred to a Select Committee. It is highly undesirable to have a Committee stage discussion on each particular amendment at the present moment.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I do not suggest a Committee stage discussion on each amendment, but I should like to raise one general point. I have always understood, on my reading of the Standing Orders, that a Member who wishes to put forward an amendment in this House, has to put forward a substantial amendment in order that Members of the Assembly may have some line as to what change exactly is proposed. Thus we should know exactly what change is proposed by the Honourable Member's amendments in the Standing Orders as they now exist and it is with reference to that point that I address the Assembly. For instance, amendments Nos. 6, 7 and 13 propose that Standing Orders Nos. 32, 34 and 70, respectively, shall be omitted. Now, on my reading of the Standing Orders of this Assembly the proper course to adopt is to put forward before the House a substantial proposal as to what amendments it is proposed to make, and not merely to ask us here now to refer to a Select Committee a proposal that the closure procedure, for instance, should be omitted without any explanation. That is the effect of one amendment and I do take exception to this procedure.

[Sir William Vincent.]

There are other details in these amendments on which, if they were moved singly, I should like to make some remarks to Members of the Assembly. But the main point I seek to make is that we are entitled here to know what amendment of the new Standing Orders the Honourable the Mover really proposes to make in regard to those Standing Orders which he at present moves merely should be omitted.

Mr. President: The Honourable the Home Member is aware that amendments are made in Bills without previous reference to the Assembly, and it seems to me eminently reasonable, that discretion should be left to the Standing Orders Committee in its report to propose certain amendments and on proposing them, to produce substantial reasons. I may say that I am more or less responsible for the proposal in regard to Standing Order No. 32, because I was unable, owing to lack of time at the moment, to suggest any form of wording which would adequately meet the position which has arisen as to whether a Member has a right of reply, especially a Member of Government, in the event of the closure being moved. It would be open to the Honourable Member from Burma to move a perfectly empty form of words in order to open the subject for discussion before a Select Committee, but I do not think the Honourable the Home Member is entitled to take objection to the form of omitting which is merely one way of raising the point.

The amendments proposed now commit no one to anything, not even the Mover of the amendment, because he has asked for the judgment of the Select Committee on them. Where he cannot particularise these proposals, as in the case of Standing Order 32 and the right of reply under the closure, it seems perfectly reasonable to leave it to the Committee to pronounce a judgment upon it. Otherwise he would find himself in the position, where an important question like that was raised, of having to throw open the whole procedure of the Standing Orders again and to go to the Select Committee and come back to the House for further authority which is highly undesirable.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Well, Sir, it is a matter entirely within your discretion. But this is what the Standing Order lays down :

'Unless the President otherwise directs, not less than ten clear days' notice of a motion for leave to amend the Standing Orders shall be given'.

I don't know what notice the Legislative Department received, but I received one day's notice only.

Mr. President: But notice is not given to the Honourable the Home Member. It is entirely in the authority of the Chair.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Then, I received one day's notice under the authority of the Chair. The notice ought also to be accompanied by a draft of the proposed amendment. I still submit very respectfully that Members of the Government and Members of this Assembly are entitled at least to know the line which it is proposed to take when an amendment is proposed to omit certain Standing Orders. When I proposed my amendments, I attempted to give my reasons and I submitted them entirely to the information of the House and they will now be examined by the Select Committee. But at least I indicated what amendments I was moving and the reasons for which I suggested them. Here the House is asked to agree.

Mr. President: I must point out to the Honourable Member that the House is not asked to agree to anything but the proposal to appoint a Committee to amend the Standing Orders.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The House, if I may say so, is asked to agree to a reference to a Select Committee on amendments to Standing Orders which include the omission of certain important Standing Orders without any explanation of the reason which led to that or of the exact line it is proposed to take or even the words it is proposed to alter.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable the Home Member object?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I should prefer to have the amendments taken singly, Sir.

Mr. President: I am quite prepared to do that. Will the Honourable Member move his amendments singly?

STANDING ORDER 11.

Mr. F. McCarthy: I beg to move for leave to amend Standing Order 11 in the following manner:

'That in Standing Order 11 after the word 'Secretary' the words 'and signed by the Member giving notice' shall be inserted.'

The motion was adopted.

Mr. F. McCarthy: I beg to move:

'That the amendment which I have just proposed be referred to a Select Committee.'

The motion was adopted.

STANDING ORDER 15.

Mr. F. McCarthy: I beg to move for leave to amend Standing Order 15 in the following manner:

'That in Standing Order 15 the word 'and' at the end of clause (5) shall be omitted and shall be re-inserted at the end of clause (6), and after clause (6) the following clause shall be added, namely, '(7) It shall not quote anything from a newspaper or mention the name of a newspaper.'

The motion was adopted.

Mr. F. McCarthy: I beg to move :

‘That the amendment which I have just proposed be referred to a Select Committee.’
The motion was adopted.’

STANDING ORDERS 18, 25, 31, 32, 34, 39, 54, 56, 59, 61, 70 AND 75.

Mr. F. McCarthy: I beg to move for leave to make the following amendment :

‘That Standing Order 18 shall be omitted.’

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I should be glad to hear some reason for this amendment and some indication of the new Standing Order which it is proposed to substitute for it, Sir. ‘The notice shall be accompanied by a draft of the proposed amendment’ is what the Standing Orders prescribe. And I submit that we are entitled to know what at least the intention of the Honourable Mover in this amendment is.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member object ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Without notice, Sir, and without some explanation as to what is intended, I do object.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member wish to substitute a discussion on the floor of the House to-day of the proposals made in each individual amendment for the procedure of the Select Committee ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: No, Sir. I have not suggested that. What I have suggested and what I do suggest is that this Assembly is entitled to know the main lines on which the amendments proceed and the reasons for it. That is the procedure which I have tried to adopt myself. If I am in error in that the House has only once to vote me down and I will sit down. But I do ask for some reason for the amendment.

Mr. N. M. Samarth (Bombay: Nominated Non-Official): May I ask, Sir, would not the Honourable Member, who has moved this, place his reasons before the Select Committee ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: He would.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is really asking the Assembly to usurp the functions of the Select Committee ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, I must very respectfully protest against that statement. I am not attempting to usurp anybody's functions. I am merely asking that the House should have a general statement of the reasons for this amendment and what it is proposed to do before the amendment is referred to a Select Committee. I demur very respectfully, Sir, to the suggestion that I am attempting to dictate to anyone. I have said once before that if the House considers that my attitude on this point is unreasonable I shall withdraw my objection.

Mr. F. McCarthy: Sir, it is not a question of being unreasonable. It is a mere question of convenience. Are we to spend hours in discussing elaborate details of Standing Orders or shall we refer these points, all of which are familiar to Members who have studied the working of the Orders to the Select Committee, and after which the Assembly will have ample opportunity for discussing them ? It is simply a matter of convenience.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Finance Member): Sir, I must say from my experience of the House, I think, that this is the first time I have seen a proposal of this kind without a single word of explanation or any reason whatever as to why it is put forward. If the Honourable Member would merely have the courtesy to tell us by way of explanation why he wants this amendment made we should be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. President: As these proposals to omit various Standing Orders were made at my suggestion and as I have already explained the position, the House will forgive me for repeating my explanation. There are various questions where no particular amendment presented itself on the first examination and it was thought that the easiest way to put the question before the Standing Orders Select Committee was to suggest the omission of the whole Standing Order. There was no intention to make that an operative motion. It is a well-known parliamentary procedure to raise a question by doing that and therefore the suggestion was made that that was the easiest way in which to do it. There are a number of suggestions relating to the procedure of question and answer on which I think the Select Committee under Standing Orders might well be asked to pronounce if it is not asked to propose specific amendments to the Standing Orders. As my Honourable friend from Burma has pointed out and as I should have thought Government would have been well aware, this House is not asked to discuss each individual to a Bill before a Bill is referred to Select Committee. The discretion for the amendment of a Bill is left to the Select Committee and though the procedure under the Standing Orders prescribes that amendments shall be placed before the House in relation to Standing Orders before they are referred to Select Committee, that part of the procedure seemed to me entirely formal.

If the Honourable Member preferred, no doubt my Honourable friend from Burma (Mr. McCarthy) could have put down a long memorandum, discussing the problems arising out of question and answer and those arising out of the right of reply under closure and so on. But if the Honourable the Home Member thinks that it is desirable to preclude the Select Committee from discussing such questions unless specific amendments are placed before the House, then, I am afraid, the Chair cannot uphold his contention.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I will only refer to one point in connection with this debate, and that is that notice for all these amendments were received only yesterday and I dare say that many of us here have not had sufficient time to consider each and every amendment that has been proposed by the Honourable the Home Member or any other gentleman here. If it is wished by the Honourable the Home Member that a Member should give detailed reasons for every amendment that he has been proposing, I think we shall require time to consider all these amendments in detail before they are brought up for discussion here. I suppose many of my Honourable friends have come prepared here only to refer all these amendments to the Select Committee for consideration. If that is not the procedure to be adopted to-day, I propose that the whole consideration of all these amendments be postponed until we have had sufficient time to consider whether we should refer all or any of these amendments to the Select Committee or not.

Mr. President: I cannot accept that proposal. It is, as I say, usurping the functions of the Select Committee. It seems to me highly undesirable that this Assembly should attempt to forestall the decisions or discussions of the Select Committee. It is much more desirable that this stage should be purely formal and that the Select Committee should be given discretion to take up these questions and deal with them as they appear to them.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas (Sind : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : I propose that the question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President : The question is :

‘ That leave be given to make the proposed amendment.’

The motion was adopted.

Mr. F. McCarthy : I beg to move :

‘ That the amendment I have proposed be referred to a Select Committee.’

The motion was adopted.

Mr. F. McCarthy : I beg to move for leave to amend the Legislative Assembly Standing Orders in the following manner and that the proposed amendments be referred to a Select Committee.

4. In Standing Order 25 :

- (a) after the word ‘ count ’ the words ‘ being demanded by a Member ’ shall be inserted ; and
- (b) the following proviso shall be added, namely :
‘ Provided that when a count has been taken, no demand for account shall be made within one hour thereof.’

5. To Standing Order 31 the following provision shall be added, namely :

‘ Provided that, unless the President otherwise directs nothing in this Standing Order shall apply in the case of a motion for the amendment of a Bill on which a decision has been given at an earlier stage of the Bill.’

6. Standing Order 32 shall be omitted.

7. Standing Order 34 shall be omitted.

8. After Standing Order 39 the following Standing Order shall be inserted, namely :

‘ 39-A. Where any motion under Standing Order 38 or 39 that a Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon is carried, the Assembly shall not be held to be committed to the principle of the Bill.’

9. In sub-order (1) of Standing Order 54 for the word ‘ ten ’ the word ‘ twenty ’ shall be substituted.

10. To Standing Order 55 the following sub-order shall be added, namely :

‘ (3) The Select Committee shall, unless the Assembly otherwise directs, have authority to propose amendments other than those of which notice has been given, and the report of the Select Committee shall contain a full explanation of all such amendments.’

11. For the proviso to Standing Order 59 the following shall be substituted, namely :

‘ Provided that no Resolution shall be admissible unless it is clearly and precisely expressed and raises a single definite issue.’

12. To sub-order (2) of Standing Order 61 the following shall be added, namely:

'Unless any other Member, authorised in writing by such Member, moves the Resolution:

Provided that the President may in his discretion allow the Resolution to be moved without the written authority of the Member in whose name the Resolution stands.'

13. Standing Order 70 shall be omitted.

14. In Standing Order 75 for the words 'Governor General' the word 'President' shall be substituted.'

The motion was adopted.

STANDING ORDERS NOS. 7, 18 AND 60.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I beg to move for leave to amend the Legislative Assembly Standing Orders. I have got various amendments.* The first amendment I suggest relates to Standing Order No. 7 and explains itself. As a matter of practice, no doubt the Secretary gives us notice, but I want that the Secretary should prepare a list of business likely to come up before the Assembly before each Session, so that we may come prepared with the subjects which are likely to come up before the Assembly. That is the object of this amendment, and I hope it will commend itself to the Assembly.

Mr. President: The question is that leave be given to amend.

*1. Standing Order No. 7, rule 22.

Add as clause 1 the following:

'A list of business of the Assembly, Government and non-official, likely to come up before each Session shall be prepared by the Secretary and a copy thereof shall be circulated for the information of every Member at least a fortnight before the commencement of each Session.'

and re-number present clauses 1, 2 and 3 as 2, 3 and 4.

2. Standing Order No. 13, rule 29, Proviso, clause (1).

Add 'other than that relating to the liberty of person or the security of property of any British subject residing within the limits of such state.'

3. Standing order No. 13, rule 29, Proviso, clause (2).

Add after the word 'chief' and before the word 'and' the following 'other than that relating to the liberty of person or the security of property of any British subject residing within such territory.'

4. Standing Order 58, rule 109, clause 1, sub-clause 1.

Add 'other than that relating to the liberty of person or the security of property of any British subject residing within the limits of such state.'

5. Standing Order 58, rule 109, clause 1, sub-clause 2.

Add after the word 'chief' and before the word 'and' the following:

'other than that relating to the liberty of person or the security of property of any British subject residing within such territory.'

6. Standing Order 18, rule 36.

Add after the words 'at the request of' and before the word 'the' the following:

'any Member who holds a written authority from such absent Member or of'

7. Standing Order 60, rule 112, clause 2.

Add 'unless some other Member is authorised in writing by such Member to move the Resolution or the President allows it to be moved at the request of any Member.'

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, I think that the Honourable Member means Standing Order No. 8 and not 7. I think he has misquoted the Standing Order to be amended.

Mr. President: There are certain respects in which the amendments proposed by Mr. Rangachariar cannot be admitted by the Select Committee at all, because they are ultra vires, that is to say, they are amendments of the Rules. But they appear here on the paper because notice has been given.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I will explain that. As regards the 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th amendments standing in my name, they are more or less amendments of the Rules and not amendments of the Standing Orders. The amendment of these Rules has become necessary. They relate to the powers of this Assembly to put any question or to move any Resolution in respect of any action taken against a British subject in the Indian States. Sometimes they are deprived of their liberty; sometimes they are deprived of their properties, and we cannot get any information, because, as the rules are now interpreted, we cannot elicit information in the shape of questions with regard to these British subjects who are deprived of their liberty and property in Indian States, and we cannot move any Resolutions upon them. I think it is highly essential that this Assembly should have the right to get information about those British subjects who are so dealt with in Indian States and also should have the power to move Resolutions if necessary. I think, Sir, that it will be competent to the Select Committee to make suggestions to the Assembly to make recommendations to the Governor General in Council to amend the Rules. In that way, I think, the Select Committee will be competent to deal with the matter.

Mr. President: That is beyond the scope of the Select Committee on Standing Orders. The Statutory authority for the Rules is the Imperial Parliament, and I am afraid that what the Honourable Member is inviting the Select Committee to do is to have an academic discussion upon the amendment of the Rules. It is perfectly true that the Honourable Member will be entitled to move a Resolution recommending to the Governor General in Council an amendment of these rules, but Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I quite realise that, Sir. I only wanted to fortify myself with the opinion of the Select Committee whether the Assembly should take such a step or not. It is rather an important question and I did not want to take the responsibility of rushing the Assembly with a Resolution of that sort, and therefore I thought that it would be much better discussed in the Select Committee whether it is desirable to move such an amendment or not. In that view I do not know whether you will rule it altogether out of the powers of the Select Committee to consider whether any such recommendation should be made.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is a very skilful lawyer and I am not. As Chairman of the Select Committee I should be bound to rule that it is outside the scope of the Select Committee to consider an amendment of the rules. Whether it would be outside the scope of the Select Committee to consider an ingenious reference made by the Honourable Member I am not sure.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: In that view I do not propose those amendments. Items 6 and 7 in my name are already anticipated by the motion of Mr. McCarthy and I would also move them so that they may be considered by the Select Committee.

Mr. President : The question is :

'That leave be given to amend* the Legislative Assembly Standing Orders and that the proposed amendments be referred to a Select Committee.'

* 1. Standing Order No. 7, rule 22.

Add as clause 1 the following :

'A list of business of the Assembly, Government and non-official, likely to come up before each Session shall be prepared by the Secretary and a copy thereof shall be circulated for the information of every Member at least a fortnight before the commencement of each Session.'

and re-number present clauses 1, 2 and 3 as 2, 3 and 4.

6. Standing Order 18, rule 36.

Add after the words 'at the request of' and before the word 'the' the following :

'any Member who holds a written authority from such absent Member or of.'

7. Standing Order 60, rule 112, clause 2.

Add 'unless some other Member is authorised in writing by such Member to move the Resolution or the President allows it to be moved at the request of any Member.'

The motion was adopted :

Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal (Bihar and Orissa : Nominated Non-Official) : I move for leave to amend the Legislative Assembly Standing Orders in the following manner.† They may be taken as read :

(At this stage the Honourable Member began to read the amendments.)

Mr. President : The Honourable Member need not read them all out unless there is anything in his proposed amendments which requires special explanation.

The motion was adopted.

SUPPLEMENTARY AMENDMENTS TO STANDING ORDERS.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee (Calcutta Suburbs: Non-Muhammadan Urban) : I have submitted to the Honourable the President a letter suggesting two supplementary amendments, one with reference to the amendment of section 8 proposed by the Honourable Sir William Vincent and the other with reference to another amendment of Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal which suggests a forty-eight hours' previous notice, and I pray that my two amendments may be put to this House. I pray that the President may be pleased to dispense with the ten days' notice provided in section 54 of the Standing Orders and the House may give me leave to introduce my two amendments. The amendments I propose are :

'(a) To Standing Order No. 8 the following words be added at the end of the 1st paragraph thereof :

'At least twenty-four hours before the commencement of the sitting for the day fixed for the transaction of such business by putting up such list on the notice board, also by forwarding a copy thereof to every Member so that it may reach in time his registered address in the town where the Session is being held.'

The amendment proposed will make the matter more specific, and my object in putting it forward is that the Select Committee may have an opportunity of considering it. The next amendment I propose is :

'That to clause 1 of Schedule I after the amendment, as proposed by the Honourable Sir William Vincent, the following words be added :

'Provided that where the commencement of the said period of seventeen days falls on a date prior to the date of commencement of a Session of the Assembly, such numbered list shall also be forwarded by post to every Member at least twenty-one days before the first date allotted for the transaction of non-official business during such Session.'

My submission to the House is that these points are well worth considering, and I hope the Honourable the President will dispense with the ten days' notice and the House will give me the necessary leave, so that these may go before the Select Committee.

Mr. President : I agree that the Honourable Member has not been able to give ten days' notice because he has not been able to consider whether he wishes to amend the proposed amendments, but I am prepared to give him an undertaking that the Committee will consider the amendments to the proposed amendments which he has suggested. I do not think it is necessary to put them to the House. If he will accept that undertaking, I will guarantee that the Select Committee will consider the suggestions he has made.

RESOLUTION RE : POLICY OF REPRESSION.

(The President called out the name of Munshi Iswar Saran whose Resolution re the Policy of Repression was next on the President's List of Business. Munshi Iswar Saran was not present in the House.)

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member) : Mr. Iswar Saran has just come into the House.

Mr. President : I now call upon the Honourable Member to move his Resolution.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : I think it was the wish of the House yesterday that this Resolution was to be postponed and not be moved at all to-day. That is what I understood and I see that in my copy of the List of Business this item is cut out.

Mr. President : The Resolution appears in the List of Business which has been placed on my table this morning and I must go by that. I was perfectly well aware that the House was to postpone the discussion on this Resolution, but I may point out that under Standing Order 61 if the Member who has a Resolution standing in his name is absent, the Resolution shall be deemed to have been withdrawn. I do not know whether the Honourable Member wishes his Resolution to disappear from the List of Business.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas (Sind : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : We are not prepared to deal with the Resolution after the decision arrived at yesterday. The List of Business that is supplied to us has this item cut out altogether, so we were under the impression that this business was not coming on to-day.

Mr. President : The Honourable Member does not seem to be aware that I am dealing with a different point. The decision made yesterday was made on a motion without any relation to the List of Business. The List of Business on my table contains this item and in order to protect the rights of the Honourable Member from Allahabad I was bound to call his name, so that, if he chose, he could get up and ask that this motion be postponed. Otherwise the Resolution would disappear not only from the List of Business but out of existence.

Munshi Iswar Saran (Cities of the United Provinces : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : Sir, in view of the decision arrived at yesterday, I beg to ask for permission not to move this Resolution to-day but to have it postponed till some future date.

Mr. President : The question is that permission be granted.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : Before this motion is put to the vote, I want to say a word or two. I wish the Honourable the Home Member would give us some idea as to the date on which this Resolution will be taken up. I am aware, Sir, that the Government have tried their best to meet the wishes of the Members, especially those who had sent notices for motions of adjournment; but unfortunately the House yesterday decided to postpone the debate. I wish, however, Sir, that the Government would find it convenient to mention the date now. So far as I am concerned I came specially from Calcutta, where I was engaged in the work of the Fiscal Commission, to take part in the debate on this Resolution. It is very inconvenient not to know when the debate is coming on and I must go back and join the Fiscal Commission. I think that is the state of many Members here. They want to go and join various Committees on which they are and unless the date is known to them, it is impossible for them to know when they should come.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Sir, I rise to a point of order. Standing Order 61 provides that the Member in whose name a Resolution stands on the list of business shall, when called on, either (1) withdraw the Resolution in which case he shall confine himself to a mere statement to that effect ; or (2) move the Resolution, in which case he shall commence his speech by a formal motion in the terms appearing on the list of business. The present motion is thus strictly speaking not in order. I do not want to press the point, however, as I understand that the Resolution was not in the list of business before Members and, therefore, the present motion is really unnecessary. But with reference to the remarks of Mr. Dwarkadas I think the Honourable Member will give me credit for having invited a debate on this subject at the earliest moment. It was not Government that avoided this debate. It was the Honourable Members of this Assembly who were anxious not to have it to-day. We were quite ready for the debate and we had nothing to conceal. As to giving another date, Honourable Members will remember that the days fixed for Government business are very limited. We have given increased facilities this Session for non-official business and there is a great deal of official work to be done. As I said, our time is limited and I cannot, without leave of His Excellency, to whom I shall take this matter personally and whose personal orders I shall obtain in this matter, make any definite statement at present, but I have no doubt that Government will do their best, having regard to the importance of the question and to the performance of Government business, to afford facilities for the debate if this is possible. I cannot however say when the debate will be taken up because it will depend upon other business.

We have given one day, which has not been accepted.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division : Muhammadan Rural) : Sir,

Friday or Saturday next will be very convenient. If 12-20 P.M. His Excellency will see his way to give sanction to the Honourable Home Member, it will be suitable for us. I am sure, the Honourable Home Member will get that sanction. And this can be done in a few minutes if my Honourable friend will kindly go out of the Assembly Chamber for a little while and bring a suitable message from His Excellency the Viceroy that we may deal with the subject, Sir, either on Friday or Saturday. On both days, Sir, I think we have nothing to do, and that will be a convenient date, which will suit both the Honourable Home Member and all of us.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Sir, I always understood there was one clear religious duty for Muhammadans on Friday and I am surprised to hear that Mr. K. Ahmed has nothing to do on that date. I am not, in any case in that fortunate position nor are the other Members of Government. Everyone knows next Friday is a day prescribed for the Executive Council. As I have said, I will consult my colleagues and His Excellency, but I can give no kind of undertaking that we shall find a day for this debate. Nor can the Members of this Assembly, I think, legitimately ask me to do it. I was willing to give an early opportunity for the debate to-day, but for various reasons Honourable Members were not prepared to take up the challenge.

(Mr. K. Ahmed rose to speak.)

Mr. President : Order, order.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : In the circumstances I really cannot be asked now to fix on any special date for this debate. I simply must decline to do it.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : I move that the motion be adjourned to the 19th January.

Mr. President : Secretary explains to me that there was no time actually to print the new notice, but, having printed the list with this item upon it, it was officially struck out. I was not aware of that. The Honourable Member will understand that I had to call it, with the notice appearing before me. However, the motion which he has moved need not now be proceeded with, namely, for postponement, because we may take it that technically this notice does not appear on the paper.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer : (Tanjore cum Trichinopoly : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I should like to ask, on a question of procedure, whether you consider yourself so far bound by a clerical error in the preparation of the agenda that you should adhere to the agenda in spite of the fact that it contains an obvious mistake of which you and ourselves are aware, and whether you should take up the erroneous item and propose it for consideration. Now it so happens that Munshi Iswar Saran is present, but he might have gone back yesterday to Allahabad, or some other Member might, on the strength of the decision, have absented himself. I wish to know whether you would consider yourself so rigidly bound by all the mistakes committed by the office in the preparation of the agenda that you feel you ought to adhere to the agenda nevertheless and insist upon it.

Mr. President : I should certainly not consider the Chair bound by clerical errors of the Department or of the printer; and I do not want to allow the suggestion to pass that it is due to a mistake of the office. After all, the Assembly made up its mind somewhat in a hurry yesterday, and it was not very easy to get a list printed 3 or 4 days ago corrected in time. It is entirely due to accident and circumstances of the moment that this appears on the list at all. As I understand, in some cases it has been scored out, and in some cases it has not been scored out, but I assure the Honourable Member that neither the Chair nor the Assembly are bound by any such errors.

Munshi Iswar Saran: Sir, I may be permitted to explain that it was by mere chance that I came into this Chamber just now. I came to mention a different matter to one of my colleagues. I was all along under the impression that this Resolution would not come up to-day. Had it not been for the fact that I had to consult a friend of mine, I would not have come into the Chamber at this moment and I would have been working on the Committee on the Income-tax Bill.

Mr. President: This House now stands adjourned till Eleven of the Clock to-morrow, the 12th January, 1922.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Thursday, 12th January, 1922.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

MEMBER SWORN.

Mr. Theodore Alban Henry Way, M.L.A. (United Provinces : Nominated Official).

RESOLUTION RE: UTILISATION OF INDIGENOUS SYSTEMS OF MEDICINE.

Bai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal (Bihar and Orissa : Nominated Non-Official) : Sir, the Resolution that I have the honour to move runs as follows :

‘That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that some practical steps be taken to utilize the services of the Unani and Ayurvedic experts for the prevention and cure of the epidemics in the country with the help of the indigenous systems—and that a Committee be appointed to recommend those steps.’

Before I deal with the merits of the Resolution, I want to say a few words regarding the jurisdiction of this august Assembly about this Resolution. Honourable Members are aware that in February last the Honourable Lala Sukhbir Sinha moved a Resolution in the Council of State regarding the desirability of having Unani and Ayurvedic Medical Colleges in the provinces, which was lost on the ground that the matter was a provincial subject. The Resolution of the Honourable Lala Sukhbir Sinha might have touched upon a provincial subject as it related to the desirability of starting colleges in the provinces ; but I most respectfully submit, that every Resolution regarding public health is not necessarily a provincial subject. Clause 3 of the list of provincial subjects in the Appendix to the Subjects Committee’s Report is as follows :

‘Public Health and Sanitation and Vital Statistics—subject to Indian Legislation in respect of contagious diseases to such extent as may be declared by an Act of the Indian Legislature.’

The Resolution before the House relates to the prevention and cure of epidemics and so it cannot be said that this House has no jurisdiction to appoint a Committee. In their note on clause 3 above, the Committee say that the Indian Legislature should have concurrent power to legislate regarding protection against infectious and contagious diseases. In paragraph 40 of their Report, the Committee say :

‘There remains however a special case for consideration, namely, legislation affecting a certain class of provincial subjects as to which it seems expedient, while giving freedom to provincial legislatures, also to preserve the full authority of the Indian Legislature. The subjects falling into this class are subjects in which the backwardness or laxity of one province is specially liable seriously to endanger the interests of other provinces. They all have to do with health, either that of human beings, or that of animals or plants.’

[Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal.]

After giving details of the measures they recommended, the Report goes on :

' In regard to these matters we recommend that it should be definitely recognized that it is open to the Indian Legislature to legislate, notwithstanding that they fall within the limits of provincial subjects which are not classified as subject to Indian Legislation. The provinces will, however, retain their own freedom to legislate on these subjects without previous sanction, except that, where the Indian Legislature passes a law of general application dealing with these subjects, it will be open to that Legislature to prescribe that a provincial legislature shall not be competent to amend such a law without obtaining previous sanction.

' In making the above recommendation we do not leave out of consideration one of the alternatives mentioned in paragraph 212, namely, that the Indian Legislature should pass legislation which might be adopted either simpliciter or with modifications by any province which may wish to make use of it. We agree that this form of legislation should be recognized as within the scope of the Indian Legislature as regards any provincial subject, and that such legislation should not be regarded as involving any invasion of the provincial field. But, as the adoption of such model legislation passed by the Indian Legislature is to be left entirely to the discretion of the province, the acceptance of this plan does not adequately provide for such conditions as are referred to in the preceding paragraph.'

Plague and influenza were not known to India before recently they broke out in a corner of the country and spread out from place to place and almost annually recur in the same manner. It is the Central Government which alone can take some adequate steps for the whole of the country for their prevention and cure. In a matter like this the Provincial Governments, with their limited resources, cannot do much, it is the Central Government which should take the lead and it is for the provinces to follow the noble example of the Central Government.

The Report of the Functions Committee states :

' The Provinces may adopt such model legislation passed by the Indian Legislature'.

It cannot be said that the Resolution has nothing to do with legislation. This is a new step for the protection of the health of the people, and the Committee may recommend some sort of legislation, and the Government, after considering the report of the Committee, may think it expedient to have recourse to some sort of legislation. A Committee appointed by this House will have special advantages. It will consist of the representatives of most of the provinces and will therefore be in a position to handle the question from an all-India point of view. Besides, the matter is so urgent that it can be safely called an emergency measure. A Reuter's telegram, as published in the Eastern Mail of the 6th February about the Report of the Ministry of Health, London, runs as follows :

' The Report of the Ministry of Health furnishes a grave warning with regard to world-wide possibility of further epidemics similar to those of 1919 which was responsible for more deaths than the whole war. A number of very eminent medical men state that the world's outlook with regard to future pestilence is gloomy. From a perusal of the carefully prepared report it is plain that the influenza epidemic remains a mystery disease despite all experiments in bacteriological test and other data. The medical men are at a loss to define the cause or to offer a cure. They express the opinion that conditions over wide tracts of the world will be favourable to further epidemics for at least another generation.'

Should the Central Government, after this grave warning, leave the matter entirely in the hands of the Provincial Governments? The attitude of the Government regarding this matter is, of late, very sympathetic, but mere sympathy will not solve the problem. Some practical steps should be taken.

This warning proves, beyond doubt, that this is a very important subject and deserves the serious consideration of every well-wisher of the country. Considering the importance of the subject, I have collected the valuable opinions of high Government officials, eminent European, American and Anglo-Indian medical experts, historians, journalists and councillors speaking with personal experience and got the same printed and published as a small book called 'Glories of the Indian Medicine,' which has been circulated to the Honourable Members of this House. I made this collection for the purposes of my speech and therefore hope to be excused for making frequent references to the pages of this book. As I have said in the first page of the preface :

'Famine and pestilence are the two great evils which are the root causes of most of the present troubles of India. Although each of these two evils causes immense havoc in the country and each serves to aggravate the rigour of the other, it can be safely said that pestilence is really responsible for most of the mischiefs. Numberless souls are annually swept away like flies by the epidemics without receiving any medical relief whatsoever. In the words of the Right Honourable Winston Churchill: 'It is our duty to arrest the ghastly waste, not merely of human happiness but of national health and strength, which follows when through the death of the bread-earner, the frail boat, in which the fortunes of the family are embarked, founders and women and children are left to struggle hopelessly on the dark waters of a friendless world'.

These wise words apply a fortiori to India where the poverty of the people is proverbial.

'But this ghastly waste cannot be arrested without eradicating the epidemics, which is by no means an easy task, and is next to impossible in India without fighting out this fearful foe with the joint forces of the allopathic and the indigenous system of medicine.'

It is certainly not intended that recourse should be had to the indigenous system in substitution for the allopathic system. No doubt Allopathy is an acquisition to the country and is one of the blessings of British rule in India ; but there are strong grounds for supplementing the Allopathic system by the indigenous system generally for every medical relief and especially for the prevention and cure of epidemics.

Along with the aforesaid report of the Ministry of Health, London, expressing inability to define the cause or offer a cure for the influenza epidemic, Honourable Members will be pleased to hear what Dewan Bahadur D. Seshagiri Rao said in the Madras Legislative Council on the 21st February, 1921. It will be found on page 41 of the book and runs as follows :

'In the late epidemic of influenza which ravaged the Godavari district I may say from my personal experience—it is reported and I have seen it too 90 per cent. of the patients treated under the English treatment succumbed. You will also be glad to learn that 90 per cent. of the patients treated under the Ayurvedic treatment recovered. I therefore place it before the Council in order that they may be pleased to brush aside scientific knowledge for a time, and have sympathy for the poor who will get some relief if Ayurvedic system is encouraged and after all, if only on the ground of economy, we should encourage the Ayurvedic treatment. In a rich district like Godavari we have been able to start only 12 dispensaries and hospitals for a population of over 14 lakhs of people and these dispensaries are at a distance of 15 to 20 miles from one another. It is simply ridiculous for the people to be expected to go to these dispensaries for medical aid. On an average these dispensaries cost us from Rs. 200 to Rs. 250 a month and if Ayurvedic treatment is properly organised and extended to these villages that with Rs. 40 a month you can run a good dispensary which gives Ayurvedic medicines. I feel strongly on the point and the strength is due to the experience that I have gained all these 36 years.'

[Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal.]

The Honourable Khan Bahadur Mir Asad Ali, speaking in the Supreme Council on the 15th of March, 1916 (page 34 of the book), said :

'The existing medical institutions, as well as medical practitioners, are quite inadequate to meet the growing requirements of the country. According to the latest figures available

* * * * * there is one hospital for every 5,500 population. *

* * * * * The rate of mortality is very high when compared with that of the United Kingdom. * * * * * Cholera and plague have claimed millions of victims.'

Babu Rebati Kanta Ghosh, in the Legislative Council of Bihar and Orissa on the 27th July last, repeats the same sad story (page 39 of the book). He says :

'It is said that the Allopathic system of treatment has improved a great deal, but I fail to understand whether this improvement is in quality or in quantity. The district from which I come as a representative is one with an area of 3,656 square miles and, after more than a century of British rule, I have got in the rural areas of that district only 8 or 9 Allopathic District Board dispensaries and four or five other dispensaries of private gentlemen. In some places there are no Allopathic dispensaries even at a distance of 30 or 40 miles. If even after more than a century of British rule we have got only a few dispensaries in the district, I do not know in how many years we can have a sufficient number of Allopathic dispensaries so that the people may be treated at their doors.'

The Honourable Sir William Vincent, speaking in the Council of State on the 16th February last, was pleased to observe somewhat similarly :

'The real fact however is that the facilities for medical treatment in this country are very inadequate at present and we should do everything we can to increase them.'

Now let us see how to increase the facilities for medical relief.

It is not practicable to increase the facilities for medical treatment much under the Allopathic system especially under the present financial conditions. The real situation has been very clearly expressed by Dewan Bahadur M. Krishna Nayar. Speaking in Council on 21st February last (page 45 of the book) :

'There is no attempt whatever made in any direction either through this Resolution or in any other way to prevent people from adopting the Western system of medicine. The Western system has come to stay in this country, and I thank God that it is so. Its benefits are immense. What is sought in this Resolution, however, is to allow the poor Indian systems, the Unani system and the Ayurvedic system, to supplement the Western system. The Western system touches only a very small fringe of the population of the country, and I venture, Sir, to say very boldly that whatever amount the Government or any local body, Municipality or District Board may be able to spend upon the Western system, you will never be able to bring the aid under this Western medical system to the door of every man in the country. On the other hand, people living in all nooks and corners of the country would be able to avail themselves of the Unani and Ayurvedic systems. Well, Sir, with your kind permission, if you will not rule me out of order, I may be permitted to say that I know a State where this system—I am speaking with reference to the Ayurvedic system—has not only been encouraged but has been established as a Government departmental system. I refer, of course, to Travancore. There is a Government Ayurvedic Department manned at its head by an Indian graduate who is a practical and theoretical Ayurvedic physician. There is an educational institution there, an Ayurvedic Pathshala where, in addition to the teaching that is imparted in the Ayurvedic system, professors who are graduates of the Medical College are employed to give lectures on physiology and anatomy. There is a course of about four or five years and after students pass certain prescribed examinations, they are allowed to practise as Ayurvedic physicians, and there is a net-work of these Ayurvedic institutions spread throughout the State which render immense medical aid to all the population of the State. I don't want to dilate upon this but I refer to that, Sir, only for the purpose of showing that the system has not only been encouraged but introduced with success in a part of the Presidency. There is no reason whatever that a system that has been found successful in one part of the Presidency will not be found successful in another part of that Presidency.'

But economy is not the only merit of the indigenous system. It has got other valuable merits recognised by doctors and medical experts whose authority cannot be in any way challenged. In this book will be found a complete reply to the objections that are sometimes raised against the indigenous system, that it is not scientific, that its practitioners are quacks and that at any rate even if they can treat diseases successfully they do not know how to diagnose. I claim the indulgence of this House while I quote some of the opinions, in the short space of time at my disposal, and hope the others will be taken as read. Surgeon General Pardey Lukis, at pages 6, 7 and 8 of the book : While strongly supporting the Resolution moved by the Honourable Khan Bahadur Mir Asad Ali Khan in March 1916 regarding the investigation of the indigenous systems of medicine in the Imperial Legislative Council, the Honourable Surgeon General Sir Pardey Lukis remarked :

'The motion now before us deals with the subjects to which I have devoted considerable thought during the 36 years of my residence in the East, and, as I said the other day at Indore, the longer I remain in India and the more I see of the country and its people, the more convinced I am that many of the empirical methods of treatment adopted by the Vaidas and Hakims are of the greatest value.'

and, continuing, the Surgeon General said :

'Why then should the Allopath arrogate to himself the right to appropriate for the individual benefit all new discoveries denying these privileges to the practitioners of other systems of medicines? This appears to be specially unfair when it is borne in mind that 90 per cent of the Indian population lives in rural areas where the Vaidas and Hakims are and will be for many years to come the chief attendants of these dumb millions alluded to in recent speeches in this Council. I am strongly of opinion that in the interest of the masses the improvement of the education of those who profess the indigenous systems of medicine is quite as important as the invention of a lower grade of Allopathic practitioner—personally if I were ill I say frankly that I would prefer to be treated by a good Vaidya or Hakim rather than by a bad doctor. I resent strongly that spirit of medical trade unionism which leads many doctors to stigmatise all Vaidas and Hakims as quacks and charlatans and shall be always proud of the fact that I was privileged to have the friendship of such learned men as Nawab Shafa Uddowlah of Fyzabad and Kabiraj Bijay Ratna Sen of Calcutta. I will not trouble a lay audience with all the evidence that exists to show that many of the so-called discoveries of the recent years are re-discoveries of facts known centuries ago to the ancients; I will merely remark that I am not alone in my opinion as regards the value of the ancient systems of medicine. If I err, I do so in good company with my friend and former colleague, Sir Havelock Charles, Colonel King of Madras to whom India owes the magnificent Research Institute at Guindy and that distinguished Sanitarian, Doctor Turner, the Health Officer of Bombay.'

Again at page 8, paragraph (3). On the occasion of his opening the Hukumchand Laboratories and Reading Room attached to the King Edward Medical School at Indore, he said :

'I wish to impress upon you most strongly that you should not run away with the idea that everything that is good in the way of medicine is contained within ring-fence of Allopathy or Western medicine. The longer I remain in India and the more I see of the country and the people, the more convinced I am that many of the empirical methods of treatment adopted by the Vaidas and Hakims are of the greatest value and there is no doubt whatever that their ancestors knew ages ago many things which are now-a-days being brought forward as new discoveries.'

Much would have been done if this Resolution had been adopted at that time, but somehow or other the matter was sent to the Local Governments for opinion and Honourable Members will find that the opinions of Local Governments were not very favourable. The Government is very keen about expert opinions and it seems to me very strange that a matter on which expert like Sir Pardey Lukis gave his opinion should have been sent for the opinions of Local Governments, which opinions could only be gathered either from laymen or persons of inferior merits to Sir Pardey Lukis. However, that might have been done under the old Councils, but I hold that under the new Reform Councils a thing like that should not be done. When the expert opinions are unanimous in recognising the merits of the indigenous system and its utility, those opinions should be regarded. No doubt promises after promises have been made and hopes after hopes have been given by Government; but the realisation of those promises and the fulfilment of those hopes are now overdue and, if really, these indigenous systems are of any help to the public, then something practical should be done and the initial step should be taken by the Central Government. Honourable Members will find a similar opinion in a speech of Colonel Maclaren, Civil Surgeon of Allahabad, at pages 13 and 14. He said :

‘When I first came to India I had no idea that your system of medicine has made such advances, but now I know better, and I much regret that owing to the busy life I have had to lead during my service, I have not given it that attention and study which its importance deserves. I know that you can diagnose and treat all diseases and that your treatment of chronic complaints is remarkable. Your treatment of such diseases as Asthma, Ascites, Insanity, diseases of the brain, spine and generative complaints is very successful under the climatic conditions of the country and the habits of the people. I was much interested in the drawings of the instrument used and charts shown to me the other day by Babu Sohan Lal Jain, Vaid, prepared under supervision of Pandit Narayan Dikshit Bapat. As you know, India is rich in medicinal products and herbs, many hundreds of which are incorporated in the Indian Pharmacopœa. I trust that as time goes on and social intercourse advances, there will be greater co-operation amongst gentlemen practising in two systems of medicines, for we can undoubtedly learn much from each other for our subject is the same, namely, the cure of the diseases. Each can learn from the other, as I say, we from your knowledge and experience, and you by the study of physical and chemical science and its applications to your medical methods.’

In page 22 of the book, Honourable Members will find :

Mr. President : I must warn the Honourable Member that he has very nearly exhausted his time.

Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal : Honourable Members will find that all the remarks which I have still to cite in favour of the indigenous systems, are contained in this book. With these few remarks, as the time is up, I close my submission and commend this Resolution to the House as strongly as I can for its adoption. The Resolution is a very modest one. It does not dictate any particular step to be taken; it simply asks for a Committee to be appointed and it is left to the Committee to say what steps should be taken.

Mr. P. L. Misra (Central Provinces Hindi Divisions : Non-Muhammadan) : Sir, I have much pleasure in supporting this Resolution. As the Honourable Mover has said just now, the Resolution is a very simple one. It is that some practical steps should be taken to utilise the services of the Unani and Ayurvedic experts for the prevention and cure of the epidemics in the country and so on. Sir, connected as I am with many public institutions in my province I have some experience of these epidemics—I mean plague and influenza. During the last influenza epidemic, as the Assembly knows very well, millions of people were swept away by this fell disease. In my province about five lakhs of people were the victims of this epidemic, and the result was that when this epidemic spread in the districts, the dispensaries were quite insufficient to cope with it; the consequence being that, as my friend has already described in a graphic way, thousands of souls were swept away uncared for. Poverty, as the Assembly knows very well, is a curse of this country and in the countryside many people who could not resist the disease were lying like rats and cats in the streets and in the roads. I know instances when even Government servants, police sub-inspectors, head constables and postal officials, for epidemics are no respecters of persons, were all victims to this fell disease, and the institutions such as Post and Telegraph offices in some districts had to be closed, in fact there was none to look after these institutions. In my own district, which has a population of about five lakhs, I regret very much to observe that there were only half a dozen dispensaries. Now you can imagine how ridiculously small this number was, also the staff engaged therein to cope with influenza of such a virulent type. The result was that we people had to go to these Hakims and Vaidis and ask them to use their utmost skill to treat these people; and to our surprise hundreds of patients were cured by simple treatment by these Vaidis and Hakims who administered pills consisting of herbs, and the results were marvellous. That was also the case during the plague time. The Assembly knows that no specific has yet been discovered in this country ever since plague came here. People have been using all sorts of medicines and in some cases they have been very successful. Therefore, my submission is, that when these Vaidis and Hakims can use medicines which have been proved to be efficacious in many cases, is it not time that we should take some steps to institute a sort of inquiry to encourage these people and find out from this committee whether it will really be useful to employ them during the epidemics of influenza and plague. My submission therefore is, that it is absolutely necessary that we should take this step and I therefore support this Resolution.

Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney (Nominated Anglo-Indian): Sir, my chief reason for entering into this discussion is because I find that Resolution No. 1, and the Resolution which stands against my name, No. 4, relate to two opposite systems of treatment. It has been very truly said that when doctors disagree, the only one who can settle the matter is the undertaker. Yet, we as legislators, are asked in this Resolution, by my Honourable friend, the Mover, to settle as to whether the Ayurvedic and Unani system of treatment is superior to the Allopathic system. (Cries of 'No.')

I repeat we are asked to take this matter up—if I may be allowed to continue and amplify my statement. I hope to show its justification. I am alluding to the results which my Honourable friend mentioned in support of the Unani system. He stated that 90 per cent. of influenza cases had been cured by the Unani system while 91 per cent. of deaths had occurred under Allopathic treatment. Now, we are not here to decide which is the better method of treatment. We are a body of legislators, not medical men. I submit, if all that is claimed for this system of treatment, which I have no desire to decry, is true, then it needs no legislation, interference, or advocacy, on our part; it stands on its own merits, self-advertised and self-evident. I do not therefore see that any practical good will result by any such committee being appointed. The Unani and Ayurvedic systems have stood the test of centuries in India; whereas western medicine has been quite recently introduced into this country, and, if the latter system has supplanted the former, it is because it is as good or better than it. Moreover, the Indian is well able to decide the treatment he requires without any advice from the Legislative Assembly. This very matter was discussed in the Council of State and certain statistics, etc., were asked for, before that House could or would pass an opinion.

[Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney.]

The Honourable Mover of this Resolution has said that when expert opinion like that of the late Sir Pardey Lukis favoured this system, why should the matter have been sent to Local Governments for opinion. Now, if the expert opinion that was given to us before was not considered satisfactory by Government, how can the opinion of this Legislature, a body of laymen, be of any use to decide on the merits or demerits of the system? I do not, in any little way, wish to decry the merits of the indigenous systems of medicine which have peculiar justifiable claims of their own. But we must remember, in all forms of medicines; 'what is food for one is poison to another'.

I ask the Honourable Mover to believe me when I say that if I could see that any good would accrue by appointing this Committee, I, for one, would be the first to support it. But, since I am not convinced that any good will result, I feel constrained to oppose the Resolution.

Dr. Nand Lal (West Punjab : Non-Muhammadan) : Sir, I am afraid that Colonel Gidney had not sufficient time to give his serious consideration to the words of the Resolution. The words of the Resolution are not that this Assembly or the Honourable Mover is in favour of driving out the western system. What the Honourable Mover means to suggest to this Assembly is this, that the Ayurvedic system, which is an indigenous system and which has been found to be adequate so far as the diseases in this country are concerned, may as well be adopted. What the Honourable Mover has suggested in his very modest speech is this, that a Committee should be appointed and that Committee may deliberate over all the reasons which have been advanced in favour of the indigenous system. I cannot see for a moment how Colonel Gidney entertains the fear that we are against the western system. We are not against it. We concede and make bold admissions before this House that the western system of treatment has done immense good to us, but not so much good as we expected, and, therefore, we feel constrained to suggest very strongly that this Resolution, which has been so ably supported by citations, authorities, references and opinions, should be passed unanimously. I come from the Punjab, and if I may be allowed to make a reference to my own experience—I don't mean to speak of my experience as a physician, because I am not a medical man, but of my experience which has come to me in the form of an information, from a good many friends and relations—that the Ayurvedic system is as much wholesome and as much useful as the western system. If Colonel Gidney has any fear about the Ayurvedic system, he may ask his friends not to resort to it, but we Indians are quite prepared to assert in the strongest terms that the Ayurvedic system is very much useful and will, as I believe, drive away a good many diseases which, unfortunately, the western system has failed to drive. With these few observations, Sir, I very strongly support the Resolution which speaks for itself and which is very modest in its terms.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Tirhut Division : Muhammadan) : Sir, not being a medical man, I cannot form an opinion on the comparative merits of the two systems of medicine, but my own experience has been that the Unani and Ayurvedic systems of medicine have done immense good to the country, but we are not going into the comparative merits of the two systems. The principal point for the consideration of this House is that Medicine is a provincial subject, and when the Provinces have not moved in the matter, there is no reason why the Imperial Government should spend, as the Mover of the Resolution says, 'to utilise the services of the Unani and Ayurvedic experts'. Of course it will be for the Honourable the Finance Member, as the fittest person, to find out how the cost is to be met. But any one who has gone closely into the Budget will see that we have various demands of an urgent nature to meet. I therefore oppose the Resolution on purely financial grounds:

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee (Calcutta Suburbs: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I had no intention to take part in the debate, but if I stand up, I do so with a view to remove certain misconceptions, if I may so describe them, on the point. As it has been pointed out by several previous speakers, the point is not which is the better system, the European or Indian, but the point now under consideration is the utilisation of the existing forces in the country; that is to say, when we find that there are in the country certain other systems of medicines at work, whether we should or should not avail ourselves of those systems in order to supplement the European system and whether inquiry should be made into the matter by appointing a Committee. Unless there is a central organization, for the whole of India for purposes of the inquiry, it is difficult to consider all aspects of the question in a systematic manner, and that, I submit, is the whole point. Eminent persons including even Viceroys have admitted that there are certain points in favour of the indigenous systems of medicine, but we are not concerned with these points at the present moment. The question is whether we should or should not utilize the existing forces; and not whether the European system has appealed more widely to the people generally, or not. The fact is, however, I may state, that the public have immense faith in the indigenous system. In accounting for the popularity of the European system, one must not forget that Government have put facilities in the way of the people in availing themselves of that system of medicine, and that public money is being spent towards popularising the western system of medicine. We must not forget this fact, as an element which goes towards popularising that system. We have, however, no reliable statistics upon which we can base our conclusions so far as the Unani and Ayurvedic systems of medicine are concerned. We do not possess sufficient information about their working, and what is worse, we do not even care to know anything about them. To refuse to look into the question betrays an attitude of mind which I deprecate. I am not a doctor myself and my views are not narrow. I speak as one who is anxious to make use of all the advantages or benefits that are available under the existing circumstances of the country. That is my point. I therefore submit that the House should not look at the question from a financial point of view because the present is not a financial question at all. We do not know how the Committee will be constituted, and what amount of money we shall have to spend, but at any rate it will not come to much, and we can economise as much as possible. But to postpone all inquiry into a matter of this kind, in order to meet cases of supposed emergency in other directions, indicates an attitude of mind, which does not certainly appeal to me. With all my heart, therefore, I support the Resolution which has been so ably moved by my Honourable friend, the Mover.

Rai Bahadur Bishambhar Nath (Allahabad and Jhansi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, the importance and utility of the Unani and Ayurvedic systems of medicine and treatment has been discussed and proved several times and in different Councils. Even in the Council of State last year the subject was discussed and the attitude of the Government in the matter was found extremely sympathetic. I wish the Local Governments who in my opinion should take the initiative in a matter like this had done something more substantial. - The Resolution that has been moved by my friend, Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narain, would once more draw their attention to the subject and they would seriously consider the steps recommended by the Committee proposed to be appointed. I therefore support the Resolution and commend it to your acceptance.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Labour Interests) : Sir, I think there is some confusion between the speeches in support of this Resolution and the wording of the Resolution itself. The wording of the Resolution does not leave it open for us to say that the Committee should consider the desirability of utilising the services of the experts of the Unani and the Ayurvedic systems. The wording of the Resolution commits the Assembly to the view that it is desirable to make use of the services of the Ayurvedic and Unani systems of medicine.

Sir, as a layman, it is very difficult for me to commit myself to the view that those systems of medicine are to-day in such a position that the Government should spend public money on them. I do say however that those systems may be good and I would not object to Government spending a limited amount in finding out whether the Unani and Ayurvedic systems are really scientific or not, but I would certainly object to Government spending money in at once establishing those systems throughout the country. If the Mover of the Resolution, or his supporters, would change the wording of the Resolution in such a way that the Government be asked to consider the desirability of utilising the services of the Unani and Ayurvedic experts, then I may be able to support it, but as it reads at present, I regret that I cannot.

Personally, I do not believe much in the Ayurvedic and Unani systems at all, although I have no objection to Government making experiments in regard to those systems. What little experience I have had of them leads me to say that even the people in general have no faith in them (Cries of 'No'!). Sir, I am only giving Members of this Assembly my own experience of the matter. I may say that during my life I have seen hundreds of cases of serious illness, and I have invariably found that when the condition of the patient really became serious, the doctor has been called in and the Hakim and the Vaid generally given a 'go-by'. That has also happened when epidemics have raged through the country; on these occasions the services of the doctor are always requisitioned.

Sir, in India we have many Municipalities and many Local Boards which could certainly patronise the Unani and Ayurvedic systems of medicine, but what do we find? Have we seen many Municipalities or Local Boards dispensing with the services of doctors and calling in Hakim or the Vaid? For my own part, I have seen very few indeed. Take even the private charitable institutions, you will find very few dispensaries with a Ayurvedic or Unani practitioner in charge. Again, whenever a person wishes to leave some money for medical purposes, it is generally left to a western institution or to be used in fitting up a dispensary on western lines. At any rate, that is my experience; the experience of other people may be different. Then there is the difficulty of the subject being a Transferred Provincial Subject, and it is not right for us to pass here a Resolution which the Local Councils may not accept. On that ground alone we should seriously consider whether we should ask the Government of India, whose hands are already quite full and whom we want to take up several other important subjects, to fritter away their time and money on a matter which does not pertain to them.

On these grounds, Sir, as the Resolution stand, I cannot support it at all.

Mr. H. Sharp (Education Secretary): Sir, I shall try to reply briefly to the various views that have been put forward in the discussion this morning, and I hope that my reply will be acceptable both to the Mover of this Resolution and also to the majority in this House. Possibly, it will not be quite acceptable to all; for we have heard some dissentient notes; and whether it will be altogether acceptable to the Mover, or not, I cannot yet say. I think possibly that the Mover of this Resolution would like us to move rather more rapidly than the position of the Government of India, as it is at present, permits it to do. But in that respect I must point out, with reference to what the Honourable the Mover said regarding the danger of another pandemic of influenza and such diseases, that unfortunately the urgency of an object does not mean that the attainment of that object can be realised by any rapid or sudden means. After all, our medical knowledge, whether it be of the West or whether it be of the East, represents the growth of not hundreds, but thousands of years. Rome was not built in a day, and medical systems have to be built up by slow degrees. With reference to this, I must make a remark on something which the Honourable the Mover said regarding the mortality from influenza in 1918. I hope I understood him aright and I hope I heard him aright. If I understood him properly, I think he said that 90 per cent. of the patients treated by the Allopathic systems succumbed, and 90 per cent. of those treated by the indigenous systems recovered. Well now, I have seen it constantly stated, both in writing and in speech that 90 per cent. of the population of this country still depends on the Unani and Ayurvedic systems of medicine. A simple calculation will show that if these premises are, as stated, the conclusion would appear to be very inconsistent with the appalling mortality figures with which we were faced in October and November 1918. As regards the warning which the Honourable Mover put forward with reference to what has been stated in the Ministry of Health, as soon as I saw that telegram I immediately set about inquiring what are our supplies of anti-influenza vaccine and what steps can immediately be taken for combating any pandemic should it appear. I merely say that incidentally.

The Honourable Mover referred to the history of this case. I need not go further back than 1916 when the Honourable Mir Asad Ali Khan moved a Resolution in the Legislative Council. As the terms of that Resolution are important, I had better perhaps read them out to the Assembly:

12 noon. 'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council that the Government of India, in consultation with Local Governments, should investigate the possibility of placing the ancient and indigenous systems of medicine on a scientific basis and increasing their usefulness'.

That Resolution, as we have already been told, was accepted, and the Government of India addressed the Local Governments asking what was being done and what could be done. As we have also heard to-day, the Local Governments found certain difficulties. Some remarks which have been made to-day show that there is not entire agreement as to the propriety of having put this question to the Local Governments in that way, and that merely lay information was received back. I remember that a year ago, in the Council of State, it was stated by somebody that the investigations have been made primarily through the police. I do not think that that was so. I have the correspondence with me, and it shows that a very large amount of expert and professional opinion was at that time collected together and that the whole question was treated with very considerable care. However, in view of the opinion expressed by the Local Governments, nothing could be done. Just eleven months ago, the Honourable Lala Sukhbir Sinha moved in the Council of State another Resolution. The terms of that Resolution too are rather important, and I had better read them :

'This Council recommends to the Governor General in Council to recommend to every Provincial Government the desirability of (a) having an Ayurvedic and Tibbi Medical College in their Provinces, (b) taking measures to develop Indian drugs, and (c) appointing Vaidyas and Hakims in every dispensary to treat patients by indigenous methods'.

Various views were expressed at the time and that Resolution met with some opposition in the Council of State. The main opposition, however, that was brought against it was by reason of the fact that it seemed an invasion of the sphere of the Local Governments and the Ministers. That view was put forward by various people including non-officials, and it was put forward very forcibly by the Honourable Sir William Vincent in the following words :

'My objection, however, to the Resolution—and I hope on that point I shall secure the support of this Council—is that this is a provincial transferred subject in which it would be wrong for the Government of India as an executive body to interfere at all and that we should confine ourselves to forwarding this debate to Local Governments for such action as they think fit'.

As a matter of fact, the Honourable Sir William Vincent did secure very great support, so much so that if I remember aright, the Resolution secured only 11 votes against 32 votes against it, and so it was lost.

Why did the Government of India accept the one Resolution and oppose the other Resolution which was lost? The first Resolution recommended investigation; the second recommended what I may perhaps term direct action, although of course through the agency of the Local Governments. Furthermore, since the Resolution of 1916 was accepted and these circulars went out to the Local Governments there has been a constitutional change in India. It would be difficult now for the Government of India to address the Local Governments, although of course there could be no harm in sending the proceedings of to-day's meeting to them for their information, and I have no doubt that that will be done. But to go further than that would be trenching upon the domain of the Ministers, and it would constitute to some extent an undue interference with their freedom and their activities.

Now, this particular Resolution which has been moved to-day also is in danger of trenching upon that sphere, because it makes specific reference both to prevention and cure of epidemics, which are provincial transferred subjects. The Honourable Mover referred to one of the entries—I think it is No. 3—in Part II of the Schedule to the Devolution Rules under Section 45-A of the Government of India Act, and he quoted it. It shows that public health and sanitation and vital statistics are provincial subjects, subject however to legislation by the Indian Legislature in respect of infectious and contagious diseases, etc. He built an argument upon that. Well, Sir, I do not think that any argument can be built upon that in respect of this Resolution. That entry refers to legislation. It refers undoubtedly to such measures as the Epidemic Diseases Act. We are not going to make doctors work under one system or another by means of legislation. There is, however, another entry on which I think the Honourable Member might more firmly have depended in building his argument. The Resolution asks for practical steps to be taken in bringing in Vaidyas and Hakims to assist in the prevention and cure of diseases and it also asks for a Committee. I think it was the Honourable Mover himself who said that he simply asked for a Committee. This idea of a Committee brings in what is obviously essential to any successful pursuit of this topic, and that is, preliminary investigation and research. Well, Sir, even here, research is not entirely a Central subject by any means. Local Governments are not prohibited from having their research institutes. Indeed, they already have their medical research institutes. But we do find under Part I of the Schedule to the Devolution Rules—I think it is entry No. 33 under Part I—that central agencies and institutes for research are classed as Central subjects. Now, Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan pertinently asked: 'Where are we to get the money from for research or for any matter with reference to these purely Provincial transferred subjects?' It would be, if I may say so, rather unconstitutional for Central Revenues to contribute to any such object. But if such investigation can be pursued, if such a Committee can be held in connection with any central research institute, then I think that the Government of India can do something, and I am authorised to say at once that the Government of India do view this Resolution with the very greatest sympathy (Hear, hear). They are prepared to accept it both in its general spirit, and also more particularly with reference to such practical steps as do seem possible for giving effect to it. I only hope that the Honourable Mover will understand the restrictions under which the Government of India labours in a matter like this and will not take it amiss that the acceptance of the Resolution has to be conditioned by certain factors which perhaps will make progress rather slower than he would desire.

The Government of India can do two things. In the first place, it can send the report of these proceedings round to the Local Governments. It cannot guarantee what view the Local Governments will take of them. The Local Governments will have their own ideas and no doubt they will take their own action and that action will vary from province to province. In Calcutta and in Bombay, there are now Schools of Tropical Medicine which, if I may say so, appear to afford an excellent field for discussion between Allopaths, Vaidyas and Hakims, if of course, the authorities in charge in the Local Governments think that that is desirable. It was pointed out in the Council of State a year ago that already in the Calcutta School the processes which are being used or were being used by Sir Leonard Rogers and Dr. Chatterjee in the treatment of leprosy are the accepted Indian remedies, chanmoogra oil and neem oil. That is, I think, just a little instance of what can be done by way of collaboration in an institute of this kind. I hear that in the United Provinces the Government has granted a sum of money, and a substantial sum of money, for the maintenance of indigenous dispensaries. It was I think the Honourable Mr. Sethna who pointed out in the Council of State that although Bengal professes to be very keen on the Ayurvedic and Unani systems, the Provincial Council has passed a Resolution to the effect that every thana ought to possess a charitable dispensary and that every charitable dispensary should have its three Allopathic doctors. So we may expect some difference of treatment among the provinces.

[Mr. H. Sharp.]

Now, secondly, what can the Government of India do itself? The Government of India can encourage research along these lines in any central research institute. The Government of India has already a small central research institute, but that research institute during the war had transformed itself into a therapeutic institute dealing purely with the manufacture of vaccines; and I may say incidentally that by means of almost superhuman efforts that institute has saved tens of thousands of lives during the War. Partly owing to its success the demand for vaccines has arisen and, so far as one can see, that institute will have very largely to confine itself to the manufacture of vaccines in future. But the Government of India hope shortly to have a research institute on a very much larger scale. I am prohibited at the present moment from saying very much about this. The whole matter will be laid before the Assembly in due time; but this I can say by way of encouragement that save possibly for a small sum, a comparatively small sum, for capital expenditure, it is hoped that the maintenance of this institution will call for no new funds and that it will be possible to finance it out of existing funds and out of private donations which are hoped for. When the Government of India has such a research institute, then, and this is important, its professors and workers will be encouraged to get into communication with distinguished Vaidyas and Hakims; and if their discussions appear likely to lead to solid results, then will come the time for a Committee of experts of these various schools and that Committee will be able to consider the proper lines along which progress can be made and to indicate for the benefit of India at large the methods in which they can be practically employed.

I have laid stress on the extreme necessity of research in this matter—a certain amount of discussion and research even before it would be useful to appoint this Committee. The reason why I have done so is that there are certain circumstances which appear to constitute differences between the Western and Eastern systems of medicine. When I speak of differences, I am quite aware that that difference is only of method; as the Honourable General Edwards said in the Council of State, there is really no western system, there is really no eastern systems of medicine; they are alike in goal and they are alike in this also that in civilised countries, once a practitioner is qualified, he is not forbidden by law from adopting any treatment. He can adopt hydropathy, or homeopathy, or hypnotism, or faith-healing if he chooses.

Now what are the characteristics of the so-called Western medicine or Allopathy? Well, I am a layman and I daresay that Colonel Gidney will correct me if I am wrong. But I should say that these characteristics are that it insists upon organised training; it practises regular diagnosis; it has brought surgery up to an unexampled pitch; it encourages prevention as well as cure; and it depends for its development upon systematic research. Dr. Nand Lal said that he quite admired the Western system but unfortunately it has not done all that they expected of it. Nor has any system of medicine! I remember a quotation which was made in the Council of State about the methods of Hakims, and if Dr. Nand Lal wishes, I can quote him a little shloka which would show that a Vaidya is even a worse thief than death. But I lay no emphasis on these things at all. We find such sayings in every language, in every country, simply because no system of medicine is yet complete and therefore the doctor has not yet full commandment over the pulse of life.

Eastern medicine, on the other hand, we are often told, is characterised by the fact that it is stationary and empirical.

Now, Sir, I do not know enough about it to say whether that is correct. But this I do know, that there have come to my own notice in my time in India remarkable cures effected both by Ayurvedic and Unani Medicine; and I emphatically say with the Honourable Mover that the professors of this system, at least the professors that I have come across, are anything but quacks. They are certainly not. We hear from various sources that these systems are making progress and I see that there has been in our places copies of a little brochure by the Honourable Mover, entitled 'The Glories of Indian Medicine'. There are also schools of Unani and Ayurvedic Medicine in the country. I have sometimes visited such schools and I believe that they are doing good work. And here in Delhi we have the Tibbi College founded by the exertions of Hakim Ajmal Khan; and may I say incidentally that whatever differences may arise in political opinions, on this platform there should be no separation, namely, the platform of the alleviation of human suffering (Hear, hear), just as one wishes that differences in these opinions might make no difference in the ordinary intercourse and courtesies of human life. But there is even a greater difference between the developments of these two systems. Allopathic medicine has spread all over the world, into every civilised country and has become a world-wide heritage. The Ayurvedic and Unani systems, although they appeal to millions and hundreds of millions of people, are localised practically in India.

Now, this, I think, is a most important point and shows clearly the need for preliminary research and for some system of collaboration. The Honourable Mover himself declared that he did not wish to substitute Ayurvedic and Unani medicine for the allopathic. They ought to go hand in hand. It is not to be thought that these Indian systems should attempt to cut themselves off from the great stream of medical development which is going on in every civilised country in the world and retreat into a backwater. That is the very last thing that is required and therefore there are wanted research and discussion between the Allopath, the Hakim and the Vaidya.

I hope, Sir, that I have made myself clear. I have taken more time than I had intended to take. I hope I have made clear in the first place the circumstances which restrict the scope of the action possible by the Government of India in this matter and also the conditions, the rather restrictive conditions, upon which Government can accept the spirit and to some extent also the details of this particular Resolution. It is inconceivable to me that we should ignore the system or systems, which still cater for the great mass of the people and that we should fail to utilise this mass of experience, this mass of knowledge, which is lying about the country, so to speak unedited, unindexed, uncollected. It is also inconceivable to me that there could be any successful line of progress if we tried to develop those systems alone and did not attempt to link them up with the systems which have come to us from the West and whose great recommendation is that they are practically spread over the whole world. In conclusion, as I have stated before, the Government of India accept the spirit of this Resolution and they are also prepared to take the practical steps which I have indicated upon the conditions and in the circumstances which I have indicated. I only hope that the Honourable Mover will be satisfied.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City : Non-Muhammadah Urban) : I am thankful to Mr. Sharp for the very assuring way in which he has accepted this Resolution

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary : But has he ?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : I read it so and although he has hedged round his acceptance with a lot of 'ifs' and 'buts' I wish that those 'ifs' and 'buts' disappear and that we have whole-hearted action in the direction in which this Resolution asks Government to take steps. Sir, the Honourable Member for Government brings into prominence the difficulty about this being a provincial subject and a transferred subject. There are certain areas under the Government of India direct for which the Government of India finds the money for medical relief. I know, Sir, as a Member of the Finance Committee that Mr. Sharp himself has been bringing up proposals after proposals for revisions or reorganisation of the medical department in the areas under the direct control of the Government of India and therefore in such areas there can be no such difficulty, as he fancies, of forcing his views upon the Ministers of the province and I do not think that any Minister who is responsible to his constituency will at all resent any direction and guidance from the Central Government. On the other hand, he would welcome such assistance and guidance from the Central Government so that he may go forward with the schemes which I know all of them have. The only difficulty is the question of finance in their way. The western system of medicine has under the western Government been fostered and protected and therefore it has thrived and the common people think that the western Government did not encourage the eastern systems, and one of the main causes of the unpopularity of this Government to-day is that the millions of the people of this land resort to Hakims and Vaidis and when the Government did not take steps to encourage those systems they think that the Government act as a step-mother to these systems of medicine and Colonel Gidney, I deplore it, belonging as he does to the western system of medicine, stood up to-day to oppose this Resolution. It is unfortunately the impression in the country, I do not know whether it is well founded or ill founded, that it is the doctors who advise the Government in this matter that stand in the way of the Government improving and encouraging the eastern systems of medicine. They think that their vested interests require that the Government should not take hearty action in this direction. Sir, the people of this country demand that hearty action, whole-hearted action should be taken. Sir, we believe in these systems of medicine. I was myself under the treatment of a western doctor and when my life was in danger he administered an Indian medicine and saved my life. It is not a question of research. By research you can improve the system, but you must accept the soundness of the system. Sir, an Honourable Member mentioned the financial difficulty. We are spending crores and crores of rupees upon objects which do not appeal to the country. The country will not grudge spending even a crore of rupees, or even two crores of rupees, even five crores, if they are devoted to a purpose like this which will appeal to the masses. The masses require it. The Government, I ask, should take whole-hearted action in this direction. I am glad that Mr. Sharp has defended the system. It is not intended that you should supplant the western system. The country is so large, you cannot found hospitals all over the place.

There are families, well-known families who have been physicians for centuries together. If you go to the west coast of Malabar, you will find ancient families who still possess medicines prepared hundreds and hundreds of years ago. Sir, these physicians and Hakims thrived because of the encouragement given to them by the ancient Governments: We know, Sir, a Tanjore Raja under the Maratha King encouraged these systems of medicine, and medicines were prepared which have been even preserved to-day, and people resort to these in order to cure diseases which are supposed to be incurable, so that, Sir, the system need not require any defence at my hands, because they are self-evident to us. They may not be strictly scientific, but we do not care what science means, we know that it is a successful system of medicine. The only thing is that it is not getting encouragement from Government. Medical relief and sanitation are a primary function of the Government. You cannot expect people to spend large sums of money on preparing valuable and costly medicines unless the Government come to their rescue and start institutions where such medicines can be prepared, stored and distributed all over the country. I therefore heartily support the Resolution.

I shall say one word in regard to Mr. Joshi's remarks, which I think were rather unfortunate. Sir, a most enlightened countryman, Mr. V. Krishnaswamy Aiyar of the Madras Council, founded large endowments for establishing a school for encouraging the Ayurvedic system of medicine, and to-day, Sir, in Madras it is training a number of students, and there are not wanting other philanthropists who have founded similar institutions. But they are few, too few indeed. Unless the Government come to rescue, unless the Government come liberally to the rescue, of these Vaid physicians and Hakims, they are bound to die out. Would it be right to allow them to die out? Scientifically speaking, on scientific grounds it would not be right to allow them to die out. We must not starve them out. I think Government will be failing in their duty if they do not actively encourage the revival and growth of these systems. I therefore, Sir, heartily support this Resolution.

Khan Bahadur Zahiruddin Ahmed (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I support the Resolution on the ground that the Unani and Ayurvedic systems are very popular with the masses. The Allopathic system may be very good, and I personally admit it, but the masses are not yet utilising it fully as they think otherwise. My experience is, if the patient has no faith in the medicine, he or she derives no benefit from it. As the masses have faith in the Unani and Ayurvedic medicines, I am certain they will derive great benefits from using them. I have also known cases where patients determinedly refused to take Allopathic medicines, thinking them not only worthless but poisonous. Such being the public faith, it is no use to be wiser than them.

I am almost certain if the Government will take up the matter in hand, public charity will come forward to support it. I am amused to find that we have got in this Assembly a few Indians who are more westernized than the Western people. I ask—I name nobody—why are they making themselves ridiculous like that? I can only congratulate the Government on bringing such men into the Assembly by Government nomination.

Mr. J. F. Bryant (Madras: Nominated Official): Sir, I do not intend to inflict a long speech on the House to-day. I merely want to congratulate the Honourable Member for Health on the attitude he has adopted. There is a very pronounced feeling in favour of the Ayurvedic and the Unani systems of medicine throughout the country. That sentiment is largely political. It reflects the self-centered tendency to preserve India for the Indians, and to have an Indian Government. We, westerners, have to reckon with that feeling. We see reflected in everything around us, in all the institutions of life, in everything with which we come in contact. We have to reckon with that feeling, whether we like it or not, and that feeling is reflected in the demand for indigenous systems,—the Ayurvedic and Unani systems,—as opposed to a foreign system of medicine. Sir, I can only congratulate the Government on the very correct attitude that it has adopted towards this Resolution. I sympathise with the Resolution and I support the Government.

Rai D. C. Barua Bahadur (Assam Valley Non-Muhammadan): Sir, when I first came to know that this would be the first Resolution to-day before yesterday, I thought that it would be an uncontested one. but now I find that there are enemies to this Resolution also. After all, the thing is, what is truth? We are going to ascertain it by appointing a Committee. So from that point of view there ought not to have been any opposition simply because the truth would have been found out by the appointment of a Committee—and the Committee would not cost us very much as is apprehended in some quarters. Sir, as regards the merits of the different systems, we are not here to discuss about them: we want all the systems, we want Allopathy, we want Homœopathy, we want Ayurvedic, we want Unani, everything is useful. I may be permitted, Sir, to relate some of my experiences in my own family. A child of mine was attacked with fever while he was 2½ years old. Then I invited the Assistant Surgeon,—the Sub-Assistant Surgeon, to look after the child. The child would have the same amount of temperature in the day time, and at night of course there was a slight reduction, but there was no remission; and I was myself hopeless that the child would recover, and in the last resort I called in an Ayurvedic practitioner. That gentleman came in, examined the boy, and said that there was nothing to be afraid of, that the child would get a remission in about 12 hours later, and that after 24 hours it could have rice as food. And the whole thing happened as he predicted. He took up the case and gave medicine, and there was remission after 12 hours, and after 24 hours the boy was given rice. At the same time I must relate another incident in my own family. Subsequently, about three years later, another child of mine was attacked with fever and I called in an Ayurvedic practitioner. The Ayurvedic practitioner was of no use to me this time. Then, Sir, I continued with him for some days, but without any result whatsoever. The case also seemed to be quite hopeless. Then I called in an Allopathic doctor, and that Allopathic doctor also did not for some time bring the child to recovery, and I had to call in another Allopathic doctor and this doctor prescribed injections and not medicines and those injections cured the child at once. So in my own family I have had experience of both these systems. In both cases I have found either one or the other successful. All systems are therefore useful and it is the bounden duty of the State to encourage all systems. There is no question of rivalry between different systems. We want help for the suffering public and whether it is given by the Allopathic system or the Ayurvedic or the Unani systems, we should welcome it and at the same time try our best to encourage all systems and to improve them as much as possible. Considering all these points I support the Resolution and hope that the little cost which it may be necessary to incur will not be allowed to stand in our way.

Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: I rise to a point of order. I have been waiting for an answer from the Government Member repudiating what the Honourable Member . . .

Mr. President: That is not a point of order.

Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: I rise to another point of order. My name was mentioned by the Honourable Member and as a medical man belonging to an honourable service I repudiate . . .

Mr. H. Sharp: May I ask what the Honourable Member repudiates? Because I did not understand what he said. Was it anything I said?

Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: No, I was referring to what the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar said . . .

(At this stage several Members asked that the question be put.)

Mr. President: The question is that the question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is :

'That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that some practical steps be taken to utilise the services of the Unani and Ayurvedic experts for the prevention and cure of the epidemics in the country with the help of the indigenous systems—and that a Committee be appointed to recommend those steps.'

The motion was adopted.

RESOLUTION RE: INDIAN MERCANTILE MARINE.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer (Tanjore cum Trichinopoly: Non-Muhammadan Rural: Sir, the Resolution, which I beg to move, runs in these terms :

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that a Committee including experts and non-official Indians be appointed to prepare a scheme :

- (i) for the liberal recruitment of Indians as Deck or Executive Officers and Engineers in the Royal Indian Marine ;
- (ii) for the establishment of a Nautical College in Indian waters for the purpose of training Executive officers and Engineers of ships ;
- (iii) for the creation of an adequate number of State scholarships for providing instruction in the Nautical Colleges and training ships, in England, pending the formation of a Nautical College in India ;
- (iv) for the encouragement of ship-building and of the growth of an Indian Mercantile Marine by a system of bounties, subsidies and such other measures as have been adopted in Japan ;
- (v) for the acquisition of training ships by gift from the Imperial Government or otherwise ; and
- (vi) for the construction of the necessary dockyards and Engineering workshops in one or more ports.'

The object of this Resolution is to investigate the possibilities and the ways and means of promoting the industrial development of India, in one important direction, namely, the formation of a Mercantile Marine and the encouragement of ship-building. The Resolution, you will see, is rather comprehensive, but it is necessarily so. The subject is wide and it is complicated and all parts of the Resolution hang together. To attain the objects of this Resolution the co-operation of a large number of factors is required; first of all, taste and aptitude for sea-faring occupations; secondly, skill and technical knowledge; thirdly, prospects of employment; fourthly, natural resources and capital; and lastly, enterprise and Government help for nursing the infant industry.

As regards the Indian's aptitude for sea-faring, I might, if I chose, take you back to ancient history and point to the extensive maritime intercourse that once subsisted between India and the other countries of the world. On the west it extended to the Persian Gulf, to Egypt and certain parts of eastern Africa. On the east it extended to Ceylon, Burma, Java, Sumatra and even to China. There were flourishing seaports on the coast of India, in Cutch, at Broach and Surat, in north Canara and south Malabar, and there were also flourishing seaports on the east coast of India, in the Tamil country, on the Kalinga country and in Bengal. Colonies were sent out by the Hindus as far east as Java and to this day there are traces of the Hindu colonization of Java. But there is no need for me to go back to such remote times. The East India Company formed a squadron at Surat in 1630. In the 18th century, ship-building was carried on both in Bombay and in Calcutta. In Bombay there was an enterprising firm of Parsee contractors and ship-builders who were exceedingly successful in constructing ships. In 1802, the Admiralty ordered certain men-of-war also to be built in Bombay. From 1781 to 1800, there were 35 ships with a total tonnage of 17,000 built on the Hooghly. From 1801 to 1830, 237 ships with a tonnage of 105,000 were built on the Hooghly. In 1800, Lord Wellesley remarked:

'From the quantity of private tonnage now at command in the port of Calcutta, from the state of perfection which the art of ship-building has already attained in Bengal, promising still more rapid progress and supported by abundant and increasing supplies of timber, it is certain that this port will always be able to furnish tonnage, to whatever extent it may be required, for conveying to the port of London the trade of the private British merchants of Bengal.'

The decline and extinction of ship-building in India may be traced to the advent of the steamship, about the middle of the 19th century when steel and iron took the place of wood. Apart from capital and enterprise, the starting of ship-building requires certain natural resources in the shape of steel, iron and coal. The development of the mineral resources of the country that is now going on may or may not be sufficient in the near future for this purpose, and to the extent to which our natural resources may not be able to cope with the demand, we may have to import the necessary materials for ship-building. In this connection the replacement of coal by oil may have a bearing. Again, as against this advantage of the cost of importing the materials required, may be set down the advantage of the comparative cheapness of labour, notwithstanding the fact that it may not be as efficient as the more highly paid labour of the west. Other countries with somewhat similar disadvantages as Japan for instance have succeeded wonderfully well in recent times. British experts may tell us that India can never become a ship-building nation, or, at any rate, must wait for a generation till her resources in coal, steel and iron are properly developed. But I am afraid public opinion in India will not acquiesce in this verdict, at any rate it will not acquiesce in it unless and until an impartial Committee of experts and others interested in the subject has carefully examined the whole problem. For the purpose of achieving our commercial independence, for the purpose of providing a new career for our youth and for the purpose of securing for the country some of the profits of the carrying trade, our countrymen are anxious to try this experiment. The formation of a mercantile marine and the encouragement of ship-building can be largely assisted by Government, and aid of this description has been largely given by Japan and other western countries. Such aid to the encouragement of ship-building has taken various shapes. It may take the shape of an exemption of ship-building materials from import duties; it may take the shape of preferential railway rates to goods shipped over specified steamship lines; it may take the shape of loans to shipowners for the construction of ships; it may take the shape of a re-imbusement of port dues; or you may grant subventions for the purpose of carrying mails. These subventions are not always strictly proportioned to the value of the services rendered. They are often in excess of the value of such services, and, in so far as they are in excess, they operate as bounties. You may also assist by granting subsidies for the construction of ships in the country or you may grant subsidies for ships run under Indian ownership. In certain countries again the coasting trade has been reserved for ships under native management for ships of native construction. During the latter half of the 19th century and in the present century, the policy followed by England has been largely one really of abstinence from any form of adventitious aid to shipping. But England had already established her supremacy owing to various causes including a drastic scheme of navigation laws which had been in operation for nearly two centuries. I do not wish it to be understood that in making that remark, I attribute the maritime supremacy of England merely to her navigation laws. They were operative to a considerable extent, but there were undoubtedly other factors which have contributed to the maritime supremacy of England. The example of England is, in my opinion, not of much use for our purposes, and I would rather ask you to go to Japan and borrow a lesson from the experience of that country. Till 1896, Japan had no definite plan or policy, but in 1896, she took up the matter seriously and, for the purpose of encouraging her shipping trade, she passed laws for the encouragement of ship-building and for the encouragement of navigation. The Navigation Law was superseded in 1909 by what is called an Overseas Navigation Subsidy Law which is now in force. The gross tonnage of the Japanese Mercantile Marine in 1896 was 15,000 tons. In the year 1918, about 22 years after, it was 2,482,000 tons, and there are now five steamship companies which are being subsidised. You will find it stated in the latest Japanese Year Book that though seriously handicapped from an inadequate supply of materials and skilled labour, the private ship yards have attained the marked progress to which the ship-building encouragement law of 1896 has given no little aid. Here also probably our course may be to follow in the footsteps of Japan.

The formation of a Mercantile Marine may perhaps be the first step to be taken. A Mercantile Marine under Indian ownership, and the construction of the necessary dockyards for repairs and construction will have to be first taken in hand. Ship-building on an appreciable scale will perhaps have to be taken up next. I do not wish to dogmatize on a matter like this, which is essentially for the consideration of experts.

I will now pass on to another question. Where is all the capital for all these things to come from? I would say here that I do not belong to the school of thought which rejects the aid of foreign capital (Hear, hear). I would welcome the influx of foreign capital, of cheap capital from whatever source it may come. English capital, English business knowledge and English technical skill ought to be specially welcome in this connection. It is one of the unfortunate results of the movement that is now stirring the country that there is a deplorable feeling of an anti-English character, which may dispose people to reject aid from English sources. But, if we remember that our own capital is utterly inadequate for all the purposes of development of the country, if we remember that the Britisher is supreme in many spheres and especially in the sphere of ship-building, of maritime enterprise, and of banking, it would be foolish on our part not to invite the co-operation and the aid of English business knowledge and English capital. I would therefore welcome the co-operation of the Briton in achieving this object as well as many other objects which are dear to us all, for the purpose of promoting the development of the country.

Now, this policy which I advocate of giving bounties or subsidies may itself induce a number of British firms to establish the industry here.

It may be said that if you offer bounties for Indian construction of ships
 I P.M. or if you reserve your coastal trade to ships of Indian construction, or if you impose any such restraints upon foreign ships, English firms may themselves establish branches here and start industries of this character. For my part, I would welcome such a thing. In so far as English capital may be induced to come out into this country, and in so far as English manufactures may be induced to start industries here I should welcome that contingency. But if you consider it desirable, you may impose certain conditions which will be just both to British and to Indian interests. You may, for instance, suggest that if English companies are established here, half their capital shall be open to subscription in India and that an adequate voice in the management should be given to Indians on the directorate of these companies. But these are details with which it is not necessary for me to trouble the House now.

Then again apart from the question of finding the necessary capital and finding the necessary business knowledge for the encouragement of ship-building, I have referred to the necessity for opening of a new career for our young men. Now their willingness to undergo to train themselves depends upon the chances of employment which they can get, and their employment depends upon the training they acquire. In fact the problems of training and of employment are closely interdependent, and that is why I suggest in my Resolution that Indians should be liberally recruited for employment as deck or executive officers and Engineers in the Royal Indian Marine. I do not expect and I do not ask that Indians without qualification or training would or should be recruited at once and employed in these capacities; but what I do ask is that Indians may be recruited for these appointments provided they acquire the necessary qualifications, and that in order to enable them to acquire the necessary qualifications you must provide adequate facilities for training in this country. The nautical colleges,

I am afraid, however, cannot be started in a day, and it will take time. That is why I propose, that pending the establishment of nautical colleges in this country, scholarships should be provided for the purpose of enabling young men to acquire the necessary training in English nautical colleges and on board English training ships. There is no use in asking for the employment of Indians as deck officers or engineers on board ships which belong to English companies. There may be a very considerable amount of prejudice against such employment. There may be other reasons not perhaps of an altruistic character against such employment. We have no power to compel those companies to employ our young men. The only chances of employment for Indian youth, the only opportunities which they can get, are in connection with the Royal Indian Marine which maintains a certain number of ships for various purposes such as transport, the inspection of light-houses, and other services, and which has got a certain number of ships at its disposal. That is a service which is paid for by this country and we are entitled to ask that the higher services of the Royal Indian Marine shall be open to Indians on a liberal scale. As regards the necessary training ships, we might require one in Bombay, one in Calcutta, one in Karachi and one in Rangoon. I believe the Government of India have already applied for a training ship for the purpose of training Indians as seamen. Whether the sloop has been already received or not I do not know, but in these days when there is so much competition on the part of nations to scrap their ships, and when England has been generous enough to give a number of ships to the Colonies for training purposes, I think we may approach the Home Government with a request to treat us with the same generosity with which it has treated the colonies and to spare us a certain number of ships for which there may be no need in the British Navy but which may be useful enough for our purposes, for the purpose of providing nautical training. I ask that the whole problem should be referred to a Committee of experts and non-official Indians. I do not suggest that it should contain any Members of the Legislature or any particular Members of the Legislature. I do not wish to impose any restrictions with regard to personnel. My object is to secure the best expert advice possible and to secure the presence, if possible, of disinterested experts; and I wish to secure also on this Committee the representatives of the mercantile interests, both Indian and English in this country. I hope that a Committee composed of representatives of the mercantile interests of India, Indian and European, and consisting of experts with, I should like to say, a majority of Indian representatives, would be a suitable body for the purpose of examining this question in all its bearings and making the necessary recommendations. I do not think it necessary to expatiate further upon the subject, but I appeal to the Government to accept this Resolution and to give effect to it at as early a date as possible.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes (Commerce and Industries Member) : Sir, I see that there are 15 Resolutions down on the day's paper and I think that I can save the time of the House if I make the position of Government on this Resolution plain at this very early stage of the debate. Put very shortly, Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer's object is an Indian Mercantile Marine, and I may say at once on behalf of the Government that we recognise that this desire on the part of the people of India for their own Mercantile Marine is a very natural desire and that we are quite willing to co-operate by having the whole subject thoroughly explored. We recognise of course on this side of the House, as I am sure everybody in this House recognises also and it is plain from Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer's very able and comprehensive speech that he too recognises the difficulties in the way. But if I mention one or two difficulties, I hope it will not be thought that I am mentioning those difficulties as arguments against the Resolution or by way of discouragement. My whole object is that the subject may be seen by this House in its true perspective, and that too great hopes may not be formed for the very rapid development of an Indian Mercantile Marine. Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer has referred to the example of Japan; and everybody knows that Japan's policy for the encouragement of the growth of a Mercantile Marine has been phenomenally successful. But it was a policy of encouragement by what I may call for the moment artificial means, a policy of subsidies, bounties and other measures; and it is well to bear in mind that there are two points of difference. Japan began with her Navy. The first step in Japan's marine policy was the gift in 1855 by the Dutch Government of a war-ship for training purposes. The establishment of ship-building yards and iron and steel industries were subsequent developments. They came not long after, it is true, but it is well to remember that the first impulse came from Japan's need for a Navy. She was an island nation and she had to have a Navy for her own safety. Now, India is not an island like Japan; she has not got the same vital need for a Navy and, moreover, fortunately for herself so long as she remains within the British Empire India is spared the enormous financial burden of a Navy. Her shores and her commerce are protected by the British Navy at the cost, I believe, of £100,000 per annum. There is one other point to bear in mind; in one respect Japan was peculiarly fortunate. As we all know she adopted for a period of 200 years a policy of strict seclusion, a gosha policy. She abandoned that policy in the middle of the last century and she embarked on her policy of marine enterprise just at the time when the transition from sail to steam was beginning. Consequently, she began establishing her ship-yards and building her own steam ships on more or less level terms with other nations. In India the case is different. We shall have to struggle against the competition of established ship-yards in other countries which have been long practising the art of ship-building. I have here some notes by a distinguished naval architect upon the possibilities and prospects of ship-building in India. He points out our various disabilities at present in the way of manufacture, and he arrives at the conclusion that for some years at any rate we must continue to buy engines, boilers and other special fittings from abroad. But what impressed him most was the complete absence in India not only of trained ship-builders but of the means of training ship-builders. He pointed out that ship-building is a highly developed and complex industry. In England wherever there is a ship-building port it has its school or schools in which a full technical education can be obtained. There are three universities in each of which a chair of naval architecture and engineering is established, where a full scientific education in this subject can be got; the result is that ship-designing is done by men of high scientific and technical attainments, and the ship-yards are continually recruiting young men who are technically trained to take positions as draftsmen, foremen and managers. He pointed out that it would be a long time before India can make up its deficiencies in that respect, a very important respect.

I mention these points to show that before we can fully attain the objects which Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer and indeed we all have in view two things are required. One is time and the other is money; and I must warn the House that the expenditure will be very great, even the expenditure merely on getting the nautical colleges and training ships and the ship-building yards started. It will be much greater still if we embark on a policy of subsidising navigation and subsidising ship-building yards. I do not quarrel with that policy; in fact I have a blue-book here which shows that that policy has been adopted in most countries in the world; and it has been a very successful policy in some countries, particularly in Japan, but it is a costly policy, and the time will come or may come when this House will have to count the cost very seriously. In 1901, the Japanese Government provided in its budget for navigation and ship-building subsidies the sum of nearly 7½ million yen; and taking the yen at 2 shillings and the rupee at 1s. 4d., I calculate that that cost them Rs. 112 lakhs. Since 1901 as we all know the purchasing power of money has decreased very greatly and at this time we could not give that measure of assistance to ship-building and shipping lines for anything less than Rs. 2 crores per annum. As I have said, though I think we ought to recognise these difficulties, I do not advance them in any way as arguments against the Resolution.

As I have said the Government are anxious and willing to have the whole subject explored and examined. But I have one small suggestion to make regarding the form of Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer's Resolution. As Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer has himself admitted, it is a very comprehensive Resolution. It proposes that the subject should be dealt with under six different heads, and I do not deny that each and every one of those heads refers to a very important branch of the subject. But the Resolution does not merely ask that all these branches should be examined. It suggests that the Committee should prepare a definite scheme under each and every one of these branches. Now what I feel is that if we charge this Committee with the task of preparing a definite scheme for all these six branches of the subject, we shall impose upon that Committee a subject of unmanageable proportions and we shall necessitate a Committee of unmanageable size. I suggest that we should make our terms of reference slightly more elastic and give the Committee more latitude. I quite agree with Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer that if we have a Committee at all, it should be a Committee composed, as he suggests, of experts, businessmen, and Indian non-officials. But what I suggest is that instead of asking that Committee 'to prepare a scheme,' we substitute for those words 'to consider what measures can usefully be taken'. The Committee in that case can put up a scheme for any subject for which they think they can put up an authoritative scheme, and for other subjects they can propose an expert Committee. I understand from Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer that he is willing to accept this small amendment, and I am sure that the House will do so also. If that is done, I have great pleasure in saying on behalf of Government that we should be very glad to accept the Resolution and to appoint the Committee.

Mr. President : The question is :

'That for the words 'prepare a scheme' in line 2 of the Resolution, the words 'consider what measures can usefully be taken' be inserted.'

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer : I am willing to accept it.

The motion was adopted.

Sir Godfrey Fell (Army Secretary) : Sir, there is a small point in Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer's Resolution which was not definitely touched upon by the Honourable Mr. Innes, relating to the admission of Indians as officers in the Royal Indian Marine. I think that the Assembly might be interested to know what is the Government of India's attitude towards that part of the Resolution. The Government of India have been in correspondence with the Secretary of State on this subject. It is their aim and object to grant facilities to Indians and members of the domiciled community to attain the position of commissioned officers in the Royal Indian Marine. The exact method of training them is at present under discussion. We made a reference to the Secretary of State on the subject, and we have recently had a reply from him in which he states that he has also been considering the question and hopes very shortly to let us have his views.

Again, as regards the admission of Indians as engineer officers in the Royal Indian Marine, we have been considering how to give facilities for training in this country; but unfortunately there are great practical difficulties in the way. The Director of the Royal Indian Marine, whom we consulted on the subject, has told us that one of the qualifications for appointment of Indians as engineers in the Royal Indian Marine is that the candidate must have served for at least five years as an apprentice in a recognised engineering firm of Government Dockyard. We hoped it might be possible to afford that training either in private engineering firms in India or in the Royal Indian Marine Dockyard at Bombay. The Director of the Royal Indian Marine tells us, however, that there are no engineering firms in India at present which are capable of training apprentices as marine engineers suitable to receive commissions in the Royal Indian Marine, and that such training as can be given in the Dockyard in Bombay will also be insufficient for this purpose. The difficulty is this, that the training which the existing engineering firms or the Royal Indian Marine Dockyard might give consists only of repair work and the erection of imported machinery and its adjuncts. There is no construction work undertaken in these dockyards, nor can any theoretical work, which an engineer must know, be imparted. I am afraid, therefore, that nothing further can be done at present in the direction of affording facilities for training Indians in this country to be Engineer officers in the Royal Indian Marine. We hope, however, that the difficulties may be surmounted in time; and no doubt this is one of the matters which the Committee, which is to be appointed to consider the whole question, will deal with.

There is only one other point which I should like to mention and it is this. Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer asked that His Majesty's Government might treat us in the matter of vessels in the same generous spirit as they have treated the Colonies. I think that the Assembly might be interested to know that the Admiralty have made a free gift of one sloop for training purposes, which sloop has either just sailed from England or is just about to sail from England and will arrive in Bombay in February; and we hope very shortly to be able to train deck hands and engineers in our own waters for the Royal Indian Marine. In addition to this sloop the Admiralty have also made us a free gift of two boats of what are technically known as the 'P. C.' class.

Mr. President : It may be convenient for the Assembly to know that of the seven amendments on the paper, those standing in the name of Lala Girdharilal Agarwala are out of order, because they propose to widen the scope of the Resolution beyond its true subject. Therefore the only amendment in order is that standing in the name of the Honourable Member from Bengal. I do not know how far the Assembly is prepared to accept the suggestion made by Mr. Innes, but in view of his readiness to accept the Resolution, the debate might be shortened. We will now adjourn for three quarters of an hour and resume at 2-15.

The Assembly then adjourned till Quarter Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Quarter Past Two of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey (Bombay Millowners' Association : Indian Commerce): Mr. President, I have very great pleasure in supporting the Resolution moved by my Honourable friend, Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer. It is absolutely necessary that active steps be taken now for encouraging the growth of Indian Mercantile Marine and the essential condition of it is that the Indian should be trained to take up the several important appointments. My Honourable friend, the Mover, has given very strong reasons why his Resolution should be accepted by this House and I will, therefore, confine myself only to one or two aspects of the question which have come into my experience and on which I can speak with some personal knowledge. The House will agree that it is absolutely necessary that all the drawbacks and the difficulties which are existing at present against the establishment of an Indian Mercantile Marine must first be removed. It should not be forgotten that the shipping industry has become a sort of monopoly. It is a kind of trust against the principles of which it is known how America fought hard. The various methods by which the existing companies try to kill any competitor that may arise in the trade is well known. I may give a few instances of the methods by which they are trying to gain their objects.

The rebate system by which they are holding a part of the money of the shipper on condition that if he ships his goods by any other steamer, for a certain time, his money is forfeited. Government are aware that there was some years ago a great hue and cry and Government themselves sent out inquiries to the various commercial bodies about the effect of the rebate system and the Indian commercial community strongly protested against the system and asked Government to take steps to abolish the same as soon as possible. I am sorry to say that Government have taken no steps in this direction. So long as this system lasts, there is no use denying the fact that an Indian Mercantile Marine cannot be established.

It may be asked what Government can do to force this combination of liners to be reasonable. A case in point arose with the Australian shipping companies and the foreign companies tried to kill the Australian shipping companies by withholding the rebate. I am informed that the Australian Government took up a very bold stand and they declared that if this demand was persisted, the Australian Government would reimburse their shippers for all the loss they suffer by the forfeiture of the rebate, by shipping their goods into Australian boats. When the foreign steamship companies were faced with the position where the whole resources of the Australian Government were at the back of the Australian shipping companies, they gave way and a satisfactory arrangement was arrived at. Now, are the Government of India prepared to encourage the Indian Mercantile Marine either by making the rebate system illegal or by reimbursing the shippers for their loss by forfeiture.

I do not wish to detain this House by giving specific instances as I am sure that all those who have any knowledge of shipping know the hardship of the rebate system ; but if Government require any specific instances, I shall be very happy to supply all the information they want.

In addition to the rebate system, these steamship companies have adopted the system of combining and maintaining the freights at an unusually high level. Some years ago the Millowners of Bombay had a very sad experience

Mr. President: Order, order. Will the Honourable Member kindly resume his seat? I have allowed the Honourable Member to go a considerable distance beyond what I really think is in order. The proposal here is to set up a Committee to consider what measures may be taken for the establishment of an Indian Mercantile Marine and subsidiary purposes. The Committee, I take it, will not be authorised to consider questions of management, and, therefore, the question of the grievances of shippers under the practices adopted by the present shipping companies are not in order.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey : I bow to your ruling, Sir, but I was only going to point out that the rebate system has a bearing on clause (iv) of the Resolution. I was about to say that when the existing liners refused to agree to a reasonable freight for China and Japan, we tried to adopt some method. What was done was that the late Sir Jamshedji Tata made an arrangement with some Japanese Companies and chartered some boats to carry yarn to China. What was the result? All the rebates were forfeited and the freights to China was at once brought down not with the object of benefiting the industry but with the object of killing the competition. No body could stand such a strong measure, and after two years of enormous loss and of rebates, we had to give up the attempt. The scheme failed. To-day also we are in the same difficulty. I am only pointing out these difficulties so that the Committee might consider them immediately so that we can at once get benefit from it. Education of course must follow as a necessary corollary. Mr. President, there is one measure which the Committee can recommend, and immediately recommend. In all the civilised countries, particularly in Japan, the law is that the coastal trade is confined to ships of their own nation. That is, in Japan, no outsider can trade from port to port. Even if we do this as a beginning, if we restrict that only Indian steamers should sail from port to port in India, and that until a sufficiently large Indian Mercantile Marine is developed, the foreign shippers should not cut the rates, if these two things are done immediately, I think it will not be difficult to get an Indian Mercantile Marine. We are not wanting in capital. All we want is exactly the same that Japan does or any other civilised country does for the maintenance of their own Marine.

With these words, Mr. President, I recommend the Resolution.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division : Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I rise to congratulate my friend, the Honourable Mr. Innes, in his kind acceptance of the Resolution in part. The Resolution, as it stands, Sir, is for the preparation of a scheme and to appoint a Committee to consider what measures can be taken for the preparation of such a scheme. Sir, that question, on the face of it, is not a very sympathetic one. But half a loaf is better than no loaf at all In that view, Sir, I have the greatest pleasure in thanking my Honourable friend very sincerely. But, Sir, I cannot pass over without making some remarks with regard to an observation made by the Honourable Sir Godfrey Fell. He has said something, Sir, which has really been answered by my Honourable friend, Sir Vithaldas Thackersey, from Bombay. With regard to the six items in the Resolution which we have to consider what measures can be adopted, it appears that for the first two items, viz., (i) and (ii), we have got any number of men to supply and enough men to give every facility to the Committee in considering what measures should be adopted. With regard to the rest of the Resolution, Sir, it has been suggested that we are ready to accept funds from abroad such as Europe, England or anywhere outside, because it is not within our power to supply enough. On the other hand, Sir, it has been replied to by the Honourable Member on my right from Bombay that he has enough opportunities to facilitate the case. 'So much the better. But when we come to the question of getting persons fit for training in the Royal Indian Marine five years' training it has been said is not available because no dockyard can supply men deemed fit for entering into the Royal Indian Marine. Sir, it has been observed some time ago, I suppose with regard to the Military College at Sandhurst, that the Government of India has already given a little assistance in order to select more persons from India. Sir, 'where there is a will there is a way'. We know, Sir, that 99 per cent of the Indians on board the ships plying both in the Indian waters and in the Mediterranean are from the ports of Bombay, Calcutta, Rangoon and Madras Indian deck crews, serangs and lascars are all poor people. There is no denial of this fact that these poor people get only Rs. 25 a month on average and a few rupees for their food. Sir, if an account is brought in here, you will find that one European sailor's salary is equal to ten lascars' (or ten average Indian seamen's salary). That being so, Sir, the profit that is made by the ship-owners in this country is at a great loss to these poor people who do not even get more than one full meal per day, i.e., within the course of 24 hours. If you compare the salary of the Chinese and Japanese sailors—I suppose you have got the statistics—you will realise that India has been very badly treated. I have some experience, being the Vice-President of Indian Seamen, and I have had enough opportunities of entering into their question. It is a shocking thing to find that the Indian seamen in this country have not had good treatment from their masters. Government is not willing to look at it. There was a Resolution about it last Session, but it is not only a question of complaint but it is a question of disappointment that the seamen did not receive any justice in the hands of the Government. There was misrepresentation set up by the anti-party, and Government was rather very cold. They are all in the archives of Government, and I suppose it is the office that is responsible for not uplifting the condition of these poor people. Sir, as a Secretary of the Bengal Joatdars and Raiyats' Association, I am quite aware of the fact that a majority of them come from Eastern Bengal. And generally they come to the port of Calcutta. Some of them are also provided with some service in other ports such as Bombay, Rangoon and others. Some of these people are no doubt agriculturists, but certainly there is no justification why they should be paid such poor salaries while the sailors from other countries are paid more.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: May I rise to a point of order, Sir? As far as I can understand, the Honourable Member is discussing the Geneva

[Mr. C. A. Innes.]

Seamen's Conference Resolution and not the particular Resolution before the House. I ask whether that is relevant.

Mr. K. Ahmed: The Resolution speaks of the establishment of an Engineering school and the recruitment of Indian deck crews. Is not the recruitment of the Indian deck crews a relevant subject?

Mr. President: The Resolution refers to the training of officers, the higher personnel of the Indian Mercantile Marine and the Royal Indian Marine. I do not find anything in it which refers specifically to the classes of marine labour to which the Honourable Member has been referring.

Mr. K. Ahmed: When you have got to train persons for the higher offices, you have got to give a lift to the people of the lower ranks also, and in that sense I suppose I am quite entitled to make the observations I am making.

Mr. President: That is just what the Honourable Member is not entitled to.

Mr. K. Ahmed: I have no objection to begin from the top, and if you do so, the question of recruitment comes in and you cannot get any persons from a place other than that from where these men come and their children would be educated and they would discharge all the high functions relating to what is called the Deck Engineering Department. These are the officers we want and that has been lacking for a long time as the Government have left these people in the dark from generation to generation and taken no step to uplift the condition of these poor people.

Now, with regard to the Committee of experts and non-official Indians who are to be appointed to consider the scheme, I am afraid we have got a Committee, Sir, by the same Department of the Government of India and nothing has come out of it? The question of majority is an important question. In this Resolution two sets of people are proposed to be taken, I find that they will be experts and non-official Indians. As my Honourable friend, Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, in his opening words said, the experts may come from England or anywhere else. But with regard to the Indian non-officials I hope some proper step will be taken to get a majority. Unfortunately the Resolution is not properly worded. But I want to bring out this fact, because a 'burnt cow fears the fire,' and I have some experience about it. Therefore I beg to suggest that some method should be adopted and justice may be done in the course of selecting the non-official Indians for the Committee in order to consider what measure should be adopted to give effect to the six items of the Resolution. The best course would be if the Government could give us some detail so that we can understand the situation. I have the greatest pleasure to see that the Government have made up their mind to consider the question which was left alone for generations. Up till now though we have been trying our best nothing has been done.

Rai Bahadur S. P. Bajpai (Lucknow Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural): I move that the question be now put.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta: Non-Muhammadan Urban): I am not very greedy and I fully share Mr. Kabeer-ud-Din Ahmed's gratification in having one loaf. Only I want it to weigh a little heavier and not to be reduced to the size of a small loaf with prices going up. I think we may very well congratulate the Government on the business-like treatment of an obvious and inevitable Resolution and I appreciate the Honourable Mr. Innes's appeal for economy of time. If I intervene in the debate at this stage it is only for the purpose of making a very small contribution.

As has been freely admitted, the Resolution is a very comprehensive one and will require a great deal of work before we can arrive at any working results. But we can and ought to proceed immediately with a great deal of work under item No. 3, namely, the creation of State scholarships for providing instruction in the nautical colleges and training ships in England. I may inform this Assembly without any breach of confidence or secrets that in response to very strong appeals by the Lytton Committee, somewhat of a red rag to some Members of the Assembly, the Marine Authorities in England have agreed to what they had never agreed to before (Hear, hear), and that is to admit half a dozen Indian students for training in the establishments if they are of the proper order. We also interviewed a large number of representatives of shipping interests and I shall not say that we have the assurance but we have reason to believe and hope that if the proper type of men should turn out there will be absolutely no difficulty in finding employment not only for half a dozen but for as many half dozens as India can find. Having regard to these facts, although my Committee could not do it, I had the honour of personally pressing before the Secretary of State two points, namely, the creation of these scholarships and also the provision of immediate facilities for training in oceanography (a subject that is engaging a very large attention in England), and dock engineering. Madras is soon going to have docks of considerable proportions, and if immediately some trained assistant engineers are sent to England to qualify in dock engineering, we can make a fair start. Therefore, in view of what the Committee will be charged with doing under sub-section (3) of the Resolution, I think this Assembly can press on the Government to enlarge the weight of the loaf that has been already given to us. Sir, the Indian Army grew up because the Government wanted it. From Telingana sepoys of Madras we have to-day an army that is giving a good account of itself not only in India and beyond the frontiers, but also in Europe. The Government's duty in the matter of marine training has been neglected and I congratulate Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer on bringing this Resolution forward, which has not come a day too soon. On the other hand, having regard to the growth of public opinion in England in marine circles to which I have referred, I think the Resolution is opportune, and as a preparation for that we ought to press for giving a large number of State scholarships, under sub-section (3) of the Resolution, and for the initial training, without which our officers will not be ready, and no college can be run unless we have men on the spot. I do sympathise with Mr. Kabeer-ud-Din Ahmed that training in the lower ranks is also necessary.

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : With reference to my amendment I hope the Honourable Mr. Innes will be pleased to explain the attitude of Government with regard to the point raised therein. So far as I could understand him, his reply does not cover the point raised by me in this amendment. Therefore I propose to move my amendment more for the purpose of eliciting a reply from the Honourable Mr. Innes than for pressing the amendment for the acceptance of this House, and I shall be very brief in my submissions.

My amendment runs as follows :

‘ That the following words be inserted at the beginning of clause (iii) :

‘ for ensuring the entertainment of Indian apprentices for training as such officers and engineers, in the ships owned by shipping firms that enjoy any subsidy or other benefits from Government on any account and ’.

The Honourable Mr. Innes has told us that the question of development of the Indian Mercantile Marine is a question of time and money.

So far as the question of training of Indian officers goes, that also is a question of time and money. Therefore in this amendment I thought that I might as well see what could be done to utilise the available opportunities for training, on the practical side at least, of these officers by insisting on the entertainment of Indian apprentices by those firms that enjoy some subsidy or other benefits from the Government. First of all, there is the mail contract; and I remember that the Indian Merchants Chamber of Bombay has raised this question of Indian apprentices in connection with the renewal of the mail contract with the Peninsular and Oriental Company. The Chamber states that the entertainment of Indian apprentices should be made a condition of the renewal of the contract. I am told by Sir Sydney Crookshank that the mail contract is a matter which does not lie within the competence of this Government, but it is a matter wholly within the competence of the Home Government; and he has very kindly assured me that Government would not object to a suggestion being forwarded to the Home Government to see as to what could be done in this matter. That disposes of one aspect of the question. Then there are other shipping firms that enjoy Government subsidies as well. I may remind the Honourable Mr. Innes of the steamship ‘Maharaja’ which came in for a good deal of discussion during the September sittings of this Council. If I am not mistaken, I think Government have been guaranteeing an annual profit of Rs. 3,89,000 to the owners of that ship on the condition that they would convey our prisoners from India to the convict settlements. That may not be a bounty strictly so called, but I think we are entitled to some sort of concession at the hands of a company which is so well served in this matter. Then, Sir, I am very well aware of the objection that is likely to be raised in this connection. I may tell this Assembly that a Committee was appointed by the Government of Bengal to consider this question and some four or five shipping firms were represented on it, one of them being an Indian firm and the others European. The representative of the Indian firm has recorded a note in connection with the report of the Committee, from which I propose to read just a few lines. He says :

‘ The whole question centred in one point, viz., are the shipping companies willing to employ the Indians as apprentices. The Marine Superintendent of :

- (1) the British Indian Steam Navigation Company Limited,
- (2) the Asiatic Steam Navigation Company Limited,
- (3) the Indian General Navigation Railway Company Limited, and
- (4) the Rivers Steam Navigation Company Limited, were present and I asked them point blank if they were willing to take in Indian apprentices. All of them expressed their inability to do so, and their official reply runs as follows :

'It is doubtful if the shipping companies would find it either possible or expedient to employ Indians as mates while there are other Europeans on board with whom these Indians would have to associate'.

I tried to ascertain the cause of this unwillingness and got my colleagues to admit that it was the question of prestige that stood in the way. My friends expressed their sympathy with the aspiration of our young men to adopt the sea life, but they could not see their way to allow the Indian lads to mix on equal terms with the European lads who are already there as apprentices.'

Well, Sir, I think this matter is well worth inquiring into. If the matters are as they are represented to be, we ought to be told so at once, and then we will know where we stand. I will not labour this point any more. The acceptance of my amendment does not commit this House to any particular scheme. And if the Honourable Mr. Innes will see his way to accept this small amendment of mine there will be no harm done. The Committee which will go into the other questions might go into this as well. With these few words I move my amendment.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : Sir, I think, if I may venture to say so, Mr. Neogy's procedure is rather peculiar. He has been replying to a speech which I never made. What happened was this. Just before we assembled after lunch he came to me and asked me what I thought about his amendment. I said that I proposed to advise the House against it and I gave very briefly my main reason. He has developed that theme and as I say he has been answering a speech which I have never made. I personally do not attach very much importance to the subject one way or the other, but I do not think that his amendment should be added to the Resolution. My reason is this. The only subsidies, as far as I know which the Government of India pay to any ships or steamships at all, are the mail subsidies and they are not subsidies in the ordinary sense of the term. They are not bounties. They are payments for services rendered. What happens is this. I take the case of the P. and O. It is the only important subsidy we have got. The important thing about the conveyance of His Majesty's mails is to have them as rapid, as punctual and as regular as possible. Our requirements are stated in tender forms and tenders are invited, and the lowest tenderer gets what is called a subsidy. It is not a subsidy at all. It is simply as I said a payment for services rendered. Then there is another point. The P. and O. mail subsidy is not given out by the Government of India. It is arranged for by the General Post Office at Home and the terms are approved by Parliament : The subsidy is given at present for a service not to India only. It is for India, China, Australia and the Far East generally. The annual subsidy, I understand, at the present moment is £305,000 and the share of India in that is only Rs. 6,56,000. There is one other point with which we are faced in matters of this kind. The Home Government has always laid down the principle : That the mail contract is a contract for the carriage of mails only and they have always protested against our introducing any extraneous conditions. They said : 'if you want to do these things you can make separate contracts but you must not attempt to introduce them into mail contracts'. I feel that it is a wrong way of attacking this subject to write to the Home Government and try to get this clause inserted into mail contract. I am quite sure that the Home Government would never agree to such a course, and therefore I think that the effect of adding this amendment to the Resolution would be to put the Committee on the wrong track. I entirely agree with what Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer said, namely, that this problem is one not only of training suitable Indians but also of finding them employment when they are so trained. Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary has told us the right way to tackle it. Let us send our men to ships such as the Pangbourne, Worcester and Conway, and then as Sir Deva Prasad has told us the ship owners will have no objection to taking and training our men.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary : Provided they are men of the right type.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : It is our business to see that they are men of the right type. If they do well at the Worcester, Conway or Pangbourne or any of these training establishments, I am sure that the ship-owners will take them. The Assembly can take it from me that at home there is none of this racial feeling. Mr. Neogy has referred to the question of the 'Maharaja'. Of course I know the case of the 'Maharaja'. I had something to do myself with the contract. But how long is that contract going to last? It will last for another three years at the most. And during the three years' time does Mr. Neogy expect that we can ask Turner-Morrison, the owner of the line, to take Indians, because they are Indians and before they have had any training at all, as mates, as officers? That is not possible. You have got to have them trained first, and then to get them taken on. It does not really matter whether we make this addition to the Resolution or not, it does not matter a straw to us—but I do not think that is the right way of tackling the problem. It is not right to include a stipulation of this kind in a mail contract. We have got to approach the matter in a different way,—we should adopt different tactics with the shipping companies. That is my objection.

Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney (Nominated Anglo-Indian) : Sir, my reason for participating in this discussion is, firstly, to thank Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, on behalf of my community, for the very able way in which he has moved his Resolution. Secondly I wish to thank Government for the very generous way in which they have received this Resolution and, thirdly, to state that two years have elapsed, since I first interested myself in this scheme, when Admiral Lord Jellicoe came to India.

This is the first time that I have had an assurance from Government that Domiciled Europeans and Anglo-Indians are to be included in this scheme, and though such a long time has elapsed, I am very much obliged to Government for recognising the claims of my Community.

Sir, this is a subject which is of very great importance, and I think, Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer deserves the thanks not only of this Honourable House, but of the whole of India, for he has in his Resolution laid the seeds of a scheme whose ultimate development none of us can foresee. It now seems quite possible that India will one day have her own mercantile service, and who can deny that this is the nucleus of a big Indian Navy. But, Sir, in forming this Committee, I would ask Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer to include one of my Community, and I should like him to give an assurance to this House, that when he talks about the admission of Indians into the Service, he ipso facto includes Anglo-Indians. I wish to associate myself with the amendment that has been put forward by my Honourable friend, Mr. Neogy. The Honourable Member for Commerce has repudiated

Mr. Neogy's assertion of racial bias and has said: 'If you show yourselves to be worthy, there is no racial distinction'. With all respect to his remarks, I do not accept his statement and in support of Mr. Neogy's assertion I may be allowed to relate my experience. The Kalimpong Homes have up to date sent up more than 50 Anglo-Indian youths who joined the Royal Navy. They have done well, and many have sacrificed their lives for the country during the past great war.

But I obtained statistics from the leading shipping firms in Bombay re Anglo-Indians in their employ. It showed that no Anglo-Indians were accepted or appointed as 'officers' in the mercantile marine service, although some of them were employed as engineers and pursers.

I placed my views prominently before Admiral Jellicoe, the Government of India, and the Bombay Government. I received no reply 3 P. M. from any, except a demi-official letter from the present Governor of Bombay. This is the first time that I have heard from the Government Member, Sir Godfrey Fell, that the Anglo-Indians would be admitted, and I thank him. But, Sir, following up the matter, I tried to enlist the support of the various mercantile firms in Bombay to men of my Community getting into their Shipping Departments, and from every one of them I got the reply: 'we do not enlist the services of local men, we get all our men from England.' I therefore submit, Sir, that there is some justification for Mr. Neogy's amendment and I support it. I again thank Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer for his Resolution.

Mr. President: Amendment moved:

'That the following words be inserted at the beginning of clause (iii):

'for ensuring the entertainment of Indian apprentices for training as such officers and engineers, in the ships owned by shipping firms that enjoy any subsidy or other benefits from Government on any account, and.'

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. R. A. Spence (Bombay: European): Sir, now that that amendment has been disposed of, I would like to express my cordial sympathy with the motion made by Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, especially as amended and accepted by the Honourable Member for Commerce. I did think at first that this was a very comprehensive Resolution of Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer's and that he had put the various points down in the wrong order, but as it has been amended, I do not think the order matters at all. What I think is very essential is that we should press for the creation of these State scholarships, which I and many of us here have been very glad to hear that the Lytton Committee, which we had hoped would come out here, has secured for us at home.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Not scholarships,—facilities.

Mr. R. A. Spence: Yes, facilities. Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer has said that in the old days India was famous for its ship-building, and I hope that the time will shortly come when there will be ship-building industries in India. I thought some few years ago most of the large shipping companies at home were coming out to Calcutta for that purpose, but I suppose it is the slump that has prevented them coming out.

I not so much has been made of the fact that the shipping companies trading in Indian waters are not Indian-owned, but I think the Members who said that must have forgotten that these companies are public companies, and that it is perfectly open to people residing in India to own the whole of them. You have only got to buy the shares. I know that the answer given by the P. and O. when a complaint was made about their fares being a little bit high, was 'become a shareholder and you won't complain'; and I think that if India owned a P. and O. there would be no complaint.

I was very glad that Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer expressed his welcome to foreign capital into this country and for his tribute to what British capital had done, and I am sure that we Europeans would be only too pleased to see ship-building industries and engineering works established in this country and Indians trained up to take that part in the direction and officering of the ships which the Indian seamen for generations and generations past have taken to the admiration of the whole world. I do not wish to detain the House any longer, Sir, except to assure Sir Sivaswamy of my cordial sympathy with this Resolution.

Mr. President: The question is, that the following Resolution as amended be accepted:—

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that a Committee including experts and non-official Indians be appointed to consider what measures can usefully be taken:

- (i) for the liberal recruitment of Indians as Deck or Executive Officers and Engineers in the Royal Indian Marine;
- (ii) for the establishment of a Nautical College in Indian waters for the purpose of training Executive Officers and Engineers of ships;
- (iii) for ensuring the entertainment of Indian apprentices for training as such officers and engineers, in the ships owned by shipping firms that enjoy any subsidy or other benefits from Government on any account, and for the creation of an adequate number of State scholarships for providing instruction in the Nautical College and training ships in England pending the formation of a Nautical College in India;
- (iv) for the encouragement of ship-building and of the growth of an Indian Mercantile Marine by a system of bounties, subsidies and such other measures as have been adopted in Japan;
- (v) for the acquisition of training ships by gift from the Imperial Government or otherwise, and
- (vi) for the construction of the necessary dockyards and Engineering workshops in one or more ports."

The motion was adopted.

RESOLUTION RE: PREVENTION OF OVERCROWDING IN RAILWAYS.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam (Madras ceded Districts and Chittoor: Non-Muhammadian Rural): The Resolution that I propose to move, Sir, reads as follows:

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to take early steps to amend section 109 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890:

- (a) In order to make it obligatory upon a railway administration to see that no more than the number of passengers exhibited on a compartment under section 63 enter such compartment or occupy the same, and
- (b) That a penalty in each case shall be imposed on such railway administration for allowing the entry or occupation by more than the maximum number of passengers so exhibited.'

Now, Sir, this question of the overcrowding of the third class carriages on railways is a very old question. For years past the conduct of railway administrations in this country has been the subject of serious and severe criticism, and representations have frequently been made to the railway administrations and also to the Government but without avail. Resolutions have been moved and interpellations have been made in the old Council. In this Assembly in the Delhi Session nearly 120 questions were asked; in the Simla Session nearly 80 questions were asked. In answer to these questions, the Honourable Member who represents the railway administration has frequently exhibited the spectacle of a good man fighting against adverse circumstances.

He has got the dangerous knack of giving us the soft word to turn away our wrath. Well, with these two characteristics he has been parrying all the questions that have been addressed to him; but that cannot last much longer; it must come to an end sooner or later. Well, one thing which strikes us is that the Government practically takes no decisive steps to correct these lapses. It is forgotten that these railway companies are commercial undertakings and they are worked for the benefit of the shareholders. Now, where do the people who travel by these railways come in? That is the question to which the Government does not seem to pay much attention. One thing ought to be kept in view, namely, that these railways are practically creatures of Government. They get so many concessions from Government which it is not necessary to detail here. These concessions cost money, and it is the taxpayers' money that has gone to help these companies and also continues to help them to run their lines. In the old days, in our school days, we were told of the benefits of railways. No one denies the benefits of railways, and I hope no one will say in this Assembly that I had forgotten to mention or minimise the benefits which railways have conferred on this country. But that stage is passed and we have come to the stage of demanding a quid pro quo for the money that is paid.

Now, if you take the Railway Act, you will see that the railway company is protected at every stage, that the whole Act is so conceived as to give absolute protection to all the lapses to which the railway companies are subject, and merchants and traders know it to their cost. I am not dealing now with the difficulties of merchants, but take the case of passengers. There are just two or three matters which I think it is necessary to refer to, because there may be some misapprehension in the minds of my Honourable friends who do not know how this Act is framed and what control the Government has over these railway companies.

Now there is the section which I have referred to in my Resolution, viz., section 109. It says in the first instance that if a passenger enters a compartment which contains the maximum number of passengers in it and if he refuses to leave it, he may be punished, and if a compartment contains the maximum number of passengers, say it is 10, the 11th man that enters may be resisted and turned out. So far it is right, but it is put the other way. What it says is that the eleventh man who enters a compartment containing 10 may be punished if he forcibly enters it.

'If a railway servant compels a passenger'—that is another section—'to enter a compartment which has already its maximum number he shall be open to, etc.'

Well, it reads well, it sounds well. But how to prove that a railway servant has compelled more than the maximum number of passengers to enter a compartment? Well, I have been told, passengers need not enter when a compartment is full; but we have to take passengers—the people who travel by these carriages—as you find them. They are mostly people who cannot take care of themselves; they are illiterate villagers from far off places who are not in a position to enforce their rights. They rush into the compartments which are nearest the entrance of the station, or the compartment which is first opened, and no railway servant ever takes the trouble to direct them to other compartments or to see that they are properly seated. The railway servants think it is none of their business. The result is you find a mad rush into these railway carriages. I once heard the Honourable Member who represents the Railways say: 'What can we do if people rush the compartments and overcrowd them?' I want to put down just that evil. I want the railway servants at each station to realise that it is their duty to see that persons from whom the company have taken money are properly seated. It should be their duty, carriage after carriage, to regulate the number of persons to be carried in each compartment and if there is any surplus to send them on by the next train. If they are made to understand that they have to do that, then I think there will not be this complaint about overcrowding and so on. That is, while you impose duties upon passengers, while you protect the railway companies in various ways, no obligation upon the railway company is really enforced. It is true there is a section in the Railway Act which says that when a railway company allows a larger number of passengers than the number exhibited on the carriage to travel in the compartment it is liable to a penalty. Then section 97 says, that the sum shall be recoverable by suing in the district court having jurisdiction in the place. Then it says—here is the funniest part of it—the suit must be instituted 'with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council'. So if the railway company commits daily this egregious offence, no doubt the law says it is liable to a penalty. That sounds well. The law is no respecter of persons and a railway company is also liable to a penalty. But how are you going to enforce the penalty? We must come to the Governor General in Council for sanction to recover that penalty. Now why this big safeguard with regard to an offence which the railway company commits daily and hourly? Now what I ask is that that should be done away with. Why it was so stringently protected is a matter which need not be discussed here. But the enforcement of the penalty must be open to every citizen in the country. Otherwise, it is no good giving this kind of redress. And I would ask whether this forfeiture has ever been enforced?

In the history of the railways in this country has the Government ever enforced this penalty against a railway for allowing overcrowding in carriages? It is true that there are notices exhibited in compartments showing the number of passengers that can be accommodated. That is after consulting railway administrations the numbers exhibited on the compartments are numbers fixed with the sanction of the Governor General in Council. All that is very nice; that shows that thought is given to it. But where is the enforcement of the thing? Therefore, I now ask that very early steps be taken to amend this section and make it obligatory upon the railway company to see that no more than the proper number is allowed and if it allows, whether intentionally or unintentionally, more than that number, it should be liable to a fine just like any other individual who violates the law and the forfeiture must be recovered by a suit or prosecution before a magistrate, it does not matter which, by any individual. There need be absolutely no fear that there will be a crowd of prosecutions or cases ; people who travel long distances are not going to break their journey and prosecute the railway, but the railway company will begin to realise that it has got a duty to perform to the public when it knows that it will be open to any public-spirited citizen to bring it into a court of law.

I believe there may be some slight misunderstanding in the minds of my Honourable friends ; some of them seem to think that if overcrowding is not allowed, some of these passengers might be left behind. It may happen occasionally that some passengers will have to be left behind ; but it is far better that people are trained to assert their rights and the railway company is also told to do its duty than to allow things to go on and allow the railway company to profit at the expense and inconvenience and trouble of the people who travel by the railways. I therefore commend this Resolution to the unanimous acceptance of the House.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes (Commerce and Industries Member) : Sir, in spite of the very powerful speech which we have heard from Mr. Subrahmanayam I confess that I am still rather doubtful whether this House is intended to take Mr. Subrahmanayam's precise suggestions very seriously. I have a sort of feeling in my mind that what Mr. Subrahmanayam is aiming at is bringing prominently to the attention of this House a very real evil, namely, the evil of overcrowding. I am very grateful to him for bringing that question up, because I hope that I shall be able to make use of his speech later on. But if he really is serious in these suggestions which he has put forward, I regret I must ask the House very definitely to oppose them, for I am quite sure that they are not practicable.

I understand that the head and front of Mr. Subrahmanayam's charge is this. He says that the railway companies exploit the Indian passenger for the benefit of their share-holders, that the representations which have frequently been made to the railway administrations have not been of any avail, that Colonel Waghorn has always given the House the soft answer that turneth away wrath, but nothing has ever come of it. Therefore, it is now time for the House to assert itself and to place upon the railway companies a definite obligation for seeing that railway carriages are not overcrowded. If this obligation is not discharged, the railway administration is to be liable to a fine or penalty. Now the first point the House has got to remember is that the Railway practically belong to the Government of India. We talk about companies. It is true. We do entrust the management of the railways to the companies, but we own the railways. To all intents and purposes they are all State Railways. In some cases 19-20ths of the net profits come to us ; in other cases 5-6ths. Mr. Subrahmanayam means, therefore, that we should fine ourselves for breaches of the law as amended and I point out that since fines will be credited to law and justice, a provincial head, we shall be fining central revenues for the benefit of provincial revenues. However, that is a small point. My real point is that it is quite impossible to work these suggestions. The provisions of our law in regard to overcrowding are practically the same as in other countries. The Railway administrations are required to exhibit on the inside and outside of each compartment the maximum number of passengers which that compartment can hold. The railway servants are authorised, if they find the compartments overcrowded, to require passengers to leave those compartments, and if a passenger won't leave a compartment, then it is an offence and he is liable to a fine. Then, again, any passenger is entitled to resist, as I read section 109 (2) of the Act, the entry into a compartment when it is full. Now, as I said, the law in this matter is the same as in other countries. What I want to know is, is there any particular reason why we should treat India separately in the matter. Overcrowding is not peculiar to India. Every one of us who has been at Home knows what it is to hang on to the strap of a London Tube. When London is going to its work in the morning or going Home from its work in the evening, the Tubes and the undergrounds are far more overcrowded than anywhere in India. I can guarantee that.

My second point is this. If we are to place a definite obligation on the railway companies to see that before a train leaves any station no compartment contains more than its maximum complement, they will naturally try to discharge the obligations. But how are they going to do it? We cannot limit the issue of tickets at any given station to a number of vacant seats we anticipate. It is not practicable. Therefore we have to issue tickets and let the passengers into the platform. The only thing to do then would be to take measures to ensure that the train did not leave the station with any carriages overcrowded. We shall have to appoint a horde of inspectors to turn out from the overcrowded compartments the excess of passengers. Let us see how an arrangement of this kind would work, say, on the suburban trains on the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway in Bombay. I ask any Bombay gentleman here to say whether the arrangement is possible. There are stations every few minutes apart. During the busy season you have trains charging down one after another both in the mornings and in the evenings at very short intervals. They stop for the briefest possible time and discharge hordes of passengers, take on others and then proceed. Does any reasonable man suppose that we could post inspectors at these stations and that those inspectors could go through the train and turn out passengers in excess of the prescribed number? How would the Bombay business man like it? I would like to ask what his feelings would be if he was treated in this manner. He would say: 'I do not mind putting up with the inconvenience; my fellow passengers have no objection; what right have you to interfere?'

There would be a free fight on the platforms of the stations almost every hour of the day. Trains would be delayed and the Courts would be full of cases under section 109 of the Railway Act and counter-cases of battery and assault. The whole life of Bombay would be disorganised. I cannot imagine a proposal that would cause more friction between railway administrations and their customers; and the law which Mr. Subrahmanayam proposes would be at variance with the commonsense of India. But, as I have said, I do not really suppose that Mr. Subrahmanayam means us to accept his Resolution in its present form. In my view his object is to draw attention to what I know is a serious evil. Briefly, the cause of that evil is this. The number of passengers travelling on railways in this country has increased out of all proportion to the increase in rolling stock. Since 1908 our passenger traffic expressed in terms of passenger miles has increased by almost 100 per cent. Our passenger stock on the broad gauge has increased by 42 per cent and on the meter gauge only by 40 per cent. The main reason of this overcrowding on our railways is that we have not got enough coaching stock for the number of passengers. Now what is the remedy? We cannot go in for such a drastic remedy as is proposed. The right way is to enable us to rehabilitate the railway system. I would draw the Honourable Member's attention to the Railway Committee's Report, I would also draw his attention to the Report of the Railway Finance Committee. In that Report special attention was drawn to the very question of overcrowding, and if, when the subject comes before it, this House will give us the money we require for the next 5 years, then, I hope, they will find that this evil will have disappeared.

Dr. Nand Lal (West Punjab : Non-Muhammadan) : Sir, I am one of those who have been very staunch and strong advocates of the passengers. I identify myself with the remarks of the Honourable the Mover that so far as railway administration is concerned, we find a number of defects because a great many passengers are put to a lot of discomfort and no small inconvenience. But I am afraid I am unable to agree with him so far as the terms of his Resolution are concerned. In the first place, the very trend of the Resolution indicates that it is highly improbable and highly impracticable to adopt the method which he suggests should be carried out. I agree with the Honourable Mr. Innes that there would be free fights on the railway platforms, and the wisest course is to offer some other whole-ome suggestions, for instance, that the rolling stock should be increased. There is no doubt that the number of passengers has increased by leaps and bounds, and I know that there is a great need for carriages.

I think the explanation given by the Government seems acceptable, but all the same, the grievances which have been put forward by the Honourable Mover have got great truth in them with which I identify myself as I have already submitted above. But the Resolution, as it stands, I am afraid, cannot claim any sympathy. Therefore, I am sorry to say that I oppose this motion.

Mr. Darcy Lindsay (Bengal : European) : Sir, I must also add my voice in opposition to this Resolution. It appears to me that the Honourable the Mover's main complaint is that the Railway Act imposes regulations which the Companies do not carry out. According to what was read out, we were told that the Railway Company can prosecute and fine excess passengers. They do not do so, because that regulation is only adopted in order to safeguard the 10 passengers referred to who have the right of turning out the 11th passenger if they so wish. The Honourable Member for Commerce has explained to us the position very clearly that overcrowding is due to want of rolling stock, and that we know full well. A suggestion I make in that direction in regard to local traffic, which is perhaps the worst offender, is whether it would not be possible to have two deck carriages, as they have in Europe, particularly in France. The local traffic is very severe at certain hours of the day. As regards the possibility of carrying out the Resolution as proposed, I say it is absolutely impossible, a passenger will force his way into the carriage whether the Railway Company wish it or not. It is for the passengers who are already inside the carriage to endeavour to keep out any excess beyond the prescribed number. If they wish to exercise their right, I have no doubt that the Railway would support them in prosecuting and imposing fines on the excess passengers. The Honourable Member for Commerce has also referred to the overcrowding in England. As far as my knowledge goes, overcrowding is the same all the world over, whether on short or long journeys. When I was in England last year, I made several long journeys, and both in the third class and in the first class there were excess passengers standing down the passage way, there being no seats for them in the carriages, so that, it is not at all an evil confined to India. I am perfectly satisfied that if the Railways can remedy the defect, they will do so, and to impose such a Resolution as this upon the Companies, I consider, is very wrong.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind : Muhammadan Rural) : I have every sympathy, Sir, with the Resolution as proposed by my friend, Mr. Subrahmanayam, with regard to the overcrowding and the evils thereof. I will just relate an incident which occurred about a month or two ago at the Karachi Cantonment station when I was travelling myself on the North-Western Railway. Although all the seats in my compartment were occupied to the full complement of the compartment, a Railway Official, who called himself a Traffic Inspector, insisted upon coming into the compartment. I protested very vehemently. The Assistant Station Master on duty was called in, and he also, in the first instance, insisted that the man should be allowed to have a seat within the compartment. But upon my making a firm stand, better counsels prevailed, and the gentleman had to leave the compartment to find a place somewhere else. I threatened to report him, but eventually did not do so because better sense had prevailed. But this, so far as the higher compartments are concerned. So far as the third class compartments and the ladies' compartments are concerned, the overcrowding there is far worse, and frequently we find that the women and children have no seats at all, not even standing room for themselves or their children. No doubt there has been a cry about want of rolling stock, on part of the Railways concerned, but this cry has been going on for years past, and I know for certain that even before the war, in normal times there was very much overcrowding in particular places; therefore this state of things requires immediate remedy. I have had a talk with Colonel Waghorn some time ago upon this very subject, and one of my reasons for moving a Resolution with regard to the removal of the European reserved compartments at the last Session was this scandalous overcrowding. It seems to me that if the rolling stock is not sufficient at particular places, there are other remedies which ought to be had recourse to. For instance, if the trains were to go faster and less time spent at junction stations where ordinarily a long time is misspent—actually misspent—I think the trains could be run faster and consequently more trains could be run to carry the excess passengers. I can tell you that nearly one and a half hours or one hour is spent at Samasata Junction where there is absolutely no work to be done. I think about ten or fifteen minutes' stay there is ample if a sufficient number of coolies be employed to transport all the luggage and parcels, etc. Similarly, at other junction stations in Sind like Ruk, Rohri, and Kotri about an hour or an hour and a half is lost in changing passengers and parcels, which can easily be spared, and if the mail trains and other passenger trains are run faster this difficulty of rolling stock will vanish largely, and passengers can be carried much to their comfort by running extra trains for the excess. So far as this Resolution is concerned, I have every sympathy with the first clause, but I think the second clause will be unworkable so far as the State Railways are concerned, because the penalty imposed on a State Railway is a penalty imposed upon the Government itself and I do not know how that clause will be worked. But it is sufficient at the present moment that the attention of the Railway Department is attracted to this important matter and I hope that they will find some remedy for the difficulty.

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division: Muhammadan, Rural) . With regard to the second clause (b) of the Resolution, namely, the penal clause, I think the proposer of the Resolution will probably find a suitable suggestion to make. I beg under the circumstances to move that the following few words may be added. The second clause runs as follows :

'That a penalty in each case shall be imposed on such railway administration for allowing the entry or occupation by more than the maximum number of passengers so exhibited'.

I wish to add the words :

'or in the alternative to supply a sufficient number of carriages to facilitate traffic.'

Unless there is a penalty imposed it is not very easy in India, having regard to the sleeping partners of the railway at home, to get anything useful done. It is desirable under the circumstances that they must take jolly good care to supply a sufficient number of carriages to facilitate travel and that being so it is a suggestion for the Honourable Members of this House to accept and it is a good suggestion too.

Mr. President : The question is :

'That after clause (b) of the Resolution the following words be added :

'or in the alternative to supply a sufficient number of carriages to facilitate traffic'.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated Labour Interests) : Every Member of this Assembly deprecates the evil of overcrowding on the railways, especially in third class compartments. At the same time I must say that the remedy proposed by the Honourable Mover of this Resolution is worse than the disease. In 75 cases out of a hundred, whenever there are more passengers in a compartment than are allowed by the rules, it is the passengers themselves who enter the compartment after it is full and the railway officers do not force them to enter it. Therefore if we make the railway companies liable for overcrowding, the result will be that the railway passengers and the railway officers will always come into conflict as was said by the Honourable Member on the other side. I therefore feel that this Assembly will not pass this Resolution. But I may suggest one thing. According to the present law a passenger can resist the entry of a surplus passenger and at the same time I would suggest that if a passenger complains to the railway officer that he does not want more passengers to be admitted than are allowed by the rules and the railway officer does not take action, he must be held responsible both in civil law and in criminal law. That we can do and I do not think the present law provides for that. I therefore feel that instead of accepting the suggestion of the Honourable Mover the law may be changed in the way I suggest. On the local trains it is simply impossible to enforce the law which the Honourable Mover proposes. The trains cannot be stopped for several minutes in order to see that each compartment does not contain more than the prescribed number of passengers. Therefore the rule will be found to be unworkable. The Honourable Member for Commerce has already said, all over the world you will find, during certain parts of the day, the trains crowded. The trains will be found to be crowded even in the first class and I think the passengers will not like a rule of the kind proposed by the Mover of the Resolution, being made. There is another difficulty. When we travel we do not purchase tickets several days before we have to start. When a passenger goes to a station and finds that he will not have a seat, I can only ask the Members of this Assembly to imagine what his feeling would be especially when he spends 4 or 5 rupees for cart or gharry hire if he has to go back for a train next day. I do not therefore feel that this House should accept this Resolution at all.

Khan Bahadur Zahiruddin Ahmed (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I support the Resolution on the ground that I have seen the railway officials forcing passengers into the compartment just as if they were so much merchandise. On one occasion I found that one passenger was pushed in such a way by a ticket collector that one leg of the man got inside, and the other remained out, as he had no room to take it in. When the door was going to be closed, the man's leg was nearly crushed. The Honourable Mr. Innes opposed the Resolution on the ground that it would be a real hardship on the railway. I may only say he ought to have been, in the same way, as generous to the employers when he forced on them similar unworkable clauses at the time of the passing of the Factories Act only a couple of days ago. Why his generous heart failed him now in the interest of passengers when it was so touchy in the interest of the workmen? I may as well ask the Labour Member, by Government nomination, why he is so callous to the sufferings of the third class passengers, as most of them are workmen whose champion he is.

Mr. F. McCarthy (Burma: European): Sir, I beg to move that the question be now put.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I do not want to support the Resolution because I think I agree with Mr. Joshi that the remedy suggested is worse than the disease. The Honourable Member for Commerce has admitted that the evil is really a very great one, and it ought to be eradicated. Some measures ought to be taken to eradicate the evil, but, Sir, there is one point which I cannot desist the temptation of bringing to the notice of this House and to the attention of the Honourable Member for Commerce. There is a greater deal of truth in what my friend, Mr. Zahiruddin Ahmed, has said. I myself have seen third class passengers kicked into overcrowded compartments by railway guards and railway officials, that is a spectacle which certainly—I think Honourable Members will agree with me—is not a very pleasant one to look at. At the same time when in one compartment passengers are kicked by railway officials, as if they were not human beings, in the adjoining compartment I have seen one Anglo-Indian or two smoking comfortably with their legs stretched out. I do not think, Sir, I can be accused of raising any racial issue. But I do think that the practice of reserving compartments for Anglo-Indians and Europeans, especially when trains are overcrowded, and when the railway officials in the most inhuman manner kick passengers into the compartments, is a thing which I cannot characterise in words less severe than that it is inhuman.

I do not want to bring in another subject which does not relate to the subject of the Resolution, but I do feel, Sir, that the Honourable Member for Commerce and the Honourable the Chairman of the Railway Board should kindly draw the attention of the railway companies to the fact that whenever railway carriages are crowded care should be taken to remove the board 'Reserved for Anglo-Indians and Europeans', and people should be freely admitted into all compartments. I however have to oppose the Resolution because it will entail a great hardship on the railway companies.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Having regard to the gravity of the issues involved and the serious complaints that have been made, I think it is but right that Government should take steps to attend to them and we must have regard to the practical difficulties which have been pointed out by the Honourable Member for Commerce. I propose, Sir, to modify the Resolution so as to meet the necessities of the case. I would modify the Resolution to read thus :

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to consider and adopt such further measures as may be necessary to ensure the avoidance of overcrowding of passengers in railway compartments'.

I think, Sir, that will be acceptable to both sides and Government on its part should promise that steps will be taken, because the steps already taken are not sufficient.

Mr. President : The question is :

'That in place of all the words after the word 'to' in line 2 of the Resolution, where it occurs for the first time, the following words be inserted :

'consider and adopt such further measures as may be necessary to ensure the avoidance of over-crowding of passengers in railway compartments'.

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : I have no objection to the Resolution worded in that way.

Mr. N. M. Joshi : While supporting this amendment I only want to say one word to the Member for Commerce and that is that I hope that while taking measures to avoid overcrowding he will not include in those measures the measure of carrying human beings in goods vans. I hope for the sake of the good name of the Government as well as for the sake of humanity, this practice will be abolished.

Mr. President : The question is that that amendment be made.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam : Sir, I was surprised that the Honourable Member for Commerce simply put forward a 4 P. M. a negative to my proposal. He was not good enough to furnish any kind of explanation in amelioration of the charges I laid against the railway. My chief point which has been missed by my Honourable friends who have been eager to support Government and who have been eager to oppose my Resolution and to support the Honourable Member for Commerce's position, is the law under which the railway company is bound not to carry more than the number of passengers written on the carriage boards ; and if it does it violates the law and it is liable to a forfeiture. The forfeiture, however, can be recovered only with the sanction of the Governor General. There is therefore a law ; I want to work the law without the sanction of the Governor General. It is not altogether a new law that I am proposing. I want to take away the bar at present existing against its operation. I put the specific question whether at any time in the history of the Indian railways the Government of India had recovered any single fine for violation of the existing law, which is on the Statute Book. How is it that this law has been a dead letter for all these years. We all want law and order and to live under the rule of law and I do not see why my Honourable friend, Mr. Innes, should say that the enforcement of this law against the railway company will work hardship. Where is the hardship ? The suggestion that my Honourable friend, Mr. Joshi, made was that if a railway servant forces a number of people into a compartment, then he should be prosecuted. There is already a law to that effect. In Madras the Passengers' Association did prosecute a railway guard as a test case and he was convicted only a month ago. Honourable Members may not have looked into this law I referred to, and without looking into the law, without knowing the existing law, and without giving full value to the alteration I suggest, they have opposed me. But it does not matter. So far as the amendment is concerned, I hope that this proposal which has been made by Government will not be a dead letter like the Statute which has been in force for so many years. It is hardly right to say on behalf of Government that overcrowding exists all over the world, let it be so here, and then make a special pleading on behalf of the railway companies at a time when everybody is displeased with the conduct of these railways. There is another point that has been made of comparing the condition of Indian railways with the condition of railways in Europe, in England, or Scotland or Ireland. But under Indian conditions the passenger and the railway management are two distinct classes. We have seen it every day, we know it every day, that the railway administration thinks that the Indian passenger is nothing more than cattle. The eugenic conditions governing the selection of railway servants are largely the cause of this trouble. It is not so in England. Therefore, the analogy between the condition of railways in Britain and the condition of the management of railways in India is utterly untenable. The conditions which prevail on these latter railways are the curse of the railway carrying department; that should not be forgotten. I did not want to mention them, but I thought there would be something of a really sympathetic character, of a really friendly character from Government. Not finding it, I am only sorry to see that a blank, a bar, a negative, has been placed before me, and Honourable Members who have not seen into the matter carefully are eager to welcome the very sympathetic utterances of the Honourable Member for Commerce. This word 'sympathy' has been ridden to death. Sympathy is everywhere, but actually no action of a sympathetic character. Suburban railways do not furnish an analogy at all. Half an hour's, a quarter of an hour's or twenty minutes' overcrowding in a railway compartment does not do us any harm, but take the long distances we have to travel in India. Do you have such long distances in England, Scotland or Ireland? What is the good of comparing British railways with Indian railways? Am I to be met with an argument which can at any moment be upset? Take the case of a man travelling from Madras to Delhi. The master travels first class while the servant travels third class continuously for four days in an overcrowded compartment with ten or fifteen passengers. I cannot understand the self-sufficient way of dealing with a matter like this. I am simply sorry, not so much for the Honourable Member for Commerce as for my Honourable friends who seem to treat the matter lightly and then make suggestions which are a waste of time. The only way to have our rights established in this country is by having a legal remedy and making the offender go before a court. There is no good saying the railways are Government owned. So much the worse for Government and so much the better for my position. Because they are Government owned, Government winks at the foibles of the railways. The argument that Government owns railways and therefore the profits that are made go into the coffer of the tax-payer, and therefore the travelling public must be fleeced, must be practically looted, I do not consider that an argument at all in support of the existing state of affairs. As for the Railway Committee, goodness knows what these Committees and Commissions have done. They have been rather a frequent source of expense and practically no good comes out of them. The upshot of these Committees and Commissions is that certain gentlemen travel from one end of the country to the other at public expense in convenient carriages; but how can they know that the third class passengers are treated well and that there are no remedies to be applied in that class of travelling.

I am very sorry that this subject about which everyone raises questions should have been treated in that light-hearted manner. Well, therefore, seeing that my Honourable friends have taken up this attitude, I think it is far better to go to the Government itself for relief than to place this matter before my Honourable friends from whom I expected more sympathetic treatment for their own countrymen, and for whom they exhibit so much sympathy on public platform.

Colonel W. D. Waghorn (President, Railway Board): Sir, the Honourable the Mover has represented that Government is treating this question in a very unsympathetic manner. As a matter of fact, we feel very keenly on this question of the insufficiency of accommodation for third class passengers and conveniences for them. We have only recently addressed railway administrations in connection with the preparation of budgets which we hope we shall get passed in this House shortly with a view to paying particular attention to this question of proper facilities for the third class passenger. We know perfectly well what that involves—not only additional third class carriages and locomotives, but probably duplication of lines, platforms and facilities at railway stations. That is the remedy proposed, and these are the steps we shall have to take and must take, and the sooner we get the money and get along with these remedies the better.

As has been pointed out in the course of this debate, there are passengers who are unfortunately only too anxious to crowd into carriages rather than be left behind; and this is the case everywhere. If you wish the railway servant to use that authority, such authority as he has got under section 109, to prevent this, I am prepared to address the railway administrations and ask them to accede to and bring to the notice of their servants the power they have; but I very much doubt whether the passengers will appreciate this little attention on the part of railway servants.

Dr. Nand Lal: Sir, the Honourable Mover has been very hard upon some Members who had acted according to their conscience. My friend has not realised

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: I rise to a point of order. Has Dr. Nand Lal the right to speak twice?

Dr. Nand Lal: Certainly. An insinuation has been made, and this being a permanent record, we should explain that these remarks are unfounded.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is giving quite the wrong reason now (Laughter).

Dr. Nand Lal: My learned friend failed to see that he was responsible for the result at which we have arrived, and the fate which has been meted out to his Resolution can be traced to his worthy self. Now he has happened to say that some of us have not sympathised with the Resolution without knowing anything. He is wrong there and I may assure him that we have studied the question as much as he has done. Does he mean that the provisions of section 109 should be seriously adopted? If so, then every passenger will be within the clutches of the Law. The Law and Rules are clear enough. A certain maximum number is fixed there. The passengers know that this compartment is full. If it is a third class compartment, then similarly third class passengers may be supposed to know at least if there is any room and they should not enter it if there is no room.

And if they are going to force their entry inside and the railway official comes and asks them not to do it, there will be a struggle. This explanation was given. Is it wrong? Will it not end in a struggle? Will it not end in a fight? Will it not give rise to litigation? Is my friend in favour of litigation? There may be thousands of cases so far as the Railway Department is concerned. Does he realise the force of his Resolution? I am sorry to say that he has not penetrated into what would be the result if his Resolution were accepted. Then he says that the Railway Department should be held responsible and the Railway Department should be called upon to pay fine. Now, the explanation which was given was quite good. Does the Honourable Member know who will pay that fine? It is we who will pay the fine, so far as the State Railways are concerned, and, yet, the Honourable Member—I do not know how far he is right—had the courage to say that we were wrong in going against the Resolution—I may be excused for saying that—but every Member should be cautious so far as such remarks are concerned. Then the Honourable Member goes on to say that really the drift of the Resolution has not been followed by those Members who have unfortunately been compelled not to sympathise with his Resolution. I may tell him that some of us have read the section and his Resolution more than five times, and our opinion is this, that his Resolution is very unhappily worded. Therefore, with these remarks, I may submit that we have got full sympathy with the passengers; we are therefore compelled to say that the Railway Department is responsible for this over crowding, but we have got another remedy for it; on the occasion of the budget we shall say to the Railway Department: ‘You are not doing your duty; we are not going to give you money.’ That is the proper remedy. If the railway servants are not going to do their duty we are not going to pay them. But the remedy does not lie in it that a certain new law may be pressed upon them so that they feel incapacitated, so far as the performance of their duty is concerned. Certainly their administration is defective; as I offered some observations sometimes back it requires improvement and some of the third class passengers are really treated as chattels. So far as those remarks are concerned I associate myself with the Honourable Member’s attitude. But if he thinks that the Railway Department should be called upon to pay a fine as the Resolution says, I differ. Therefore, the best remedy would be on the occasion of the budget; we shall then call upon the Railway Department to give us reasons why they have not made any improvements in the administration.

Mr. P. E. Percival (Bombay: Nominated Official): I move that the question be now put.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

‘That the proposed amendment* be made.’

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is:

‘That the following Resolution, as amended, be accepted:

‘This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that he may be pleased to consider and adopt such further measures as may be necessary to ensure the avoidance of overcrowding of passengers in railway compartments.’

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: This Assembly now stands adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Monday, the 16th January, 1922.

* That in place of all the words after the word ‘to’ in line 2 of the Resolution, where it occurs for the first time, the following words be inserted:

‘consider and adopt such further measures as may be necessary to ensure the avoidance of overcrowding of passengers in railway compartments.’

COMPLETION OF RAILWAY LINE BETWEEN FUTWAH AND ISLAMPUR.

50. * Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan : Will the Government be pleased to state by what time the Railway line between Futwah Station and Islampur (Patna District) is likely to be completed ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : It is expected that the Futwah Islampur Railway will be opened this month.

STATION STAFF AND FIRST CLASS COMPARTMENTS.

(b) If the station staff have instructions not to check the tickets of first class passengers in trains while travelling between the hours of 8 P.M. and 4 A.M. ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) Government have no information as to the detailed orders issued by the various railway administrations in regard to this matter, but inquiry will be made and the result communicated to the Honourable Member.

(b) The instructions to the station staff on individual railways differ in detail but, generally speaking, the orders are that first and second class passengers should not be disturbed at night by requests to show their tickets.

INCONVENIENCE TO TRAVELLING PUBLIC OWING TO STEAMER NOT VISITING MAHABIRGHAT.

52. * Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan : Will the Government be pleased to state :

(a) If they are aware of the hardship experienced by the travelling public of North Bihar going to and coming from Patna City owing to the Bengal and North-Western Railway steamer not visiting Mahabirghat each time it visits Mahendru Ghat ?

(b) If not, do Government propose to ascertain the nature of the grievance and inconvenience to the travelling public, with a view to take necessary action ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) No representations appear to have been made on the subject.

(b) It is not possible to extend the run of the afternoon steamer to Mahabirghat as time does not permit of it. It is understood that there are objections from the point of view of navigation to night running to Mahabirghat which prevents the last steamer running to that Ghat.

CONVEYANCE AND HAULAGE ALLOWANCE TO M. L. A.'S ATTENDING SESSION AT DELHI.

53. * Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan : Will the Government be pleased to state if (a) conveyance allowance, (b) free haulage of a motor car is allowed in the case of Members residing only in one of the hostels at Raisina or also at other places during the Legislative Sessions ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (on behalf of the Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru) : (a) Conveyance allowance is admissible to any Member who lives in Raisina whether at the hostels or not.

(b) Haulage of motor cars is admissible no matter what part of Delhi a Member lives in.

54. * Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan : Will the Government be pleased to state if a memorial dated Bombay, the 15th May, 1921, regarding the contemplated transference of the Administration of Aden from the Government of India to the Colonial Office has been submitted to His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India ?

(a) If so, has any action been taken on it ?

(b) If action has been taken, what action has been taken ?

Mr. Denys Bray : Yes. (a) and (b). I would refer the Honourable Member to the answer given on the 10th September, 1921 to (r) of Question No. 129.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Was there any money spent by the Government of Bombay or Government of India for the improvement of Aden ?

Mr. President : The Honourable Member had better give notice of that question.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Was there any loss sustained by the transfer of the administration of Aden to the Colonial Office ? Will there be any loss ?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I think the Honourable Member's question was whether any loss was sustained. The transfer has not taken place.

As regards the expenditure mentioned by the Honourable Member, namely, on the improvement of Aden, Aden is under the administration of the Bombay Government and such public works as are carried out in Aden have been carried out by the Bombay Government. If the Honourable Member desires, I can show him the figures of expenditure by the Bombay Government in this respect. I may add, that taken over a series of years, the receipts and expenditure of a purely civil nature in Aden approximately balance themselves.

INDIAN PILGRIMS DURING THE LAST HAJ.

55. * Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (a) the number of Indian pilgrims during the last Haj season?
- (b) the number of such pilgrims as have not returned to India as yet?

Mr. H. Sharp: (a) 10,825 pilgrims.
(b) 376 pilgrims.

Bao Bahadur T. Bangachariar: Sir, I understand there was a proposal to start a fund from the Muhammadan community for the benefit of pilgrims. I should like to know if it met with any successful response.

Mr. H. Sharp: I am doubtful, Sir, whether that question arises out of the question I have just answered, but I have no objection to giving a reply to the Honourable Member. The fund has not met with the response we anticipated and the last I heard from Bombay, I think, was that only about Rs. 6,000 had reached the bank.

Mr. K. Ahmed: May I inquire, Sir, whether there is a lady doctor to attend to the needs of the Muhammadan lady pilgrims?

Mr. H. Sharp: Again, Sir, I think that question does not arise, but I may say that a lady doctor has been sanctioned.

INCONVENIENCE TO INDIAN PILGRIMS FROM QUARANTINE.

56. * Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: Have the Government of India received any complaints that Indian pilgrims, specially ladies, have been put to much inconvenience owing to the enforcement of quarantine or other Sanitary Regulations?

57. * Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: With reference to the Home Department Notification, dated Simla, the 28th October, 1921, re

Indian Civil Service Examination in India, published in the Gazette of India, Home Department, dated the 22nd October, 1921, will the Government be pleased to state :

- (a) Why Urdu, which is and has been a recognised language of India, does not find a place in the syllabus item (5) Vernacular ?
- (b) Is it that 'Hindustani' has been substituted for Urdu ?
- (c) If so, why, for what reason, and under what circumstances ?
- (d) Is the Government prepared to substitute 'Urdu' for 'Hindustani,' specially when Hindi has got a place in the syllabus ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a), (b), (c) and (d). In accordance with past practice the term 'Hindustani' has been used in the syllabus for the Indian Civil Service examination to be held in India as equivalent to 'Urdu'. The Government of India agree that Urdu is a better term and will convey to the Secretary of State, who frames the rules under section 97 (1) of the Government of India Act, the suggestion that the term 'Urdu' should be substituted for 'Hindustani'.

ADMISSION OF INDIANS INTO THE ROYAL AIR FORCE.

58. * Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan : (a) With reference to the answer given by Sir Godfrey Fell to Question No. 415* put by Munshi Iswar Saran on the 21st September, 1921, in this Assembly, will Government be pleased to state if they have now received a reply from the Secretary of State ?

(b) If so, will they be pleased to communicate the reply to the Assembly ?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a) and (b). No reply has yet been received from the Secretary of State for India.

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru : Statements are being prepared and will be laid on the table as soon as possible.

* Vide Legislative Assembly Debates, Volume II, page 637.

† Vide Legislative Assembly Debates, Volume II, page 624.

(b) to state whether the unfortunate dead got buried according to Muhammadan customary religious law, and whether non-official Mussalmans were summoned or permitted to assist in the burial of the dead bodies ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) The subject is under inquiry by a Committee whose report is awaited by Government.

(b) Yes. The bodies of the victims of this unfortunate tragedy were made over for burial to local Muhammadans at Tirur and Coimbatore.

POSITION IN MALABAR.

61. * Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: Will the Government be pleased to make a statement as to the progress of the Martial Law régime in Malabar, its probable duration, the number of the Moplahs so far killed and sentenced to death and imprisonment, the number undergoing and awaiting trial and the number of them still wanted to be brought to book ?

Sir Godfrey Fell: With reference to the first part of the Honourable Member's question, I will furnish him with a copy of the latest weekly report received by the General Staff on the situation in Malabar.

As to the second part of the question, martial law will be withdrawn as soon as circumstances permit. The Government of India have been for some time and still are in correspondence with the Local Government on this subject.

As to the third part of the question, the figures are as follows :

Number of Moplahs killed	2,250 (approximately.)
Number of Moplahs sentenced to imprisonment by Summary Courts	5,727

Information with regard to the number of Moplahs sentenced to death, or imprisonment by Courts of all kinds is being asked for and will be communicated to the Honourable Member when received. As to the number awaiting trial and still to be arrested, the Government of India have no information.

GOVERNMENT TREATMENT OF RESIDENT MOPLAHS IN RECOVERED VILLAGES.

62. * Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: Will the Government be pleased to state what treatment has been accorded by the Martial Law Authorities in Malabar to Moplah men, women and children found in dwelling houses and residential quarters after villages were won back from the rebels ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Information has been asked for and will be supplied to the Honourable Member when received.

RAVAGES WROUGHT BY MOPLAHS.

63. * Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: Will the Government be pleased to state :

- (a) the number of Hindus forcibly converted to Islam by the Moplahs ?
- (b) the number of Hindu temples desecrated or destroyed, if any, by the Moplahs ?

- (c) the number and names of the villages looted by the Moplahs before the Martial Law was proclaimed and the number and names of the villages looted by them afterwards?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) The Madras Government report that the number of forcible conversions probably runs to thousands but that for obvious reasons it will never be possible to obtain anything like an accurate estimate.

(b) and (c). The information has been asked for and will be supplied to the Honourable Member when received.

JURISDICTION TO JURY IN SESSIONS TRIAL.

64. * Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: Will the Government be pleased to state whether, within the recent times, Provincial Administrations have been authorized or advised to give jurisdiction to the Jury in all the cases of Sessions trial, in which the Government are the prosecutors?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: So far as I am aware, Provincial Governments have never been so advised, at any rate since they were given full powers by the Devolution Act, 1920, in this respect.

RESOLUTION OF KARACHI KHILAFAT CONFERENCE.

65. * Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (a) if they have given any instructions or directions to Local Governments relating to the legal action to be taken or not to be taken against the men and women who have been openly and publicly repeating the Resolution of the Karachi Khilafat Conference for which the Ali Brothers and their comrades and associates were prosecuted and tried at Karachi?
- (b) if so, what are those instructions or directions?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) and (b). No such instructions have been issued by the Government of India.

MOPLAH TRAIN TRAGEDY.

66. * Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Will the Government be pleased to supply information as to the following questions relating to the death of the Moplah convicts on the 20th of November in a railway van:

- (i) What was the size of the van in which 100 Moplah convicts were shut to be transferred from Tirur on 19th of November, 1921?
- (ii) By whose order were these convicts closed in a goods wagon?
- (iii) Was there any responsible officer of the Government present at the railway station to supervise and to see that the prisoners for whose welfare the Government is responsible were properly lodged in railway carriage with all requirements necessary for human life, safety and convenience?
- (iv) Is it the usual practice to shift the convicts from one place to another in goods wagon or was it specially done in case of these unfortunate Moplahs?

- (v) At how many stations did the train carrying these Moplah convicts stop between Tirur and Padanur ?
- (vi) Who was the Chief Officer in charge of these convicts ?
- (vii) At how many stations did he go to look after the comfort of the persons in his charge and to ascertain their presence in the train between Tirur and Padanur ?
- (viii) Did the Government find fault with any of the officials concerned ? If so, what punishment has been awarded to him or them ?
- (ix) Was there any water supply and other requirements for human convenience present in the van in which these Moplahs were closed ?
- (x) Can the convicts be supplied with water if they feel thirsty at any time of the day ? If they can be so provided, did any of the persons in charge take the trouble to go to these convicts to inquire whether they required water or wished anything else ?
- (xi) Were the Moplah convicts handcuffed and fettered while being conducted in that van ?
- (xii) Did Government or any officer of the Government take the precaution to record the statements of those Moplahs who were sent to Tirur for medical help and subsequently died ?
- (xiii) Have statements of those who are fortunate to have escaped death been recorded to find out the history of the most unfortunate tragedy ?
- (xiv) Has the Government ascertained the cause of death ? Is it true that they died on account of gas fumes ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : As the Honourable Member is no doubt now aware, the whole circumstances connected with this terrible affair which the Government of India very deeply regret are under inquiry by a Committee containing a majority of non-officials appointed by the Government of Madras. Pending the report of that Committee, which will doubtless deal with the various points raised in these questions, Government are not in a position to answer this question.

Mr. N. M. Joshi : Sir, may I inquire whether the practice of carrying prisoners in goods vans still continues or whether the practice has been stopped ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : I hope that the practice has stopped and I can only conclude that the Madras Government have stopped it, but if the Honourable Member wishes I will make inquiries.

AUTHORITY FOR EXTENDING HOLIDAYS IN SECRETARIAT.

67. * Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state as to whose primary business is it to extend a day in a public holiday for the persons employed under the Government of India and in its offices ?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to kindly inform as to who is the proper authority if not the Governor General in Council to extend one day more in Ed-uz-Zoha holiday for the persons employed in the Government of India Secretariat and other departments under the Government of India ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) and (b). Public holidays are notified by the Local Governments and Administrations, and the Government of India Departments and attached offices ordinarily observe the holidays notified by the Local Government or Administration within whose jurisdiction their headquarters are for the time being. But the question whether the staff of a Department or office may be allowed actually to enjoy a holiday depends on the orders of the head of that Department or office.

EXPORT OF WHEAT FLOUR IN 1921.

68. * Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state as to whose business it is if not of the Governor General in Council to know whether wheat flour has been exported in 1921 from India and its destination and the names of persons who exported it ?

(b) If it is the business of the Governor General in Council to know all or any of the information required in (a) above, will the Government be pleased to state (i) if there had been any export of wheat flour in 1921, (ii) its destination, and (iii) the name of person or firm who exported it ?

Mr. J. Hullah: Subject to definite restrictions, wheat flour has been exported in 1921. Information regarding the quantity and the destinations to which it has been exported can be obtained from the monthly "accounts relating to the Sea-borne Trade and Navigation of British India" which are available in the Members' Library and have been published up to the month of October 1921.

The Government of India do not know the names of the persons or firms exporting wheat flour, but they are able to obtain this information from the Collectors of Customs should they consider it of public interest or importance to do so.

RALLI BROTHERS AND EXPORT OF WHEAT FLOUR.

69. * Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: Is it not a fact that Messrs Ralli Brothers exported wheat flour for the Greeks in 1921 from India ?

Mr. J. Hullah: The answer is 'No.' And I have Messrs Ralli Brothers' authorisation to say that they did not export any flour to any destination during 1921.

COMMERCIAL REPRESENTATION IN APPOINTMENTS OF THE SUB ACCOUNT SERVICE.

70. * Haji Wajih-ud-Din: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the number of permanent, probationary, provisional, sub. pro tem. and officiating appointments of the Sub Account Service filled in by different communities, i.e., Hindus, Muslims, Anglo-Indians, etc., respectively, in the Office of the Accountant-General, Posts and Telegraphs, Calcutta, and offices subordinate to it ?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: The information asked for by the Honourable Member is being collected.

EXCLUSION OF INDIANS FROM VACANCIES ON RAILWAYS.

71. * Haji Wajih-ud-Din : Will the Government be pleased to state on what principle North-Western Railway and Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway have recently advertised in the Press calling applications from European and Anglo-Indian apprentices only, for the carriage, wagon and locomotive workshops, totally excluding Indians ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given by me on the 10th instant to his Question No. 10. Conditions on the North-Western and Oudh and Rohilkhand Railways are similar and beyond the fact that the North-Western Railway administration is collaborating with the Government of the Punjab in the matter of affording improved technical training, there is nothing to add.

TRANSFER OF VILLAGES FROM BIHAR AND ORISSA TO BENGAL.

72. * Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Husain Khan : Will the Government be pleased to state :

(a) whether a memorial has been submitted to His Excellency the Viceroy through the Government of Bihar and Orissa in December last, praying that the villages within Police Stations Rajmahal and Barharwa, within the District of Santal Perganas, within the Province of Bihar and Orissa, be transferred to the District of Murshidabad, within the Province of Bengal ?

(b) if so, will it be pleased to state as to what is the recommendation of the Local Government on the Memorial ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the answer given by me on the 10th January to Mr. K. Ahmed's question on the same subject.

COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS IN INDIA FOR IMPERIAL SERVICES.

73. * Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar : Will Government be pleased to state :

(a) whether they propose to hold Competitive Examinations in India, for selection of officers for all branches of the Imperial Service (Police, Medical, Forest, Engineering Departments, etc.) ?

(b) whether they propose to recruit by nomination qualified candidates from among the backward classes in the various branches of the Imperial Service ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : In future a proportion of the recruitment for the All-India Services is to be effected in India. A more precise answer cannot be given to the question as the rules regarding competition and nomination vary from service to service. If the Honourable Member desires particulars regarding recruitment for any particular service I shall be glad to arrange to have the required information supplied to him or to any other Member of the Assembly.

RAILWAY BETWEEN ERODE AND NANJUNDANGUDI.

74. * Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar : Will Government be pleased to state if they have received proposals for construction of railway between Erode and Nanjundangudi (Mysore Province) ? . If so, have Government sanctioned for the said construction ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : It is presumed that the Honourable Member refers to the Erode-Nanjangud Railway. Government have at present no proposals before them for the construction of the line. A detailed survey for a through connection from Erode to Nanjangud with a branch from Kootamangalam to Mettupalaiyam was carried out in 1910-11 and the results show that the line is not likely to give a remunerative return. Sanction has however been accorded to the construction of the section between Nanjangud and Hardanahalli by the Mysore Darbar with a view to the opening up of their own territory.

DISASTROUS FIRE IN GODOWN IN BOMBAY CONTAINING MILITARY SURPLUS STORES.

75. * Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar : Will Government be pleased to state :

- (a) whether it is a fact that a disastrous fire broke out on 22nd December, 1921, in a godown in Bombay containing military surplus stores composed of textiles such as flannels, towels, medicines and ammunition boots, etc. ?
- (b) If the answer is in the affirmative, please state :
 - (1) the causes of the fire ?
 - (2) the value of property stored there ?
 - (3) the amount of loss incurred on account of the fire ?
 - (4) whether the stores contained therein were insured ; if not, why not ?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : (a) The answer is in the affirmative. The building, which was destroyed, contained medical stores, boots, cotton thread and towels, but not flannel.

(b) An official inquiry was held on the 27th December, 1921. The Committee holding the inquiry were of opinion that the fire probably originated inside the building and not outside, but held that it was impossible to say what the cause of the fire was.

The book value of the building destroyed was one lakh twelve thousand seven hundred rupees. The estimated value of the stores in the building was about 12 lakhs of rupees, and it is not anticipated that any appreciable quantity will be salvaged.

The stores, which were the property of His Majesty's Government and not of the Government of India, were not insured.

RAVAGES WROUGHT BY MOPLAHS.

76. * Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar : Will Government be pleased to state :

- (a) the number of men and women (non-Mussalman) who have been killed by the Moplahs during the recent disturbances in Malabar ?
- (b) the casualties among the Muhammadan population ?
- (c) the number of forced conversions from among the Hindus ?
- (d) the value and extent of loss to the public and private properties caused on account of this outbreak ?
- (e) the amount of expenditure incurred by the Government on account of the military operations and martial law administration ?

- (f) whether they propose to grant compensation to the owners whose properties have been burnt or destroyed by the rebels and also to the families of persons murdered while in the discharge of public duty and of persons who fell victims to the rebels?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) and (b). No accurate figures are at present available. The Government of Madras is however collecting information as regards known casualties.

(c) The Madras Government state that forced conversion probably run into thousands but that for obvious reasons it will never be possible to obtain anything like an accurate estimate.

(d) Government are unable to add anything to the reply given on this point on the 28th September in answer to a question by Mr. Misra. No estimate of the damage done, which is serious and extensive, can be prepared until conditions are such as to permit of systematic investigation. The damage to Government property includes the wholesale destruction of Government buildings, judicial and other records, railways and telegraphs. Private owners have been unable yet to return or ascertain the damage done to their property.

(e) The military expenditure is roughly estimated at Rs. 15 lakhs up to the end of December, 1921.

(f) The question has been referred for the consideration of the Government of Madras.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : Do the Government propose to hold an inquiry or initiate an inquiry, and, if so, when, as to the causes of this outbreak?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The answer is that at present they do not propose to hold such an inquiry, but the matter will be brought up, I believe, on a separate Resolution when the question will be more fully discussed.

Mr. R. A. Spence : May I ask a supplementary question, Sir? Do Government intend to make use of the labour of the rebel prisoners in restoring the damage done by those rebels?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : I will make the suggestion for what it is worth to the Local Government and ascertain their views on that point.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Is it a fact that the Muhammadan women and children of the Moplah prisoners who were alleged to have committed murder, were not allowed to come to Calicut to get relief from the local Khilafat Committee there? Is it a fact that the women and children of the (Muhammadan) Moplahs who were prosecuted or taken to jail were not allowed to get relief from the Calicut Khilafat Committee?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : I have no information on that point at all.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Was not there a letter to the District Magistrate of Malabar written by the Secretary (M. Abdur Rahman) of the Khilafat Committee about it which appeared on the 9th of October in the 'Hindu' and which was again re-printed and published in the 'Amrita Bazar Patrika,' dated the 2nd November last?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: A great many letters appear in various papers which I do not accept as accurate. If the Honourable Member wishes me to make inquiries on the point, I am quite prepared to do so. I have no information before me at present.

Mr. K. Ahmed: What was the size or area of the van or wagon in which the 100 prisoners were shut up? What was the area of space allowed to each prisoner in the van?

Mr. President: These are primarily matters for the Madras Government, and if the Honourable Member has friends in the Madras Council, he can get these questions put there.

SAFEGUARDING OF PROPERTY AND LIVES IN MALABAR.

77. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) the reason why the garrison permanently stationed hitherto before at Mallapuram in South Malabar was disbanded and whether it is a fact that Government of Madras objected to such disbandment?
- (b) in the light of the experience gained during the recent outbreak, what steps they propose to take to safeguard the property and lives of the Hindu population and other classes of people in these affected areas against any further recurrence?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to parts (a) and (b) of the reply* given in the Council of State on the 26th September last to Question No. 155.

(b) The matter is receiving the most careful consideration of Government.

Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: May I ask a supplementary question, Sir? Will the Government be pleased to locate the permanent garrison at Mallapuram as was done in previous years in view of the present situation as a safeguard?

Sir Godfrey Fell: I am afraid I cannot give an assurance on behalf of the military authorities in a matter of this sort. The question of the disposition of troops in the Madras Presidency as in all other areas in India, must be governed by general considerations of internal security and I cannot give a pledge on behalf of Government that any particular garrison will be located in any particular area or place.

SUBSIDY TO ASSOCIATED PRESS.

78. Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal: (a) Is the Associated Press subsidised by the Government? Or do the Government pay any money to the Associated Press?

(b) If the answer is in the affirmative, how much is paid to the Associated Press annually?

(c) Why is the payment, if any, made?

(d) In what item of the Budget is the expenditure shown?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The Associated Press receives no subsidy from Government.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The Honourable Member's attention is invited to His Excellency's speech of the 21st December, 1921, to the Calcutta Deputation in which the attitude of Government was clearly explained.

ABOLITION OF REPRESSIVE LAWS.

80. * Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state for the information of this Assembly if they contemplate to cancel the notifications regarding the application of the Criminal Law Amendment Act and the Seditious Meetings Act at an early date ?

(b) If so, by what time ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: It is within the competence of Local Governments to cancel the notifications regarding the operation of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908.

The Government of India do not contemplate taking any action at present as regards the withdrawal of the Seditious Meetings Act, 1911.

RECOMMENDATIONS BY THE INDIAN JAILS COMMITTEE.

81. * Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava: Will the Government be pleased to state what action they have taken to give effect to :

- (2) Paragraph 293 (importance of good cooking and preparation of food),
- (3) Paragraph 297 (clothing for convicts),
- (4) Paragraph 307 (conservancy arrangements);

(b) the following recommendations referred to in the summary of recommendations :

- (2) Recommendation No. 150 relating to the provision of light to enable literate prisoners to read between lock up and sleeping time,
- (3) Recommendation No. 248 relating to the length of trousers ?

(c) If no action has yet been taken on these recommendations, will the Government be pleased to direct that early action be taken ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: As regards the recommendations mentioned in part (a) of the question and Recommendation No. 248, the attention of the Honourable Member is invited to paragraph 15 of the Home Department Circular letter, No. 104, dated the 4th April, 1921, a copy of which I laid on the table at the meeting of this Assembly on the 15th September, 1921. The Honourable Member would find a copy of this letter printed at page 272 of the report of that date.

As regards the Recommendations Nos. 127 and 150, the attention of the Honourable Member is drawn to paragraph 12 of the Home Department Circular letter, No. 307, of the 17th December, 1920, a copy of which will be found at page 261 of the report of the meeting of this Assembly of the 15th September 1921.

If the Honourable Member will refer to the correspondence in question, he will see that the attention of all Local Governments has been drawn to the recommendations mentioned in his question. The Government of India do not propose to take any further action as the recommendations in question deal with matters which are within the discretion and competence of Local Governments.

115. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : In what Provinces and when was the question of the abolition of the Commissioners of Divisions considered and with what result ? Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table any correspondence they have received or sent on the subject ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The Government of India have received no report from Local Governments nor have they had any correspondence on the subject.

ABOLITION OF BOARDS OF REVENUE.

116. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : In what Provinces and when was the question of the abolition of the Boards of Revenue considered and with what result ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The attention of the Honourable Member is drawn to my answers to questions asked by him on the same subject on September 5th and September 21st last. The Secretary of State has agreed to the principle that the functions of the Board of Revenue in the United Provinces should be confined to judicial appeals and that its executive functions should be transferred to the Local Government, but has requested that no steps should be taken to give effect to this transfer in respect of Courts of Wards matters until he has been fully informed of the details of the administrative method proposed in substitution of the Board's control and has approved them.

ABOLITION OF POSTS OF THE BOARDS OF REVENUE AND COMMISSIONERS OF DIVISIONS.

117. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table any correspondence which they have had with the Home Government regarding the abolition of the posts of the Boards of Revenue, and the Commissioners of Divisions ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : There has been no correspondence with the Secretary of State about the abolition of commissionerships of divisions. The Government of India are not prepared to lay on the table the correspondence about the abolition of Boards of Revenue.

COST OF CIVIL AND MILITARY ADMINISTRATION OF INDIA.

118. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Are the Government aware that there is a strong feeling in the country that the cost of civil and military administration of India is much higher than of any other country in the civilized world and should be materially reduced? Will the Government be pleased to give comparative figures of expenditure of India and other countries if they have got any such figures?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Government are aware that such opinions have been advanced. They are at present contemplating an examination into the possibility of retrenchment of expenditure. The expenditure on the civil and military administration under the Central Government (excluding Commercial Departments like the Posts and Telegraphs, Railways, and Irrigation) is Rs. 99,22,42,000, vide pages 598—601 of Budget for 1921-22. The details are as follows:—

	Rs.
Direct demands on the Revenues	4,93,51,000
Debt Services	13,08,61,000
Civil administration	8,43,18,000
Currency, Mint and Exchange	4,18,80,000
Buildings, Roads and Miscellaneous Public Improvements	1,51,11,000
Miscellaneous	4,24,37,000
Net Military expenditure	62,20,00,000
Miscellaneous adjustments between the Central and Provincial Governments	62,84,000
TOTAL	99,22,42,000

Figures are not readily available for a comparison of the cost of administration in India and in other countries, and such comparisons are seldom reliable as the conditions which determine such expenditure vary enormously in different countries. A comparison such as that suggested depends on the basis adopted, i.e., whether the basis be cost per head of population or the proportion of the revenues spent on the administration. Various other factors, such as the wealth of the country and its national debt, etc., have to be taken into account. I have given the cost of the civil administration of the Central Government only exclusive of Commercial Departments, and of the military expenditure, and the Honourable Member may find these useful in relation to any information he may be able to procure as regards other countries. In this connection I would refer the Honourable Member to figures given in the statistical memoranda of the International Financial Conference held at Brussels in 1920 which the Honourable Member may obtain from the Finance Department library. I regret I cannot undertake to collect and supply fuller information on so extensive and complicated a subject.

HARTAL IN INDIA DURING ROYAL VISIT.

119. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Is it a fact that on the landing of His Royal Highness in India Hartal was observed in important towns of India and the masses boycotted the welcome to His Royal Highness and closed their shops and suspended business at the places and on the dates of the Royal visit within the British territory?

(b) In what places was the Royal visit not accompanied by any sort of Hartal?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The facts have been fully stated in the Press in published accounts of His Royal Highness's visit. I have nothing to add to these accounts.

REPRESENTATIONS AGAINST PRESENT REPRESSIVE POLICY.

120. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table all representations made by public bodies or individuals protesting against the present repressive policy of the Central and Provincial Governments?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Several representations have been received but the Government do not propose to lay copies of them on the table.

EMPLOYMENT OF EX-CONVICTS, ETC., ON INDIAN RAILWAYS.

121. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Are ex-convicts and persons of questionable character ever employed by the Indian Railways? If so, do the Government propose to issue orders preventing employment of such persons by Railways?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : Railway Administrations in their own interests avoid employing if they can help it ex-convicts and questionable characters, and Government do not propose to issue any instructions on the subject.

THE RAILWAY KOSHT NIBARAK SAMITI, LUCKNOW.

122. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table all representations made to them by the Railway Kosht Nibarak Samiti, Lucknow, from July, 1921? What action has been taken thereon?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : Laying on the table involves printing in the official report, and since the correspondence is very voluminous, the Government are not prepared to go to this expense. Wherever possible action on the suggestions has been taken and the Samiti replied to.

OFFICIAL VOTE IN THE INDIAN LEGISLATURE.

123. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Is an official member of the Indian Legislature free to vote in whatever way he likes?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The official members of the Indian Legislature, other than Members of the Executive Council of the Governor General, and officers of the Central Government, are free to vote as they like, save when Government thinks it necessary to require their support. If the Honourable Member will refer to the division lists, I think he will be able to satisfy himself that Government has very seldom, since the Assembly was constituted, imposed any restriction on the voting of official members.

SEARCHLIGHTS ON RAILWAY TRAINS.

124. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : How long have searchlights been used on Kalka-Simla Railway at night and have they proved useful in averting danger? Do the Government propose to order that all railway trains when running at night shall carry powerful searchlights in front of the engine to ensure safety and convenience?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: Electric head lights have been in use on the train Engines on the Kalka-Simla Railway since 1909 and have served the purpose for which they are intended.

The question of providing more powerful head lights on Engines running on railways generally is under consideration. The matter is, however, in the experimental stage at present, and Government do not propose to issue orders as suggested.

FENCING OF RAILWAY LINES.

125. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Do the Government propose to order that all railway lines shall be so fenced as to provide adequate safety to human beings and animals?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: The experience of Railway Administrations so far has been that fencing does not afford the degree of safety anticipated. In view of this and the fact that the provision of adequate fencing throughout would involve very heavy expenditure, Government do not propose to take action at present to the extent advocated by the Honourable Member, especially as there are many other works which in their opinion have greater claims on the funds available.

The whole question however is again being considered in consultation with Railway administrations.

REPRESENTATIONS AGAINST BARSII LIGHT RAILWAY COMPANY.

126. Mr. B. S. Kamat: (a) Will Government be pleased to say if the Railway Board have received any representations or complaints from passengers regarding the pontage charged by the Barsii Light Railway Administration for crossing the Willingdon Bridge at Pandharpur in the Bombay Presidency on the ground that the pontage is excessive, especially for the 3rd class passengers?

(b) Will Government be pleased to quote what rates the Barsii Light Railway Company are charging to the passengers, together with the mileage for which the pontage is charged?

(c) Is it true that the said Railway Company is, under the terms of their contract with Government, entitled to charge the pontage only so long as their capital expenditure for constructing the bridge across the river Bhina is recouped from the proceeds of the pontage? If so, will Government please state how the Pontage Account stands at present, and when is the pontage likely to be discontinued by the said Railway Company?

(d) Have Government also received complaints against this Railway Administration on the ground that they do not stop all their trains at a station called Babhulgaon although it is very convenient for the Pandharpur pilgrims? Will Government please state what action, if any, they have taken to relieve the inconvenience?

(e) Is it true that this Railway Administration has introduced a Rail Motor Trolley Service for passengers, and that they run the Rail Motor at times at night although the rules are said to prohibit it?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) The reply is in the affirmative and the representation will be examined.

(b) Passenger fares on the Barsi Light Railway are as follows :—

1st class	24	pies per mile.
2nd class	12	" " "
3rd class	3	" " "

The pontage charge is equivalent to fares as for 20 miles.

(c) The reply to the first part of the question is in the negative and the point mentioned in the second part therefore does not arise.

(d) Government have received a complaint regarding the non-stoppage of all passenger trains at Babhulgaon. The matter is under inquiry.

(e) Government have sanctioned the introduction of a motor trolley service for the carriage of passengers on the Barsi Light Railway. The motor trolley is permitted to run at night subject to certain conditions.

DESPATCH RE FURTHER ADVANCE IN CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM.

127. Mr. B. S. Kamat: With reference to the undertaking given by Government in the September session of the Assembly to communicate to the Secretary of State for India the tenor of the debate on Mr. Majumdar's resolution for a further advance in Constitutional Reform, will Government be pleased to place on the table their despatch to the Secretary of State and his reply thereto?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The Honourable Member is referred to my reply to Mr. Raghubhir Sinha's question No. 99, dated 10th January, 1922, on the same subject. The resolution and the debates were forwarded to the Secretary of State with a formal covering letter.

ADVISORY RAILWAY COUNCILS.

128. Raja Kushalpal Singh: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state when the Advisory Railway Councils, recommended in paragraphs 139—142 of the Report of the Railway Committee, will be introduced, and state the local centres where the local councils are to be established?

(b) Have any rules been framed to regulate the business of the central and the local Advisory Railway Councils? If not, will the Government be pleased to lay them before this Assembly before bringing them into force?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: The whole question is now being examined in consultation with Railway Administrations.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION IN THE RAILWAY BOARD'S ADMINISTRATION REPORT.

129. Raja Kushalpal Singh: Do the Government propose to direct the Railway Board—

(a) to arrange to give the amount per month of the aggregate salaries and wages of railway servants of different races in the statement of numerical strength of railway servants published in the annual Administration Report?

(b) to restore the publication in the future issues of the annual Administration Report, the following information which used to be published before 1901:—

(i) Table of rates and fares on the Indian Railways.

(ii) Full contracts of Railway Companies?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: As regards (a) the Government have examined the question whether the information can be supplied, but find that this cannot be done without a very great expenditure of time and labour. They do not propose to make the information a feature of the annual Administration Report.

With reference to (b) the attention of the Honourable Member is drawn to the Railway Board's publication entitled the 'History of Indian Railways constructed and in progress' which contains all particulars of interest regarding rates and fares and contracts in a summarised form. This publication is brought up to date every year, and copies of it are available in the Library of the Legislative Assembly.

SALE OF RULES AND REGULATIONS OF INDIAN RAILWAYS CONFERENCE ASSOCIATION.

130. Raja Kushalpal Singh: Do the Government propose to issue orders for the sale of the Rules and Regulations of the Indian Railways Conference Association to the public as they used to be sold before?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: The rules and regulations of the Indian Railway Conference Association are intended for the guidance of railway officials only and do not, as a whole, concern the general public. Such portions of the regulations as are of interest to the public, e.g., those dealing with rates and concessions, are reproduced in the Coaching and Goods Tariffs issued by the Association, and these are available to the public.

Government do not propose to issue orders as suggested. In this connection it may be pointed out that the Rules of the English Railway Clearing House, a somewhat similar institution to the Indian Railway Conference Association, are not available to the public.

REVISION OF INDIAN RAILWAYS ACTS.

131. Raja Kushalpal Singh: Will the Government be pleased to state when they propose to revise the Indian Railways Acts to embody the recommendations of the Acworth Committee and other provisions to assimilate the Indian law with the railway law in England and America?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: The question of the necessity of revising the Indian Railways Act is under consideration, but it cannot be stated at present when it will be possible to undertake the revision.

DETAILS OF EXPENDITURE ON STATE RAILWAYS IN FUTURE BUDGETS.

132. Raja Kushalpal Singh: Do the Government propose to arrange to give full details of the Establishment Rolls and working estimates for each of the State Railways in the future Budgets, so as to enable this Assembly to criticise the proposed expenditure?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: The form in which the statements of demands for railway expenditure should be presented is under the consideration of the Government of India, and the suggestion made by the Honourable Member will be duly considered.

ASSAM-BENGAL RAILWAY.

133. Raja Kushalpal Singh: (a) Is it a fact that the Assam-Bengal Railway has been working at a loss for the last 25 years? If so, will the Government be pleased to state the total amount of the losses in interest, etc., incurred by Government through the operations of that Railway Company?

b. Is it a fact that the Company working that line has raised only about $\frac{1}{4}$ th of the capital instead of the $\frac{3}{11}$ th required under its contract? If so, will the Government be pleased to state why the terms of the contract have not been enforced?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to state whether any inquiries as to the financial success of this line were made before its construction was authorised? If not, why not? Why was the principle that the construction of railways from borrowed funds be limited to those schemes only which are estimated to yield an annual income equal to the interest on the capital expended in their construction, laid down by the Secretary of State in 1874 and repeated by the Parliamentary Committee of 1879, departed from in the case of the Assam-Bengal Railway?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) The reply is in the affirmative. The total losses to the end of 31st March, 1921, amounted to Rs. 8,78,15,739.

(b) The reply is in the negative. The Company have raised about $\frac{1}{4}$ th of the capital. Under the contract they are not required to raise any fixed proportion of capital. The ratio of $\frac{3}{11}$ th referred to by the Honourable Member is for purposes of calculating the amount of interest due to Government in respect of the capital laid out by them preliminary to the determination of surplus profits.

(c) Inquiries as to the financial prospects of this line were made before construction was commenced, and it was then estimated that a return of over 5 per cent. would be obtained on the capital outlay. Owing to the absence of statistics, however, these estimates were not reliable and indeed have proved much too optimistic.

TRAINING OF INDIANS FOR RAILWAY SERVICES.

134. Raja Kushalpal Singh: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state what action they propose to take upon the recommendations contained in paragraph 184 of the Report of the Indian Railway Committee, with regard to—

(i) technical training of Indians in the different provinces of India, both for the superior and the subordinate grades of the Railway services;

(ii) the system of selections and training of the young men appointed as probationers in the Traffic Department on Indian Railways?

(b) Do the Government contemplate the establishment in the near future of a Railway College in India for the training of young men for employment in the Agency, Traffic, Audit, and Stores Departments of the Indian Railways?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : I would remind the Honourable Member that it is not very long since the Report was received and that it contains numerous recommendations of great importance. I recognise the great importance of the question referred to by the Honourable Member, but all I can say at present is that it will receive careful and sympathetic consideration.

INDIA IN THE EMPIRE WIRELESS SCHEME.

135. M. K. Reddi Garu : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state their policy with regard to India's participation in the Empire Wireless Scheme?

(b) What were the views of India's representatives at the Imperial Conference?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to lay all the connected papers on the table?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) From the purely Indian point of view, Government are in favour of the establishment of direct wireless communication between India and the United Kingdom and would prefer that the construction and working of the Indian station should be entrusted to a private agency under licence. But they are not yet aware whether it will be possible for them to participate on this basis in the Imperial Wireless Scheme. The matter is still under discussion between their representatives in England and the Imperial Communications Committee.

(b) India's representatives at the Imperial Conference were instructed to support generally the policy explained above.

(c) Government regret that they are unable to publish the correspondence on this subject at present.

INDIA'S ATTITUDE TO THE EMPIRE WIRELESS SCHEME.

136. M. K. Reddi Garu : (a) (1) Will the Government be pleased to state the names of India's representatives appointed to work in the Wireless Co-ordinating Committee, and (2) what are the terms of reference of this Committee?

(b) Is it a fact that India prefers private enterprise on account of the heavy cost of the new scheme; if so, will the Government be pleased to furnish necessary information and figures on this subject?

(c) In view of the present financial condition of India, do the Government propose to protest against any scheme of Empire Wireless, that may involve India in any additional expenditure on this account?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) (1) The name of India's representative on the Imperial Wireless Co-ordinating Committee is Mr. C. R. Barker, C.I.E., Director-in-Chief, Indo-European Telegraph Department, with Mr. J. N. Parker, an officer of the Indian Telegraph Engineering Service, as his technical assistant.

(2) The object of this Committee is to keep the Wireless Telegraphy Commission, which is entrusted with planning out the general scheme of Imperial Wireless Communications, in touch with the requirements of the various administrations which will be responsible for the actual construction and management of the stations.

(b) The reply to the first part is in the affirmative. It is estimated that the capital cost of a station in India capable of high speed communication direct with the United Kingdom would amount to £4,00,000 approximately.

(c) No expenditure can be incurred in instituting a wireless service between India and other parts of the British Empire, unless the funds are first voted by the Legislative Assembly. Government are not able at present to state what public expenditure on wireless communications overseas will be necessary. When the occasion arises the case will be submitted to the Assembly.

REPRESENTATIONS AGAINST RECENT REPRESSIVE POLICY OF GOVERNMENT.

137. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table copies of telegrams, letters, manifestoes and representations brought to the notice of the Government protesting against the recent repressive policy of the Government of India and of the Provinces ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Communications have been received but Government do not propose to lay copies of them on the table. As regards manifestoes, the attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the daily newspapers in which several have been published.

PROPORTION OF INDIANS AND EUROPEANS ON GAZETTED STAFF OF GOVERNMENT OF INDIA SECRETARIAT.

138. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) What is the number of Indians and Europeans, respectively, in the personnel of the permanent Gazetted staff of the Government of India Secretariat as shown in column 1 of each of the two statements supplied to me in answer to my question No. 48 asked on 5th September, 1921 ; (b) how many Indians and Europeans, respectively, have been posted within the last six months on any of those posts ; (c) why more Indians have not been employed ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) and (b). The Honourable Member's attention is invited to the replies given to him on the 10th January when he asked an almost identical question.

(c) Nationality is not the only criterion for selecting officers for the posts concerned. Indians are employed whenever possible, but if suitable Indian officers are not forthcoming, European officers have to be selected.

MEAT CONSUMED DURING LAST YEAR.

139. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) What is the quantity and price of meat consumed during the last year by (i) Indians, and (ii) British soldiers ?

(b) How much of it and of what values were beef and mutton, respectively and how much of the beef was consumed by the British troops only ?

(c) How much tinned meat and of what value was consumed by the British troops, and was any portion of tinned meat required for Indian troops ; if so, how much ?

Sir Godfrey Fell : (a), (b) and (c). Government regret that they are unable to furnish the information asked for by the Honourable Member without an expenditure of time and labour which would be out of all proportion to the value of the result.

MEAT FOR BRITISH TROOPS.

140. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Have the British troops refused to serve if they are supplied with mutton or any other sort of meat and not beef?

Sir Godfrey Fell : The answer is in the negative.

141. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : How many persons have been appointed within the last six months to any of the posts mentioned in the statement printed at pages 1291 to 1295, Volume II of Legislative Assembly Debates, and how many of them were Indians?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : The statement below gives the required information.

INDIANISATION OF HIGHER SERVICES.

142. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table any correspondence which they may have had with the Home Government regarding Indianisation of higher services including the posts of Governors, Chief Justices, and High Court Judges from 1st September, 1921, up to date?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Government are not prepared to lay the correspondence on the table.

SIR THOMAS HOLLAND'S AND LORD SINHA'S SUCCESSORS.

143. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: What recommendations and suggestions have the Government made to the Home Government or to His Imperial Majesty the King-Emperor on the subject of appointments to fill the vacancies caused by the retirement of Sir Thomas Holland and the Right Honourable Lord Sinha of Raipur?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the provisions of section 36 and section 46 (2) of the Government of India Act. No recommendations or suggestions are ever made by the Government of India in the case of appointments of Governors of provinces and of Members of the Executive Council of the Governor General.

EXCLUSION OF INDIANS FROM GOVERNMENT POSTS.

144. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Are there any class of posts in any department of the Government of India from which Indians are to be excluded in practice?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: No.

TREATMENT OF CONGRESS OR KHILAFAT VOLUNTEERS.

145. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Are persons convicted of being Congress or Khilafat volunteers kept in the same jails and similarly treated as those convicted for theft, dacoity or perjury? If not, what is the difference?

(b) Have the Government of India been asked anything by the Home Government on the subject? If so, will the Government be pleased to lay the question asked and the answer given, or proposed to be given, on the table?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) Such prisoners are confined in the same jails as ordinary criminals, but it is believed that in most provinces they receive differential treatment in the matter of labour, food, clothing, etc.

(b) Government do not propose at present to lay any papers on the table.

INDIAN AUTONOMY.

146. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table all correspondence which they might have had with the Home Government on the subject of Indian autonomy from 1st September, 1921?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Government are unable to accede to the Honourable Member's request.

WORKING HOURS IN GOVERNMENT OF INDIA SECRETARIAT.

147. Lieutenant Nawab Mohammad Ibrahim Ali Khan: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state the working hours of the several Departments of the Government of India and their subordinate offices?

(b) Is it a fact that there are no standard working hours and that some Departments of the Government of India have fixed their working hours so late that their clerical establishment does not get any time for evening exercise? If so, will the Government consider the advisability of issuing orders that every Department ordinarily closes at 4-30 P.M. during the Simla season and at 4 P.M. during the Delhi season? c.p. 2)

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) and (b). The office hours are not uniform in all Departments and subordinate offices. They are ordinarily from 10-30 A.M. to 4-30 P.M. in most of the Departments and subordinate offices, while in some they are from 10-30 A.M. to 5 P.M. Saturdays are observed as half holidays. In one Department Wednesdays are also treated as half holidays.

Government do not consider it necessary to change the existing orders.

LATE HOURS AND ATTENDANCE ON HOLIDAYS IN GOVERNMENT OF INDIA SECRETARIAT.

148. Lieutenant Nawab Mohammad Ibrahim Ali Khan: (a) Is it a fact that some Departments of the Government of India have made it a rule to detain a part of their clerical establishment very late every evening irrespective of the consideration whether there is any pressing work or not? If so, will the Government consider the advisability of abolishing this rule?

(b) Is it a fact that in the various Departments of the Government of India a part of the clerical establishment is made to attend office on holidays? If so, does the establishment concerned receive any overtime remuneration?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) The question is too vague to allow of a reply being given to it.

(b) Members of the clerical establishment are required to attend office on holidays as the occasion may require. The answer to the second part of the question is in the negative.

INCREASED TRAVELLING ALLOWANCE TO GOVERNMENT SERVANTS.

149. Lieutenant Nawab Mohammad Ibrahim Ali Khan: In view of the present cost of living and increased labour wages and railway fares, do Government propose to make any increase in the present rate of travelling allowances granted to the servants of the Government of India; if not, why not?

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: (1) Servants of the Government of India travelling in provinces under Provincial Governments have been allowed to draw mileage and daily allowances at the increased rates sanctioned by the Provincial Governments for corresponding classes of officers under them.

(2) As regards areas under the Government of India, revised rates have been adopted in Rajputana, Central India, the Delhi Province, North-West Frontier Province and Baluchistan. Proposals for other areas are under consideration.

STAFF SELECTION BOARD'S EXAMINATIONS.

150. Lieutenant Nawab Mohammad Ibrahim Ali Khan: (a) Is it a fact that in the Staff Selection Board examination many graduates of three or four years' experience in Higher and Lower Division work got plucked, while many matriculates and non-matriculates just raw from college or school with a few months' experience in office work passed the Board's examination of Lower or Higher Division ?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing :

- (i) the number of such cases, and
- (ii) the nationality, and
- (iii) departments to which they belong ?

(c) Will Government be pleased to state the Board's criterion by which the candidates are judged and declared fit for the Higher and Lower Divisions ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) and (b). The collection of the information would entail great labour which Government are not prepared to undertake.

(c) Ordinarily, the Board holds a paper and vidé voce examination. Successful candidates are passed for the Upper or Lower Division in accordance with the total number of marks they attain.

LICENCES FOR FIREARMS.

151. Lieutenant Nawab Mohammad Ibrahim Ali Khan: Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement containing the information promised by Mr. S. P. O'Donnell on the 15th February, 1921, re Rai Bahadur Sarat Chandra Sen's question* relating to licences for firearms ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The statement is laid on the table.

(a) Almost all the Indians whose applications were rejected come outside the very wide limits prescribed by the Government of Bombay to cover persons 'entitled' to obtain licences without special inquiry, and only 9 of those who were refused licences belonged to the 'entitled' class.

(b) The low percentage is due to the fact that in some districts a large number of licences for the protection of crops are issued for which no fees are leviable.

MAXIMUM PAY OF SECOND DIVISION GOVERNMENT CLERKS.

152. Lieutenant Nawab Mohammad Ibrahim Ali Khan: Will Government be pleased to state the result of the consideration promised by Mr. S. P. O'Donnell on the 1st March, 1921, in regard to the question* of Mr. Ayyangar relating to the memorial of the Government of India clerks?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: After very close and careful consideration, the Government of India have rejected the prayer alluded to, as it was found on examination that the memorialists had no genuine grievance.

STOCKING OF GRAIN BY ZAMINDARS.

153. Lieutenant Nawab Mohammad Ibrahim Ali Khan: Do the Government of India propose to introduce a Bill to check the stocking of grain by the Zamindars; if so, when?

Mr. J. Hullah: The answer is in the negative.

SUPERIOR STAFF OF RAILWAYS IN INDIA AND REVISED SCALE OF SALARIES.

154. Dr. H. S. Gour: (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a tabular statement showing the total strength of the superior and subordinate officers drawing a monthly salary of at least Rs. 300 per month in the various branches, such as Agency, Traffic, Engineering, Locomotive, Stores, Audit, Carriage and Wagon and Medical Departments of State Railways, East Indian Railway, Great Indian Peninsula Railway, and Bengal-Nagpur Railway?

(b) And also shewing how many of these are Europeans and Anglo-Indians and how many are Indians in the various branches of each of the abovementioned Railways?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement shewing in detail the revised scale of salaries and allowances sanctioned for the various departments of the Railways mentioned above?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: A copy of the Classified List of State Railway Establishment is being sent to the Honourable Member. This gives full information as regards staff drawing over Rs. 250 a month in the various departments of State Railways.

2. The staff drawing Rs. 300 a month and over employed by the Company worked railways mentioned by the Honourable Member is approximately:

	Indians.	Europeans or Anglo-Indians.
East Indian Railway	66	1,003
Great Indian Peninsula Railway	135	866
Bengal-Nagpur Railway	53	370

Government do not know how this staff is distributed by departments.

The revised rates of salary sanctioned for State Railway staff are shown in the Classified List of State Railway Establishment being sent to the Honourable Member in response to his first question.

The rates paid on the East Indian, Great Indian Peninsula and Bengal-Nagpur Railways are similar to these.

INDIAN OFFICERS AS DISTRICT TRAFFIC SUPERINTENDENTS AND DISTRICT LOCOMOTIVE SUPERINTENDENTS.

155. Dr. H. S. Gour: Will the Government be pleased to state how many of the existing Indian officers have attained the ranks of District Traffic Superintendents and District Locomotive Superintendents and are in executive charge on (a) the State Railways, (b) East Indian Railway, (c) Great Indian Peninsula Railway, (d) Bengal-Nagpur Railway?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: A copy of the Railway Board's Classified List and Distribution Return showing how the Indian officers serving on the several railways are employed is being sent to Honourable Member. There is no Indian District Locomotive Superintendent on any of the railways mentioned.

EQUAL BENEFITS FOR INDIANS AND EUROPEANS UNDER REVISED SCALE OF SALARIES IN RAILWAYS IN INDIA.

156. Dr. H. S. Gour: Have the Indian officers on the East Indian, Great Indian Peninsula, and Bengal-Nagpur Railways, borne on the permanent establishment of the Traffic and Locomotive and other departments on the date of introduction of the revised scale of salaries and allowances on the aforesaid Railways, been placed on an equal footing with the Europe-recruited contemporaneous officers as regards salaries and allowances, as has been done on the State Railways? If not, why not?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: In the case of the East Indian Railway the reply is in the affirmative.

As regards the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, the Agent reports that the proposals in connection with individual officers' salaries have not yet been settled, but that the present intention is to follow the East Indian Railway procedure and to treat all officers in service alike. On the Bengal-Nagpur Railway, all Indian officers recruited in England on date of introduction of the revised scales have been placed on an equal footing with the Europe-recruited contemporaneous officers as regards salaries and allowances.

INDIAN SUBORDINATES ON RAILWAYS.

157. Dr. H. S. Gour: Is it a fact that the Indian subordinates on the East Indian Railway, Great Indian Peninsula Railway, and Bengal-Nagpur Railway, are on a lower grade than the European and Anglo-Indian subordinates?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: All subordinate staff in the same grade are treated alike in the matter of pay, irrespective of nationality. Certain lower grades are limited to Indians only.

PROPORTION OF INDIANS ON STAFF OF RAILWAYS.

158. Dr. H. S. Gour: (i) Will the Government lay a statement on the table showing:

(a) How many Indian Traffic Inspectors, Locomotive Foremen and Inspectors, Head Train Examiners and Permanent Way Inspectors are there on the State Railways, East Indian Railway, Great Indian Peninsula Railway, and Bengal-Nagpur Railway?

(b) How many Indian Head Passenger Guards and Mail Drivers are there, respectively, on the abovementioned Railways?

(c) How many 1st class stations are in the hands of Indian Station Masters on each of the aforesaid Railways?

(ii) Will the Government be pleased to state what are the starting and the maximum salaries of (a) European and Anglo-Indian, (b) Indian Station Masters, Assistant Station Masters, Guards, Train Controllers, Ticket Collectors, Drivers, Permanent Way Inspectors and Audit Inspectors, on each of the aforesaid Railways? What is the cause of the disparity, if any, in the scale of salaries of European and Anglo-Indian subordinates and that of Indian subordinates?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: The information is being obtained from the several railway administrations and will be sent to the Honourable Member.

GRADING OF EUROPEAN AND INDIAN STAFF ON RAILWAYS.

159. Dr. H. S. Gour: Will the Government be pleased to state what is the existing arrangement on the State Railways, East Indian Railway, Great Indian Peninsula Railway, and Bengal-Nagpur Railway, regarding the grading of European and Indian superior and subordinate staff?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: I take it that the Honourable Member inquires what general principles govern the fixing of the pay of the European and Indian superior and subordinate railway staff. As regards the superior staff of State Railways, time-scale of pay have recently been sanctioned by the Secretary of State. These scales, in the case of technically-trained staff, comprise pay proper, technical pay, and overseas pay. 'Pay' is a scale common to all, irrespective of source and country of recruitment; 'technical pay' is admissible to Europe-trained and appointed officers; 'Overseas pay' is drawn by officers of non-Indian domicile. Similar scales are in force on the East Indian, Great Indian Peninsula, and Bengal-Nagpur Railways.

As regards the subordinate staff, the principle is that men in the same grade and with the same qualifications are paid the same rate of pay whatever their nationality.

FUTURE ADMINISTRATION OF ADEN.

160. Mr. Mahomed Hajeebhoy: (a) Has any decision been reached regarding the future administration of Aden?

(b) If the answer is in the negative, will the Government kindly give assurance that no decision shall be taken until the subject has been discussed in this Assembly?

Mr. Denys Bray: (a) No.

(b) The Government have no intention of arriving at a decision without giving the Assembly an opportunity for discussion.

QUESTIONS DISALLOWED IN LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY AND COUNCIL OF STATE IN 1921.

161. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (1) Will the Government be pleased to state how many questions were disallowed (i) wholly or (ii) in part, notice of which was given in 1921 by any Member of:

(a) the Legislative Assembly,

(b) the Council of State?

(2) How many questions or portions thereof were so disallowed :

- (i) under Rule 7 as relating to matters with which the Governor General in Council is not concerned ;
- (ii) under Rule 8 (1) i) and (ii) separately ;
- (iii) under Rule 9 ;
- (iv) for any other reason ?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru : Government is not prepared to collect the figures asked for, as the amount of labour that would be entailed would be quite out of proportion to the results obtained. The power of disallowance is vested in the President and not in the Government.

QUESTIONS REFERRED TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

162. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state how many questions were referred to His Excellency the Governor General under Rule 8 (2) in the year 1921, and with what result ?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to publish the rulings of His Excellency the Governor General on those questions for guidance of the House ?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru : No question was referred to the Governor General under Rule 8 (2). Any decision of the Governor General under that rule would relate only to a particular case and would therefore not involve any general principle.

QUESTIONS IN INDIAN LEGISLATURE RELATING TO MATTERS IN DISPUTE BETWEEN GOVERNMENT OF INDIA AND SECRETARY OF STATE.

163. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) How many questions were put by the Members of the Indian Legislature relating to matters which are or have been the subject of controversy between the Governor General in Council and the Secretary of State or a Local Government ?

(b) Is it a fact that under Rule 9, the questioner was entitled to an answer confined to a statement of facts ?

(c) In how many such cases the statement of facts was withheld ?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru : (a) None. (b) Yes. (c) Does not arise.

EXPORT OF WHEAT, ETC.

164. Mr. Mohammad Yamin Khan : Do the Government propose to stop export of wheat, wheat flour and other grains for any further period extending after 31st of March, 1922 ?

Mr. J. Hullah : The Government have not yet arrived at any decision in the matter.

STATEMENTS OF MEMORIALS WITHHELD.

165. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table copies received by them of statements of memorials addressed to the Government of India but withheld by any subordinate of the Government under memorial rules within the last two years ?

(b) In how many and what cases, if any, was the withheld memorial called for by the Government of India and suitable orders passed thereon ?

(c) What is the remedy, if any, of a memorialist whose memorial has been improperly withheld ?

(d) In how many and what cases, if any, were advance copies submitted by the memorialists and what action, if any, was taken thereon ?

166. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table copies of statements of memorials addressed to the Secretary of State for India but withheld under memorial rules within the last two years ?

(b) In how many and what cases, if any, was the withheld memorial called for by the Secretary of State for India for suitable orders being passed ?

(c) What is the remedy, if any, of a memorialist whose memorial has been improperly withheld ?

(d) In how many and what cases, if any, were advance copies submitted by the memorialists and what action, if any, was taken thereon ?

167. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: (a) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement of memorials addressed to the Secretary of State for India and another of those addressed to the Government of India presented through any local authority within the last two years showing all the details as given in the statements of withheld memorials and also showing which of the memorials have been rejected or accepted, and in the case of pending memorials which of them have been received by the Government of India or presented to the Secretary of State for India, as the case may be.

(b) In how many and what cases were advance copies of the memorials submitted direct and what action, if any, was taken thereon ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The compilation of the statements asked for in these three questions would involve the expenditure of a great amount of time and labour, and Government are unable to see that it would serve any useful purpose. Government are not therefore prepared to take the action suggested.

With reference to part (c) of the first two questions, a memorialist who considers that his memorial has been improperly withheld can make a representation to that effect to the higher authority through the usual channel.

RELIEF AND MEASURES FOR PROTECTION IN MALABAR.

168. Mr. Kavalappara Muppil Nair: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state what specific relief the Government have given or propose to give to the distressed inhabitants in the Taluks affected by the Moplah outbreak in Malabar :

(1) in the way of compensation ;

(2) in the way of temporary help ;

(3) in the way of remission of Government dues ?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state whether they propose to make any special arrangements for the safety of the people in the affected areas and to prevent similar outbreaks in future ; if so, what ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: It is understood that the points raised, which are primarily of provincial concern, are receiving the consideration of the Local Government.

A copy of the Honourable Member's question and of this answer will be sent to the Local Government.

TRANSFER OF VILLAGES FROM BIHAR AND ORISSA TO BENGAL.

169. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Have the Government of India received through the Government of Bihar and Orissa any memorial by the inhabitants of Rajmehal, etc., for transfer of certain villages from that Province to that of Bengal? If so, what action, if any, has been taken or is proposed to be taken thereon?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the answer given on the 10th January to Mr. K. Ahmed's starred question No. 48 on the same subject.

DISPARITY BETWEEN SCALES OF PAY IN SECRETARIAT AND ATTACHED OFFICES.

170. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Is there any disparity between the scale of pay sanctioned for the Secretariat staff and that for the staff of the attached offices especially, with regard to (1) house-rent allowance, (2) stage on the new scale for starting, and (3) the date from which new scale was given effect to? If so, what and how is the difference justified?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (1) The staff of the Secretariat Offices receive house-rent allowance in Simla in view of the fact that their headquarters are not at Simla and they are therefore put to extra expense while residing there. Certain other offices and attached offices like the offices of the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy, Director General, Posts and Telegraphs, Military Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy, Military Accountant General and Accountant General, Railways, whose headquarters are not at Simla, are also in receipt of house-rent allowance for the same reason.

(2) The pay of the Secretariat establishment was fixed with reference to the time-scale of pay laid down in the Home Department Resolution No. 1062, dated 27th May, 1920, the number of years' service in each case being taken into account.

The scale of pay for attached offices was fixed by a Departmental Committee and later by the Administrative Departments concerned in consultation with the Finance Department. The stage at which employees of the attached offices were to enter the new scale was fixed so as to provide to each man a certain percentage above the amount drawn by him under the old scale, in order to assure him of an immediate increase of pay, as the method adopted in the case of the Secretariat offices would have resulted in several instances in a reduction of emoluments, had not protection been afforded by the grant of personal allowances.

(3) The new scale of pay was given effect to, in the case of the Secretariat offices, from the 1st December, 1919. The date of introduction of the new scale in the attached offices was fixed in each case by the Administrative Department concerned.

The reason for the difference in treatment between Secretariat and attached offices, in addition to the reasons given above, is that the class of work required in attached offices is not the same as that required in the Secretariat.

DISCONTENT AMONG STAFF OF ATTACHED OFFICES.

171. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: Is there any discontent felt by the clerks of the attached offices and have they formulated any summary of facts regarding the pay and prospects of the clerks of the attached offices of the Government of India? If so, will the Government be pleased to lay the same on the table?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Government believe that a certain amount of discontent exists, but no specific complaints of the nature referred to have reached Government.

PRINCIPLE OF EQUALITY OF REMUNERATION IN GOVERNMENT OFFICES.

172. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: How far has the following principle been followed with regard to pay and allowances of clerks of the attached offices and also of the Government of India Secretariat in case of those who have served outside the Secretariat previously, and do the Government propose to give full effect to it in future:

Principle laid down by the Secretary of State for regulating the salary of establishment:

'It is highly desirable that the remuneration of all ministerial establishment employed at any particular station whether their salaries fall on the Military, the Imperial, Civil or Provincial budget, should be pitched, either directly or indirectly by means of allowance, as to give such equality of remuneration for similar labour as will prevent just cause of discontent.'

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The principle that there should be equality of remuneration for similar labour has not been departed from. The class of work required in attached offices and in other local subordinate offices is not the same as that required in the Secretariat.

PARTICULARS OF CLERKS IN ATTACHED OFFICES.

173. Lala Girdharilal Agarwala: What is the total number of clerks in the attached offices of the Government of India, how many of them are Indians, and how are these Indians provincially divided?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The several Departments are being consulted and I will let the Honourable Member have a reply in due course.

HOUSE ALLOWANCE FOR MADRAS HIGH COURT JUDGES.

174. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) Whether they have recommended to the Secretary of State for India for grant of Rs. 500 as house allowance to the Honourable Judges of the High Court of Madras over and above their pay? If so, whether the said proposal was sanctioned?
- (b) Whether similar allowances are being paid to the Honourable Judges of the High Courts in the other Provinces? If not, the reasons why this special concession should be shown to the Honourable Judges of the Madras High Court alone?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The question is under the consideration of the Government of India and it is expected that the Secretary of State will be addressed in the matter shortly.

AMENDMENT OF RELIGIOUS ENDOWMENTS ACT.

175. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Will Government be pleased to state:

Whether they have any idea of amending or modifying the Religious Endowments Act, and whether they are aware that there is considerable dissatisfaction among the Hindus in regard to the inadequacy of provisions in the Act for control and administration of temple properties, auditing of accounts and the duration of offices of the Members of the Committees, etc.?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Government do not propose to recommend an amendment or modification of the Act, but a private Member has given notice of a Bill to amend in one particular. As regards the portion of the question which relates to the administration of the subject, I invite the attention of the Honourable Member to the fact that the subject is a provincial transferred subject. I informed him of this in reply to a similar question on the 29th September, 1921, and suggest for his consideration that if there is dissatisfaction with the administration of the subject, inquiry should be directed to the Ministers responsible and not to the Central Government.

TRIAL BY JURY IN ALL MAJOR PROVINCES.

176. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Will Government be pleased to state:

Whether there is any proposal of extending the trial by Jury in all major provinces of India and for all offences under the Penal Code triable by Sessions or Assistant Sessions Judges?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The matter is within the competence of Local Governments under section 269, sub-section (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and the Government of India have no information regarding such a proposal.

OPERATIONS IN MALABAR.

177. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) How many infantries are operating in South Malabar from the commencement of the rebellion up to date?
- (b) Whether the military authorities were warned beforehand that there was a likelihood of serious outbreak in Malabar; if so, why there was a delay of a few days for the despatch of troops?
- (c) Whether it is a fact that records in some public offices have been destroyed?
- (d) If it is a fact that cavalry was sent to the scene of operation in Walluvanad Taluq despite the fact that the authorities were aware that Ernad was impracticable for cavalry operations; if so, who were responsible for such order and whether any action has been taken against them?

Sir Godfrey Fall : (a) The strength of the infantry in Malabar has varied from a minimum of $1\frac{1}{2}$ companies at the commencement of the rebellion, to a maximum of $5\frac{1}{2}$ battalions, of which a portion has already been withdrawn.

(b) The military authorities were informed that there was a likelihood of trouble in Malabar and, at the request of the civil authorities, despatched reinforcements to Calicut previous to the actual outbreak. At that time, however, they received no intimation that the outbreak was likely to be so serious as to require the reinforcements which it was later found necessary to despatch.

(c) Yes. The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the statement laid on the table on the 28th September last in reply to unstarred question No. 73.

(d) One squadron of cavalry was sent to the Walluvanad Taluq as part of an organised column at the outbreak of the rebellion. They did valuable work in patrolling outwards from the railway and their moral effect was very great at a time when troops were scarce. Had the rebellion spread to the Podanur area, as was considered quite likely at the time, the cavalry would have been invaluable.

In view of the above reply, the latter part of the Honourable Member's question requires no answer.

DETAILS OF THE MOPLAH OUTBREAK.

178. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar : Will Government be pleased to state :

Whether they would appoint a committee consisting of a majority of non-officials to enquire into and report upon :

- (1) the causes of the Moplah outbreak ;
- (2) the persons who are responsible for precipitating the outbreak ;
- (3) the amount of compensation to be granted to those who sustained losses at the hands of the rebels ;
- (4) the amount of public money looted from the public treasuries and offices ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Government are not prepared to make any statement on this subject, which is primarily one for decision by the Local Government, at present.

METUR PROJECT (CAUVERI BRIDGE).

179. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar : Will Government be pleased to state :

- (a) In what stage the Metur project (Cauveri Bridge) Madras Presidency is ?
- (b) Whether the investigation is complete and estimate submitted ?
- (c) Whether Government have accorded sanction to the said proposal ?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : The Honourable Member apparently refers to the Cauvery (Metur) Reservoir Project.

This project was submitted to the Government of India, for the purpose of obtaining the Secretary of State's sanction, in 1916. No action can, however, be taken upon it until a final decision is arrived at as to the respective rights of the Government of Madras and the Mysore Darbar in the water of the Cauvery.

It is understood that the project has lately been revised and will be resubmitted by the Local Government as soon as the decision above referred to has been reached.

TREATMENT OF INDIAN POLITICAL OFFENDERS.

180. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Will Government be pleased to state :
- (a) Whether they propose to introduce a uniform practice throughout India regarding the treatment of political offenders convicted for political offences ?
 - (b) If Government will be pleased to issue instructions to treat Indian political prisoners in the same way as European convicts are treated ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The Honourable Member's attention is invited to the answer given to-day to a similar question asked by Pandit Jawahir Lal Bhargava.

INDIANS IN THE INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.

181. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Will Government be pleased to state :
- (a) The total number of persons recruited for the Indian Medical Service for the year 1920-21 ; from 1921 up to date ?
 - (b) The total number of Indians holding temporary commissions in the Medical Service and whether they have been permanently appointed as vacancies occurred ?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) The total number of persons permanently recruited for the Indian Medical Service during the period 1st April, 1920, to the 31st March, 1921, is 67, and from the 1st April, 1921, up to the 12th January, 1922, the number is 4.

In addition, 12 Indian officers have recently been recommended for permanent commissions.

(b) The total number of Indians at present holding temporary commissions in the Indian Medical Service is 262. The reply to the latter part of this question is that a number of Indian officers, holding temporary commissions, who have applied for permanent commissions, have been selected for permanent appointment to the Indian Medical Service on the nomination of a Selection Board. All the Indian officers (except in one instance) so appointed in India since the beginning of the war have been holders of temporary commissions.

INDIANS AND GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS.

182. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Will Government be pleased to state :
- (a) the number of Europeans and Indians who get pay from Rs. 500 up to Rs. 1,000 and from Rs. 1,000 and above in the various branches of Government service in India ;
 - (b) the number of appointments that have been set apart for Indians in the above two heads ;
 - (c) the time within which Indians would get the minimum number of appointments reserved for them ;

(d) how the said appointments are to be filled up, whether by nomination or selection by competitive examination?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The collection of the information asked for in (a), (b) and (d) of the question would involve an enormous amount of labour both on the Departments of the Government of India and on Local Governments, which Government are not prepared to undertake. As regards part (c) it is not possible to give any precise estimate, as the answer must depend upon uncertain factors, e.g., the date on which existing incumbents of appointments retire.

INCREASE IN SALARIES OF MEMBERS OF THE IMPERIAL SERVICES IN INDIA.

183. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) Whether they propose to increase the emoluments or the salaries of officers recruited in England for the various branches of the Imperial Service in India?
- (b) Whether the Secretary of State for India has approved of the proposed increase?
- (c) The amount of additional expenditure that may be incurred by the Government of India on account of the increase of such salaries?
- (d) If the proposals have not received the sanction of the Secretary of State, whether opportunities will be given to the members of the Legislative Assembly for discussing the propriety of such increase prior to final orders being passed by the Secretary of State?
- (e) If they would be pleased to lay on the table the correspondence between the Government of India and the Secretary of State in regard to this?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) The answer is in the negative. (b) to (e). These questions, therefore, do not arise.

FURTHER GRANT OF CONSTITUTIONAL REFORMS.

184. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) whether Mr. Majumdar's Resolution for the further grant of constitutional reforms moved and passed in the amended form by the Assembly, was communicated to the Secretary of State; and
- (b) whether any reply was received; if so, will Government be pleased to lay on the table the correspondence and the reply thereto?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The Honourable Member is referred to the reply given on the 10th January, 1922, to Beohar Raghuhir Sinha's question on the same subject.

RECOGNITION OF MEDICAL DIPLOMAS OF INDIAN UNIVERSITIES.

185. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Will Government be pleased to state:

- (a) Whether any action was taken in regard to the Resolution moved by Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam on 28th September last in regard to the letter of the 9th March, 1921, from the General Council of Medical Education and Registration of the United Kingdom to the Secretary of State for India on the subject of recognition of Medical Diplomas of the Indian Universities?

(b) If so, whether any reply was received from the General Council of Medical Education, and with what result?

Mr. H. Sharp: (a) The substance of the debate on the resolution referred to by the Honourable Member was communicated by the Government of India to the Secretary of State by telegram in October last. The Secretary of State was also subsequently supplied with a copy of the full proceedings of the Legislative Assembly relating to the resolution.

(b) In view of the representations of the Secretary of State and the Government of India, the Executive Committee of the Council have agreed to postpone consideration of the question of recognition from February next to a later date pending a further investigation of the conditions of midwifery training in India.

ADVISORY COMMITTEES OF ELECTED MEMBERS TO ASSIST MEMBERS OF EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.

186. Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar: Will Government be pleased to state:

Whether there are any proposals to appoint Standing Committees composed of the elected Members of the Assembly and the Council of State to advise the Honourable Executive Council Members of the Government of India in the various departments they are in charge of?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: A Member of this Assembly has given notice of a resolution on the subject. That resolution has secured a place in the list of business for the 19th January, and when it is debated the attitude of Government towards the question will be explained.

FANS IN SECOND CLASS CARRIAGES IN BOMBAY, BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.

187. Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava: (a) Are the Government aware that there are no fans in the second class carriages on the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway?

(b) Do the Government propose to direct the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway authorities to arrange for fans in second class carriages before the next summer season?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) Most of the bogie and some four-wheeler second class carriages on the broad gauge section of the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway are fitted with fans; on the metre gauge section second class carriages are not so fitted. The work of fitting all second class carriages with fans has been reluctantly retarded owing to shortage of funds, but as soon as money is available for the purpose it will be taken in hand.

(b) In the circumstances, Government do not propose to direct the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway authorities as suggested.

DEFECTIVE WATER SUPPLY ON BOMBAY, BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.

188. Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava: (a) Are the Government aware that there is no arrangement on the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway and some other railways to supply water to the latrines in the third class carriages, and a great inconvenience is felt by the third class passengers on account of this absence of water supply?

(b) Do the Government propose to direct the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway authorities and such other railway administrations as have not provided such facilities, to make arrangements for the supply of water to the latrines of the third class carriages?

(c) Are the Government aware that in spite of the fact that the matter has several times been brought to the notice of the railway authorities arrangements for the supply of drinking water on a very large number of stations are still very inadequate?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to direct the railway authorities to remove this complaint by making proper arrangements and among others by increasing the number of watermen wherever necessary?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) and (b). Government have no detailed information on the subject, but will bring the matter to the notice of railway administrations.

(c) If the Honourable Member would adduce specific instances, the attention of the railway administration will be drawn to the matter.

(d) Government Inspectors have recently been asked to report specially on this subject, and the point has been specially referred to railway administrations in connection with the preparation of their programmes of expenditure on the improvement of facilities generally for 3rd class passengers. Government do not propose, therefore, to take further action at present.

PROVISION OF INTERMEDIATE CLASS ACCOMMODATION.

189. Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava: (a) With reference to my question No. 465 asked in the meeting of the Assembly, held on 14th March, 1921, regarding intermediate class accommodation, will the Government be pleased to state if since then intermediate class accommodation has been provided on any railways?

(b) If so, on which?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to direct such railway administrations as have not yet provided intermediate class accommodation, to provide such accommodation within this year?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) The subject of the question referred to by the Honourable Member was brought to the notice of the railway administrations which did not already provide intermediate class accommodation on their trains, and they agreed that the matter would be given full consideration as new stock is being erected.

(b) Government have received an assurance from the Bombay, Baroda and Central India and South Indian Railways, the Railways concerned, that intermediate class accommodation will be provided as new stock is received and existing stock is rebuilt.

(c) Inquiry will be made from the railways concerned as to the progress already made and anticipated.

SPECIAL TREATMENT FOR POLITICAL PRISONERS WHO HAVE NOT COMMITTED VIOLENCE.

190. Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if any instructions for special treatment of such political prisoners (under-trial or convicts) as have not committed any act of violence have been issued by the Government of India to various Local Governments?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the instructions so issued?

(c) In case no such instructions have been issued, will the Government be pleased to consider the desirability of issuing instructions to Local Governments for the special treatment of such political prisoners as have not been proved to have used violence?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) The Government of India recently suggested to Local Governments that persons recently sentenced to rigorous imprisonment under Act XIV of 1908 or under the Seditious Meetings Act should receive differential treatment in jail in the matter of diet, clothing, labour, etc. They understand that orders to this effect are already in force in most provinces.

(b) and (c). No detailed instructions have been issued, but the question is under the consideration of the Government of India.

REVISED SCALE OF PAY OF THE KARACHI PREVENTIVE SERVICE.

191. Mr. Ali Buksh Muhammad Hussain: (a) How does the scale of pay of the Karachi Preventive Service of His Imperial Majesty's Customs, as recently revised, compare with the scale as last sanctioned for the service at Bombay?

(b) How does the scale of pay of the Karachi Preventive Service compare with the pay proposed for the Appraising Department?

(c) Is it a fact that a portion of the appraising is done by the Preventive Service?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes: (a) The scale of pay for Preventive Officers is Rs. 120-10-300 at Karachi and Rs. 200-10-400 at Bombay.

(b) Proposals for the revision of the pay and prospects of the Appraising Department at Karachi are still under the consideration of the Government of India.

(c) The Government of India have no information.

FREE QUARTERS AND THE KARACHI PREVENTIVE SERVICE.

192. Mr. Ali Buksh Muhammad Hussain: (a) Is Government aware that the rent of the quarters supplied to the members of the Preventive Service at Karachi is taken into consideration while fixing their pay?

(b) Is Government aware that their scale of pay was fixed lower than that at Bombay by reason of the fact that the Karachi service was given free quarters while the Bombay service was not?

(c) Is Government aware that the rent of these quarters was taken at Rs. 150 each, while fixing the scale at Bombay?

(d) Is Government aware that some Inspectors and Preventive Officers in Bombay occupy rent-free quarters, and this was not taken into consideration when fixing their scale of pay?

(e) Are all members of the service at Karachi given residential quarters?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : (a) to (d). The Honourable Member's information is not correct.

(e) Not at present.

FREE QUARTERS FOR GOVERNMENT OFFICERS.

193. Mr. Ali Buksh Muhammad Hussain : (a) Is it a fact that it is the policy of the Government to supply free quarters to officers of such departments as are constantly required for day and night duty so as to live near their work and be available at all times in the interest of the service?

(b) If so, is it the policy of the Government not to take into account rent of such quarters while fixing their pay?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The question is too general in its terms to admit of a satisfactory reply being given. Moreover, the question is one which appears to concern Local Governments more than the Government of India. I note, however, that the general rules regarding the provision of residential accommodation for Government servants are now embodied in Fundamental Rule 45, a copy of which will be supplied to the Honourable Member by the Home Department, if he desires one.

DIFFICULT CONDITIONS AT KARACHI.

194. Mr. Ali Buksh Muhammad Hussain : (a) Is Government aware that the cost of living at Karachi is higher than at Bombay?

(b) Is the Government aware that such officers as live at Keamari have to incur extra cost for living than at Karachi?

(c) Is Government aware that servants at Keamari demand more wages than at Karachi?

(d) Is Government aware that officers living at Keamari have to send their children to Karachi at extra cost?

(e) Is Government aware that the only Medical Officer at Keamari is debarred from private practice, and such officers who require such aid for themselves or their families have to procure the same from Karachi at much heavier cost than at Karachi?

(f) Is Government aware that there are no schools worth the name at Keamari?

(g) Were these factors taken into account while fixing their scale of pay?

The Honourable Mr. C. A. Innes : The Government of India have no information on the subject.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

[16TH JAN. 1922

ADDRESS OF WELCOME TO H. R. H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadan Urban) : Mr. President, the proposition* which stands in my name needs no words in support of it, and I will ask your indulgence, Sir, to take the draft address which has been circulated as read. The Royal House of Windsor has solid claims not only on the loyalty and fealty of the people of this country but also on their esteem and gratitude. The Crown has always been to them the bulwark of their hopes and aspirations and in the hour of India's need, her august sovereigns have always endeavoured to promote the best interests of the country. One of the examples of such Royal solicitude during one of the greatest crises in the history of India has been referred to in the draft address. I mean the reference to the gracious Proclamation of 1858 in the promulgation of which Queen Victoria of revered memory had a direct hand. Similarly, during the general unrest that supervened the days of the great war our beloved Sovereign who has done us the honour of visiting our country on two memorable occasions, took the keenest and most sympathetic interest in the aspirations of the people and did his best to consolidate the bonds of union between India and Great Britain. Little do we, indeed, yet know how much His Gracious Majesty did behind the scenes for the formulation of Reforms calculated to place His Majesty's Indian subjects firmly on the path of Self-government.

The heir-apparent to the Throne may, therefore, be always assured of India's heart-felt devotion and loyal welcome. Apart, however, from his hereditary claims on our loyalty and gratitude, His Royal Highness has special personal claims on our esteem and admiration. His is a charming personality that captivates the hearts of all wherever he goes. With the natural gifts with which he is endowed by nature, his noble mien, his charming simplicity and winning smile, his silver tongue, his kindly eyes of sympathy, and his gentleness of bearing—he combines the chivalry of a sportsman, the valour of a soldier, the wisdom of an ambassador, and the discernment of a statesman. (Cheers.) No wonder that people of all parts of the Empire vie with one another in honouring and idolising him. Will India lag behind in this healthy rivalry? She has not so far and we feel sure she will not. In connexion with the reception of His Royal Highness it is distressing to have to refer to, but we cannot ignore the fact that there is a section of our countrymen who have chosen to stand aloof and to refrain from participating in the celebrations of the Royal visit. It is however a great consolation to us that even this non-co-operating section of the population has given repeated assurances that it is constrained to take up this attitude with a view merely to making a demonstration of its political views and that it is not its intention to show the slightest disrespect to His Royal Highness for whom personally it has great esteem and regard.

This is not the occasion to enter into a discussion of the causes of the discontent of the party of non-co-operators. Nor is it the occasion to analyse the present situation. The draft address has, however, discreetly given expression to the legitimate aspirations of the people that India should soon take her proper place as an equal partner in the British Commonwealth of

* That the Address of Welcome to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales be adopted.

[Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy.]

Nations and that she should be a Self-governing Dominion under the æges of the British Crown. That is the goal which all of us have in view, the Government as well as the people, the co-operators as well as the non-co-operators. The difference is only one of ways and means, and it is to be only devoutly wished that all that statesmanship can devise and all that sagacity on the part of the leaders of the people can accomplish will be done to remove these differences on what are after all matters of minor importance and that peace and harmony will be restored in the country before His Royal Highness leaves her shores. (Cheers.)

Mr. President: The question is:

'That the Address of Welcome to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales be accepted.'

The motion was adopted.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON STANDING ORDERS.

Mr. President: The Assembly will now proceed to the election of Members to serve on the Select Committee on Standing Orders. Thirteen Members have been nominated and the ballot paper has been prepared which will now be circulated to all Members. I wish to draw the attention of the Members to the fact that the ballot is held under the system known as the single transferable vote and that Members must place figure (1) as against the candidate for whom they may express their first preference, figure (2) opposite the next one and so on. Under the rules the number to be elected is seven. The total number of the Committee is nine. The rules provide that ex-officio the President and the Deputy President shall be Members and it now remains to elect the other seven.

(The election then commenced.)

Mr. President: The result of the election will be announced at the close of to-day's proceedings this evening, or, if the proceedings are brought to an end early, at the beginning of to-morrow's proceedings.

THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member): Sir, when I moved the motion* regarding this Bill in the Assembly on the 30th September two very pertinent points were raised by my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour. We have examined those points and the difficulties which he pointed out, and we do not think that they are in any way insuperable.

At the same time we think that it would be advisable to have the Bill carefully examined by a small committee, a Select Committee of this Assembly, on which the legal profession should be adequately represented. I do not therefore propose to press my motion that the Bill should be taken into further consideration, and hope that the Assembly will accept the motion

* 'That the Bill further to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, by providing for the issue by Courts in British India of commissions for the examination of witnesses to such Courts of Princes and Chiefs in India as are notified in this behalf, and for the execution by Courts in British India of commissions issued by such Courts, as passed by the Council of State, be taken into consideration'.

which will be made by my Honourable colleague, Dr. Sapru, to refer the Bill to a Select Committee where these difficulties can be very much better examined in detail.

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (Law Member) : Sir, I beg to move :

'That the Bill be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Sir William Vincent, Dr. H. S. Gour, Rao Bahadur C. Krishnaswamy Rao, Mr. K. C. Neogy, Mr. P. P. Ginwala, Sir D. P. Sarvadhikary and the Mover.'

I have taken the consent of all.

Mr. President : Amendment moved :

'That the Bill be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Sir William Vincent, Dr. H. S. Gour, Rao Bahadur C. Krishnaswamy Rao, Mr. K. C. Neogy, Mr. P. P. Ginwala, Sir D. P. Sarvadhikary, and the Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru.'

The question I have to put is :

'That that amendment be made in the original motion.'

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President : The question is that the amended motion be carried.

The motion was adopted.

THE DELHI UNIVERSITY BILL.

Mr. H. Sharp (Education Secretary) : Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce :

'A Bill to establish and incorporate a unitary teaching and residential University at Delhi.'

The principle underlying this Bill needs, I think, very little recommendation from me. The idea of a unitary university of this nature is familiar to us. It was put forward as an important point of policy in the Government of India's Resolution on Education of February 1913. It was supported by the Calcutta University Commission, and was regarded by them as possibly the ultimate solution of the problem of higher education in Bengal. It is an obvious policy to pursue in India, where, speaking of British India alone, we have 250 million inhabitants, and at present only 11 universities. I think, Sir, that I may say that it is also obvious that Delhi is a suitable centre for a university of this nature. We have here in this north-west portion of India three provinces with 30 million inhabitants, and one university to cater for them all. We have in Delhi itself already four colleges. Again, whatever proposals may be in contemplation by the University of the Punjab in view of the recommendations of the Calcutta University Commission, surely those proposals will be facilitated by the formation of a university here, because the problem will thereby be simplified. Last but not least, it is, I think impossible to conceive of this great capital city of India, this Imperial City, without the necessary adjunct of a university.

Nor, Sir, is this proposal for a university at Delhi by any means a new one. The importance of higher education in this city was an integral part of the original scheme for the removal of the Capital to Delhi, and from the beginning land was set apart in the New City for this purpose. The first proposal was for the establishment of a Government college. But the Government of India held their hand in this matter, partly because they awaited the recommendations of the Calcutta University Commission, and partly because they could not be oblivious of the fact that privately-managed Colleges in Delhi were increasing both in number and also in strength, and it would hardly have been fair to leave them out of consideration in a scheme of improvement. When the recommendations of that Commission appeared, we held a conference of the representatives of the local colleges in Delhi at the beginning of December, 1919, and I think I may say that this idea of a unitary university for Delhi was accepted not only with unanimity but also with enthusiasm. Since then a small sub-committee has been working out the details.

This is not the time to consider the details of the Bill. All I need say is that it follows, generally speaking, the provisions of the Dacca and Lucknow Acts, with certain changes to suit local conditions and requirements.

There is only one matter to which I need draw attention and that is clause 45 of the Bill. This is the usual clause which is now inserted in all university measures, for the removal of those difficulties, which are experienced while a university is beginning, so to speak, to get under way. In the present instance it has been drawn rather wider than usual. The reason is that we have here colleges in existence which are working in their own way; and the intention is not to force them suddenly, prematurely, and in a manner that would dislocate their work, into the new organization of a university. We should prefer, and they, I am sure, would also prefer, to see this made a gradual process. Furthermore, some delay is inevitable in getting the university to work, so to speak, at full steam. The buildings will have to be erected, and money will have to be provided. It is proposed therefore to pursue in the immediate future a transitory scheme, a provisional scheme, which will gradually lead up to the full ideal of this university as set forth in the other provisions of the measure. In due course, in order to realise this modest beginning, a modest demand will be placed before this Assembly which will enable such a beginning to be made, so that the colleges can gradually adapt themselves to the conditions ultimately laid down for them. If I may borrow a metaphor from the automobile we propose in fact that the university should begin with its gears in first speed.

Mr. President : The question is :

‘ That leave be given to introduce a Bill to establish and incorporate a unitary teaching and residential University at Delhi ’.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. H. Sharp : Sir, I introduce the Bill.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday, the 17th January, 1922.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY,

Tuesday, 17th January, 1922.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock.
Mr. President was in the Chair.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

WAITING ROOMS AT MAHESHKHUNT.

195. Rai Bahadur Lachmi Prasad Sinha: (a) With reference to my Question No. 488,* dated the 21st September, 1921, will the Government be pleased to furnish me with the necessary information if available by this time?

(b) Will the Government be further pleased to state if any action has yet been taken in connection with the construction of a waiting room at Maheshkhunt, Bengal and North-Western Railway station, in consideration of the growing inconvenience to the public?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) There is no first and second class waiting room at the Maheshkhunt station. It is recognised that they would be a convenience to the travelling public, but owing to shortage of funds it has not so far been found possible to provide them. The Agent has been asked to keep the matter in view.

A statement is being sent to the Honourable Member which gives the information relating to the number of first and second class tickets issued and collected at the stations between Katihar and Barauni Junctions during the period October, 1920, to September, 1921.

(b) The Honourable Member is referred to the reply given to part (a) above.

STRIKE ON EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

196. Rai Bahadur Lachmi Prasad Sinha: (a) Is the Government aware of a general strike of the drivers and other employés of the East Indian Railway on the Loop and Chord Lines in December last?

(b) Is the Government aware of a cessation of train services on those lines causing great inconvenience and hardship to the general public?

* Vide Legislative Assembly Debates, Volume II, page 681.

(c) Has the Government instituted any inquiry into the nature and origin of the said strike ?

(d) And, if so, will the Government be pleased to lay on the table a full statement connected therewith ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) The strike was reported. It was not a general strike, only the Indian Locomotive running and menial staff at certain stations ceased work.

(b) The Government is aware that the number of trains from the coal area had to be reduced and the night running between Sahebgunj and Bhagalpur was suspended for a time owing to the discovery at two places of attempts at Sabotage. The strikers have since resumed work at all stations and the normal working of trains including goods trains over the Grand Chord Line, has been introduced.

(c) and (d). The original cause of the trouble at Jhajha was due to a rumour that an Indian fireman, who, according to the information at the disposal of the Railway Board, met his death by striking his head against an overbridge while shovelling coal, had been murdered. The strike was prolonged by a dispute whether it should constitute a break in service and sympathetic strikes followed. The terms of settlement were that inquiry should be held into the alleged grievances by a Committee composed of Railway officers and representatives of employees. This inquiry is being held.

REDUCTION IN TRAIN SERVICES ON BENGAL AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

197. Rai Bahadur Lachmi Prasad Sinha : (a) Is the Government aware of a reduction in the number of train services on the Bengal and North-Western Railway since December last ?

(b) If so, has the Government taken cognisance of the great inconvenience caused thereby to the general public ?

(c) Is it a fact that the said reduction in the number of train services has been mainly due to the shortage of coal store ?

(d) Do Government propose issuing instructions to the said Company with a view to the avoidance of such state of affairs in future ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : The answers to items (a), (b) and (c) are in the affirmative.

(d) Steps have been taken to improve the coal supplies to the Bengal and North-Western Railway and it is hoped that a situation similar to that which forms the subject of the question will not arise again.

THE CIVIL MARRIAGE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division : Non-Muhammadan) : Sir, I rise to move :

'That the Bill further to amend Act III of 1872 be referred to a Select Committee consisting of :

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru,
 The Honourable Sir William Vincent,
 Mr. P. E. Percival,
 Mr. J. P. Cotelingam,
 Mr. N. M. Joshi,
 Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din, and the Mover.'

I wish, Sir, with your permission, to add the names of the following gentlemen, whose permission I have taken, to the list already published :

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar,
 Mr. J. N. Mukherjee,
 Rai Bahadur Pandit Jawahir Lal Bhargava,
 Rai Bahadur S. P. Bajpai,
 Babu Baidyanath Prashad Singh,
 Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail,
 Mr. Wali Mahomed Hussanally,
 Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy,
 Rai Girish Chandra Nag Bahadur,
 Mr. N. M. Samarth,
 Munshi Iswar Saran,
 Mr. M. K. Reddi, and
 Mr. P. P. Ginwala.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : I rise to a point of order. May I know whether this motion to refer the Bill to a Select Committee commits the Assembly to the principle of the Bill, because on that depends my attitude upon the matter.

Mr. President : I will first put the motion as it appears on the paper before the House :

The question is :

'That the Bill further to amend Act III of 1872 be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru, the Honourable Sir William Vincent, Mr. Percival, Mr. Cotelingam, Mr. Joshi, Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din and the Mover.'

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : I wish to know, Sir, whether by referring this Bill to the Select Committee the Assembly is committed to the principle of the Bill.

Mr. President : In the case of this motion, as in the case of the motion that the Bill be now considered, the Assembly must be held to be committed to the principle of the Bill. As the Honourable Member is aware, I have now drawn a distinction between these two motions and the motion to circulate for eliciting opinion. In the latter case the Assembly is not held to be committed to the principle, but in the two former cases it is clear that the intention of the Standing Orders is that the Assembly shall be committed, if and when a motion of this character is passed.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : That being the conclusion to which the Assembly will be committed in the event of this motion being carried, I beg to oppose this motion. Sir, I may confess to a feeling of instinctive dislike to this measure which is now before the House. In these matters, affecting the society of my countrymen, whether they be Hindus or Mussalmans or Parsis or the other communities whom this Bill seeks to affect, one cannot be too careful in proposing measures which are likely to affect those ancient civilizations. Sir, marriage with us, Hindus, is a sacrament; we look upon it as a sacred religious tie. It is an indissoluble tie. By taking a wife you take a partner in your religious ceremonies. Who does not remember the saying of Janaka to Rama when he gave Sita to Rama :

'Eam Seeta mama suta saha-dharma-chari taba.'

She becomes the Saha-dharma-chari, one who partakes in the religious ceremonies which are enjoined on the everyday life of the Hindu. It is not right that any attempt should be made to make marriage with the Hindus, Mussalmans or Parsis a mere mockery. Sir, to allow this Bill to pass into law would convert marriage into a mere figure of speech, into a mere mockery. It would be degrading that sacred institution, dragging it down from the high pedestal which it now occupies in our society, dragging it down to degraded depths. Sir, I fail to see how any person who professes to believe in the ancient religious faiths of this land, can come forward and say that you can have a marriage in the way in which this Bill proposes to make it. Sir, the history of this measure is too well-known. It was to give liberty to persons who did not believe in the various religious faiths enumerated in the Act of 1872, in order to contract a valid marriage that the Act of 1872 was passed. Sir, Dr. Gour, in a very learned, exhaustive and able address, which he has prepared and circulated to the Members, has let the cat out of the bag. If you turn to page 27 of this pamphlet which he has circulated to us,—in dealing with the objections taken to the measure, he points out that the first objection on every lip is that the Bill is opposed to the Hindu Dharma, and that in the first place the Bill is primarily intended for those who have renounced these Dharmas. Sir, if really this Bill is intended for the benefit of persons who have renounced the Hindu Dharma, what necessity is there for a measure of this sort? It is for them the existing Act was passed. He confuses the issues by saying that in an altogether different matter the Privy Council held that Brahmos did not cease to be Hindus simply because they became Brahmos. That is quite true. But they certainly ceased to belong to the Hindu religion. To belong to the Hindu community is one thing; to belong to the Hindu religion is altogether a different thing. Marriage is part of the religion of every Hindu. Now, the object of this measure is to take away the very circumstances for which the Act of 1872 was passed, i.e., it was passed merely for persons who did not profess the Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Muhammadan, Parsi, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion, and to legalise certain marriages the validity of which was doubtful. Those religious faiths were excluded, because according to each of those religious faiths they had particular forms of marriage to which the religion attached great consequence, and that was why the legislature of those days took care to say :

'We shall not travel beyond the recognised forms of marriage; we can only provide a form of marriage for those people who have not got any established form of marriage.'

Sir, it has been said that if you do not provide liberty of action to individuals who seek to enjoy liberty it will not be acting rightly. Liberty is one thing; licence is altogether a different thing. Sir, if you want to belong to a society, if you believe in a religion to which you are attached, surely liberty does not and cannot be converted into licence. You have to conform to the essential tenets which are laid down for your guidance. What is the objection? The objection taken is that those who want to resort to this Act have to make a declaration before the Registrar that they do not profess any of the faiths mentioned therein, and they say 'we have to tell a lie, or rather tell that which is not true, in making that declaration.' Is that so? Are you really telling an untruth? Are you really telling a thing that is not true when you say that you do not believe in that religion, and that you do not belong to that religion? What is religion? What is the Hindu religion or the Muhammadan religion? If you take the case of the Hindus for instance, what is it that the wife is taken for? It is not merely for the association of man and woman; she is taken for the purposes of being a partner in his every day religious life. She has to prepare the Agni or fire in the House. Sir, on the marriage day the Agni or fire is lit and it is carefully prepared and preserved and kept, and she represents that fire.

I quite sympathise with those who do not believe in it. I do not want to fetter their liberty of action. But, Sir, those of us who believe in it, cannot own them as persons belonging to the Hindu faith if they do not believe in these essentials. There are essentials and non-essentials, and this is essential, and therefore we consider this measure will greatly interfere with our religion. All that one has to do, according to the proposed measure, is to go and appear before a Registrar and sign a declaration to the effect: 'I take you as my wife, and you take me as your husband', and the marriage is over, and we are to take them into our house-holds! Well, Sir, we have got a joint family system, we have got to worship a common God, where we have got to worship a family Devasthan or Dharmasthan, where we have got peculiar laws of inheritance, where my sons will be entitled to inherit to my brother or my remote cousins; they not only inherit my property, but the property of my brother or some remote ancestor of mine. He becomes a member of the joint family; he is entitled to take part in the family worship. Not only that, Sir, this woman who is so taken as wife is to associate with me in all the religious ceremonies and in the shraddhas to be performed by me in honour of my ancestors. I certainly think it is ridiculous. It is simply trying to force the hands of society in the name of liberty. Sir, I really think this is a dangerous measure. No doubt, the legislature has intervened wherever the customary laws are such that do not appeal to a feeling or sense of humanity such as for instance, in the case of widow re-marriage, the abolition of Sati and such other cases, where no doubt although these customs may have been based upon religious sentiment, they were not based upon really essential matters of religion. The legislature has chosen to intervene, and has intervened, but there is a limit to legislative interference in matters affecting the religion of the people, and this has been carefully recognised by the British legislature all along. Sir, one of the reasons why the British Government, although it is a foreign Government, made itself popular in this country, was because it carefully abstained from interfering with the religious habits, usages, customs and essential sentiments of the people. Therefore, I really see no need for this measure. Where is the evil, what is the great crying evil for which you are making provision by this measure? Has there been a demand? What is this neo-Hinduism which is now being started? If it is a new religion, by all means let it come into existence, let a custom grow up, and by custom you can recognise the validity of such marriages. Sir, for a handful of people who want to enjoy licence in the name of liberty, legislature should not intervene, it should not make inroads like this. It is said, Sir, this measure is purely optional. Now what is option? Marriage is optional as a matter of fact, although no doubt it is compulsory amongst us, but this sacrament is not imposed upon all people. Unless you wish to become a Sanyasi or lead the life of Brahmacharya all your life, this sacrament is imposed upon all people. It is a compulsory sacrament in the case of women and in the case of Sudras. Sir, this is not option at all with us. To go through a marriage is an essential thing, and if you attempt to interfere with the existing state of things you will be introducing a stranger into the joint family, you will be introducing complications in the laws of inheritance, and you will be disturbing the peace and harmony which now prevails in the Hindu families. Already, Sir, there are various other matters which tend to create the disruption of the joint family system, but they are all outside influences; so why make these influences work inside the family by giving the status of membership in the family to a person who does not become really a member of it, and it will be a very dangerous step indeed. Sir, with us the wife, after the religious ceremonies, obtains the gotra of the husband. Till her marriage she retains the gotra of the father, but after marriage she gets the gotra of the husband. Now, Sir, are we to believe that this woman so taken before a Registrar— he may be a Muhammadan Registrar for the matter of that, or he may be a Christian Registrar,—without any religious ceremonies at all obtains the gotra of her husband? Do you believe in gotras or not? If you do, then how do you make this transference? Is it by a mere word of mouth of the Registrar? The whole thing is ludicrous. Sir, I am really advocating the cause from the point of view of a Hindu who believes in his religion, and not from the point of view of a man who does not believe in his religion. There are people who no doubt do not believe in their religion. But, Sir, you are making this law which will introduce numerous complications in the joint Hindu families. Now-a-days youngsters lose their respect for their elders, even for their parents, and if you make marriage an option, then what will happen? An impressionable youth will take a fancy for a woman and go through this formality of marriage and the next day he comes into the family and says 'Here is my wife, Papa.' Is my wife to treat that woman as her daughter-in-law? Are my sisters to treat her as a member of the household? Is she to enter my household and take part in the religious ceremonies? All these will follow, and that woman will come and take part in the Shradhas which I shall perform for the benefit of my ancestors, and she may obtain a decree for mandamus or injunction from courts enforcing her rights. Surely, Sir, I cannot give my vote to such a measure. I may be blind, but, Sir, in these matters one has to be blind. You cannot be too careful in these matters. I cannot afford to see our homes invaded by these foreign ideas. Let us keep them out. Let us not be tempted into these things, for these will be the thin end of the wedge. After all, I quite realise that if really there is a necessity for such a measure as this, I will be only too glad to join hands with my friends. But surely our forms of marriage have adapted themselves to the customs prevailing in the various provinces. Different communities have adopted different forms. In my province, the Marawa has got his own form of marriage, the Malayalees or the west coast people have got their own forms of marriage. Every community has got some form of marriage or other which always takes the part of a religious ceremony. Sir, to make marriage merely a matter of form, to go before a Registrar as if you register a document, is ridiculous, for we are taking a partner, a religious partner, for our every day ceremonies to be a member of our household. I do not think, Sir, it is necessary to labour the point. No doubt, it may be convenient for persons who believe in modern ideas and who do not believe in the religion to which they really belong, but it will not mean taking a saha-dharma, it is merely taking a woman for a man. For these reasons, Sir, I oppose this measure.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member) : Sir, I will not detain this Assembly for more than a few moments as I only wish to explain what the attitude of the Government of India vis-a-vis this measure is. The Bill was very carefully considered both before and after the receipt of the opinions of the Local Governments on it, and the Government of India, fully realising the danger of weighing down either one side of the balance or the other by the official vote, have decided to follow the policy which I understand is approved by the last speaker and to be absolutely neutral in a matter which really affects the non-official Members of this Assembly more directly than it does the Members of the Government. The fact is that in a matter of this kind by which religious sentiment is largely affected, Government cannot be too careful of its attitude.

It should not use any influence it may have in this Assembly on one side or the other. There is already a large non-official majority in this Assembly, and there are many Members fully capable of expressing the views both of Hindus and Muhammadans. This attitude of Government is the more necessary, I think, in view of the considerable opposition which this Bill has received from certain sections of the community. I do not mean to say that the opinions received have been uniform and all of them hostile, because that would be an inaccurate representation of the facts. I have now seen three Bills of this character introduced into this Assembly and its predecessor and in my judgment—purely a personal opinion—the opposition to this Bill is distinctly less marked than it was in the case, say, of Mr. Basu's Bill or even in the case of Mr. Patel's Bill. At the same time, there is this feeling among the orthodox

[Sir William Vincent.]

Hindus against it so well represented by that radical in politics and conservative in social matters, the last speaker (Mr. Rangachariar). There is also a great feeling of opposition, as I understand, from certain orthodox Muhammadans on this point. But there are many here far more competent to speak on that subject than I am. Apart from these questions I must say, that if this Bill is referred to a Select Committee, I myself foresee considerable difficulties—I do not suggest that they are insuperable difficulties—in regard to questions of inheritance and other enactments already on the Statute Book, for instance the Indian Christian Marriage Act, the provisions of which I think the Honourable Mover will admit would certainly have to be examined in conjunction with the provisions of this Bill. It is not, however, for this reason, but on the general grounds to which I have referred that Government has decided, whatever be the personal views of individual Members of the Government, that the Members of the Executive Council should observe absolute neutrality in the discussion of this Bill.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind : Muhammadan Rural) : What about the official Members ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : If the Honourable Member had let me finish, I was just going to tell him that official Members, other than Members of the Executive Council, will have complete freedom to speak and vote as they like (Hear, hear). The Members of the Viceroy's Executive Council will however not take any part in this debate or in any division for the reasons which I have already given.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated : Labour Interests) : Sir, it was a matter of great disappointment and surprise to me that an Honourable Member of this House, who is generally so reasonable, should have confessed that in this matter he shuts his ears to any arguments but insists upon being blind and depends only upon faith. Sir, let us in a few remarks see what objections he made against this Bill. In the first place he talked a good deal about the Hindu religion, the tenets of the Hindu religion and the essentials of the Hindu religion. But he did not mention which are the essentials of Hindu religion, and what is absolutely necessary to make a man a Hindu. I have not yet heard from any one a definition of the essentials of the Hindu religion. Let any one do that. Personally, I believe any man who calls himself a Hindu is a Hindu, and must be considered a Hindu. Beyond this I do not see any practical limit to be placed upon the liberty of a man in his religious tenets. I know something about the Hindu religion. I have read something of the Vedas, the Puranas and the Smritis. But are they followed to-day in practice by any one? Are people following the tenets of the Vedas, the tenets of the Smritis and the Puranas as regards their profession? What was the profession of a Brahman? Is he still following his profession? He calls himself a Hindu and a Brahman all the same. Therefore, it is so very difficult to find out which are the essentials of Hindu religion. My Honourable friend referred also to the status of marriage in the eyes of Hindu religion. He said it was a sacrament, something holy. Sir, I consider marriage to be holy—very holy—the holiest of the holies. But I cannot see the difference between an oath taken before a Registrar and an oath taken before a priest. What is, after all, the Hindu form of marriage? What do they say there? As far as I know, they say the same thing, vis., 'we take each other as husband and wife and we shall be faithful to each other'. That is all. I do not see the difference between the oath taken before a Registrar and that taken before a priest. Sir, this is as regards the marriage itself.

Then he brought forward several arguments regarding the disturbance of the Hindu society. I should like the Honourable Members who are against this Bill to tell me in clear words how they can stop inroads of the other civilisations upon Hindu society, how they can stop marriages between Hindus and Christians, Hindus and Parsees, and Hindus and Muhammadans. Have they stopped these marriages? Hundreds of these marriages have taken place. Sir, if my Honourable friend will take a census of Hindus, Muhammadans and Parsees who have married Christians, I am quite sure their number can be counted by hundreds. (Several Honourable Members: 'No, no'.) Sir, it is a matter of fact, and we need not say here, 'No, no'. Let any one come forward with a census report and prove that I am wrong. (An Honourable Member: You do it.) I have made my statement. Those who contradict me, it is their business to show by census report that I am wrong. (Mr. W. M. Hussanally: You show by census report that you are right.) It is not my duty. I know myself several dozens of people who have married English girls, and there is no difficulty in showing that there are several hundreds of people in India who have married outside the Hindu religion. (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Are they happy?) Sir, my Honourable friend asks me: 'Are they happy?' I ask him in return: 'Are all the Hindus who have married in the orthodox style happy?' (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: 'Yes'.) I say: 'No'. I contradict your statement. I have seen husbands suing their wives in courts. It is a fact which cannot be denied. I have seen wives also suing their husbands. Sir, these are facts. Can my Honourable friend who is a lawyer, say that there are no suits in the law courts in India by wives against their husbands and by husbands against their wives? (Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: 'No'.)

I am surprised to hear the Honourable Member say that there have been no suits. Sir, these suits are heard of several times in the law courts. We cannot say that all orthodox marriages are happy: and if anyone makes that statement, let him stand before the public with that statement. The chief question in my opinion is not whether the marriage is happy or is not happy. The chief question is this. If a young man wants to marry a girl whom he likes and loves, whether the society is going to allow him to marry that girl or not. As a matter of fact, if society does not approve his marriage, he marries the girl: and if he has any spirit, he ought to marry, in spite of all the legal difficulties. Sir, the marriage is not prevented in my opinion. The marriage does take place, but what happens according to the present law is that certain people who believe in the Hindu religion, and who want to call themselves Hindus, have to say on a particular day that they are not Hindus. That is all. These people move amongst Hindu society all the same without any difficulty. I have seen it. But on a particular day they have to say that they are not Hindus. That is the only difference: and what this Bill really seeks is to modify this. If a man wants to call himself a Hindu and still to marry outside the Hindu religion, let him be allowed to marry. There is nothing in the Bill beyond this. We do not as a matter of fact want encouragement by the law in these cases. As I have said, marriages are not prevented by the present law. We only seek an amendment of the law to enable the man to say that he is a Hindu. I therefore feel that the objections which have been raised against this Bill are merely the outcome of prejudice and blindness, as my Honourable friend admitted. He talked several things about liberty and license. He said, if a Hindu marries a Christian, it is license. I do not believe it is so. I do not think any people in the world will believe that if a Hindu young man and a Christian girl live together as husband and wife in faithful wedlock, they can be called by the world 'licentious'. It was certainly very bold and very hardy of my Honourable friend to have applied that word to a marriage of that kind. Then, Sir, he talked of several things,—being a lawyer, he talked of succession and other similar things. There are difficulties about succession, but they can be overcome, as the Honourable Home Member said; they are not insuperable, and they can be considered. He said, suppose a Hindu marries a Christian, then the Christian girl will come into the family and will insist upon being a member of that family and being called a daughter-in-law or a daughter. Is it really so? Can the girl compel the mother-in-law to call her a daughter-in-law or a daughter? She cannot. You can sue for partition, and I am quite sure you will secure a partition. Nobody can force other people to call them by particular names or to treat them as sons and daughters. It is a matter of love and affection, not of compulsion at all. Then as regards their being members of Hindu society and joining in ceremonies, Sir, I for one do not object to the Hindu society or any other society boycotting and ostracising all those people who do not follow the orthodox tenets of their religion. They are at liberty to do so. Those who believe in reform are not afraid of boycotts, are not afraid of ostracism. They are prepared for it. But what they seek is this,—do not place in their way legal difficulties; do not make it impossible for them honestly to marry in their own way. That is what they expect. That is what they want from the law, and this is what this present measure seeks. Sir, there is another thing. If some people think that it is very difficult to secure such marriages in India, it is not so. I have already mentioned that marriages between Hindus and non-Hindus do take place without Dr. Gour's Bill. Moreover, as the Honourable Mover of this Bill has said in his pamphlet, there are two States in this country where such marriages are legalized, Baroda and Indore. How can you prevent inroads on your society when there are two States in the country ready to legalize such marriages? A man can run to Baroda or Indore, stay there for a fortnight, and get the marriage legalized. (A voice: He need not stay there at all.) Therefore, the argument that inroads on society are to be prevented by opposing this Bill really holds no water. You cannot prevent inroads of other civilizations upon your society. What you can do is to oppress a few individuals. I agree with the Honourable Mover that this Bill is intended only for a few people. I agree with him entirely. I am quite sure, that society, as it is constituted to-day, will not go in for marriages of this kind in very large numbers, but is it wrong of the Legislature to do justice to a few people,—even to one man? That is the question I want to ask. Why should a few people be tyrannized, why should they be oppressed, if we can prevent their being oppressed? Sir, as regards the attitude of Government, I am also very much surprised. The Government in the country is there to protect the subjects, be they a few individuals or large numbers, from any kind of difficulties in their way, from any kind of oppression and tyranny, whether from society or from any other organisation. If a few individuals holding reformed views on social matters want their liberty of action to be safeguarded, is it not the duty of Government to do it? Is it really right for them to say, we shall adopt a neutral attitude, we shall stand aloof? Is it really right for Government? Is Government going to function only in those matters in which their own interests are concerned? Let us have a clear definition of the policy of Government. I do not think this attitude of being neutral is really a neutral attitude. It clearly means that they want to oppose this reform. They do not want to give this opportunity to those individuals who want it. Otherwise I cannot see, I cannot understand a Government, that has to take its share in the legislation, saying that they cannot take part as Members of the Legislature. The Executive Government is a part of the Legislature. They ought to take sides on every occasion. If they say: 'we shall not speak on particular subjects', I think they fail in their duty. I will not mind their opposing this Bill. Let them oppose it if they have the conscience and the courage to oppose, but I cannot understand a Government which is an integral part of the constitution saying that they stand neutral.

Lastly, Sir, I hope the Members of this Assembly will not follow the example of my Honourable friend from Madras and shut their ears to all arguments in this matter. Let them hear the debate and decide the matter on its own merits. //

Mr. S. C. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars : Landholders) : Sir, I have listened with some care to the arguments that have been advanced by my Honourable friend, Mr. Joshi, in support of the measure of Dr. Gour. I have also listened carefully to what has been stated by my Honourable friend, Rao Bahadur Rangachariar. I am sorry, my friend, Mr. Joshi, has gone the length of speaking of Rao Bahadur Rangachariar as blindly adhering to his faith in his opposition to this measure. I would ask my Honourable friend, Mr. Joshi, to consider whether or not it behoves him, as also the Government and the other Members of the Assembly,—to consider whether it behoves any one who marries a girl from love—a girl not belonging to his community and not belonging to his religion—to inflict his presence and the presence of his wife upon the members of his family; if it is right on his part to lead his wife to his family residence—if it is right on his part to insist upon his or his children inheriting to the members of his family or to his gotra: for instance from an uncle who dies without issue—from a maternal or paternal uncle who dies without issue. Any measure that is devised should be comprehensive enough to take cognizance of these important collateral considerations. Dr. Gour has been very clever in putting forth this measure. Probably he has gone on the principle of asking for more than can be granted on the assumption that what you grant will be conceded in a reasonable measure. I have just learnt from the Honourable the President of the Assembly that the Assembly will stand committed to the principle of this Bill if it is referred to a Select Committee. On the considerations which I have just now suggested, I would respectfully request all the Members of the Assembly to reject the measure at once and to insist upon the deviser of this measure taking into consideration all the collateral results of a measure such as this. I have no objection to an Indian being allowed—and perhaps he should be allowed—to marry any girl that he fancies. It is not reasonable on the part of the Legislature to insist upon his coming forward to tell a lie and say that he is not a member of any particular faith and that therefore he should be allowed to take advantage of Act III of 1872. The existing law is undesirable and ought certainly to be changed; some kind of liberty should be granted to people who want to marry girls of their own choice. We belong to a cosmopolitan society. We have been in contact with Muhammadans in the first instance and are in contact with Christians now; and, if we are really to constitute one Empire, reasonable opportunities for marrying, for instance, members of other communities ought to be granted to us. I am therefore not in principle opposed to the measure at all. I like the measure. A measure such as this ought to find favour with the Assembly. I only wish that precautions—necessary precautions—should be taken. To say that it is blindness on the part of anybody to come forward and say that the Hindu family, strictly as such, should be organised according to the essentials of the Hindu religion: or to come forward and say that the Hindu religion has no essentials, is I think to show perverseness of judgment.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Tell us what they are.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Certainly I can mention one or two of the essentials of the Hindu religion. He is not a Hindu who does not believe in the transmigration of the human soul; he is not a Hindu who does not believe in the law of Karma. Any one who comes forward to say that these are not some of the essentials of Hindu religion is altogether ignorant,—and this ignorance is crass ignorance—of the essentials of the Hindu faith. One cannot pose as a reformer without bending one's mind to the consideration of the essentials of the Hindu religion. I am a Hindu. If I do believe that I hold a particular relationship with my God and with kindred spirits in nature: if I do not confine myself merely to my physical existence: if I feel that I have had a previous existence and that my future existence will depend upon the present exercise of my will: that is merely the doctrine of free will as believed in by Hindus, and I think it is worthy of some special consideration. I believe that I have been given a free will and it is by virtue of that free will that I have created my present Karma; my present arises out of my past: and the manner in which I exercise my free will at the present time will be responsible for my future. It is not a Hindu belief that it is by chance that a Hindu is born in a particular family: his belief is that one's situation in a family is the result of the relationships that he has held in the past: and a great deal of sanctity does attach to the Hindu ideal of family life. Rao Bahadur Rangachariar is perfectly right when he says that ancient civilizations should not be invaded or encroached upon. But individuals might reasonably be allowed to exercise their will as they feel inclined to do; but if they do that, they should be cut off legally from the families to which they have belonged. Any individual so exercising his will should not be entitled to claim what would otherwise have been his share in the family property; he cannot then rightly inherit to those members who do not recognise as good his exercise of will in this matter of marriage. Marriage is a very important tie, a relationship which ought not to be considered so lightly as it has been considered by my Honourable friend, Mr. Joshi. He seeks to pour ridicule on all those who take opposite views; but I am afraid he only shows shortsightedness, which is in itself worthy of ridicule.

I had one other objection also to this measure that has been put forward, namely, that only those were selected in the first instance for the Select Committee who probably were expected to sympathise with Dr. Gour's view. He has come to be wiser now and has extended the number proposed for the Select Committee. If he will also withdraw the measure and provide for all the necessary safeguards in his Bill to which allusion has been made, I shall be the first to come forward and support his measure.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala (Burma: Non-European): Sir, when my Honourable friend from Madras (Mr. Rangachariar) asked you whether the House would be committing itself to the principles of the Bill, if it was referred to a Select Committee I understood him to imply that if he was not committing himself to anything at all, he would accept the motion moved by my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour. I do not know whether I am more surprised at the orthodoxy of my Honourable friend from Madras, or at the astuteness with which he has thrown this red herring across the track. As regards his committing himself to the principle of the Bill, what does his objection amount to, unless he means that the House hereafter will not have the power to reject the whole Bill? But this he can scarcely mean because we shall have at least two more occasions on which the Bill will come before the House. After the Select Committee finishes its report, the first occasion will arise when the motion is made that that report be taken into consideration. My Honourable friend can then get up and move its rejection or that it should not be taken into consideration. He can again move its rejection at a later stage—when the Bill after amendment has to be passed by the House. If his arguments are powerful enough he may even then succeed in getting the Bill thrown out.

That being the position, Sir, what is the meaning of this orthodoxy?

12 Noon.

That orthodoxy is ready even to go to this extent that it is unwilling that a minority should have its claims examined in Select Committee; for that is what it really comes to. No doubt, Sir, the previous Bills were thrown out because they were defective, and I am sorry to see that the Honourable Mover of this Resolution, has not, in exactly copying Mr. Basu's Bill, taken sufficient care to get over these same difficulties which were pointed out when that Bill was discussed in Council. Nor does the Bill as it stands take account of the objections that were then raised. But for these reasons are we justified in rejecting it altogether? Supposing the Select Committee was able to provide that all the susceptibilities of the most orthodox Hindus would be safeguarded, that no questions of succession would arise involving any religious rites or ceremonies, that no one would suffer by the provisions of the Bill and at the same time that this minority would be helped—would my Honourable friend still object? He must say that he would if he opposes this Bill at this stage. That, I submit, is carrying orthodoxy to I don't know what extent: it simply amounts to fanaticism of some sort which refuses to a minority the right to get its claims examined.

Now, Sir, coming to the merits, what are his objections? First of all, he takes the religious objection and says: supposing my son goes and marries somebody who is not a Hindu and he brings his wife home and says: 'Papa, this is my wife'. Well, if the papa knows his business, he will say: 'that is your wife, but this is my houst and out you go.' Then my Honourable friend says she will noe be able to perform the rites and ceremonies which are required by the Hindu religion. Well, Sir, what does it matter to my Honourable friend? If rites are not observed, if no religious observances are followed, the personal consequences attach to the offender and not to my Honourable friend at all. No doubt his son, by offending against the dictates of his religion, may not go to heaven but that is his business. My Honourable friend, surely, is not going to quarrel with his son because he chooses his own destination after this life, for that is what it really comes to.

Then, Sir, a political objection has been raised. No doubt the Government has so far abstained from taking any active part in questions of this kind, but I submit that by doing so the Government run the same risk as by joining hands with one party or the other. Let me put the question in this form. Supposing those critics of Government who are always bent upon mischief wanted to use this opportunity of creating mischief, is it not possible for them to do so? They will say: 'Look at the Government; here we have been trying our best to bring about unity between the different races of India, to bring about Hindu-Moslem unity; we have been trying to raise the depressed classes and to improve their conditions; but the Government, when we get a chance, a real chance, of fulfilling these objects, interfere from behind with our work of reform.' If people want to create mischief they can create mischief either way, so that I do not think the Government have done wisely by abstaining altogether from taking any part in the passage of this Bill.

There are one or two other points I should like to refer to. I would draw the attention of my Honourable friend from Madras to one particular aspect of the case. Has he examined the Indian Christian Marriage Act? For, if he has, I ask him: has he so much partiality for Christianity that he will allow his son to be legally married to a Christian under that Act, but he will prevent his son from marrying outside his own caste? That is the legal position at the present moment. According to that Act, if one of the parties is a Christian, they can be married under the Civil law before a Registrar. What will my Honourable friend do if a disobedient son were to marry under this Act? He is legally married, and he won't be able to do anything at all. And yet, if his son were to marry another Indian professing the same religion but belonging to another caste, he would raise his voice against the marriage?

Now, let us examine the alternatives. First, immorality; this may be immediately dismissed. Or the parties going to Baroda, Indore or Europe and getting themselves married there. Or, the commission of perjury by the parties declaring that they did not profess any of these religions or in the last resort chartering a ship and getting married outside the territorial limits of India according to English law. Sir, these are the various alternatives, and every one open to objection which a man may adopt to get over the obstacles that we seek to place in his way, or any that even the ingenuity of my Honourable and learned friend can suggest. Therefore, why not take this opportunity which has been offered to us after 10 years of going into the whole question, looking at it from every point of view and devising means by which the Honourable Member's prejudices can be safeguarded while the claims of the minority are looked into.

There is one other point, Sir, and I have done. My Honourable friends in this House and outside have been crying for a Self-governing India. I ask them, does a Self-governing India mean that the minorities, however small they may be, are not at liberty to follow any religion that they like and to marry when they like? Are they not to have any rights? If not, they must confess that they have been talking very loudly about a Self-governing India but that when it comes to a question of principle which puts them to the test, they prove to be utter failures.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : Sir, I rise to oppose this motion on behalf of the Muhammadans of India. I know, Sir, that my friend, Dr. Gour, has put my name down for the Select Committee in the amended list of names which he suggested just now. In the first instance Dr. Gour did not suggest my name, probably because he knew very well my attitude towards the Bill.

Sir, so far as the Muhammadans of India are concerned, I believe not a single Muhammadan favours this Bill at all, because under the Koranic law they can marry only Muhammadans, Christians or Jews and no one else.

I know, Sir, that the Honourable Mover will tell me, as he has said in his pamphlet, that Mr. Ameer Ali is in favour of marriages outside the Koranic law. But I do not think that any Muhammadan would take Syed Ameer Ali as our law-giver. Our law is settled by the Koran and we can only marry in accordance with the tenets of the Koran and in no other way. Therefore the difficulties, so far as Dr. Gour and his friends are concerned chiefly, those English-returned gentlemen who wish to marry European or Christian wives—do not affect us, Muhammadans. But the consequences of this measure, if passed, will be very far-reaching so far as Muhammadan marriages are concerned. For instance, a disobedient son, as Mr. Ginwala calls him, may go one day and marry a prostitute and bring her into the family. Will that be in accordance with the tastes or inclinations of any parent? On the other hand, Sir, if an unfortunate girl, belonging to a respectable family, takes a fancy to a bearer or a chamar or a servant, will that be liked by any parent? I think that if this Bill is passed, it will encourage elopements because, as Indian society stands at present, neither Hindu nor Muhammadan education is far advanced, and young men and women cannot decide under the present circumstances of society and education what is to their good. I understand, Sir, that a law should be for the greatest good of the greatest number; and, may I ask, Sir, if that is aimed at by this measure which has been brought forward by my learned friend, Dr. Gour? He himself admits that this will apply only to a few individuals and perhaps an infinitesimal minority. So far as these gentlemen are concerned, if they wish to renounce the Muhammadan religion they are free to do so and they could then marry any person of their choice. But, Sir, is it right and proper that a Muhammadan should marry against the law of the Koran, and yet insist upon remaining within our fold and the law permit him to do so? That is an impossible situation that a man who calls himself a Mussalman should act directly against the laws of the Koran and yet insist upon remaining a Mussalman.

Mr. N. M. Samarth (Bombay : Nominated Un-Official) : What about Akbar?

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : I was just going to say a few words, Sir, with regard to Akbar. Akbar is said to have married Hindu ladies, but it has been questioned whether he was a Muhammadan. If he was, he was a Royal Prince and an Emperor, and we Mussalmans cannot take him as our law-giver. If he chose to do anything against the principles of the Koran, surely we cannot take him as a law-giver. Our law is settled by the Koran and there it is and we cannot go behind it.

Then, Sir, my friend, Mr. Joshi, said that if a Hindu married outside his caste he should have the remedy of separation and the family should kick him out of their fold, thereby suggesting that a disruption in the family would be brought about by his particular act; Mr. Joshi would thus have a disruption of families rather than keep these young men within bounds. If Baroda and other States have passed a law of this kind enabling anybody to marry anybody, then where is the difficulty? I cannot see any difficulty. Dr. Gour's friends could easily run up to Baroda for a day, get married there and come back the next day into their homes bringing their wives with them. That will solve the difficulty by itself without having recourse to any fresh legislation. Sir, in a matter like this, the Honourable the Home Member tells us that the Government Nominated Official Members, excluding the Members of the Executive Council, are free to vote as they like. I think, Sir, that is not the right attitude which should be adopted by Government. They are nominated by Government, they are officials, and they ought to be neutral in a matter like this along with the Members of Government, because this is purely a case which affects the religion, social customs and manners of the Indians, with which they should have nothing to do.

Then, Sir, one more request that I would make in connection with this matter is, that this proposition be split up into two. First of all, whether this measure should be referred to a Select Committee at all; and, if that is carried, then, the names of the Committee ought to be proposed. I do not know whether you are going to permit the Honourable Mover to add the names that he has now proposed to the list already sent in by him. If not, there is my amendment and another amendment of my friend, Khan Babadur Muhammad Ismail, which has to be proposed instead. Therefore, the best course would be, first of all, to put the motion that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee; and, if it is carried, then the names ought to be proposed.

Mr. Pyari Lal (Meerut Division : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : Unfortunately, Sir, I have also to oppose this Bill. Whatever my own personal opinions in the matter may be, I feel it my duty to voice forth the views of my constituency on this subject. All the different communities and classes of persons that I have come across look upon this measure with dismay. They consider that a measure like this will disintegrate the whole of our social organism as it exists to-day and that it will take away the peace of our homes in villages and towns. The fierce light of the West is beating already very strongly against our cherished institutions, but this might prove to be the proverbial last straw. The reasons advanced by Sir James Stephen in 1868 as regards a measure like this still hold good. The religious feelings and social instincts of the people have not come to that pitch yet when a measure like this could be well put through.

Marriage, as has been observed by Mr. Rangachariar, is a sacrament amongst Hindus, and it has been a potent factor in preserving our individuality as a community hitherto, and Dr. Gour, and people of his way of thinking, should not cut at the root of this cherished institution. I know the Bill is an enabling one only, and not compulsory, but, knowing as I do the prejudices and the radical views of our young men to-day, it will be no less than a calamity if the younger generation are allowed to have their way and send their parents and elders to an early grave. All reforms must grow and not be manufactured as hot-house plants. First, let us have inter-marriages amongst the members of the same caste and its various divisions, and then it will be time enough to extend the reform to the whole community and to all other castes; and then, last of all, to all the religions of the world. You will require at least 50 years to educate the people to this pitch at the present rate of progress amongst us. Some gentlemen have alluded to the existence of such a law in Baroda and Indore. With all respect to those States, I submit that any social rules passed by a handful of people cannot be accepted by people in British India, for we know that the State Council in Indore consists of half a dozen State officials, and if they choose to pass a law for the whole of that State, I do not think it will hold good, particularly for British India, and I do not think it will be obeyed or respected, and, as has been suggested by the last speaker, I think the best thing for those young men, who are so very anxious to be free and take liberty with their institutions, will be to go and live and get married in Indore itself. I doubt very much whether they will be legally entitled to possess the same status here as in that State. Anyhow, on behalf of the Hindu community, I strongly oppose this Bill.

Munshi Iswar Saran (Cities of the United Provinces : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : Sir, had it not been for the abnormal political conditions in the country to-day, this motion of my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, would have excited considerable interest in the country. I am in sympathy with Dr. Gour's motion, but not for his reasons. I am afraid Dr. Gour has made a tactical blunder in delivering a frontal attack on orthodox Hindus, and he need not be surprised if orthodox Hindus are up in arms against him.

Sir, it has been said by the last speaker that 'young men want this measure. I hope he will not consider me young, but I also want this measure to be passed. Might I tell him that not only I, but men much older than myself, are in favour of the motion that this anomaly should be removed and that this reform should be brought about as soon as possible. Sir, might I be permitted to say that I am an orthodox Hindu, and I do hold that the most precious possession of Hindus is their religion. I should be sorry, I should resist, with all the strength I possess, any inroads into Hindu religion. But, Sir, let me tell my friends, with all respect, that to always cry 'religion in danger', is a great mistake. To oppose all reform in the name of religion is really to retard the progress of our own community. What is Hinduism is a question which has been put. I must confess, Sir, at once that it is difficult to give a definition which will be acceptable to people of all shades of opinion in the Hindu community. The Hindu community comprises within its fold a Sanyasi, who rises above the considerations of Mine and Thine, and, at the same time, it comprises within its fold a man who worships a stone and who worships a tree. Both are called Hindus, both would fight if you said that they did not belong to this fold. One Honourable Member has tried to give a definition that Hinduism consists in the belief of the law of Karma and in the law of the transmigration of soul. I submit, Sir, that if he will kindly take into account the various sections of Hindus, not only in one part of the country, but all over, he will find that this definition will not hold good. Sir, it has been said, and it has been said with great force, especially by my Honourable friend from Madras, that these changes the Hindu society cannot accept. Might I tell him that the one reason why Hindu society and the Hindu community have withstood the inroads of ages is the reason that the Hindu society and community, from time to time, have been changing themselves in order to adapt themselves to their changed environments. If the environments change and if you remain unchanged, the result is nothing, but destruction and annihilation. Look at the history of the Hindu community itself. Can you say whether our institutions and customs have remained unaltered, unchanged, unmoved and immovable from times of yore? Look at the book of the Hindu law which I have got in front of me. Custom after custom has come and gone, and it is, I say with great respect, a mistake to suppose that the custom of marriage which we find amongst us to-day is the custom which was with our ancestors, which is hidden from view and about which perhaps there is no recorded history. I say to my Honourable friends; let us not make this system so inelastic, so immovable, that they might break under the strain of changed and changing conditions. Sir, take the actual facts as you find them. There has been a great deal of fling at England-returned people. Sir, happily for myself, my dream of going to England has not been realised, and I hope my friends will not accuse me of being an England-returned Hindu myself. May I cite to them the instance of Nepal, which cannot be said to be under the influence very much of English civilization? What do you find in Nepal? Even to-day a Brahmin can marry a Kshatriya, a Brahmin can marry a Sudra. What have our friends got to say to that? Go to Nepal to-day and you will find a Brahmin who has got a Kshatriya wife. What is that now? It is allowed, it is recognised. Was there any such institution before us, any such custom amongst us in times gone by? If we look carefully into the history of the Hindu community, we find that there were customs like these amongst us before.

Sir, about the changes that are coming into Hindu society, I shall ask my friends to remember the days when a man who went to England was outcasted, every door was banged against him, and he was looked upon as a veritable pariah. What is the condition to-day? People go to England, and when they come back, no objection is raised against them. In fact, you find Association after Association calling upon the community to encourage foreign travel. I am old enough to remember all the subtle, metaphysical, religious arguments that used to be advanced in those days against men who had been abroad, had taken forbidden food, and had lived in forbidden company, coming back and taking part in our religious ceremonies. What is the condition to-day? Men who go to England and come back become respected members of society. You find people going to Railway stations to offer them welcome. You find—and Members of the Government of India will bear testimony to this—appeals, pressing appeals, for scholarships to enable deserving Hindus to go to England. Their parents, their guardians and their relations, all press—I suppose more particularly my Honourable friend, Sir Muhammad Shafi that scholarships should be given to their young hopefuls in order that they might qualify themselves for some of the higher examinations in England. Whenever a reform, a much needed reform, a relief is asked for, there are some people amongst us, for whom I have great respect, and against whom I do not wish to say a word either in anger or in resentment, who are in the habit of shouting from the house tops 'Religion in danger'. Some time after, their opposition vanishes, and, from being opponents of that particular change, they come to be its warm friends and supporters. Sir, what is the condition to-day? We have been told, especially by elderly gentlemen, of the need for keeping our young men under control. As a father myself, I should like to have all my children under my thumb. But such is the sin of this Kali Yuga that youngsters receive education and then decline to be ordered about by their elders. If people are anxious to keep their paternal authority intact, let them go up to Sir Muhammad Shafi and ask him to use his influence with the Government of India to abolish all schools and colleges, so that these young people may remain under the perpetual domination of their parents. But, Sir, having seen this spirit of rebellion, having discovered this spirit of insubordination, such is our foolhardiness that we have started giving education to our girls. Had it not been a provincial subject, Sir Muhammad Shafi would have found it very difficult to satisfy our demands for more girls' schools and girls' colleges throughout the country. If this is going on, I ask you whether you believe that you will be able to dictate to your daughters: 'you shall not marry against my orders. Your choice will depend on my will.' Of course these girl graduates will not be false to their tradition, to their home influence and to the entire civilisation to which they belong. But let me say quite distinctly that we have to revise our notions about paternal authority, and the sooner we do it the better. What is the position then? Our young men are being educated, our young women are being educated. If you keep intact all these bars, the result is that if they want to marry, they will go out of the pale of Hindu society. I ask these Honourable Members: 'Is Hindu society to retain the policy of exclusion or is the policy of inclusion to be the watchword of Hindu society in times to come?' A man goes to England. Let him be outcasted. A Brahmin marries a Kshatriya. Let him be outcasted. Are we to continue our caste scruples or are we to make such modifications in our customs and manners as to suit the changed condition of things? Sir, we are told about marriage being a sacrament. I can assure my Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, that I do not yield even to him in my great respect and admiration for the institution of marriage that we find prevailing amongst us. It will be a very unfortunate day indeed if we change that institution. But I ask him: 'Is it something outrageous that a man should wish to marry according to his own ideas and according to his own tastes? Let Hindu Society say: If you marry, you go out of your caste; you should not expect any social relations with others. But I ask you, in the name of fairness, not to call his children, children born of lawful wedlock, bastards in the eye of law. What you say is this: 'If you want to marry a European, become a Christian; if you want to marry a Muhammadan, become a Muhammadan; but if you remain a Hindu, then we shall deny you the wish of your heart.' My Honourable friend asks: 'How many people want it?' It is true, and I am free to confess it, that a great many people are not clamouring for this reform. But there is most certainly a minority, a minority which is increasing every day, and is it right that you, who are in the majority, should withhold from the minority the relief that I submit it is most clearly entitled to? I, therefore, submit, Sir, that in the name of Hindu religion itself it is necessary that some relief should be given to Hindus in the matter of religion. I agree with my Honourable friend, Professor Shahani, that this Bill will have to be very carefully looked into and many modifications will have to be introduced. But I do earnestly beg the Honourable Members present here not to throw out this Bill at this stage. Let them meet, let them consider, let them introduce as many modifications as they please, but let them not deprive themselves of the chance of considering a very important question at this stage.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: How are we to ensure modifications being introduced?

Munshi Iswar Saran: I should have thought that it was open to the Select Committee, if I am not mistaken, to introduce such modifications in the provisions of the Bill as commended it to the Members of the Select Committee itself.

Sir, one word more, and I have done. As a Hindu, I cannot presume to speak either about Muhammadans or Christians, but I wish certainly to speak about the Hindus. Hindu society, I sincerely hope and trust, is not to be in future the kind of society that it was in the past. Look at the thousands and tens of thousands of Hindus who are going to various colonies. Look at the people who are going to foreign countries. Look at those Hindus, who are settling in other countries. I submit that if you take into consideration all these changed conditions, for the preservation of the Hindu society itself, it is necessary that you should introduce some change in the marriage laws as they exist to-day. I shall only once more appeal to my Honourable colleagues here not to throw out this Bill at this stage. Let them introduce as many modifications as they please. Let them make the Bill as modest as they wish it to be, but to throw the Bill out at this stage would be wrong, and they would be depriving this Assembly of the final chance of expressing its opinion on the Bill as it will emerge from the Select Committee.

Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava (Ambala Division: Non-Muhamadan): Sir, when I was asked this morning by Dr. Gour whether I was willing to have my name added to the Select Committee which he was going to propose, I expressed my opinion that I was opposed to the Bill. But, on his pointing out to me that his desire was that Members of all shades of opinion should constitute the Committee, so that the Bill might be discussed in all its aspects there, I gave my consent to serve on the Committee. But now, as your ruling is that the adoption of this motion would be tantamount to the acceptance of the principle of the Bill, I think I must express my opposition to the Bill, itself. I need not reiterate the grounds which have been given by Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar, but it will be sufficient to say that he has given very cogent and sound reasons, that are convincing to anyone who cares to be convinced. It will be found that general Hindu public opinion is against this Bill, as the Hindu religion looks upon marriage not as a civil contract but as a sacrament, and an indissoluble tie between husband and wife. Mr. Joshi remarked that there were cases of suits between husband and wife for a judicial separation. I wish to point out that amongst Hindus no suit is entertainable for the dissolution of such a tie. Any encroachment or inroad on the institution of marriage in the way contemplated by the Bill is bound, in spite of the wise and discreet attitude of Government, to create resentment and give rise to misgivings in the mind of a large section of the people, Hindu and Muhammadan, which, I should say, should be scrupulously avoided, as far as possible, in these days of political excitement. Besides, this Bill, if passed into law, is sure to create complications on questions of succession, and very difficult questions will arise which it will not be easy to solve. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, I would suggest that the Assembly would be acting wisely in not accepting this motion.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee (Calcutta Suburbs: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, representing as I do a class of the Hindu community, I should like to place before this Assembly my views on the subject now before it: and I will say at once that I stand up with a view to oppose this Bill with all my heart. I have given Dr. Gour my reasons for my attitude, but I should like that the Assembly should also know something about them before coming to a conclusion on the point. Now, Sir, various things have been suggested in the course of the debate, and various propositions have been placed before this Assembly. Now, the first point that strikes me is, what should be the attitude of Government in a matter of this kind? It has been conceded that the Bill does not come from the general mass of the Hindu or Muhammadan population,—that it has emanated, if not from an individual Member of the House, at most from a class which represents, as the Honourable Mover himself admits, a very very small minority, indeed, of the community. The House knows very well that there are various Acts of Parliament which forbid the Indian Legislature, among other matters, to enact laws which interfere with matters of succession, etc., according to the Hindu and Muhammadan religious systems. The effect of a Bill like the present, however, would be to interfere with various matters which, I may say, were kept out of the operation of the Indian Legislature, obviously, for good reasons. This Assembly, as the House knows, does not represent the great mass of the people. The House cannot forget that there are people, literate or illiterate, who in large numbers still choose to be governed by the Hindu faith, having their faith in the principles of their Shastras as also a vast number of Mussalmans who have a firm faith in the injunctions of the Koran. Now, these are not generally speaking the vocal sections of the community: and the first question that presented itself to me was, have we the right, constituted as we are, to come forward with a Bill of this kind, forcing the will of the small minority upon the vast majority? Are we so vain as to think that we have outgrown all the forms of our religion which are observed by the great mass of the people? Have we the right to impose our will upon them? That is the question which we ought to consider. Then, Sir, reference has been made to the excited condition of the country at the present moment. The Assembly knows that there are lots of people who are simply waiting for an opportunity to pounce upon this Assembly, to pounce upon the reforms, and to take them to pieces. They say, you do not represent the people, you do not represent even the great men, the leaders who now pose as the leaders of non-co-operation; they say, you do not represent the great mass of the people. Now, in the Assembly constituted as it is, if a Bill of the character now before it, be passed now, that in all likelihood will give another handle to persons of the intransigent and hostile kind, and they are sure to use it as an argument against the Government, against the legislature, and against the entire system of administration. Therefore, I submit, that inasmuch as the Government had the power to oppose this Bill by not allowing it to be introduced, especially in these troublous times, they should have used that power. Of course, we are grateful to Government for the attitude they have adopted, still I think it would have been better if this Bill had been kept out of the Assembly at the very outset of its career. Then, Sir, as to the question of the oppression of the minority, of course, people who have no settled convictions of their own as regards the essential principles of the Hindu faith will not find much difficulty in driving a coach and four through the Hindu system of social laws, or their religious sentiments and things of that kind. But those who have some conviction will certainly stop to think over the effect that a Bill of this kind will produce upon the community itself. If the matter of the Bill stood as a detached question, and if the Bill did not in its operation affect the constitution of the Hindu, Muhammadan and other communities things would be different. I have no right to speak, however, about the Muhammadan community, because I know very little about Muhammadan sentiment and about Muhammadan canonical laws. But I know it for a fact that there have been many meetings of the orthodox Hindu community all over the country protesting against the Bill. Copies of the proceedings of some of these meetings have been forwarded to me—I hold some of them in my hand as for instance those from Benares and from Calcutta. In Delhi itself there has been one or more meetings and the persons concerned have sent me copies of their Resolutions also, and all of them look upon this Bill with deep concern, and are frightened at its possible consequences. It is certainly not a question of the minority being prevented from proceeding along its old line of action if the Bill be not passed into law. Such a supposition would be an evident mistake, because the Civil Marriage Act (III of 1872), as it stands, gives complete liberty of action to those who wish to marry just as they like. There is therefore no question of oppression at all. It is a misconception to think that the minority have been prevented by the existing law from marrying according to their choice; the only thing they have been asked to do by the present Act is that they should cease to call themselves Hindus, and cease to come under the operation of the Hindu Law, as regards succession, divorce, and certain other matters before they can marry under the Act. In that direction only some necessary restrictions have been imposed upon them, for obvious reasons. Those reasons were stated when Act III of 1872 was passed; they have also been given out from time to time from the official benches in this House as well as from the side of the non-officials whenever this subject of inter-communal civil marriage was brought up for consideration before it. The reason is that social laws and customs are the growth of centuries, and they are a natural growth. In order that a custom or a social law of this kind may be changed, the movement for the change must come from within, and not from without. In other words, in affecting a change in the social laws of a community, the major portion of the community, governed by such laws must come forward and signify expressly or by implication, their assent to, and agreement with the new law which is proposed to be made. That is the point. By the present Bill, it is proposed to introduce principles which are entirely different from those upon which Hindu Law is based. Must we not therefore consider the feelings of the great mass of the people in the matter? Because for certain reasons of our own, we happen to entertain certain views—we may call them advanced views—have we a right to thrust our opinions by force on the mass of the people, and compel them to see things exactly as we see them? It must not be forgotten that if the law of the Bill be passed, it will be Hindu or Muhammadan Law, affecting all Hindus alike.

whether reformed or unreformed : all Muhammadans alike, whether reformed or unreformed. As to whether the Koran can be changed or not by statute law, I am told by my Honourable colleague on my right that it cannot be so changed. Such is the mental attitude of the great mass of the people towards their religious ordinances and the social customs with which they are intertwined. The question has been asked in this House, 'Well, will custom never be changed?' My reply is that that is not the point. All authorities on Hindu Law say, yes there must be change; but the change must be slow so that it must have time to adjust itself to environments, so that there may be no sudden disruption or evolution in the growth of custom : the change must be evolutionary, and not revolutionary. That is what we must not forget. Therefore if the time ever comes when the great masses of the people are prepared to accept certain new rules in course of time, as part of their customary law, and offer their allegiance thereto, the change will certainly come about. There is no question that this is how all customary law has grown, and at times subsequently figured as written law. These are the processes, by which the entire civilized world, or for the matter of that, the uncivilized world also has got on. Therefore, Sir, my submission is that there is no question of oppression of the minority in the present case at all. There are, however, practical difficulties which arise in a case of this kind resulting from the conduct of the minority in its bearing upon the majority. But no question of a humanitarian character comes up for consideration at all. A man can marry anybody he likes under the Civil Marriage Act. All that he has got to say in such cases is that he is neither a Hindu, nor a Muhammadan, nor a Buddhist, nor a Sikh, nor a Jain : that is to say, that he does not own allegiance to the body of the communal laws by which those particular religious bodies are governed, so that he may not attract the operation of those laws to himself. That is all he has got to do, to be able to act freely in the matter of his marriage, and it is not very much, if his religious convictions do not stand in his way. The next question which crops up is, is marriage an institution which vitally affects the constitution of the Hindu family ?

The answer is that it is. I will confine myself to the Hindu community for the present. Is the institution of marriage of such vital importance to the family and the community so vitally associated with them, and interdependent with each other that it cannot be detached from the great body of the communal rules by which Hindu society is governed, and does it go to the very root of Hindu social life ?

My Honourable friend, Mr. Shahanī, in defining Hinduism in answer to a challenge, has been kind enough to enunciate some of the distinguishing principles of the Hindu faith upon which Hindu communal life is based. He has referred to two such principles, viz., the law of Karma and the transmigration of the soul. Of course, every community tries to do its best for itself, both from the moral as well as from the physical and other points of view. A Hindu wants to build up his society on the basis of his religious conceptions. It has what we may call a religious constitution; he wants to leave every strata of his community with his particular religious beliefs and sentiments. He believes in the transmigration of the soul and in the law of Karma : that is to say, he believes that through these processes of the law, the human soul gradually rises to a higher and higher status, and he tried to organize his community keeping in view these primary conceptions. Now, having regard to this fundamental conception of the Hindu mind, and primary idea of Hindu society being a culture helpful towards such an end, the whole point is whether a mere contractual marriage which has no reference to any allegiance to the common central conceptions of the Hindu religion itself, can be said to be of a non-essential and separate character. The Honourable Mover of this Bill is quite at liberty, so far as he himself and persons of his way of thinking are concerned, to do just as he likes, but why should he be anxious to inflict, by reason of his own personal views on the matter, and by legalizing conduct of a type incompatible with the central conceptions of Hindu social life, a change in the body of the law—Hindu Law? That is the question which people professing the orthodox faith do not understand. I need not say that it has been decided by the highest court, the Privy Council, that before a man can take advantage of Act III of 1872, the Civil Marriage Act, he must give up his allegiance to one or other of the religions which are mentioned in the Act: that is to say, he must deny that he is a Hindu, a Muhammadan, a Sikh, a Christian, a Jain or a Parsee: that is the list in the Act, so far as I can recollect. The House will now understand what will be the effect of this Bill upon the constitution of Hindu society itself. I do not think I need labour the point any further. It will be enough for my purposes if I refer to the questions that incidentally arise under Act III of 1872, in its relation to the Bill. The question of succession according to that Act, is governed by the Indian Succession Act. Succession under the Hindu Law, however, is governed by laws of its own making. Muhammadan Law of Succession is similarly governed by

1 P.M.

Muhammadan Law. Now what will be the position? If a man being a Hindu, a Muhammadan, a Parsee or a Christian marries under this Act, it cannot be said that the question of succession in such circumstances is a mere side-issue, which can be considered by a Select Committee and the necessary changes introduced in that behalf by that body in course of its deliberations. It is not so. The question of succession is a fundamental question. A change of such a character in the law means that the whole body of Hindu Law has to be changed. The Hindu Law of Succession, it is true at the same time, is somewhat different in different parts of India—it is regulated on the Bombay side, for instance, by the Mayukha School, in Bengal by the Dayabhaga School of law and so forth;—the whole of that will have to be changed. Now can any Member of this House think that the consideration of a question like this comes rightly within the scope of the functions of a Select Committee? Or is not such a question a fundamental question which has to be given the widest publicity, considered by the entire body of the public going to be affected by it and then and then only a decision on it should be arrived at? I leave it to the House to form its own conclusions on this point.

Similarly, we may take up the question of divorce. Dr. Gour's Bill does not touch that question at all. Hindu Law does not recognise divorce. Muhammadan Law has a divorce law of its own. Now is it the Indian Divorce Act which will operate in the case of Muhammadans if the Bill be passed? Surely Muhammadans will repudiate any such suggestion. That is also a very fundamental question, I should say. That is certainly not a question which ought to be considered by Committees and decided by them in a hole and corner fashion. The House will now be in a position to understand to some extent, at any rate, the gravity of the situation. It is not to be faced lightly. Constituted as the Assembly is, does it take upon itself the responsibility of changing the law of the orthodox communities of the country without knowing what particular views the great masses of the people have on this point? Now, the House knows that when a Bill is circulated for opinion, only registered associations, prominent political bodies, and other similar associations are alone approached by Government. These are the vocal sections of the community. Other social units which are not organised in a similar manner or which are not important enough to attract the notice of Government as also religious bodies, etc., are never consulted at all. Their views, I suppose, do not reach this Assembly or the Government in the way they ought to. So that any attempt to come to a conclusion on the subject upon the opinion that is already to hand, will not, I submit, be a wise thing to do. And even the opinions which have been collected so far, are not all on one side. That opinion is certainly divided. It is said that the division is not so well marked as it was when Mr. Patel's Bill was introduced, or when Mr. Bhupendra Nath Basu's Bill was introduced, on the subject. There may be many reasons for that. One reason has been given by some Honourable Members of this House, namely, that the country is so agitated by political feeling at the present moment, that the public are not in a position properly to examine the effect of the Bill or inclined at the moment to ventilate their views upon a question like this. But even then the divergence as it is, in the opinions so far collected by Government, cannot be very lightly ignored. The point, therefore, at the present moment is not that all these questions as to succession, etc., are going to be considered afterwards in Select Committee, but whether we should waste so much time unnecessarily by asking a Select Committee to go into these questions incidentally. There are many Members here who hold that the Bill ought not to go to a Select Committee at all. We wanted to press this view at the very outset when the Bill was introduced, but the ruling of the Chair was that that was not the time when all these matters could be gone into, and that these might be gone into at a later stage of the Bill. Let us consider how this Assembly is constituted? We have in it representatives from various communities—Hindus, Muhammadans, Parsees, Christians and so forth, who, by a majority of votes will decide the fate of the Bill, and not Hindus alone to decide the Hindu aspect of the question, Muhammadans alone for the Muhammadan side of the question and so forth. Now what is going to happen is that this Assembly without any move on the part of the great masses of the people—this Assembly, constituted of Members of different communities, of whom the Hindu forms only a small fraction—such an Assembly is going to effect changes in Hindu religion and communal laws, so far as the Hindu community is concerned, when the initiative in the matter has been taken by an individual member, not particularly obsessed by the Hindu conception of things in the manner in which we know it has been taken. It would be the height of absurdity for a body composed as the Legislative Assembly is, to decide on a quasi-religious question like the present from the different communal points of view. So that, if the House considers all these points carefully it will do well to stop the further progress of the Bill at the present stage, and not to allow it to go at all to the Select Committee. With these observations, Sir, I oppose the motion for reference of the present Bill to a Select Committee.

Kai D. C. Barua Bahadur (Assam Valley : Non-Muhammadan) :
 Sir, I am glad—and I am very thankful to the Mover—that this Bill was introduced in the last Delhi Session. For the matter of that, I had occasion to consult some sections of my constituency as to what opinion or what vote I should record in connection with this Bill. I found that most of them were opposed to the Bill. We have come to this Assembly, Sir, to record not our own individual views but the views of our constituencies. So I beg to submit that when I vote for my constituency, I must, I am in duty bound and compelled to, vote against the introduction of this Bill. Personally speaking, I am also opposed to it, because as far as I can see, the debate has been confined to the Hindu point of view, although there was one gentleman from the Muhammadan community who opposed the Bill. He is the only person so far who represents his community from whom we have found that his community is opposed to it. The various other speakers who have so far spoken have confined themselves mainly to questions of Hindu Law. Now here, in this matter, we have not come to record our views or to make alterations in the law with regard to Hindus alone, nor have we come to vote for Hindus alone. We have come here to vote for all-India, and although I am a Hindu or returned by a Hindu or non-Muhammadan constituency, it is my duty to vote for the whole people of India, and to look to the greatest good of the greatest number. Considering the Bill, therefore, from that point of view also, I find that we should not make any amendment in the law or any alteration in the law which would only affect the Hindus. Now, even supposing that it should be confined to Hindus alone, we find that marriage is after all a sacrament, and if the nature of the law is changed, then the Hindu religion, and Hindu society, will be transformed. It is not something in the nature of an evolution in Hindu society, but rather a revolution which is proposed in Hindu society, for which none of us are here.

At the same time, Sir, I beg to submit that if this change in society is brought about, the society will be landed in chaos and anarchy; there will be enticements and elopements, from time to time, amongst the young people of both sexes and that will lead to rioting and sometimes even to murder. We can ill-afford to spare for such a contingency. The country is already full of turmoils, and, if we introduce this reform, it will be adding another instalment to the elements of destruction. I notice that some Members advocated that in Hindu society Brahmins are allowed to marry Kshatriyas or Vaisyas or even Sudras. Of course these are not new things for Hindu society; they are relics of an ancient civilisation, even now practised without much detriment to society. But a Sudra is not allowed to marry a Brahmin lady; so, if a Sudra goes to marry or take away or entice away a Brahmin girl to-morrow, there will be regular disturbance, rioting and even murders, and there will be a disturbance in society. From that point of view, I think, the Executive Government of India should not turn a deaf ear to the proposed reform in this law; because they are interested at least in the observance and continuance of peace and order. At least this is not a proper time when this reform should be introduced, because only a minority, an educated minority, is interested in it. The country is not prepared for the reform; the bulk of the population is not for it; rather there will be disturbances, as I have already submitted, of a criminal nature, and there will be feuds between different tribes and different villages and different sections of the community; and so considering all these things, it is not desirable that this reform should be introduced at this time. On this consideration and on other considerations also, I beg to oppose this motion.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I take as much pride in calling myself a Hindu as either of my Honourable friends, Mr. Rangachariar or Mr. Jogendra Nath Mukherjee, and I may say also that I am as keen on preserving the purity of Brahminical blood which runs in my veins and which would run in the veins of my children as any Member of this House; but I say this much, that we here profess to be very democratic in our politics and we are much more so outside, but when it comes to a question of individual liberty we are all very autocratic. I shall show in a few words that Hindu society has nothing to apprehend from a Bill of this kind or legislation on these lines. It is meant for the protection of a minority and it does not, and will not, trench upon the Hindu religion or Hindu social custom in any way. There is a good deal of misapprehension in the minds of even my lawyer friends in this respect. What the Bill proposes is only that Hindu dissenters should be allowed to marry as they like. There is no question of inheritance or succession involved; and I am sorry that my friends, Mr. Rangachariar and Mr. J. N. Mukherjee, who are much abler lawyers than myself, have gone absolutely wrong in bringing in questions of succession in connection with the Bill. They are aware that the Act called the Lex Loci Act, an Act of 1850, which is, in other words, called the Freedom of Religions Act, grants a guarantee that no person shall be deprived of his right or property by reason of any change of faith or religion. That would settle the question of succession of dissenters from the Hindu religion, and I need only remind them of the recent Privy Council decision in Khunni Lal's case. The Privy Council, only a few years ago, decided that a renegade from Hindu society, in this case a Muhammadan, had a claim on the property of a Hindu ancestor. The Privy Council decided that as a reversioner, although he had become a Muhammadan and although his descendants were Muhammadans, he was entitled to succeed according to the Mitakshara Law. That is the law to-day. A Hindu may adopt the Christian religion or the Muhammadan religion and after his conversion, not only he but his children are entitled to inherit property in accordance with the Dayabhaga Law or to succeed if he belongs to the Mitakshara School. This decision is based on the interpretation of the provisions of the Freedom of Religions Act which first came into existence in the year 1832 and which was re-enacted in the year 1850. It has settled that question for good and it is too late in the day to quibble over it now. As there has been a lot of random talk in connection with this Bill, I mention these facts to correct my friends' misapprehensions.

Now I must also say that the position taken up by my Hindu friends is contrary to the spirit and culture of the Hindu nation and Hindu religion. One of the most valued and prized principles of Hinduism is absolute toleration, and we find that the spirit in which my Hindu friends are opposing this Bill which seeks to secure individual liberty to certain persons is absolute intolerance. If we go back to the history of our Shastras, we find that both Manu and Yajnavalkya allowed such marriages, and it is because these marriages were permissible that all the different castes in India have grown up. Now the reason why the practice is discontinued in this country is this. With the advent of the British in this country, the Judges were timid in administering the law as was to be found in the Shastras of which they knew nothing. They took to interpreting it according to the advice of some Brahmin Pundits, and the doctrine that custom overrules the law has thus come into existence and that is why the Judges have been always reluctant now-a-days to interpret the law according to the Shastras. Now what is the law? It is this. There is no bar with regard to inter-marriages between the sub-castes of the same caste. Only there is a bar with regard to inter-marriages between the Brahmin and the other Dwijas, that is, the twice-born, such as the Kshatriyas, the Vaishyas and the Sudras. The present law is that the Brahmins of all sects may marry amongst themselves. So may the Kshatriyas and Vaishyas. Barring the Dwijas or twice-born castes, all are classed as Sudras, and all sub-castes of Sudras may inter-marry among themselves. The High Courts in India have so held and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has decided accordingly. Now the necessity for this legislation arises in this way. If a Hindu wants to go outside his community and marry and still call himself a Hindu, there is no reason why the Hindus should object to it. They have every right to ostracise him, and deny him the privilege of social intercourse. If a man goes outside the Brahmin community and marries a non-Brahmin, a Brahmin is quite at liberty to ostracise him socially; but why should he trench upon his individual liberty to marry a woman of a different caste if he chooses?

Now it has been said that Government should be absolutely neutral with regard to this matter, or rather that they ought to interfere in the matter and in no way lend their support to this Bill. But I maintain that it is the duty of Government to protect the minorities. It will be quite consistent with their policy of religious toleration. What is happening now is, that influential communities are coercing individuals or smaller communities and preventing them from exercising their obvious right of individual liberty. If a man wishes to go outside his own community and marry, the members of the community to which he belonged are at liberty to ostracise him from his own community, but why should the State come in and coerce him? When you have sent him out of your own society, he is an outsider, and so there is no reason why, when a man marries a woman of a different community solemnly, the State should visit him with the greatest civil punishment, namely, that the woman whom he has solemnly taken as his wife before God and man should not be declared as his lawful wife, and, what is worse, that the children born of such parents should not be recognised as legitimate. I think it would be the worst form of intolerance on the part of Government not to protect the honour, the status, the rights and liberties of such men, women and children.

Now, Sir, I shall say only one word with regard to custom. Custom is a very vague term. How can a custom grow up unless the State or the law courts or the community at a large are prepared to help individuals in exercising their own individual liberty in such matters? If this is made legal, then custom will grow up, and we have such instances in Bengal. What has happened in recent times? I am not referring to ancient times. Our friends are surely aware of the very important class of dissenters known as Vaishnavas? Chaitanya, who was the founder of the Vaishnava cult, was himself a Brahmin. These Vaishnavas have their own system of marriage. Within the last 300 years that custom has grown up, and they have always been recognised as Hindus.

It is, therefore, a matter of great surprise, and no less regret, to me that such a spirit of intolerance should prevail amongst a section of our community who profess advanced political views. I would appeal to them to withdraw their unreasoned opposition. I maintain that it is the duty of the Legislature, reformed as it is now styled, to allow dissenters every liberty of action according to their own principles which are in no way inconsistent with public morals. If this sort of legislation is blocked, the result will be to bar all legitimate reform in the society. I therefore support the principle of the Bill, and I consider it but fair that this Assembly of educated and cultured representatives of the country who are anxious to advance the political progress should also show some toleration

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : I am not tolerant.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri : To those who differ from their views. My friend Mr. Hussanally says that he is not tolerant. If he is not tolerant, I do not take any account of his views. With regard to such Muhammadan opposition, I would say only one word, and that is, that we have in tolerant Mr. Hussanally on the one side, but we have the Right Honourable Mr. Ameer Ali on the other who is admittedly opposed to his views. Besides that we have the outstanding fact that not only did Akbar marry a Hindu Princess but that, three of his greatest descendants, the Mogul Emperors of India, namely, Jehangir, Shah Jehan, and Aurangzeb, all of them had Hindu mothers and Hindu blood in their veins. So it is too late in the day to say that the union between Hindus and Muhammadans is unlawful or prohibited by the Koran. With these remarks, I support the motion that this Bill be referred to a Select Committee.

Mr. President : I think that there are some more speeches to be made and there is the Mover's right of reply. It will therefore be best to take the adjournment now for one hour.

Mr. B. A. Spence (Bombay : European) : May I ask for a point of information, Sir? Will the adjournment of the House take place to-day at the ordinary time, viz., 4 O'clock, or in view of the length of time that this particular Bill has taken, will an opportunity be given for the discussion of the other Bills after 4 O'clock? I ask you for this information, Sir, because we should know when to order our conveyances. If we are to get through the business, we shall probably have to sit after 4 O'clock. If we are to adjourn at 4 O'clock, we shall probably not get beyond the second Bill on this programme.

Mr. President : So far as my information goes, this is the only substantial controversial item in the List of Business. I am not sure whether, when we come to the motion standing in the name of the Honourable Member from Bengal (Maulvi Abul Kasem), we shall not hear from him that he proposes to take a course which will raise no controversy, and, therefore, I imagine that we shall be able to rise at 4 O'clock, if not before it.

Mr. Abul Kasem (Dacca Division : Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I will have to ask for permission to postpone the consideration of the motion standing in my name.

Mr. President: Just as I thought.

MESSAGE FROM THE COUNCIL OF STATE.

Mr. President: A Message has been received from the Council of State which the Secretary will now read.

Secretary of the Assembly: Sir, I have received the following Message from the Secretary of the Council of State:

'Sir, I am directed to inform you that the draft Address of Welcome to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, as drafted by the Committee appointed by Resolution of both Chambers in September last was approved and adopted by the Council of State at its meeting of the 17th of January.'

Mr. President: This House now stands adjourned till Twenty Minutes to Three of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes to Three of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

THE CIVIL MARRIAGE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Khan Bahadur Zahiruddin Ahmed (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I support the motion that the Bill should go before a Select Committee, and, by doing so, I believe I surprise a number of my friends. But I take my stand on history. India was not the home of Islam. The Mussalman invaders, Afghans, Turkomans, Arabs and Mughals came to this land and did not bring their wives with them. They found their wives here among the Hindus. The present-day Mussalmans mostly are children of fathers and mothers born of such wedlocks. If these marriages were not proper, as one of my friends has said, then what is the position of the Mussalmans in India at the present day? Are they all born of illegitimate fathers and mothers? Certainly not. As such marriages have taken place before, they may take place as well now. Hence I support the Bill wholeheartedly, as to do otherwise means to question the legitimacy of a large number of Mussalmans. Not only during the time of the three chief Mughal Emperors, Akbar, Jehangir and Shah Jahan, did such marriages take place, but such marriages used to take place long before those times among the Mussalman population. It was only during the times of those Emperors that the Moslem Royalty as well began to have Hindu wives. Emperor Aurangzeb stopped such marriages, and may I ask what happened to the Mughal Empire after his time?

Hindus and Mussalmans talk of Hindu-Moslem unity, but, when a concrete proposal comes forward, both frown and separate and look daggers at one another, which proves that the Hindu-Moslem unity is a lip arrangement and not in fact, as I have always contended. I say this is the only way in which the Hindus and Mussalmans can be made one people, if they like to be one people, and in my opinion we are highly indebted to the Honourable Dr. Gour for bringing forward such a Bill.

Rai G. C. Nag Bahadur (Surma Valley cum Shillong: Non-Muhamadan): Sir, I had little desire to take part in to-day's debate on this Bill. But having regard to the strong opinion expressed against it by some of the Honourable Members in this House, I feel that I shall be failing in my duty if I do not place before the House one aspect of the question which does not seem to have been touched by anyone yet. There are 876 tea-gardens in Assam alone employing a labour population of nearly 6 lakhs. Add to it their dependents, and the population becomes a huge one. Now, who are these people? The coolies are recruited from various parts of India. In a coolie-line are to be found Madrasis, Santals, Oriyas, Mundas, Oraons, Assamese, Chamars from Behar, the United Provinces and the Central Provinces, low-caste Bengalees, and hill men—a motley crew in different stages of physical and moral development. Almost all are completely out of touch with their original homes. They have no place to go to. The ray of religion does not penetrate the coolie lines. Education is unknown. Instinct governs their conduct of life, chastened by the rules and regulations of the tea gardens. But they all profess to be Hindus and would strongly resent being called by any other name. They form marital connections with one another without any thought whether such connections are sanctioned by the usages or customs of the castes to which they belong. An Oriya, for instance, may take an Oraon, a Munda a Madrassi, and a Bengalee a hill woman, and so on. It is not always the coolies who arrange these matches, but oftener than not, they are arranged for them by their employer, the Sahēb. If there is a girl of marriageable age of striking appearance, the manager of the garden has by her the means of attracting a coolie from outside to come and settle down with that girl as wife, no matter to whatever castes the parties might belong. Issues are born of such connections, and the fusion of races goes on apace. Now, should there not be some law to legalise such connections as real marriage connections, so that the parties may, by declaring themselves before a marriage registrar, have some tangible proof of their marriage? At present if the wife is abducted away, the husband finds difficulty in punishing the abductor under the criminal law as he cannot prove the marriage according to any recognized caste rule. They cannot avail themselves of the present Act III because, under it, they will have to declare that they are not Hindus, which they would refuse to do. Where is the law now which can govern such alliances and legalise the issues? The Dayabhaga and the Mitakshara laws are in the melting pot on a tea garden. Those who are apt to raise the cry 'religion is in danger', must answer the question. Hinduism is said to be a religion of toleration, but it is tolerant only in a way. It does not trouble itself with people following other religions. But in it there is no place for people like the Assam tea-garden coolies. Unfortunately the coolies, although they form such a considerable part of the population of India, have no one truly and faithfully to represent their case in this House. But I do hope that Honourable Members, while voting one way or the other, will bear in mind that there should be on the Statute Book some law, to govern people such as these and people who do not find it possible, on grounds of conscience or otherwise, to follow the caste rules of the Hindus. When a society like the Hindu society wants to be progressive, the practices of the people cannot remain stationary, and freedom, while allowed in all other matters cannot in reason be denied in the case of such a vitally important event in a person's life as marriage. It is consistent neither with public policy nor with social morality that persons marrying from conscientious motives outside the strict rules of orthodoxy should be denied the right of placing their family relations on the firm foundation of law. There are crying needs for social reform in India. Tradition is all very well, but tradition should not be raised to the rank of a Deity. We should always remember Tennyson's lines ending with:

'Lest one good custom should corrupt the world'.

[Rai G. C. Nag Bahadur.]

One word more. My friend, Mr. Barua from Assam, has said that the majority of his constituency are opposed to the Bill. But I may say that this is somewhat incorrect. The 'Assam Times', which is the exponent of a large body of conscientious opinion in the province, is whole-heartedly in favour of this Bill.

With these words, Sir, I support this Bill.

Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy (Bombay City : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : Sir, I rise to oppose the Bill, as you have said, Sir, that we would be committed to the principle of the Bill if we agreed to serve on the Committee, and I would ask the Honourable Mover to remove my name from his list. My reasons for opposing his Bill are that the Parsis regard marriage as a sacrament, and that we are governed by the Parsi Marriage Act, and also, as a consequence of that, we have got a Divorce Act of our own based more or less on the English Law, and also a Parsi Succession Act. I would put before the House a concrete case of a Parsi widower having married a Parsi wife and then taking, under the provisions of the suggested amended Act, another lady from another community and having children.

May I ask anyone to enlighten me how, in the event of his death and not leaving a will behind him, are his children entitled to his property? Under the Parsi Succession Act, I should not think they are entitled, because the children of his second marriage would not be considered to be Parsi according to the judgment of the High Court.

Well, Sir, these are the practical difficulties in the way, and if the Bill is passed, I do not know how many Acts will have to be passed as a consequence of that, and the whole question is teeming with difficulties. With these few words, I strongly oppose this Bill.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (Meerut Division : Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I am in full sympathy with the Bill moved by my friend, the Honourable Dr. Gour. However, there have been two or three things referred to by some of the Honourable Members of this House which require very serious consideration. The first point, which was raised by a Muhammadan gentleman, was that Muhammadans are not allowed to intermarry with other communities. I cannot see the correctness of that statement. Muhammadan men are allowed to marry a Christian or a Jewish wife, and this has been upheld by many doctors of Muhammadan Law, and this practice was upheld because they think that these are the only other revealed religions. Islam allows any man to marry a woman who belongs to a revealed religion. This is a question of fact. Some people believe that only Christianity and Judaism are the other revealed religions, but of course this was based on the great association which Muhammadans in the early period of their history had with these two religions. When the Muhammadans migrated to India, to China and other places, they stuck to these theories which had been based on their social relations with the Jews and the Christians in Arabia and Syria. But some people doubt whether this is correct. The view which is held at present by every man who has studied other religions, and which is generally the view of all educated people. I am glad to say, that the Hindus have also got a revealed religion, as well as the other communities to which I have referred. Muhammadans also believe that the Parsis have a revealed religion, because some Muhammadan doctors think that what the Persian prophet Zoroaster taught was also revealed religion. So that, as I have pointed out, this is only a question of fact, and if anyone believes that such and such a lady belongs to a revealed religion, he can marry that lady and the marriage will be a legal marriage, whatever prejudices might prevail in the minds of certain people who may hold different views. If a man really and sincerely believes, I do not see why he should not be allowed to marry a lady who comes, in his opinion, into the category of communities who have a revealed religion.

Then, Sir, there was another point made by some people for instance by Mr. Mukherjee, to the effect that the Koran prohibits all such marriages. I do not see what authority he has for that assertion and to which passage of the Koran he refers. There is only one passage on which this sanction to marriage is based, and that is the passage allowing every Muhammadan to marry a lady who belongs to a revealed religion. That is the only provision. The second part of that passage prohibits a Muhammadan lady to intermarry with anyone who is not a Muhammadan. Probably my friend, Mr. Mukherjee, has taken the last portion of the above passage, which only prohibits a Muhammadan lady from marrying a person who is not a believer in Islam. While I do not wish to enter into the principles which led at that time to the framing of this law, it is certain that there must have been some reason on which it was based, and that reason was probably the fact that in the early days of Islam it might have been feared by the true Muhammadans that if a Muhammadan lady married a person who was not a Muhammadan, she might be persecuted by her husband. This idea might possibly have led to the adoption of this principle. I do not feel myself competent to go deeper into that question, but anyhow, so far as the portion of the passage goes which permits a Muhammadan man to marry according to his conscience a lady who belongs to the Christian or Jewish religion, that marriage must be regarded as valid.

Then, Sir, there is a question of history which is rather a serious one. Are we to declare here in this House that the actions of the Emperor Akbar, of Jehangir and of Shah Jehan were illegal? They received a fatwa from the Doctors of Law of that age which specifically validated their marriages with Hindu ladies; and, as a matter of fact, those marriages were considered valid by the whole community at that time in India. That fact is obvious from the fact that Jehangir was hailed as the true son of the Emperor Akbar, and after him, Shah Jehan and Aurungzeb were regarded as legitimate Emperors. After these historical examples I do not see how this Assembly can say that those actions of the Emperors were illegal

(A voice: They were not religious actions.)

Whatever they were, at any rate they were considered to be legitimate children and they were upheld by the religion of the Muhammadans at that time. Now, Sir, we all believe that the Emperor Akbar was one of the first nation builders, and he foresaw in the beginning that unless the social ties which separated the different communities in India were done away with, the development of the nation could not proceed, and that is why perhaps he set the example himself.

I think that this point of view is very sound, that in order to make progress along that line, such marriages should be allowed to be legal marriages. But that is only the political aspect and I do not wish to enter into that while the religious aspect has been so much talked about in this Assembly. I only wish to deal with the matter from the social and from the religious point of view of different communities. There might be a certain bar among the Hindu gentlemen when they intermarry with people of other castes ; but at the present time, we find that lots of Hindu gentlemen are visiting Europe and, of course, some of them are dissatisfied with their own manner of living or one takes a fancy to, or gets united to, a European girl—why should he be disallowed from marrying her, if he can only be happy with that particular woman? There is no reason why he should be debarred simply, on account of this, that he belongs to a Hindu caste. At the same time he does not want to change his religion. The Act of 1872 gives him free licence to marry, if he declares that he belongs to no religion, but, if he really believes and sincerely believes in his religion of Hinduism, why should he not remain at the same time a Hindu and marry the woman whom he loves. Then he is allowed to marry in England. The law in England does not prohibit this. If he gets his marriage registered in England, a Hindu gentleman's marriage in such circumstances is quite valid and legal in England, but, as soon as he comes back to India, that marriage and the issues are considered as illegitimate. This is a great hardship on that girl. Either the man must give up his religion, and say, that he belongs to no religion at all, or he must give up his wife. He is between two difficulties and must choose the lesser of two evils, which are both equally disagreeable to him, if he really loves the girl and truly believes in his religion.

Then, Sir, the only thing that the Hindu Law says is that if children are born to a Hindu with a woman who is not of his caste, the children belong to the inferior caste, taking the caste of their mother in this case. They do not become illegitimate children, but those children take up the caste of their mother and remain legitimate. The question of inheritance, which has been referred to so much, is not so difficult. We can have different legislation. There can be a safeguard from the point of view of Hindus, if they do not—that is if cognates do not want their property to go to a reversioner who is born of a woman who does not belong to the same caste. But why disallow this marriage? This marriage may remain valid and the children may inherit all the property of their father, though they might be debarred from receiving property from their cognates. This could be easily done in Select Committee.

Then, Sir, in India there are other castes among the Hindus—for instance, the Sudra classes, like the Jats. A Jat may take a woman of any caste, and, as soon as she puts her hair up, she becomes a Jat woman (it does not matter what caste she belongs to), and all the children are considered to be Jats. We have a great number of Jats living in the Punjab and in the United Provinces. Well, their marriage is quite valid if it is contracted with a woman who does not belong to her husband's caste or to any religion. But, as soon as she puts her hair up, she becomes a Jat woman. So I think, Sir, there are other Sudra classes, in great numbers, who do not think that the caste system need be so rigid, and this enabling measure represents the views of those people. There might be a few other gentlemen who do not believe in this, but an enabling measure gives the option to a man who wants to stick to his religion and yet marry a woman who does not belong to his caste. It does in no way force a man to adopt this principle if he does not believe in it. There are some people in this country who on account of their education and of their social circumstances believe that such a distinction should not exist, and I do not see why this Assembly should refuse a measure enabling their marriage only. There is no such thing as anybody's religion being interfered with. This is another thing altogether. I have myself sent in an amendment in my name a long time ago, and I suppose it is because amendments are not to be considered at this stage of the Bill that it has not found a place on the agenda to-day, and my amendment could be easily dealt with in Select Committee. With these few remarks I think that this Bill should be referred to the Select Committee and that my amendment which is standing should be dealt with in the Select Committee.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer (Tanjore cum Trichinopoly : Non-Muhamadan Rural) : Sir, as might be expected on a subject of such vital importance to society as the institution of marriage, very divergent views have found expression in the course of this debate. We have been told, on the one hand, that the system of Hindu society is in danger. On the other hand, this allegation has been denied. We have been asked by Mr. Joshi to define what Hinduism is. I hope the Assembly will not embark upon any such adventure of defining what Hinduism is. I do not propose to deal with the question from the point of view of the requirements of Hindu religion, or from any other highly interesting, but erudite, point of view. I should rather like to deal with it from the point of view of a lawyer and recognise the plain facts of the situation.

If you ask whether the mass of public opinion in the country, whether the opinion of the people at large is behind this measure, I do not think it will be possible for us to say that the Bill is so supported. But that does not conclude the matter. This is a case of conflict of rights : On the one hand, the right of the individual to his liberty ; on the other hand, the right of society to protect itself as a living organism against any attacks endangering its existence. We have to make a compromise and provide for the due exercise of both these rights. It is somewhat unfortunate that Dr. Gour's Bill has not tried to meet the reasonable apprehensions entertained by people who are afraid that this measure may imperil the stability of Hindu society. We have been warned by Mr. Chaudhuri that we should not introduce questions of inheritance and that inheritance has nothing to do with this subject. I am afraid I cannot follow him there. The subject is undoubtedly bound up with questions of inheritance and we cannot help considering those questions. Now, with the desire of Dr. Gour to protect individual liberty and the right of the individual to marry the person of his choice, I think we must be in agreement and sympathy. But in recognising the right of the individual to contract one of the most sacred and solemn of human relationships according to his own free will and pleasure, we must also take care that in the exercise of that right, the interests of the society to which he belongs are in no way affected, and that, if there is any danger of such interests being affected, due safeguards are provided. Now, let me point out briefly the various ways in which the rights of the members of society may be affected. If a Hindu, for instance, marries a Christian or Muhamadan woman, he will have his rights of succession ; he will have his rights of residence in the joint family property, and he will be in a position to exercise all the rights which he formerly possessed. It may be said that the Caste Disabilities Act of 1850 has already made an inroad upon the Hindu Law and that the rights of inheritance which a man possesses cannot be possibly affected by his exclusion from caste or by his renunciation of his religion. That is true. But what exactly is the limit to which that Act has gone has been the subject of controversy. It has been a moot point whether that Act does or does not affect the rights of succession to collaterals. It has been a moot point whether that Act affects the rights of inheritance of the offspring of the person who renounces his caste or religion. There are various questions which are still unsettled. Now, you can easily conceive that if a Hindu marries a person belonging to an entirely different religion and if you also admit that the social habits and usages of members professing the various creeds in this country are very radically different, it will be a great hardship to the family to which this person belongs if he insists, for instance, upon residing in the joint family house. If there is an orthodox father or orthodox brother, and the Hindu who has married a Mussalman or Christian woman insists upon living in the joint family house with his Muhammadan or Christian wife, you can imagine it will be a source of great annoyance and great persecution to the other members of the family. You must provide against cases of that sort by a provision that the person who contracts a marriage of this sort shall not be able to insist upon his right of residence in the joint family house. Again, how do we stand with regard to the question of succession to collaterals? The Hindu system of succession is bound up closely with the Hindu religion and it proceeds upon the assumption that the inheritance goes to persons who are Hindus in the ordinary sense of the word. If a person lives in a manner which is utterly repugnant to the sentiments and the usages of the Hindu community and if he openly acts in contravention of Hindu usages, in defiance of Hindu sentiment, it will be regarded as justly imperilling the safety of the social fabric if he is allowed to claim rights of succession to collaterals. That again is a point in regard to which some safeguard ought to be provided. While a person who contracts this marriage should not incur any forfeiture of property at all and should not incur any forfeiture of any vested rights, he should not be in a position to claim rights of succession to collateral members of the family. It may be said that if he should be disqualified from claiming collateral succession those collaterals also should be disqualified from claiming succession to him or his heirs. Of course it goes without saying that any provision of that sort ought to be perfectly reciprocal. These are matters for which I think safeguards should have been provided. Then, again, there are other difficult questions arising with regard to the laws of inheritance which would be applicable to the offspring of this person. Suppose a Hindu marries a Muhammadan or a Christian. What is to be the status of the offspring? Is the offspring to be governed by the Hindu Law or by the Indian Succession Act or by the Muhammadan Law? Those are points upon which it would be difficult to come to any immediate decision, but upon which some provision ought to be made for the purpose of meeting the various difficulties which are bound to arise in course of practice. The law by which the offspring would be governed should also be laid down in any measure of this kind. If Dr. Gour had tried to meet the reasonable apprehensions of people with regard to the effects of this measure and had tried to introduce some safeguards for the purpose of protecting the interests of society, I think his Bill would have met with much less opposition than it has actually received. I think it was his duty to have anticipated these cases and introduced some provisions in his Bill instead of merely amending just one or two sections of this special Act of 1872 and skipping so lightly over the subject. If he had provided for these various difficulties, I am sure he would have met with more support than he has received. Personally I should find myself unable to support the Bill in its present form, but, if Dr. Gour will give an undertaking that safeguards of this kind will be provided in the Select Committee, I for one would not object to the Bill going to the Committee.

Now, there is one other point which I ought perhaps to have mentioned. It has been stated by some of the preceding speakers that society is at liberty to act in any way it pleases, by ostracising persons who act contrary to its received usages. Now, you must make it clear that by any law of this kind, you are not interfering with the right of society to organise itself and to protect itself in any manner it likes with the usual weapons and resources in its armoury. For instance, every society has got a right to exclude members from its communion if they behave in a manner disapproved of by the members of the society at large. Now, you must make it clear that you do not propose to touch the right of society to defend itself in the customary manner. If you safeguard the rights of society to protect itself, if you safeguard the rights of the other members of the family, if you guard against any collateral succession, and if you also provide for the system of law which is to govern the offspring, if you introduce all these provisions, I, for one, do not see that Hindu society is in any danger of disruption. But, if you do not introduce these safeguards, undoubtedly society is in danger of disruption, and I think people are entitled to object that this innocent-looking Bill, which professes to amend two or three sections, does really strike a blow at Hindu society. Dr. Gour in his memorandum has said that there have been several blows struck for individual liberty and this is only one more in the cause of human liberty. Now, I am in entire sympathy with the cause of human liberty and with the right of the individual to freedom in regard to marriage, as in other respects. But it does not follow from that, that we are bound to go much further than the Caste Disabilities Act itself has done or that we are bound to ignore the annoyance and the hardship that may be caused to other members of the family or to the relations of the person contracting this marriage, or to society. If the individual requires protection at the hands of the Legislature, society is as much entitled, if not more, to protection against the attempts of individuals to break up its fabric. I would, therefore, appeal to Dr. Gour either to withdraw this Bill, which, I am afraid, must be characterised as a crude measure, and re-introduce it with all the necessary safeguards or to give a distinct undertaking to the Assembly that in the Select Committee, all these matters will be introduced and dealt with in a spirit of fairness and justice. So far as I can judge from the composition of this Committee, it seems to consist entirely of those who are pledged to support this measure. I do not see any representatives of a different shade of opinion on it. If Dr. Gour is prepared to give an undertaking of that sort, the composition of the Select Committee would have to be altered.

Dr. H. S. Gour: May I ask the Honourable Member who spoke last (Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer), if I am prepared to give that undertaking, is he equally prepared to give an undertaking that this motion of mine shall not be opposed to-day?

Mr. N. M. Joshi : He will not oppose you.

Dr. H. S. Gour : I take it, Sir, that the Honourable Member was speaking for himself and was not voicing the feelings of any of the Members in the opposition. In view of the fact that this raises an extremely important question, I ask you, Sir, to adjourn the debate to a future date, when it will give the supporters and opponents of the Bill time to consider over the suggestion made and to come to some undersanding, if possible. Otherwise, the debate will take its normal course and will be continued.

Mr. President : The question is that this debate be now adjourned.

THE MUSSALMAN WAQFS REGISTRATION BILL.

Mr. Abul Kasem (Dacca Division : Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I ask for permission that the motion standing in my name may be postponed to a future date. I understand that the Government of India have circulated the Bill to the Local Governments for opinion and that all the replies have not yet been received. Therefore it is not desirable to refer it, or to ask for reference to a Select Committee before the receipt of these replies. I therefore hope the House will give me permission to postpone my motion for consideration until some future date.

* That the Bill to provide for the registration of Waqf Estates and the proper rendering of accounts by the Mutwallis of such Estates in British India, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Dr. T. B. Saprú, the Honourable Sir William Vincent, Mr. Percival, Mr. Sharp, Munshi Iswar Saran, Mr. W. M. Hussanally, Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail, Haji Wajih-ud-din, Mr. Syed Nabi Hadi, Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar, Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan and the Mover.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member): Sir, the position is that three Local Governments only have replied giving their views on this Bill and the replies from other Local Governments are still awaited. The question, as I explained on a previous occasion, is one with which the Governor and Ministers deal, and in these circumstances, the Government would also be glad if the House would accede to the request of the Honourable Member.

Mr. President: The motion was :

That the Bill to provide for the registration of Waqf Estates and the proper rendering of accounts by the Mutwallis of such Estates in British India, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru, the Honourable Sir William Vincent, Mr. Percival, Mr. Sharp, Munshi Iswar Saran, Mr. W. M. Hussanally, Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad Ismail, Haji Wajih-ud-din, Mr. Syed Nabi Hadi, Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar, Mr. Muhamad Yamin Khan and the Mover.

Since which it has been moved that the consideration of this motion be postponed.

The motion was adopted.

THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City : Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I beg for leave to introduce :

'A Bill further to amend a certain section of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1908.'

The section which I wish to have amended is section 491 dealing with the nature of a Habeas Corpus enabling the three High Courts in the Presidency Towns of Fort William, Madras and Bombay, whenever they think fit to direct that a person illegally or improperly detained within the original jurisdiction of these Courts may be set at liberty.

The object of this amendment is twofold. I wish to give power to all the High Courts and not only those in the Presidency towns. I wish to give power to the High Courts, including Allahabad, Patna, Lahore and others. That is one object. The other object is to enable the Court to deal with such cases not only in the case of persons illegally detained within the original jurisdiction of the Court but also persons who are illegally detained within the appellate jurisdiction of the Court. This will be bringing the provisions of section 491 into conformity with section 456, which gives the right to a European British subject. So far as these are concerned, section 456 corresponding to section 81 of the Code of 1872, the High Court has got power to call up all cases of European British subjects who are illegally detained wherever it may be, and all High Courts, not only the three Presidency town Courts, have also got the power. Therefore, it is bringing section 491 into line with section 456, thereby removing the racial distinction that may exist. It will also enable the Courts to deal with all cases because that sort of case not only arises in Presidency towns but also within the appellate jurisdiction, and it is the only way in which the judiciary can control the executive. The very existence of such a power is considered an effective safeguard against abuse and misuse of the administrative powers, and that being so, it is necessary to provide against it, and that is the reason why I wish to introduce this amendment.

Mr. President: The question is :

' That leave be given to introduce a Bill further to amend a certain section of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1908.'

The motion was adopted.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : I introduce the Bill, Sir.

THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala (Agra Division : Non-Muhammadan Rural) :
Sir, I beg to move for leave to introduce :

' A Bill further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (Amendment of rule 4 of Order XXXII in Schedule I).'

Under Order XXXII, rule 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is provided : that where the defendant is a minor, the Court, on being satisfied of the fact of his minority, shall appoint a proper person to be guardian for the suit for such minor, and rule 4 of the same provides that no order shall be made on any application under this rule except upon notice to the minor and to any guardian of the minor appointed or declared by an authority competent in that behalf, or, where there is no such guardian, upon notice to the father or other natural guardian of the minor, or where there is no father or other natural guardian, to the person in whose care the minor is, and after hearing an objection which may be urged on behalf of any person served with notice under this sub-rule.

Now rule 4 provides that any person who is of sound mind and has attained majority may act as next friend of a minor or as his guardian for the suit :

Provided that the interest of such person is not adverse to that of the minor and that he is not, in the case of a next friend, a defendant, or in the case of a guardian for the suit, a plaintiff.

Now, sub-rule 4 provides that :

' Where there is no other person fit and willing to act as guardian for the suit, the Court may appoint any of its officers to be such guardian, and may direct that the costs to be incurred by such officer in the performance of his duties as such guardian shall be borne either by the parties or by any one or more of the parties to the suit, or out of any fund in Court in which the minor is interested, and may give directions for the repayment or allowance of such costs as justice and the circumstances of the case may require.'

Now, Sir, during my practice at the bar for the last 22 years, I have seen that it is not uncommon when pleaders are occasionally appointed guardians under rule 3, but rule 4 says that if there is no other proper person available, then an officer of the Court may be appointed. Under that rule a discretion is given to the Court to arrange for costs for defending the suit or appeal as the case may be. In many cases it has happened that where pleaders have been appointed guardians, requests have been made to the Court to provide for costs of the defence, but the Courts have found it impossible under the existing law to grant such requests. There was recently a similar case in the Allahabad High Court, but the High Court was unable to accede to the request, and the result was that the guardian, who was appointed, had to refuse to act, and in that case, which is still pending, not less than three gentlemen were appointed and all of them have one after another refused to act as guardians upon this very ground. Therefore, I submit that the amendment which I wish to move would enable the Courts to arrange for the costs of defence in cases where pleaders are appointed as guardians. Now the amendment which is proposed to be made is :

'That in sub-rule 4) of Rule 4 of Order XXXII in the First Schedule in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, after the words 'its officer,' the words 'or any pleader' and after the words 'such officer,' the words 'or pleader' shall be inserted'.

So this is simply to obviate the difficulty which I have just explained, and that is the reason why I have brought forward this motion before this House.

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (Law Member) : Sir, I regret that I am unable to support the motion of my Honourable friend, Lala Girdharilal Agarwala, and I must offer opposition on behalf of Government. In the first place, my friend, Mr. Agarwala, has not been able to make out a case in support of his Bill. My Honourable friend has referred to his 22 years' practice. I should have expected that he would cite at least three cases that had occurred during his 22 years' practice showing how the difficulty has actually been felt. In all humility I can claim a larger practice behind me in the same province from which my Honourable colleague comes and in the same Court where he practises. At any rate until 1920, I was not aware that there was any real or genuine difficulty being felt on this account either in the subordinate courts or even in the High Court. I am not aware of the unfortunate case to which he referred this afternoon. Probably it happened since I left the High Court.

Now, Sir, I believe the whole of my Honourable friend's argument is based upon a misconception. It is well known to lawyers that in theory an advocate or a pleader is really an officer of the Court, and I should have thought that no Judge would have felt any difficulty at all in applying the provisions of the law as it stands to the circumstances of each case where it was necessary to appoint a pleader. Therefore, with all respect to my Honourable colleague, I would say that this is a perfectly superfluous and unnecessary measure, the more to be deprecated because it is in the nature of an isolated attempt to deal with a Code like the Code of Civil Procedure. On these grounds I would strongly oppose the motion made by my Honourable colleague.

Mr. President : The question is :

'That leave be given to introduce a Bill further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (Amendment of Rule 4 of Order XXXII in Schedule I)'.

The motion was negatived.

-THE INTEREST ACT 1839 AMENDMENT BILL.

Khan Sahib Maulvi Abdul Quadir (Central Provinces: Nominated Non-Official) : Sir, the piece of business standing against my name in to-day's list is to move for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Interest Act of 1839 by inserting a new section in it to the effect that no creditor whether of a secured or unsecured loan shall be entitled to recover by suit interest in excess of the principal amount due at the date of the suit. The

[Khan Sahib Maulvi Abdul Quadir.]

Bill seeks to prevent the accumulation of interest for long periods, and thereby to save many a debtor from utter ruination by his calculating and clever creditors. There is a similar rule in Hindu Law and it is called the Rule of Damdapat. It is in operation in the Bombay Presidency, Berar and in the town of Calcutta proper. In the Bombay Presidency and Berar, it is made applicable in cases in which the debtors are Hindus, while, in the town of Calcutta it is applied in cases where both the plaintiffs and defendants are Hindus. The operation of this rule on the lines obtaining in the Bombay Presidency and Berar entails a great hardship upon those who are non-Hindus because, if they are creditors, they cannot recover interest more than the principal amount due on the date of the suit, and, if debtors, they are denied the benefit of this rule altogether and they are made to pay interest irrespective of its being more than the principal amount due on the date of the suit. This rule is a very wholesome one if it were made applicable to all alike. It is so done in many of the Native States even to this day. Owing to its non-existence in other parts of British India, the Hindus and non-Hindus are alike falling victims to the 'Wait and have it' game of their scheming creditors who allow the interest to accumulate to such an extent that it becomes impossible for the debtors to pay up the amount, and they are ultimately deprived of their hearths and homes. The effect of this amendment would, no doubt, be that the creditors will sue their debtors as soon as the amount of interest is equal to the principal amount, and even this procedure is beneficial to the debtors, because, at present, sentiment prevents debtors from parting with part of their property and paying off their debts, and so they go on allowing the interest to be accumulated in the hope of clearing their debts in years of plenty and prosperity; but they are unable to do so and the Sahookar allows them time, till the interest, with principal, swells up to the value of the property in suit or with them, and at once rushes into Court and takes everything from them in lieu of money. But if the Sahookar were to bring his suit sooner, the debtor would be getting a chance of laying aside his sentimentalism, sell part of his property, pay off his debt and save the remainder of his property for himself and his family. I hope that the Honourable Members of the Assembly will see through the spirit of this measure and sympathise with its object and give their whole-hearted support to it.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member): Sir, I think every Member in this Assembly has a great deal of sympathy with the object which the Honourable Member has in view, namely, to curtail the exorbitant demands of usurious money lenders, but it is the duty of Government, in my judgment, to point out the serious objections which there are to a Bill of the present character. If I am the person to put forward those objections, I can at least claim that I have in my time done more in endeavouring to remedy the evil caused by usurious money-lenders than most Members of this Assembly. For some years I worked on a Bill, which was known as the Usurious Loans Bill, and which is now part of the laws of the land, but to which no reference was made by the Honourable Mover. The essence of that Bill is that it enables the Court to examine the transactions between the money-lender and the debtor and to revise inequitable contracts. It also gives the Court power to re-open any contract which it believes to be unfair or unconscionable, that is to say, it can go into old accounts and examine prior readjustments.

This is very important as regards this rule of Damdapat, because it is through readjustments and fresh contracts that the law of Damdapat is often defeated. I may say that at the time when we examined this question in 1918, we considered this rule of Damdapat very carefully. The opinions I received then were not generally speaking in favour of it. The Madras Government, for instance, pointed out that it would not afford any real remedy. The Government of Bombay regarded the rule as being of small, though not of negligible, utility. The Government of Bengal, while advocating it, realised that innumerable stratagems will be devised to circumvent it. The best summary of the objections to the rule of Damdapat is, however, I think, found in a note which we obtained from Sir Michael Fenton of the Punjab. He then said :

'The Damdapat custom involves regulation of the rate of interest in a manner which would work very unfairly both for debtor and creditor. It would be consistent with the Damdapat rule to grant decrees giving interest at one hundred per cent. per annum, if the suit for the principal plus interest at that rate were brought at the expiry of one year from the date of the loan. It would also be consistent with that rule to disallow interest at the low rate of five per cent. if the creditor allowed interest at that rate to accumulate for 15 or 16 years. A Damdapat rule which ignored the time factor would be extraordinarily unequal in its operation.'

In the same file there is another criticism—a very good one—by Mr. Justice Ayling of the Madras High Court, on this point, and I commend it to the attention of the Assembly. The main argument that he used was that there is no more justification for an arbitrary limit upon the amount of interest than there is for a limit on the rate of interest. The two things are really the same. 'To fix the amount of interest', he added 'is a most clumsy and unequal remedy'.

Now, the question of limiting the rate of interest has been considered both in this country and in England several times. One of the most powerful Committees that sat in England within the last 25 years considered this subject in 1898, and that Committee reported as follows :

'Your Committee consider that a high rate of interest is not in itself incompatible with fair dealing and that no limit of interest can be prescribed which would be adapted to the widely different conditions under which these loans are contracted, and further that if a maximum rate were fixed by statute, the interest would tend in all cases to rise to that maximum.'

Now if it is unreasonable to fix the rate of interest, having regard to varying risks of different loans, surely it is equally unsound to fix the amount of interest. The mischief does not end there, however, and, the practical effects of a Damdapat rule are various. In the first place, all payments made by the debtor are always credited to interest whether that is intended or not. In the second place, the system encourages the entry of a large fictitious sum, which is not paid, in the original bond. In the third place, it encourages frequent nominal readjustments of old debts, when new fictitious sums are entered in the bond in order to enable the creditor to claim the benefit of this rule. Lastly it forces a money-lender to bring a suit earlier than he would have otherwise done. I am confident, and I ask the Assembly to examine the point, that we have in the Act of 1918 provided what is a far more just and really more efficacious remedy than Damdapat for this evil of usurious loans. I have already explained what that Act provides, and those who have experience of the Courts—some of them, I think, supported me when I introduced the Bill into the Council—will know whether it has worked effectively or not. There is one other point, Sir, that I wish to mention and then I shall finish. I do not want to take up any more time on this Bill. There is a general idea that all money-lenders are nothing but a race of blood-suckers. I take a very different view. There are good men and there are bad men among them, but I can assure this Assembly that if it were not for the Banias, if it were not for the money-lenders, no business would go on in this country at all. The money-lender replaces the banks and is the back-bone of the agriculturists and the back-bone of all small dealers in the country. If you injure him by a number of oppressive laws, you really make business impossible. There was another Bill that we had—I think Mr. Yamin Khan promoted it—which proposed innumerable restrictions upon the money-lender. I want him and this Assembly to realise that the money-lender is one of the most useful members of the society in this country. Upon him, as I say, nearly all the small business men of this country depend. I do not say there are no black sheep among them. But I maintain that the Bania is often a maligned individual, I say further that the Courts have already ample powers of dealing with any inequitable transactions that may be made by him. I hope that we shall not, by accepting this Bill now revert, in modern civilised days, to what is really a very rough-and-ready system devised for primitive times. A rule of that kind may be suitable for primitive people. I have worked it myself in the Sonthal Pargannas. It was in force there—and I can only say from practical experience of working it that even in those conditions, it is one of the most difficult laws to use justly and fairly, because it encourages trickery of all kinds on the part of money-lenders who really do not act honestly in the matter. Sir, I have now put the objections to this Bill before the Assembly and I hope that they will weigh them carefully before they reopen the questions raised by this Bill when the whole question has only very recently been examined and fully considered both by the last Council and by the Government.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (Meerut Division : Muhammadan Rural) : May I be allowed to speak a few words, Sir ?

Mr. President : At this stage, which is only 'leave to introduce the Bill', there is only one speech by the Mover and another speech by any Member who wishes to oppose it. The Honourable Member will have ample opportunity, when the Bill comes up for further discussion, of expressing his views.

The question is :

'That leave be given to introduce a Bill to amend the Interest Act, 1839.'

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President : I have received a suggestion from certain Honourable Members that it might be convenient to have the adjourned debate on the motion regarding the Civil Marriage Bill on Friday afternoon.

I am not in a position, at this moment, to say whether it will be convenient for it to be taken on that day. I hope to be able to make an announcement to-morrow.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday, the 18th January, 1922.

RESOLUTION RE: ABANDONMENT OF THE POLICY OF REPRESSION.

Munshi Iswar Saran (Cities of the United Provinces : Non-Muhammadian Urban) : The Resolution which I have the honour to move runs as follows :

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council the immediate abandonment of the policy of repression inaugurated in the country.'

It is under a compelling sense of duty that I venture to invite this House to consider my Resolution to-day. I am anxious, extremely anxious, more anxious than I can tell, that no word of mine should add to the bitterness or complexity of an already embittered and complicated situation. I hope it is not necessary for me to assure the Official Members of this House or Government that we are no less anxious than the officials themselves that law and order should be maintained. It is, Sir, in our own interest that there should be no disorder in the country, because if any lawlessness breaks out and if there takes place any disorder, we suffer with the rest of our countrymen. I am not oblivious of the fact that Government at this moment is face to face with a grave situation. Sir, the situation is grave in all conscience, but it is not necessary to exaggerate either the gravity or the difficulty of the situation. Let not our vision be blurred. Let us view things in their true perspective. Let us judge the non-co-operation movement in its true and proper light. Most of us, in fact everybody here, and most of the educated people outside, are fully acquainted with the programme of the non-co-operation movement, and, as we know, it was before the 17th of November last, for some time before that date, that non-co-operators were concentrating their attention and energy on the boycott of foreign goods and on bringing about a hartal on a particular date. Sir, let me say at once, and in as emphatic a manner as I can, that their decision to bring about a hartal on a particular day was a most unwise and a most unfortunate decision. We have it, on the authority of His Excellency the Governor General and of His Excellency the Governor of Bengal, that their attempt to bring about a hartal on this date exacerbated feelings and that there was an outcry, to quote the words of His Excellency Lord Reading, from the residents, particularly of Calcutta, and, in fact of most of the great cities in this country, against the intimidation and unlawful means which had been used by them in order to prevent people from taking the course which they wished to take. And, Sir, unfortunately on the 17th of November in Bombay there was a wicked and criminal outburst of lawlessness. There is no one, either in this hall or outside it in the country, who will not condemn that lawlessness in most emphatic language. Now, let us then see what followed the 17th of November. One finds that one Provincial Government after another resorted to the Criminal Law Amendment Act, the Seditious Meetings Act, the Defence of India Act and the Press Act. Sir, I have seen it stated by very responsible people that this is not a policy of repression. I shall beg the House to consider this question with me for one moment, without considering for the time being whether it is justifiable or not, but simply to confine their attention to the issue whether or not it is a policy of repression. For my purpose, it is enough to say that Government itself has called some of these measures repressive.

When the Repressive Laws Committee was formed, some of these measures were referred to them. In view of this fact, I submit, it is not open to serious argument that the policy inaugurated is not a policy of repression. Sir, my submission, my respectful and humble submission, is that Government went wrong in applying the Criminal Law Amendment Act to these various volunteer organisations in the country. It may be open to a Judge sitting in a court of law to hold that the language of the Criminal Law Amendment Act is wide enough to cover the case of a volunteer organisation in this country, but I submit with all respect that if you look to the object with which this measure was introduced and if you look to the surrounding circumstances that induced the Government in 1908 to introduce this measure, the conclusion becomes strong, from my point of view irresistible, that Government is not right in applying the Criminal Law Amendment Act to these volunteer organisations. May I invite the attention of this House to what Sir Harvey Adamson said in introducing this measure in the Legislative Council? He said :

'The following are some of the more prominent instances of anarchical crime which have occurred in Bengal and Eastern Bengal during the past year. On the 6th December, 1907, an attempt was made to assassinate the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal by means of a bomb exploded under his train near Midnapore. Two other abortive attempts of a similar nature on Sir Andrew Fraser's life had already been made on the railway line near Chandernagore. On 23rd December, 1907, Mr. Allen, the District Magistrate of Dacca, was shot with a revolver at Goalundo. On 4th March, 1908, Mr. Hickenbotham of the Church Missionary Society was shot near his house at Kushtea. On 11th April an attempt was made to assassinate the Mayor of Chandernagore by a bomb. On the 30th April a bomb intended for Mr. Kingsford who had been Presidency Magistrate at Calcutta was thrown into a carriage at Muzaffarpur and killed Mrs. and Miss Kennedy. On 2nd May the Manicktolla bomb conspiracy was brought to light. On 2nd June a serious dacoity was committed near Nawabganj in Dacca District by a large band armed with guns and revolvers in which two persons were killed. On 21st June a bomb was thrown into a railway carriage at Kankanara and injured an English gentleman, and there have been several similar attempts in the same neighbourhood. On the 31st August an approver in the Manicktolla case, which is under trial at Alipur, was murdered by a revolver. On 17th September a serious dacoity was committed at Serampore. On 20th and 30th October similar dacoities were committed in Malda and Faridpore districts. Only a few days ago followed a dacoity of the gravest nature in Raita. There is ample reason for believing that all the dacoities which I have mentioned were committed by young men of the middle classes. On 23rd September a young man was convicted of sending a bomb by post to the Magistrate of Nadia. On the 7th November the fourth attempt was made to assassinate the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, on this occasion with a revolver. On 9th November the native Sub-Inspector of Police, who had arrested one of the Muzaffarpur murderers, was shot dead in the streets of Calcutta. On 13th November the principal witness in a case against the head of an association called the Anusilan Samiti was murdered and decapitated near Dacca.

These are examples of the type of anarchical crime that has been prevalent.'

Turn we now to the concluding speech of Lord Minto, who was then Governor General. He said :

'The Manicktolla Garden discoveries, followed by the attempt on the life of Sir Andrew Fraser, and the murder of the Police Inspector, have opened a new chapter in the history of sedition. They have taken us far beyond treasonable pamphlets and revolutionary speeches, they have shown us the results of those preachings and are laying bare before us (I shall beg the House to mark these words) the workings of a murderous conspiracy—a wide-spread conspiracy—recruited from the ranks of emotional young men saturated with grotesque ideas of political freedom.'

Sir, whatever opinion one might hold as regards these volunteer organisations, I assert with all the emphasis I can command that it cannot be contended that these are murderous associations or that these are associations which organise political dacoities. It may be, and I think it is true, that in some cases there has been committed intimidation and other excesses by certain members of some of these volunteer organisations; but, I shall ask the House to remember that the creed of the volunteer organisations all over the country is non-violence. I find an Honourable Member occupying the Government Benches laughing at it; I shall ask him to consider whether or not it is a proof of their non-violence that leader after leader has been arrested, hundreds upon hundreds of young men have been arrested and sent to jail and there has been no trouble at all. If you look at the Resolution which has been passed by the Congress organisation, you will come to the conclusion that whatever might be the action of individual volunteers here and there, the aim that has been put before them is non-violence. This is the pledge that each volunteer has to take :

'With God as witness I solemnly declare that I shall be a member of the National Volunteer Corps; as long as I remain a member of the corps, I shall remain non-violent in word and deed and shall earnestly endeavour to be non-violent in intent since I believe that in India's circumstances it is non-violence alone that can help the Khilafat and the Punjab and result in the attainment of Swaraj'.

In their own interest non-co-operators have to be non-violent.

If the inauguration of this policy has been wrong, what about its application and its exercise? What do you find? You find that the Seditious Meetings Act has been applied not only to public meetings but even to Congress Committee Meetings. You find that volunteers have been indiscriminately arrested and packed off to jail. You have the unhappy spectacle of practically all the members of the United Provinces Congress Committee being arrested while they were sitting in a committee meeting. Their only offence was that they had supported a Resolution calling upon members to join the volunteer organisations. I have myself seen in Calcutta young men and even elderly people coming and saying: 'Purchase Khaddar: observe hartal'—that was enough; they were arrested and put into prison vans and sent to the lock-up. I have seen this with my own eyes.

This is not all. What more has been done? Speaking of my own province, I say that men whose political opinions you might condemn, whose political judgment you might find fault with, but whose character and attainments you dare not question, have been sent to jail because they have signed the pledge of these volunteer organizations. Take the case of Pandit Motilal Nehru. It is open to anybody in this House to disagree with his politics, but I submit that by virtue of his attainments, his knowledge, and his position, he could have well aspired to occupy any position open to an Indian under the Crown. Take another distinguished man in Benares, Babu Bhagwandas, a scholar, a student, an educationist. He has been sent to jail, and the case is so gross that even Dr. Subrahmanya Aiyer from Madras has publicly said in the papers that an appeal should be made to His Excellency the Governor General to consider the case of Babu Bhagwandas. What more has been done? Indiscriminate arrests, trials in camera, sentences which are out of all proportion to the technical offences which have been committed. You find that boys and men with honourable records have been sentenced to various terms of rigorous imprisonment because they have joined these volunteer organizations. This, I submit, is a thing which Government will do well to stop and stop forthwith. What has been, I ask, the result of this policy which has been inaugurated by Government? The result has been that this policy has been taken by the non-co-operators as a challenge to freedom of speech and to freedom of association. Thousands upon thousands have become volunteers; hartals which would otherwise not have been so complete have been made absolutely complete by the inauguration of this policy. Jail has lost its terror. Instead of being a place of humiliation, jail has become a place of honour, and to some, it has become a place of pilgrimage. Furthermore, this policy has thrown into the ranks of the non-co-operators thousands upon thousands of men who before took no interest in politics. The psychology is easily understandable. You find a man with a clean and decent life, esteemed and respected by his fellowmen, and, when you find that man sent to jail for an offence of this nature, general sympathy goes out to him because the feeling, right or wrong, is created that the man is made to suffer for the sake of his country. The result, I say, has been the aggravation of the very evil which Government wish to remove. Look at Lahore, I read in the papers only last night that hundreds of ladies have come out and are going about in the streets as volunteers. Might I ask whether this policy has been supported by the moderate opinion in this country? The National Liberal Federation has spoken against it; the moderate organizations all over the country have spoken against it; the All-India Christian Conference, the Indian Association of Calcutta, the various Bar Libraries, the Moderate Press, I shall not mention individuals of recognised worth and position who condemn this policy—in fact all have protested against this policy and urged its abandonment. I submit that what the present policy has done is to aggravate the evil which it was intended to remove. Sir, non-co-operation I shall beg this House to treat as a symptom and not as the disease itself. If you go on fighting non-co-operation without looking into the causes that have given birth to it, I submit with confidence that you will never be able to destroy it. The way to destroy non-co-operation is to remove the causes, and the causes once removed, it will wither, and will ultimately disappear. Sir, luckily for me I have on my side the authority of the Honourable the Home Member himself as regards the unsoundness of the policy of repression. Speaking in this House, he said:

‘Now, in such a situation, there were three policies open to Government. We could have gone in for a general policy of repression, but we were very unwilling to adopt this course, though we have been pressed to undertake it by a certain section of opinion. Such a policy leads nowhere. It is not consistent with the spirit of the Reforms. It would have served merely to increase bitterness and racial feeling; it would have impeded the social and political progress of this country; it is inconsistent with the greater liberty of speech and action which these Reformed Councils would demand from the Government; it would have necessarily involved an invasion of private rights which are highly cherished by all the people; it would have alienated support for Government, would have strengthened the very people we wanted to weaken, and would, I believe, materially have weakened the moderate party and precipitated disorder.’

I submit, Sir, that this is exactly what has happened on the inauguration of the present policy. Sir, as I stated at the outset, the difficulties of Government are enormous. It is up to Government to devise ways and means for restoring peace and harmony in the country. If Government will ask the assistance of the non-official Members of this House, I suppose they will be willing, they will be ready, nay they will be eager, to place their services at the disposal of Government in restoring peace and order. But, Sir, as regards the policy, I must urge its abandonment because its initiation has been bad. I must urge its abandonment because its application has been worse; I must urge its abandonment because its administration has been still worse. I must urge its abandonment because it has alienated public sympathy. I must urge its abandonment because it has aggravated the very evil that it was intended to remove. I must urge the abandonment of this policy because I believe that if persisted in, it is bound to lead to disaster.

Mr. President: Before the Assembly proceeds to debate, it may perhaps clear the air a little if I make a statement regarding the amendments on the paper. There are eighteen amendments, but there has been handed in to me this morning a comprehensive amendment, standing in several names, which supersedes most of them. It offers a definite alternative to the terms of the Resolution and practically covers all the amendments on the paper. The only amendments which in my opinion, it does not cover are those standing in the name of Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan, numbers 4 and 16, which introduce a different idea in the proposal to make the abandonment of a certain policy by Government conditional upon the abandonment of a certain policy by persons outside the Government. Therefore, I propose to take the comprehensive amendment, which has been handed to me, standing in the name of Dr. Gour and others, and then to take the amendments of Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan as an amendment to Dr. Gour's amendment.

Lient.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney (Nominated Anglo-Indian) : May I take it, Sir, that the other amendments will not be touched upon at all? My amendment is not covered by Dr. Gour's comprehensive one.

Mr. President : If, as the debate proceeds, any Honourable Member, in whose name an amendment stands, is of opinion that the question before the House does not adequately cover the purpose of his own amendment, he will be at liberty to put his amendment before the Chair, but, I think, as the debate proceeds, it will be evident that the general amendment, standing in the name of Dr. Gour and others, covers, in substance, though not actually in terms, the other amendments on the paper, except those to which I have drawn attention.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member) : May I have a copy of Dr. Gour's amendment? I have not seen it yet?

Mr. R. A. Spence (Bombay : European) : May we all have copies?

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division : Non-Muhammadan) : I will read it out. Sir, on behalf of the Democratic Party of this House, I have the privilege of moving the following amendment :

'While strongly deprecating the aggressive form of non-co-operation manifested by some non-co-operators and the resort to violence by them in some places, as also the menace of mass civil disobedience, this Assembly strongly disapproves of the recourse by Government to a general policy of repression without previously consulting this House, and recommends to the Governor General in Council the immediate abandonment of the policy of repression inaugurated in the country, the reversion to the policy announced to this House on the 23rd March, 1921, the release of all prisoners in detention in pursuance of that policy, and the convening of a conference comprising the representatives of all shades of opinion with a view to concert a practical plan for the restoration of peace in the country and for ensuring its political progress in consonance with its national aspirations.'

You will observe, Sir, that this amendment divides itself into four different parts and conveys a sense of the feeling of a section of this House, both as regards the activities of the non-co-operators outside this House and of the action taken by the Executive Government in combating non-co-operation.

It also suggests a constructive policy for the Government to adopt for the permanent settlement of the questions that are agitating this country.

Sir, my Honourable friend, the Mover of the principal Resolution, has told you in general terms the line of action which the Government took and which he has condemned. In doing so, he has referred to the genesis of the Act of 1908 which arms the Government with power to proclaim what is there described as 'unlawful associations'. If Honourable Members will turn to that Act they will find that in section 15 of Part II of the Criminal Law Amendment Act an 'unlawful association' is described in the following terms :

'Unlawful association means an association which encourages or aids persons to commit acts of violence or intimidation or of which the members habitually commit such acts.'

Then we have an extremely vague, extremely general clause which runs :

'Or which has been declared to be unlawful by the Governor General in Council under the powers hereby conferred.'

I would ask Honourable Members to indulge me for a few moments if I lay bare the facts which have culminated in the present national crisis. After the memorable speech delivered by the Leader of this House, to which reference has been made by the Mover of this Resolution, the non-co-operation movement throughout the country was languishing for want of support, and I venture to say that that movement would have died a natural death had it not been for the events to which I am about to refer. Honourable Members will well remember that on the 17th November last, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales landed in Bombay, and on that day in the City of Bombay certain riotous crowds committed excesses for which the leader of the non-co-operation movement fasted for the purpose of restoring peace. I lament, with the Members of this House, that that should have been the method adopted for the purpose of preserving peace and restoring order.

I equally lament, Sir, that the aggressive non-co-operation movement should have stimulated the hooligans of Bombay to break out into that riotous conduct. But what happened? The Bombay Government kept their heads cool. They took no action. They did not resort to the emergency legislation which then existed as it exists now on the Statute Book. Now, listen to me for a moment. On the 17th of November, the day I have referred to, they observed a complete hartal in the City of Calcutta, and on the morning of the 18th of November two Anglo-Indian dailies, which shall be nameless, came out with flaring leaders : 'The hartal in the premier City of this Empire has been dramatically complete. What is the Government going to do? Is it going to abnegate its primary right of preserving order?' Acting upon the suggestion made in these two journals, the Bengal Chamber of Commerce felt aroused to its duty and addressed an urgent letter to the Government of Bengal to suppress the Congress and the Khilafat volunteer movement, and on the same day, the Government of Bengal, acting under the section, issued a Communiqué declaring the whole volunteer movement in Bengal as unlawful and proscribing these associations under the Act. Within 24 hours of the issue of this Communiqué arrests were made in the town and suburbs of Calcutta and in many places in Bengal, and I am given to understand that no less than 3,000 volunteers were arrested in the town and neighbourhood of Calcutta. Up to that moment there was no allegation that this volunteer movement, which had been in existence for a considerable time, had violated the letter or the spirit of section 15, clause (2) sub-clause (a) of this Act. But, all of a sudden, the Government of Bengal was roused to action by the two journalistic efforts combined with the letter of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. The sole object of this repressive policy of the Bengal Government was not to preserve

Mr. President : Order, order. The Honourable Member must address his remarks to the action of the Government of India.

Dr. H. S. Gour : I presume, Sir, and I speak subject to correction, that this action by the Government of Bengal could not have been taken without the previous knowledge and sanction of the Central Government. I am quite aware

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Would the Honourable Member like to know the facts? The facts are that the Government of Bengal could have taken action without the sanction of this Government, but this Government did approve of the action taken by the Bengal Government.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I am very glad to hear it, but I knew it already, and I was going to say it, Sir. This action of the Bengal Government was not taken, we now hear, without the previous sanction or concurrence of the Government of India. I do not ignore the Devolution Rules, and I know that it was within the jurisdiction of the Bengal Government to act. But remember my words, the Bengal Government take that action and create a situation in which it may be necessary that the Central Government must co-operate for the preservation of law and order, and the Central Government realise that that may involve financial responsibilities for which the sanction of this House might be necessary. Consequently, before any Government can embark upon a wholesale policy of repression, that Government, I submit, must, as a matter of logical necessity, consult the Central Government, and that Central Government must equally, as a matter of constitutional necessity, consult this Honourable House. Now, Sir, on the 23rd of November, 1921, the United Provinces Government issued a notification and commenced arrests of volunteers. On the 5th, or I think on the 6th of December, 4 days before the Prince was due in Lucknow, the Nehru Brothers and Jawaharlal Nehru and 12 or 13 other persons were arrested, and later on 50 or 60 members of the Congress Committee were arrested on the ground that they had enlisted themselves as volunteers. Up to that date, there was no suggestion that the Nehrus or members of the Congress volunteers in the United Provinces had either aided and abetted the commission of acts of violence or had themselves habitually committed such acts. The Honourable the Mover of this Resolution has paid a compliment to the doyen of the Allahabad Bar, Pandit Motilal Nehru, in which I join. I am sure, Sir, that no Member in this House can seriously say that the Nehrus either encouraged or aided persons to commit acts of violence or that they were members of an association which habitually committed such acts.

Let me complete the picture. I have told you what took place in Bombay. I have told you what took place in Calcutta and I have told you about two journals and the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and what the Bengal Government did and, acting upon a similar impulse and providing themselves against a remote contingency, what the United Provinces Government did. I now pass on to the Punjab. In Punjab, about the 3rd or 4th of December, Lala Lajpat Rai was arrested while he was attending a committee of the Indian National Congress. A notification was issued by the Bihar Government but, yielding to the protest of the local Legislative Council, the Government withdrew its proclamation and released all the prisoners who had been arrested. I am glad to say, Sir, that a similar contingency has not arisen in my own province, and, while the notification was issued in Madras, no action was taken. This is, I submit, the brief history of this general policy of repression, upon which the Government of India embarked acting on the suggestion of a certain Government and to provide for one single contingency. That, I submit, is a short history of the general law of repression, and Honourable Members will ask how far and why the Government of India are to blame. It is perfectly obvious that if the Government of India intended to legalise and sanction, on the part of the other provincial Governments, recourse to this general policy of repression, it is only due to the Honourable Members of this House that the Government of India should have previously consulted us. Remember, Sir, we desire as much as any member of the Government would desire that there should be no disturbance of peace in the country and we are as anxious as any member of the Government would be to stamp out disorder and to arrest the spirit of lawlessness which is abroad in the country but we are equally jealous of the privileges of this House and we desire and demand that before the Government launches out on this policy of repression the Members of this House should be previously consulted and their concurrence obtained. That this is not done is the gravamen of our charge, of which the Government of India stand accused. I further submit, and I anticipate the arguments that will be advanced by the apologists of that policy that the Government of India have got the right under clause 15, sub-clause 2 (b) to declare any association unlawful, but let me remind my Honourable friend, the Law Member, and I think he will agree with me that this must be read reasonably and ejusdem generis and under this general vague clause the Government of India cannot proscribe persons lawfully engaged in a peaceful and non-violent form of activity merely because it happens to be political and intended to bring and focus popular grievances for the consideration of Government. I submit, therefore, Sir, that so far as the Government of India are concerned, they cannot stand acquitted of the charge of having embarked on a policy of general repression which was not justifiable under the circumstances of the case. Let me, Sir, clear the ground by saying that if any member of the association of volunteers or the Congress or the Khilafat was guilty of acts of violence or intimidation or of committing any unlawful acts, he should have been dealt with under the general penal law, but there is no reason why the whole association, the whole movement should be strangled because of the acts of one or two or some or many. That, I submit, is a view which commends itself to an important section of the Members of this House. Now, Sir, if I stopped short here, I should be certainly guilty of a dereliction of duty in that I should have criticised the action of Government without offering any constructive proposal.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is no doubt aware that he has already exceeded his time. He should therefore bring his remarks to a close as quickly as possible.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Fortunately, Sir, the constructive proposal I have to make is one which does not call for any lengthy explanation. We demand that people who have been arrested in Calcutta, in the United Provinces, Bengal, Patna and elsewhere should be now released and those who have heard the history of the recent repression will have no doubt left in their minds that the contingency against which provision was made is over so far as Bengal, United Provinces, Bihar and Orissa and Burma are concerned, and what reason have the Government now to keep, in duration vile, leaders like C. R. Das, like the Nehrus, like Lala Lajpat Rai and others who, I submit, have not been guilty of any substantive crime.

But, I submit, the release of those people would not be the solution of the question. It would be, I submit, merely a palliative and not a cure. Therefore I suggest that for the purpose of allaying the growing discontent in this country, and for the purpose of effecting a permanent settlement of the questions which are agitating the public mind, the Government may be pleased to convene a conference of the representatives of all shades of opinion with a view to discuss and devise means for the purpose I have stated in my amendment. With these few words, Sir, I commend my amendment to the acceptance of this House.

Mr. President: The amendment moved is, that for the original* Resolution the following be substituted :

'While strongly deprecating the aggressive form of non-co-operation manifested by some non-co-operators and the resort to violence by them in some places, as also the menace of mass civil disobedience, this Assembly strongly disapproves of the recourse by Government to a general policy of repression without previously consulting this House and recommends to the Governor General in Council the immediate abandonment of the policy of repression inaugurated in the country, the reversion to the policy announced to this House on the 23rd March, 1921, the release of all persons in detention in pursuance of that policy, and the convening of a conference comprising the representatives of all shades of opinion with a view to concert a practical plan for the restoration of peace in the country and for ensuring its political progress in consonance with its national aspirations.'

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: (Bombay City: Non-Muhammadian Urban): Sir, I rise at this early stage of the debate to oppose the Resolution moved by my Honourable friend, Munshi Iswar Saran, as also the amendment moved by my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour. Sir, I need not repeat here in this House that we are passing through a crisis. This country is faced with a situation with the like of which it has never been faced before. Whatever we say here in this House to-day, as men who are responsible, as men who owe a duty to the country, is likely to affect the situation considerably. The situation might improve if we, as responsible men, exercised our sense of responsibility, rose to the occasion, went deep down into our hearts, thought and reflected on the situation for ourselves and then stood up, and taking up a decisive attitude on the question, said openly and clearly whether we considered the Government to be in the right or in the wrong. The situation is so grave that no amount of quibbling will solve the situation. I take leave to differ from my friend, Munshi Iswar Saran, when he says that the situation is much exaggerated. The gravity of the situation, he says, is exaggerated.

Munshi Iswar Saran: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: The gravity of the situation can never be too exaggerated. Let us face facts as they are. For the last few months in the country there has been in existence a movement which has been gaining ground day after day, which has been causing a good deal of mischief in almost all parts of the country, until it has come to a stage now when it behoves us either to say that we shall support that movement and face the disorder that ensues as a result of that movement, or that we shall support the Government in dealing with that movement in order that the seeds of disorder, which can never do good to this country, may, for all time to come, disappear. It has been said that the events that took place in the country do not justify Government's launching on what is called a repressive policy. Sir, I am not a lawyer, but I should like to know what is the definition of 'repression.' If Government resorts to exceptional measures in order to put down a legitimate movement which is launched for the purpose of bringing about a state of affairs which would satisfy the political aspirations of the people, then I would agree that the Government is putting down by repressive measures a legitimate movement. But if Government puts down a movement or tries to put down a movement, which is, it must be remembered, not a constitutional movement, not a movement which aims at getting the grievances of the country constitutionally redressed, but which aims, in the words of the author of the movement, at the overthrow of the Government, which says openly that the non-co-operators have declared war against the Government, which openly declares that the adherents of the movement—I am quoting the words of the author of the movement—are rebels and have nothing to do with Government: if measures are taken to repress that movement in order that peace to the country may be secured, I submit, although I am not a lawyer, that it is not a repressive measure, it is not a repressive policy on the part of Government. (Hear, hear.) For all these months we have been hearing day after day from one leader after another that they have nothing to do with the Government, that they have broken all the ties with the existing Government, that it is a Satanic Government (too satanic to deserve any co-operation at the hands of the people of this country), that they are at war with Government, that they are rebels bound to overthrow the Government and replace it by their own Government, by their own Republic, if need be. I submit, Sir, that if on any occasion in the history of British rule in India Government have shown patience and forbearance with any political movement—I know to their cost and to the cost of the country in the past, they have put down movements of a legitimate character which were nothing compared to the movement that is now launched—I submit, Sir, that if Government have on any occasion in the history of British rule in India shown forbearance and patience towards any movement, it is on this occasion only, and in spite of the fact that this movement never concealed the fact that it was a revolutionary movement. I think the Government showed forbearance towards this movement because, as was pointed out by the Honourable the Home Member long long ago in this House, the Government relied on the support of the Moderates: the Government thought that the inauguration of the new policy of reforms would bring about a situation where responsible men in this House would enforce this opinion on the people of the country—that after all the reforms were a great measure, that everything that they wanted to achieve in the shape of political freedom can be constitutionally achieved through the Reforms.

*Vide page 1667 of these Debates.

The Government waited to see the result of our doings outside the House. The Government waited to see the result of Moderate agitation outside this House. Unfortunately, I confess, although many of us, I am bound to admit, tried our best to put our views before the people, the non-co-operators stole a march on us and we did not succeed. Let us be frank about it. We did not succeed. Still the Government waited. Events here and there, took place which clearly indicated that if repressive measures were not taken by the Government, in my own words, as I said in September in Simla, the day was not far when what happened in Malabar would probably be happening in almost every part of the country. The Government still waited. In Malabar unmentionable things have taken place. Perhaps, Sir, Honourable Members, who have neither been to Malabar nor have the vision to realise the sufferings that have been inflicted on the inhabitants in Malabar, cannot sufficiently sympathise with those sufferings. But let us leave aside Malabar. Even after the events in Malabar, Government did not resort to what is now called repressive policy. But surely we, who come from Bombay, are entitled to give to this House the benefit of what our experience has been in Bombay, especially in view of the fact that my Honourable friend from the United Provinces and my Honourable friend from the Central Provinces have thought it proper to refer to what happened in Bombay. I come from Bombay. But I never dreamt for a moment, Sir, that Bombay would ever be a place where scenes of the character and the unmentionable things that happened in Bombay on the 17th of November would ever take place. What happened in Bombay on the 17th of November, 1921? My Honourable friend says that in spite of the fact that so many things happened in Bombay, Government never resorted to a repressive policy. The Government never dreamt, and justifiably so, nor did we ever dream, nor in his own words did Mr. Gandhi ever dream,—but the Swaraj that he saw in Bombay for two days stunk in his nostrils—to quote his own words, that such things would happen in Bombay. What happened in Bombay? Sir, I wish I could convey to the House in adequate terms the slightest notion of the terrible things that took place in Bombay. Women's honour in Bombay was not safe. I do not want to shock the House by telling them that women were treated in a most shameful and unmentionable way in the streets of Bombay. The lives of three police constables were taken under the nose of Mr. Gandhi. The wife of our Honourable and esteemed colleague, our Deputy President, was one of those who, although she was stoned and badly stoned escaped coming entirely under the wrath of the non-co-operators. I wish I could describe the agony of Mr. Gandhi's soul during those two days. Unfortunately, Sir, for this country, Mr. Gandhi has a short memory. When things happened during 1919, which shocked him, he admitted his mistake and said that he had made a Himalayan miscalculation. Things happened in Malabar. Malabar was too far away from him. He could not visualise the innumerable sufferings of the people of the place. When things happened under his own nose in Bombay, he felt the agony, which I cannot adequately convey to you. Sir, I want to ask this House whether they consider that having seen things happening in Bombay, the Government of India or the Provincial Governments would have been wise to watch with folded hands the preparations which were likely to bring about the same or even worst results in other provinces. Does any Honourable Member for a minute imagine that if he were in the place of Government, if he had seen lives lost in the manner in which they were lost in Bombay—and it is reported more than fifty innocent lives were lost—if he had seen those unmentionable things that I have related which happened in Bombay, he would have risked the same, and the losing of lives in other provinces that followed, or would he not have come out in the open and said: 'while the mischievous preparations are being made for the purpose of securing safety for the people, for the purpose of preventing a situation in which the people are bound to suffer, I shall do everything in my power, and resort to all the measures that it is in my power to resort to in order legitimately to put down this agitation, which is sure to result in these terrible happenings.' Let us not mix up personalities with the issue before us. Mention has been made of respected men who are in jail to-day. Sir, I do not exaggerate, but there is hardly anyone in the country to-day who feels more than myself. I submit, that these respected leaders who, if they had only followed the right line would have deserved their places on the Treasury Bench, are in jail to-day. The suffering of these people is a matter of grave concern. But if it is necessary for us, in co-operating with Government, to invite a little suffering on a few of the population in order to avoid the large suffering which will engulf the whole population in this country and which will ruin the prospects of this country, I say unhesitatingly let us come out and invite a little suffering on a small band of people, however painful it may be for us to bear that suffering; but let us under any circumstances and at any cost, save the country from going into the clutches of a future, which is very uncertain and which is bound to bring about great disaster on our countrymen. Sir, we are faced with a very grave situation. The proposal has been made that a Round Table Conference should be called for by the Government. Again, Sir, I may be permitted to refer to the humble efforts that it was my privilege to make for the purpose of bringing about a Round Table Conference. I have been thoroughly disappointed. No man could have tried, I want to assure the House, to bring about peace by means of a Round Table Conference as I have tried, and I also want to mention to this House this fact that in the summoning of this Round Table Conference, the Government have shown their readiness to meet us in every possible way that can be imagined. The one man who has slammed the door for the Round Table Conference and who is responsible for the situation and its gravity is Mr. Gandhi. The Viceroy openly said in answer to the deputation that waited on him in Calcutta that he was prepared to have a Round Table Conference if Mr. Gandhi would agree to a truce; that no party was to blame the other party, that no party was to take credit for having come victorious and to blame the other party for having gone down, that all were to meet in order honestly and earnestly to settle the differences that were agitating the mind of the country. The Viceroy left the door wide open for the Conference. Mr. Gandhi has slammed the door, I think, for ever. Another effort was made in Bombay

Mr. K. Ahmed (Rajshahi Division : Muhammadan Bural) : On a point of order, Sir. Is the Honourable Member entitled to go beyond his time limit ?

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas : Another effort was made in Bombay only a few days back to secure the Conference. Why has that effort failed ? (Cries of ' Not failed '). To my mind it has failed, and the letter that Sir Sankaran Nair has written to the Times of India supports the statement that I am making here. Why has it failed ? Leaving aside the question of Mr. Gandhi not attending the Round Table Conference, Mr. Gandhi does not even condescend to take part officially in the Conference that was called by his friends. Sir, all means have been exhausted. All efforts have been made for peace in vain. The clear course before the Government and before us, responsible men, is either to support the Government in putting down a movement which we all know definitely, if it continues, is fraught with the gravest disaster for this country, or weakly, for fear that we might lose popularity with our people, for fear that our countrymen might blame us, to support that movement and be a party in inviting what I consider is going to be the ruin of this country. The time has come when it is not a question of supporting a foreign Government to put down disorder in the country. You have to choose between Government of any kind on the one hand and on the other hand anarchy, chaos, disorder which will for centuries give a set-back to the progress of this country. I leave the choice in the hands of the House. So far as I am concerned, I unhesitatingly and emphatically declare that I shall be with Government in putting down disorder.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras : Nominated Non-Official) : Sir, I rise at once with your permission to correct certain misstatements which have been made. As regards the Round Table Conference, which the Conference met at Bombay, tried to bring about, Mr. Jinnah has told the House that it would be a failure. He has told us that he has been attempting a similar thing and that he failed. I may say in all humility that what such a great man as Mr. Jinnah has tried and failed in, lesser men like myself and persons who have been associated with me have endeavoured to bring about and may succeed ; and I am hopeful that within the course of a fortnight or so there will be an announcement that the Round Table Conference will be summoned. Sir, since the speech which the Honourable Member has referred to, there has been a consultation with the leader of the non-co-operation movement and he has written a letter which I have handed over to the Honourable the Home Member from which it will be seen that the leader of the non-co-operation movement would attend this Conference in his official capacity. I would not say that he would not recede from the position he has taken up, because he distinctly says so in the letter which he has addressed to us. I may inform the House that after this Conference we had some doubts and one of the leaders saw Mr. Gandhi ; and Mr. Gandhi has since written this letter which he wants to be shown to the Viceroy and I take it to the Viceroy's counsellors also, so that the probability of a Conference is made easy. Now, Sir, I felt bound to offer this explanation to the House because I am anxious that those that come after me and speak on this Resolution, whether it be from the Government Benches or whether it be from the non-official Benches, should not use language which is likely to put an end to the hopes and aspirations we have in this matter, namely, to bring about peace in this country and reconciliation. For that purpose, Sir, I have been endeavouring to catch your eye as early as possible, and I appeal to the Members of this House not to use language which would make it impossible for a happy solution of the existing troubles being brought about . . .

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer (Tanjore cum Trichinopoly : Non Muhamman Rural) : Will you read Mr. Gandhi's letter?

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar : I hope, Sir, that you will allow me to reply to all these questions, because it is a matter which goes to the very root of the whole question. In the Conference, at which certain Resolutions were passed, Mr. Gandhi agreed that he would consult his Working Committee and write to the Committee appointed by the Conference that he would suspend hartals, and suspend picketing, suspend mass disobedience, until the 31st January unconditionally, and if the Round Table Conference were called, he would, until the deliberations were over, not have any resort to these three measures. Sir, at the same time, in the speech which he delivered at the Conference he said that there were certain demands which were irreducible and unless those demands were acceded to he would not be in a position to attend a Conference in his representative capacity. This gave us trouble. We took up the position which Sir William Vincent is sure to take up, namely, that it would be useless to summon any Conference if one party insists upon regarding particular demands as irreducible, as an ultimatum from which he would not withdraw. For this purpose the Committee appointed by the Conference met next morning ; we had a discussion and we deputed the most respectable amongst us, Pandit Madar Mohan Malaviya, to go to Mr. Gandhi and explain the situation. The Panditji went to Mr. Gandhi and he has got in his possession a letter written by Mr. Gandhi himself, of which I gave a typed copy to the Honourable the Home Member. I do not know whether I would be quite in order in reading this letter to you, but as it will have a bearing upon the discussion in this House I may read some portion of it. (Cries of 'The whole of it'.)

Mr. President: If the Honourable Member refers to a document which has not been published and uses it for the purposes of debate, the House is entitled to demand its publication.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: I bow to your ruling, Sir, and I shall read it. This is what he says in the letter which he wrote to Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya :

'What I mean is that until I am convinced that my demands are unreasonable, unjust or impossible of fulfilment, I would not recede from them. I would not consider the unwillingness of Government or the Parliament to grant any of these things to be a ground for reducing the demands. The value of a Round Table Conference consists in understanding each other's difficulties and making allowances for them. Hence my insistence that the Government must change their heart. If they entrench themselves behind their armed forces, a Conference is not only fruitless but mischievous; they must try to appeal to our intellect as we must try to appeal to theirs. If the Government or anybody, therefore, shows to my satisfaction that the particular demand is unreasonable or untenable, I would certainly give in as I did yesterday on the question of the mode of securing the release of political prisoners other than the two classes mentioned in Resolution 3. As soon as I realise the difficulty of acceptance of my method, I will straightaway withdraw.

Only I must add that I have so much considered the demands and understood the arguments against them that there is no reasonable prospect of my being convinced to the contrary. As against this attitude of mine, you at least (that is, referring to Panditji) would be able to put my known anxiety to avoid differences and meet more than half way wherever I can. No body who has honest and clear convictions of his own should be afraid of or despair of dealing with me. You are not, Gokhale never was though he perhaps more than you, fully understood that something in me which friends call obstinacy or obtuseness and which I call my religion. There is and must be in all of us a point beyond which one may not go. You are at liberty to use it in any way you like.'

This letter shows that in going to the Conference he would not argue that certain demands are irreducible, demands from which he would not recede. He is willing to sit with other people, to consider their opinions, and then come to a conclusion as to whether he should give way or not. Under these circumstances, Sir, I have every hope that the Government of this country will see its way to summoning a Round Table Conference of persons of all shades of opinion so that the question may be debated in full and a satisfactory solution of the present difficulties reached.

Sir, I am afraid I have taken up more time than I was entitled to, but so far I have been able to reply only to one portion of the speech of my friend, Mr. Jamnadas. If I have your permission, Sir, I should like to say a few words upon the general topic. Sir, it has been said by Mr. Jamnadas that a Round Table Conference is impossible, that an understanding with Mr. Gandhi is impossible, and that the Government are perfectly justified in the policy which it is pursuing. May I remind my Honourable friend that it is not a month even since he signed a manifesto which was presented to His Excellency the Viceroy in which he condemned along with us the policy pursued of extending the Criminal Law Amendment Act and the Seditious Meetings Act as altogether unjustified. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas: Sir, may I rise to make a personal explanation if I may interrupt my esteemed friend? I have already made mention of the fact that no one has tried more for peace than I have, and I put my signature to that address because I was in favour of the Viceroy inviting a Round Table Conference if Mr. Gandhi would agree.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar : Sir, what I said was that he has in signing that manifesto roundly and in unmistakeable terms declared that the action taken by the Government in extending the Criminal Law Amendment Act and the Seditious Meetings Act was altogether unjustified. (Hear, hear.) It is for that purpose, Sir, that I referred to it. I will not go into that matter any further. What I ask my friends on the Government Benches is this. Do you think that every other possible recourse to law had been exhausted when you extended the Criminal Law Amendment Act to the various provinces? I ask you that question, Sir, because it has not been a preventive measure, but a provocative measure. It has not put down crime. On the other hand, it has declared a large number of honest men criminals. Consequently, I ask you whether you had exhausted all the avenues of putting an end to what you call disturbances before you thought of extending the Criminal Law Amendment Act to the various provinces? You, on the Government side, know under what circumstances that Act was passed, and for what purpose it was intended. It was intended to apply to cases where there is rebellion in the country, where the ordinary law in the country is inadequate to deal with the situation, and where it is absolutely necessary to protect lives and property by other means. Is that the position now? Are you prepared to admit that the country is in such a state of rebellion that you are unable to govern it without extending the Criminal Law Amendment Act? I submit, Sir, it would be a clear confession of weakness on the part of Government to say so. I do not think that there is such a state of things in the country that you can honestly say that but for the extension of the Criminal Law Amendment Act it would be impossible to govern the country. What, after all, has been the result of extending the Criminal Law Amendment Act? You are substituting the executive mandate for the opinion of the judiciary. If you thought that a particular association was unlawful, why did you not go before the constituted authorities and take their opinion? Why do you not disclose what you consider to be the propaganda work which is likely to ruin this country? Instead of that, why do you take upon yourself to declare by an executive mandate that 'we shall ban this association and the other, and whoever offends our proclamation shall be prosecuted'. Sir, that seems to be a confession of weakness on the part of the Government, and I hope this Assembly at any rate will not sanction any proposal which has the effect of substituting executive authority for judicial pronouncements. Sir, speaking on the volunteer movement, I make bold to say that this volunteer movement is not intended for purposes of intimidation and of preventing people from pursuing their peaceful occupations. (Loud laughter.) Well, certainly some people have got a loud voice and they can laugh very loudly, but that loud laughing would not show that they are right. I know the volunteer movement in my province. I have watched the movement in other provinces, and I know that these volunteers do a great deal of social service, they do a great deal of political and religious service, and I believe that the Honourable the Law Member will bear me out when I say that there is nothing intrinsically criminal in the volunteer movement. It is only when the members resort to oppression, intimidation and violence, that you will be entitled to say that this movement must be put down. Until then Government will not be justified in putting it down. Sir, if the Government goes on at this rate, they should be under no delusion that they will be able to put down in the long run this movement and to say that the country has been brought to peace. That, I respectfully submit to Members on the Government benches, is impossible. You are creating more unrest than there is in the country, and the result of continuing this policy will be that in course of time there will be such sullen discontent and such a grim determination to resist the law that you will find it impossible to deal with the situation. You will have to build more jails, and you will have to deal with a people who are deeply discontented and who are not all friendly towards you. Under these circumstances, it is the duty of Government to see that this policy is no longer persisted in, and if there is an honest opening for a Conference, it should welcome it and see that the country is no longer subjected to the grave trials which it has been undergoing during the last 5 or 6 weeks. Otherwise, what would be the alternative? The Government will have to give up all their other duties and take to policing us. You have given out to the world that you are here more for the purpose of civilizing us, for the purpose of making us fit for having Dominion Self-government. If you are engaged in the duty of repression, and you find that there is a large number of people who have to be looked after in this country, the result of it will be that you will never have time to do any other work; you will be engaged from the beginning of the year to the end in the work of policing the country, and you will not be able to show to the civilized world that you are really in this country for the purpose of guiding us, for the purpose of making this country progress peacefully, and for the purpose of making this country fit for Dominion Self-government. You will have to face that situation. Do not be under any misapprehension that by extending the Criminal Law Amendment Act and by prosecuting a large number of people you are going to restore peace and order in the country. Far from it. You are going to make this country more ungovernable and difficult. It may be that by the summary powers you have, you will be able to put down to a certain extent the outward expression of the feeling, but the inward discontent will be there; the discontent will continue and increase, and in the end you will find that you are not able to do what you came to this country to do.

In these circumstances, I would appeal to the Government of India not to proceed with the policy of extending the provisions of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, or the Seditious Meetings Act, you will only do harm by so doing. You are not doing good to the country, nor are you doing good to the reputation of the British nation. Indeed, you will weaken it a great deal and instead of going forward you will have to go back a great deal.

Rai Bahadur Bishamphar Nath (Allahabad and Jhansi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, in making some observations on the subject before the House, I would like to confine my remarks only to a few points. Did the political situation in the country justify the adoption of the repressive policy? What has been the result of this policy, and is it likely to meet the end in view? Sir, there was unrest in the country no doubt, which still continues, and the non-co-operation movement disturbed the peace of mind of the people. But can the unrest be attributed mainly to the non-co-operation movement? Is it confined only to our country? Was not the non-co-operation movement the effect rather than the cause of the unrest? The new policy that has unfortunately been inaugurated seeks to remedy the evil by the application of the Criminal Law Amendment Act and the Seditious Meetings Act. But may I ask, in all earnestness, was the situation similar to what existed at the time in Bengal when these extraordinary measures had to be devised, and after all did these repressive measures cure Bengal of the malady or was it the bold statesmanship of Lord Hardinge in annulling the partition of Bengal and the Minto-Morley reforms that has restored peace to afflicted Bengal? Sir, howsoever objectionable the non-co-operation movement may be in itself, we have to recognize the fact that its methods are entirely different from those adopted by the revolutionaries of Bengal in 1908, who hatched their plots in the dark and resorted to pistols, bombs and daggers for the execution of their nefarious designs. The ways of the non-co-operators, insidious no doubt, are non-violent. I admit some of the votaries of the movement, contrary to the commands of their leaders, have adopted methods far from peaceful. But these eruptions have been local and spasmodic. They have been openly condemned by their leaders and the restraint exercised has not been altogether ineffective. In the majority of the provinces the hubbub has not been attended with violence. I would illustrate my point by referring to the United Provinces, to which I belong, and where unfortunately repression is being ruthlessly carried on. Before the extension of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, the agitators used to submit meekly to the application of section 144, howsoever unreasonable and unjustified was its application to a particular case was supposed to be. There was not even serious political trouble, not to speak of 'impending sanguinary revolution.' There were disturbances in some districts of Oudh no doubt, but they were due to causes purely economic and agrarian. I respectfully join issue therefore with His Excellency Sir Harcourt Butler when he says that:

'The situation was acute and critical, the disorderly element had come in, ruffians were hired or collected together. Had not the Government taken prompt action against the ringleaders, the Provinces would have no doubt passed through a period of bloodshed and misery which would have been remembered for many years to come.'

On the contrary, I hold that the situation, not at all critical, has been made so and is being steadily aggravated by an irritated and panic-stricken Government, recklessly pursuing the policy of repression. A regular crusade against political bodies solemnly pledged to non-violence, indiscriminate arrests and convictions of some of the most respectable citizens for offences merely technical, heavy and capricious sentences on youths guilty of no other than juvenile freaks capable of being remedied more effectively by their guardians and teachers rather than by magistrates and jailors, are methods which, to say the least, are not likely to foster affection for the Government. I admit, Sir, people should not have defied the Criminal Law Amendment Act and the Seditious Meetings Act. But, at the same time, I submit, Sir, that the law under promise of repeal and meant to be applied to a situation quite different should not have been resorted to and the elementary rights of citizens of freedom of speech and association should not have been lightly invaded. And what has been the result of this policy of relentless repression? Disaffection is going deeper, volunteers formerly only few in number have now increased by hundreds and thousands. Quiet submission to law has assumed the form of open defiance. The heart of the people perfectly sound is getting more and more affected. Sir, I submit in all humility that the new policy has failed miserably and the sooner it is abandoned the better for the people and the Government. Condemning the non-co-operation movement in the Darbar speech of the 17th December last, His Excellency Sir Harcourt Butler was pleased to observe :

'That the attempt to boycott Colleges and Schools failed signally. I did not affect in the Province one per cent of the students and scholars. The attempt to boycott the law courts was wholly unsuccessful. The appeal to surrender titles given by and offices held under the Government fell on deaf ears. The efforts to seduce soldiers and policemen were mostly in vain.'

May I then respectfully inquire where was the necessity for the change of policy? Nobody holds a brief for those who use violence. Punish them by all means. People who transgress the law of the land deliberately must be prepared to take the consequences. But has not the ordinary law of the land made ample provision to bring into its clutches those who invade the liberty of others? Why then have recourse to laws meant for totally different conditions. If the existing law does not suffice, necessary amendments can be made. To pursue a policy of wholesale repression by utilizing the Criminal Law Amendment and the Seditious Meetings Acts will, I am afraid, make matters worse. The policy has defeated its own end and as such should be abandoned. The question is put to us as to what the Government should do in order to counteract the pernicious effects of the non-co-operation movement. All that I can say in reply is, that if they cannot think out the right remedy, let them for God's sake give up the use of the wrong drugs which are simply aggravating the disease. If the non-co-operation movement does not subside on account of its inherent weakness, let a correct diagnosis be made, its root causes discovered and effectively remedied. With these few words, I beg to support the amendment.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala (Agra Division: Non-Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I do not wish to recite the deplorable events of recent times which have already been laid bare before Honourable Members. But there cannot be two opinions about the stern fact that the political situation in India just now is very critical and demands most thoughtful and careful treatment.

'At a juncture like the present' to use the words of His Highness the Maharaja of Bikaner :

'it behoves everyone to be careful to say nothing which might aggravate the situation.'

It cannot be denied that the India of to-day is not what it was 5 years ago. The recent repressive policy of the Government, of extending and applying the Criminal Law Amendment Act, the Defence of India Act and the Seditious Meetings Act to several parts of India, and also the misuse of the existing laws resulting in wholesale arrests and imprisonments, can never lead to good government. Such a policy is self-destructive and has supplied nourishment to the non-co-operation movement in order that it might grow strong. Otherwise, it would have died out or continued only as a social or a commercial organization preaching temperance and the use of Swadeshi goods against which the Government, as such, cannot complain.

They must remember that well-known saying 'ja ko Prabhu darun dukh denyi taki mati pahle har lenyi' (whoever is destined to suffer extreme misery is deprived of his brains).

In the course of an altercation over Gandhi caps, only last month, I read in a newspaper that an Indian was shot by a European at Dehra Dun. Such is the height of feeling.

[Lala Girdharilal Agarwala.]

What good has happened by arresting and putting into jail so many Indians, some of whom are highly respected in the country even by those who do not agree with them in their political creed? One result which everybody can see is that jail life has lost all terror and humiliation. At the time of going to jail people are cheered and garlanded. Khilafat and Congress volunteer organisations which have been declared illegal are swelling from day to day. If you arrest 10, you find 20 taking their place. Sometimes a larger number of persons enter the prison vans than are actually wanted, as if they were going to a sacred place. How many persons can you imprison? Why should not better counsel prevail? The reign of terror cannot last long! Screw not the chord too tight lest it break! The best policy is to adopt conciliatory methods. Surely there is no bankruptcy of statesmanship! Why not then put your heads together and come to some common understanding and 'bring peace and prosperity'—to use the words of His Imperial Majesty the King-Emperor—'based upon mutual understanding and good will'!

I am one of the most loyal supporters of the British connection in the country. Please remember: Do not treat those who are at present opposed to you in such a way that their future co-operation with you will become impossible. Please remember what a Wazir said to a King who had first ill-treated him and then tried to reconcile him by presenting him with pearls: Dilra shakistai na ki gohar shakistai (You have broken the heart and not the pearls).

I therefore strongly advise the Government immediately to abandon the policy of repression, and to release all the victims of such a policy and confer with the representatives of all shades of opinion with a view to devise a practical plan for the restoration of peace in the country and for ensuring its political progress in consonance with its national aspirations.

Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava (Ambala Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, the policy of 'let alone', i.e., non-interference pursued by the Government in relation to the non-co-operation movement till some months past was really what it ought to have been, and if it erred at all, it erred on the right side. It is also an open secret that in reference to several items of the non-co-operation programme, the movement had not succeeded to an appreciable extent. In November last, the item which was to be taken up was the campaign of civil disobedience, but the difficulty of finding many unmoral laws and orders which could be effectively resisted stood in the way of the non-co-operators. Unfortunately, the most deplorable events which took place in Bombay in that month on the very day His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales landed there altered the situation altogether. The Government introduced a radical change in its policy and launched upon widespread and wholesale repression. Notifications were issued by various Local Governments one after the other under the Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908, as amended by the Devolution Act of 1920, declaring the volunteer organisations unlawful and notifications and proclamations were issued under the Prevention of Seditious Meetings Act of 1911. Thus the serious difficulty which stood in the way of the non-co-operators to start the campaign of civil disobedience was removed and an opportunity was afforded to them to fulfil their cherished desire. The Government took action under these Acts, apparently with the laudable object of maintaining peace and order and protecting peaceful and law-abiding citizens and it is too true that the solicitude of the Government for the maintenance of law and order is none too great and all steps taken for these ends should receive the full support of the people in general. But the real question at issue is whether the measures adopted by the Government under these acts were justified by the circumstances or not and whether they have succeeded in achieving the object in view. Granted that there were cases of intimidation by volunteers in some places and of interference with the liberty of the buyers and sellers of liquor and other articles, in others one cannot resist the conclusion that the remedy adopted for the prevention of the recurrence of such cases was worse than the disease itself. Could not such individual cases be inquired into, properly dealt with, and deterrent sentences, if necessary, passed on them, under the ordinary law of the land? The enforcement of such obnoxious and harsh measures as the prevention of Seditious Meetings Act and the Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act, which unduly interfere with the fundamental and elementary rights of free speech and association of the people at large, certainly demanded a much stronger case than the one evidenced by stray cases of intimidation by volunteers on an inconsiderable scale, and these too in very few places. It is not strange, therefore, that the people regard the extension of these measures (adopted ostensibly in the name of peace and order) as calculated to stifle and crush all their political activities and legitimate national aspirations. These apprehensions are further strengthened by the recent orders regarding the press and newspapers like the 'Independent' of Allahabad and the 'Partap', the 'Kesari' and the 'Bande Matram', of Lahore, especially at a time when the Bill to repeal the Press Act is on the anvil of legislation and is likely to be passed this very month. As a matter of fact, there are many persons who have dispassionately and most carefully considered the situation in all its aspects who agree with Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya in thinking that to declare Congress Volunteer Organisations unlawful was a great blunder committed by the Government.

That these notifications have failed to achieve the object aimed at admits of no manner of doubt. Not to speak of the rank and file, many non-cooperation leaders, men of unimpeachable character, great wealth and eminence, held in the highest esteem by their countrymen for their sacrifice and patriotism, some of whom, whose names I need not mention as they are well known to you all, could have very well adorned the front benches of the Legislature of any country and incarcerated in jails and from that place attract sympathy for themselves and the cause they have at heart. The volunteers parade the streets in towns, big and small, in open defiance of law with nobody to vindicate it by their arrest. Of course it is lamentable that in some places those who ought to uphold and maintain order stoop to methods which are the very travesty of law and in the name of law and order commit excesses which embitter public opinion and acerbate mutual relations. Enrolment of volunteers has not ceased, but is going on vigorously. The prevention of Seditious Meetings Act is also being flagrantly violated. The participation of ladies in the agitation against these measures has lent to the movement an impetus of unabated zeal and vigour. Even in a small town like Hissar in the Punjab, the place of my residence, only day before yesterday a procession of ladies, Hindus and Muhammadans, passed through the streets to the utter bewilderment of the authorities. In fact a situation of great delicacy and difficulty has arisen, in which leniency in the application of these measures looks like weakness and is regarded by the people as such, and stringency in enforcing them spells unalloyed tyranny. These measures, like other repressive measures, in all climes and ages, are sure to defeat their own ends, and the sooner they are withdrawn the better it is for all concerned. Lawlessness, stalking through the King's highways, does not present a spectacle either for the Government or the people to exult at. But can the Government claim that it is not in a fair measure responsible for precipitating and hastening the situation to take the present critical turn? I am afraid it cannot. This repressive policy and these notifications have landed the country in such a predicament that only courageous and wise statesmanship can solve the difficulty. It can hardly be gainsaid that the situation is extremely grave and the future is fraught with gloomy forebodings. The conflict between the Government and the people is one on which neither can be congratulated.

To my mind the abandonment of the policy of repression is the only solution of the difficulty. Let steps be taken to have the notifications under the prevention of Seditious Meetings Act and the Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act at once withdrawn and all persons arrested or convicted for violating these and other repressive laws be forthwith released and a Round Table Conference with persons representing all shades of political opinion be convened with a view to substitute harmony and peace for discord and disorder which are reigning in the country and are sure to reign if the present policy is pursued, and a radical change for the better will, as a matter of course, follow.

In conclusion, I again urge with all the emphasis that I can command, that it is but necessary that repression should give place to conciliation in order to relieve the tension and ease the present situation and that the Government while not neglecting its primary duty of maintaining order and peace and punishing lawlessness under the ordinary law of the land should radically change its policy and have resort to measures which may conduce to secure the good will of the people. With these words, I heartily support the amendment moved by Dr. Gour.

1 P.M.

Maulvi Abul Kasem (Dacca Division : Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I fully realise the uncomfortable position in which I am at the present moment. I feel myself on the horns of a dilemma. On the one hand, I feel that I will be shirking my responsibility and neglecting my duty if I simply give my silent vote on this important Resolution. On the other hand, I equally feel that, if I speak out my mind and give expression to my own opinion and my judgment, I shall be making myself disagreeable to a large section of my countrymen and my views will be unpalatable to them all. But I have to face the situation as it is. Sir, the Resolution lays down that this Assembly asks the Government to abandon, and abandon immediately, the repressive policy. As has been pointed out by Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas, we want a definition of repressive policy. To understand this, for a layman like myself, I have to analyse the situation, as the very learned Mover has done it. I understand the country is faced with a problem. Here is Mr. Gandhi, with a programme of non-co-operation and non-violent non-co-operation if you like, with a programme defined, illustrated, clearly stated and we have had a year's experience of the methods by which that programme is being executed and carried into practice. If people believe, and there are a very large number who do, that that is the proper method and the proper programme for the solution of our difficulties, for the attainment of Self-government, and that the carrying out of this programme and by the methods dictated to by the Dictator is likely to advance the cause of the country, to bring in peace, contentment and happiness to its people, I believe it is the duty of every mother's son in India who so believes to join that propaganda, to work it out and bring it to a success. If, on the other hand, people believe, as I do believe, that this programme of Mr. Gandhi, as set out by him in clear terms, is a set-back in the progress of the country, retards it and brings the country to wreck and ruin, I equally believe that it is the duty of every man in the country worth his salt to fight it out to the best of his ability. That is the situation. I do not claim wisdom for myself. I have neither the right nor the privilege, either temporal or spiritual, to claim that right, but I believe myself to be true to my opinion and at the same time I do not and cannot say that the other side is wrong. Those who believe in the other side owe it to themselves and their countrymen that they should join it. It is no use sitting on the fence. In politics there is nothing like a stand-still. You must either go forwards or backwards. Now, as regards the terms of this Resolution, it has been said that the Government have inaugurated a policy of repression, and, as instances, mention has been made of the arrest and imprisonment of a large number of volunteers and of some of our most respected and venerable leaders. I admit that it is a painful thing to see so many of our countrymen losing their liberty, but I want to know whether it is the Government which imprisoned them or whether it was the Government which only satisfied their ambition or their vanity to be in jail. Reading an article in Mr. Gandhi's 'Young India' I found it stating the other day speaking of a distinguished countryman of mine, that the opportunity of going to jail having come so very soon, he has availed himself of it. And, if people are anxious to be the guests of the country or the guests of His Majesty, I see no reason why their wish should not be gratified. It has been said that in Bengal, thousands of people have been imprisoned. I may tell this House for its information that the Government of Bengal got a large number of people convicted at different police courts in the City of Calcutta, but the majority of them are let out by the backdoor as they are taken in by the front one and the same set of people are coming in every day. Readers of newspapers must have found, even in non-co-operation papers like the 'Servant', mention day after day, of the number they sent out and the number that were arrested. It will be found that the people who went hankering after jail were three times as much as those who got it. Sir, what is the reason for this craze for being jail-birds. The craze is because the dictum has gone forth that a man cannot be a patriot, a saviour of his country and a lover of the nation, unless he once visits His Majesty's jail, and nobody has a right to speak on behalf of the country unless he has one conviction to prove against him. If that is the mentality, what is the Government to do? I certainly agree with my friends that it was useless to use section 17 (b) of a special law for this purpose. I do not approve of it and I think it should be abolished as early as possible but my motives are different. I do not approve of it because it is not effective. It has not served the purpose it was intended to serve. On the other hand, the Government have strengthened the hands of the non-co-operators by taking action under those sections. The people of this country who share my view think that it is the duty of Government, as the protector of peace, law and order, to see that this is not done, that effective measures are adopted to bring about a cessation of the activities of this movement. Sir, reading the Resolution, I find that they begin by condemning certain actions of an aggressive nature on the part of the non-co-operators. Am I to understand from the learned Mover of this Resolution that apart from the aggressiveness of certain non-co-operators and the violence used by some of these people, this House is prepared to approve the programme of the non-co-operators that has been laid down by Mr. Gandhi? If it is, I think you can adopt this amendment. Otherwise, we have to say that this House not only disapproves of the aggressiveness and the violent actions of the non-co-operators but also the programme itself. The second question is that while it only condemns those portions of the programme of the non-co-operators, it asks the Government to withdraw and suspend its activities in the matter. It does not call upon the non-co-operators to suspend their activities and it cannot do so. Sir, I was told a little story by a countryman of mine that whenever your son quarrels with your neighbour's boy, the best course you can adopt is to jump into the arena, shout out 'Boys, don't fight' and in the meantime catch hold of the arms of the neighbour's boy and allow your boy ample opportunity to strike your neighbour's boy.

So, while you say that you condemn this aggressiveness and that violence on the part of the non-co-operators, you ask the Government to tie its hands while the non-co-operators use all the machinery of war which they have in their armoury. Again, the last portion of this Resolution reads: 'that means should be taken for meeting the legitimate aspirations of the people'. I really believe that the time has come when we ought to put our heads together for the removal of our grievances and for a further advance in the political aspirations of the country; but we must limit our aspirations according to the circumstances and according to our capabilities. Here again, with the permission of this House, if I am not too much of a bore, I will repeat another story. An old woman in one of the suburbs of London once went into a butcher's shop and stood before the stall. The butcher asked, 'Madam, what do you want?' She replied, 'If you ask me what I want, then I have to say that I want a house in Park Lane, a Rolls Royce Motor-car and £20,000 a year to live upon. But if you wish to know what I expect to get, it is only two pounds of mutton on credit till Saturday.' So I consider in regard to our aspirations the question is not what we want but what we are likely to be able to enjoy, and, what is more, what we are likely to get. A suggestion has been made by no less a person than Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, who has just come from Bombay as a messenger of peace, and is a countryman of mine who has been in the front rank of the public life of the country for over a quarter of a century, that a Round Table Conference is being arranged and that Mr. Gandhi has condescended to come down to it and is climbing down. But I want to know from Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar whether it is not necessary for a Round Table Conference that there should be a common basis of understanding. Here is Mr. Gandhi who has given out as his deliberate aim and goal in life, and the essence of the non-co-operation programme, the overthrow of the present Government and the paralysing of it by all the means at his disposal. If he does not give up that aim and goal, what is the good of having a Round Table Conference, or, for the matter of that, a Rectangular Table Conference? I would just remind Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar of a Resolution of which he has given notice and which comes up for discussion, I believe, the first thing to-morrow morning, in which he asks that a Committee of this House be formed for the purpose of advising Government to consider the present situation and to devise means for meeting it. I think that is a Resolution which Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar came to after due and deliberate consideration of the entire situation, and I think that that Resolution meets the present situation quite well. But, to add to it and say that the Government should call a Round Table Conference to discuss matters ad infinitum without a common basis and without a definite proposal before it, is, I think, futile.

Then, again, Sir, we, in this House, have got absolutely no influence with non-co-operators and when there are two conflicting parties, if you cannot influence the one, you have no business to interfere with the other: that is to say, if we take it that the Government and the non-co-operators are two different parties.

One word more, Sir, about intimidation, threats and lawlessness. It has been remarked by Munshi Iswar Saran, and he has quoted chapter and verse for it reading from the creed of the non-co-operation movement, that non-violence is the essence of the movement, and before God and man they swear that they will be non-violent. I know that and I have read that as well as Munshi Iswar Saran; but what has been the practice? I have not been in touch with Mr. Gandhi for about 15 months and I cannot speak about him, but as regards his followers—I do not mean the insignificant followers, but some of the most distinguished of his followers—I would ask, have they in their actions followed this principle? I may just tell Munshi Iswar Saran and Dr. Gour that no less a person than Maulana Abul Kalam Azad of Calcutta came to my house, where a meeting was being held of a large number of Muhammadans, among whom were some of our distinguished co-religionists—he came to that house of mine and wanted to take part in the deliberations, and therein he stood up and said: 'Those of you who will dare go to the Legislative Council against the mandates of the Congress will suffer for it'. That was the threat he held out to us, and, what is more, before the elections were held, one of the Members who had been present at that meeting and who had offered himself for a seat on the Bengal Legislative Council, had his house broken into by two volunteers with a revolver, and the man was so terrified that he immediately wired the withdrawal of his candidature for the Bengal Legislative Council. That is what has happened. Then, again, Sir, in the town of Burdwan, where I live, a junior pleader who happened to be the editor of a small vernacular journal had the audacity to write an article in his paper against this non-co-operation movement, and the result was that, while his wife was lying dangerously ill in bed, on her death bed in fact, a man was sent to fetch a doctor. The doctor was obtained but, when he was on the way, volunteers held him up and said that the pleader was against non-co-operation and that he could not proceed to his house: the gharrwallah was threatened with bodily hurt if he carried the doctor there. Word was also sent round that no gharrwallah in the city of Burdwan was to carry a doctor to the unfortunate pleader's house. The result was that no doctor was available, and the poor girl—she was but a girl—died the next morning for want of medical aid. And these are the volunteers who met with the approval of Mr. Gandhi. Did Mr. Gandhi or his lieutenants in Bengal condemn this action, or did not the volunteers receive a pat on the back! These actions are the soul of the non-co-operation movement, and when these actions are committed, the leaders go and pat the volunteers on the back, encourage them and sometimes congratulate them on their success. That has been the bane of the whole movement.

I am distinctly of opinion that there are two courses open to an Indian at the present day, either to go and join Mr. Gandhi's movement—I do not say that they will be wrong in doing so; if they honestly believe that his propaganda is right and that it is the proper road to the salvation of the country, they will be quite as justified in joining Mr. Gandhi irrespective of the consequences, as I am in joining the ranks of those who believe in the opposite opinion, namely, that it is contrary to the interests of the country to do so. Every man ought to fight out this question with himself to the best of his ability and his conscience.

With these few words I beg to oppose the Resolution as it stands and the amendment in toto.

The Assembly then adjourned till twenty Minutes past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes past Two of the Clock. Mr. President was in the chair.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, I am glad of an opportunity of speaking at an early period in the session on the measures adopted by Government to meet the recent activities of the non-co-operation movement. Honourable Members of the Assembly will, I think, give me credit for having been prepared to meet them, and take consultation with them at the earliest opportunity. We have been blamed to-day by one Honourable Member in that the Government of India took action without previously consulting the Legislative Assembly. I will deal with that matter later on. At the moment, may I say that, when we did offer an opportunity to this Assembly to discuss the matter, at the earliest opportunity possible, it was not the official Members of this Assembly that refused the offer but the Non-officials. I am glad, however, to discuss the question early particularly because I seek to remove what I believe to be great misapprehensions on the part of many Members of this Assembly and many members of the public in regard to the attitude and policy of Government. Our previous policy in regard to this non-co-operation movement I have frequently explained in this Assembly. We have acted always with one object, viz., the idea of avoiding interference with the activities of this movement so long as the public peace was not touched and the maintenance of law and order was not endangered. We believed the movement was, as it is, intrinsically unsound. We hoped that this view would appeal to the majority of the people in this country and that the moderate party would use their influence to disabuse the people of the harmful and foolish proposals put forward by Mr Gandhi and his followers. May I refer for one moment to our Resolution of October or November 1920, when we appealed particularly to the moderate party to assist us in this matter. All this time, however, we always insisted on the prosecution of persons guilty of direct or indirect incitements to violence. And there was one other activity we always sought to combat, namely, the dissemination of edition among our soldiers and police. In January last, again, I explained to this Assembly in detail the policy of Government. There was, however, always this proviso in our statements of policy that we were well aware we might be forced into more vigorous application of our measures against sedition, and that a time might come when it would be a criminal betrayal of our duty not to do so. I say, Sir, from that time we have always avoided systematically and steadily any excessive severity vis a vis this movement. Later, there were a number of seditious speeches, including incitements to violence, particularly by Mr. Muhammad Ali and his brother, and Government were prepared to take action against them. What ensued is well known to the Members of this Assembly. There were meetings between Mr. Gandhi and His Excellency, and later Muhammad Ali and his brother offered to the public certain undertakings on which the Government withdrew the prosecutions against them. In a letter of June, 1921, addressed to Local Governments after this undertaking we indeed expressed some hope that it might be possible to reduce the number of prosecutions. We were anxious not to force the pace and although we always maintained our determination to keep order, we sought to avoid over-drastring action against the less dangerous or less violent adherents of the movement. At the same time we indicated to Local Governments that they were not to prosecute persons, the prosecution of whom might have great effect outside the province, without consulting the Government of India. In that letter, further, we invited Local Governments to give certain other convicted persons the same locus poenitentiae which had been given to Muhammad Ali and his brother. We have throughout avoided very carefully any suggestion, any action, which might create the impression that we desired to interfere with a legitimate political movement. I defy any Member of this Assembly to say otherwise. We have indeed frequently been reproached with weakness on this account. I maintain that it was not weakness but patience. At the same time, we made every effort to meet the legitimate wishes of educated opinion in this country. I have no time to-day to recapitulate all we have done but I should like to mention such matters as the compensation to persons injured in the Punjab disorders, the further review of the Punjab sentences, the Committee on the Press Act, the results of which will be before this Assembly very shortly; again, the Committee on repressive measures and the Committee to inquire into racial distinctions in criminal proceedings. In fact, there was no question that came before us in which we did not honestly seek to meet moderate Members of the Assembly in order to consolidate the moderate party into a great working power in the country for good. What has been the response of Mr. Gandhi and his followers? I maintain that it has been one steady stream of sedition, one steady attempt to subvert Government, one method of promoting this object being adopted after another. Sometimes it has been the boycott of piece-goods in order to injure British trade, although Mr. Gandhi had himself, I believe, at one time said that 'boycott' was a word that was entirely inconsistent with his principle of 'Ahimsa'. Later this movement took the form of attempts on the loyalty of our troops attempts on the police and there were constant incitements to disorder. These have resulted in serious outbreaks of violence in many parts of the country, the most important of which was the Moplah outbreak. Sir, there has recently been some attempt to minimise the cruelties committed by the Moplahs in Malabar. I refer in particular to the remarks of Mr. Abdul Bari and Mr. Hasrat Mohani on this subject. Mr. Abdul Bari spoke of the pure spirit of the Moplahs and denied the veracity of these accounts of their atrocities. Mr. Hasrat Mohani justifies them in the following words:

'At such a critical juncture when they are engaged in war against the English, their Hindu neighbours not only do not help them or observe neutrality but aid and assist the English in every possible way. They can indeed contend that, while they are fighting a defensive war for the sake of their religion and have left their houses, property and belongings, and taken refuge in the hills and jungles, it is unfair to characterise as plunder their commandeering of money, provisions and other necessities for their troops from the English and their supporters.'

Many of us, however, have, I believe, some knowledge of the atrocities committed by these men, atrocities which I am certain in my mind that every Mussalman in this House deplors as deeply as I do, and they will appreciate what a misrepresentation of the facts this is. The barbarities of the Moplahs have been indefensible. I will cite one instance from 'New India' in support of what I say. Writing of a respectable Nair, an article in this paper states:

'When on the 26th he threatened other steps, the rebels forced their way into his house, dragged him out, along with his wife and two children, carried them to the mosque and bathed all four and compelled them to recite verses from the Koran and dress as Moplahs. At mid-night they were led home and imprisoned. Next day the deponent's head was shaved and ten days later a certain notorious criminal (now in custody) forcibly circumcised the deponent. Three weeks later he and his family and other converts (some being Christians) escaped to Shoranur.'

Sir, I am one of those who have been to Malabar. I have seen myself refugees, a thousand in one refuge, hungry, homeless, lacking clothes, and I can assure Members of this Assembly that it was a pitiable sight to see. I only mention the facts because this attempt has been made and because this rising, these acts of cruelty and murder are one of the direct results of the Khilafat movement. I do not put it (I never have put it) that Mr. Gandhi is responsible for this directly, but I do say that his supporters—his Muhammadan supporters—were the cause of this terrible loss of life. Indeed you have only got to read Mr. Hasrat Mohani's speech to see what the character of the rising was. Now, if the Moplah outbreak had been an isolated instance of disorder, as I said in the last Session, the Government might not have been forced to take action against this non-co-operation movement. It might well have been argued that the circumstances were exceptional. But have Members of this Assembly read the report which is attached to the Repressive Measures Committee? Have they read the appendix setting out a list of 84 outbreaks of disorder of a serious character within a year? Sir, we have been told that after the declaration of policy by this Government in March last, the non-co-operation movement was dying down. I think that I am correct in making this statement, and I hope I am not misrepresenting anybody. Is there any foundation for it? Does not every Member of this Assembly know that that is absolutely inaccurate? Does not every Member here know that the movement of disloyalty to the Crown, intended to paralyse Government, intended to subvert the administration, has been growing day by day throughout the year? Can any man here say that actually the movement was losing strength? Do not these disorders tell a different story—these outbreaks which culminated in the riots in Bombay on the 17th November? Before I come to that, however, I want to deal with another point. May I inform this Assembly that, during the present year, it has been necessary to call out the military to suppress serious disorder no less than 47 times? May I tell them that, during the last three months, military assistance has had to be invoked—I have here the figures from His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief—no less than 19 times? Does that look as if the forces of disorder were losing strength before the Government took this action?

And now, Sir, I want to turn to the rioting in Bombay in which the lawless tendencies of those who follow Mr. Gandhi—not of Mr. Gandhi himself—culminated. Bombay is a city in which Mr. Gandhi is supposed to exercise the greatest influence. He himself was present there on the 17th November. The occasion was one, one would have thought, when at least every loyal citizen of the Crown, whatever his political views, would have avoided any disorder or riot. It was the occasion of the landing of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, the heir to the Throne of England. That was the occasion chosen by the non-co-operators in Bombay for an outbreak of violence which, I believe, has not been paralleled in that city for many many years, and what was the object of those who embarked upon this campaign of violence? I say the object was vengeance, vengeance on those who dared to differ from them politically, vengeance on those who dared to go forth to welcome His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales in spite of Mr. Gandhi's direction—that was the sole crime of the unfortunate people so maltreated. That, Sir, is the result of non-violent non-co-operation. Was Mr. Gandhi able to exercise any influence to stop the demand? Why, it was pathetic to read his words next day. He was full of sorrow, but he had not thought of the consequences of his act before. After all he had had warning on previous occasions. Well, Sir, I do not know that I need go through the events of those terrible days. You have heard from my Honourable friend, Mr. Dwarkadas, how women were assaulted in the public streets; you have read in the papers how harmless Europeans and Indians, including many Parsis, were murdered or assaulted, how one unfortunate engine-driver, going home from his work, a harmless individual, was suddenly attacked and murdered by a cruel mob. All this was the result of this non-violent movement. The reports say that it began in intimidation and that, when that was not checked, those who had been guilty of intimidation thought they could proceed with impunity to violence. The damage done to property also—the property of private individuals—was very great. I read, in one report, of 137 shops being looted and that is an under-statement of all the damage.

Now, let us see what was happening in other places on that day? In Delhi there was a hartal enforced by systematic threats and intimidation. And I assert here, and I dare any one to contradict me, that intimidation was practised by men posing as volunteers; men dressed as volunteers who paraded the streets and interfered with the liberty of law-abiding citizens in a manner that is intolerable in any civilised community. Is it surprising that we received many complaints actually of absolute want of any Government control at the time? In Calcutta, again, there was a hartal, promoted by general intimidation and violence on the part of volunteers. It is idle for any one to deny it. Mr. Abul Kasem and other Members were in Calcutta and they know the facts. The Government of Bengal, writing on the 26th November, reported that an incessant stream of seditious speeches was being poured forth, that money was being freely spent in the employment of paid agents; and here I may tell the Assembly that many of these volunteers,—I do not say all of them because that would be wrong,—but many of these volunteers are merely paid men, paid a rupee a day; and, in fact, when the supply of money dries up,—and there have been places where this has happened,—the supply of volunteers has run short. We were also told by the Bengal Government that on the 17th there was general suspension of activities of all kinds, and the riff-raff of the city, under the guise of volunteers, was abroad, terrorising and abusing law-abiding folk, and there were numerous instances of molestations of Europeans and Indians. The authority of Government was openly flouted; and law-abiding citizens were depressed because of Government's failure to protect them. I have got instances here of the different kinds of speeches made in Bengal. I do not think I need cite them except to mention that one of them says:

'That the Bengalees had discovered the death-arrow of the English. Remember Kanai and Khudiram Bose and others of Bengal.'

I do not suppose the Members of this Assembly know who they were; they were prominent murderers; some, if not all of them, were hanged. Well, Sir, the whole effect of the activities was that, on the 17th of November in Calcutta there was an absolute effacement of the authority of Government, and general intimidation throughout the whole of the city. I am told now that we exaggerated all this: 'There was a hartal, it is true, but there was nothing more than a voluntary one.' Well, the Amrita Bazar Patrika itself stated on the morning of the 18th a most significant fact—I cite it because it is testimony coming from an adversary—it said on the 18th 'Writ large on the hartal of Calcutta is revolution.' Now I ask the Assembly to ponder those words.

I may say that throughout all this period the most desperate efforts were made to create racial animosity. Those who were in Calcutta in December last—I was there—know how true this is and it was a very dangerous factor in the situation. There was also at that time every reason to believe that if the activities of these so-called volunteers were not curtailed, we should have a repetition in Calcutta of what we had in Bombay. Now the total deaths in Bombay were 53 people killed, and I think something like 400 injured went to the hospital. The problem before the Government, therefore, was: are you going to sit quietly, or, as my Honourable friend said, 'with folded hands' and watch with apathy and inertia this slaughter of innocent people, or are you going to take action while there is yet time? The Assembly remember also that previously, on the 14th of November, there had been already a dangerous riot in Calcutta at Belgatchia, in which over 5,000 people had been engaged. Now, I maintain that, in such circumstances, the Bengal Government were fully justified in taking the action that they did. We have abundant testimony that, whatever be the professions of those who inaugurate these volunteer movements, their practice and precept are poles apart. You may say that they enter into a solemn vow of non-violence, but in practice they are repeatedly, constantly and persistently, guilty of intimidation and violence. Let me turn to another province. I have got a report here from the Bihar Government. We called for these reports to see on what grounds they had proceeded against these associations. The replies show that Local Governments were satisfied that the members of the proscribed associations went in systematically for this class of offence. To return to Bihar, on the 10th of December, I received a report from the Local Government which says that these volunteers had been guilty of intimidation, violence and other forms of criminal action on no less than 122 occasions reported in the last year. One of the incidents is worthy of special mention, indeed many of them are. The one to which I refer was the case of a poor Muhammadan who had the misfortune to be a law-abiding subject of the Crown. He died in Ranchi and his funeral had to be performed. But the non-co-operators said: 'No, he shall not be buried by Muhammadans.' Well, some over-daring spirit said: 'Oh, his was not so great an offence that we should allow this oppression; men who differ from others in their political views are entitled to a little toleration.' So they took the body to the graveyard with police protection and buried it. What was the next action of the extremists? The non-co-operation volunteers dug up the corpse and dishonoured it. ('Shame'.) Well, that is the conduct of these non-violent non-co-operation volunteers. Again, on the 17th, in Calcutta, there were unfortunately two Muhammadans who died in Ballygunge of natural causes and those who wished to bury them could not procure the necessary assistance; they were unable to procure bearers or khatias or anything else and the bodies remained unburied for the whole of that day. There was many a sick man and woman in Calcutta on the 17th who could not procure medical attendance. No conveyances for medical practitioners, and when doctors walked to the patients and attended on them, they would not get medicine, because the dispensaries were not allowed under the strict orders of the non-co-operators to sell medicine even to save life on that day. Now, is that intimidation or is it not? I have been told that Government interferes with the liberty of the subject in proscribing these associations. I am amazed at the audacity of those who make such an accusation, whether it comes from the Members of this Assembly or from those who are of different political opinions, and I include Mr. Gandhi. Who in reality has interfered with the liberty of the subject to the same extent as members of his party? Who is it that will not allow those who wish to welcome the Prince to do so? Who prevents reasonable respect being shown to the dead? Who boycotts and intimidates those who venture to serve the Crown or wish to sell or buy foreign piece-goods? Who will not allow any Member of the Assembly to address a public meeting without interruption? ('Hear, hear'.) Who, then, is it that is really guilty of interference with the liberty of the subject? What extremist can make, with justice, this accusation against the Government? What has the Government done in this matter?

I want to deal now with another point because it has been mentioned by Munshi Iswar Saran. He said:

'In the United Provinces all was quiet; there was really no trouble, no danger there; everything was calm and bright, and there was no apprehension of any disorder.'

Well, here is what His Excellency the Governor says. After all, he has some knowledge of the province, politically a very wise man, a great administrator with great knowledge and experience of the province. What did he say? He said that:

'Everything at that time looked like working to a climax. In many districts the situation was menacing. In one the Deputy Commissioner could not appear without being hooted; in another the audience were urged by a political fanatic to murder the Deputy Commissioner.'

[Sir William Vincent.]

Now, Sir, we know what happened on a similar exhortation last year, when the unfortunate Deputy Commissioner of Kheri lost his life. We know what has happened this year in an outlying district in Oudh; a Superintendent of Police, for no reason, I believe, was recently attacked while going home on his bicycle; he was approached by two men saying 'hazur, hazur' and, when he stopped, one took out a pistol from underneath his chudder and fired at him, wounding him severely. Sir, I think we may say, in such circumstances, that we know what the dangers of these exhortations are. His Excellency the Governor of the United Provinces then went on to say that it was quite clear to him that they were on the verge of a widespread trouble and at the end of his speech he says: 'I do not hesitate to tell you that if the Government trifle with the present situation you will probably soon find your life, property and your honour in danger'. That was the situation in the United Provinces when His Excellency the Governor of the Province, with the consent of his Council and, I believe, with the unanimous consent of his Ministers—I speak from recollection, I hope I am doing them no injustice—perhaps some one from the United Provinces will tell me if I am wrong—(Rai Bahadur S. P. Bajpai: 'You are not wrong')—introduced this Criminal Law Amendment Act in his province. Sir, in such circumstances, is it not fair to maintain that we have really been forced into vigorous and drastic action? The policy of Government has not changed; it is the action of Mr. Gandhi and his followers which has compelled Government to a more vigorous application of a policy always designed to maintain law and order. But there has been no campaign of indiscriminate repression as has been alleged. Great play has, of course, been made about the application of the Seditious Meetings Act, but what are the facts? It has been extended, in all, to ten districts only. There are many provinces in which associations are not proscribed at all and action under the Criminal Law Amendment Act has only been taken where it was urgently required. In this city of Delhi there are 20 associations of volunteers, but only three have been proscribed, and it is only where the Local Government have every reason to believe that the members of those associations are systematically practising intimidation and violence, using non-violence as a cloak for criminal action; that action has been taken under the law of 1908. Sir, I maintain that the Government has behaved with unexampled patience in regard to this movement, and indeed it was with great regret that they came to the decision that it was necessary to enforce more vigorously the law against those people. If there is any body which has stood out for toleration it is the Government of India. We have persisted in the policy of toleration from the very beginning of the Reforms Scheme. And yet to-day we are reproached because it is said that our action is inconsistent with our previous declarations. Sir, we have always recognised that we might be forced to take more drastic measures, and I repeat now that, if the moderate party had been able to give us the help that we looked for it might never have been necessary to resort to these measures. No one has done more than the Government to help and consolidate that party, and if they had acted more vigorously, it might have made it possible for us to have avoided the measures we have now been forced to take. We should not have resorted to them if we could have possibly helped it. We have shown the greatest restraint and patience. We have often heard it called weakness; patience does not necessarily mean weakness. And now, when we are faced with great difficulties and defend the liberty of the law-abiding, we are reproached with the accusation that we are interfering with the liberty of others. Sir, anyone who has any idea of the political traditions of His Excellency, his radical political training, his love for liberty; anyone who has any knowledge of His Excellency's career, must know that it was with the deepest regret that he took this line of policy and that he only did so when it was absolutely necessary. Indeed, I say that every Member of his Government felt the same and was in the same position; but, Sir, there are paramount functions, there are certain fundamental duties, which no Government can neglect, and first amongst them is the maintenance of law and order, the preservation of the public tranquillity and the protection of law-abiding citizens from violence and intimidation. His Excellency the Viceroy, in his speeches, has referred many times to the anxiety to do justice, but I have never seen any speech of his in which he has sought to evade accepting the paramount principle and responsibility of maintaining the peace and tranquillity of this land. And now, Sir, I wish to turn to our instructions of the 24th November, in so far as the Criminal Law Amendment Act goes. They were to the effect that where associations practised intimidation, violence and obstruction, it was necessary to suppress those activities and that the Act of 1908 should be used for that purpose. I believe, up to a certain point at any rate, it has been successful. What followed? A number of young men—many of them in Calcutta, hired from the mills—joined these associations as volunteers for a money reward. Many are doing it in Delhi now and a rupee a day is the price. They join the volunteers in defiance of all orders and then complain bitterly and pose as patriots, if they are arrested. In Delhi, when the movement first started and arrests took place, the authorities were anxious not to impose too severe penalties on accused and the consequence was, they were sentenced to simple imprisonment. Many of them were quite pleased; they were able to get free meals and had nothing to do, so later it was found necessary to sentence others to rigorous imprisonment. At once there was a general feeling that this was very unfair, though it was really a very natural consequence. Throughout, however, the Government have been very anxious to avoid any appearance of undue severity; to avoid any appearance of unreasonable harshness we have made various suggestions to the Local Governments, with which I will deal later. Apart from this, however, His Excellency was never unmindful of the dangers of a purely repressive policy and, as every Honourable Member knows, he received a deputation on the 21st December in Calcutta and listened to their views on the action of Government and the possibility of a conference between different sections of the community and Government. And I should like to read to Honourable Members one or two words from His Excellency's reply to that deputation because, to my mind, his words breathe a lofty tone of statesmanship and indicate a deep desire to find a solution of the problem of all the difficulties with which the Government are faced. He spoke words over which every Member of this Assembly would do well to ponder. Referring to a suggestion that Government should cease making use of measures now enforced and release prisoners convicted under the law, he said:

'I cannot believe that this was the intention of the deputation, when originally suggested, for it would mean that throughout the country intimidation and unlawful oppression and other unlawful acts should be allowed to continue, whilst Government action to maintain order and protect the law-abiding citizen would be largely paralysed. I need scarcely tell you that no responsible Government could even contemplate the acceptance of such a state of public affairs. I wish, with all my heart, that it had been possible to deal with these problems in a large and generous spirit, worthy of such an occasion in the history of India. Had there been indications to this effect before me to-day in the representations which you have made in your address on the part of the leaders of non-co-operation, had the offer been made to discontinue open breaches of the law for the purpose of providing a calmer atmosphere for the discussion of remedies suggested, my Government would never have been backward in response. We would have been prepared to consider the new situation in the same large and generous spirit and I would have conferred with Local Governments for this purpose.

Sir, now what was Mr. Gandhi's reply to this? This is what Mr. Gandhi said:

'I am sorry that I suspect Lord Reading of complicity in the plot to unman India.'

I would ask Honourable Members of this Assembly if they would take that view. He proceeded to say:

'I am forced to conclude that Lord Reading is trying to emasculate India by forcibly making free speech and popular organization impossible.'

... In another article he said:

'I was totally unprepared for what I most respectfully call his mischievous misrepresentation of the attitude of the Congress and the Khilafat organisations in connection with the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.'

And now I ask the House to remember what happened at the meeting of the Indian National Congress at Ahmedabad; Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya put forward certain proposals for a Conference which was contemptuously rejected by the members of that Congress. But there was a much worse feature of that meeting held at Ahmedabad and that was the deliberate threat of civil disobedience, and I want Members of this Assembly to realise that we are, at this moment, faced with that. Then, again, at another meeting in Ahmedabad there was that speech of Hasrat Mohani, which, I hope, Members of this Assembly have not forgotten, in which he referred to an Indian Republic, not to be established by non-violent means but to be established by violence at the discretion of the speaker and his followers. That is the situation with which the Government is faced and I want to ask whether, with the law as it is, with such a dangerous situation facing them, the Government could have met it otherwise than they did. I am told we should have prosecuted those guilty of intimidation. Have we not been trying to do this for many months? Have we not tried persistently to carry on the administration of the country by the use of the ordinary law? How are you going to deal with intimidation under that law? A person comes along, his name and his identity are unknown; what does he do? A threatening look, or it may be just a word uttered quietly, a gesture, a note recorded in a pocket book: but the threat is there: and the person threatened knows too well what he will suffer afterwards. Who is going to chance a prosecution on evidence of that kind? What earthly chance is there of a conviction when associations combine and their members habitually practise violence and intimidation of that character? I put it to every practical lawyer in this Assembly that it would be idle to go to court in such a case. But this kind of intimidation has been perpetually practised by members of these volunteer associations in recent months. Sir, it is well known—all political writers, all constitutional writers and all Governments have recognized it—that, in such circumstances, exceptional measures are necessary. You have only to read Sidgwick, a great liberal writer on politics, and there you will find ample justification for the use of exceptional measures in such an emergency. I can quite understand Honourable Members feeling great sympathy with particular individuals who have been convicted. We ourselves deeply regret that some of these men have deliberately chosen to go to jail. But I ask Members of this Assembly not to let their sympathy for individuals carry them away or override their sense of justice. I want them to realise that we have got to maintain law and order in this country, and whether the Government here be democratic, whether it be bureaucratic or whether it be autocratic, it is all the same. If you now seek to deprive the Executive Government of its power of maintaining law and order, you are depriving them of a power which you yourself will be desperately in need of later on. It is not a question of one form of Government or another. The maintenance of law is an essential of all civilised Governments. I am told that the Criminal Law Amendment Act has been used improperly and that it was designed for a different purpose. Sir, I sat recently on a Committee for the examination of so-called repressive laws. Dr. Gour, the Mover of this amendment to-day, was another member of that Committee. He signed the report of that Committee. Members who have looked at the report will have seen that, in considering the Seditious Meetings Act and the Criminal Law Amendment Act, we specially referred to the fact that we were doubtful about the immediate repeal of these Acts, one reason being the condition of the country, and another reason being that they had lately been used in certain provinces. I am told that it was always understood that these Acts were only to be used against anarchical conspiracies. I maintain the present associations are merely another manifestation of violence prompted by disloyalty and sedition. Last year, in Delhi, the Act was enforced in respect of certain associations and Honourable Members were well aware of it. I did not then hear of any complaint of a misapplication of the Act. What was the reason? Why did Dr. Gour and other members of the Repressive Laws Committee allow this measure to remain on the Statute Book if it was never intended that it should be used in an emergency of the present kind? I maintain, Sir, that it was because we realized then that this might be necessary, though Dr. Gour and I—you will give us both credit for that, I am sure—hoped that it would never be necessary. Honourable Members have told the Government that they sympathise very much with them, that they are all for law and order, that they will suffer if the public peace is disturbed, and so forth. May I say, Sir, that this pathetic, futile sympathy is of very little use to us unless the Honourable Member can indicate the manner in which these disorders and intimidation can be suppressed without recourse to this special legislation. I have listened to all the speeches to day carefully and I have heard no practical measures suggested which would replace either the Criminal Law Amendment Act or the Seditious Meetings Act. Perhaps other Honourable Members may be able to supply the defect.

Then, Sir, Dr. Gour asked: 'Why did you apply these Acts without consulting the Legislature?' There seems to me to be a very short answer to that. The Legislature was not sitting at the time but, as I said, I gave Honourable Members an opportunity of discussing the question at the first meeting and no one wanted it. Sir, if a house is on fire, no one except, perhaps, my friend Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, who has a pathetic faith in Committees, would think of calling the Assembly or a Committee to consider and approve the measures necessary to put it out. In such a situation Government had to act at once. We were faced in November with a situation of extreme gravity and did what we thought right. This Assembly is now also faced with a situation of equal gravity and has now to face its responsibilities. Sir, I want, in conclusion, to deal with one point more only, and that is, the effect of a vote accepting this Resolution or accepting the amendment. I want Members of this Assembly to ponder well what their responsibility is, to consider well whether if they accept this Resolution to-day, they will not be deliberately encouraging the impression that they approve the non-co-operation movement and sympathise secretly with the activities of these volunteers and that they will not support the Government in the maintenance of law and order. What will be the effect of such a vote on the officers of Government, and on loyal citizens? Will it not dishearten them and make it impossible for them to do their duty? Are you going in this Assembly here deliberately to encourage the forces of disorder, to promote anarchy and chaos throughout the land? I have been told that I exaggerate the gravity of the situation. It would be difficult to do so. This country is, in truth, faced with a very grave crisis; we have civil disobedience looming before us. We have threats of organized violence from an influential section of the Mussalman population. We have had outbreaks of violence of a dangerous character showing what may happen in a more extended degree in future. We have had the most terrible bloodshed and loss of life. We are face to face with a situation in which there may be, I fear, greater loss of life and greater bloodshed. It is for the Assembly to say whether they are now going to encourage the forces which make for ruin and disorder. It is for them to say whether, consistently with their oath of allegiance to the Crown, most solemnly sworn here, they can conscientiously and deliberately encourage those who intend to overthrow this Government by any means that is possible. Lastly, it is for them to ponder their responsibility not only to the Assembly, not only to the Government and to the country, but also to themselves. It is for them to say whether they will take such a course as will facilitate a real and very grave danger to their own properties, to their own lives and to their own honour.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, my task in speaking on this Resolution has become very difficult after the very passionate and eloquent appeal which we have listened to from the Honourable the Home Member. I am sorry to note that a responsible Member of Government has chosen on this occasion to appeal to passions and prejudices rather than to the intellect of this House. I quite realise with him, and no one does it more than myself, the grave anxieties of the situation. Sir, I am afraid he has taken the wrong issues and placed them before the House. We are met here to-day not merely to consider the action taken by the Government during the last two months.

If the amendment proposed by the democratic party is carefully considered, we have met here to-day to find a solution, a permanent solution I hope, for the very grave situation with which this country is faced. I quite realise with the Honourable the Home Member that we are faced with a situation which may lead to bloodshed, to anarchy, to revolution. That is really the situation. But, Sir, how are we to deal with that situation? That is the point for which we are met. We are not concerned so much with blaming this man or this party or this Government. Let us put our heads together and consider how best we can sail, how best we can reach the shore once more of peace and order in this land. All of us are interested in that. Sir, I invite this House to form a mental picture of how we departed when we left Delhi at the end of March, 1921. We came here in a state of despair and diffidence as to whether we would be able to do anything to restore the confidence of the people in the government of this country. A very large and influential section of the population stood out of the reforms. We agreed with them that the reforms were inadequate and unsatisfactory, but at the same time we came to this House fully hoping that by working the reforms so as to remove the causes of unrest we would be able to achieve better results, appeal to the commonsense and appeal to the intellect of the people and thereby seduce them from the mischievous activities of the non-co-operator. Sir, at the end of March last, as I told this House during the last week of that month and as I told the representatives of the Press immediately after we departed in hope, better hope and better expectation that we had realised something, that we had really made an onward march in catching the people. Although we did not satisfy the extreme section by our work in this House, by the very measures referred to by the Honourable the Home Member, by means of the various Committees appointed to examine the repressive laws and the Resolutions passed in various ways to ameliorate the situation, by making suggestions to make reforms in this direction and that, we rightly thought that we had really achieved something and that we had really made an onward march in regaining the confidence of the people in this Government. Sir, I join issue with the Honourable the Home Member in the statement that he has made that the non-co-operation movement gained strength after the March Session. Sir, I know that in my own province we tried to combat the non-co-operation movement not in any aggressive form by forming Aman Sabhas with the help of the officials but by issuing pamphlets and leaflets pointing out the work of the Assembly, pointing out the work of the various Legislative Councils and by appealing to the intellect of the masses of the people. The non-co-operators stood self-confessed of their failure to have achieved any result. Look at their proceedings in November and December, or rather before November last. When they met in Bezwada, they had to confess that they had failed in the four items of the programme which they had put forward before them. Lawyers had not ceased their practice. The Councils had not been boycotted, schools had not been deserted in the way they expected. They confessed to a failure and they seriously considered what they should do next, how to practise civil disobedience, what law to take up to practise civil disobedience. They were certainly in a confused state of mind. They did not embark upon any real practical step. They were languishing for want of food in that direction. By the policy adopted by Government on the 17th November, the Government have supplied that food on which the non-co-operators are now living. There is no use of confusing the issue, of drawing a ghastly picture, a gruesome picture of what has happened since November last, when the Government deliberately departed from the policy which they had pursued. We said: 'We would co-operate with you in enforcing the ordinary law of the land.' We said: 'Apply section 144.' We said: 'Apply section 107'. The Government did so mercilessly. We did not protest. Muhammad Ali was arrested by using section 107 in a very questionable way, when he was on his way to Madras, in the train. Section 107, which is intended to be applied to vagrants, was applied to a passenger in the train. We did not protest. Section 144 has been used, misused, abused. We did not protest. Section 144 has been used so often and so recklessly that a sub-magistrate had the audacity to use it in his own favour against his neighbour who was pestering him. This was in Musiri. Now all that we put up with because we thought it was necessary to put down the violence of the non-co-operators. No doubt mistakes were made. Who will not make mistakes? Do not the soldiers commit mistakes? Are you to condemn the whole army, the British army, to whom we owe our peace in this land, simply because a Private Mulligan molested a Hindu widow? Are you to condemn the whole police force simply because a few policemen here and there misbehave? Sir, we have to be careful not to get panicky simply because certain events happened in a certain place. What is really the root cause of the situation in the land to-day? This non-co-operation is but a symptom of the very grave disease which exists in the country. Are you going to deal with the symptom without dealing with the disease? That is what the Government are trying to do. Are you really meeting the wants of the people? Are you really going to suppress the volunteer organisations in the various parts of the country and are you thereby going to restore the contentment and happiness of the millions of people in this land? I quite agree that it is the primary duty of Government to restore peace and order. But, Sir, restoring peace and order is but a trifle as compared with the happiness and contentment of the millions of the people in this land.

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.]

Do you consider that the non-co-operator is such a clever man that he plays upon fancy grievances? Are the grievances real or fancied? Do you think that the non-co-operator would succeed if there were no grievances? What is this kartal and this boycott of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales? The Royal House was revered and respected and they would have gone on their knees before His Royal Highness. Even the Editor of the 'Amrita Bazar Patrika' fell before—he prostrated himself in the way that Hindus worship great men when His Royal Highness who is now His Majesty the King Emperor came to India. What is it then which has raised this barrier? The country feels, the country has lost its confidence in the Government; that is the real truth of it. And there is the disease for which we have to try and find a remedy. Are not national issues being discussed to-day? Where are the people of the country in this Assembly to-day? In the balconies are our men and ladies taking an interest in this debate and waiting to see the way in which the country is to be treated. If they had confidence in this Assembly and in the Government would they not be there? Therefore, I say the whole truth is that you have to recognize the disease. You are not statesmen if you do not recognize the disease. Repression is not the remedy. Did it do in Bengal after the partition agitation? The Government used all the weapons in their armoury and used them freely. Were they able to restore contentment? One solitary act, Sir, when His Majesty came out to India restored peace and happiness to Bengal. It is statesmanship which is now wanting. We have a great statesman in our midst, His Royal Highness. Unfortunately, Sir, His Royal Highness has been brought here at this time when he should not have been brought into this country. But now having come we are bound to give him a rousing and enthusiastic welcome. But, at the same time, we have to take into consideration the views of the other people. It is quite true that His Royal Highness is above politics. But are you above politics? Is the Executive Government above politics? As the 'Manchester Guardian' has put it, is it not an attempt on their part to show to the people of England through this Royal visit, that really there is nothing wrong with the Indian Government. That is the view which some people take. Now, therefore, when you find some people taking that view, are you adopting the right treatment, are you not really aggravating the evil, by doing all these things, such as arresting men like Pandit Mati Lal Nehru, like Mr. C. B. Das, and, for doing what? Are they heads of organizations which are pledged to violence? Can you justly say that? On the other hand, do they not exercise their influence for the public good? Could you have successfully prosecuted Muhammad Ali and Shaikat Ali but for the beneficial influence of Mr. Gandhi without creating trouble in the land? Do you think the Muhammadans would have kept quiet when their leader was being prosecuted and convicted? Would they not have got loose but for the influence of Mr. Gandhi? Is he not sincere in his profession of non-violence? Does he not regret violence as much as we do? He does so, and but for his influence I do not think the Government would have been able to successfully prosecute Muhammad Ali and Shaikat Ali. His influence is great in the country. If you do not recognize it, you will be making a sad mistake. And who will be sufferers if the present policy is persisted in? My countrymen and countrywomen will have to suffer more than Europeans. Therefore I am bound to speak out. There is no use in hiding one's thoughts, and we must speak out in these matters what we feel. Sir, take the opinion of every Indian in the land: take the opinion of the leaders: take the opinion of the servants of India: take the opinion of the most moderate of the moderate organizations: has any one supported the action of Government in this country? I challenge the Honourable the Home Member to point to a single Indian newspaper which supported the action of Government. I suppose, Sir, that we must give them credit for knowing the country. Do not give credit for knowing the country only to some people. We know our own country also, and I say this is not the right method to adopt. You have made a sad mistake. I quite agree that one cannot help getting angry with the way in which the Bombay people behaved on the day on which His Royal Highness landed. It is a crying shame to the country which has gone to my heart: it has gone to the hearts of many people that the people of Bombay should have behaved like that

(A Voice: Some of them.)

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I can quite believe that the Government got angry; but if you govern in anger, you are sure to land yourself and the country in trouble. That is really the cause of the reversion to this policy of yours. Government having invited and having got His Royal Highness here, and the Bombay people having behaved as they did, the Government lost their heads. The Government were not so led away by the Moplah outbreak. The Honourable the Home Member told us then deliberately that we must not take the Moplah outbreak as symptomatic of the general condition of the whole country

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The Honourable Member accused me then of dilly dallying and shilly shallying with the Khilafat Movement.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Now I am glad the Honourable the Home Member referred to that. I said you had been dilly dallying and shilly shallying with the Khilafat Movement. You have been creating hopes. Your Prime Minister in 1918 said this and said that, and your Government went back upon those promises. That is what I referred to as dilly dallying and shilly shallying with the Khilafat question. That is precisely what has led to all the present troubles. You raised hopes and you have not been able to satisfy those hopes and expectations. Now, Sir, the Honourable Member has gone off the track. Instead of dealing with this matter now under discussion, he has tried to draw me off the track. I am not concerned with blaming the Government, I am most anxiously concerned with the situation of the country. Is there no way out of it? Exclude Mr. Gandhi; ignore him; deal only with the evil. Have not the Irish people recently deposed De Valera? Was not De Valera considered the idol of the Irish people? Was he not considered an indispensable man for arriving at a settlement? And has not British statesmanship succeeded in weaning away the Irish people from De Valera? Could we not similarly wean away the Indian people from Mr. Gandhi? Sir, the Government has failed to tackle the problem. They know the situation in the country is absolutely inexcusable. There is no use shutting our eyes to the state of the country. The people do not believe in the Government. They want the Government to show by their action and by their demeanour that they have the good of the country at heart; and then I say that no number of Mr. Gandhis could exercise an influence on the people. Do you mean to say that the Indian people are likely to be so misled unless there is something wrong, unless they have lost faith altogether in the Government? They have come to that stage that they are ready to say that they are ready, even if anarchy is the only alternative, to go through with it instead of relying upon the existing Government. Are you going to allow that state of affairs to continue? I say that it will be intolerable if such a state of affairs continues. I think that too much importance is attached to Mr. Gandhi. Do you mean to say that if Pandit Malaviya and other leaders were called together—Government ignoring Mr. Gandhi—and provided that the Government were honestly striving to find means to deal with the situation in the country, that Mr. Gandhi could exercise any insidious influence against that Conference? I therefore have strong hopes in a Conference. I, therefore, have strong faith in a Conference, and I hope, Sir, that His Excellency Lord Reading will take it seriously and not be led away by these symptoms which do now and then appear in a vast country like this. Let us not be misled from the correct path of our duty by painting a too lurid picture of the situation. It will become a lurid picture if you allow things to go on in this way. Therefore let us take counsel, let us not hesitate. I do think, Sir, that this policy is not going to pay. You are not going to restore peace and order. You must abandon that policy. Take reasonable people into your confidence. Do not confine your attention only to moderates. There are moderates and moderates. There are some people who are not moderates. I am one of them. I do not want to be called a moderate. I cannot be a moderate in my love of my country. I want my country to progress as fast as possible without bloodshed and without any trouble in the country. My friend, Mr. Abul Kasim, told us, we have either to support this Government or walk out I say 'No'. I will remain with the Government and try to improve it and improve it, and obstruct it when it goes wrong. That is the policy I am going to pursue. I want this Government to continue as a good Government intent upon securing permanent good in this land. Therefore I support the amendment.

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru (Law Member): Sir, it is only under a painful sense of duty that I have felt called upon to intervene in the debate at this particular moment. My Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, has, in the speech, which he has just delivered, given a warning, which, I shall frankly say, I am going to take. He warned us against the danger of impassioned speaking on an occasion like this. He asked us to appeal more to the intellect of the House than to its emotion. I cordially agree with him for more reasons than one. In the first place, I think I am constitutionally incapable of making an impassioned appeal to the emotion of the House. In the next place, even if I were capable of that impassioned eloquence, which has characterised some of the speeches to-day, I would deliberately refrain from indulging in impassioned eloquence on an occasion like this. I would much rather be judged by the test which has been laid this afternoon by my friend on the other side of the House. But, before I come to the main questions which I propose to deal with, there are just a few points which I would like to answer. He has said, and very rightly said, that a Government which governs in anger lands the country in danger. I quite agree with him, but let me assure the House that whatever fault you may find with the Government, of which I happen to be a Member, you cannot possibly find that fault. It has been my privilege to have been associated with His Excellency Lord Reading very intimately during the last six weeks and if I tell you how cool, how calm and how collected he has been in dealing with the problems as they have arisen from day to day, I am sure none of you will endorse that charge which has been made by my friend, Mr. Rangachariar. I speak deliberately, with a certain amount of self-restraint, as I happen to be a member of his Government, but one thing I may be allowed to say and that is what I have told some of my Indian friends in confidence that, throughout these 6 or 7 weeks that I have had the honour of meeting His Excellency, whoever else may have used an angry phrase or an uncharitable word about any individual who happens to be in jail, that man is not Lord Reading. Therefore, whatever else you may say, I beg of you and implore you not to bring the charge of anger against the Government of Lord Reading.

I shall now come to some of the other issues which have been raised this afternoon. What, after all, is it that divides the Government from the critics in this House? Is it because the Government are anxious to maintain law and order that their critics are at variance with them? I venture to think it would be unjust to the critics of the Government to say that they do not want the maintenance of law and order. I must in fairness to my Honourable friends, Munshi Iswar Saran and Dr. Gour, to whose speeches I listened with great attention, say that they made it abundantly clear that they were as anxious for the maintenance of law and order as any member of the Government on this side of the House. I might go a step further and say that even Mr. Rangachariar, breaking his own precept about impassioned eloquence, burst out at one stage in his speech and said that he too was as anxious as any member on the side of the Government for the maintenance of law and order. Therefore it seems to me that, so far as the question of law and order is concerned, I do not think that there is any the least difference between the Government and the critics of the Government. Well, then, wherein does the difference arise? The difference arises in regard to the application of that principle; and the methods adopted by the Government for the restoration or maintenance of law and order. If there has been some warmth exhibited to-day during the debate (I hope I am not doing any injustice to any speaker), it has been to no small extent due to the feeling that has been created in the country,—and a perfectly natural feeling it is,—over the arrest of men, who, but for their political opinions, might have occupied any position in this House. Speaking personally, I am free to confess that there are among those men who have gone to jail several whom I have held in the highest possible esteem in private life and whose friendship I have enjoyed. But, as one previous speaker said, in an issue of this character, which affects the whole country, which affects, if I may say so, the very fabric of society, I think it is only fair that we should not allow our reason to be overpowered by our emotion. Well, therefore, I will beg of you, and earnestly beg of you, in discussing the general issue to set apart personal issues which have been raised to-day.

Now, my Honourable friend, Sir William Vincent, has given you a historical retrospect of the events which have happened in the country during the last twelve months or more. Malegaon, Malabar, Bombay and Calcutta are so many milestones in the progress of those events which have brought about disorder and anarchy in the country and which we cannot possibly overlook. (Cries of 'And Madras'). It has been said: 'Well, the accounts which have appeared in the newspapers are exaggerated.' I have not the smallest room for doubt that when political passions are excited, when the country is divided into two camps, there is exaggeration on both sides. It does not hurt me to make a confession of that character. But let us not forget what Mr. Gandhi himself has said with regard to some of these events. After the Bombay incident, did he not say that it was possible to forget Malegaon, it was even possible to overlook Malabar, but you could not possibly overlook Bombay? Just about that time, speaking about picketting, what is it that he said? I shall rather quote his words than give the substance. In one of his articles in 'Young India' he said:

'Picketting should be regarded with the gravest suspicion; there is no doubt that it has not everywhere been of a strictly non-violent nature. There has been verbal violence or a show of violence. It is better, therefore, to suspend picketting at least for the time being or till we have attained much greater self-control and gained greater experience; we may confine our attention just now to working among the drinking class.'

Therefore, in discussing this question, I will beg of you to take a comprehensive view of the whole situation and not to argue out the case as if you were arguing a case before a magistrate or a sub-judge, but take the entire totality of circumstances, and the entire body of events which have happened during the last 12 months and then ask whether, in view of the events which happened on November last, the Government were or were not justified in taking the action which they did. It is possible that you may hold that another course might have been adopted. But what that course could have been or should have been has not been pointed out by any Member of this Assembly to-day. It was no doubt suggested by my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, and also, I believe by Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, that it was open to the Government, to prosecute individuals who were found guilty of intimidation. Now, Dr. Gour is such an eminent lawyer—he has edited the penal laws of the country—and Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar has been such an eminent judge, that I do not think I shall be appealing to them in vain when I say that criminal intimidation is not a cognisable offence under the penal law of the country; and, so far as I know, if you exclude the Criminal Law Amendment Act, there is no other power under the law that I know of under which the Government can deal with intimidation practised by a mass of men; that is the only power. You may dispute the facts; I am not raising any question of fact because those facts have been dealt with at length by my Honourable colleague, Sir William Vincent; but once you accept the position that there was any tyranny, oppression or intimidation exercised to any appreciable extent and once you realise that it is the duty of the Government to put down that tyranny or oppression or intimidation, then, I ask you, under what law can you advise the Government to proceed?

Mr. S. C. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars; Landholders):
Amend the law.

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru: I am coming to that; probably when I make a statement on that point, my Honourable colleague will be happy, but he must not anticipate that part of my speech. Therefore, taking the law as it stands, the only action which the Government could have taken, if there was intimidation, if there was tyranny, and if there was oppression, against an association as such, was action under this Act. It has been said that the Government could have prosecuted these men for conspiracy. Let me remind the Assembly that this question was carefully considered by the Committee over which I had the honour to preside in Simla; the question as to whether prosecution for conspiracy to wage war against the King or to commit any other offence under the penal law would be a good substitute for action under the Criminal Law Amendment Act was considered, and it was found, with the concurrence of Dr. Gour, that it would not be a good substitute. Besides, let me point out to you that, if it is a question of choice between prosecution under the Criminal Law Amendment Act and a prosecution under the law relating to conspiracy, I venture to think that if Dr. Gour were confidentially asked by a client of his, he would certainly advise him to take his trial under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, because you do not know how much more severe the sentence may be in a case of conspiracy. My Honourable Colleague, Sir William Vincent, dealt with the cases of intimidation and tyranny in various parts, and I do not wish to cover that ground. I was only interested in pointing out to you that the action which the Government took was the only action which they could take provided there was tyranny and oppression exercised. The Government are, however, aware that the application of this Act has undoubtedly created a considerable amount of feeling in this country and it may be, as has been pointed out by several speakers to-day, that in individual cases probably courts have gone wrong; but those are cases which can be set right. However, in order to meet the popular wish that we should further examine the position, I am authorised to make a statement on behalf of

Government in regard to this matter and it is this; that we are carefully considering if it is possible to find an alternative form of legislation which, if successful, might avoid some of the criticism which has been levelled against this Act. Let me assure the House that some of the Members of the Government will be meeting to consider this question, and to examine whether it is possible to have something better and more effective and less objectionable than the Criminal Law Amendment Act. I feel also that the House will be gratified to hear what action was taken by the Government in December last in order to meet some of the criticisms with regard to the present situation. I will read out to you, from a document which I have before me, some of the instructions that have been issued. First of all, we have instructed Local Governments that, where possible, trials should be conducted in open court, though it is realised that in many cases this is not possible. Secondly, we have suggested that the utmost care should be taken to see that evidence is recorded in full and that all legal formalities are strictly complied with in all trials; further that, when there is any doubt as to the legality or justice of a conviction, the Local Governments should review the sentences passed in consultation with their legal advisers. Thirdly, we have drawn their attention to the sentences awarded for similar offences in different provinces and suggested that sentences should be carefully examined to ensure that where punishment is awarded, the sentence should not be unduly severe. We have also asked the Local Governments to consider the circumstances under which rigorous imprisonment should be inflicted upon these offenders and suggested to them that they should make it clear, particularly in the case of minor offenders, that the Government are anxious to vindicate the authority of the law rather than to see the offenders punished with undue severity. Finally, we have said that it may be necessary, for various reasons, to limit the number of prosecutions. Then, I must point out to the Assembly, that the Local Governments have gone as far as possible to make matters easy by prescribing special treatment for these political prisoners, and indeed many have been released on furnishing a reasonable undertaking, while some have been released even without a guarantee. Further, the Government is prepared to have inquiries made by the Local Governments into any specific cases of undue severity, improper prosecutions or excesses, but I hope that this Assembly will not press the Government to abandon the general policy of maintaining law and order. At the same time, I may say, as I have already said, that Government is examining the law relating to these associations. Now this is all that I wanted to say with regard to some of the points which were raised in the debate and to which I have no doubt Sir William Vincent would have referred if he had more time at his disposal. If you examine the question dispassionately, what is really at the bottom of the criticism which has been levelled outside this House during the past six weeks? It has been said that the present policy of the Government really amounts to an attack on the right of free speech and free association. That seems to me to be the sum and substance of the criticism. In fact, if my memory does not mislead me, I think that is the line which Mr. Gandhi has taken in some of his paragraphs in a recent number of 'Young India.' Now, with regard to the right of free speech, so far as I know, except in three or four districts in India where the Seditious Meetings Act has been applied, there is no restraint placed on freedom of speech. And may I respectfully remind this House that it is impossible to ignore or overlook the fact that the Congress and the League were not held under any restrictions, that the utmost freedom of speech prevailed there ; so much so that it was possible for the President of the Moslem League to talk of a Republic and also of the possibility of violence. Now, this does not look like restraint on freedom of speech. As regards the attack on the right of association what I would venture to point out to the House is, that even to-day there is nothing in the law to prevent you from forming an association provided that association is meant for a lawful purpose. It is only those associations which, according to the evidence before the Government, were considered to be guilty of unlawful activity that were declared unlawful. Some of the Local Governments, for instance the Central Provinces Government, have not touched these volunteer organizations. Therefore, when you say that what the Government have done is that they have robbed the people of the liberty of association and the liberty of free speech, I say you put your case too high. This is not what has happened and this is not what the Government have done. Therefore, I ask the House to carefully consider the issue. What is it after all that the non-co-operators want ? Is it that they want Dominion Self-government in the country, or is it that they want to have nothing to do with the British Government or to throw off the yoke of British rule ? Or, in other words, is it that they want a definite position under the British Crown or is it that they want absolute independence ? If it is the latter, I am sure, that so far as this Assembly is concerned, it will have nothing to do with them. If it is the former, if what they really want is Dominion Self-government, I believe that you will scarcely find an Indian in this House or outside this House who will not be prepared honestly to say that he is as much devoted to the idea of Dominion Self-government as any one in the camp of Mr. Gandhi. (Hear, hear.) But I would respectfully venture to point out to you that in politics, it is not the idea which matters so much as the method by which you carry out that idea. (Hear, hear.) Is this the way to achieve Self-government, to attain Home Rule or to acquire Swaraj ? It is for you to decide. So far as my limited reading of history goes, so far as my limited experience in politics is concerned, I venture to think that howsoever you may attain Swaraj, you will not and you cannot attain Swaraj through non-co-operation. (Hear, hear), and if really you want Swaraj, will you achieve it through peaceful means by maintaining peace and order in the country, or by creating confusion and anarchy in the country ? I leave the question to be answered by the Assembly by its votes.

Mr. Darcy Lindsay (Bengal : European) : Sir, the Honourable Mover of the Resolution asks the Assembly to recommend to Government to abandon their repressive policy. I wonder if it has occurred to the Honourable Member that the boot may well be on the other leg, and that the real repression, or may I say, oppression, comes from the non-co-operation party who, with the assistance of volunteers and other agencies are intimidating a peaceful people to do their bidding in the observance of hartals and the boycott of European goods. We have heard from many speakers that it is the duty of the Government to maintain law and order and thus protect the people against oppression. Is this not what they have been endeavouring to do by every means in their power by the arrest of volunteers and others who are interfering with the rights of the people ? I do not know whether my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, was present in Calcutta on the 17th November and later on in December, but if he was, then all I can say is he saw the situation through.

very smoked glasses. He has spoken with some warmth in connection with the writings of certain papers and also the Bengal Chamber of Commerce: They at least had sympathy with the liberty of people, if he has not, and if their writings in any way influenced the Government of Bengal, I say all honour to them. Sir, I was present in Calcutta on the 17th of November. I witnessed the deplorable state of affairs that existed that day. The people had no liberty at all. If they ventured out, stones were thrown at them, drivers were dragged from carriages or motor cars and people went in very fear of their lives. You have heard the Honourable the Home Member give in detail the reports from Bengal and I need not add to this.

In December matters were not nearly so bad because the so-called repressive measures were beginning to take effect. But, in spite of that, there was a great deal of intimidation on the part of volunteers. They made house to house visitations, spreading false statements wherever they went; they even went to the length of telling the people that they had better not venture out of their houses on the morning of the 24th, because the Government had ordered that soldiers, who were to be posted in the streets of the Northern portion of the town, were to shoot them down at sight. This information, Sir, came to me from two friends of mine, innocent traders in Bow Bazaar, whose houses had been visited, and they asked me how was it that the Government should adopt such measures with the people. Religion was even brought to bear, particularly amongst the Muhammadan community. My own servant, who has been in my service for 18 years, asked me why it was a sin to his God to work for me on the 24th. That is the preaching which he received in his mosque, and it is not an isolated case. It affected many traders and particularly the servant class. The servants of the Great Eastern Hotel in Calcutta gave notice that they had been ordered not to work on the 24th and that they could not work—they have, I understand, since been replaced. There was evidence on all sides, Sir, that, left alone, the people would have gone out joyfully to welcome their Prince. We had ample evidence of this on the 27th—the day of the public entertainment on the Maidan when vast masses came out and gave their Prince a right royal welcome, as they would have done on the 24th had they been left alone with freedom to do so. But for the action of Government in proclaiming the volunteers, we were fast drifting to an impossible position at the will of the non-co-operation dictators. In the speeches to-day reference has been made more to the Presidency towns and not so much to the up-country places. With your permission, Sir, I will read a letter written by Mr. George Bridge, who is an Honourable Member of this House but unfortunately absent to-day. He is a tea-planter in Assam and writes as follows:

'Sir, the following is a copy of a telegram I sent to the Chief Secretary of the Government of Assam at the request of the loyal European and Indian communities of Mangaldai:

'The loyal inhabitants of Mangaldai European and Indian alike request protection from Gandhi volunteers who are breaking up and looting kate boycotting, intimidating Government servants, tea garden employees, enlisting volunteers daily. Names of new volunteers notified to authorities but not a single volunteer arrested. No action taken, though proclaimed illegal by your Government.'

The telegram speaks of itself. Since the Assam Government's proclamation against volunteers these have been unlisted wholesale. There are now two volunteers in the enlisted in nearly every village. The Congress Committee have ordered the breaking up of all the hats in the district and a lot have been broken up and some looted. Also no supplies of any sort are to be sold to garden coolies, and Government officials, clerks, etc., to be likewise boycotted and intimidated. There is a large Mussalman population in the district who are Gandhi volunteers and want little encouragement to turn to rioting and looting. They threaten shopkeepers on my land that they will burn down their shops, etc., if they dare to sell stores to the garden coolies. Further they try to persuade coolies to leave the gardens and not work for the sahab. I hear they promise rent free for three years if they become volunteers and the busti people are uniting not to pay rents.

The situation is becoming worse and worse and Government, by allowing a free hand to the Gandhi volunteers, will be themselves to blame if the situation becomes impossible and uncontrollable. The loyal Indians cannot understand this deplorable apathy on the part of Government, and many are forced to become non-co-operators for want of Government support and protection. For over a year now the Gandhi volunteers have had a free hand to overawe and overrun the district without the slightest check. Some of the leaders have, it is true, at last been imprisoned, but the volunteers are in greater numbers and more seditious than ever, and unless stronger steps are taken, it will end in rioting and revolution.

ours, etc.,

GEO. BRIDGE,

Managing Proprietor.

Sir, the measures recently adopted have met with considerable success and have gone a long way in helping to restore confidence. Yet we are now asked to recommend to the Government to abandon the wise protection they have given to the people and leave them to their fate. What will be the effect amongst the trading community? It will be so-called peaceful interference with their legitimate vocations, be it trader or employee, and its attendant loss to their pockets. What harm, I ask you, have the peaceful citizens ever done to forfeit the protection of Government and why such tender solicitude for the misguided volunteers, many of whom, when arrested, were given the option of release by signing against the movement or going to jail and posing as martyrs to their cause? Where is the hardship, I ask? Surely, Sir, if the Resolution were adopted and acted upon, it would be taken as a great sign of weakness and fear on the part of Government, and much capital would be made out of it by the non-co-operation party to further the now threatened civil disobedience movement. We have not heard very much about civil disobedience to-day, but if it is started and goes ahead, we may see the country throughout plunged into an infinitely worse disaster than the troubles in Malabar. Then the Members of this House will say: 'Why this apathy on the part of Government; why have they let things slide, why did they not take action in time to prevent this trouble?' If we pass this Resolution to-day and there is bloodshed later on, as the result of civil disobedience, then I say that responsibility for that bloodshed will be on the heads of the Members of this House in their failure to support Government.

There is one other point, Sir, that has not been dealt with and that is the arrival of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales in Delhi next month. Only as recently as Monday last, this House voted on a Resolution adopting an Address of Welcome to His Royal Highness. To-day we are asked to pass a Resolution condemning the action of Government in protecting the people from coercion, in declaring and maintaining hartals. If this measure is passed and is acted upon by Government, what will be the position when His Royal Highness arrives? Delhi may be in a state of hartal probably worse than any other place he has yet visited, and, I venture to say, it would be a peculiar position for the Members of this House to be in to go and pretend to welcome the Prince when only to-day we have adopted measures to make that welcome futile.

In conclusion, Sir, may I ask the Honourable Dr. Gour if his democratic party are at liberty to vote according to their conscience or does he propose to exercise the repression, his rules no doubt provide for? With these few words, Sir, I oppose the Resolution.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): Sir, the amendments that stand in my name are:

The word 'immediate' between the words 'the' and 'abandonment' be deleted; and

The words 'immediately after the suspension of the activities respecting picketing and civil disobedience' be added after the word 'country'.

Sir, it is my heart's desire that Government should withdraw as soon as possible the notification extending and applying the Criminal Law Amendment Act and thus to allay public excitement and consternation. It is a fact that the arrest and imprisonment of political leaders and their followers have embittered the feelings of even loyal people, and to a certain extent alienated popular sympathy, nay even increased agitation. When a man is arrested, most naturally his whole family gets affected and agitation instead of being confined to men is extended to women, and as a matter of course the larger the number of arrests, the more the agitation. The continuance of this state of things will result in what, I am unable to prophesy. But what is Government, whose primary duty is to maintain peace and order, to do when its authority is openly defied and the laws of the land disobeyed? Surely it realises its position and it must have been with great reluctance that it had to extend and apply the Criminal Law Amendment Act. The question therefore arises as to whether the ordinary Criminal Law is sufficient to meet the situation. It is common knowledge that intimidation and obstruction have been solely responsible for the breach of public peace. Intimidation is a non-cognisable offence and cannot be taken cognisance of by the court without a complaint. But how can a complaint be lodged when the complainant himself is intimidated from making a complaint? And the situation becomes difficult and complex, when Government has to deal with organised intimidation. Take the case of the Congress and the Khilafat volunteers on the one side and the Police on the other, — each attempting to have the shops closed and remain open respectively and control traffic at times of hartal. Is Government in such a case to allow the two separate bodies of workers, viz., the volunteers and the police, separately officered, and with different objects in view, to patrol and parade side by side, and promote friction, collision, and breaches of the peace which are inevitable in the peculiar circumstances of the case, or should it interfere and maintain order? What would you advise Government to do to meet the situation? What would you have done yourselves, I ask in all seriousness, if you had to face similar difficulties and were placed in similar circumstances? I dare say you would have acted in about the same manner in which you find Government acting now. You have simply to put yourselves for a while in the same position in which Government is now, and you will, I am sure, realise the exact position.

Gentlemen, I am no doubt aware of police high-handedness in certain cases, and their attempts at times of hartal to have the shops remain open and hackney carriages plying. But the same and very much more can be said of the volunteers in their attempts to have shops closed, and hackney carriages stop from plying.

The Bombay riots, to quote an instance, not to speak of others, are clearly convincing of the nature of the influence and formidable obstruction I have spoken of. All I need say in connection with this matter is that excesses are committed in times of excitement as a matter of course, and in the circumstances, my request to this Honourable House is to devise means and to recommend to Government the desirability of taking such steps as may tend to prevent the mischief from continuing, nay growing in intensity. It is very easy to say, for the purposes of academic discussion, that Government should immediately withdraw the notifications, but I ask you again in all seriousness as to 'what would be the effect if picketting and civil disobedience continue?' Does this Assembly realise the position?

Honourable Members of the Assembly, at a critical time like the present, would it be fair and dignified for a responsible body like this Honourable Assembly, consisting as it does of representative men of culture and enlightenment, to ask Government to immediately withdraw the notification extending and applying the only applicable law of the land, calculated to meet the present situation before the activities respecting picketting and civil disobedience are suspended, or at least there is an assurance of that? Can any one deny that the political situation as it exists at present is acute and critical and fraught with dangerous possibilities and, if not handled most carefully and delicately, is bound to result in great misery as well as in actual bloodshed?

I need not, gentlemen, anticipate your decision, and I am sure you will decide rightly. But this much I may be permitted to say, that you should wholeheartedly support Government in its attempt to maintain peace and order in the land, and see that those whose avowed object is to paralyse Government do not succeed in their tactics to paralyse it.

A word about disobeying the laws of the land, and I have finished. On what does public peace rest? Verily and obviously on respect and obedience to laws. Have civil disobedience to law, and the whole fabric of peace and social order collapses and falls to the ground! What then? Disorder, anarchy, and ruination.

My view, therefore, is that the Government should not be asked to abandon its policy so long as the activities of a section of the people respecting picketting and civil disobedience are not suspended and my clear duty is to place my views before the Honourable House, and I hope, I shall not be misunderstood.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I move for the postponement of this debate in view of the lateness of the hour and the fact that we have other engagements equally important, such as the Committee on Racial Distinctions.

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru: The Committee is not sitting to-day and so far as the Government are concerned we should like the debate to go on unless of course the House overrules us.

Mr. President: There is nothing that has arisen in the course of the debate to justify this motion for adjournment. Moreover, the Assembly takes precedence of all Committees.

Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney : Sir, I intervene in this debate as the representative of a community who have suffered from the activities of non-co-operators and who have offered their entire services to the Government for use in any shape or form to combat the malicious activities of non-co-operators. I intervene, moreover, with personal feeling as members of my family in Bombay have been maltreated by the adherents of non-co-operation.

It was not long ago that I was asked to give my opinion on the policy of Government towards Gandhi, the Ali Brothers and non-co-operation generally and my reply took this form—that it reminded me of the milk sold in the Simla bazaar. When asked for an amplification of my view I said : 'weak with water'. If I were asked to-day whether the Government policy towards non-co-operation was repressive, I would give another answer and say that it was water with milk in it. It is weaker than it was then. I certainly would not classify it as repressive and I stand as the accredited leader of my community to state that we vehemently oppose the Resolution that has been put before this House calling upon the Government to withdraw what has been stigmatised as a repressive policy. Sir, if one may be inclined to be plain spoken in such a matter, I think Government stands in the unhappy position to-day of being accused for having really no policy or a very weak policy to have allowed the non-co-operators to proceed to this limit. For what do we find to-day? We find these leaders roaming the country, spreading the infection of rebellion against the Government and we find our own countrymen and countrywomen afraid to leave their houses except armed with revolvers. That is the condition in which non-co-operators have dropped India which was once law-abiding and peaceful. Can the Mover of this Resolution, after the Honourable the Home Member has put forward such a truthful account of what happened in the Moplah country, stand up here and say that the movement was a non-violent one? Are we to pass a blessing here on the attitude of the non-co-operators? Sir, I for one have got instructions to oppose this tooth and nail.

I am therefore sorry I find it impossible to lend my support to this Resolution, because as it stands it is bald. It is difficult to see on what grounds it is suggested and how it can be justified or even defended. I do not believe it is the intention of my Honourable colleague to give those, to whom the measures characterised as 'repressive' are applied, carte blanche to take the law into their own hands and to stalk the country with anarchy and rapine. The adoption of this Resolution would be tantamount to giving a blank cheque to uncontrollable mobs who have already overdrawn the credit of the country for sobriety, toleration and equity or regard for other's rights. Succinctly stated my anxiety is with Government and my sympathies with the misguided and misled. The term 'repression' is rather elastic. Government and the people at large have certain ideas of propriety in regard to individual acts, which find expression in laws. On the working of these elementary principles which protect the liberty of the individual in relation to the majority, depends the peace, tranquillity, and safety of a country. By common consent an infraction of these laws takes us beyond liberty and lands us into the domain of license. It is then, and then only, that the law is expected to, and does, step in. Has the Mover of this Resolution satisfied himself that the sense of proportion has failed in the correct appraisal of the offences or in fitting the penalties to the offenders to justify the stigmatisation as 'repressive,' of the protective and preventative measures adopted by Government? I say that his bald Resolution, shorn of all qualification, implies that, in every case, in which the law was set in motion, it has gone beyond its scope. His Excellency the Viceroy, I understand, was prepared to welcome a Round Table Conference if those who approached him were the accredited representatives of the people and were in a position of authority to guarantee a cessation of hostilities. There has not been any response, except what we heard to-day, through Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, from the enemies' camp. Are we, therefore, to assume that the other side is not prepared to desist from its reprehensible speeches, and lawless acts; that what has been said and done is perfectly legitimate, or, that the so-called leaders, who pride themselves in the power of exciting the passions of the masses cannot control or subdue the aftermath or sequelae?

India is characterised as litigious. Its sense of justice is centred in judicial tribunals where both sides are at liberty to present and argue their facts. If I remember aright, the turmoil over the Punjab affair two years ago, was, that the proclamation of martial law deprived the citizen of his civic rights. To that Caesar, to whom the public then appealed the recent cases intended to be covered by this Resolution did go. It is up to the Honourable Mover to justify his unqualified Resolution before he can reasonably hope for support. As I said before, my sympathies are with those who, having been led astray are now suffering, for none can deny that we are faced with a profoundly serious subject, affecting as it does India's national life and through it, the countries beyond. The organised efforts by men of considerable standing to rush the country, as never before since its creation, leaving no time for securing a sober frame of mind for the adequate discussion of differences as grave as they are radically opposed, are calculated to rob us of the new and long-sought for life emerging from the Reforms.

Hitherto, circumstances have tended to obscure the issue and obstruct the realisation of our profoundest hopes.

Propaganda, not always happy in inception or practical in operation, countered by methods futile or purposeless, has littered the pathway of orderly progress to the attainment of a self-contained peaceful country ready to work out its own salvation under the fostering agis of the Reforms. That India should have been drawn into the political, economic and moral maelstrom caused by the war was natural. That it should have created domestic tension was inevitable. That its pent-up hopes of liberation from spoon-fed helplessness to set its own house in order and manage its own affairs should one day come to the light was to be expected. The dawning of that great 'Day', the dream of the enthusiast and the ultima thule of Indian Political Leaders, fostered by the large body of sympathisers at 'Home', which was bound to come in the fulness of time, burst, with dramatic suddenness, ere the dark clouds of war had lifted.

The deferred hopes of self-governance promised in the Victorian Magna Charta, and ratified by successive promises from the Throne, have led the country to attempt to feverishly cover, in the smallest space of time, ground that would ordinarily have been trod, leisurely, and orderly, during the six decades which have intervened.

I believe no one in this Honourable House will contradict me if I say that the impasse, due to the divergent courses taken by the Leaders on the one hand and Government on the other, has been reached. We are constrained to ask to-day whither is the movement leading; when will the climax be reached and in what form? It is suicidal to blink at facts. Recriminations on both sides, I mean Government and the people, are no solution. The catch phrases 'extremist' and 'non-co-operator' are justifiable in application to either side, viz., Government or the people. Bureaucracy in excelsis is the 'Extremist' to the people; while a tenacious adherence to autocratic traditions, unresponsive to the finer feelings and expanding hopes evoked by the teachings of the Government itself, and hastened by the tread of world-altered conditions, isolates Government as the 'Non-co-operator'. To say that there have been mistakes on both sides neither improves the present position; reconciles the past, nor assures the future. The axiom that two negatives make an affirmative, may be grammatically defensible, but is impossible of translation into practical politics. Nor have some of the remedial measures been the best in conception or quite happy in application. It has been remarked that a deplorable incident like the Punjab tragedy is the psychological culmination of series of the contempt, insult and contumely to which individual Indians have been subjected, since the Victorian Magna Charta of 1857, - the conferment of equality which purposed to efface for ever the suggestion of any difference between the conqueror and the conquered. The Britisher applied the axe to the partitions of the caste system in India so far as it stood in the way of the selection of avocational pursuits and individual equality, Castes, which, born in the primordial past and flowing through the immemorial tracts of time, refused to mix; a social economy which saw the glories and systems of other ancient kingdoms effaced from the scroll of time. My purpose in referring to this system is two-fold - Firstly, it built up traditions in the 300 millions in this country - around which clustered sentiments that have outlived history and the fanaticism of iconoclasts. Secondly, India cynically remarks that the Britisher, while deploring the water-tight compartments of caste as obstructive to national cohesion and progress, has himself imbibed and tenaciously clung to that system of compartmental exclusiveness. In the Indian Civil Service, India sees the Brahman, in all his clannishness and aloofness. The Army Officer is the living embodiment of the Kshatriya. The Merchant Prince, against whom the torrent of Indian vituperation is directed as the drainer of the country, is the Vaishya. The uncovenanted service in all its miscellaneity, from the Gazetted pimple on the face of bureaucratic society to the et hoc genus omne, constitute the Sudra. It is a mistake to believe that human nature in India can, or should, readjust itself to dicta which do not appeal to its traditional or British-fostered sense of self respect; or that they stop educated India especially the large array of the 'England-returned', from appreciating and desiring to import into this country the democratic spirit which prevails in and is the glory of the Western world. In the contemplation of the easy transition of the British democrat to the autocratic heights of the Ruler in India by running the gauntlet of a competitive examination confined to England, India sees herself outclassed. Anything untoward from such a socially readjusted agency to an Indian or an Anglo-Indian of equal or better lineage or culture is obviously resented and widens the breach. I believe it was Junius who said: 'insults make a man fall in his own esteem, that in order to recover his self-respect he has recourse to revenge'. The conflicting differences between Indian aspirations and Government concessions which were being inscribed on the slate of time since 1857 were surely washed away by the blood of the two nations freely shed in breaking down the manacle to a world-wide Peace?—

That peace, thank God, has been effected. But what is the aftermath judged in the cleansing spirit of chastenment? Let no idea of superiority obscure the sense of Justice. Let no shadow of the sense of national inequality obtrude in the examination of the rights of the ruled. Let the process of adjustment be hallowed by the sense of Right, starting on the platform of Equality. Let not the recipient feel that his rights as a citizen of his own country, are tainted with a concessionary spirit. Let us examine our conscience and reject honestly and manfully, every individual act or statutory enactment which stands in the way of rapprochement. Let us see whether and, if so, what part such incidents have played in awakening and keeping alive the gospel of Hatred which is to-day being preached and exploited to such an extent as to make the Punjab and Khilafat incidents fall into insignificance. This racial hatred, this hostility, this mistrust must be eradicated ere any benefit can be expected from a Round Table Conference or other attempt at co-operation between Government and the people. In Lord Reading we have a Viceroy schooled in the principles of Justice, a judge of men, with a full grasp of mankind in its weakness and strength; a statesman tried in the exacting crucible of life, in all its variety. Our Law Courts adjudicate on personal rights, irrespective of caste, creed or colour. Is any apology needed for pleading that the same spirit of justice should permeate our political, nay our every-day life?

Protect those who need protection, but be sure your protective measures are not the occasion of sin to the innocent. Moreover, our acts and the manner of their enforcement should be calculated to appeal to our nobler and not to our sordid instincts. It is the duty of every public worker, and the best intellects, whether Government or of the people to concentrate, dispassionately on the present situation, to sink all differences and with the sense of oneness speak plainly and courageously. It would be possible from such considered altruistic opinions to evolve some practical thesis for friendly discussion. There is the fear that 'Evolution' and 'Revolution' are looked upon as convertible terms.

Immune from invasions; secured from internecine strife; nestling in amenities; far removed from death-struggles, and in the enjoyment of unbroken peace, one is apt to scan the histories of Revolutions as incidents flitting through a novel read in the supineness of unthreatened leisure. And, while urging on Government to shorten or lighten its retributive hand, we must be equally insistent on a truce being called by the other side.

The golden opportunity of a Round Table Conference suggested to the Viceroy did not materialise, as Lord Reading could not but refuse to parley so long as the other side lay entrenched. It rests with the Leaders of the people to now give that assurance to permit of the level heads not drawn into the vote of this fatuous struggle, to arrange for the necessary rapprochement. It is not right to refer to personalities in the discussion of principles, but I am sure the Honourable House will agree, that history proves and experience confirms that it is easier to awaken and call into operation, than to subdue, human passions. It therefore behoves us to lead the masses with reason and restraint. I am, however, one of those who believes that it is not too late to give the assurance that pending the Conference of a heart-to-heart talk, nothing untoward or prejudicial to the objects of the convention will occur. The bright hopes of such a Conference must not be blighted by weighting the memory with by-gones. The dead past has buried itself. The chapter of tragedies on both sides may be closed and sealed. Let that be the record of Fate. With the New Year let us open the book of Life and carve out our Destiny as soon and as fully as we can.

As the representative of the Anglo-Indian Community in this Council, I protest against this conspiracy to foist upon the country by whirlwind agitation at such a moment—a Resolution which not only offers violence to one's intellect and conscience, but, if accepted by this Honourable House, would be an open invitation to lawlessness, anarchy, rapine and bloodshed which have already demonstrated the so-called peaceful (?) non-violent propaganda to bless the further success of which we are asked to subscribe to the beatitude under discussion. Surely it is not the intention of the agitators to help to repeat the tragedies of 1857?

At the same time, I must admit that the fate of India appeals to us, Anglo-Indians, in quite a different sense to what it would to the British bird-of-passage or the stay-at-home Englishman. Here we have more than an abiding interest. Our forbears came to this country precisely like the Aryans and our Muhammadan brethren. Whatever the motives or circumstances of our entry into India, we, like them, settled in this country and are Indians. It is, therefore, in this naturalised capacity, that I ask my Honourable friend and colleague, Munshi Iswar Sarau, to amend his Resolution. I am not asking Government to do anything if the non-co-operators refuse to accept Government as the Government of this country. I am simply stating here that if the letter that Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar to-day received from Mr. Gandhi is written in a true and proper spirit, it opens a pathway a via media to a settlement. But it does not mean that the Government will budge one inch so long as the country is seething with sedition and unrest. I do not wish to convey in my amendment that idea. But I do consider that if a via media is open to us, it is best that we should take it.

I earnestly appeal to both sides to forgive and forget, to call a truce, to put forward their best intellect shorn of any ideas of victor and vanquished but controlled and regulated by hearts beating in unison, and then, verily, shall we visualise rightly and trace the path, however narrow it may be, leading to the realization of constitutional 'Swaraaj' for our country, India—the hope of unrequited years.

Rai Bahadur S. P. Bajpai (Lucknow Division, Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I concede at the very outset that it is one of the paramount duties of a civilized Government to maintain law and order. I am anxious that the law should be respected and peace and order maintained, not only because I have got a sufficiently large stake in the country, but because I feel that the progress of my motherland largely depends on the maintenance of peace and order. But, Sir, I may be permitted to submit that the law must derive its support from the good-will of the people and should be properly administered. The whole question at issue before us to-day is not whether the extension of the Criminal Law Amendment Act and the Seditious Meetings Act to various provinces in India, accompanied with an announcement that the Congress, Khilafat and National volunteer corps were unlawful assemblies, was a wise and statesman like move on the part of Government and has restored peace and harmony in the country. Sir, the policy of resorting to the emergency laws was inaugurated after the unfortunate incidents which took place in Bombay on the 17th of November last, the date on which His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales landed there.

Sir, I do not find words to adequately condemn the acts of utter hooliganism perpetrated by the so-called followers of Mr. Gandhi. Ladies were dishonoured, tram cars looted, houses burnt and respectable citizens maltreated, but I may be permitted to remind my Honourable colleagues here that these acts were very strongly condemned by the leader of the non-co-operation movement and peace and harmony was restored within a very brief space of time. The Government of India probably thought that the situation was menacing and extraordinary, measures alone could save it. They probably gave a blank cheque to the provincial Governments and authorized them to maintain peace and order in the country at any cost. The provincial Governments, except the Government of Bombay and the Central Provinces, in their turn at once resorted to the wide application of the drastic measures and the tragic drama began to be staged. The Provincial Congress Committees with redoubled zeal and energy largely derived from the wide application of repressive laws, began to collect their forces and reorganise the various volunteer corps. The provincial Governments, armed with powerful weapons of offence and defence and relying upon the whole-hearted support of the Government of India, presided over by a sympathetic and large-hearted Viceroy of Lord Reading's calibre and eminence oftentimes over-reached themselves and exhibited a temper resulting from utter nervousness. The arrest and conviction under section 107 of saintly Babu Bhagwan Das, a man of unblemished character, high social position and status and great literary attainments, in spite of the fact that he was not a member of any of the volunteer corps two days after the arrival and departure of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales at Benares on the charge of exhorting his fellow citizens to observe hartal on the date of His Royal Highness's visit to Benares and the arrest of 55 members of the United Provinces Provincial Congress Committee while transacting the business of the Congress Committee in the Congress Committee's office at Allahabad are some of the concrete instances of the severity and harshness with which the United Provinces Government has been pursuing the policy of indiscriminate repression. In the Punjab, the arrest and conviction of Lala Lajpat Rai and his friends under the Seditious Meetings Act while transacting the business of the Provincial Congress Committee is another instance of what I may be pardoned for calling misuse of a repressive law. Now, Sir, we have to dispassionately consider the consequence of the policy pursued by the Government during the last six weeks. I may be permitted to say that the Government, by embarking on the present policy of wholesale repression, have created an unprecedented sensation and caused deep resentment among all patriotic Indians irrespective of their political creed. The policy has not only exasperated feelings, but has given a fresh impetus to the non-co-operation movement. Sir, you are very well aware that the main features of the non-co-operation programme, viz., relinquishment of titles, boycott of educational institutions, Courts and Councils, signally failed, despite the most earnest efforts of the non-co-operation leaders, but the present policy has come to their rescue. It has begun to bear fruit in the shape of the relinquishment of titles, boycott of educational institutions, Courts and Councils. The policy, as has been recognised by politicians of all shades of opinion in the country, has failed to cure the malady it sought to cure. The volunteer organizations are thriving and thriving wonderfully. To condemn an organization, because there are some black sheep in it, is a very drastic measure indeed. Are the Government going to condemn the entire police force, because the Assistant Superintendent of Police at Allahabad kicked and slapped a certain member of the United Provinces Provincial Congress Committee and Principal Heramba Chandra Maitra was assaulted at Calcutta. I believe the policy has certainly succeeded in the wrong direction inasmuch as it has made the position of moderates most delicate indeed. In short, the present policy has not only failed to cope with the situation but has aggravated it. Personally, I think the Government ought to have waited till mass civil disobedience was resorted to. If it had led to violence, the Government could have embarked upon a policy of stern maintenance of law and order and the Legislative Assembly would not have hesitated to support them. But, Sir, my reading of the situation is that but for the repressive policy, the mass civil disobedience resolution would not have been passed by the Ahmedabad Congress. The Local Government obviously acted on the initiative from the Government of India and if the policy is reversed, the Government of India, I submit, should recall such instructions as may have been issued to the Local Governments in this behalf. With regard to the release of the political prisoners, especially those convicted under the emergency laws, I beg to submit that a calm atmosphere to discuss the ways and means to restore peace and harmony in the land will not be created unless those who have been after all incarcerated because of their political convictions are released. Lastly, Sir, the reversal of the present policy alone will not save the country from the calamities which appear to be stored for unless British statesmanship rises to the occasion. The causes which have brought about the present state of the tension of feelings in the country will have to be sympathetically dealt with. It is no use denying the fact that feelings are still running very high in the country with regard to the martial law administration in the Punjab.

(At this stage the Deputy President took the Chair.)

The tactlessness displayed by the Government in bestowing a Jagir upon Lala Sri Ram Sud has given a rude shock to sensible Indians throughout the country. Over and above all this, the legitimate national aspirations of the people are to be satisfied. The only way to solve these delicate questions is to convene a Conference. Sir, I think the Viceroy should not hesitate to invite Mr. Gandhi to a Conference of this nature, and I still hope that Mahatma Gandhi will agree to suspend his activities and sit at the Conference and discuss ways and means to bring about the possibility of an honourable settlement.

Sir P. S. Sivaswami Aiyer :—Sir, I am one of those who find themselves in a somewhat difficult position to-day with regard to the acceptance of the Resolution or the amendment, which has been placed before the House. I find it is not possible for me to accept the Resolution which has been moved by my friend, Munshi Iswar Saran. It implies that the policy which has been adopted by the Government is one of ~~placidity~~ ~~and~~ ~~that~~ that policy should be immediately abandoned. One answer to it of course is that the policy which has been adopted by the Government cannot be characterised as one of wholesale repression. In the next place whether the policy Government have followed in taking such steps as they thought fit to enforce law and order should be immediately abandoned or not is a matter which depends upon the necessities of the situation. I find myself equally unable to accept the amendment which has been moved by my friend, Dr. Gour. The amendment refers to the omission of Government to previously consult the Assembly. I do not think it is a correct constitutional position to take that the executive should, before carrying out its duty in the matter of the administration of the country, come to the Legislature and ask for its advice. The proper position constitutionally is for the executive to act upon its own responsibility and face the consequence in the Assembly. It is an impossible position for any executive to come to the Legislature for advice from time to time with regard to the manner in which it shall discharge its duty. If the executive were not competent to carry on the task of administration without coming to the Legislative Assembly for advice, the executive would be incompetent for the position with which it is entrusted.

I may be told that the position which I have enunciated may be all right in a country which enjoys responsible government where it is open to the Legislature to turn out the executive, but that it does not hold good in a country like this where the executive is irremovable and independent of the support of the Legislature. Making full allowance for that differential circumstance, I still think it would not be proper for the executive to abdicate its function of acting in an emergency and coming to the Legislature for previous consultation.

My next objection to this amendment is that it asks for the release of all prisoners in detention in pursuance of this policy. I dare say that many of the persons who have been prosecuted or convicted might have been wrongly convicted; but I certainly am not prepared to say that all the persons who have been prosecuted and convicted have been wrongly prosecuted and wrongly convicted. Upon this point I would like to refer you to the expression of opinion which has appeared in the papers as having fallen from Sir Sankaran Nair. He distinctly states in his letter to the Press after the Bombay Conference that he cannot believe that all these convictions are wrong or that it is right to ask for the release of all prisoners. Even if it is right to ask for the release of all prisoners, is it not right to limit your demand to the release of those prisoners who were guilty only of a technical offence and who were not actually concerned in any form of intimidation? I am not willing to go to the length of asking for the release of prisoners who were actually guilty of intimidation and who have been properly prosecuted and convicted.

Then, again, Sir, the amendment asks for the convening of a Conference comprising representatives of all shades of opinion with a view to concert a practical plan. Much as I should like to subscribe to the idea of convening a Conference for the purpose of finding a peaceful solution, I am afraid that it is not possible to do so at this juncture without the whole-hearted co-operation of Mr. Gandhi. So long as he is the dictator of the non-co-operators, and so long as he continues to be, if I may respectfully say so, intoxicated with the incense of adulation paid by his worshippers, and so long as he is anxious to maintain his reputation as a prophet by trying to hasten the advent of Swaraj at lightning speed, so long as he maintains the attitude, the unyielding and uncompromising attitude which he does. I am afraid it will not be possible to come to any satisfactory results. Of course it is possible to arrange for a Conference without Mr. Gandhi; but do you think it will have any influence on the large mass of non-co-operators who follow Mr. Gandhi and who swear by him as an Avatar? I am afraid a Conference without Mr. Gandhi will have hardly any influence upon the mass of non-co-operators. But, at the same time, I am not opposed at all to the idea of a Conference among others, if it is thought that the conclusions of that Conference may help towards a peaceful solution.

Sir, in the course of this debate, two issues have been raised, and they are, in the first place, what our attitude should be towards this movement of non-co-operation, and, secondly, what our attitude is with regard to the steps which have been taken by Government to combat this non-co-operation movement. As regards the first issue, as to our attitude towards the non-co-operation movement, I have no doubt whatever that there is no difference of opinion in this Assembly. I believe we are all agreed that it is a movement which is fraught with the greatest danger to the country and more especially so when we are threatened with a campaign of civil disobedience, and that there can be only one answer to this movement which has been initiated by Mr. Gandhi. I do not think that there is any difference of opinion among us as regards the necessity for fighting this non-co-operation movement and for combating its mischievous effects by all means in the power of the Government. Of course the means within the power of the Government are not confined merely to the employment of methods of punishing those who may be guilty of excesses of the law; the means within the power of the Government certainly include means of conciliation as well. I do not propose to restrict myself in the consideration of these means which may be open to government for the purpose of fighting this movement. But as regards the question which was put to us by the Honourable the Home Member whether we are prepared to enlist ourselves on the side of law and order or on the side of the non-co-operators, I do not think we have any difference of opinion among us. Our undoubted and indubitable answer must be that we are bound to support the cause of law and order. The next issue which is really one which directly arises upon this proposition is whether the steps which have been taken by Government for the enforcement of law and order are such as to commend themselves to our judgment. Now, in connection with this matter, let me acknowledge with gratitude the patience and forbearance which the Government have exercised towards this movement of Mr. Gandhi. I do not believe that any other Government would have exercised the same patience and forbearance towards Mr. Gandhi. I do not believe that we shall ever enjoy the same liberty of speech that we enjoy under the present Government, not even under the Gandhi régime, of which we have had an ample foretaste already. If coming events cast their shadows before, the amount of tyranny that is exercised upon individuals by the non-co-operators fills us with apprehensions as to what is in store for us under the Gandhi régime. Making allowance for all the patience and forbearance which the Government has exercised in the past, the immediate question before the House now is whether the steps taken by them since the 17th November last have been such as to receive our unqualified approval. My difficulty with regard to this Resolution and the amendment is that if we reject the Resolution of Munsif Iyengar Saran and if we reject the amendment of Dr. Gour, we shall be held to have given our unqualified approval to each and every step which has been taken by the Government and to all the acts which have been done for the purpose of maintaining law and order.

Now I have no wish to question the motives of Government or the soundness in general perhaps of the policy which it has been felt necessary to pursue, but I doubt very much whether even the members of Government themselves feel that the method of enforcement of the Criminal Law Amendment Act and the actual administration of the law have been carried on in such a way that there have not been cases of hardship, that there have not been cases of excesses, and that there have not been cases of blunder. While I am prepared to agree that in several cases their action might have been justified, it is quite conceivable, and from what I hear on all sides, it seems to be felt at any rate, that in several cases there has been hardship, there have been excesses and there have been blunders. Now I do not think that we shall be right in censuring the Central Government for this. It is because I do not want to censure the Central Government or their action that I find myself unable to support Munshi Iswar Saran's proposition. The question before us is what was the policy which the Government should have followed? Was it the policy of prosecution of individual offenders or punishing members of associations which were formed or which were reasonably held to have been formed for unlawful objects? It has been pointed out by the Honourable the Law Member that the ordinary law is insufficient to cope with the situation and that the intimidation which has been practised in many places could not be reached except by recourse to the Criminal Law Amendment Act. The use of the Criminal Law Amendment Act was contemplated in emergencies, and I do not think we can complain that the Act should not have been applied at all under any circumstances and in any situation like the one with which the country is now faced. But granting that the Government are entitled to use the Criminal Law Amendment Act, the question still arises whether in particular cases the Act was properly applied or not. That is undoubtedly a matter for the various Local Governments. It is not possible for the Central Government to arrogate to itself the functions of the various Local Governments, but it is open to the Central Government to exercise a check and it is the duty of the Central Government to see how the Local Governments carry out their duties in the application of this Act.

(At this stage Mr. President resumed the Chair.)

I have no doubt that in every instance in which the Criminal Law Amendment Act has been applied, the Central Government gave its sanction upon information and materials supplied to them by the Local Governments.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The sanction of the Government of India to the application of the Criminal Law Amendment Act is not necessary for Local Governments.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: If it is not necessary, I dare say the Local Governments acted according to their own judgment. I do not wish to charge them with any improper motive in invoking the aid of the Act. But it may happen that in particular cases the Local Governments might have been misinformed. I will give you one or two instances. Take the Presidency of Madras. The Criminal Law Amendment Act was extended to the Presidency of Madras, and it was said by His Excellency Lord Willingdon that it was extended to the Presidency not because he felt any necessity for it, but purely as a precautionary measure. That, I think, with all respect to his statesmanship was a distinct mistake. It merely acts as a red rag and it provokes a number of people to form associations almost for the fun of the thing, for the purpose of courting cheap martyrdom and for the purpose of going to the police and saying: 'Oh, I am a volunteer, come and arrest me'. It may be said that in Malabar the Moplah outbreaks had occurred and that was the reason for the extension of the Act. But, as a matter of fact, the outbreak had occurred in September last, and nobody ever thought of extending the Criminal Law Amendment Act on that ground. Leaving aside, therefore, the disturbed area in Malabar, it was admitted by the Government that it was purely a precautionary measure. It seems to me, with all deference to the judgment of the local authorities, that the extension of the Act might well have been postponed till the necessity was actually felt. Take another instance, vis., the action of the Governor of Burma, Sir Reginald Craddock. If I remember aright, he stated that the Criminal Law Amendment Act was extended to Burma for the purpose of securing a welcome to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. I speak subject to correction; I may perhaps be wrong, but that is my recollection. If His Excellency had said that the object of the extension was to prevent people who wanted to give a welcome from being molested, I should not object, but if I remember aright, His Excellency the Governor stated that the object was to secure a welcome to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. I do not wish to be hair-splitting: I do not know whether there was or was not any justification for the extension of the Act to Burma.

Similarly, with regard to the arrests, one cannot help feeling that there have been far too many arrests. Now this is certainly a matter within the cognisance of the Local Governments. But the administration of Law and Justice is a reserved subject, and it is open to the Central Government to pull up the Local Governments if necessary. Now can it be said that the hundreds and thousands of people who have been prosecuted and punished have all been guilty of anything more than the mere technical offence of being members of volunteer associations? I do not say that they may not be legally liable to prosecution. Once you proscrib an association it becomes unlawful, and if a person chooses to join an unlawful association, he is undoubtedly liable to prosecution and to conviction. But when I admit that they were all technically liable to prosecution and conviction, was it a wise course to have made innumerable arrests? Now look at the result of these innumerable arrests. It undoubtedly has alienated public opinion to a very very large extent. Now it may be that public opinion is misguided and that it has been wrongly alienated. It is quite possible to say that. Even if that be so, as a matter of fact very large numbers of the public are estranged in sympathy from the Government by the fact of these innumerable arrests, and that they are disposed to look upon the enforcement of the law with disfavour is a circumstance which I cannot but deplore as a well-wisher of the Government. Sir, I am anxious that there should be no divorce between the public opinion and the Government. I am anxious that every act of the Government should have the support of the public behind it, and, if we find that hundreds and thousands of persons are incarcerated for a technical offence, because, no doubt, they themselves have courted this cheap form of martyrdom, if you had had the same number of their friends sympathise with them, and that large sections of the public sympathise with them, then there must be something wrong with the administration of the law which enables such a large number of young men to be incarcerated. That is a circumstance which the Government has to take into account. For these reasons, Sir, I feel myself unable to support either the original proposition or the amendment, and, with your permission, I beg to put forward an amendment of my own. I don't know how far my amendment will be acceptable to the House, but I trust that it will meet the views of several of the Members. My amendment runs in these terms :

This House while realising the perils of the present critical situation and the difficulties of the Government in dealing with it, and the necessity for the protection of peaceful and law-abiding citizens against any interference with their liberties, feels that the application of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, Part II, has been too extensive, and that in working the Act the Local Governments have acted with more zeal than discretion and tact and that sufficient care has not been taken to avoid harshness, and the House urges the Government to ease the present situation :

- (a) by the issue of necessary instructions to Local Governments ;
- (b) by withdrawing the proscription of associations, the members of which have not actually exercised or attempted to exercise intimidation ;
- (c) by withdrawing the notifications extending the Act from areas where it might have been extended merely as a precautionary measure and without any experience of necessity therefor ;
- (d) by withdrawing all notifications under the Criminal Law Amendment Act and the Seditious Meetings Act at as early a date as practicable ;
- (e) by such amendment of the ordinary law in regard to intimidation and conspiracy as may be necessary for the protection of peaceful citizens ; and
- (f) by ordering the release of political prisoners convicted under the Criminal Law Amendment Act and not found engaged in intimidation.

Now those are the terms of my amendment which I leave in the hands of the House, so that in case it is acceptable to the Honourable Members, it may be adopted. I do not think it is necessary for me to detain the House any longer.

Mr. President : I take it the Honourable Member intends his amendment to be substituted for the amendment standing in the name of Dr. Gour and not to be taken as an amendment to it.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Sir, I rise to a point of order. I am always willing to consider any amendment put forward during a debate, particularly when it is put forward in a friendly spirit as is the case with this amendment. At the same time it must be remembered that the question before us to-day is a vital one as regards the policy of Government. It has been considered and the whole matter settled, so far as the Government of India is concerned, by the whole of the Government. Further, Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer's amendment in itself involves an indirect censure on Local Governments. It has been put in without notice and I have no opportunity of ascertaining the views of the Council as a whole on it. Therefore, if I am within my rights, Sir, purely on those grounds and without considering the merits of the proposal I should like to press my objection to its being put in at this stage.

Mr. President : The amendment has been objected to on the ground of insufficient notice and it now falls on the Chair to decide as to whether it shall stand. I think the reasons just given by the Honourable the Home

[Mr. President.]

Member are sufficient to justify me in upholding his objection. Before we proceed, however, I think we had better dispose of the amendments* moved by Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan, namely, to omit the word 'immediate' between the words 'the' and 'abandonment,' and, after the word 'country' to insert the words 'immediately after the suspension of the activities respecting picketting and civil disobedience'. The effect of the amendment, as the House will observe, being to make the abandonment of the policy of repression conditional upon the abandonment or postponement of picketting and civil disobedience by Mr. Gandhi and his movement. The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Sir Montagu de Pomeray Webb (Bombay : European) : Sir, I rise to oppose the original Resolution and the amendment now before this House. I do so because I hold that nothing in the action of Government recently, could, even by the wildest stretch of imagination, be called repression. Nor do I consider there has been any restriction of speech or of the right of association that any reasonable man with any knowledge of the practical work of a Government or with any knowledge of what is going on in other Governments could possibly object to. I may say, Sir, that I have had the good fortune to travel in all the five continents of the world. I have been in the United States and in Canada. I have been through Japan and the coast ports of China ; I have been in South Africa and in Australia. I have travelled in many tropical lands other than India and I can say, Sir, that I can assure the Members of this House that the peoples of this country are far, far in advance of the peoples in any tropical country I have visited. Now I can go further and say, from my own practical experience and from my own personal observations, that there nowhere exists greater freedom of thought, greater freedom of speech and greater freedom of action than we all enjoy in this great land of ours. I therefore read with amazement and heard with amazement this talk of repression. What is all this talk about repression? Let us look facts in the face. At this moment we are carrying out an experiment in democratic Government in course of being carried out an experiment to which there is hardly a previous parallel. So far, in the last fifty years, I think, India has progressed as far as England, in Home freedom, progressed in the previous five centuries, and if we take the Government of India Act of 1919, the progress has been most satisfactory ; surprising to many, and surprising and astonishing to those who thought this country was not ready for such a development. There are many critics and enemies of this country's progress, and there are a good many people, who say, and who have said and who continue to say that India is not fit for anything like that measure of Self-government which we have received. Well, Sir, I for one do not join in that belief. I have spent most of my life in this country and I have every confidence that India will be able to show as good a record as any other democratic country in the world. At the same time I recognise that we cannot expect to jump to our destination all at once ; progress must be by steps. That being so, I think as far as we have every ground for satisfaction and that we ought to be extremely pleased with the progress we have already made.

Of course, I recognise that here in India, as in other countries, there are ultra-patriotic enthusiasts, whose patriotism entirely ignores their practical Knowledge, who desire to abandon the broad straight path to Swaraj which is now clearly open before us, and to take a sudden jump across the ditches of anarchy and chaos to an unknown destination. I must say that I feel considerable sympathy with such patriots. Indeed, I find it very hard to be severe with them at all. At the same time, where such enthusiasm leads to disorder—frequent disorder and anarchy—then I think we must put our feelings of sympathy on one side and we must deal with the situation in the only way that the law permits.

* Vide page 1704 of these Debates.

Now, the Honourable the Mover of this Resolution has told us that he is anxious that there should be no disorder. He condemns hartals; he condemns the Bombay riots, and I presume all other disorders that have taken place, and he says it is up to Government to maintain peace and order. Well, then, Sir, I ask, what is his complaint? There is no law under which the present disorder can be met except the very law under which Government are acting. What then is the source of his trouble? Surely, it is not repression for Government to use the only law which is in their hands to use. I cannot understand his complaint at all.

Then, again, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar has told us that all the volunteers are extremely good men actuated by the highest motives. (Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar : I did not say 'all'.) That is the note I have taken. I am sorry if I have misunderstood the Honourable Member. What I think he meant to say was that the intention of the volunteer organisation is wholly good. That, I am quite ready to admit. On the other hand, I think the Honourable Member must admit that some of the activities of some volunteers have been extremely noxious to the State. We have heard of Bombay and Calcutta and other places, and I can speak personally with knowledge of Karachi, where the volunteers have on many occasions been a source of great dissatisfaction and annoyance and injury to the people. Respectable merchants have themselves come to me and complained that they have been intimidated and forced to close their offices and shops and do things which otherwise they would not do for fear of being assaulted or ill-treated by the volunteers. Dr. Gour, has, I think, told us, that the Criminal Law Amendment Act duly provides for dealing with intimidation such as this. He says : 'Why not use it? Why this talk of repression?' I believe Mr. Gandhi to have the very highest and the best of motives, but when he starts a policy of civil disobedience, I think he hardly realises where he is going to. I certainly read the other day, with considerable interest, his own confession that at the Congress of Ahmedabad the other day several of his own followers behaved disgracefully, that they said that, as they were out for civil disobedience, they would not obey him, and that they sat wherever they pleased and they said what they liked, and behaved in a way that Mr. Gandhi found it necessary to reprove. If Mr. Gandhi finds it impossible to keep his own followers in his immediate neighbourhood in order, how can he expect to keep anybody else in order? We know perfectly well—Members of this House know perfectly well—that he cannot, no matter what his intentions may be, keep the masses in order. I have, a few weeks ago, been to a small town in Bihar where I was cut off from the mails and railway communications for over a week. The whole place was having an orgy of Swaraj—local Swaraj—and I heard Mr. Gandhi's name from morning to night. I do not think that the misguided people knew what they were doing, but still, that is what happened. Mr. Gandhi's followers got out of hand.

[Sir Montagu de Pomeray Webb.]

Now, Sir, I am as anxious as everybody else to see this country move forward. I want to see India a power among the nations, a power whose administration is respected, a power whose resources will be able to command consideration in other lands and with other Governments. But I am most anxious, Sir, that our progress should not be marred by the passing of a Resolution such as that which has been placed before us to-day. The enemies of India say that this country is not fit for Self-government and that we are progressing too fast. I fear that we shall be putting ammunition in their hands if by passing a Resolution like this, we censure Government, and tell Government that they must not maintain law and order. Therefore, I appeal to this House to support Government by rejecting this Resolution and the amendments. Government have told us quite frankly that if there are any special cases of individual excesses, which is quite possible with a great organisation like that of Government, then they will gladly look into such excesses. Surely every one of us must feel sorry that distinguished men like those who have been named should have allowed their patriotism to outrun their better judgment with the result that they are now in jail. Nobody can be more sorry for that than I am myself. At the same time, sympathy for individual public men must not allow us surely to censure Government in carrying out their first and foremost elementary duty of maintaining order. I therefore appeal most confidently to this House to uphold the reputation--I might go as far as to say the great reputation which this Assembly is earning by rejecting the Resolution and the amendments now before us.

Mr. N. M. Samarth (Bombay: Nominated Non-Official) : Sir, at this late hour, I do not think it necessary for me to make any long speech. Much of the ground has been covered already by some of the previous speakers. I wish the House to realise the position in which the country is at present. I want you to realise two things. What do you think as a responsible citizen the Government ought to do, and what do you think as a responsible citizen you should ask your own countrymen to do? The Resolution and the amendments say in effect that the Government has pursued a policy which must be condemned and which it must immediately abandon. What is that policy? That policy has been the application of two special laws which I along with Dr. Gour and others who were members of the Repressive Laws Committee recommended should be kept for the present and should not be immediately repealed until normal conditions were restored, and many of us, we stated in our report, hoped that these normal conditions would be soon restored so as to enable us to recommend to this House the immediate repeal of even those laws. I ask Dr. Gour if the normal conditions have been restored or if they have not assumed an abnormal form since. Any one who is conversant with what is going on in the non-co-operation camp, as reported from time to time in their organ 'Young India,' is aware that Mr. Gandhi has been going on from step to step towards the goal which he has placed before himself, namely, the bringing about of a deadlock in the administration of the State by civil disobedience, non-payment of taxes, and so on. Even at the Conference of which Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar spoke and where he was present, Mr. Gandhi made it quite clear that he would attend in his representative capacity only if his conditions precedent were fulfilled, and one of them was in regard to the release of all the prisoners including even the Fatwa-prisoners and the Ali brothers. Another was that meanwhile, although he would put a stop to those activities till the 31st January, he should be allowed to carry on his activities in connection with the preparation for civil disobedience.

Is that a factor to be reckoned with, or is it not? I have got the reports here and they have not been contradicted and the letter which Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar read does not give a contradiction to that statement. Mr. Gandhi wants, in the meanwhile, to carry on his activities leading up to civil disobedience and this amendment itself curiously enough refers to the menace of civil disobedience and yet it asks Government to abandon immediately what it calls its repressive policy. I do not clearly understand the objection that some of the speakers have taken to the word 'repression'. Even such a thinker and writer as Sidgwick has used the word 'repression' and justified the repression in connection with the prohibition of public meetings and the proscribing of associations where the activities of those associations are likely to lead to a breach of the peace. In a well-known passage he has justified it and I put it to you : what are these associations and these public meetings? I can understand the elementary right of free speech, free association and free public meeting on the part of those persons who want to have their grievances redressed either through the Legislature or by laying an address at the foot of the Throne or, where there is no Throne, before the head of the Administration or the Republic. However wrong, however radical and mischievous their proposals may be, so long as those proposals are constitutionally put forward and placed through the Legislature or before the Throne, that association or that public meeting is permissible. But what are these men and their methods? They say that they do not recognise Government. They do not recognise judicial courts established by Government. They say that they do not recognise man-made laws before God-made laws. They go further and say that they are out to break the laws not because any particular laws are repugnant to their conscience and they want to get them repealed or amended, but solely with a view to bring about a deadlock in the administration and chaos and anarchy in the State. Can any one point out to me any thinker or writer on constitutional law or practice who postulates in favour of such a body the right of association and the right of holding public meetings? They are outlaws, they have proclaimed themselves to be outlaws and in favour of outlaws there cannot be any such right. Therefore, to my mind, Government has acted with great forbearance and patience, so much so, that Sir Sankaran Nair in the letter to the 'Times of India' says that Government should have taken steps in the days of Lord Chelmsford and they were weak at that time and the same policy was pursued by this Government. In other words, Government has been too forbearing and too patient and has not nipped in the bud the agitation, which it should have done two years ago. Now the question is started by Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar that the ordinary law should have been applied. As we all know, the ordinary law was being applied. The ordinary law is of two kinds, preventive measures and punitive measures. The Criminal Procedure Code has only two preventive measures, section 108 taking security and section 144. Both these, however, do not apply to associations. They only apply to individuals and the public.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: They were being applied and Dr. Gour himself was one of those who said that Government was abusing the power under 144 by proscribing public meetings. Therefore, the only preventive action possible was under sections 108 and 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Now, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar must know that section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, gives power to any District Magistrate to act on his own responsibility. The Seditious Meetings Act is a much milder measure. It has more safeguards. No Local Government can apply it until it has obtained the sanction of the Government of India.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Not now.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: And the Criminal Law Amendment Act is an Act which is framed with a view to put a stop to associations not necessarily indulging in criminal activity of a violent character; but provided the Government is satisfied that the association is interfering with the administration of the law and maintenance of order, it is open to the Governor General to proscribe it. Dr. Gour read only section 15 of that Act and omitted to read section 16. Section 16 says:

'If the Governor General in Council is of opinion that any association interferes or has for its object interference with the administration of the law or with the maintenance of law and order or that it constitutes a danger to the public peace, the Governor General in Council may by notification in the official Gazette declare such association to be unlawful.'

Have you or have you not heard that there have been these associations in Calcutta and that these volunteers were going about in uniform, drilling in streets openly, intimidating people and threatening shop-keepers not to open their shops? Do they or do they not come under the definition of the Criminal Law Amendment Act? Some one, I think Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, said: 'Deal with them as unlawful assemblies', i.e., after the mischief had been done, but even under the Penal Code, as Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar must know, evidence has to be brought before the Court to prove that they are unlawful assemblies. Evidence could only be given by persons who have been intimidated and the man who has been intimidated surely is not going to come before the Court and incur greater harassment and greater risk to his life and property by giving evidence of that character. As a practical lawyer and ex-judge, surely he knows that in such cases the man intimidated is not going to come before the Court. Therefore, the Government had no option but to resort to the two measures which I and others in the Repressive Laws Committee recommended Government to have in its armoury to cope with the situation which we say in our report was at the time critical and may become more critical. If things assume the normal aspect, then, no doubt they will be repealed. Now that being the case, I cannot support the Resolution, nor can I support the amendment which in itself is so contradictory in its terms. It refers to the menace of civil disobedience and at the same time it asks Government to abandon the policy of, what it calls, repression inaugurated in the country. And what is the alternative suggested in the amendment? Dr. Gour calls it the constructive part of the amendment, but I consider it to be destructive of all considerations of law and order—the release of all prisoners indiscriminately in pursuance of that policy. Sir Ernest Barker has already pointed out that that is quite impossible. It may be that some persons have been convicted or sentenced wrongly and Local Governments will take steps in such cases to reduce their sentences or to commute them if necessary.

But there comes at the end of the amendment, the panacea, the convening of a Conference. It is said that it does not matter if Mr. Gandhi does not come. Very good, if a Conference is held, whom are we going to pacify? Are you and I going to be pacified? Do you stand in need of pacification?

Dr. H. S. Gour: Very much.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: Very much: then you had better join the non-co-operation party and be done with it. As between those who run with the hare and hunt with the hounds and the leading lights of the non-co-operation party, I have no hesitation in saying 'my hat off to the latter'. Well, Sir, whom are we going to pacify if Mr. Gandhi and his party are not going to come? I can understand a sort of Round Table Conference if Mr. Gandhi is amenable to influence by Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar or others and gives up his present demand, namely, that whatever the Conference may decide or may not decide, he must in the meanwhile be allowed full latitude to form his associations and make all preparations for civil disobedience. So long as that demand stands, it is an impossible position. Another aspect is this: supposing he is induced to come. He will take advantage of this Round Table Conference and say: 'well, I asked Government to release the Ali brothers, the Malabar martial law prisoners and other prisoners, and I asked Government to give us immediate dominion status; they have not acceded to it and they would not allow me to form my associations with a view to introducing civil disobedience. The Government is not reasonable; it has not acceded to my demand and I must therefore immediately start civil disobedience.' That will be to my mind the outcome of a Round Table Conference with Mr. Gandhi. Without Mr. Gandhi, a Round Table Conference is futile. However much I am anxious, and my anxiety is not less than Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's to bring about peace and harmony in the land, I will not be a party to any proposal which I think is not going to lead to any tangible results. Let not Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar think that he alone is anxious to advance the progress of the country as rapidly as possible. He will remember that before the Joint Parliamentary Committee I gave evidence in such terms that even the extremists were rather staggered at the way in which I put my case. My anxiety for my country is not less than his, but at the same time it is impossible for me to ask this House to pass any Resolution or amendment, whether coming from the democratic or the autocratic party, such as the one before us. It is impossible for me to recommend it to the House.

Mr. Abdur Rahim (North-West Frontier Province; Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I am quite at a loss as what to utter and say concerning the present critical situation when I see and find that the political clouds are thickening and the thunder advancing and the storm now seems to be vertical and threatens to burst on the political ground as if with the next clap it will not only shake but shatter the whole political area into pieces. Now or never will be settled the fate of India, which decision must for ever settle the point at issue. Considering the present situation, one cannot help coming to this definite conclusion and finding that it has come practically to a fight to a finish between the Government and its subjects. The final result must either be the glory of the former or the fall of the latter and must consequently turn India into the tomb of the Government's ever-increasing glory and the grave of her children's fond hopes and expectations, or vice versa. This being the sad and painful situation, I am prompted to offer a few observations for the consideration of this Honourable House, knowing full well that if I criticise the favourites of the people I will be looked upon as the tool of the Government, and if I censure the Government I will be considered an instrument of faction. Realising also that it may look like arrogance on my part to speak and like ingratitude on my part to keep silent, I nevertheless believe that when the affairs of one's country are in a distracted condition everyone is required to step out of their ordinary course of life in order to try and compose the minds of the people and endeavour to conciliate their affections. At such a moment it is the duty of every individual to hazard something, rather than to sit idle and indulge in idle lamentations over the calamities of one's country. I would first venture to appeal to those non-co-operators, my countrymen, whose loud cry for immediate 'Swaraaj' is resounding throughout the land and receives a response from many a people from the four corners of India : whose ambition and over-zeal have out-travelled their sagacity and wisdom to school themselves to patience and see if the policy of sudden impulse will enable them either to give peace to India or even to their own conscience. Let them just think for a moment and see if they are not risking their present congratulations, which are bound to be turned into serious complaints and grievances before long. Let them be fair and judge if their own feelings have not bribed and taken them in and cast them into a fool's paradise. Let them be dead-certain and sure that at leisure they will find out that tears which will be extorted and shed later on will be tears not only of folly but of deception and delusion too. To their great grief and sad surprise they will find that their sum of happiness on this cast is nothing else but building castles in the air. Perhaps they forget that those who live in an exaggerated hope meet with bitter disappointment and despair; let them, when hope pictures a flattering scene of future bliss before them, deny its pencil those colours which are too bright to be lasting. Let this exaggerated, uncertain and deceiving hope neither steal from them or steal from them. Let them give up this idea that 'as every thing can be gained in time, why should it not be by a sudden impulse. Let them not have to confess in the end that they have backed the wrong horse'. The situation can only be solved by those who have equal love and esteem for all the sons of Adam and have the real interests of their country at heart. Those are the people who can be the joining link between the Government and the non-co-operators. It is they alone who can bridge the gulf between the two; it is they who can annihilate the space and time between the two, and make them meet at the altar of humanity, equity, justice and love, actuated by mutual understanding, respect and good-will. It is they who can save India from ruin, turn her from despair to hope, give her education to safety, from hatred to love, from disorder to order, from misery to prosperity from sorrow to joy. It is they who can save India from drifting into chaos, and the abyss yawning before her. Government should follow a policy of construction and compromise, not a policy of destruction and discord. The Government should not be met down with anger and should not be enraged with fury; it should not be angry and proud, it should show that it has a head to contrive a heart to beat, a hand to grasp. It must strengthen its hold on India by confidence in its justice, its power, word of honour and wisdom. The Government knows and feels that India, as not the same to-day as it was yesterday and will not be the same to-morrow, as it is to-day, must show an exceptionally sympathetic attitude towards the legitimate aspirations of the Indians, which is bound to win for them the consent of the governed based on the respect which they will have for the progressive justice of the rulers in responding to their legitimate demands and aspirations. The Government must bear in mind that it requires a peculiar instinct of statesmanship to govern India through a native army and native press. The Government should not think for a single moment that the Indians are sheep and sheep too without a single shepherd. The Government must be prepared to face and brave all these unpleasant and repulsive troubles, worries and anxieties in a good and cheerful spirit.

They are but the natural results of the eastern civilization coming in contact with the western civilization. The East cannot come in contact with the West without disturbing its serenity, without bringing new ideas into play, without infusing new ingredients, without in a word causing unrest.

It must also remember that when it gave education to the Indians on western lines, it caused the unrest, because it wished to colour Indian ideals with western aspirations. The present unrest should not take the Government with a sad surprise, the more so when it welcomed it in Persia and commended it enthusiastically in Turkey in the beginning, patronised it in China and Japan and has acknowledged it only lately in Egypt and Ireland. The watchword of the Government in future should be co-operation in the following words: 'we are pledged to advance and mean to advance'. At the end, I will request the Government to be good and kind enough to follow those best British traditions that 'they do not continue to govern the people because they do it well but that they are merely taking over the Government till the people can govern themselves'. The British should feel proud and say to India: 'rise up and try to walk, we will hold your hand first till you are grown stronger; when you have grown stronger, you shall walk free besides us as our daughter whom we have brought up.'

Sir, I now come to the Resolution before this Honourable House. I am sorry to say that I do not agree with the Honourable Mover of the Resolution and that too on many a good ground, firstly that the Government never followed yet that old well tried policy that it is with men as with asses, whoever would keep them fast, must find a very good hold at their ears. Secondly, that the Government has not allowed itself to be hurried into the so-called policy of repression. The Government took a very long time after long consideration and deliberation too. If there have been some accidents and instances, they are due to those individuals concerned. Nobody will blame the Government if it saw men smoking political pipes near powder magazines and said: 'away with the men and away with the powder'. In the interest of India, to say nothing of your own national honour, in the name of duty and of common sense, the first and commanding task is to keep order and to quell violence among all races and creeds sternly to insist on the impartial application of rules of justice, in short to guard the law, which is mother of prosperity and peace.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Sir, I am afraid that a golden opportunity is being thrown away by the Government and the Assembly. On one other occasion, too, a similar mistake was made. When the massacres in the Punjab in 1919 under the cover of martial law were discussed in the Assembly, contrary to the expectations of most of us, my Honourable friend, Mr. Jatinadas Dwarkadas, was persuaded to drop the last clause of his Resolution on the subject which is in a measure responsible for the present discontent of the people in the country. I would request all parties concerned not to be governed by any false idea of prestige. The people are infuriated. It may be that there is some insanity about the conduct of the people; but that is no reason why those who are in authority should refuse to consider the situation sympathetically. I have not the slightest idea of representing to the House that the non-co-operators are behaving rightly. As a matter of fact, I have had a very sad experience of it. Surreptitiously, clandestinely, they do take action to subvert the normal and regular work of institutions. Intimidation too is being used by the non-co-operators. That does not lead me to think that on that account the non-co-operation movement deserves to be put down ruthlessly. It has its good side. It represents some very good and beneficent progress. It represents quickened sense of self-respect. It represents deeper study of human history that the Indians have gone in for. It represents Indian political psychology, and means aspiration, and a very legitimate aspiration, on the part of the Indian people for self-rule for doing things as far as possible themselves on their own responsibility. The people have been very eager, so far as I can see, in these their aspirations. No one in this debate has come forward to refer to the causes of the present discontent amongst the people in the country. No one has referred to the Government refusal to punish those officers who even according to them misbehaved during the massacres in the Punjab in 1919; and no one can deny that pledges have been given, perhaps wrongly, for the modification of the Treaty of Savres. If pledges have been given, every effort should be made to redeem those pledges. Coming to the last cause, viz., Swaraj, it is true that we ought to develop slowly and stage by stage. That would be undoubtedly a sane development. But several well-known circumstances are responsible for the creation of this desire on the part of the people, viz., that they should at once make a further definite advance on the road to responsible government; and it surely behoves Government to sympathetically consider this mentality of the people who have been entrusted to their charge. Proposals are made for a Round Table Conference, and yet some very responsible people have come forward to say: "Do not go in for this Conference." I say, you would be committing a very sad mistake—excuse my plain speaking—if you do reject the proposal that has been made to you to-day. My Honourable friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, for whom my high respect just at this moment is ever so much higher, for this that he has done his best to arrange the preliminaries of a Conference, has read out a letter from Mahatma Gandhi. You may no doubt laugh at it, but according to me, this your laughter is short sighted. I am seeking to put my own views before you, and to tell you that his endeavours to bring about a settlement should be respected. If it is true that Mr. Gandhi has been in discussions unreasonable in the expression of his opinions, if at times he has formulated irrevocable demands, now at any rate, so far as I see from the letter that has been read out, he is in a reasonable mood. I am only describing the impression that has been left on my own mind. Different minds may read things differently. Events will show which readings are correct. I want to state clearly that according to me and several others, I suppose, in the Assembly this is a very fit opportunity for agreeing to a Conference with the leader of the non-co-operation movement. I myself do not believe in conferring with other leaders of the non-co-operation movement. I feel that Mr. Gandhi is really the one factor to be reckoned with at this time.

for he will be most followed by the people; and if that is so, it is very desirable to give in a little and to consent to a Conference with him. If this Conference should really lead to some substantial result, everyone, I suppose, will thank Providence for having been enabled to make up his mind to consent to this Conference. It has been said that in the Resolution as also in the amendment some censure is involved on the conduct of Government. I myself quite realise that the hands of the Government have been and are being to a certain extent forced. While I do realise that, what I mean to make out is that the Government is simply refusing to consider the causes of the discontent. It says that it is impossible to go back upon the past, that it cannot punish those that have been guilty in the Punjab massacres, that the Treaty of Sevres is an international question and therefore beyond it, and that Swaraj is a matter for consideration by the Parliament and people of England. This is a very wrong attitude to take, so far as I see. Politic satisfaction of people's claims will strengthen authority and power. Change this attitude, and I have no doubt that the people will respond. No one can pretend to make out that the people of India are bad, that they are malicious or that their emotions are perverted. They are in a measure being misled undoubtedly, but precisely on account of this attitude on the part of Government. If they have committed excesses, I would request you most earnestly to take into consideration the causes of this insanity, and to deal with the situation sympathetically. If you do not deal with the situation sympathetically, it will be very difficult for you by mere repression, however strong you may be, to hold the situation well in hand. It will then be bad for Government, and it will be bad for the people. If a certain amount of censure is involved in the Resolution and amendment, let the Government endure it in the interests of the people and in the cause of humanity. If you are not prepared to modify the policy of repression immediately, at any rate suspend it. If Mr. Gandhi is going to suspend his operations till the 31st January, there is absolutely no reason why the Government should not suspend its repressive policy till the 31st January, and try to come to some understanding. If agreement with Mr. Gandhi becomes impossible, then all of us will be with the Government. May divine protection strengthen the wisdom and good will needed for the task!

Mr. President: Munshi Iswar Saran.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated: Labour Interests): On a point of order, Sir. Is it the reply and is the debate closed?

6 P.M.

Mr. President: I called on the Honourable Member to reply.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: There are other Members who wish to speak.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: May I ask for a ruling on a particular point, before the Mover replies, and that is about the Resolution standing in my name which comes on to-morrow? Whatever may be the result of this debate, would you rule that Resolution out or would you allow it to be discussed to-morrow?

Dr. H. S. Gour: In that connection, may I suggest that my amendment may be put in parts? If it is put in parts it will obviate the necessity and meet the objection that my learned friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, apprehends.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The Honourable Member chose to move all these points in one amendment, and I think we are entitled to have the amendment put to the Assembly exactly as he moved it; but I have no objection, so far as the Government is concerned, to a debate on this Resolution of Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar to-morrow, if such a debate is within the rules.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (Meerut Division : Muhammadan Rural): On a point of order, the debate is not closed yet on this subject?

Mr. President : I called on the Honourable Member from Allahabad to reply.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan : Does it mean that the debate is closed?

Mr. President : Certainly. As regards the point raised by Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, the last lines of the amendment standing in the name of Dr. Gour read as follows :

‘And the convening of a Conference comprising representatives of all shades of opinion with a view to concert a practical plan for the restoration of peace in the country and for ensuring its political progress in consonance with its national aspirations.’

The Resolution set down in to-morrow's list asks for the appointment of a Committee of the Members of the Indian Legislature with power to co-opt, that is to say, turn it into a Round Table Conference, to inquire into the causes of unrest prevailing in the country and the measures taken by Government to deal with the situation and to make recommendations. Verbally these are two different propositions. Substantially they are the same proposition; and therefore I think they fall under the combined operation of Standing Orders 31 and 70 which preclude the Assembly from discussing and deciding questions already decided during a Session. If Honourable Members wished to have two separate debates they should have drawn their Resolutions and amendments accordingly. The Honourable Member himself invited the Assembly to discuss it by putting down an amendment to the Resolution standing in the name of Munshi Iswar Saran, and therefore I assume that he wished the debate to be taken to-day. The House is my witness that most of the speeches have referred in explicit terms to the question of a Round Table Conference; and under the rules, therefore, he cannot have an opportunity to raise a debate later to-morrow on the motion standing in his name.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar : Of course, Sir, when you have given a ruling, it is not open to any Member to contest it; but may I draw your attention to this fact, that I wanted a Committee composed of Members of the Legislature and the word ‘co-opt’ merely means, as we know, that when the Committee sits it could take the assistance of one or two members from outside. I respectfully submit that that is not the same as a Round Table Conference. It was not in that light certainly that I put in my Resolution. I find, Sir, moreover, that in this amendment that I have put in the word ‘co-opt’ has been altogether omitted; and if my Resolution is already covered by the amendment of Dr. Gour, I am in this unfortunate position that I cannot move my amendment and I cannot move my proposition.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas (Sind : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : Also I should like to inquire what will be the position of those people who are entirely in favour of Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's Resolution but are not in favour of the amendment of Dr. Gour.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, may I suggest one possible solution? I do not know whether it is possible under the rules, but I should have no objection at all if Dr. Gour is allowed to withdraw that portion of his amendment which deals with a Conference and leave it to be discussed to-morrow on Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar's Resolution. I do not know whether this will be in accordance with the rules; but we should have no objection.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind: Muhammadan Rural): As it is a late hour, Sir, now and several gentlemen wish to speak, if you like, the subject may be taken up to-morrow. There might be some sort of compromise arrived at by these amendments being withdrawn. I think that will answer the purpose.

Mr. President: What the Honourable Member has proposed is very reasonable, and I should prefer to proceed by the spirit of the rules rather than by the letter. But it will be setting a bad precedent if I allow the Assembly, after having discussed—and I think the House is my witness that they have discussed it pretty fully to-day, the issue of a Round Table Conference as linked with the so-called repressive policy of Government, to repeat that discussion to-morrow and possibly to arrive at a contrary decision. These rules are framed in such a way as to provide for a considered opportunity of debate on public policy, and when that considered opportunity arises and has been exhausted, then the opportunity cannot arise again in the same Session.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I move, Sir, formally that the debate be adjourned till to-morrow on this Resolution.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan: May I point out that the amendment which is standing in the name of Dr. Gour is not standing in the name of Dr. Gour alone, but that it stands in the name of Dr. Gour and others, and Dr. Gour has got no authority to withdraw it.

Mr. President: No Member has authority to withdraw an amendment except by leave of the House. An amendment once moved cannot be taken out of the cognisance of the House except by the will of the House expressed in a division. A motion has been moved that the debate be now adjourned till to-morrow.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, I understand that the proposal is that this debate should be adjourned until to-morrow. That action is, in my humble opinion,—of that you are a better judge than I am—a violation of the rules, because you cannot put down on a non-official date business which has not obtained a place in the ballot and neither this Resolution nor this amendment has been ballotted for. But there are other objections. The whole question has been debated now at very great length; there is nothing more to be said. (Cries of 'No'.) If there are other Members who wish to speak—and I dare say there are—they must remember that if every Member in this Assembly wishes to speak on every Resolution, we shall not earn the reputation of being a very practical body. At any rate, Sir, if the feeling is that the debate should continue, let it continue to-day and let us finish it once for all; let us not have any adjournment and fresh proposals and complications; let us consider to-day and settle the plain issue which is before the House, and let us finish the debate if we have to sit till midnight.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri (Chittagong and Rajshahi Division : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : May I make a suggestion, Sir? Sir William Vincent has referred to certain facts in Bengal and to certain facts which transpired in the Repressive Laws Committee. I feel that those statements of facts are somewhat different from the facts within my personal knowledge, and therefore I feel that I am entitled to state the facts within my recollection and as at this late hour I do not like to tire the patience of the House, may I suggest that the debate be adjourned?

Mr. President : That is not a point of order. The Honourable Member is airing a grievance which every Parliamentarian has to suffer many times in his career, viz., that of finding that the subject is exhausted before he rises to his feet.

Lient.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney : As the Honourable the Home Member said, let us thrash out the matter to a finish to-night. I therefore propose that we adjourn for half an hour for tea or some refreshments and re-assemble.

Mr. President : The motion moved by the Honourable Member from Madras on my left is perfectly in order. But I should like to point out that the provision to move an adjournment of the debate is one which ought only to be used when a substantial difficulty has arisen.

Now no difficulty has arisen as far as I can see except the one created by the course which Members themselves have chosen to take. In my view the debate on the subject is exhausted. I do not mean that each individual Member's right of speech is exhausted, but the subject is substantially exhausted. I suggested to the Honourable Member from Allahabad about three-quarters of an hour ago that he should take into consideration the desirability of rising to his feet as soon as he caught my eye in order that he might exercise his right of reply. As I said to the Honourable Member from Bengal, I must remind other Members who may feel aggrieved that it is impossible for the Chair to give each individual Member the full exercise of his right of speech in this Chamber on every debate.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : In that view, Sir, I beg leave to withdraw my motion.

The motion was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Munshi Iswar Saran : Sir, at this late stage I do not think I should inflict a long speech on the House, but there are one or two observations which I should like, with the permission of the House, to make. Some time ago I happened to read in the papers that a certain enterprising District Magistrate in the United Provinces issued a circular to his subordinate Magistrates that at this critical moment there could be only two parties, namely, those that were with the Government and those that were against the Government. He further said that those who expressed lip sympathy with Government but did not give it their full support were traitors. I imagine he was referring to moderates. I felt at the time that it was some bureaucrat saturated with bureaucratic notions, but, Sir, I have been surprised that the same principle has been enunciated in this House to-day. Sir, let me say at once that the position will be intolerable for us if it is expected that those who are here should support Government through thick and thin regardless of the fact whether that support is justified by the action and policy of the Government or not. I must say at once that as far as that kind of support is concerned, it cannot now come from the educated people, but it can come from classes whom I should be sorry to characterise. Sir, the whole debate has unnecessarily taken place, because according to the learned constitutional lawyer from Bombay these non-co-operators are outlaws and they are not entitled to either freedom of speech or freedom of association. That being so, he would have conferred a great boon upon this Assembly if he had enunciated this constitutional principle at the outset of this debate and had relieved us of the trouble of discussing this matter threadbare for the whole day. Sir, the Honourable Sir William Vincent has told us that pathetic sympathy is futile. Yes, the Honourable the Home Member would have been satisfied if we had all shouted instead of 'Gandhi Maharaj ki jai', 'Government ki jai'. Now, let me say clearly that when we do not feel any sympathy we will not hesitate to say so, and when we say that we are interested in the maintenance of law and order, we mean it, and the moment we change the present view we will not hesitate to say so either to the Honourable Sir William Vincent or to this House or to the whole world.

Sir, a great deal has been said about reports having come from the various provincial Governments. We have some experience of these reports in our own province. Speaking, I think, at the Lucknow Durbar, His Excellency the Governor of the United Provinces expressed his satisfaction with the result of the policy which he had inaugurated in the United Provinces. He said the inauguration of this policy had given general relief to the people, and what was the result? At once there was a manifesto issued by 25 prominent men of Allahabad controverting the statement made by His Excellency and that manifesto was followed by other manifestos in various other places. I shall ask the Honourable the Home Member not to consider that every information that comes through official sources is and must in every case be accurate. These are not facts which have been tested by cross-examination. Most of them are matters of opinion and impression, and I submit it is not impossible even for an I. C. S. Governor of a province to make mistakes about his own impressions and opinions. Sir, let the Honourable the Home Member give us non-officials the credit of knowing our own respective provinces as do the rulers of those provinces. I submit, Sir, that a non-official has more sources of knowing the actual, the inner state of affairs than the Governor of a province between whom and the people exists a great and impassable gulf, Sir, now we understand the position of Government. The position is this, that the Government is out to fight non-co-operation and these are the weapons which the Government has adopted. Sir, I must frankly confess that I was not under that impression so far, but if that be so, then let me say most clearly that the weapons which Government has chosen are feeble and weak. You cannot crush, you cannot destroy non-co-operation by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, by the Seditious Meetings Act, by the Defence of India Act and by the Press Act. If you wish to embark on a warfare like this, I ask you to choose stronger and more violent weapons, because these feeble weapons create irritation, they create indignation and resentment; they do not achieve the aim that you have in view. But as far as this Honourable House is concerned, I shall beg the Members to consider whether this policy which has been inaugurated has succeeded or not. We have been asked: what alternative remedy have you got to suggest? I say, consult us. Let there be a meeting—I am not thinking of a Conference; let there be a meeting.

between the officials and the non-officials; let there be a heart-to-heart talk. Let us see if we can devise some means of easing the situation. But the mere fact that I am not able, on the spur of the moment, to suggest an alternative remedy does not argue that the remedy that you have employed is the correct remedy. I say the narrow issue which this House at this moment has got to decide is, is this policy in the interests of the country? Has it succeeded? And, knowing the conditions of the country as we do, do we feel that it will succeed? If you feel that it will not, then it is your clear duty to say that this policy should be abandoned.

Sir, there is only one word more I wish to add and I will then sit down. The Honourable Member from Karachi has said: 'Don't vote in favour of this Resolution or in favour of the amendment' moved by my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, because people outside will say 'these people are not fit for Self-Government.' My answer is this. I do not care a straw what people outside think. My own feeling is that I should act in conformity with the dictates of my conscience, and as soon as I have done that, the opinion of the outside world is a matter of no consequence to me, and I hope the House will consider the question also from this point of view. I entreat you to think of the thousands upon thousands of men who are waiting eagerly to learn the result of this debate. The eye of the whole country is upon you. You know the irritation, the indignation that has been caused in the country, and I say: 'Please realise your responsibility, think correctly and vote rightly!'

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, there are very few points on which I wish to reply, but I am particularly anxious to answer the points raised by my Honourable friend, Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, as his speech was marked, I think, by a very patent desire to achieve peace. His amendment was one many points in which will, I believe, commend themselves to all sides of this House and it was really a matter of regret to me that I was unable, in circumstances—which he as an ex-official will appreciate, to agree to its being moved. I should be very glad to have been able to do so; after reading his amendment again, however I think I shall be able to show that many of the points he has raised are already being met by Government. One criticism which has been raised against us—I think my Honourable friend, Dr. Sapru, met it—has been that trials are held in camera. Well, we have asked that, as far as possible, trials should be held in public, although I must remind Honourable Members that this is not always possible and that in some cases public trials held not only under the Criminal Law Amendment Act but also under the Penal Code,—as Members who come from the Province of Sind will doubtless know, have caused most undesirable excitement, and indeed very nearly promoted disorder. Again, we have been told that these trials are not always carefully conducted; instructions have been issued on that point also. Individual cases of injustice have been mentioned. Now the Government of India does not accept responsibility for individual cases; they can only lay down a general policy. But Local Governments have been asked, wherever there is reason to doubt the legality or justice of any conviction, to review those sentences carefully in consultation with their legal advisers. I believe in at least one case in the Punjab this work has already been taken up; Honourable Members who come from that Province will know whether that is correct. Similarly we have put to Local Governments the question of special treatment being accorded in certain cases to political prisoners—I dislike the term and should say, prisoners convicted under these two Acts; I believe also the Assembly is aware that in almost all Provinces, special instructions have been so issued. Now that is not an indication—and no one can say it is an indication—that Government wishes to treat these prisoners with undue severity. (A voice: 'Go further'.)

No doubt the Honourable Member would go further and release all criminals. Finally we have said—and this is more important still—that we are as anxious as any one in this House not to prosecute an unduly large number of foolish individuals. Consequently we have suggested to Local Governments that they should, as far as possible, exercise the power of arrest only in the case of volunteers guilty of obstruction, violence and intimidation and leaders of such organizations. Honourable Members will realise that we have taken all these steps in order to avoid excessive or over-drastring treatment, and I think the House will give us credit for our anxiety to prevent this. On the other hand, we are anxious to maintain law and order and we cannot and will not have the authority of the law defied. (Applause.) This is a duty of every administration. Honourable Members know that every civilised Government has to maintain law and order; it is in this respect that I want this Assembly now to support us. On the other hand, we have no desire to avoid our clear responsibility—our paramount duty—of seeing that justice is done, and, that is a point on which His Excellency the Viceroy has been most insistent; I think I have used his very words. We are prepared to ask Local Governments to inquire into any specific cases of undue severity or improper prosecutions or excesses brought to notice. It has been said: 'Why don't you maintain law and order in some other way, by some other method?' I repeat my answer to this charge. No one has suggested any other method of meeting the difficulty, but as my Honourable friend, Dr. Sapru, told you—I was prevented from doing so because I had exceeded my time limit in my last speech—Government are now examining the law relating to those unlawful associations in order to discover whether some other equally effective method of preventing associations practising systematical intimidation is possible, which may at the same time avoid the criticisms which rightly or wrongly have been levelled against them. Does that indicate an unreasonable attitude on the part of Government?

Now, I want to turn for a few moments to another point: this question of a Conference. Now, I should have been only too willing, if it were in accordance with the rules, to have had a debate on this point to-morrow, but I understand it is not possible and if I may say so I entirely appreciate the reasons of the Honourable the President for this decision. But what is the position in regard to a Conference? Honourable Members have, I am sure, all seen what Sir Sankaran Nair has said on the subject. He was a Member of the Executive Council and I have some experience of his political views. Indeed, I think Sir Sankaran Nair and I have differed more than any other two Members of the Executive Council in this century. He is certainly not the kind of man who would give up the idea of a Conference, such as was suggested, lightly. What did he say? He showed clearly that any Conference at this juncture and under the proposed conditions was out of the question and useless. And, in truth, if Honourable Members consider the facts, there are certain essentials for any idea of a Conference—the first of which is to create a proper atmosphere. Well I have read the proposals of the Bombay Committee and Mr. Gandhi's letter cited by Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar and I do not see anything about a truce in the letter, though I see a great deal in it of what the Government is to do. (A voice : 'Read it again.') I have read it twice and I defy any person to show me where any cessation of activities by non-co-operators is mentioned. The proposals put forward in that letter in any case are impossible. There is, however, no question of closing the door and I have no authority to suggest that even, but it would be idle at this moment to discuss the question of a Conference on the conditions proposed by the Committee, a Conference further to which, as far as I can see, Mr. Gandhi would not be a party, and to the conclusions of which, even if he were a party, he certainly could not bind the Congress Members. I want to be quite clear on this point. I have no authority to suggest that the Government would agree to a Conference, and I have no authority to close the door to the possibility of such a thing in happier circumstances. All I am authorised to say is that it is futile to discuss it at present. Now, I apologise for having detained this Assembly so long, and I will conclude by expressing the hope that they will not by their decision to-day send out a message to the country which will be taken by the forces of disorder, whatever the Honourable Mover may say, as a direct encouragement and cause of triumph which will discourage all our officers, which will dishearten all lawful citizens, and which will make the administration of this country impossible.

Mr. President : The original question was that :

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council the immediate abandonment of the policy of repression inaugurated in the country' since which an amendment has been moved to substitute the following :

'While strongly deprecating the aggressive form of non-co-operation manifested by some non-co-operators and the resort to violence by them in some places as also the menace of mass civil disobedience, this Assembly strongly disapproves of the recourse by Government to a general policy of repression without previously consulting this House and recommends to the Governor General in Council the immediate abandonment of the policy of repression inaugurated in the country, the reversion to the policy announced to this House on the 23rd March, 1921, the release of all persons in detention in pursuance of that policy and the convening of a Conference comprising the representatives of all shades of opinion with a view to concert a practical plan for the restoration of peace in the country and for ensuring its political progress in consonance with its national aspirations.'

The question is that that amendment be made.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

RATES AND STANDARDS OF RAILWAYS IN INDIA AS COMPARED WITH FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

198. Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer : (a) With reference to the statement in paragraph 2 of the Report of the Railway Committee, 1921, will the Government be pleased to furnish a statement showing the railway rates and fares in the United States, Japan and the principal European States for which information may be available ?

(b) What are the other countries in which railway rates and fares are about the same level as the Indian Railway rates and fares ?

(c) Is the Government in a position to state whether in point of efficiency and providing for the convenience of the public the railway systems in the countries referred to in clauses (a) and (b) are superior or not to the Indian railway systems ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) A statement giving such information as is available in regard to passenger fares and goods rates with a view to comparison is laid on the table.

(b) The passenger fares and goods rates in India were lower than those in any other country in the year 1917-18 (the latest for which these comparative figures are available), Japan approaching most closely to India in respect of passenger fares and Canada in respect of goods rates. In other countries the passenger fares and goods rates were considerably higher than those in India.

(c) Government are not in possession of sufficient information to justify the expression of an opinion on this point.

FORFEITURE OF 'RELIGIOUS FATWAS OF THE ULAMAS.'

199. Mr. Mohammad Faiyaz Khan: (1) With reference to the reply* given by the Government to the Question No. 73, re the forfeiture of the leaflet entitled 'The Religious Fatwas of the Ulamas,' asked by the Honourable Syed Reza Ali in the Council of State on September 6th, as promised by Honourable Mr. H. D. Craik to supply further information on the subject if desired by any other Honourable Member, will the Government be pleased to state (a) if it consulted any Maulvi or Maulvis as to whether the said leaflet was based on the Islamic Doctrines or not; (b) if it did consult any Maulvi or Maulvis, what are their names?

(2) Is it a fact that the said Fatwa was drawn up and signed by 500 Ulamas of all parts of India?

(3) Is it a fact that on 8th August, 1921, the joint offices of the Jamiatul Ulama and Khilafat Committee at Delhi were searched, and that 812 copies of the Fatwa were confiscated and removed by the Police?

(4) If the Fatwa or a part of the Fatwa of the Jamiatul Ulama was not proscribed, then why were the offices of the Khilafat Committees and the Jamiatul Ulama searched under the orders of the Delhi Government?

(5) If the confiscation took place under some misunderstanding of facts, then why was not the mistake rectified immediately and the confiscated copies returned?

(6) Are the Government aware that the Jamiatul Ulama have challenged that each and every item of the said proscribed Fatwa is based upon clear and unequivocal Qoranic injunctions and the Traditions of the Holy Prophet (may peace be bestowed on him)?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (1) (a) and (b). No.

(2) So far as is known, there were two editions of the Fatwa, one issued soon after the Ulamas Conference in November 1920 with 116 signatures and the second edition with 463 signatures, from various parts of India.

(3) Yes. The copies confiscated were copies of the second edition.

(4) and (5). It is understood that the Honourable Member questions the legality of the action of the Police in searching the offices and seizing the copies referred to. If he will refer to section 12 of the Indian Press Act, he will see that the Police are entitled to seize a document which has been proscribed wherever it is found. Before the date of the search another Local Government had issued a notification proscribing the leaflet and any document containing the matter of the leaflet. The action of the Delhi Police was therefore legal.

(6) Yes, but several other pronouncements by persons describing themselves as Ulamas have appeared from time to time in the Press and elsewhere, challenging the accuracy of the statements made and the injunctions contained in the Fatwa.

ADOPTION OF RESOLUTIONS OF THE INDIAN LEGISLATURE.

200. Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state which of the Resolutions of the Indian Legislature during the last two sessions have been adopted by the Government and what practical steps, if any, have so far been taken in respect thereof?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state the reasons for non-adoption in respect of each of the Resolutions not adopted by the Government?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to consider the advisability of regularly publishing these statements?

The Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru: With reference to part (a) the Honourable Member is referred to the statements laid on the table on the 16th instant in reply to a similar question put by Mr. Agnihotri in September last. Further information covered by part (a) and the rest of the question will take some time to collect, and when it is complete the reply to the Honourable Member's question will be laid on the table.

BALLOT FOR BILLS.

Mr. President: I have to announce that the ballot for Bills for the 7th of February, which was previously fixed for 10-30 on Monday morning, the 23rd, is postponed to 10-30 on Tuesday morning, the 24th, owing to the cancellation of Monday's meeting. A circular will be issued without delay to Honourable Members.

STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member): Sir, may I make a statement of the legislative business for the 25th of January. It is proposed on that date to take into consideration the Report of the Joint Committee on the Indian Income-tax Bill and, if the Assembly agrees, to pass the Bill as amended. It is also proposed, if time permits, to take into consideration the Report of the Select Committee on the Indian Emigration Bill and, if the Assembly agrees, to pass the Bill as amended. If time permits, there may be a motion to refer the Delhi University Bill, which was introduced on the 16th of January, to a Joint Committee of both Chambers.

[Sir William Vincent.]

RESOLUTION RE: APPOINTMENT OF A COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE SECTIONS 124-A, 153-A AND 500 OF THE INDIAN PENAL CODE AND SECTION 108 OF THE CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE.

Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal (Bihar and Orissa: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, the Resolution which I am going to move stands as follows:

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that a Committee be appointed to examine sections 124-A, 153-A and 500 of the Indian Penal Code and section 108 of the Criminal Procedure Code and to report in what manner these sections should be amended so that the rights of the State and the public or any section or member thereof may be safeguarded against abuse of their power by journalists, while, at the same time, protection is afforded to the latter against unwarrantable and unreasonable interference by either judicial or executive authority.'

This is a very important Resolution for the consideration of this House. The liberty of the press is a sine qua non for the healthy growth of a nation. Even after the inauguration of the Reforms the Indian Legislature will be greatly handicapped in the due discharge of its responsibility without the aid of a free press for boldly bringing to notice the real state of affairs obtaining in the country. I do not mean to say that there should be no reasonable restraint for controlling the press, but what I mean is that the press should enjoy a reasonable protection against arbitrary action. An eminent judge in addressing the jury was pleased to observe:

'You should recollect that to the public political articles great latitude is given. Dealing, as they do, with the affairs of the day, such articles, if written in a fair spirit and bona fides, often result in the production of great public good. Therefore, I advise and recommend you to deal with these publications in a spirit of freedom and not to view them with an eye of narrow criticism. You should not look merely to a strong word or a strong phrase but to the whole article. You should recollect that you are the guardians of the liberty of the press and that, whilst you will check its abuse, you will preserve its freedom.'

I ask myself and all the Honourable Members of this House: 'Does the press of India enjoy this freedom. The Indian press has been labouring under great disadvantages which should not be perpetuated after the inauguration of the Reforms. It is a matter of great satisfaction that the Government have been pleased to take this important matter into their kind consideration. We are grateful to the Government for appointing a Committee to examine the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, and the Indian Press Act, 1910, and the Newspapers (Incitements to Offences) Act, 1908. We are also thankful to the Honourable Members of the Committee for giving the care and attention which the importance of the matter deserves, and for recommending the repeal of the Indian Press Act, 1910, and the Newspapers (Incitements to Offences) Act, 1908. But it is evident that, although the repeal of these Acts is very necessary, their repeal will not entirely remove the real grievances of the Indian press so long as sections 124-A, 153-A and 500 of the Indian Penal Code and section 108 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which have been applied with varying degrees of rigour at different times, are not placed on a proper footing so that the freedom of the press will be preserved while its abuse may at the same time be checked.'

There is a genuine popular demand for improving those sections of the Indian Penal Code and Criminal Procedure Code in the light of the new constitutional position created by the Reforms. This improvement is necessary for the growth of a healthy spirit of responsibility in the present, as well as for the gradual evolution of responsible government. The principle underlying the recommendation for the repeal of the Press Act of 1910 and the Newspapers (Incitements to Offences) Act, 1908, substantially support the necessity for some such modification of the provisions of the sections covered by my Resolution as may sufficiently improve them to suit the altered circumstances created by the Reforms, and the committee of inquiry sought to be appointed shall find out and recommend the modifications which it may deem expedient to be made for such improvement.

These sections can be improved in many ways—for instance, in order to have some check over vexatious complaints against journalists, provision can be made that the complaints shall be ordinarily made at the place where the paper is published, or at least the Courts may be invested with powers to determine the place for trial after hearing the representations of the accused. It is very hard for the journalists to be tried in Courts far removed from the places of their publication, and it is necessary that some provision be made for removing this hardship.

Then again, in order that journalists may not suffer on account of any antagonistic attitude of any executive authority, it may be provided that all transaction instituted by an executive authority should have the previous sanction of a majority of the Governor's Council, including the Ministers. Or it may be provided that every journalist against whom a prosecution is instituted by an executive authority should have the option of claiming trial by jury in a Sessions Court if he so desires.

There is considerable public opinion in favour of these provisions and a reference to the debate on the Bill for the amendment of the Indian Penal Code will show that there was considerable public opinion in favour of jury trial even at that time, which should be given effect to at least now after the inauguration of the new Reform Scheme in which, in the words of His Excellency Lord Chelmsford, the author of the Reform Scheme, for the first time the principle of autocracy which had never been wholly discarded in all earlier reforms, was definitely abandoned.

I crave the indulgence of the House while I quote some portions of the said debate covering the matter under discussion. The Honourable Mr. Allan Arthur, representing the European Mercantile Community, while supporting the Bill, was pleased to observe as follows :

'With reference to the remarks made by the Honourable Mr. Chambers with regard to giving Magistrates and Presidency Magistrates power to try sedition cases under section 124-A, I feel bound to mention that there is a strong feeling against giving Magistrates such powers under this section.'

Again, the Honourable Rai Bahadur P. Ananda Charlu in opposing the Bill made the following observations :

'Even assuming that it is the English Law, it would produce no harm in the face of an effective guarantee which exists in England, for, under the system by which a criminal is tried in England, an unanimous verdict of a jury of 12 men is among other safeguards a great protection. Well has Abbot C. J. said that it is one of the peculiar advantages of our (English) jurisprudence that the conclusion is to be drawn by the unanimous judgment and conscience of 12 men conversant with the affairs and business of life. With such a guarantee as this, the most stringent law must be sufficiently innocuous. If I may be pardoned a simile, this guarantee is like a coat of mail, against which the most rigid law will, like the sharpest sword, fail to do undue harm; with that armour the sharpest sword may be a negligible weapon. Without it, as in this country, it will prove nothing less than a veritable sword of Damocles.'

And the Honourable Mr. Sayani while opposing the Bill was also pleased to observe similarly. He said :

' But the proper course is that the rigour of the law should be softened and its provisions should be so hemmed in as to prevent the law from operating harshly. It must also be remembered that India is a peculiar country and that it is inexpedient to put it under all the rigorous measures of Europe, and that if it is necessary to import some of these measures, care should be taken that simultaneously with the introduction of such measures all the concomitant safeguards obtaining in Europe should also be introduced. It is inadmissible, for example, to work the proposed law relating to seditious offences and offences against public tranquillity without at the same time giving the accused the privileges which are given in England where a grand jury, consisting of the fellow subjects of the accused, has first to find a true bill, then the accused has to be tried before a jury of his fellow subjects and the persons prosecuting him, the persons giving evidence against him, the persons judging him, are all his fellow subjects, and the whole thing moreover is keenly watched by a strong public opinion, and lastly, Parliament is near at hand to put in an immediate and effective interference.'

With these remarks I commend my Resolution to the consideration of this House. It is a very modest one. It is simply for the appointment of a Committee to consider what are the principal modifications which should be introduced under such circumstances.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division : Non-Muhammadan) : While I generally sympathise with the intention of the Mover of this Resolution, I feel that it is ill-conceived. My learned friend who has moved this Resolution is probably not aware that the object he has in view cannot be attained by a mere amendment of the Indian Penal Code, and if such an object were possible it would not achieve its purpose so far as regards offences to which the journalists as a body are subject. It seems to have been assumed by the learned Mover of the Resolution that these offences are directed against journalists; but if he refers to his Penal Code and to the Code of Criminal Procedure he will find that these are general offences which are not particularly directed against journalists. Section 124-A and its analogue, section 153-A, are intended to punish all persons who disseminated seditious or other matter which is either defamatory of the State or is calculated to arouse racial hostilities. Section 500 of the Indian Penal Code punishes defamation, and I do not think the Mover of this Resolution can say that only journalists commit the offences comprised in these three sections. I, therefore, submit that the amendment of these three sections and also of section 108, which is cognate to section 124-A of the Indian Penal Code, would not serve the purpose. But assuming for the sake of argument that what he really intends is the amendment of the processual law, he wants first of all a safeguard as regards the place of the trial of the journalist. Let me remind the Honourable Mover of this Resolution that, so far as regards journalists in this country, they are exactly in the same position, as regards the place of trial, as journalists in England, and he who defames a person or a body of persons in England is liable to be prosecuted in any place where the defamation was published. While journalists are entitled to a reasonable protection, the Mover must not forget that the party aggrieved is equally entitled to a reasonable protection. And if a journalist in Rangoon were to defame

Member of this House in Delhi does the Honourable Mover suggest that in order to enable him to embark on a prosecution at Rangoon he has to travel all the way to Rangoon and lay the offending journalist by the heels there? He further suggests that the sanction of the Governor acting with his Executive Council and Ministers must be a conditio sine quâ non to a prosecution. I venture to submit that this is a requirement of law which obtains in no place in the jurisprudence of any of the colonies or of England; and I do not see why the journalists in this country should be given a special immunity. Lastly, he says there should be an extension of trial by jury.

Now, as a general question I am in entire sympathy with him. But if he desires the offending journalist should have a special privilege of trial by jury, I beg to demur. The question of trial by jury is at present agitating the public mind and is under consideration by a Sub-Committee of this House, and I have no doubt that when the conclusions of that Sub-Committee are published they will satisfy the public mind. The Honourable Mover says that in England the sharp sword of the Legislature is blunted by the action of the Government. My submission is that nothing that the Mover has said will in the slightest degree blunt the sharp sword of the Penal Code, and the only blunting weapon that is required is the amendment of the Code of Criminal Procedure; and, as I have already said, that course is under discussion. I said at the beginning of my remarks that I was in general sympathy with the Mover of this Resolution. Now, Sir, section 124-A and section 153-A of the Indian Penal Code were not an original part of the Code; they were subsequently added, and I admit that the additions to the Indian Penal Code at a later stage were not the subject of that careful examination to which the Penal Code itself was subjected; and I certainly commend the proposition of the Honourable Mover to the Leader of the House for consideration. The whole of the Penal Code is over 60 years old, and I strongly feel that the whole of it requires to be re-cast and a fresh up-to-date re-drafted Code is what the country requires. There are a number of sections of the Indian Penal Code which require redrafting, and the fact that there are no less than 7,000 cases interpreting various sections, phrases and words of the Code scattered throughout the law reports of this country, is my best justification for asking the Honourable the Home Member to take into consideration the early revision of the Indian Penal Code. Numerous amending Acts load our statute book, which must be purged of these amending Acts. What the country requires is one complete Criminal Code which the Judges can understand, which the people can understand, and which requires no adventitious aid of the law reports to explain and administer. Section 500 of the Indian Penal Code is the section dealing with defamation. When Lord Macaulay's Committee was drafting the Indian Penal Code, a question was agitated as to whether defamation of character should be made a penal offence. In England slander and libel is not criminally punishable except in certain cases. But for the reasons which the Law Commissioners gave, defamation was made a criminal offence, and I think subsequent events have justified their decision. So much for the three sections of the Indian Penal Code.

Turning now to section 108 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Honourable Mover must remember that it is a preventive section. Its utility is manifest. It punishes nobody, but ensures the public against a repetition of the offence of which the delinquent has been found guilty. We cannot purge from the Code Criminal Procedure offences dealing with such and similar preventive action.

[Dr. H. S. Gour.]

We have sections 107, 108 and 110, not to mention sections 143, 144 and 145. All these provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure are intended to be used as a preliminary warning to offenders, and they have a wholesome effect upon the persons brought to book. All the same, when the new Code of Criminal Procedure comes up for consideration, these sections will be before this House, and it will be time for it to consider as to how far the amendments proposed and made by the Select Committee now sitting upon that Code require alteration. I therefore think that the Honourable the Home Member might accept the principle of the Resolution, but in the terms in which it is worded, I submit, it is unacceptable.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member): Sir, it is not often that I fail entirely to understand what the object of the Mover of a Resolution is and what line he is going to take, but on this occasion I must confess I have fallen into that mistake, and the reason is not very far to seek. We in the Home Department have been delving and diving into sections 124-A, 153-A and section 108 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the language used and the reasons for these enactments, and so forth, and now from the Mover's speech I find that he has not suggested one single amendment which touches one of those sections. There is not—I challenge any lawyer in this House to contradict me—in the speech of the Mover any single statement which relates to those sections. He has proposed certain amendments in the Code of Criminal Procedure, as was pointed out by the last speaker, but not a single indication of the particular sections specified in his Resolution.

In the opening part of his remarks, the Mover, however, made a statement I cannot allow to pass unchallenged. He said that the two Committees which had recently sat, one on the Press Act and the other on Repressive Measures or the so-called repressive measures now on the Statute Book, suggested an amendment of those sections of the Penal Code. I was a member of those Committees. Dr. Gour was on one; Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar was also a member, if I remember aright, and there were many others here who were on those Committees. I cannot remember anything in the reports submitted by these bodies which suggested an amendment of these sections of the Penal Code.

Now let me turn to the particular recommendations which the Honourable Mover suggests. The first suggestion regarding the place of trial has already been dealt with, I think, sufficiently by that learned lawyer, Dr. Gour. May I remind the Assembly also that it is not always that the publisher of a paper finds it convenient to have his case heard in the place where the paper is published. I remember the case of a famous gentleman, Mr. Mahomed Ali, who was not at all anxious to have a case against him tried in Delhi if he could avoid it; he took his application down to Calcutta.

The next point that the Mover raised related to previous sanction. He suggested that the previous sanction of the Governor in Council should be taken to all sedition cases. Now, that is the law at present, but the only addition is section 196 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is the Governor in Council or the Local Government that sanctions a prosecution. He, however, suggested that the sanction of Ministers should also be obtained to such prosecutions. Now, that may be a very desirable change when the constitution is altered. But every one in this Assembly knows that, although it is permissible and desirable to consult the Ministers on reserved subjects, the responsibility for administering those subjects must, under the present constitution, rest with the Governor in Council. That is a correct statement of the constitutional position at present.

And now, Sir, I turn to the proposal regarding section 500 of the Penal Code. When I saw the terms of the Resolution, in fact up till this morning till I read it again, my idea was that the mention of section 500 in connection with sections 124-A and 153-A of the Penal Code, and section 108 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, was a misprint. I thought the Honourable Member really meant section 505, but it was not so, for he says that he intends to get an amendment of section 500 which deals with ordinary defamation. Now, why a newspaper should be entitled to any special protection, in regard to defamation in this country, any more than a private person, I cannot understand. To defame a private person is one thing, and for a newspaper to publish a libellous letter addressed to 20 people is another. But why should special protection be given to the newspaper in circumstances of that kind?

The Honourable Mover went on to suggest that all cases under the sections he mentions should be tried by a jury. Now, that is a matter again which is mainly not one needing legislation and certainly not an amendment of the Penal Code. It is largely a matter for the Local Governments to decide and on which the local Councils can make their wishes felt. As a matter of fact, trials before the High Courts are now held under section 124-A, I believe with the aid of a jury, and the law does provide very considerable safeguards in all such trials. In the first place, no one can prosecute under section 124-A or under any of these sections without the previous sanction of the Governor in Council, and that is always only given after very careful consideration and examination by the best legal authorities available. I can testify to that. I have had reason, even recently when prosecutions under these sections have been under consideration, to know that the utmost care is taken to get the best legal advice. There is also another safeguard against injustice in the Code already, in that an appeal from a conviction under section 124-A lies to the High Court direct. So that not only is there this previous sanction, but there is also the additional protection afforded, in that the appeal is heard by two Judges of the High Court. Sir, I notice that Dr. Gour has used the debate to suggest that this Resolution might be made the basis for a revision of the whole Penal Code. I think that is stretching the scope of this Resolution unreasonably. I thought that we were here to deal with certain sections relating to sedition. I understand, however, that there is a body, called the Statute Law Revision Committee, of which the Honourable Dr. Gour is a member, and I hope I am revealing no secret when I say—I have been told un-officially—that the question of the consolidation of the various Acts now making up the Penal Code is under the consideration of that eminent lawyer, Dr. Gour. But when he supported this proposal by the argument that Courts would thus avoid multiplicity of rulings, why, surely the Honourable Member must be laughing at the Assembly. What country in the world with any system of law has escaped a great mass of judge-made law, a mass which is of the greatest value to every one? If, moreover, there are some thousand rulings under the Penal Code, there are hundreds of thousands of rulings under every civil Act, which do afford, I venture to say, a very salutary aid to those who have to interpret those laws in Courts.

As to the amendment of the particular sections mentioned in the Resolution, I do not think it is necessary for me to deal with the provisions of the law, because no one has really attacked them. If any one does so later, I may have to deal with the point. But any one who reads actually the judgment, for instance, of Mr. Justice Fletcher in the well known case of Manmohan Ghose will see what protection the law does afford at present to journals under section 124-A. In that case, a man was accused under section 124-A of sedition and attack on racial political parties. After a careful examination of the whole facts, Mr. Justice Fletcher laid down a very salutary principle, which, I believe, has been accepted by the Courts in India, namely, that any reasonable criticism, even severe and unfair criticism, is permitted so long as there is no attempt to excite hatred and contempt of Government. I do not want to enter into the matter at length. It really has not been raised, and if I have to do so, I will do it at a later stage.

There is, however, one point, Sir, to which I would refer, and that is the question of amending sections 124-A and 153-A of the Indian Penal Code and section 108 of the Code of Criminal Procedure at the present juncture. I do not believe there are any Members of this Assembly who would say that this is an opportune moment for undertaking such a task. We have in Committee now recommended the revision and repeal of a large number of so called repressive measures. We have before this Assembly the question of repealing the Press Act. I want to ask this Assembly to consider carefully whether they wish further to weaken the authority of Government by any proposal to amend the law relating to sedition. In conclusion, I venture to suggest to the Mover that his Resolution is really misconceived, and that the object which he seeks to attain could not be secured by the methods which he proposes. Moreover, to appoint a Committee at this moment to revise the law relating to sedition could, in my opinion, only create an impression that this Assembly is seeking to weaken the hands of Government in dealing with a dangerous political crisis, when many men are openly advocating not only disloyalty, not only civil disobedience, but even violent uprisings against the authority of the Crown.

Mr. Muhammad Yamin Khan (Meerut Division : Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I am equally at a loss, like the Honourable Sir William Vincent, to know why an amendment of section 500 of the Indian Penal Code has been proposed. Section 500 of the Indian Penal Code only provides the punishment for defamation. An amendment of that section without an amendment of section 499 which defines defamation will be absolutely unnecessary. I cannot see how section 500 can be amended which only provides the punishment. I suppose most of the Members of this Honourable House are aware of this section, but for the information of those who might not have seen the section, I might read it. The section runs as follows :

‘Whoever defames another shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine, or with both.’

I am at a loss to see why the Honourable gentleman wishes to amend this section. Is it because he thinks that the punishment which is provided is not sufficient? I think that the simple imprisonment for two years which is provided in this section is the only thing that can be amended. To allow anybody to live in jail for two years at the expense of Government—that seems to be the unnecessary portion that I can think of. Section 499 really gives the definition of defamation, for which punishment is provided in section 500.

I have known, Sir, that there is really a difficulty about section 499. That section has been discussed, but I find that most of the Honourable High Courts are silent on that point. That is really a very contested point and requires that the Legislature should explain or re-draft the section in such a way that there will be no ambiguity in the minds of the Courts while deciding cases of a complex nature which come up before them. Take, for instance, a witness going into the witness box. He starts defaming a person. Under the Indian Evidence Act, he is quite at liberty to say (what he likes) when he is questioned about certain facts, but he is not protected under this section. That has led to great difficulty, undoubtedly, as far as the case law is concerned. The Honourable the High Court of Allahabad decided this question a few years ago and dealt with the point in a very elaborate judgment, but I think that point also is not very clear. If this section requires any change, it requires a change only on that point. Otherwise, for the purpose which my Honourable friend suggests, I think it is hardly necessary that we should change the section at all. As regards sections 124-A and 153-A, I quite agree with the Honourable the Home Member that this is not the time when we should ask for their being amended. While we are asking for a repeal of the repressive laws, there should be some measure of protection under which the Government can proceed against the acts of those persons who commit sedition. ('Hear, hear.') We should not take away this weapon, because if this is taken away and the repressive laws are also repealed, there will be very little law remaining for the Government to protect the law-abiding citizens and preserve law and order in the land. As regards section 108 of the Criminal Procedure Code, I think that requires a little change, but it is inopportune for this Assembly to suggest what change there should be in that section before we have got the report of the Select Committee which is dealing with the whole of the Criminal Procedure Code, and therefore we had better wait till we get the report of that Committee. My Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, has pointed out that these are preventive sections, namely, sections 107, 108 and 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code. We know that there is a large volume of conflicting decisions on section 110, and there are so many different rulings of the various High Courts as to the real and correct view which the Legislature took at the time of its passing, that they are really bewildering. Again, section 110 cannot be amended without section 117 and section 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code. But that matter is to be dealt with later on by the Select Committee which is sitting to revise the Criminal Procedure Code. I quite agree with my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, that the whole of the Indian Penal Code really requires reconsideration and amendment on certain sections. The Honourable the Home Member has pointed out that this Resolution cannot be made the basis of overhauling the whole of the Indian Penal Code. That is true, but I think that my Honourable friend mentioned only casually, simply drawing the attention of the Government and of the Honourable the Law Member to this point. He did not mean that this Resolution should be made the basis of it, but from what I could gather, the matter came to his mind at the moment he mentioned it and he pointed out that that requires some consideration too, and I think he is quite right. Anybody who is practising on the criminal side can understand the difficulty one is in when one reads the various decisions of the High Courts on the sections of the Indian Penal Code. Therefore, while I have every sympathy with the Honourable Mover of this Resolution, I regret I cannot support it.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras : Nominated Non-Official) : I rise to say that I do not in the least agree with the motion which has been put before the House. I want to speak entirely in the interests of journalists; and I shall address my remarks to this House solely from the point of view of journalism; from their point of view I do not think this motion is well-conceived. I do not think that the press is now enjoying full liberty under the law. If the Press law is repealed, I feel no doubt that the press in this country would have as good facilities for carrying on its work as the press in any other part of the civilised world. There are difficulties, and there have been difficulties, not because of the stringency of the law or of the wording of it, but because of the spirit in which the law has been administered. For example, while the Committee of which I happened to be a member has recommended that the Press law should be repealed and while the Government has brought in a Bill for its repeal, we find that pending repeal the law is being applied by various Magistrates and various provinces. That shows, not that there is anything wrong with the law, but that there is a spirit abroad which is not prepared to treat the press as indulgently as it should be treated. I think, Sir, that the amendments suggested are absolutely unnecessary for preserving the liberty of the press. The liberty of the press will be safeguarded so long as the spirit of the administrators is not adverse to freedom of speech. As against an abuse of the law you can never make amendments. The law is there, and the only recourse to correct abuses which we can have is to a higher tribunal which will set the Magistrate or the Sessions Judge right. It is not possible by amending the law in any way to make it so perfect that it would not be abused, and therefore I think, in the interests of journalism it is not desirable that this motion should be accepted by this House.

There are one or two observations made in the course of the previous speeches which I should like to refer to. For example, the Mover said that it is desirable that a man who writes in a particular place should be tried in that place alone and should not be compelled to defend himself in any other place. The Honourable the Home Member has given exceedingly good reasons and my friend, Dr. Gour, has also given good reason why such a suggestion cannot be accepted, and I wish to suggest on behalf of journalists that they would not like that the law should be so stringent as to say that there should be a trial only in the place where the writing takes place, because the atmosphere there may become so very tense that the journalist may not get a fair and impartial trial. The journalist himself may desire to move the proper authorities to remove the case from the place where the article was written to some other place where the atmosphere will be quieter and where he can get a fair trial. Therefore it is undesirable in the interests of journalists that there should be a fixed rule that the case should be tried only in the place where the article was written.

There is only one other observation that I wish to make. That does not very much concern the matter before us. An observation has fallen from my Honourable friend Dr. Gour, that the Indian Penal Code should be amended totally, and that the whole Code should be re-cast. Sir, I have been brought up in the tradition that the best drafted legal enactment in the whole of British India is the Indian Penal Code. ('Hear, hear'). It is not disparagement to the various successors of Thomas Babington Macaulay to say that none of the other enactments has approached the carefulness and the scrutiny which that great man has employed in drafting the Indian Penal Code, and any attempt made to re-cast it will be regarded by a large portion of the thinking public as a work which should, in no circumstances, be undertaken.

Therefore I hope that the Statutory Law Revision Committee, to which the Honourable the Home Member has referred, would not take upon itself this impossible task of recommending a revision of the Indian Penal Code. It would be a disastrous day when some apprentice hand takes upon himself the task of re-casting one of the most monumental legal works in India. I hope no such attempt will be made. There may be necessity, now and then, to revise portions of the Code, but to undertake a wholesale alteration of the Penal Code is a stupendous task which should not be attempted. It cannot be either in the interests of the litigant public or of the lawyers; and I hope that no such attempt will be made by the Statutory Law Revision Committee.

Mr. B. H. Jatkar (Berar): Sir, the amendments which stand in my name are as follows:

- (a) After the word 'Committee' add the words 'consisting of at least $\frac{2}{3}$ th non-officials'.
- (b) For the word and figures 'section 108' substitute the words and figures 'sections 107, 108 and 144'.
- (c) After the word 'amended' insert the words 'or repealed'.
- (d) Omit the words 'the State and' and the words 'against abuse of their power by journalists while at the same time protection is afforded to the latter'.

The amended resolution will read thus:

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that a Committee consisting of at least $\frac{2}{3}$ th non-officials be appointed to examine sections 124-A, 153-A and 500 of the Indian Penal Code and sections 107, 108 and 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code and to report in what manner these sections should be amended or repealed so that the rights of the public or any section or member thereof may be safeguarded against unwarrantable and unreasonableness by either judicial or executive authority'.

The principal part of my amendment is about including sections 107 and 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is, I think, very doubtful whether the Joint Committee which is considering this subject will consider these sections also, because I think in last session the question was raised whether the Joint Committee would be at liberty to consider the provisions in respect of which no change has been suggested in the draft. I believe it was Mr. Ginwala who suggested that. These two sections and particularly section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code have been very freely used recently and the latter section has been worse in its operation than the Seditious Meetings Act itself. In spite of what has been said by my Honourable friend, Mr. Samarth, yesterday, it is extremely doubtful if this section 144 was ever meant to give such wide powers to the Magistrate to stop public meetings and to gag the mouth of public speakers. Wholesale areas in a tahsil or district or sub-division have been banned under this section arbitrarily. In some cases the powers were used so mischievously as to provoke a breach of the peace. I know of a case in my own province where a police officer, with an order in his pocket actually allowed a public meeting to be called, allowed the people to gather and, just when the proceedings were commenced, came up with this order and stopped the meeting. The House can imagine what the sentiments of the people were who had assembled there, and it was only due to self-restraint of the people shown in walking away quietly that violence was averted. Such exercise of power was never meant to be given by section 144 when it was enacted. The exercise of power under 144 proves a great temptation to break the law and promote civil disobedience, which is very natural when a large number of people who are assembled for a public meeting are dispersed on the spur of the moment by an order under section 144. I therefore think that this section at least should be amended or repealed, so as to confine the provisions of that section to the purpose for which it was meant. With these words, Sir, I recommend these amendments to the consideration of the House.

Mr. President : I will take the first of the Honourable Member's amendments which raises the question of the composition of the Committee. I will put the other amendments separately. The first amendment is that the words 'consisting of at least $\frac{1}{3}$ th non-officials' be inserted after the word 'Committee'. The question is that that amendment be made.

(Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal rose to speak.)

Mr. President : Does the Mover rise to express an opinion on the amendment ?

Rai Sahib Lakshmi Narayan Lal : Am I required to speak on the amendment ? I do not accept the amendment.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala (Burma: Non-European) : Which part of the amendment are you referring to ?

Mr. President : Was not the Honourable Member in the House when I put the amendments in the name of Mr. Jatkar ?

Mr. P. P. Ginwala : I did not follow you.

Mr. President : The amendment I put to the House was :

'After the word 'Committee' add the words 'consisting of at least $\frac{1}{3}$ th non-officials'.'

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President : Further amendment moved :

'For the word and figures 'section 108' substitute the words and figures 'sections 107, 108 and 144'.'

Mr. P. P. Ginwala : My Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, and the Honourable the Home Member appeared to me to be somewhat 'previous'—if I may be permitted to use an American expression—when they opposed the original Resolution moved by my learned friend on my left. I can quite understand my Honourable friend Dr. Gour doing so because he thinks it his duty to enlighten the House on all questions of law, and therefore he is expected to be in a hurry to enlighten it, and sometimes he is in such a hurry that he does not even have the time to prepare himself. Perhaps it is pardonable in a gentleman so learned, who has written so much and who has read so much, but I cannot imagine, Sir, how it is that he has not even the time to look at the agenda before he rises to oppose a proposition. If he had examined the agenda and just waited a little, he would have had ample opportunity of enlightening the House upon the Resolution in the light of the amendment that has been since proposed by my Honourable friend Mr. Jatkar. Sir, I rise to support the amendment of my Honourable friend, Mr. Jatkar, because it involves a substantial question of principle which I raised at the last Simla session. The Honourable the Home Member may remember that he was moving a Resolution before the House to refer to what I may call the obsolete Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Bill to a Select Committee. I wanted to move an amendment by which I wanted to confer on the Select Committee the power to make suggestions for the amendment of the whole Code. He took objection to that on the ground of short notice, and the objection was upheld as I had not given two days' notice. I had to abide by that. Subsequently, I gave notice of a Resolution asking that instructions be conveyed to the Select Committee on those lines. That Resolution was ruled out of order because it offended against the Standing Orders. I shall raise that point when the Standing Orders are under consideration, but the point still remains that there are important sections of the Criminal Procedure Code which, as my learned friend has pointed out, will not receive careful examination because of the decision given by the Chair that an amending Bill confines itself to the sections covered by the amending Bill.

I shall deal only with section 144, for that, I think, is the most poisonous in the armoury of what is known as the ordinary law of the land, and has been used, I submit, Sir, in a most poisonous fashion in some of the provinces. I will go so far as to say that, if this section was sufficiently abused, the Executive Government could do without any extraordinary law. This section was used, in my province, in substitution of the Seditious Meetings Act, and meetings were stopped for two months in the town of Rangoon under its provisions. It was used recently in substitution of this moribund Press Act which is about to be repealed, in my province. Newspapers were forbidden to write on certain topics—I will not mention those topics for the present—but it is a fact that this section was used with a vengeance for this purpose. I say, Sir, that these provisions have been horribly misused and it is time that this House examined these provisions. It is no use the Honourable Home Member telling us that we have to be careful in recommending the repeal of these provisions. We know very well that it would be dangerous for us to deprive the Executive Government of some protection, but we do object to a provision of the law being misapplied and distorted, when people have no remedy against such misapplication or distortion, and the right of appeal to the High Court is denied. A District Magistrate or other Magistrate may make the order, and the order stands. Of course, when you are prosecuted for disobeying the order and you are convicted under the Indian Penal Code, you may have the right of appeal and question the propriety of this order, but by that time you probably have suffered jail and nothing would be gained even if the High Court decided it was unfair and set it aside.

Now, Sir, I shall deal briefly with section 500 of the Indian Penal Code. The Honourable the Home Member always, I am glad to see, stretches a point to find out what an Honourable Member intends when his Resolution is otherwise not clear, but unfortunately to-day he did not go far enough in this direction—for, had he done so, he would have found that the Honourable Mover meant section 499 though he referred to section 500. Taking 499 as the section intended, I submit that that section requires amendment. The Honourable Member from Madras says that journalists are sufficiently protected under the present law. His reputation as a judge entitles him to the greatest weight, but his opinion, I submit, is not supported by authority. If a newspaper in this country reports the proceedings of a public meeting at which defamatory statements are made, and even if the report is absolutely correct, still the newspaper is liable to be prosecuted for defamation. In this House we have by statute the fullest liberty of speech, but if a newspaper gives a correct report of our proceedings including some defamatory statements, it runs the risk of being prosecuted. Of course, the law says you must be careful, you must take legal advice as to whether you are justified in reporting such statements. That may be so, but all the same, newspapers should have the right of protection, such as they have in England where special Acts were passed several years ago for the protection of newspapers which made substantially correct reports of proceedings at public meetings. This, I submit, is a real grievance, which ought to be remedied without further delay, because now-a-days innumerable meetings take place throughout the country, and newspapers have got to make reports and newspapers have got to run the risk of being prosecuted for giving a substantially correct account of what is said at these meetings. I submit we should examine this law in detail, not only for the protection of newspapers but in the interest of the public. Sir, I would ask the Honourable the Home Member to read section 500 as if it was section 499 and accept the Resolution with the amendment moved by my Honourable friend, Mr. Jatkar.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Sir, I rise to speak on this amendment, as I feel I am in a large measure responsible for authorising the use of those sections in the Code and in a position to know of the abuse and misuse of sections 107 and 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code during the last few months. There does not pass a week, when I go to my club, when the finger of scorn is not pointed to me, "here is Rangachariar's ordinary law; notices under section 144 are served on the whole public and a whole city and a whole area, prohibiting public meetings, prohibiting public speakers from speaking and such other various acts." Sir, I little anticipated that the sections could have been used in the way in which they have been used. I know of a case, Sir, in which the District Magistrate was passing down a street in the Northern Circars. He saw a house flying the swadeshi flag. It pained his eyes. Section 144 came to his rescue, and he pulled down the flag. It was disobeyed a number of times, and people were sent to jail. I know section 144 was used against picketting in several cases; it was used by a Sub-Magistrate who had a personal quarrel with his neighbour. Unfortunately, Sir, these non-co-operators treat all Courts with indifference; they would not test the validity of these orders, and therefore they never came to the Courts in order to have these extraordinary things tested. Section 107 again has been used in a novel manner, even for the purpose of arresting a passenger in a train—a passenger who was travelling from one end to another was arrested simply because there was no time for a warrant to be issued to arrest him. Thirdly, Sir, such misuse and abuse could have been disavowed by the Government, but I have not seen a single notification of any Local Government or of the Government of India in that matter. Well, Sir, we did not protest against such abuse and misuse because we know troublous times were before us and it would not have been right on our part to raise any difficulties. But having waited so long, and having hoped that the Government should have taken steps themselves to have prevented such abuse and misuse of these sections, I think the time has come when some steps ought to be taken in that direction. But, Sir, I do not think that the remedy proposed by my Honourable friend, the Mover of this amendment, is the proper remedy.

I have myself given notice of an amendment to sections 107 and 144, which will come up next month, to provide a safeguard against the misuse and abuse of those powers by providing that the matter must be sent up to the High Court in each case where these sections are used for prohibiting public meetings or dealing with political agitation, even without the application of parties; so that the High Court may have the power of examining the proceedings and setting them right in case of misuse or abuse. That Bill will come up as soon as the notice expires, and I dare say it will be examined carefully by the Select Committee which will be appointed and necessary amendments will be made in those sections. I do not think it is necessary that a Committee should be appointed. So many of us here are lawyers and it is open to us to suggest what amendments should be made in the various sections which have been mentioned in the Bill. Therefore, Sir, I do not think it is necessary to appoint a Committee to examine these sections. I merely stood up here to point out that these sections are being misused and require amendment.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, I only want in reply to deal with one or two points raised, I believe, by Mr. Ginwala. The original proposition that came before us and on which I spoke, did not include section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code. That section was first mentioned in the amendment of Mr. Jatkar. I think section 107 was also first introduced in that amendment. Therefore, if I was premature in speaking on the original motion, it was not for the reasons mentioned by Mr. Ginwala, who simply attacks these two sections, which came under discussion after I had spoken. I still affirm, and I have no doubt I have the support of this Assembly, all that I said regarding the original motion. I observed that Dr. Gour was also attacked for speaking prematurely. He was, however, let down more lightly on the ground that it was his duty to enlighten this Assembly on points of law. I do not know how he appreciates the compliment. I noticed that another Member, when Dr. Gour's suggestion about consolidating the Penal Code was under discussion, suggested that it was undesirable that a prentice hand should be allowed to take this work in hand. Now, I hope the Honourable Dr. Gour will not think that I was in any way a party to the suggestion that he, the author of monumental works on Hindu Law and the Criminal Codes, is a prentice hand.

And now as to this amendment relating to sections 107 and 144, I still submit that the appointment of a Committee is unnecessary. In the first place, we have this Bill of Mr. Rangachariar's coming in and, in the second place, both these sections are being amended in the Bill now before a Joint Committee of this House and the Council of State. I do not know what the ruling of the President of that Committee will be, but if it is that any amendments can be made in sections of the Code which it is proposed to modify in the Bill, then the points raised by Mr. Ginwala can very well be considered at that time : if indeed Mr. Rangachariar's motion has not rendered that unnecessary.

There is one point, however, in Mr. Ginwala's statement which is deserving of very careful consideration. I admit that the law in this country does differ from the law in England, in regard to the protection given to newspapers publishing accurate reports of public meetings, and I will undertake on behalf of the Government to have that question carefully examined by the Government. But I submit to this Assembly that, in view of the facts that have been put forward, as no one has given any reasons for the amendment of sections 124-A, 153-A and 500 and also having regard to the fact that you have already separate proposals before you for the amendment of sections 107 and 141, it would be idle for this Assembly to recommend the appointment of a Committee to examine those matters.

Mr. President : The amendment moved is :

'For the word and figures 'section 108' substitute the words and figures 'sections 107, 108 and 141.'

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President : A further amendment moved is :

'After the word 'amended' insert the words 'or repealed.'

The motion was negatived.

Mr. President : A further amendment moved is :

'To omit the words 'the State and' and the words 'against abuse of their power by journalists, while at the same time protection is afforded to the latter.'

The motion was negatived.

Rai Sahib Lakhshmi Narayan Lal : Sir, I may say a few words in reply to what the Honourable Members of this House have been pleased to say in connection with my Resolution. Most of the Honourable Members I find are in sympathy with the spirit of my Resolution ; but still I am sorry to see that they are not ready to support it as it stands. It has been suggested by my Honourable friend and colleague, Dr. Gour, that the sections do not apply to journalists only. I know that ; but that is no reason why the Resolution which relates to journalists only should not be accepted. The sections may apply to others, but when a Resolution has been moved with regard to certain sections in so far as they relate to journalists, and if a case is made out, it should not be lost on that ground alone. Then it has been also suggested by more than one Honourable Member that it is better to amend the whole of the Indian Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code. I welcome such a suggestion, but that is also no reason why a particular Resolution regarding particular sections should not be adopted if there are grounds for amending the same ; the more so, because the House is fully aware that there are a good many Resolutions relating to amendment of certain sections of the Indian Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code which have already been adopted by this House.

Then it has been said by some Honourable Members that no case has been made out for these amendments. I beg most respectfully to submit that I have suggested some amendments, and though they are not exhaustive, still in my opinion, when those amendments are introduced, they will go a great way to remove the grievances of the journalists. It has been said by some Honourable Member of the House that if the place for the trial of the journalist is the place of publication of his paper, then the complainant, who may be an inhabitant of a distant place, will suffer. I have not suggested that the trial should be at the place of publication of the paper. If possible, let this amendment be made, if it is not convenient to have the trial at that place, the Courts may be empowered to fix a place convenient both to the complainant as well as to the accused. The paper may be published at Calcutta or at Allahabad or at Delhi and the complainant may be in Ceylon. Is it proper to try the journalist in Ceylon? Is it not the greatest possible hardship for that journal to look after that trial at Ceylon or in any such part of British India? An amendment like that is very innocent. I do not think it affects the powers that the Executive possesses at present for controlling the journalists or for meeting sedition. Simply some provision has to be made for the convenience of the journalists. Otherwise, Honourable Members will find that a paper can be harassed in a thousand and one places, because his case is not like that of an individual complainant. His paper is published in every part of British India. He can be tried in Ceylon, at Madras, at Bombay, in every distant corner of British India. These things are fit to be considered by a Committee, and a Committee will be the proper and competent body to consider these matters. It has also been said that in the present political situation of the country it is not advisable to amend these sections. I most respectfully submit that my Resolution does not seek to repeal any of these sections. I have simply moved that a Committee may be appointed to consider whether any provision can be made for the convenience of the journalists or not. When the Government has found it necessary to repeal the Press Act, I do not think there is any good in taking away one fetter of the press and keeping another. I have not even stated what the personnel of the Committee should be. The personnel has been left to the Government. Expert lawyers may form that Committee and examine these sections and take everything into consideration and recommend such modifications as may find acceptance.

Mr. President: The question is :

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that a Committee be appointed to examine sections 124-A, 153-A and 500 of the Indian Penal Code and section 108 of the Criminal Procedure Code and to report in what manner these sections should be amended so that the rights of the State and the public or any section or member thereof may be safeguarded against abuse of their power by journalists, while, at the same time, protection is afforded to the latter against unwarrantable and unreasonable interference by either judicial or executive authority.'

The motion was negatived.

RESOLUTION RE: ELECTED STANDING COMMITTEES WITH THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

Mr. K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I beg to move the Resolution that stands in my name and which runs as follows :

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that Standing Committees, elected by the Members of the Legislature, be associated with the different departments of the Government of India other than the Army and the Foreign and Political Departments.'

[Mr. K. C. Neogy.]

Sir, this Resolution has been ridiculed by a leading Indian journal as an instance of the inability of certain Members of the Indian Legislature to discriminate between legislative and executive functions.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City: Non-Muhammadan Urban): Name?

Mr. K. C. Neogy: The 'Pioneer.' I do not claim the infallibility of the 'Pioneer', but, if I have erred in this matter, I can claim that I have erred in very good company. The suggestion was first of all made by Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmsford in their Report on Indian Constitutional Reforms. Subsequently, it formed the subject-matter of considerable discussion by Provincial Governments as also the Government of India, and I shall try to show to this House that at least at one time the Government of India were not altogether unfriendly to this suggestion. Then, Sir, above everything else we have got a conditional recommendation made by the Joint Select Committee, which was appointed to consider the Government of India Bill, which goes to say:

'It may often greatly assist the political education of India if Standing Committees of the legislative bodies are attached to certain Departments of Government, but they only express this opinion on the understanding that the appointment of such Committees, their composition, and the regulations which govern their procedure, shall be matters wholly and exclusively within the discretion of the Governor General.....'

Therefore, Sir, I am not quite ashamed of my Resolution. As I do not claim any originality in the idea underlying this Resolution, I propose to use as few words of mine as possible in its support.

First of all, let us turn to the Montagu-Chelmsford Report. In paragraph 235 of the Report, Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmsford say with reference to the proposal of having Standing Committees in the Provincial Governments, as follows:

'Our next proposal is intended to familiarise other elected Members of the Legislative Councils, besides Ministers, with the processes of administration; and also to make the relations between the executive and legislative more intimate. We propose that to each department or group of departments, whether it is placed under a Member of the Executive Council or under a Minister, there should be attached a Standing Committee elected by the Legislative Council from among their own Members. Their functions would be advisory. They would not have any administrative control of departments. It would be open to the Government to refuse information when it would be inconsistent with the public interest to furnish it. We do not intend that all questions raised in the course of day-to-day administration should be referred to them; but that they should see, discuss and record for the consideration of Government their opinions upon all questions of policy, all new schemes involving expenditure above a fixed limit, and all annual reports upon the working of the departments,' and so on.

Later on in paragraph 285, they make a suggestion that similar Standing Committees should be associated with the different Departments of the Government of India as well. They say:

'We wish to apply the procedure of Standing Committees, described in the last chapter, as far as may be to both portions of the Indian Legislature. The Committees would be drawn jointly from the Assembly and the Council of State. We do not overlook the difficulties entailed by the nature of many of the subjects with which the Central Government is concerned, and also by the comparative infrequency with which, owing to considerations of distance, such Committees can assemble. The fact that many matters of ordinary internal administration will in future be left to provincial Governments also limits the scope of utility of Standing Committees in the Central Legislature. We would leave it to the Government of India to decide with what Departments Standing Committees can be associated; and to the Member in charge to decide what matters can be referred to the Committee. Our idea is that the non-official Members of the Assembly and Council of State might elect by-ballot in proportion to their respective strength two-thirds of the Members of each Committee, while Government nominates the remaining one-third. It is obvious that these Committees cannot play such an important part in the work of the Government as the Committees which we have suggested in the provinces. It will be difficult to obtain their assistance in practice, except during the session or immediately before or after it, but we think there should be no difficulty ordinarily in obtaining their views on important new projects, whether legislative or administrative. Their functions might be determined by regulations to be made by the Governor General in Council.'

Then, Sir, we come next to the first despatch which was sent out from here by the Governor General in Council in regard to the Reforms. Referring to the question of associating Standing Committees with the Departments in the Provinces, the Government of India state first of all the several objections that have been urged against the proposal, and then they say :

'These apprehensions seem to us exaggerated. This idea of Standing Committees was first put forward as a means of associating the Legislature with an irresponsible executive; and even after the appointment of Ministers had been proposed, it was decided to retain them as a means of providing a certain number of people with some acquaintance of administrative methods, as a means of training them to fill the office of Ministers. We propose, therefore, to retain them; but we wish to make it perfectly clear that we do so only for educative purposes.'

The Government of India, thereafter, took exception to the proposal in so far as it affected the Government of India itself. In paragraph 120 of the first despatch, the Government of India say :

'We come next to the devices proposed for establishing a closer connection between the Executive and the Legislature in the Government of India. These are akin to those we have already considered in connection with the provinces. The proposal that Standing Committees of the Government of India should be set up has met with little opposition. We have in paragraph 92 stated the arguments which have been urged against the establishment of such Committees. In their application to provincial Committees we considered that the objections had been exaggerated, but in the case of Committees of the Central Legislature we feel that they apply with much greater weight. There would be much more difficulty in arranging the assembly of Committees in Delhi and Simla than at provincial headquarters. Delays would also be more serious and vexatious than are likely to occur in the provinces, nor in view of the nature of the business done is there the same justification for the Committees as there is in the provinces.'

Later on they say :

'Our present purpose is to develop responsible government in the provinces; but the Government of India is to remain amenable to Parliament, and there is therefore no need to introduce into it an arrangement which we can justify in the provinces only on the ground of its educative value.'

So, the Government of India do not seem to think that we here have any claim to political education so far as these Standing Committees can give it.

In his note of dissent Sir Sankaran Nair took quite a different view.

'I do not agree,' says he, 'with my colleagues in discarding the provision about appointing Members of the Assembly to positions analogous to that of Parliamentary Under Secretaries or the Standing Committees. At present, or under the new scheme, there is no means of non-official Members acquiring that knowledge which can be acquired only by holding an office. The knowledge of Indians in the public services will not be available to non-officials for criticism of Government proposals. The Ministers will have intimate knowledge only of the transferred departments, and that also only in the provinces. These Under Secretaryships and Standing Committees will enable the non-officials to acquire that information which they would otherwise lack. In the earlier stages of discussion, it was generally admitted that these would form a good training ground for future administrators. It is undesirable, therefore, to drop them.

The first despatch is dated the 5th of March, 1919. It seems that later on the Government of India somewhat modified their views on this matter, because we find that, when, on the 13th of October 1919, Lord (then Sir James) Meston was called in for the third time before the Joint Parliamentary Committee as a witness on behalf of the Government of India, he mentioned that he had received some additional instructions on certain points, and on page 544 of the Evidence Volume we find that he stated that—

‘In regard to the Standing Committees with the Government of India and the Parliamentary Under Secretaries they (the Government of India) would ask that, if those institutions are accepted by the Joint Committee, an exception should be made in the case of two Departments, the Army Department and the Foreign and Political Department.’

Well, Sir, my demand to-day is nothing more nor less than this, that the position which Lord Meston took up on the 13th of October, 1919, should be maintained. Then Sir, I have already read out the Report of the Joint Select Committee which shows that, after Lord Meston's evidence on this point, the Joint Committee made a recommendation that these Standing Committees would be a useful instrument for the political education of non-official Members, although the Committee have left the various questions relating to the constitution and appointment and other things to the discretion of the Governor General.

Sir, since coming to this House, I made an inquiry on the 1st of March as to what was intended to be done in regard to this proposal to associate Standing Committees of the Indian Legislature with the different departments of the Government of India, and the reply was as follows :

‘A Standing Finance Committee of this Assembly has been appointed. It is not proposed, at present at any rate, to appoint any other Standing Committee of the Legislature.’

So I did not lose heart, and I have brought forward this Resolution to-day. Now, Sir, so far as the question of principle is concerned, I think that by the appointment of the Standing Finance Committee, the Government stand committed. And, if I remember aright, the Honourable the Finance Member paid a glowing compliment to the Standing Finance Committee in Simla for the valuable assistance that it had rendered to his Department in connection with the supplementary estimates. Therefore, Sir, it seems to me that some, at least, of the apprehensions which found expression in the Government of India despatch are baseless. As I promised I would not use very many words of my own to commend this Resolution to this House, I do not propose to speak further.

Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar (Salem and Coimbatore, cum North Arcot : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I rise to support the Resolution which has just been moved by Mr. Neogy. I think the principle of appointing Committees is rather familiar to many of us here. Under the Municipalities Act and even under the Local Boards Act, various Committees are appointed, such as Finance Committees, Sanitation Committees and various other Committees, and the function of these Committees is to advise the Executive in their work of administration. Such Committees, if appointed here, will, I daresay, be of the greatest use. If I am correct, I remember having seen in the papers that the Madras Provincial Government has recently appointed two or three Committees, such as Abkari Committee's Forest Committee and other similar Committees also ; and I think that the same experiment may also be made here. As the learned Mover has just said, the Standing Finance Committee's work has been appreciated by the Honourable the Finance Member himself, and I therefore do not see why similar Committees should not be appointed, the members of which may associate themselves with the various other Executive Council Members who are in charge of different portfolios. I think that this would be a very good thing. Moreover, the appointment of these Committees will have an educational value also, because it will be a training ground for Honourable Members who will be able to accustom themselves to official business also and acquire a grasp of principles. If such Honourable Members should ever rise to be Ministers or Executive Councillors, they will be better acquainted with official business than they are at present. For such men it would afford an excellent training in the principles of the art of Government, so that, in the event of their being subsequently appointed to these high offices, they will find the work easy. I therefore heartily support this Resolution.

Mr. J. N. Mukherjee (Calcutta Suburbs : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : Sir, I also rise to support the Resolution which has been moved by my friend, Mr. Neogy, and for the reason which he has placed before this House. I will just supplement that reason by one or two observations which occur to me at the present moment. Apart from the educative effect of the motion, if carried, I may submit to this House that here is an opportunity for the Government to show the country that it is quite willing to associate the people in the administration of the country without any sacrifice of official power and authority. That is a very weighty consideration so far as I am concerned, and the Government cannot afford to lose such an opportunity under circumstances which I have had the honour of pointing out to this House. I therefore hope that there will be no opposition to this Resolution and that it will be carried by this House.

Rai D. C. Barna Bahadur (Assam Valley : Non-Muhammadan) : Sir, I beg to support this Resolution most heartily. Unless opportunities are given to the Members of this House and to the members of the public at large to learn the art of Government, how can the Reforms be expected to be successful? It is very important that this Resolution should have the cordial support of the Government also, so that the desired object be attained, namely, that the people may be fitted to govern themselves. If the request should be refused, then, Sir, a good opportunity will be lost both by the people and by the Government. In these circumstances I beg to support the Resolution.

Mr. J. F. Bryant (Madras : Nominated Official) : Sir, I merely wish to call attention to a statement made by the Honourable Member behind me (Mr. Mudaliar). He quoted the analogy of Madras, and he led us to believe that the Standing Committees there were elected by the Madras Council. My belief is that Committees, where they exist in Madras, are nominated by Government, which is a very different thing.

Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar : Sir, I never said that the Said Committees were elected.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member) : Sir, the Mover of the Resolution, Mr. Neogy, has very properly put before the Assembly full citations from the Montagu-Chelmsford Report and also from the first despatch of the Government of India on Constitutional Reform in relation to this subject. Some of the points which are made in that first despatch are of the nature of practical criticism, with which I will deal later. The first point, however, to which I wish to draw attention is that under the Joint Committee's Report the question as to whether these Standing Committees should be appointed or not, is left entirely to the discretion of the Governor General in the case of the Government of India. When I came to scrutinise this Resolution, I was a little doubtful as to whether it was primarily the function of the Governor General in Council to advise the Governor General as to what his duties were. I still doubt it, and, if we had detected the objection in time, perhaps we should have pressed it further, but it is too late to do so now. The practical objections or rather practical criticisms—for there are no insuperable objections as regards these Committees—are numerous. In the first place, there is the difficulty of getting people to attend. Now, we have at present a Standing Finance Committee; we have also at the moment a Committee sitting on the privileges of European British subjects in criminal proceedings; I believe I am right in saying that, on a date fixed for the meeting of the Standing Finance Committee the other day, three members were present.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: That was most exceptional. On the other hand, we sacrificed a lot of time in attending these meetings frequently. I refer to it only because the Honourable Member has referred to it.

1 P.M.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member): I have no knowledge of the particular circumstances: I am merely stating the facts. I daresay they are capable of explanation and I am quite sure that Mr. Rangachariar would not neglect a public duty of that character if it was avoidable, and I did not mean to suggest it. But there is the fact that you cannot get men to attend Committees regularly. As to the Committee relating to the removal of racial distinctions in criminal proceedings, I had fixed tentatively the 4th of January for a meeting of that body; immediately I got protests from non-official Members, and quite reasonable protests, saying that they could not come up when the sessions were not sitting. During the sessions the difficulties are equally great; you know what is happening now. That very Committee is sitting to-day; it sat yesterday and half of us were unable to get away to attend it. Yesterday four witnesses were examined and Dr. Gour and myself, who were members—unimportant members no doubt, but still members—were unable to get down there to hear them at all.

Members of the Assembly are also aware that during the session, a great part of the time is taken up with Select Committees on Bills; and I think the Secretary to this Assembly will find it very difficult indeed to fit in time for them without attempting to find time for numerous Departmental Committees. Another point which this Assembly has to consider, is whether there is a sufficient number of men in this Chamber who are prepared to sacrifice their time and attend frequently in Delhi and in Simla, for some time, to deal with the ordinary problems of administration. There is an essential difference in this respect between the provinces and the Government of India. In the provinces you can get men, generally in the Presidency towns, in the headquarters of the province or in the immediate neighbourhood, who can come and attend Committees when required, but it is very difficult to get men to come up from Madras or Assam or some other of the remote provinces, to Delhi or Simla to attend Committees of this kind when required.

There is another point to which I want to draw attention, though it also is not an insuperable objection. It is the increased work which such Committees impose on the Secretariat. Now, the Secretariat of the Government of India, at the present moment, is over-worked to an extent that I do not believe is realised by any Member of this Assembly. Our officers are at work early in the morning and late at night; they take home work to do at night and many of them—I believe my Honourable colleagues will bear me witness in this House—are on the point of breaking down. If you propose to appoint Standing Committees which they will have to attend, they will have to procure papers, issue circulars, record conclusions and make various inquiries; those, therefore, who want to see such Committees must be prepared to pay for a considerable increase in the Secretariat staff. Whether it is desirable or how far it is desirable to do that in the present financial position, is not a matter for me to deal with.

Then there is a third point, viz., that the appointment of Standing Committees of this kind must lead to great delay in disposing of cases. They cannot meet oftener, say, than once in two months; you could not expect a gentleman from Madras to come up oftener than once in two months to Simla for this purpose.

Now all these are not purely theoretical objections that I have evolved myself. They are practical criticisms which deserve careful attention. May I cite also to the Assembly what the experience of these Committees in other countries has been? I have had inquiries made as to the effect of this system in France and America. Speaking of America, Lord Bryce said:

'The scrutiny to which the departmental Committees subject the department is so close and consistent as to occupy much of the time of the officials and seriously interfere with their duties. Not only are they often summoned to give evidence, they are required to furnish minute reports on matters which a Member of the Congress could ascertain for himself. Nevertheless the House Committees are not certain to detect abuses or peculation, for special Committees of the Senate have repeatedly unearthed dark doings which had passed unsuspected the ordeal of a House investigation.'

He goes on to say:

'This system destroys the unity of the House as a legislative body; it prevents the capacity of the best members from being brought to bear on any one piece of legislation, however important; it cramps debate; it lessens the cohesion and harmony of legislation. It gives facility for the exercise of underhand and even corrupt influence. It reduces responsibility. It lowers the interest of the nation in the proceedings of the Congress. It throws power into the hands of the Chairmen of Committees. They practically become a second set of Ministers before whom the departments tremble and who, though they can neither appoint nor dismiss a postman nor a tide-waiter, can by legislation determine the policy of the branch of administration which they oversee.'

These are not my criticisms. But I put them to the Assembly as the observations of a great authority. Nor in any case would Committees of this Assembly exercise the same power, under the present system at any rate; but these are criticisms which this Assembly, I think, will do well to weigh. As regards Europe, the committee system is stated by a competent observer, Professor Lowell, to have sapped the authority of the Ministry and weakened the Government in more than one nation of Continental Europe. He also cites Monsieur Dupriez in his work on Ministers of the principal countries of Europe and America as painting in very strong colours the evils of the French Committee system. This writer points out how little influence the Ministers have with the Committees who often regard them almost as the representatives of a hostile power in the State. He shows that, while the Ministers have no right to be present at Committee meetings and are invited to attend only when they wish to express their views, the Committees claim the right to examine the administrative officers, insist on seeing books and papers and volunteer advice. Indeed, he goes on sarcastically to remark at the end that the Government and the Committee are never in perfect accord except when the former submits to the latter. Now, that would not be the case exactly here, because any Committees appointed would be advisory. But at the same time any Member of the Government might be put in a very difficult position by members of a Committee. They ask for papers and the Government says 'No, they are not going to be put before you'. 'Very well, my friend,' the Committee say, 'you wait till we get the Assembly down on you; you are not going to accept our views on the subject; we will see what the Assembly has to say to that.' In this way a Committee could in fact establish indirectly very great control over the Executive Government, a control which is not contemplated by the Government of India Act at all. I admit, on the other hand, the assistance of Committees has proved eminently useful to Government on many occasions, and I do not want to depreciate the value of the Committees with which I have been associated—Committees such as the Repressive Laws Committee, the Press Committee, this Committee which is now sitting, where, I believe, matters will be thrashed out satisfactorily regarding these racial distinctions. Similarly, I myself think and have thought for some time that, in the Home Department a committee to examine proposals for legislation generally would be of very great value. At present Dr. Sapru and I have to deal with a great number of Bills submitted by non-officials, of which it is very difficult indeed to form an opinion. Now, I cannot but think that the association of a number of eminent Members from this Assembly would be of the greatest assistance to Government in considering questions of that kind; I believe also the question has been considered as to whether a Committee might not be of any use in relation to other subjects, such as railways, but I have no authority to speak about that. I suggest, therefore, to this Assembly that the proper way to utilise the services of Members of the Assembly is not to appoint Committees in the manner suggested, but in some cases to appoint ad hoc Committees, if I may use that term, for the investigation of particular questions, and in other cases, to appoint general Committees to deal with particular subjects in any Department. As I said now, in the Home Department it would be quite impossible for us to carry on our current work in the political section with the assistance of a Committee. We have to act at once, and, indeed, a great deal of the papers with which we deal are of a very confidential character. But there are many subjects, at any rate there are some subjects certainly, in which the assistance of a Committee might be very useful. That, however, is only my personal opinion. As I said, the matter is really one for decision by His Excellency. In the conclusion of his speech the Mover referred to the Standing Finance Committee and suggested that that affords a precedent for appointing Standing Committees in the various Departments. Now I venture to put it to this Assembly that there is no analogy between the two bodies. The Standing Finance Committee is a very different thing from a Standing Committee attached to a Department. I understand, for instance, that the Finance Committee has nothing whatever to do with anything on the revenue side. It merely examines certain items of expenditure which are in any case coming before the Assembly in the form of Budget grants at a later stage. With the more intricate and scientific side of the Finance Department's work, or indeed with the connection between the Finance Department and the Local Governments, I think the Standing Finance Committee has no concern whatever. It is a mistake, therefore, to suppose that the Standing Finance Committee would afford a precedent for appointing Standing Committees to take part in the whole of the work of any particular Department. Indeed, in my Department, and I am sure in other Departments as well, for instance, in the Foreign and Political Department, it will be quite impossible to have a Standing Committee to deal with all the various subjects with which we are in touch. There is another Committee now already in existence, namely, the Statute Law Revision Committee, on which some of the Members of this Assembly sit. That is a very small Committee, I think there are about five members, but even they find it very hard indeed to attend to their duties on that Committee without sacrificing a considerable amount of time which they find it difficult to do, having regard to their private business. In the circumstances, I suggest that the Assembly would be wise in recommending a trial of a Committee or Committees on particular subjects, but certainly not Standing Committees attached to all the Departments in the Government of India. If you have Committees of seven or eight attached to each Department, this would involve a burden on the time of the Members of this Assembly which they could not possibly bear. Further, I suggest the real method in which a Legislature ought to exercise control over the Executive is that which obtains in Great Britain. You have there, I suppose, the most powerful and the most successful form of legislative constitution. The Parliament is able to bring the greatest influence to bear on the Legislature in many ways which are perfectly open to this Assembly. I believe that it would be to the benefit of the Government of this country, whether democratic or in its present form, that the Assembly should follow British lines in that respect rather than adopt American or French lines. It may be possible for Committees, such as are proposed, to do admirable work in the provinces, but now and in the future, when India acquires a greater measure of responsible Government, I believe that it will always be essential that the Central Executive Government should be a strong Government, able to come to rapid decisions and see immediately that they are carried out, and that the control of the Legislature over the Government should be exercised as it is in the British Parliament. Perhaps some Honourable Members of this Assembly are aware of the advice that John Stuart Mill, the great constitutional authority, gave on these points. He said that :

'When a public body knows what it is fit for and what it is unfit for, it will more and more understand that it is not its business to administer, that it is its business to see that the administration is done by proper persons and to keep them to their duties. * * * It is more consistent with the capacity of a popular Assembly, to see that the business is transacted by the most competent persons; confining its own direct intervention to the enforcement of real discussion and the publicity of the reasons offered pro and con; the offering of suggestions to those who do the work, and the imposition of a check upon them if they are disposed to do anything wrong.'

That is a method in which, I believe, this Assembly could properly act. I have in my mind a statement made by Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer yesterday. Honourable Members will remember that Dr. Gour suggested that before the Executive Government had taken action in regard to certain activities of the non-co-operation party, we should have obtained the direct assent of this Assembly. Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer then seemed to me to get at the point at once, and he said that this was not the constitutional way of looking at it; it is necessary that Government should have power to act immediately and decisively, and the proper way in which control is to be exercised by this Chamber is by attacking, criticising, opposing and even censuring the Government in the House on its action later if it considers that it has done wrong.

I hope that if I give the Mover of this Resolution the assurance that I have given, namely, that the Government are prepared to consider this question of appointing tentatively a Committee on particular subjects, he will not find it necessary to press this Resolution further. To appoint Standing Committees to every Department of Government, even if the Army and Foreign and Political Departments are excluded, will be imposing upon the Members of the Assembly a greater task than they can possibly carry out, and will involve great delay and considerable expense and dislocation of the public business.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division : Non-Muhammadan) : Sir, it is very refreshing to hear the very sympathetic, though very disappointing, reply of the Honourable the Home Member, but as a practised speaker and a lawyer, he must be aware of the weakness of his case, because he knows that the argument of non possumus is resorted to by people who have nothing better to say. Let me place before this Assembly the various reasons he has given for opposing this very modest and reasonable Resolution. I have categorised them, and I propose to deal with his several objections in their order.

The first objection of the Honourable the Home Member is this. He says : 'Gentlemen, I speak in your own interests and for the dignity of your own House.' Quoting Mill and Bryce, he says : 'You will not attend'. He gives two instances of Committees in which there has been an absence of members. Now, I am a member of both. First of all, referring to the Racial Distinctions Committee, the Honourable the Home Member said that out of deference to the official members, he fixed provisionally the 4th of January as the date for the assembly of that Committee at Delhi. But he quite unconsciously forgot to mention as to when he intimated that date to the members concerned. He knows that the majority of the members are busy lawyers and would he be surprised to hear that he did not give more than 48 hours' notice for some members to come up from long distances? He could not therefore be surprised if he found that the members were not ready to employ an aeroplane service to reach Delhi within 48 hours of the notice given to them. As regards the Statute Law Revision Committee, does the Honourable the Home Member know that the notice given to the members of that Committee was even shorter? I appeal to my colleague, Munshi Iswar Saran, to verify the fact. We were in Calcutta and we were told at the last moment that the Committee would meet on a certain date. So far from there being any anxiety to shirk the work of these two very important Committees, there is every desire to serve upon them, but the shortness of the notice given to the members accounts for the absence of some of them. That is with reference to the two instances which the Honourable the Home Member has given.

Then, secondly, he mentioned the question of cost which would be necessarily involved in having to increase the Secretariat work. I think this is an old chestnut, a stale argument with which this House is very familiar. Meetings take place for three days and four days a month, and when protests after protests are made by this Assembly we are being treated to this argument that the Secretariat is insufficient to cope with the work of this Assembly. My Honourable friend has not told us what would be the increased cost and whether this Assembly would not be prepared to defray the extra cost involved and the Honourable the Finance Member has not got up and said that, if the proposal of the Honourable Mr. Neogy is carried, he will not survive the shock or that the British Indian Exchequer will have to sue for insolvency. I therefore submit that the question of cost need not detain us.

Then comes the question of delay. Now, Sir, the Honourable the Home Member may take an assurance from the Members of this House that, far from there being any delay, it will facilitate the disposal and despatch of work. At present the work is done by the Departments concerned. It is then discussed and agitated and re-agitated in this House, and I am perfectly certain that the Honourable the Home Member will himself admit that much of this time, while the Assembly and the Council of State are in session, is spent on the floor of this House. All that time would be saved. (Mr. N. M. Samarth: How?) I hear an ejaculation from a most unexpected quarter, from a gentleman who proceeded to England and could not be unaware of the confabulations and deliberations of the Joint Parliamentary Committee. It is there stated that, if Council Secretaries are appointed, they will bring the Government nearer to the Assembly and save the time of the permanent officials, and the Standing Committees will thresh out matters and thereafter explain to this House what the permanent officials have now to do. After this statement, it is a question of addition and subtraction, and I can be sure that my Honourable friend, the interjector, is not above it.

Now, Sir, I pass over the two eminent authorities which the Honourable the Home Member has cited. But I beg to ask the Honourable the Home Member: 'How far are we from America?' If I were to ask you, Sir, to open the windows because it is warm, the Honourable the Home Member would read to me the latest Reuter's telegram and say: 'No. There are snow storms in London. You cannot open the windows here'. He might just as well have cited Bryce to apply to the entirely anomalous, unprecedented constitution of this transitory body called the Legislative Assembly. Neither Mill nor Bryce nor any constitutional lawyer ever thought of the weird constitution of which this India of transition is for the time being possessed.

Now, Sir, I think his argument was moving in crescendo. The last argument was really his real argument and that was that the appointment of Under-Secretaries or Parliamentary Secretaries and Standing Committees . . .

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: May I make a correction? I never said anything about Council Secretaries. I was purely dealing with Standing Committees.

Dr. H. S. Gour: That the appointment of Standing Committees means so much loss of power. That is the crux of the whole case. He should have put that argument first. But he brought you, in his extremely subtle way, to the reception of that argument by first of all appealing to you in your own interests not to join this Parliamentary Committee, and he told you how you will lose your time and how precious your time is and how, after all the discharge of public duties and the onerous responsibilities that you bear upon your shoulders you would not suffer from a hunchback if you came and sat on these Standing Committees. If these arguments do not convince you, then he asks you to remember that the appointment of the Standing Committees would be incompatible with the present system of the Government of India and that it was not contemplated by the Government of India Act. Now that is the real question. That is the real issue, and upon that I join issue with the Honourable the Home Member. If the House of Commons and the British Parliament had been convinced of the reasons given by the Government of India in its despatch of the 5th March, that the appointment of these Committees and the association of the Members of the two Houses with the practical work of administration of the country, would detract from the bureaucratic character of the Central Government and was incompatible with it, then they would not have made a provision which they have in the Government of India Act, for the appointment of Standing Committees. I, therefore, submit that the fact that this is part of the statute law betokens a desire on the part of the British Parliament that the people of this country must be trained in the practical art of administration, and out of deference to the objections of the Government of India and of the then head of that Government, the question was left to the discretion of the Governor General. I submit the mere fact that there is a provision made in the Act, the mere fact that the question was debated and examined by a responsible body and the conclusion is registered in the solemn Act of the British Parliament is my best justification to support this Resolution, and the burden of proof is upon the Government to show why they should not appoint Standing Committees. Then, Sir, we are told, 'We are perfectly prepared to throw at you odd crumbs from the rich man's table, but we would not admit you to our dinner table. We will give you small jobs to do and you should be satisfied because we can safely entrust you only with such doles as we can make from time to time.' Now, Sir, I submit, I ask the Honourable the Home Member, has he really and seriously considered what it means? Do you think that the Honourable Members of this House will be content to serve for such purposes and on Committees which the Departments may call upon them to do, when they have been expressly denied, as they have been denied to-day, the right and privilege of being associated with the various departments of the Government of India? I think, Sir, the fact that we have come here and have worked upon the Committees upon which we were appointed, the fact that we have done our best for the purpose of furthering the Reforms, the fact that we have done our best for upholding the executive Government, should be our best justification for asking that Government to give us, at any rate, an opportunity of learning the practical art of government. (An Honourable Member: 'Hear, hear.') You will remember the other day a discussion was raised in this House on the question of further reforms, and the English newspapers and the 'Statesman' said that the Assembly lacked administrative experience. I ask this House to see that if these Standing Committees are appointed, the administrative inexperience from which it suffers would be soon dispelled.

One word more and I have done. The Honourable the Home Member quoted Mill. I am a student of Mill. May I ask the Honourable the Home Member to read the portion in that very book where he points out that this system applies to constitutions where the final and ultimate decision rests with the representatives of the people. Is that so here? Are we the final judges of all actions of the Executive Government? And as we are not the final judges of the policy of the Executive Government, and as we are being trained to administer our country, I think both wisdom and expediency demand and dictate that this Resolution should be accepted by the Government.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Finance Member): Sir William Vincent gave the House this morning some of the reasons for objecting to this Resolution, and entered into some of the difficulties we should have to encounter were we to put into force the procedure which has been recommended by it. I am for the present concerned rather with the criticisms which were directed by Dr. Gour against the speech of my Honourable friend. Now, Sir, this is an important question and one which may have great influence on the practical working of Government, and I must register a protest against any proposal to set aside those objections with the airy gesture adopted by Dr. Gour. It is all very well to tell us, Sir, that non-possumus is a weak argument in legal circles and that every lawyer knows it to be a weak argument. I am not very well versed in the arguments which that astute body uses to dispose of its opponents, but I do know that in the practical affairs of life non-possumus is a final argument, for if a scheme cannot be carried out for practical reasons, then it falls to the ground. It is all very well, Sir, for Dr. Gour to resent Sir William Vincent quoting to us the conclusions of Bryce in regard to the working of the committee system in the United States or warning us of the failure of that system in France. I am astonished that any one here should brush aside so lightly the lessons to be learnt from the constitutional history of other countries, for to do so would deprive us of one of the greatest safeguards that we can ourselves adopt to obviate difficulties in the development of our own constitution and its conventions. Nor is it possible to accept what he has said regarding the difficulty pointed out by Sir William Vincent in securing the regular attendance of members of our Select Committees with a view to the proper despatch of the business of those Committees. It may be well assumed that I am not opposed in any way whatever to the fullest association of the Members of the House in the work of Government; I should be the last person to resent the suggestion that it is desirable to educate the Members of the House in administrative work. I took the earliest opportunity myself of asking the House to constitute a Standing Finance Committee to deal with certain definite classes of our expenditure work. As far as that is a concession of principle, I am willing to stand by it. I have been associated with that Committee throughout and have derived the utmost assistance from it; equally I believe that the Members of that Committee in the course of their many and arduous labours have learnt much regarding the administrative work of Government. But the fact remains that we have had no little difficulty in securing a full attendance not only at the meetings of that Committee but of many other Committees with which we are associated. If you need any further proof of that, Sir, may I read from a paper which I placed on the table of the House yesterday? It is the Report of the Select Committee of both Houses on the Income-tax Bill, a measure of no little importance to the country. I quote it in particular reference to the remark of Dr. Gour. One of the paragraphs reads as follows :

‘Dr. Gour and Mr. Narayan Das Girdhardas were unable to attend the meetings of the Committee.’

Now, Sir, that Committee assembled only a few days before this session, and it sat throughout the earlier meetings of this session. That other important work engaged the energies of my Honourable friend at the time, I am well aware; he has given his time freely to Government and Committees of this Assembly; I merely adduce this fact as illustrating the truth of the contention that difficulties do actually occur in securing full attendance on these Committees. I ask you now to magnify the problem and imagine what would be the difficulties if we were to ask this House to give us something between 50 and 60 Members to attend constantly at the headquarters of Government and assist in its current work. For, Sir, if a Standing Committee is to be associated with each Department of Government, as suggested by the Resolution, and is to take a serious grasp of the work of that Department, it must take part in the current work of the Department. The work of Government is continuous; you cannot always isolate questions of policy and questions of detail; they are inter-woven and involve a continuous series of connected decisions. Many of the matters dealt with are urgent. It would be quite impossible for us to defer, until some convenient occasion such as the meetings of this Assembly, the many an important questions with which the Department has to deal in its current operations. Let me repeat, Sir, that to carry out this proposal in full would require the attendance of at least 50 or 60 Members practically throughout the year at the headquarters of the Government of India. Now, Sir, attach what value you will to the legal value of the argument of non-possumus; my reply is that I have there a practical non-possumus which must be faced. So much for the working difficulties of the proposal. As Sir William Vincent pointed out, they may not necessarily be insuperable, and he put before you an alternative; but before I come to that, I desire to put before the House in somewhat fuller detail what constitutes the work of a department, and to analyse the exact value which the Standing Committee would afford both to the operations of Government and as to the education to the Members of this House. I take by preference my own Department, though this is in some sense an exceptional case. For, Sir, while the operations of other Departments only come up for occasional review (this is perhaps less true of the Home Department than of other Departments) by means of Resolutions and questions, my Department is one which stands in a peculiar position, for once a year the whole of our operations come under review and very complete review by this House. We have to explain what we have done with the money voted by the House during the past year. We have to explain whether our anticipations of revenue have been fulfilled or not. We have to explain to it why and how in any particular case we have exceeded the grants made to us. We have to lay before the House a very complete scheme of operations, not only of revenue and expenditure, but of ways and means finance for the coming year. We have to justify this to the House, and we have to obtain practically every penny of it in the form of a direct demand for a grant. In this sense my Department stands on a special basis, and the Assembly is to this extent already associated very fully with its operations. But it has much in common with other Departments, and the lessons to be drawn from examining the work of that Department will be of general value. One branch of that Department is concerned purely with expenditure work. Proposals for new expenditure are first examined in full detail in that branch, and if they are passed by the Department, come before the Standing Finance Committee. But I wish to point out that this is work of great volume and great detail. It would be quite impossible for any Committee to sit with us day by day and go through the whole of the great volume of cases that come up to us. It is not possible to do more than to assemble a Committee to go through the more important cases which have passed through the scrutiny of our Department and have been admitted by it.

The second branch of my Department is concerned with such matters as financial rules, financial regulations and relations with the Provincial Governments. Now, Sir, while on questions of general financial policy the advice of a Committee might be both of importance and of interest, yet I think it will be granted that few Members of this House would care to attend day after day and month after month purely for the purpose of revising financial rules and financial regulations. Then comes a very important branch, I mean that relating to what we call pure finance, that is all those questions relating to the provision of ways and means, the adjustment of remittance transactions, the paper currency issue, the raising of loans, and the provision of every day finance by means of Treasury Bills, advances from the Bank, and the like. Now, that is work which demands that we should frequently take immediate action; a great part of it is conducted by telegraphic communication; there are frequent consultations with experts, and part of the work is of a class which must essentially be conducted with the utmost secrecy. I put it to any business Member of this House whether it would be possible for us to lay before a Committee meeting at considerable intervals of time proposals for increasing or lowering the rate of Treasury Bills, whether it would be possible for us to discuss with any Committee the terms on which we propose to issue a loan. It would astonish me to learn that such matters are put before a Committee in any country in the world, and would ask any Member of the House to say whether in his opinion such proposals could reasonably be discussed with a Committee. Yet if a Standing Committee were to be associated with the current work of the Department, that is the class of work which would come before it.

(A voice: Not necessarily—who wants them?)

Then what else would you place before it?

Now, Sir, I have analysed the work which is discharged in my Department; as I have pointed out its operations are continuous and while they occasionally involve questions of policy, it is difficult to isolate policy and its execution. I am free to admit that on important questions of policy it might be well to seek the advice of a Committee convened for the purpose. But I maintain that for the current work of the Department and for the ordinary administrative work of the Department, a Committee is not a suitable form of assistance. I maintain, further, that it would be impossible to keep with us a Committee of sufficient numbers really to represent the opinion of this House, or carry weight with it. That is a practical and outstanding difficulty to which myself can see no solution whatever. And let me repeat again, Sir, that in pronouncing this difficulty to be insuperable, I am not speaking as an intransigent opponent of the general principle that Members of this House should be associated in the work of Government, for, as I said before, I have given proof, and practical proof, to the contrary.

I have made one reservation, Sir, and that is, on questions of general policy the work of a Committee would frequently be of the very greatest assistance to us. I can well conceive that in many Departments it would be of the highest value if a Committee—a Standing Committee if necessary—were appointed to deal with definite subjects. I can well conceive, for instance, that in connection with the Department of Commerce it may be well that there should be a Standing Committee to advise Government on many questions of policy relating to railways. I am not going to make any suggestions to my Honourable friend Mr. Sarma, but I can well conceive that emigration is a subject on which a Committee could frequently advise with excellent results, because emigration is a subject dealing largely with questions of policy. Here negotiations have to be carried on with other Governments and Dominions, and time is available for the full discussion of such questions: the questions of policy involved are of the very deepest interest to this House. On such points, therefore, namely on points of policy, I can well imagine that it would be of the greatest value if Committees dealing with definite subjects were appointed. But what I do protest against, Sir, is any suggestion that Standing Committees should be appointed to deal with the current and everyday work of a Department. That, Sir, is my point: and again I say, when I make that point, I base my objections to the Resolution on the safe ground of practicability: and I appeal to Members of this House, as practical men, not to support a proposition, which, as it stands, would be of so little assistance to the House and so entirely unworkable in practice.

Mr. N. M. Samarth (Bombay: Nominated Non-Official): Sir, I see a great deal of force in what the Honourable the Home Member as well as the Honourable the Finance Member have pointed out to us in their speeches. I think the original proposal of having Standing Committees associated with the Government of India had nothing to do really with the current business of the Departments, and the idea was really to associate Standing Committees in order that they may advise the different Departments, except the Army and Foreign and Political Departments, and to that extent I take it that the Government of India will be pleased to recommend to His Excellency the Governor General the appointment of such Committees. And I may remind the Honourable the Home Member and the Honourable the Finance Member that, whatever their views were before, when Sir James Meston went to give evidence, the President, Lord Selborne, asked him first, 'I think the Government of India have instructed you to put forward some more evidence,' and he said 'Yes'. And then he put forward some more evidence in modification of the previous views of the Government of India in their despatch: and on this subject of Standing Committee he said:

'Then in regard to Standing Committees with the Government of India and Parliamentary Under Secretaries, they'

that is, the Government of India,

'would ask that if these institutions are accepted by the Joint Committee, an exception should be made in the case of two Departments, the Army Department and the Foreign and Political Department. They think that the danger, to put it quite frankly, of leakage in those very important Departments, where secrecy is of such high importance, justifies them in recommending special treatment.'

That was their view, and I take it that they adhere to that view. The Joint Parliamentary Committee then recommended :

'That the Committee think that it may often greatly assist the political education of India if Standing Committees of the Legislative bodies are attached to certain Departments of Government. But they only express this opinion on the understanding that the appointment of such Committees, their composition and the regulations which govern their procedure shall be matters wholly and exclusively within the discretion of the Governor General.'

I, Sir, with your permission beg to propose an amendment to this Resolution, so as to bring it into line exactly with the idea which the Joint Parliamentary Committee had and which the Government of India, through Lord Meston, put before that Committee. My amendment is this :

'After the words 'Governor General in Council' add the words 'to be pleased to approach His Excellency the Governor General with the recommendation.' And then delete the words 'elected by the Members of the Legislature,' and substitute the words 'of the Indian Legislature.' And at the end of the Resolution, after the word 'Departments,' add the following words : 'their composition and the regulations which govern their procedure, being matters wholly and exclusively within the discretion of the Governor General.'

I think, Sir, that gives ample scope to the Governor General to so frame the regulations that the Standing Committees will really have nothing to do with the ordinary current business, or interfere with the working of the Departments. The regulations may also be so framed that these Standing Committees will have nothing to do with the Departments where leakage of information is such an important consideration ; and they need only be called upon from time to time to advise on matters of policy. Now, so far as this amendment is concerned, I hope there will be no objection on the score of notice, and there should be no objection to the proposal being accepted by Government. I had absolutely no time to give notice.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : If I may interrupt the Honourable Member for a moment, Government certainly will make no objection on the score of want of notice.

Mr. N. M. Samarth : Then, Sir, I beg to propose the amendment which I have read out.

Mr. President : There being no objection on the score of notice, the amendment is accepted. The amendment is :

'After the words 'Governor General in Council' insert the words 'to be pleased to approach His Excellency the Governor General with the recommendation'; to delete the words 'elected by the Members of the Legislature', and substitute the words 'of the Indian Legislature'; and after the word 'Departments' at the end, add the following words 'their composition and the regulations which govern their procedure, being matters wholly and exclusively within the discretion of the Governor General.'

Mr. R. A. Spence (Bombay : European) : Sir, I think the Resolution which has been moved to-day is one which commends itself from one point of view very much to Members of this House. I think it is a Resolution which gives expression to that feeling we all have that we should gradually be trained in the administrative work of Government. But I think that the arguments which have been adduced by the Honourable the Home Member and the Honourable the Finance Member are very strong arguments against the appointment of Committees attached to various Departments instead of having Committees attached for special purposes. But I am still very keen indeed on seeing Members of the Legislature taking their place more and more in the administration of Government. We know from practical experience what difficulty there is in getting several people to come up to Delhi or Simla and serve on a Committee. That difficulty would, I consider, be very much lessened in the case of single individuals serving as Secretaries. And if I am in order, Sir, on such a Resolution as this, I should like to give expression to my feeling that we should try and train up in this country what at Home, I understand, are known as Parliamentary Under-Secretaries. I do not think that if Members of this Assembly or of the Council of State were attached to the various Departments as Secretaries there would be that danger to which our attention has been drawn by the Honourable the Finance Member. I do not think also that there would be the same expense which large Committees would necessarily involve; and I think that these Secretaries would be able to save the time of Members of Government attending this Assembly by answering questions and being always there ready to give expression to Government's policy. It seems to me that what we want is that the Government Secretaries, I mean the men of the regular services, should be relieved and given more leisure to carry on the work of their great Departments. We do not want them to suffer by having to attend here day after day, day after day. What would meet the case, I think, is if Members of this Assembly or of the Council of State were appointed as Parliamentary Under-Secretaries—if I may use an expression which last session was objected to as un-Parliamentary;—they said we were not in Parliament because we never spoke. I do not know, Sir, whether the same indulgence will be given to me as was given to the previous speaker to move an amendment. But if permission were given to me, the amendment which I should like to move is that this Resolution should read as follows:

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that Members of the Legislature, nominated by His Excellency the Governor General and approved by the Legislature, be associated with the different Departments of the Government of India, other than the Army and the Foreign and Political Departments, as Parliamentary Under-Secretaries, in order that they may be trained up in the administration of Government and relieve the Government Members and Secretaries of a part, at least, of the work in the sessions of the Legislature.'

Now, why I should like to see those Parliamentary Under-Secretaries nominated by the Governor General, is because, first of all, it is essential that the person whom the Legislature is going to approve of as a Parliamentary Under-Secretary should be one who is likely to turn out a successful Secretary. We do not want the election of Parliamentary Under-Secretaries to be merely a matter of politics, or just voting for the most popular man. Therefore I suggest that nomination in the first place should come from the Governor General; but as the gentleman selected is to represent in the House the views more or less of the Legislature, the Legislature should therefore be allowed to approve his appointment.

Whether my amendment is acceptable or whether it is out of order, I do think that that is the line we should adopt. I think we have heard definite evidence on the subject of these Committees, and I think, in view of what has been said, we cannot vote for this Resolution as it stands, but I do feel that more opportunity should be given to Members of this House to take part in the administration, and I think that the appointment of Under Secretaries would be to the benefit of Government Members. If I have your permission and that of the House to move the amendment I will do so ; if not, I will simply give it as my expression of opinion.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I think the Assembly will realise that amendments proposed at the very last moment even in the Assembly put the Member of Governments in charge in a very difficult position. I was quite willing to accept Mr. Samarth's amendment, waiving the question of notice, because that arose out of the Resolution. But this is entirely a new question which Mr. Spence has raised. If I enunciate to the Assembly the manner in which Government decide the action to be taken upon Resolutions, I think they will appreciate, at any rate, my difficulty. All important Resolutions go before the whole body of the Executive Council, less important Resolutions are taken up to His Excellency, but in no case is the matter left with any individual Member to decide, not at any rate in the Home Department, and I believe this is true of the other Departments. I am therefore in great difficulty in publishing a decision on the part of Government on an entirely new question of this kind when I have not had an opportunity of consulting my colleagues. If it would meet Mr. Spence, I shall be quite prepared to undertake to put this question up before the Government for their consideration. But I really must ask, Sir, if new questions of this character are brought in, that we should receive notice.

Mr. R. A. Spence: I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. President: I can remove the Home Member's difficulty.

The proposal of the Honourable Member from Bombay is to associate with Government Members of this Assembly in a more or less executive capacity, that is to say, it creates certain new executive offices. The proposal before the House is to associate in a consultative capacity Members of this House in the form of Committees with the Executive Government. Now, his proposal goes beyond the strict terms of this motion and ought to be made the subject of a separate proposal standing by itself.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, I am afraid a great deal has been read into this Resolution, which is not there. All that this Resolution recommends is that Standing Committees be associated with the different departments of the Government, excepting the Army and the Foreign and Political Departments. The Resolution does not say that the Standing Committee should consist of ten members, so as to mount up the figure to 50, as the Honourable the Finance Member would have it, nor does the Resolution say that the Standing Committee should be associated with every-day current work of the Department. These are the two large assumptions which have been made on behalf of the Government as having been embodied in this Resolution, on which they have based their practical objections. Sir, speaking as a member of the Finance Committee, I quite realise the practical difficulties and the great sacrifice which we members have to make in undertaking duties of this sort. Reference was made, Sir, to the difficulty about the Finance Committee, and Mr. Spence takes it as evidence of the difficulty. I expected the Honourable the Finance Member to have made a statement with reference to the actual position of the Finance Committee; I am surprised he did not. What are the facts with reference to the Finance Committee? We had sittings for nearly ten days in June. Most of us attended and gave our valuable time to that Committee. Again, Sir, most of us attended the sittings in September and gave our valuable time to it, nearly a week and over. Sir, first of all the last meeting was announced to take place on the 12th of December when some of us on the Finance Committee were also asked to serve at Calcutta on the Railway Accounts Committee between the 2nd and 10th of December, and again to come up here on the 12th of December. That is why that meeting could not be held. Then the meeting was posted to the 2nd of January. At that time Mr. Joshi was away in England doing public work. Mr. Venkatapathi Raju was on his way to Fiji to do public work. Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas was away on public duty on some Committee. I was assigned a house in Raisina for the purpose of staying with the Finance Committee. On the day I booked my passage, there came a letter cancelling the quarters. I was to come here, Sir, in December, and take my chance of getting a quarter in the cold season. I refused to do it. I intimated the fact to the Honourable the Finance Member through the Secretary of the Finance Committee. I am yet to receive an explanation for this treatment. I had to cancel the booking of my car, I had to cancel my berth in the busy Christmas season; we could not get conveyances and carriages and I was put to a lot of inconvenience. I hear some mention was made of this difficulty in the newspaper. I did not see it. I was surprised that any reference was made to it. We have been ungrudgingly giving our time, and I may say I have been doing so to my cost, and doing our work. Therefore, I quite realise the practical difficulties. Having bargained, I expect my Honourable friends here elected by their constituencies will not grudge giving the time. I wait for an answer from all the Honourable Members that they are prepared to give the time necessary for learning the work and devoting care and attention to the discharge of the duties which they have undertaken at the hands of their Constituencies. (Voices: 'Yes'.) Sir, it is not necessary that the Committee should be large. A Committee of two is a Committee. What is the practical difficulty in this Assembly electing a panel of 20 members or 25 members out of about 100 and odd members, and from out of the panel distribute the work for each session. What is the difficulty? It is possible to enumerate and magnify practical difficulties. I will take it up for one session. Some other Honourable Member will take it up for another session. In that way really the work can be managed. I know the value of being on Committees. I know by my own practical experience of the great benefits which I have derived from being on the Finance Committee, of the valuable instruction which I have received in the practical difficulties of administration from every head of the department who appeared before the Finance Committee. Sir, if I were making a budget speech this year, I would not be making it in that airy fashion in which I did last year. (Laughter.) That is due to the experience which I have gained. Sir, I want my Honourable colleagues to gain that experience. Without it you will find that the Government will be in more difficulties than now. It will pay the Government to take Members into confidence. The Honourable the Home Member referred to confidential papers. Are you not going to take us seriously into confidence? Are we such irresponsible people that you are afraid of placing confidential papers in our hands? Are you not placing most confidential papers in the hands of the members of the Racial Distinctions Committee? Have you not placed confidential papers in the hands of the Press Laws Committee? Have you not placed confidential papers in the hands of the Repressive Laws Committee? Have they broken your confidence?

What is the fear of placing confidence in the Members of this House? The more confidence you place in them, the more response you will get and the more work you will get from them. You should be delighted to get work from them. The Honourable the Finance Member has handsomely acknowledged the assistance which he derives from the Standing Finance Committee. Out of the hundreds of papers which pass through the Honourable the Finance Member's Department, how many does he see? Perhaps the Deputy Secretary and the Under Secretary disposes of most of them. That is not the sort of thing we want. We want to be acquainted with the inner workings of each Department in order to know what are their practical difficulties or the various ways in which they have to contend with various questions, questions of policy and questions of finance. The Honourable the Finance Member referred to the difficulty of questions of policy in regard to finance. It is on these questions that I ask him to take the assistance of Members. If he had had that assistance, he would not have committed the blunder of issuing a loan in the London market without taking the Indian public into confidence.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Which loan?

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: The last loan but one of 7½ millions. (A voice: 'He had nothing to do with it.') I know that, but if he had a Committee to assist him, his protest to the Secretary of State would have carried greater force and weight. Therefore, it is no use exaggerating the difficulties. If you are not willing to do a thing, you will always find difficulties. Where there is a will, there is a way, but where there is no will you always exaggerate and say how difficult it will be. I appeal to my Honourable colleagues, the elected Members of the Assembly, that they are taking a serious responsibility in passing this Resolution. We must be serious in our promise when we say that we are prepared to work, and if we are serious, and if we are prepared to sacrifice time, money and health, then by all means let us go in for it. It is worth going in for us, it is worth going in for the Government. Therefore, all these difficulties should not stand in the way. My Honourable colleague, Mr. Samarth, has come forward with an amendment objecting to the election by this House. I am surprised, Sir, that an elected Member of this House should do so. (A voice: 'He is not an elected Member'.) On the other hand, I have seen tabled on the list of Resolutions here a Resolution to the effect that every Committee appointed should be elected by this House. They will not command confidence if you merely leave it to Government to nominate Members. Look at the practical difficulties in making appointments to these Committees. The Government appoint me to three or four Committees and ask me to serve on them. How am I to serve? They are so enamoured of me that they ask me to serve on these Committees. How can I do justice to that work? If, on the other hand, you leave it to the Legislature, they will take jolly good care to elect people who will do the work. Therefore, I say that these difficulties should not be exaggerated. I strongly and earnestly appeal to Government to accept the Resolution. You have already accepted the principle of it. It is not said that you should all at once appoint to all the Departments. Appoint to two or three. Do make a beginning;

[Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar.]

try it, and we are prepared to make it a success. We are anxious to co-operate with you provided you are willing to co-operate with us, but as long as you show a tendency not to take us into confidence, we will not have any confidence in you.

Therefore, I earnestly appeal to Government to accept this Resolution.

Mr. S. C. Shahani (Sind : Jagirdars and Zamindars) : Sir, this is a very important question, and I rise to draw attention to one aspect of it which has not been so far noticed by the Members of the Assembly. The Government ought to be thankful to the Assembly for suggesting that they should associate Standing Committees with the different Departments of the Government. I find in the first despatch of the Government of India on constitutional reforms that the primary object with which the idea of Standing Committees is entertained is to control the irresponsibility of the executive.

When I see that the Home Member questions the accuracy of this my statement, I feel that it is just possible that I have misunderstood the thing ; but I will be reading the passage in question to the Assembly, and in doing so I should be able to fix the interpretation that is to be put upon the passage. 'These apprehensions,' urged against the creation of Standing Committees, 'seem to us exaggerated. This idea of Standing Committees was first put forward as a means of associating the Legislature with an irresponsible executive.' So runs the passage. And then the passage goes on to say that the irresponsibility of Provincial Governments is to a certain extent reduced by the appointment of Ministers. But in the Central Government no Ministers have so far been appointed. This will be an additional ground then on which the Standing Committees proposed by my friend Mr. Neogy may find favour with the House.

I have said that the subject is an important one. On that account I would say something more with regard to the objections that have been raised to the acceptance of this proposal. The Honourable the Finance Minister has emphasised the necessity of the current or ordinary work being done by the Government without the help of the Standing Committees. The details I have no doubt might rightly be left to the Government ; but all business is transacted according to certain general ideas, and if these general ideas are considered by the Standing Committees, the transaction of even ordinary or current work will be a great deal facilitated for the Government.

It has been said with equal emphasis that 50 to 60 Members composing the Standing Committees from among the Assembly or from among the two Houses may not reasonably be expected to frequently attend at the headquarters of the Government for the work that will have to be done by them. This objection has been sufficiently answered by my friend Rao Bahadur Rangachariar. It is not desirable to appoint unwieldy Committees. He has also rightly remarked that the principle of election with regard to the appointment of these Standing Committees is to be preferred to the principle of nomination. We find that the same 3, 4 or 5 Members are selected for all kinds of Committees to the exclusion of the rest of the Assembly. How are the Committees then to do their work promptly and properly ? As a matter of fact, even some of those that are nominated to several Committees do not like it. One can hardly understand the reason why choice is limited to only a few. The principle of election is a vitally important principle to the realisation of responsible Government, and

I think, so far as we can help it, we should go in for it. One reason why the institution of Standing Committees elected by the two Houses or by the Assembly should find favour with us is this—that nomination will thereby have been reduced to some extent.

It has also been said with a great deal of force that the cost will increase, and in these days it is not good to add to the cost. I want to state that if 20 or 30 Members of the Indian Legislature are associated in the work of the Government, it will become easier for the rest of the Members to derive their information from them, and that the number of questions with which Government are now inundated will thereby be a great deal lessened. From this point of view, too, I think I would be right in saying that the cost would be decreased if the proposal of Standing Committees is accepted.

It has been further said that there has been no precedent for such an institution—that the Standing Finance Committee may not rightly be considered as a precedent. I suppose now only two Standing Committees are appointed—a Committee of Public Accounts, and a Committee of Finance, the nature of which is somewhat different. What does it matter if there have been no precedents? As a matter of fact, this very Assembly is a new institution, and if the institution of Standing Committees is a desirable one, it might be created without any regard being paid to the fact that there have been so far no precedents for it.

These are then some of the objections that have been urged against the acceptance of the proposed institution. The advantages that have been enumerated are the advantages of help that the Government will derive from the members of the Standing Committee, and the advantages that will accrue to the Indian Legislature from the connection that its members will come to have with Government. It has been also rightly said that it will be a great political education for the members of the Indian Legislature, and I have just now added that the irresponsibility of the executive government would be to some extent reduced if this institution finds favour with the Indian Legislature and is created. If we then put the objections on the one side and the advantages on the other, the preponderance will obviously be on the side of the advantages. The Honourable the Home Member himself evidently feels that the advantages will preponderate over the disadvantages, since he is prepared to recommend at once a tentative scheme of one or two Committees. I fail to understand why the scheme should be confined tentatively to two or three Committees. We might reasonably appoint Committees for all the Departments, except of course those that have been excluded by the proposer, and I cannot see why any fears should be entertained as to the success of the experiment. My own idea is that the experiment is bound to succeed, and that it will be an easy way of extending the constitutional reforms. With these remarks I beg to resume my seat.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Does the Honourable Member propose the amendment that stands in his name? He has not done so.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: My object in proposing the amendment of which I have given notice is that in the other House there may be a difference of opinion. Here, too, I feel that the opinion is divided. In the circumstances there is no reason why we should provide that the Committees should consist of members derived from both Houses. We should confine ourselves to our own Assembly and pass a Resolution which will have reference to it only. If the other House approves of the scheme, the scheme may be brought forward in that House, discussed and accepted.

Mr. President: The Assembly had better take the amendment which has been moved by Mr. Samarth first of all, which raises the issue whether the Committee shall be appointed by the Governor General under regulations framed in that behalf, or whether it shall be elected. The amendment standing in the name of Mr. Shahani is not merely whether it shall be elected, but whether the election shall be confined to the Non-official Members of the Indian Legislative Assembly.

Dr. Nand Lal (West Punjab : Non-Muhammadan) : Sir, so far as the amendments are concerned, I go to support Mr. Shahani's amendment. But I may be permitted to speak on the Resolution as well. So far as the necessity of this Resolution is concerned, I think it (Resolution) commends itself. This is a very useful Resolution. It will relieve the Government of a great amount of responsibility, and it will give very great satisfaction to the Legislative Assembly. On various occasions many of us raised our voice criticising the steps taken by the Government, and the answers given to us were 'that the Government had no time to consult us.' Only yesterday there was a debate in which this issue was raised, and the answer given by the official members was that there are some very urgent affairs and in such matters it is impossible to summon the assistance of the Members of the Assembly: Here this Resolution solves that difficulty. We volunteer ourselves to assist the Government, we are quite prepared to sacrifice our time. The Honourable the Home Member becomes very sympathetic with us and tells us, 'Oh, you have not got time to spare; it is not a very convenient job'. In reply to those very kind words, we submit that we are quite prepared to sacrifice our time and energy ('Hear, hear'), because, by giving our time in this manner, we shall be able to do a great deal of work for Government. On the occasion of Budget debates, we have seen that we have had to spend days and days, and when we criticise the Honourable the Finance Member's demands, he would come forward and say, 'Oh, you do not know the practical phase of it, and, therefore, you are raising these sort of questions,' and to this the present Resolution is the answer. This Resolution very respectfully submits before this House that we will be able to curtail the time which is otherwise spent in criticisms, and, as I have said, we are quite prepared to sacrifice our time and give the necessary help and assistance to the Government. We submit that we may be given an opportunity of acquiring this training. The art of administration really requires training, and we want it, and we can give assurance to Government officials that we shall be of very great help to them. We are not those who will take months to learn: some of us will learn it within a few days ('Hear, hear'). Give us any work, we are sure to do it, but allow us sufficient time. Do the official members mean to say that we shall take long to learn? (Laughter.) They need not fear on that score at all. We require hints, and when we go through all the papers and statistics, we will be able to have a faithful grip of the subject and we will be of the greatest possible assistance to Government. Government should thank the Honourable Member who has moved this very useful Resolution. It will disarm us, it will disarm the public, so far as public criticism is concerned. It will assist the Government very materially, and therefore I cannot see any force or reason in the arguments which have been advanced on behalf of Government. Their main points have been put before this House. One of them is this : current work, heavy work ; we don't want to work as copyists, we don't want to work as accountants. We shall help you ; we shall see how you spend money, and in what manner your system is working. There is a mass of criticism that the system of work in Government Departments is very defective. We want to share that responsibility. When we, after experience, shall be convinced of the soundness of aforesaid system then we will tell our people, ' Oh, your criticism is absolutely wrong : we have associated ourselves with the Government, and we have seen the system which is in vogue, which is the best system.' Will it not materially help the Government ? Public criticism will be stopped at once. Therefore, a mass of discontent on account of the defective system in the Government Departments shall cease to exist. That criticism will be stopped, and I cannot see for a moment why the Honourable the Home Member and the Honourable the Finance Member should come forward with their luminous arguments and debate over these points which do not require any controversy at all. The suggestions, contained in the Resolution, if accepted by the Assembly, will be useful to both the Members of this Assembly as well as to Government. Of course, it is a question on which much can be said for both sides no doubt. But when we weigh the arguments pros and cons, we are forced to the conclusion that this Resolution deserves the sympathy of all Members of this Assembly, and I consequently hope it will be acceptable to every one, and I very strongly support this Resolution.

Mr. Darcy Lindsay (Bengal : European) : Sir, in associating myself with the views expressed by my Honourable Friend, Mr. Spence, with which I entirely agree, it appears to me that there has been one point omitted this afternoon in discussion, which is of considerable moment to the House, and that is the loss which will be suffered by the removal from our midst of some of our chief free lances in debate. It is an extraordinary fact that any one who enters the portals of the Secretariat undergoes a softening influence. There is something in the air of the Secretariat that affects them. You have only to look at our friends on the Government bench to realize this. Can you imagine what we should be without the refreshing criticisms of such stalwarts in debate as the Honourable Mr. Raugachariar, Dr. Gour, Munshi Iswar Saran, Dr. Nand Lal, whom we have just heard in fierce debate, my friend Mr. Ginwala, and last but not least, that doughty champion of freedom, Mr. K. Ahmad, all of whom would doubtless be elected to the Standing Committee, and in due course be inoculated with the Secretariat serum. I gather that if the members of the Standing Committees are to be of any assistance in the work in which the House is interested, they must devote their full time to the work, and not only when this House meets. Can we ask them to give up so much of their time ? We have heard from my Honourable friend, Dr. Nand Lal, that we all offer ourselves for this great service. But would it not be wise, Sir, to ascertain beforehand how many of our Members are willing to give up their time before we force this Resolution on the Government ? (' Hear, hear. ') With these few words, Sir, I do not support the Resolution as it stands, although in some respects it has my sympathy.

Mr. President : I think we had better dispose of the amendment standing in Mr. Samarth's name. Honourable Members do not seem inclined to address their remarks to that particular issue.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, I want in the first place in my reply to draw the attention of the Assembly shortly to the Joint Committee's Report which is accepted always by Government at any rate as of great weight, if not of binding authority. There it is clearly laid down that any Committee which is appointed is to be appointed by the Governor General. The method of appointment of the Committee in Mr. Samarth's amendment is not down there, but I think the other words of his amendment, viz., 'its composition and procedure being matters for the Governor General' have been taken from the Joint Committee's report. The Government, therefore, could not, in accordance with the weight of the recommendations in the Joint Committee's report, accept any question of electing members to these Committees. But I want also to deal with the general question of the appointment of Committees, because once it accepts this amendment, Government will be placed in a very difficult position. Dr. Gour tells me that there would be no difficulty about securing attendance, and he justified his absence, his failure, his inability to attend a particular meeting of the Racial Distinctions Committee, because, he said, he had not an aeroplane and he was given only 48 hours' notice. My recollection is that he was given very much longer notice than that, and that he insisted that the Committee should be postponed until the 15th, that is, some days after the sessions of this Council had begun. He was not even prepared to attend on the 10th when the sessions, as he well knew, began. So it was not altogether a question of notice. Again I believe I am right in saying that Dr. Gour did not attend a single meeting—if I am wrong I will apologise at once—a single meeting of the Joint Committee on the Income-tax Bill, not one meeting. That illustrates how difficult it is to secure the attendance of a busy man who, of course, is earning large fees down in Nagpur practising before Courts, and that is a difficulty that occurs in the case of many others. It is no good telling me that Members will attend. I, who have summoned many Committees, know that you cannot get men to come on any fixed date.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: If appointed to several Committees.

Dr. H. S. Gour: How many Committees have I attended and how many days have I spent with you?

Rao Bahadur S. Rangachariar: These are personalities.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: If I have been personal I trust I have not been offensive, but I will discontinue any personal remarks and not refer any further to the Racial Distinctions Committee. Let me turn to the real question before the Assembly. In regard to that, Sir, all that I am prepared to do in this matter is, as I put it to Mr. Samarth just now, I will ask the Government of India to consider the question of appointing standing Advisory Committees on particular subjects. I believe, as I have said, that the system of attaching Advisory Committees to each Department is entirely wrong in principle. If you take a Department like the one presided over by my Honourable colleague, Mr. Sarma, it is far more suitable to have separate Advising Committees for separate subjects where they can usefully advise Government, than to have a departmental Committee. In the Home Department I still maintain that there is a great deal of work which has to be done at once, which is confidential and for which it is essential that the Government should accept sole responsibility. (At this stage Mr. President vacated the Chair and Mr. Deputy President occupied it.) If we do wrong and we are criticised, we do our best to face the music here. Nor would the consent of 2 or 3 or 4 Members secure us from criticism in this Assembly. Mr. Rangachariar said that if we had an Advisory Committee in the Finance Department, the Honourable Mr. Hailey might have been saved from a lot of criticism over a loan of the Secretary of State. So far as I know—I have nothing to do with the Finance Department, and therefore, I am not giving away some secret here—that loan was arranged by the Secretary of State. In any case, if I put it to any business man, I put it to Mr. Samarth, I would put it to the Deputy President if he had not been occupying the Chair, I put it to Mr. Spence, to any business man here, would they recommend the Government to place the terms of a proposed loan before any Advisory Committee of this Assembly elected by the Members—a Committee in reality not responsible to anybody? I should like to have an answer to that. It is no good talking big about not being trusted, for there are papers in the Secretariat that will never pass beyond two or three Members of Council, there are others—that never pass out of Members' hands and do not go even to the Secretaries. It is not a question of trusting the honesty of men of their being careless and allowing information to leak out and every one knows this perfectly well. If it is proposed to select an Advisory Committee in the Finance Department to advise on the prices of treasury bills, on the prices of loans issued and on such other matters, on opium sales and the like, I think this Assembly is embarking on a very dangerous course indeed.

Mr. S. C. Shahani : Not dangerous.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : I do not suggest any dishonesty. Nothing of the kind, but I do know that the mor- men you have in the Committee the greater is the danger of information leaking out. The particular case that I mentioned, namely, that of the loan, is, I believe, an excellent instance, for I do not believe any business man would recommend Consulting a Committee on such a point. Mr. Shahani then said, 'Oh, this Committee that I am going to put up is going to control the Government.' That is really what he wanted and he referred to the Joint Committee's Report. I believe I am open to correction, that the passages he read there referred to the Provincial Governments and not to the Government of India.

Mr. S. C. Shahani : I am quite cognisant of that.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Well, Sir, the position of a Minister in the Provincial Governments is entirely different from that of a Member in the Government of India. The responsibility of the latter according to the constitution is to Parliament and to the Secretary of State for India in Council, and that responsibility cannot under the law be shared or controlled by any one. When the constitution is changed or if it is changed, the position may be different. My friend, Dr. Nand Lal, again suggested that the appointment of a Committee would avoid delay. Does any Member of this Assembly, who has practical experience of Committees, think they would expedite business? If you put any matter before a Committee, you have to wait until the various members can assemble; they then take time to examine the papers and generally call for further information on one thing and another, with the result that whole proceedings are delayed for weeks and months, and it is idle to say Committees would expedite business. Nor is that the way in which Government executive business can be done. Further, as a matter of fact, in all important business there is an Advisory Committee for each Member in the shape of the Governor General's Council before which important cases are taken. It is quite true it is not in the same position as an Advisory Committee of this Assembly, but I think the help we all receive from our colleagues is always of very careful weight and value on all questions. In conclusion, I will again ask the Assembly to accept what I have undertaken to do, namely, to request the Government of India to consider the question of attaching Advisory Committees not to departments qua departments, but on particular subject where the advice of such a Committee will be useful.

[Sir W. H. Vincent.]

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind : Muhammadan Rural): I want to speak a few words on this Resolution, Sir.

Mr. Deputy President: I will put Mr. Samarth's amendment to the vote. The question is that the following amendment be made:

'After the words 'Governor General in Council' add the words 'to be pleased to approach His Excellency the Governor General with the recommendation.' And then delete the words 'elected by the Members of the Legislature' and substitute the words 'of the Indian Legislature.' And at the end of the Resolution, after the word 'Departments,' add the following words: 'their composition and the regulations which govern their procedure, being matters wholly and exclusively within the discretion of the Governor General.'

The motion was negatived.

Mr. Deputy President: I call upon Mr. Shabani to move the amendment of which he has given notice.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Sir, I feel that no useful purpose will be served by my moving this amendment, and I therefore withdraw it.

Maulvi Abul Kasem (Dacca Division : Muhammadan Rural): I want to say a few words on the original motion.

Mr. Deputy President: You will have an opportunity of doing so.

The question is that leave be granted to Mr. Shabani to withdraw his amendment.

The amendment* was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Bai Bahadur S. P. Bajpai (Lucknow Division : Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. Deputy President: The question is that leave be granted to Mr. Bajpai to withdraw his amendment.

The amendment† was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala (Agra Division : Non-Muhammadan Rural): I want a ruling from the Chair whether it is necessary that leave should be given to withdraw an amendment before that amendment is moved.

Mr. N. M. Samarth: He could have moved it, but instead, he says 'I withdraw it'.

* 'Substitute for the words 'the Members of the Legislature' the words 'the non-official Members of the Indian Legislative Assembly.'

† 'Delete the words from 'other' in the third line to 'Departments''

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : Sir, I will only take a few minutes of your time in regard to the motion made by my friend Mr. Neogi. I heartily support it. I was going to say a few words against the amendment moved by Mr. Samarth, but I need not say anything about it now as that amendment has failed.

In regard to the motion, Sir, the chief objection which has been raised is that the work in the Secretariat will be increased. In this connection I would refer to a conversation I have had with a gentleman, Member of this Honourable House, who a few days ago happened to go to one of the Departments on business. He told me that he was there for about three-quarters of an hour, and during all this time two or three clerks were talking the whole time and smoking, and were doing absolutely not a bit of work during all the time that he was there in the office. Sir, I think there is a general impression amongst the Members of the Assembly that the establishments of the Government of India are far too many and that they ought to be curtailed.

In regard to the difficulty of getting gentlemen for the sub-committees to attend, I think, Sir, that is not an insuperable difficulty, if only small Committees were appointed, and if all those gentlemen were consulted beforehand, i.e., before fixing a meeting. The last difficulty that has been put forward is about secret documents—about their being such as could not safely be placed in the hands of the members of the Standing Committee. That again, Sir, I say is a very minor point. Rules could be framed as to what kind of work can be placed in their hands and what not. That I think will considerably remove the difficulty. My friend, Mr. Shahani, referred to the executive being irresponsible. But I think if Committees of this kind were associated with the work of the various Departments of the Government of India, much of the irresponsibility of the Assembly here would also be removed; because many of those gentlemen who are appointed to the Standing Committees will gain sufficient experience and information which they will communicate to their friends here, who will then talk here with a greater sense of responsibility than what some of us have been doing hitherto. In that respect it will do a considerable amount of good to my friend Mr. K. Ahmad, whose name was mentioned a little while ago.

There is also an impression abroad among some of the Members of the Assembly that there is considerable room for retrenchment in the expenditure of the Government of India. Now, in regard to that, if some of us are associated with the inner working of the Departments, we will be able to gather information which will throw light on whether retrenchment is possible or not. Therefore I say, Sir, that Committees of this kind would be very useful in giving us information about the inner working of the various Departments of the Government of India.

Sir Godfrey Fell (Army Secretary) : Sir, I had not intended to take part in this discussion, but I cannot pass over in silence the attack which has been made by the last speaker upon one of the most deserving classes of men in the Government of India: I refer to the clerical establishments of the Secretariats. I do not know what the authority is for the Honourable Member's statement; but I have personally been associated with the Government of India Secretariat for a number of years, and I have no hesitation in assuring this Assembly that there are very few servants of Government, in this or any other country, who are more devoted and who work longer hours and more arduously were imposed that of helping Advisory Committees to understand the nature of the difficult administrative problems which come up every day, of preparing papers for them, of furnishing them with information, and of giving them generally the training which I gather they require in the art of administration in our particular subjects, then I can only say that we should not be merely what my Honourable friend, Mr. Darcy Lindsay, has told us we are, soft-headed, but more likely candidates for the lunatic asylum.

The Honourable Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma (Revenue and Agriculture Member) : I had not intended to speak on this subject, but there seems to be a general impression that the Government of India have not given very earnest consideration to the recommendations of the Joint Committee with regard to associating the Members of the two Houses with the administration of the country so as to enable them to acquire a knowledge of the art of administration, in order that the sphere of Self-government may be enlarged at a very early date. I shall speak mainly with reference to the Departments under me, Land Revenue, Agriculture, Public Works, Posts and Telegraphs and Emigration. The matter seems to admit of a simple solution so far as Emigration is concerned, and there would not be any very great difficulty in accepting the recommendation of this House so far as the Emigration Branch is concerned. But that merely brings us again to the proposition enunciated by the Honourable the Home Member that it would be desirable that this House should concentrate its attention upon the association of advisory bodies with reference to particular subjects and not Departments.

If the problem be attacked from two standpoints, namely, as to what branches of the Departments of the Government of India would really be benefited by the association of the Members of the two Houses with regard to the handling of the subjects that come before them and with regard also to the point that has been raised by Mr. Spence, namely, how far it would be practicable to ease the burden of the Secretaries and give practical help in learning the art of administration to Members of this House, there is much to be said for it. But, so far as the Resolution goes, it is a little too wide I fear. If we analyse the various Departments, it might be found that certain departments do not require or would not be benefited very much by the association of advisory bodies therewith. I have already alluded to the Emigration Branch as being eminently fitted for this experiment being made. Then, take the Land Revenue Department. It deals mainly with provincial subjects. We deal in the branch relating to legislation with the question as to whether we are to give our assistance inasmuch as the final control is with us. I do not think that is a sphere in which an advisory committee would be of very great value, because it is primarily for the provinces to settle what legislation they wish to embark upon, and it is only in the discharge of a final responsibility that the Governor General or the Governor General in Council comes in. Therefore, in that Department there would not be much scope.

Then, with regard to Agriculture, Forests, and so on, these are either transferred subjects or reserved provincial subjects. There again, the problems that come up before our Department are such that I do not think it would benefit by any advice being given to it, nor do I think the Members of this House would receive very much training, not the training that they would desire. Reference has been made to the Posts and Telegraphs Department. Well, there, possibly I would be very much helped by creating a large body of influential members who could tell the employees of Government who are every day clamouring for greater emoluments, who could tell the country that the state of the finances does not permit of any large increases either in establishments or in pay. I think they could do a good bit of work for the Government as well as for the Assembly and perhaps the point can be examined as to whether it will be possible to procure for myself and for my Department that kind of assistance ; but, as regards such questions, namely, as to whether telegraph apparatus is to be purchased worth 20 lakhs or one crore, as to whether a line has to be placed between A and B stations or C and D stations, or as to whether there should be 1,000 clerks or 1,500 clerks employed in a particular range, all these are matters, I think, which are the work of every day administration and the Government of India rarely interfere with the discretion of the Director General.

It is only questions of policy that come up here largely, and occasionally during the last few months, or perhaps a year and a half, questions dealing entirely with finance with which the Finance Member has as much to do as the Member in charge : and I think the Finance Department and the Finance Committee have every opportunity of discussing that aspect of the problem, because I think the Finance Member has fortified himself with getting all his curtailments carried through the Finance Committee and turning down all our proposals for improvements in our staff, etc. I fear we feel helpless some times. Well then that disposes of posts and telegraphs. Then, again, take Public Works. Buildings and Roads are practically in the hands of Ministers. Irrigation is a purely technical question which had to be dealt with by the Secretary who is a technical expert in the Roads and Buildings Branch, or by the Inspector General of Irrigation, and consequently the Department I do not think would be very much benefited by the association of Honourable Members therewith, nor would the Honourable Members be benefited thereby. You may say I am speaking for Departments with which possibly many Honourable Members may not care very much to associate themselves, but there the fact is that the proposition advanced by Mr. Neogy requires modification and qualification before the Government of India can accept it.

Mr. S. C. Shahani : Very slight.

The Honourable Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma : May be very slight, but there it is. Well then, take again the food policy. Even in a matter like the food question, it will be impossible for the Revenue Department to place all the papers in the hands of Honourable Members because whether from a particular port 100,000 tons are to be exported or 200,000 tons is a question of vital importance and the matter cannot be allowed to go beyond a few individuals before a decision is taken. I am only illustrating what my Honourable colleague, Sir Malcolm Hailey, mentioned with reference to Finance matters. Therefore in almost every Department there are certain subjects which must be handled only by a few and I do not think that even the Members of this Assembly would ask to be associated with questions where secrecy is of the essence of the transaction. I take it that what the Honourable Members of this House want it to be associated with the administration of the country so that they may have a grip of the details thereof for the purpose of seeing whether unnecessary expenditure is being incurred, whether any improvements can be effected and in what directions, so that they can say they have done their duty by their country and by their Government.

would therefore suggest to the House the desirability of carrying this attack by asking the Government to give them a chance of associating advisory bodies with the Departments in respect of particular subjects. It would be easy for the Government to accept a position of that kind and to see whether further assistance cannot be given to the Members of this House by appointing one or more Secretaries or Under Secretaries in particular Departments rather than in all Departments. I therefore think that the House would do well not to be over-enthusiastic and not to think that the Government are in any way hostile to helping the Assembly in their desire to learn the work of administration but to see that the Government is not hampered unnecessarily and to modify their views in the direction I have indicated.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Sir, I propose to be very brief in my reply, because most of the points which have been raised on the official side of the House have already been met by the previous speakers. I do not think I need take the Honourable the Home Member seriously in the technical objection that he raised with regard to the Governor General being the authority in this matter and not the Governor General in Council. If I heard him aright, I believe in his last speech he said that it would be for the Government of India to decide—at least it should be left to the Government of India to decide as to which Departments should have these standing committees. Furthermore, when in March, 1921, I asked a question as to what was going to be done in regard to this proposal for the association of standing committees with Departments, the Standing Finance Committee was given as an instance of the action that the Government had taken in this matter. Well, Sir, if I may turn to the speech of the Honourable the Finance Member, when he moved the Resolution for the appointment of this Standing Finance Committee, I see that what he said is as follows :

'The proposal which I now put forward is not in pursuance of a rule, but is in pursuance of a decision at which we ourselves have arrived.'

I think, Sir, in this instance, the 'we' is the Government of India. The Honourable the Home Member has told us that the appointment of these committees will only increase the volume of work and will be a great burden on the already over-worked officials of the Government of India. Well, Sir, this is an argument for the abolition of all committees. I happen to be a member, a nominated member of a committee which is associated with a branch of the Honourable the Home Member's department, I mean the Publicity Advisory Committee. If I had known that I was only helping in increasing the burden of the already over-worked officials, I certainly for one would not have continued in it; and I do not know, Sir, if this is a broad hint to the non-official members to retire from that committee. That is one point. Then the Honourable the Home Member referred to France, America, Europe and other countries in which committees had been tried; and he attempted to show that they are either no good or they hamper the executive. I thought that the 'Canadian Fur-coat' theory had some weight with the officials; and in this case I propose to avail myself of that argument. France and America are quite different from India; their constitution is different, and the committees in those countries are not exactly advisory in their functions; they have important administrative work to do as well. The Honourable the Home Member referred to John Stuart Mill in favour of a statement that the administration should be carried on by 'proper and competent persons' and that these committees or legislative bodies should interfere as little as possible with them. Well, Sir, in those countries, particularly Great Britain, which John Stuart Mill had in mind, these 'proper and competent persons' are themselves representatives of the people, and their position in the Government depends upon the following they have in the House. Then, it has been said by the Honourable Mr. Sarma that the Resolution is too wide and that there are some Departments whom these standing committees won't suit.

Well, Sir, I take my stand upon the statement made by Lord Meston before the Joint Parliamentary Committee. He excepted only the Army and the Foreign and Political Departments, and I think if the Government had any objection to these standing committees being associated with other Departments, these objections should have been urged before the Joint Committee through Sir James Meston. It is too late in the day to raise those objections now.

Then, Sir, it has been said: 'Oh, you will have precious little to do with the transferred subjects as they are all dealt with by the provinces.' Well, Sir, may I inquire if the Government of India have got anything to do at all in those subjects? If they have, we shall be glad to know what those things are, and, if necessary, advise Government about them. Well, when we ask for these committees, it is said that the Government of India have got little to do in Departments corresponding to the provincial transferred subjects, but you do not seem to have made any corresponding reduction in the staff and expenditure on that account in those Departments.

Then, again, a good deal has been said with regard to procedure and so forth. Well, I may remind the Honourable Members that it was never the intention of the authorities, whom I have quoted in my favour, that all and every matter should be placed before the committee, and that is not at all my intention either. Take as wide a discretion as you like in this matter. Take us into your confidence in matters where you can, and where you ought to frame your own rules in any way that may suit you; I do not mind that.

Then, it has been said that one member is very often appointed to several committees. Well, Sir, I suggest that, if necessary, make it impossible for one member to seek election to more than one or two standing committees, and as regards committees appointed by Government, do not appoint more than one member to more than one or two committees.

There is one other point, Sir, to which I should like to refer, and that is the objections on constitutional grounds and the practical difficulties of administration. These objections apply with equal force in the case of reserved subjects in the Provincial Governments, and I may inform the House that elected committees have been appointed in Bengal to every Department of Government, and I am told that this is also the case in the Punjab, the United Provinces and the Central Provinces. In the case of Madras, the committees are not elected but appointed, but that does not make very great difference, I think. I therefore appeal to the House to accept my Resolution.

Mr. Deputy President: The question is that:

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that Standing Committees, elected by the Members of the Legislature, be associated with the different Departments of the Government of India other than the Army and the Foreign and Political Departments'.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Are Government Members to remain neutral, Sir, on this occasion?

Mr. Deputy President: That is a question for the Government to decide.

THE CIVIL MARRIAGE (AMENDMENT) BILL.*

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division : Non-Muhammadan) : May I refer, Sir, to your ruling on the last occasion with reference to a question put by Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy as to whether in referring a Bill to a Select Committee this Assembly stands committed to the principle of the Bill ?

I understood, Sir, that you said that the House stood committed to its principle. In this connection, I venture to draw your attention to the following facts. If we turn to the Standing Orders in the Manual of Business and Procedure, page 23, we find that, when a Bill is introduced, or on some subsequent occasion, the Member in charge may make one of the following motions (I leave out the irrelevant portions — 'that it be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon'—that is to say, the Bill may be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon, either upon its introduction or at any later stage. Now if we turn to clause 71, we have :

* Continued from the Proceedings of the Legislative Assembly Debates, Vol. II, page 1630.

'After publication in the Gazette of a Bill, as required by the Rules, the Select Committee to which the Bill has been referred shall make a report thereon. The Select Committee shall in their report state whether or not, in their judgment, the Bill has been so altered as to require re-publication.'

Then, clause 74 on page 27 :

'(1) After the presentation of the final report of the Select Committee on a Bill, the Member in charge may move (b) that the Bill as reported by the Select Committee be re-committed either (i) without limitation, or (ii) with respect to particular clauses or amendments'

And I leave out the irrelevant portion.

(c) that the Bill as reported by the Select Committee be re-circulated for the purpose of eliciting further opinion thereon. (2) If the Member in charge moves that the Bill be taken into consideration, any Member may move as an amendment that the Bill be re-committed or re-circulated for the purpose of obtaining further opinion thereon.'

It would thus appear that there are two distinct stages at which a Bill may be circulated to the public for eliciting their opinions thereon. The first stage is before it is committed to the Select Committee; and the second stage is reached after the Select Committee have submitted their report. Now, if the basic principle of circulating a Bill for eliciting public opinion thereon be to collect opinions with a view to guide this House to form its own opinion, then it follows, as a matter of logical sequence, that we cannot be committed to the principle of the Bill either before or after it is referred to the Select Committee. Otherwise it would be futile to refer the Bill for obtaining further opinions of the public if this House is adamant to all objections raised either as to its details or to its principle. I also venture to submit that a large number of Bills are introduced in this House and the Legislature recognises that in a great many of them there is no principle at all. For instance, take the Income-tax Bill or take the Court Fees Act, the Limitation Act, or what is known to lawyers as Bills for fiscal and processual purpose. They are, from all accounts, Bills which simply lay down a certain procedure, and, in the strict sense of the term, it cannot be said that they have any principle, in the sense that there is no underlying principle beyond that there is a certain procedure prescribed and that procedure must be followed in consonance with the terms and tenor of the enactment concerned. But even in such cases, which alter the substantive law, it will be sometimes difficult to ascertain where the principle ends and the procedure begins and what amount of amendment of detail would alter the principle, and the result may sometimes be that the procedure and the amendments have been so made and are so numerous as to entirely eat into the principle of the Bill, reminding perhaps Members of the House of the Irishman, who had his coat all in tatters with very little left of it except perhaps the ends of the sleeves and bits of the coat, and who, when asked what he was clad in, replied 'in fresh air.' I submit that cases may occur where the principle is overlaid with so many details that very little of the principle remains. In those cases it will be very difficult to see, after the Bill comes back to this House, as to what is the course which this House must adopt, and whether the rejection of the Bill is possible in view of the acceptance of the principle. I would submit that if it is once laid down as a rigid rule that after the committal of a Bill to the Select Committee, this House is irretrievably committed to its principle, it would be very difficult indeed to enunciate what 'principle' means and how far it has been affected by the amendments made in the Select Committee. I would, therefore, Sir, ask you to interpret this question in a somewhat liberal sense. The whole of the Standing Orders are now before a Sub-Committee and I draw the attention of that Sub-Committee to this question, and I have no doubt that they will bring in some sort of symmetry as regards the points I am raising. But, in the meantime, I wish to point out that the Members of this House who have spoken in opposition to the Bill are all agreed, so far as I have been able to understand them. I submit I have seen everyone of them, I have seen their leading protagonists, for instance, Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer and one or two others, and they are all agreed that a prima facie case has been made out for some alteration in the existing marriage law, and that, therefore, this Bill should go to the Select Committee. But they desire, and it is a very natural desire which I appreciate, that the Select Committee should be free to examine the Bill in all its details with a view to provide suitable safeguards for those who have objections to its terms, and who feel that they would be prejudicially affected thereby. Now, Sir, that, I submit, is a very natural desire. Those who go forward have no business to interfere with those who are left behind. Those who are left behind have an equal right to be left behind, and those who go forward have an equal right to go forward. One should not disturb the right of the other. That, I submit, is, in short, the attitude adopted by the opponents to the Bill, and I agree that so far as this Bill is concerned, there should be a round-table conference of the supporters of the Bill and of its opponents, and we should thrash out this long-pending question which has been agitating the Legislature and the public mind ever since the days of Henry Sumner Maine in 1848. If you, Sir, can make my passage clear to the Select Committee, it will obviate the necessity of any detailed reply, and it will also facilitate the work of the Select Committee and of those who have supported or opposed this Bill.

Mr. President : The Honourable Member wishes to know whether the application of the Standing Orders commits the Assembly to the principle of a measure when that measure is referred to a Select Committee. Reference to a Select Committee does, in fact, commit the Assembly to the principle of the measure, and I am not going to be drawn into a hair-splitting competition with the Honourable Member as to what 'principle' means in that sense. But, substantially, it matters very little whether you speak of the principle of the Bill, of its scope or of its substantial purpose. Difficulties may arise on individual measures as to the exact scope of a measure, but the Chair will deal with each of these as they arise.

A further point has been raised by the Honourable Member that, in so far as the Standing Orders permit of circulation for the purpose of eliciting opinion after the return of a Bill from the Select Committee, that must imply that the Assembly is open to reconsider its endorsement of the principle of the Bill. Now the procedure under which Bills are dealt with is that, in the first place, after introduction, a debate takes place in which the principle alone can be discussed, and in which the details of the Bill may only be brought in incidentally to illustrate the principle. The Bill is then either taken into consideration on the floor of the Assembly, or passes to the Select Committee. In that case, the Assembly, or the Select Committee proceeds to the examination, clause by clause, of the Bill in detail. Amendments, no doubt, may be made in a measure during that stage which will considerably alter the bearing of its principle. On that ground then, when the Bill returns from the Select Committee, it is open for the Chamber to say whether this is the form in which they intended the principle to apply; and, in order that they may be given the opportunity of a final judgment in that matter, the motion is put from the Chair that 'this Bill be now passed'. At that stage, if that motion is passed, then the Assembly stands finally committed to the principle of the Bill, unless indeed the other Chamber introduces further amendments which call for reconsideration.

The application of the procedure for 'the circulation of a Bill for eliciting opinion' after the Bill has been considered by a Select Committee is only provided so that, where changes of substance have been made by the Select Committee on which the Assembly has any reasonable doubt, they may desire to have further opinion upon it. But in that case, the motion that the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion is a subsidiary motion and it does not stand in the same position as a motion of that character made at an earlier stage of the Bill.

The Honourable Member's difficulty arises, I gather, out of the position in which his own measure stands at this moment. But he is a good enough lawyer to know that if I were to follow the advice that he has been giving me I should be violating the principle underlying the old legal adage that 'hard cases make bad law'.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind : Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, may I also inquire about one point? I suppose the motion that the Bill be referred to a Select Committee is going to be put to the vote. At the last meeting, Dr. Gour proposed some additional names of members for the Select Committee and I should like to know whether they are to be included in the Select Committee or whether we shall be given an opportunity of proposing the other amendments which stand in our names. Because it seems to me, from a Muhammadan point of view, that it is very important, if this Bill is going to a Select Committee, to have two gentlemen on it who will put before the Select Committee the view point of Muhammadan Law.

So far as the first list submitted by my Honourable friend, Dr. Gour, is concerned, it contains only a few names of gentlemen who are perhaps committed to the principle of the Bill and who have approved of it, but the subsequent list proposed several other names who are against the Bill. I suggested in my speech on the last occasion that the motion be split up into two parts, first of all whether the Bill should be referred to a Select Committee and if that is carried, then to propose the names of the members of the Select Committee.

Mr. President : The motion at present before the House is :

'That the Bill further to amend Act III of 1872 be referred to a Select Committee consisting of the Honourable Dr. T. B. Sapru, the Honourable Sir William Vincent, Mr. Percival, Mr. Cotelingam, Mr. Joshi, Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din and Dr. Gour.'

In the resumed debate Dr. Gour asked permission to add a certain number of names to that list, and those names have not yet been put from the Chair. If it is convenient to the Assembly that I should divide that motion, which I have just read, into two parts, I am willing to do so. Therefore the motion now before the House is :

‘That the Bill further to amend Act III of 1872 be referred to a Select Committee.’

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras : Nominated Non-Official) : Sir, I am sorry I was not here when the Bill was last discussed. I hope I may not be repeating what has been said by the previous speakers, but I think I should not give a silent vote on a question of this great importance. Sir, I think the objection to the legality of these marriages is unreasonable, and I hope to convince the House, from personal experiences, which I shall relate, that that attitude should not be adopted. Sir, last December I attended a marriage between two persons who were undoubtedly as good Hindus as anybody sitting in this House, and they had to go through the formality of declaring that they were no longer Hindus before contracting the marriage ; unfortunately I was one of those who had to sign the register of this marriage as a witness. I know that subsequently and before the marriage the couple have been living as any good Hindu can be expected to live. Now, the result of saying that as Hindus they cannot contract these mixed marriages is to drive these people to a subterfuge. Is it to the good of the country, is it to the good of the community that these people should be obliged to have recourse to this kind of subterfuge ? Sir, moreover, as has been pointed out by my friend, Dr. Gour, outside British India such marriages can be celebrated, and, why should we in British India, who profess to have advanced a great deal, denounce these marriages and drive these people to the inconvenience of going to some other place and getting themselves married there and afterwards coming and living in our midst ? Why should we allow that reproach to be made against us ? Now, Sir, there are three instances at least in Madras—well-known instances—and I believe my Madras friends will bear me out when I say that in these instances of mixed marriages, the contracting parties have been allowed to live amongst us. They are respectable people and they have been received in Hindu society as any other orthodox Hindu has been received. In one case, a non-Brahmin has married a Brahmin girl, in another case a Brahmin Barrister has married a Nayar girl, and in the third case a Madras Ayyangar Brahmin has married a Punjabee girl. All these are very respectable people. All these people are received and welcomed in society, and why should their issues be debarred from certain rights and be regarded as being beyond the pale of Hindu religion. Is it good that this thing should be done ? There are certain theories in Hinduism which have been hampering the progress of this country considerably, and, among these, is the principle of untouchability which has driven a large number of Hindus from the fold of Hinduism into other religions, namely, Muhammadanism and Christianity. Are we going to add another to the sins of Hinduism ? Are we going to drive some of the intelligentia of the country also from the fold of Hinduism, because we are intolerant and will not allow these marriages to be celebrated and considered as legal. The result would be that these people would be obliged to declare that they are not Hindus. I hope the House will ponder over this very deeply before they say these marriages are illegal ; it would be an unreasonable attitude to adopt. But I must point out that there are serious difficulties in the way, especially in regard to inheritance, and, unless these are got over, the Bill should not be allowed to proceed any further. I shall not occupy the time of the House for a very long time, but I must point out two or three instances in which a change should be made by the Mover of the Bill before the Bill is allowed to proceed to Select Committee.

Now, Sir, one point has been referred to by my Honourable friend, Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, and that is, succession as collateral of the issues of the mixed marriage to the estate of a deceased orthodox Hindu. Now, a deceased orthodox Hindu, who disapproves of these mixed marriages, is entitled to expect from persons who inherit his property that some sort of religious oblation should be offered to him. It is true that in all cases the test of inheritance is not the capacity to offer religious oblations, but religious oblations have played a large part and are playing a large part in our laws of inheritance. Under these circumstances, if an orthodox Hindu's property is allowed to be inherited by a collateral who is the issue of a mixed marriage, it would go very much against the grain of Hindu Law. Unless you are able to make a provision that the issue of these marriages shall not lay claim to the property of the orthodox Hindu, I cannot allow this Bill to go into Select Committee. Sir, that was my view when I happened to occupy a different position and when I was called upon to give my opinion upon the Bill of Mr. Basu. I then stated that, unless a Bill which is introduced into the Legislative Assembly makes it clear that the issue of mixed marriages shall have no claim to succeed as collateral to the estate of an orthodox Hindu, the Bill should not be passed into law. That is one matter which, if it can be cleared in the Select Committee, I for one shall be prepared to vote for its going to the Select Committee.

There are two more matters and they are of equal importance. One of them relates to the management of religious endowments. Here is a private donor who endows property either to his family deity or for the purpose of some festivals in a temple or for the income being given in charity at stated intervals. The question that I ask is this. Is it right that the issue of these mixed marriages should be allowed to manage the property, to conduct festivals in a Hindu temple, to conduct the family worship or to conduct the feeding or other charities which the founder had originally resolved upon.

It is only right and proper that the orthodox relations who follow in the footsteps of the persons who founded these charities, should be allowed to manage them solely. Therefore, unless you make it clear in this Bill that the issue of these marriages shall have absolutely no right to manage these religious endowments, the Bill should not be allowed to go to the Select Committee.

There is one other matter. I am not exhausting all the points, but am just mentioning those that come readily to my mind. This one was mentioned to me by Rao Bahadur Rangachariar, and that is, Sir, that where an orthodox father has an only son and that son contracts a mixed marriage, it should be permissible for the orthodox father to adopt a son to himself.

Now I will mention to the House in a minute why that should be so. Where an orthodox father has an only son and he marries a Sudra girl or, for that matter, a Muhammadan girl, it will be impossible for the funeral obsequies of that orthodox father, when he dies, to be performed by this son. It is impossible in the eye of the Hindu Law; it is impossible according to the Hindu religion that such a thing should be done. And yet the father would like to have his funeral service performed by somebody who can take the place of his son. According to Hindu Law, if he has a son living he cannot adopt another son; and what is to be done in those circumstances? Unless, therefore, we make provision that, where the son of an orthodox father has contracted a mixed marriage, it will be open to the father to make another adoption, this Bill should not be allowed to go any further. It is a very serious matter, and I think Hindu opinion will be completely upset if this provision is not made.

It may or may not be possible to make provision for all these things in Select Committee. I personally, having regard to the frame-work of the Bill, doubt if all these amendments which I have suggested can be brought in in Select Committee. If they can be brought in, I have no objection to the Bill going to Select Committee. I wish the Legal Member were here to advise us as to whether, having regard to the nature of the Bill, it is possible to bring in these various amendments which I have suggested. But if it is not possible, then I certainly think that the Bill should not go to the Select Committee. The proper procedure then would be, having regard to the opinion of a large number of Members of this House that some law should be enacted, for the Mover of this Bill to withdraw it, and to bring forward another Bill embodying the suggestions which I have just put forward. Unless that is done, I for one would be totally opposed to the Bill proceeding any further, because it is clear that these amendments which I have suggested are of vital character. It may be said: 'We will pass this Bill and bring in a Bill as regards succession'; but that is quite unthinkable, because, if you pass the Bill, the result of it will be that it will create vested rights. The right will become indefeasible and the Inheritance Bill may not be easy to bring in and pass very soon, and the result will be that there will be a great deal of confusion. Under these circumstances, unless the Mover of the Bill, or unless the Legal Member can assure us—and I want the assurance from the Legal Member—that, if the Bill goes to Select Committee, the suggestions which I have put forward can be embodied in it there, I am totally opposed to the Bill proceeding any further in its present shape.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Tirhut Division: Muhammadan): Sir, I wish to support the Bill on secular grounds and to oppose it on religious grounds—from the Muhammadan point of view, and I hope the learned Mover of the Bill, and specially my Muhammadan colleagues who may follow me will satisfy me and meet my objections. I am in sympathy with the Bill and am ready to give my support to it if my objections on religious grounds are met; otherwise not. In this connection, I cannot do better, so far as my support of the Bill goes, than to quote the learned Mover of the Bill himself. I may be just permitted to read it. In page 24 of this pamphlet on the Civil Marriage Bill he says:

'At present our lives are spent in water-tight compartments. We may have, it may be, our bosom friends amongst Muhammadans and Christians, but our friendships cannot develop into alliances. Each race preserves its exclusiveness by a fancied notion of its own superiority. It is jealous of the progress of another race. These inter-marrying races have for ages thrown India open to the attack of foreign powers. And India is as weak to-day as it ever was before in its history. The fact that British guns protect us from external aggression and internal strife is entirely to the presence of a superior power, the withdrawal of which may immediately bring into play those disintegrating forces which have made India a prey to foreign invasions. All lovers of our country must realize this essential source of its weakness. Nationality means unity. Unity is not possible without the recognition of equality. Equality implies the enjoyment of that elementary freedom in the matter of food, friendship and marital alliance which is the birth-right of every civilized being.'

So far as Indian nationality is concerned, and so far as the protection and safeguarding of individual liberty is concerned, I do support this Bill; but I have a religious objection too, and it is this. From a Muhammadan point of view I must say that the learned Mover's quotation of Mr. Ameer Ali is not convincing, not quite to the point and fails to meet my objection. I may, therefore, also be permitted to quote from page 26 of the pamphlet of the learned Mover of the Bill. It is this :

'The Muhammadan Law recognises the lawfulness of unions between Moslems and Non-Moslem females belonging to all moral creeds. . . . It is a mistake to suppose that under the Mussalman Law, a Moslem may marry a woman belonging to the revealed faiths only, by which are meant Islam, Christianity and Judaism. Marriages are allowed between Moslems and the free-thinkers . . . A Moslem may, therefore, lawfully intermarry with a woman belonging to the Brahma sect. Nor does there seem to be any reason why a marriage with a Hindu woman whose idolatry is merely nominal and who really believes in God, should be unlawful. The Moghal Emperors of India frequently intermarried with Rajput ladies, and the issue of such unions were regarded as legitimate, and often succeeded to the Imperial throne. What the Muhammadan Law requires is that any such union should not lead to the introduction of idolatry in a Muhammadan household.'

But this does not apply, in my opinion, to the case of non-Muhammadan husbands and Muhammadan wives; it only applies to Muhammadan husbands and non-Muhammadan wives. I quote, Sir, from a much higher authority, in support of my view, than that of Mr. Ameer Ali, viz., the revealed book which is the main-spring and fountain-head of Islamic Law, I mean the Holy Koran. So far as my knowledge of it goes, the question of marriage is dealt with in two places of the Holy Book, and here I am addressing my Muhammadan friends chiefly, viz., in Sura Baqar, Ruku 27, and in Sura Maeda, Ruku 1.

The English translation would be :

'Sura Baqar, Ruku 27: Mushrik women until they accept Iman, that is true faith, do not perform nicaah with them. Mushrik males, unless they accept Iman, do not give your women in marriage to them.'

The other is Sura Maeda, Ruku 1, of which the English translation would be :

'Lawful are the virtuous women to you who are Momina, namely Muslims, or are among those to whom revealed books have been given, before you.'

The commentators of the Koran have, by common consent, made marriages with only the Jewish and Christian women permissible. This now applies to the marrying of Muhammadan males with non-Muhammadan females, but it is quite silent on the marriages of non-Muslim males with Muslim females, and so far as this goes, as I understand it, there is no reference to it. I do not therefore, from the purely Muhammadan religious point of view, see how these marriages can be allowed as contemplated in the Bill. I, therefore, hope that my Muhammadan friends chiefly would satisfy me on this point, or the learned Mover himself.

Haji Wajihuddin (Cities of the United Provinces : Muhammadan Urban) :

Sir, I rise to oppose the Bill on grounds, which, as far as I know, no one else has yet expressed except my Honourable friend, the Member for Karachi, Mr. W. M. Hussanally. No doubt, Sir, the House will agree with me, that religious susceptibilities carry weight and are not to be trifled with. According to several enactments, it has been effected that, in matters relating to marriage, Muhammadan Law only shall be applied to Muhammadans. It was necessary to keep up the religious non-interference policy of the Government. Now, as any marriage of a Moslem male or female with a Hindu male or female as this Bill proposes to do, is a mere nullity in the eyes of Muhammadan Law, so it is a clear encroachment upon the religion of the Muhammadan community. How astounding was it, Sir, when in the very beginning of the discussion, the Honourable the Home Member announced that Government's attitude was of neutrality, and that the Members of the Executive Council will take no part in the discussion. It would have been far wiser on the part of Government, Sir, if they would have never allowed the introduction of the Bill and would have asked the Honourable Mover first to consult public opinion and to prepare them to receive this unwholesome food.

However, what is done can never be undone. A great responsibility is placed upon our shoulders, and we should proceed as prudently and cautiously as we can.

The main argument upon which the Honourable Member has based his Bill, are, as far as I perceive, two in number. Firstly, he says that, when a civil marriage law without reference to race, religion or social distinction exist in all European countries, then there is no reason why his country should be deprived of this liberty; and, secondly, the Bill, when enacted, will help in the formation and consolidation of a united Indian nationality. To sum up this reasoning, I may say that he intends to erect in India, after the fashion of the West, a huge structure of nationality over the ruins of its religious sanctity.

But I should assure the Honourable House that it is no better than Utopia. No community, whose morality and social status has fallen low in the eyes of its fellow brethren, can ever be politically strong.

As a matter of fact, India is not Europe. One is in the East while the other is in the West. Under the circumstances, may I ask how far it will be true to say that what is good for one must also prove equally beneficial to the other.

Moreover, I cannot conceive of any Indian, who has the least germs of patriotism left in his heart, that he will ever consider for a moment of sacrificing the sacred traditions of his own country for the sake of adopting foreign ideas and principles.

[Haji Wajihuddin.]

As for this unique idea of human progress and unity, I should point out to the Honourable House that it has not even proved successful in Europe. The ever increasing number of divorce cases in Europe and America, which are surely the result of such indiscriminate unions, give us a good lesson and we should fly with horror from the idea of importing such deplorable scenes into our own mother-land under the protection of law.

In my humble opinion, the sanctity of marriage is closely connected with that of religion. No other law has power enough to check the ever rising current of human lust. So, no sexual union can ever be given the sacred name of marriage, unless it has been performed with all the solemn ceremonies of a religion. One of the supporters of the Bill told us the other day, that marriage should be a matter of love and affection and not of compulsion. But I may be permitted to say that, if nothing but love and affection are to be taken into consideration, then there will be no necessity of anything like marriage. Those who are of this opinion must know that law regulates, checks and restrains all human sentiments within proper limits.

Now, again, coming to the religious point, I should express my deep regret that some of my co-religionists, and, especially, the old Honourable Member from Eastern Bengal, have expressed their opinion in favour of the Bill. I may be pardoned, if I candidly say that those who are in favour of this Bill, know very little about the religion they themselves profess. For the Muhammadan it is not a controversial point, but a plain principle laid down in the Holy Koran in such emphatic and clear language that it has left no scope for dispute. It says (translated into English):

'Marry not women who are idolators until they believe; verily a maid servant who believeth is better than an idolator, though she pleases you more; and give not women who believe in marriage to idolators until they believe; for verily a servant who believes is better than an idolator though he pleases you more.'

Now I should like to answer the objection raised in this House by citing historical examples of Akbar and other Mughal Princes who often married Hindu and Rajput ladies. In this connection I consider it sufficient to quote the Honourable Syed Ali Imam, who said in his speech dated 7th March, 1912, as published in the Government of India Gazette, 1912, Part IV, page 87:

'That, in these instances, it was found necessary before the imperiousness of Muhammadan Law for these ladies to make a formal profession of Islam before the marriage took place.'

I shall not tire the Honourable House any longer and will conclude my remarks by observing that the Muhammadan community is not in the least prepared to accept any such enactment, which is an open attack upon their religion, and I, this very day, warn this House, warn the Government, warn India, nay the whole world, that if the Bill is ever enacted, it will surely be attended by serious consequences of the most evil description.

With these few words I strongly oppose the Bill.

Rana Umanath Bakhsh Singh (United Provinces : Nominated Non-Official) : Sir, I rise to oppose Dr. Gour's Resolution for a Select Committee to consider his Bill. I oppose it on my behalf and on behalf of the community to which I have the honour to belong. The Resolution has already been strongly opposed by some of the Honourable Members of this House and although it does not require any further opposition, still I deem it my supreme duty to give expression to my feelings. As a Hindu and a believer in the Hindu Shastras, I think I can safely give vent to the feelings of the Hindus on this point. No Hindu who believes in his Shastras, can like the proposal of Dr. Gour. Much has been talked about the definition of a Hindu. From my point of view, that Hindu is not a Hindu who does not believe in the Varuashram Dharam. I do not know what Mussalmans, Jains, and other communities think upon this Bill. They are the fit persons to represent their social and religious feelings. But, so far as I have heard, I think that the other communities also do not like it. The question raised now by Dr. Gour was raised on previous occasions also, and on every occasion it evoked a strong protest throughout the country. The reasons put forth by the Honourable Mover are not cogent. He gives the example of the European countries and says that, because there is no restriction of race, religion, or social distinction in marriage in the European countries, therefore there should be no restriction of race, religion, or social distinction in this country. Also I think he is not justified in this. Let Dr. Gour understand that the manners and customs of the European countries are quite different from those of India. So the example of European countries is not applicable to this country. In European countries there is no such diversity of religious and social manners and customs as in India. Here, there are several religions and several castes, namely, Hindus, Muhammadans, Christians, Parsis, etc. Even amongst the Hindus there are several castes and sub-castes, and each caste has got a different tradition and history of its growth. The difference between the manners and customs of one caste and the other is very wide. I should like to draw the attention of the House to one most important point, namely, that marriage in our country is regarded not as a contract, but as a religious ceremony that is sanskar. A Hindu marriage, once performed, cannot be cancelled for life. A Hindu cannot religiously marry with a member of any other caste. If he does so, he transgresses the law of the Shastras, and his children will not be able to perform religious rites for their ancestors. The marriage of a Hindu is a sacred duty and not an enjoyment. It is incumbent on a Hindu to perform the Shradh of his ancestors and he is in duty bound to leave behind a legitimate issue, who will continue the proper line and will perform the religious rites. I am particularly speaking on behalf of the Hindus and am submitting before the House what the feelings of the Hindu community are on this question. In my opinion, Dr. Gour's Bill will give a strong blow to the most vital principle of Hindu society and so it can never be supported by responsible Hindus.

I submit, Sir, that this Assembly is not entitled to decide any such question or to recommend any such measure which will affect the social and religious principles of a society, and thereby will wound the feelings of the members of that society. In my opinion, the things which vitally concern society and religion should be entirely left to the social and religious organisations.

I hope the Government will fully realise the feelings of the vast population of this country on a question like this and will never give the approval to the Bill.

[Rana Umanath Bakhsh Singh.]

When the matter of the Bill is undesirable from 'the social and religious point of view, then the proposal for a Select Committee is quite unnecessary.

I hope Dr. Gour will realise the feelings of the people of India on this question and will not press the matter any further.

With these few remarks, Sir, I beg to oppose the Resolution of Dr. Gour.

Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal (Jullundur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, from Act III of 1872 it appears that all the well-known religions of the world, the Christian, the Jewish, the Hindu, the Muhammadan, the Parsi, the Buddhist, the Sikh and the Jain religions, did already prescribe certain rules and forms of marriages for persons belonging to those religions. The question seems to have arisen in 1872 to prescribe a special form and rules for the marriage of persons who profess not to belong to any of these religions. So far as Hindus are concerned, the marriage is not only a civil contract but it is a religious sacrament and it prescribes certain rules which are based on their religion. It says that the marriage must be restricted to the varna. There are four varnas, Brahmin, Kshatriya, Vaish and the Sudra, and that a Brahmin must be married to a Brahmin woman.
A Kshatriya man to be married to a Kshatriya woman, a Vaishya man to be married to a Vaishya woman, and a Sudra man to be married to a Sudra woman.

Dr. H. S. Gour: Where do you find it? Not in the Smritis.

Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal: If you want me to quote the words, here they are:

'Udbahet devijo bharyyam savarna lakshanavitam.'

—Manu, Chapter III, Sloka 4.

There are 4 varnas, Brahmin, Kshatriya, Vaishya and Sudra.

Dr. H. S. Gour: That is a forgery.

Rai Bahadur Bakshi Sohan Lal: Not forged by me or by any Member of the Assembly since this Bill was introduced. The Hindus are following their so-called forgery as their religious precept.

Then Manusmriti prescribes certain degrees of prohibited consanguinity.
It says:

Asapinda cha ya maturasagotracha ya pitooh; sa prasasta devijatinam darakarmani maithune.'

This means that the girl must not belong to the gotra of the man, and she must not belong to the offspring within seventh degree on 3 P.M. the side of the mother of the man. That is, within the seventh degree of generation on the mother's side and the whole gotra of the father's side. So it appears that the Hindu religion restricts marriage within the varna and outside the gotra or caste. The object of this Bill is not only to extend the marriage to all the varnas of the Hindus but its object is to set aside the rules and forms of marriages of all those religions, Jewish, Buddhist, Hindu, Muhammadan, Parsi, Sikh, Christian, Jain, etc., mentioned in Act III of 1872 as not governed by the Act and to allow inter-marriages between men and women of all religions without regard to their religious precepts. That is, those who do or do not profess any religion will be allowed to marry under Act III of 1872 according to the present Bill which has been placed before this Assembly. But my friends, belonging to the Muhammadan religion, have explained in their speeches that even their religion does not allow a person to be married to one of another religion. A good deal of difficulty will arise if a Hindu is allowed to marry a woman who does not belong to the Hindu religion. According to the Hindu religion and Hindu Law, the wife is enjoined to partake with her husband in all Hindu religious functions, ceremonies and observances. How will a Mussalman or Christian wife join her husband in such observances consistently with her own religion? On marriage, the bride becomes a member of her husband's joint Hindu family. Will not this cause a disruption of the family, if, in a large family, one of the members attempts to introduce a woman of another religion as his wife? How can a Mussalman or Christian woman live comfortably in the house of a Hindu husband consistently with the precepts of Hindu religion which provides that a person who does not believe in the Vedas and Shastras will be turned out (Manusmriti II).

The Bill is not only to cause interference with the Hindu religion but also with other religions which do not allow a marriage with a person belonging to a different religion. A Hindu house will never be a comfortable place for a Muhammadan wife if she has to perform her namaz five times daily, not to speak of occasional observances such as the keeping of rozas during the whole month of Ramzan, and mourning during the Muharram month. Immense difficulties in maintaining peace and harmony in married life will be created by the Bill if passed into law, not only during the life time of the married couple but also after the death of one or the other. For instance, the question will arise whether the body of a deceased Muhammadan woman married to a Hindu is to be cremated according to the Hindu Shastras or buried according to Muhammadan religious rites. If a Hindu husband dies leaving a Muhammadan widow, without any sons, the question will arise whether the woman is to bury the body of her husband according to Muhammadan rites or is to cremate the body according to the Hindu Shastras. Disputes are expected to arise at every step and such immense difficulties and troubles will be created by this Bill if passed into law which I do not think can easily be solved. I recommend to the Assembly that this Bill should not be sent to any Select Committee for consideration and that it should be rejected at this stage.

Bhai Man Singh (East Punjab : Sikh) : Sir, I need not repeat the legal difficulties which stand in the way if the Bill is passed into an Act. Much abler lawyers than myself have described them. I can only say that a good many of our civil rights are governed by the personal laws of the Hindus and Muhammadans. They are Orientals, and these personal laws are the outcome of certain ideas and conceptions of life. With the advent of western education we have imbibed certain foreign ideas of freedom. They may have their own value. I have no dispute with them at present. But what is here-being attempted is to graft western ideas on our oriental personal laws. The Hindu Shastric lawyers made certain rules of inheritance, under which certain relations can inherit to a very great distance. Those laws exist, so far as inheritance is concerned, but we are now trying to graft quite a new system of marriage over them. For my part I think it a strange procedure. Either we should give up our personal laws and have quite new statutory laws in their place, or else, if we want to remain within the fold of Hinduism and enjoy all the rights under the Hindu Law, we must at the same time be bound by certain limitations as regards the marriage law of the Hindus. The same applies to Muhammadans. I am not going to enter into the basic principles involved in inter-marriage, but as a Sikh I have a word to say. Dr. Gour in his pamphlet on the Civil Marriage Bill has enumerated certain classes who, he says, would welcome the Bill. At page 20 of his pamphlet, Dr. Gour says :

'But apart from this, there is a definite class of persons who would welcome the Bill. Let me enumerate them.'

And number 3 of that list are the Sikhs. Well, as a Sikh, knowing all the different shades of opinion that the Sikhs hold, whatever may be said on different subjects among the different classes of the Sikhs, I could say, without fear of contradiction, that the Sikh religion does not allow the marriage of a Sikh with a Muhammadan woman. There are four cardinal offences, by committing which a Sikh does not remain a Sikh, and one of them is having intercourse with a Muhammadan woman, and, up till now, no sort of school has cropped up amongst the Sikhs which has allowed any marriage with a Muhammadan woman, so long as she remains a Muhammadan woman. Of course, when she is converted, it is a different matter. The other question is that the Sikh religion does allow intermarriage between the castes, and, so far as our demands are concerned, we could say that we do not want any change in our marriage law. Inter-caste marriage is already allowed amongst us by custom and every marriage which is performed according to the Marriage Act is legal. We are satisfied as far as that is concerned. Taking the religious aspect of the Bill, there are, in every religion, some questions of primary importance and some questions of secondary importance. I am not very well versed in the Hindu Shāstras or in the Muhammadan sacred books, but my Muhammadan friends have definitely quoted that they cannot marry an idolatrous wife. If Muhammadan law definitely prohibits any such marriage, I should say it is the primary thing. I was told by my Muhammadan friend (if I mistake not, the Honourable Member from Sind, Mr. Hussanally, outside the House of course) that there are different other customs which prohibit intermarriages between Muhammadans themselves of certain castes, between Shīahs and Sunnis. But he told me that these differences are not based on the Holy Koran itself. So if a sect crops up and says that they do not want restrictions, that would be a different thing. But I cannot understand this. A man says that he follows such and such a religion. The basic principle of that religion definitely is that, by committing such and such act, he does not remain within the fold of that religion. I cannot see how we can say here that a Sikh marrying a Muhammadan girl would remain a Sikh and not go out of the Sikh fold, because we have got certain teachers. If they are free thinkers, they are quite welcome to be free thinkers. Nobody is forced to be within a fold, but he has no business to enforce his ideas on the whole community. There could be another phase of it. In one and the same religion, certain views may crop up and a certain people might say that certain things are not according to the religion, but other Sikhs might say they are. For example, a Sikh might say that intermarriages are allowed between different castes. There is a vast body of opinion about the interpretation of certain scripts. We would say that, if there is a vast body of opinion, let that sect have its own course. That is not the case here. From my experience in the Punjab I could say that there is absolutely no demand for intermarriages between a man and a woman of different religions. This shows that no strong body has cropped up which demands that, according to their own religion, there is no prohibition of that sort. There has cropped up a certain class of free thinkers who say: 'Let there be these prohibitions: We do not care for them'. If I do not care for that, I must be bold enough to say so. What is the use of my being afraid of saying all that and still trying to be a free thinker, and not be bold enough to say that I am not a Sikh. If I want to tread down certain principles of Hinduism I must be bold enough to say so. Now I have to submit another idea of what its effect would be on society. I have to give only one instance about my own province. In my own district especially, and in the Punjab generally, there are many Sardars who have been having wrong relations with Mirasi women, who belong to a low Muhammadan caste. These women generally sing and act as menials to the families of these Sardars and have a right of going to their houses. All these Sardars have been going wrong with them and most of them, if they were allowed, would marry these women. Surely society would not tolerate those women who are of very low character? If such marriages were allowed, they would have the effect of spoiling the whole society. This is the sentiment in my province, and, of course, if you allow this, the result would be that mostly women of bad character would have an influence over bigger people, and that would spoil society, and you would be legalising a scandal rather than be giving liberty to the people. In some cases I do say there is some demand by some persons, but let them be bold enough to say that they are not Hindus and Muhammadans.

In the end I have to submit one thing. According to the ruling of the Chair we are committed to the principle of the Bill. It is not quite clear to me, however, what we can say is the principle of the Bill. The principle of the Bill should be to liberalise the system of marriage and make the scope wider. If that is the principle of the Bill, then, I think, in the Select Committee, we could go and discuss whether we are to allow intermarriages between different religions or between different castes. If the principle of the Bill is that we are to allow intermarriages between different religions, that would be quite a different thing, and we cannot go and discuss in the Select Committee whether there should be intermarriages between different castes and different religions or not. In the one case, I do say, there is some demand in all the communities and I would allow the Bill to go to the Select Committee. In the other case, I know there is not so much demand. I would therefore request you, Sir, to clear up the point as to what would be the principle of the Bill in this respect and whether we would stand committed to the principle of intermarriage between different castes and different religions or simply to the principle of liberalising the sphere of marriage. Whatever may come out of the Select Committee I cannot say.

Mr. H. Sharp (Education Secretary): Sir, I see that the number of those anxious to catch the Honourable the President's eye is diminishing and I see that the Honourable the Mover is beginning to exhibit anxiety to reply. I therefore take this opportunity of saying, on behalf of Government, that Government remain in this matter absolutely neutral. I am aware that this has already been said by the Honourable the Home Member, but he has asked me to repeat it. I know that what I say will not be altogether pleasing to Haji Waji-ud-din, who is not here, but I nevertheless say it. Of course, if there are official Members here who desire to vote, it is quite open to them to vote as their reason or conscience may dictate, but the Government remain neutral.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar: Before Dr. Gour replies, I should like to have your ruling, Sir, upon the point which I raised. If the matter goes before the Select Committee, will it be permissible to consider the question that the man who has an only son should be allowed to adopt, and also whether it will be possible to consider the other questions raised by me, namely, that the issue of mixed marriages should not be allowed to take any share in the management of endowed properties and that they should have no right of collateral succession.

Unless those matters can be gone into in Select Committee, as I said before, I, for one, will not be able to vote for the Bill. Therefore I want your ruling, Sir, as to whether, when the matter goes to Select Committee, the amendments which I have put forward can be embodied in the Bill.

Dr. H. S. Gour: With reference to what has fallen from the last speaker, may I point out to you, Sir, that it would not be right to fetter the discretion of the Select Committee?

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas (Sind: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I want to say with reference to the remarks which have fallen from Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar both this time and the previous time, that he appealed to the Honourable the Law Member of the Government to enlighten him as to the permissibility of these amendments which he proposes; but I think he should be able to enlighten us, he himself being an ex-Judge, as to what are his views and whether these amendments could properly be made in Select Committee or not.

Mr. President: I cannot give a ruling until I see the amendments. The whole purport of an amendment lies in the manner in which it is drafted; and I am not even prepared to give an opinion on the general subject, as that bears not so much on the rules and Standing Orders as upon the underlying principles of Hinduism, of which the Honourable Member is a better Judge than myself.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): May I rise to a point of order, Sir? As I have supported the principle of the Bill, I should like to mention that this Bill makes no provision against polygamy.

Mr. President : Order, order. The Honourable Member wished to put a point of order. He is not entitled to explain his position under the guise of rising to a point of order.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri : Sir, I was going to say that when I gave my support to this Bill, I supported the principle, not the details of it. But now it has occurred to me that this Bill makes no provision against polygamy. May I ask Dr. Gour if it does ?

Dr. H. S. Gour : It does, Mr. Chaudhuri,—Section 2, clause 1 of the principal Bill. You are asking the Chair what you should have asked the Act itself.

Sir, I have listened with very great interest to the debate on my Marriage Bill. I must congratulate my friend, Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, and my friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, for throwing a real light on this most difficult question. I consider their attitude both natural and reasonable. They demand, and rightly demand, that, while the reformers have the right to marry under the Civil Law, they must not in any way trench upon the rights of the orthodox ; and Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar has spoken in a similar strain. Now, Sir, I wish to give my friends of the orthodox party a clear undertaking that I shall refer the following questions to the Select Committee in connection with my Bill :

- (1) the question of collateral succession ;
- (2) the question of adoption ;
- (3) the right of residence in the family dwelling-house ; and
- (4) the question relating to religious endowments.

I submit, Sir, that these are questions which do not underlie the principle of the Bill, but are necessary safeguards intended for the protection of those who still wish to marry under the orthodox law.

And as regards my Muhammadan friends, I can assure them that if after the report of the Select Committee the bulk of the Muhammadan opinion in the country is hostile to inter-marriages between Muhammadans and non-Muhammadans, I am prepared to cut out the term ' Muhammadan ' from that Bill and leave the Muhammadans to their fate.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : May I inquire how many Muhammadan opinions you have received upon the Bill ?

Dr. H. S. Gour : My friend inquires—and this will be the first and last interruption I shall answer.

Sir Jamssetjee Jejeebhoy (Bombay City : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : Will the Honourable Member give the same undertaking for Parsis ?

Dr. H. S. Gour : And similar safeguards with reference to Parsis

Mr. S. C. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars : Landholders) : And to Sikhs ?

Dr. H. S. Gour : To all castes and communities. As regards the question asked by Mr. Hussanally, as to how many Muhammadan opinions I have gathered, I have gathered the opinions not of individual Muhammadans, but of Muhammadan provinces, and I can assure the learned interrupter that if he will turn to that premier Native State of India, the dominion of His Exalted Highness the Nizam of Hyderabad, he will find Hindu-Muhammadan marriages customary and in vogue. That is in consonance with Islamic Law (Mr. Hussanally : No.)

Mr. President : I must call upon the Honourable Member from Sind to desist from these interruptions.

Dr. H. S. Gour : After that most unnecessary interruption I must resume my reply. You will find that, leaving out rational objectors, reasonable objectors, like my friend, Mr. Rangachariar, Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, Mr. Shahani, Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy and others, who are willing that this Bill should be sent to the Select Committee upon the undertakings which I have given, there remain a very few stern and unbending religious Tories and they tell us that this is a measure which trenches upon the fundamental principles of their religious beliefs.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : I rise to a point of order; is my Honourable friend entitled to call us Tories ?

Mr. President : Quite a number of people in the world think it an honourable title.

Dr. H. S. Gour : I cannot reply to individuals, Sir, but I have collected their arguments and summarised them. I shall first deal with the Hindu objections, then with the Muhammadan objections, and lastly with the objections of my esteemed Sikh friend. I am surprised that in this 20th century a member of my own profession should rise up from his place and cite Manu in support of his authority and place a ban on inter-marriages. If he had read Manusmriti in the original, or any other commentaries of that great law-giver, he would have found that inter-caste marriages were not only customary but common, and not only inter-marriages but inter-racial marriages were common. Authorities after authorities can be cited in support of my contention, and the cumulative testimony of the authorities of the last thousand years contradicts my friend's statement. I do not stand alone in holding this view. That eminent Judge, Mr. Justice Sadashiva Aiyer, in his long, learned and luminous note printed at page 10 of the Paper No. I circulated to the Members, which I presume my friend has overlooked, has pointed out that the prohibition against inter-caste marriages was brought about by forging two verses in the Manusmriti and the commentaries, and that is the view also of that eminent Sanskritist and scholar, Monier Williams. If he will do me the honour of reading the Introduction to my Hindu Code, he will find a collection of authorities showing how after the revival of Hinduism in the 15th and 16th centuries, wholesale forgeries of our Shastrie books were perpetrated for an ulterior purpose, to legalise the then growing custom against inter-caste and inter-racial marriages. As a student of history my friend will see and know that the reason is obvious.

Then, Sir, it has been said that our religion is in danger. We have heard this cry for the last hundred years. (Laughter.) At any rate, we have heard it said so. In 1868 when the Law Member, that distinguished lawyer, Sir Henry Sumner Maine introduced his Bill for the establishment of civil marriages in this country, a large volume of opinion was collected from the various parts of the country, and it was pointed out that civil marriages would deal a death-blow to Hindu society. And what was the reply of that eminent Jurist? The reply was that, if Hinduism has received any death-blow from any statute law, it has been already given by the Lex Loci Act, and that is the view which Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case cited by my friend, Mr. J. Chaudhuri, have enunciated at page 365, Volume 33 of the Indian Law Reports, Allahabad. Referring to the two enactments known as the Lex Loci Acts, Their Lordships say :

'The intention of both enactments is perfectly clear. By declaring that the Hindu or Muhammadan Law shall not be permitted to deprive any party, not belonging to either of those persuasions, of a right to property or that the law or usage which inflicts forfeiture of rights or property by reason of any person renouncing his or her religion shall not be enforced, the legislature virtually set aside the provisions of Hindu Law which penalise the renunciation of religion or exclusion from caste.'

That is my answer to those who speak and talk about an attack upon their religion. In 1872, Sir, when this Bill was under discussion, Sir James Stephen, another distinguished lawyer, pointed out that it was the duty of the Government to provide a form of marriage to a definite class of people who objected to marry under any particular personal law. The Brahmos, who had moved previously His Majesty's Indian Government to provide them with a civil marriage law, were given the law known as Act III of 1872, and in the discussions in Council, Sir James Stephen pointed out that besides reformers like the Brahmos, there might arise other dissenting sects, offshoots of Hinduism or of other religious creeds, who may hereafter claim similar rights and privileges, to whom a similar law may be necessary; and, therefore, what was designated originally as the Brahmo Marriage Act was afterwards converted and altered into the Civil Marriage Act. That was the intention of Act III of 1872, viz., to provide a form of marriage for all persons who dissented from the creed of Hinduism or Islam or orthodox Christianity, for whom, however, a separate Act had already been provided. Now, Sir, this was the state of law and Sir James Stephen did not omit to consider that when he put down in the Act the exceptional clause excluding persons who professed the Hindu, Muhammadan, and the rest of the religions, he thought that Brahmos and Sikhs, the Arya Samajists and the Prarthana Samajists and other reformant classes would necessarily be classed as non-Hindus. Therefore, he thought that he had sufficiently provided for the contingency which the growth of education and the contact with Western ideas would produce in this country. But Their Lordships of the Privy Council, in the judgment which I have cited in the Statement of Objects and Reasons appended to my Bill (31 Calcutta, page 11), on a review of the authorities, came to the conclusion that the term 'Hindu' did not exclude either Brahmos or Sikhs or other dissenting members of that religion. That brought the situation to a crisis. Even those people for whom this Bill was originally and primarily designed could not conscientiously marry, because they could not subscribe to the declaration, in the face of the decision of the Privy Council, that they did not profess the Hindu religion, when the Privy Council said that they did not cease to be Hindus by the mere fact that they were Hindu reformers.

[Dr. H. S. Gour.]

The result has been that a cloud,—a serious cloud—has been thrown upon the legality of marriages that have been contracted under the original Act III of 1872. My learned and esteemed friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, has pointed out the extreme folly of asking Hindu reformers either to marry under the orthodox law or not to marry at all. He might have gone further and commented upon the greater folly of the Indian Government which comes and says that, if you want to get married, you must have a religion, and, if you have no religion, you shall not have a wife. I am surprised, Sir, that any civilised Government should throw the members of the reforming community into the arms of their orthodox friends. (Hear, hear.) I am surprised that the Indian Government Benches should be so desolate (Laughter) on this occasion when I am waging a war upon what I consider to be the vested rights of a class and upholding the dignity of human freedom of contract. I say that it was the bounden duty of the Indian Government to provide for a general marriage law applicable to those who wished to marry thereunder, and I am here doing a duty which, I submit, lay upon the Government to discharge. I am surprised, Sir, that in spite of the instructions which we received the other day from the Leader of the House and repeated to-day by the Honourable Mr. Sharp, even the official Members who are not Members of the Executive Council are conspicuous by their absence. (Hear, hear.) (An Honourable Member: Not all.) But let that pass. I stand in support of my Bill upon the strength, upon the righteousness of my own cause and I do not want any support of those who grudgingly gave it in 1873 and are to-day prepared to throw us to the wolves of the orthodox party. (Laughter.) Now, Sir, I think I have done with the members of my own community. I have made peace with them and I am perfectly certain that every one of my friends belonging to the Hindu religion, belonging to the Hindu community, to use the expression which the Honourable Mr. Rangachariar would prefer, would rally to my support and transmit this Bill to the Select Committee.

I now appeal to my sympathetic opponents of the Muhammadan persuasion. Do you know that I am trying to knock off a few bars from your prison house? Do you know that in introducing this Bill and including you within its provisions I am liberating you from a bondage (Laughter) and a disability from which you have suffered from ages past? Do you know, Sir, that I am fighting the battle of freedom and trying to emancipate you? You may object to-day but your children and your children's children will bless me and my name for having fought in the teeth of the opposition of those orthodox people who had not a long vision and did not see what will be apparent to a child of future years. You all want Swaraj. Can you have, my friends, Swaraj in a divided house. You say, you want the settlement of this question and the emancipation not only of this country but of the whole world. Have you, by your own conduct, and by your own example, qualified yourself to be the redeemer of the world? It has been said, by that very acute writer who was at the bottom of the reforms which have resulted in the creation of these expanded Councils (I mean Mr. Lionel Curtis) in his 'Letters to the People of India':

'In India, the need for social reform largely arises from custom, which has been crystallised by decisions in the courts under the rigid legal system which we ourselves introduced from the West. . . . In England I have often heard South Africa branded as the one country beneath the British flag in which marriage between two sections of British subjects was forbidden. What was my surprise, then, on coming to India, to find that, under a law of that country, no legal marriage between members of two different castes could be solemnised.'

Then a note of ejaculation or exclamation follows. I do not know what would have been his surprise if he had known that, even amongst persons of the same caste, there are as many as five thousand sub-castes. Only yesterday (the Honourable Mr. Bajpai will bear me out), one member of the orthodox community assured me that his was a decadent community. Some ten years ago, they numbered about 15 lakhs. Now they number only 7 lakhs and have no less than 5,000 sub-castes and these sub-castes do not intermarry. The result then is that marriage is confined to half a dozen families and such is the scramble for boys that people are known to offer half their fortune to secure eligible husbands for their daughters.

Now you are the brothers and fathers of your female relations. You have daughters, you have sisters. Do you not deplore the fate of your womenfolk who are reduced to that condition? Do you not know that in Bengal, since the days of Snehalata, girls have committed immolation because they were afraid they were becoming marriageable, which meant utter ruin to their fathers? Do you not pity, I ask the poor parents in Bengal, who for the sake of an eligible match for their daughters, have not only to spend all that they have but to strain their credit to the utmost, and that they and their descendants die in poverty and want because they say they were condemned to possess a daughter? Are you prepared to support such an institution? Have you no pity within your human bosom to uplift the people who suffer from these cruel wrongs? You are sitting here not merely as the representatives of small local constituencies which you represent. You are sitting here to represent the spirit of India; and it is crying aloud, crying for vengeance against these old obnoxious customs. Rise above these petty considerations. Rise above these petty jealousies. Discard your privileges, and act like men, I have been told, Sir, by my Muhammadan friends that, under Islamic Law, inter-marriages are permissible and are permitted between Muhammadans and Christians and Jews, but there can be no inter-marriage between Hindus and Muhammadans. I ask my Muhammadan friends what does that imply? If marriages are permitted between Muhammadans and Christians and Jews, where is the marriage law to solemnise these marriages? If and because there is no marriage law in this country, my Bill, if passed into law, will enable you to contract marriages permissible under your sacred Koran. We have been told, and we have been told more than once, and, I am surprised, by no less a person than Rao Bahadur Rangachariar, that, if these marriages are allowed, 'I do not like it'. Did my friend think that the moment this Bill becomes law, I shall lay him by the heels, drag him to the registrar's office (Laughter), assign to him a wife and drive both of them in a carriage and pair, force them to forsake their family gods, to leave their family dwellings and to stop all the solemn ceremonies of the orthodox creed? If my friend is under that impression, I stand up to disillusion him. He need not marry again, unless he likes: and I therefore say that all the lurid picture which he has presented to this House of marriages contracted under this pernicious and obnoxious law which I have the honour to ask this House to send to the Select Committee, is as good as never passed because it is purely optional and permissible. It places a new weapon in your armoury,

[Dr. H. S. Gour.]

It does not call upon you to use it unless you like. It gives you a new right but you need not exercise it. This, I submit, is my objection to my friend who gives me abundance of individual sympathy but has objections on religious grounds. So long as those objections remain insurmountable, I may assure my Honourable friend that he is at liberty to let this Act alone. It is entirely in his discretion whether he uses it or not; and that is my reply to the opposition created by the vivid imagination of some of my friends who sit behind me. They say: 'you present this Bill and ask this House to send it to the Select Committee. How can it be done? What will happen? This has never been done before. How can we do it now?' My friends, I deplore the mind from which these words come. I feel that they betoken a spirit of irrational conservatism that lags behind but is afraid to go forward or even to look forward. I say to you, my brethren, that, if you desire any progress in this country, it can never come unless you unite, and union is impossible so long as you remain as you are and continue established in an archaic form of society. India in the past was an isolated country; it is now exposed to international competition and you will not be permitted to live in your own land and will be supplanted by those who have the right to live here, because they are better disciplined, more civilized, more catholic in thought and more cosmopolitan in deeds. The ideas of the past must be forgotten. I have told you, my friends, and I repeat once more that if you value political progress, if you think that Swaraj is close—I myself think it is—it is necessary that, in your Pilgrim's Progress to the Promised Land, you travel united in thought and action. If class fights against class, caste against caste and race against race, that time, of which you dream, of seeing a United Federation of Indian States, will never come. And even if it came, believe me, it would go as quickly as it came.

Now, Sir, I shall just advert to my friend who represents the Sikh community. He has also conscientious objections to the details of this Bill. If I have not misunderstood him, he recognises the necessity of inter-caste marriages. I have already given him the assurance that the matter will be laid before the Select Committee and, if my Muhammadan brethren remain as obdurate as they seem to be, I am not going to drive them into the reform fold. On these grounds, Sir, I hope that my measure will receive the unanimous support of this House and move one more step towards the Select Committee.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan: I should like to ask a question. There is no doubt that Dr. Gour has made a very stirring appeal. But he has not met my objections. He has used about one hundred of sentences but he has not said one word to meet my objection, which is based on the text of the Koran.

Mr. President: Does the Honourable Member wish to ask a question? I have already told another Honourable Member that he is not entitled to explain his personal position under the guise of a point of order.

Dr. H. S. Gour: I shall break my rule once more in the hope of winning over not only the Assembly but the vote of my friend on the left. My reply to his question is that no less a man than the Right Honourable Ameer Ali, a Member of the Privy Council and a dispenser of justice in the Court of final appeal from this country, has adverted to that passage and pointed out that the word 'Iman' means 'believer,' i.e., believer in one God; otherwise the Prophet would have interdicted inter-marriages between Muhammadans and Christians and Jews. If the word 'Iman' means the true Muslim faith, that other passage which says that it is legal to marry a Christian and a Jew would be impossible and unmeaning. Therefore I reconcile the two phrases. The interpretation of the Doctors of Muhammadan Law for the last 1,200 years has been that it means true believer in one God, and therefore you will not transgress any written text of the Holy Writ in voting for the Select Committee, which I am asking this House to send this Bill to. I now move, Sir, that this Bill be sent to the Select Committee.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : As my name has been mentioned by the Honourable Member, after hearing his reply, I propose to continue to be the wolf, and I therefore propose to vote against the motion.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Tuesday, 24th January, 1922.

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber at Eleven of the Clock.
Mr. President was in the Chair.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN CENTRAL AND PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS ON THE RECENT POLICY OF ENFORCEMENT OF LAW AND ORDER.

82. * Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will Government be pleased to lay on the Table a copy of the correspondence between the Government of India and the Local Governments, relating to the new policy of enforcement of law and order which has led to the application of the Seditious Meetings Act and the Criminal Law Amendment Act, Part II, resulting in numerous arrests and convictions?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Government are not prepared to lay the papers on the Table.

DIFFERENCE IN APPLICATION OF REPRESSIVE MEASURES IN DIFFERENT PROVINCES.

83. * Mr. K. C. Neogy: Has the attention of Government been drawn to the difference in the degree of severity of sentences passed on persons convicted under the Seditious Meetings Act as also the Criminal Law Amendment Act, Part II, in different provinces, in different districts of the same province, and in different Courts of the same district or town, for exactly similar offences?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Yes; the Government of India recently made certain suggestions to Local Governments with the object of securing some measure of uniformity in the sentences referred to. The Honourable Member will, however, understand that, as the law allows the Courts a large measure of discretion in deciding the amount of punishment to be inflicted, complete uniformity is hardly to be expected, nor, indeed, is it desirable in all cases.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will Government consider the desirability of publishing the instructions they have sent to the provincial Governments?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I can read out to the Honourable Member a portion of the instructions now, but I should prefer to lay on the Table a more complete statement later if that would meet him. I cannot guarantee that we shall publish our instructions in full.

OCCASIONS WHEN FIREARMS WERE USED FOR QUELLING CIVIL DISTURBANCES
SINCE OCTOBER, 1921.

84. * Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will Government be pleased to make a statement giving brief particulars of the occasions on which firearms had to be used for quelling civil disturbances since October, 1921, specifying particularly, in each case, the name and status of the officer on whose authority fire was opened, the nature of the warning given to the rioters before fire was resorted to, the approximate number of rioters and how they were armed, the number of police or military force employed in stopping the disturbance, and the number of casualties on either side?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: A statement is laid on the Table giving such information as is readily available. Government are not prepared, even where they have the information, to give the name of the officer who ordered firing in each case.

Province.	Date.	Place of Disturbance.	Brief description.	Casualties.
Madras	4-12-21	Cannanore.	On the 4th December, 1921, a number of Mapilla convicts and undertrial prisoners in the Cannanore Central Jail, ultimately numbering about 160, began rioting and attempted to break out of the jail. Breaking open a tool shed they armed themselves with chisels, iron bars, etc., and attacked warders who attempted to obstruct their escape. As the prisoners disregarded warnings, firing had to be ordered to prevent their overpowering the guard by force of numbers.	Seven of the prisoners were killed outright and four wounded by the firing. Two of these subsequently died. One prisoner died of a fractured skull and nine were wounded otherwise than by firing.
United Provinces.	29-12-21	Bareilly	On the 29th December, 1921, inmates of Bareilly Juvenile Jail refused to work on the grounds that a certain political prisoner had been removed from their midst. (He had been sent to hospital in consequence of illness.) Owing to influence of political prisoners the youths, who numbered about 190, were completely out of hand. They broke open almirahs, took out tools, broke open locks and gates and attempted to scale walls. It was necessary to call up the armed guard and to order firing. Sixteen shots were fired, several of them in the air. None of the gunshot wounds are serious, and inquiry by District Magistrate shows that no unnecessary violence was used. (This account is taken from a communique published in the Press, as no official report has been received from the United Provinces Government.)	Eight of the prisoners were injured by gunshots, mostly in the legs, and nine with batons.
Madras	13-1-22	Madras	On the occasion of the arrival of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales in Madras there were disturbances in Madras City. An official report has not yet been received, but from accounts in the Press it appears that the excesses of the mob were such that it was necessary to call out the military and to resort to firing.	According to Press accounts, five or six rioters were killed. Other casualties not known.

Provinces.	Date.	Place of Disturbance.	Brief description.	Casualties.
Coorg	17-11-21	Bangalore	Following on arrest of six Mahomedans on charge of unlawful assembly a mob numbering thousands surrounded Broadway Police Station, prevented removal of prisoners who had refused bail to judicial lock-up in Bangalore Central Jail. As Police Force was inadequate, military aid was requisitioned. As detachment of military reached Police Station, determined rush was made on rear. In the melee four or five shots were fired. Officer Commanding was individually attacked by man with a stick. There was heavy stone throwing.	Two rioters were killed and six injured; 16 men of the Dorset Regiment were injured.
Punjab	23-12-21	Ferozepore Jhirka.	A determined attempt was made by a mob to rescue 12 non-cooperators who were arrested for having recourse to violence. The police were forced to fire. On the 24th a large number assembled to renew the attack, but Alwar troops and Reserve Police dispersed them.	Three rioters were killed and several wounded.
Bengal	28-12-21	Bangpur	Owing to disturbed state of locality, thirty-two armed Police were sent to Nilphamsai. A halt was made in the Bazar during a route march, and an altercation took place between a policeman and a servant of a local gentleman. A crowd speedily collected and began throwing missiles. March was continued followed by crowd who became increasingly menacing and broke through ranks of police. Some shots were fired in the air.	Eight policemen were injured. Eight of public were also injured.
Punjab	30-10-21	Lahore	On the afternoon of the 30th October, 1921, a mob of between 150 and 200 convicts made a determined and evidently a preconcerted attempt to break out of the Lahore Central Jail. They overpowered the guard of the inner gate and forced their way to the outer gate, where they succeeded in breaking the lock of the wicket. The Jail officials had to fire at this point and succeeded in driving back the convicts.	Three of the convicts were killed and thirty-three wounded.

One constable was killed and several wounded. Five rioters were killed.

Not known. One unknown Hurman killed. Among the police there were three serious and many minor casualties.

Two Europeans, one American and two Parsis were killed. Three Europeans and an unknown number of Parsis were wounded. 83 police were wounded. Of the rioters 53 were killed and 298 wounded. Not all the deaths from gunshot wounds were due to the police and military, as several dead and wounded men were found in localities where the authorities had not opened fire.

One villager killed, two severely wounded, seven slightly wounded; one head constable cut on forearm, one head constable incised wound on head, two constables slight cuts about arms and several hit by missiles.

Processions were formed at night after a Khilafat meeting had been held on the Howrah maidan. One of these attacked the police on duty and forced them to retire on the thana. Armed police were requisitioned from Sibpore and, though attacked en route, succeeded in relieving the thana. During the disturbances some shots were fired.

Serious riot occurred on 13th night due to attempt by large number of Burmese monks to obtain free entrance to the Pwas in Shwedagon Pagoda during pagoda festival.

People returning from seeing the arrival of the Prince were molested. On 18th rioting became general. Europeans and Parsis were attacked and liquor shops, etc., were set on fire. Military aid was requisitioned.

A party of police were despatched to prevent a buffalo fight. They were attacked on arrival by a crowd of between three hundred and five hundred. The police made six arrests but the crowd attacked them with sticks, stones and bottles and they had to let their prisoners go and to retreat towards the police station. Later the villagers again attacked the police and one villager cut a head constable with a dadz on the forearm and attempted to seize his carbine. Another head constable came to the rescue and in the scuffle the carbine went off and the original assailant was shot in the abdomen. As villagers continued to attack, a head constable fired twice into the crowd. The police then made good their escape.

ORDER OF PRECEDENCE FOR MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATURE AT PUBLIC DURBARS.

85. * Mr. Ali Buksh Mahomed Hussain: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state on what occasions is the Order of Precedence laid down in His Majesty's Warrant of Precedence to be observed?

(b) Is a District Durbar, held by a Collector of a District, a function at which a Warrant of Precedence should be observed?

(c) Is the precedence to be accorded to officials and non-officials inter se according to the Warrant of Precedence in public functions, or is it left to the discretion of individual officials to arrange precedence according to his own caprices?

(d) Is it a fact that the authorities in Sind before the advent of the Reforms Councils accorded precedence to the Members of the Imperial and Provincial Legislative Councils according to the Warrant of Precedence at all public durbars?

(e) Is it true that since the advent of the Reforms Council the Sind authorities, especially in recent durbars held at Sukkur, bifurcated the Warrant of Precedence into two portions, one portion being made separately applicable to officials and the other portion being applicable to the Members of the Legislative Assembly and Council among themselves, that is, all the officials, however high or low, some of them not even being included in the Warrant of Precedence, were seated on the dais in the durbars above the members of the Assembly and Council, and the Members of the Assembly and Council were seated behind them, although according to the Order of Precedence the Members of the Assembly and Council rank higher in the Warrant of Precedence than several of the officers actually seated above them?

(f) Will the Government be pleased to state whether the procedure adopted by the Sind authorities in violating His Majesty's Warrant of Precedence is a correct one?

(g) If not, what was the justification for the Sind authorities to do so, and will the Government express their disapproval of the procedure followed by the Sind authorities and take steps to check its recurrence?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The whole of the long question appears to be based upon a misapprehension, as the Warrant of Precedence which regulates the rank and precedence of persons holding appointments in India contains no reference to Members of the Council of State or the Legislative Assembly.

NEW CANAL PROJECTS IN THE PUNJAB AND THE INTERESTS OF SIND.

86. * Mr. Ali Buksh Mahomed Hussain: (a) Has the attention of the Government of India been drawn to the reply of Lord Chelmsford to the address of the Sind Muhammadan Association presented to him at Karachi in November, 1917, promising that no new canal projects in the Punjab will be taken in hand without consulting the interests of the Province of Sind?

(b) Is it true that a large irrigational project has since been taken in hand in the Punjab?

(c) Is the Government aware that the zamindars of Sind are very seriously apprehensive of the adverse effect of this project on the irrigation of Sind?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to state whether the Government of Bombay was consulted before the Government of India sanctioned this project?

(e) If so, will the Government be pleased to state the gist of the opinion of the Government of Bombay and how far the Government of India accorded weight to it?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank: (a) and (b). Yes.'

(c) No.

(d) No, but the question was very carefully considered by the professional advisers of the Government of India and it was decided that there were no grounds for apprehension that the withdrawal of the water required for the Punjab project would affect adversely irrigation in Sind.

(e) Does not arise.

MANAGEMENT OF THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

87. * Mr. K. Ahmed: Is there any truth in the rumour that, instead of the East Indian Railway being transferred to the State for working, the idea is to amalgamate the Oudh and Rohilkhund State-worked Railway with the East Indian Railway, and to work the system thus combined as a Company-managed State line?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: There is no truth in the rumour referred to.

INDIANS ON THE RAILWAY BOARD AND THE RATES TRIBUNAL.

88. * Mr. K. Ahmed: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state whether they intend to associate Indians as members of the Railway Board or of the Railway Commission (whatever its designation may be in the future), and to have an experienced Indian member on the Rates Tribunal, in the event of such a Tribunal being created, as recommended by the Railway Committee?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: As already stated in reply to question No. 184 put by Raja Kushalpal Singh on 16th January, 1922, the report of the Railway Committee has only been received comparatively recently and the many recommendations made by the Committee have yet to be considered in detail by the Government of India.

RAILWAY RATES PREFERENTIAL TO FOREIGN TRAFFIC.

89. * Mr. K. Ahmed: (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the reply given by the Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau, Bombay, to questions 30 and 31 of the Railway Committee, appearing on pages 171 and 172 of Volume IV of the Report of the said Committee, in the matter of railway rates being made preferential to foreign traffic and detrimental to India's local trade and industries?

(b) If so, will the Government be pleased to state what action they have taken regarding the specific instances of rates for hides, sugar, oilseeds, oil, etc., which were referred to in those pages of Railway Board's "Monograph on Indian Railway Rates," 1918, which were quoted by the said Chamber and Bureau in answer to question 31 (vide pages 171 and 172 of Volume IV of the Report) of the Railway Committee?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) The reply is in the affirmative.

(b) The question of assistance to be rendered by Railways in the development of Indian industries was brought to the notice of Indian Railways in 1915, and a Press Communiqué was issued at the same time suggesting that applications for concession rates should be addressed to the Railways concerned with the necessary particulars in support thereof. Government are aware that numerous concessions have been granted by Railways to various local industries from time to time as the result of such applications, and are confident that careful consideration will continue to be given by Railway Administrations to requests for similar concessions which are made to them.

Since the publication of Mr. Ghose's Monograph there have been considerable changes in the special rates quoted by Railways, and Government do not propose to take action in connection with the specific instances referred to. Individual cases of prohibitive rates or rates which are alleged to prejudice the development of local industries will be considered on their merits if represented by the industries concerned. Such questions, moreover, will be taken up by the proposed Rates Tribunal if it is appointed.

STATE MANAGEMENT OF INDIAN RAILWAYS.

90. * Mr. K. Ahmed: (a) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the last paragraph on page 13 and to the first paragraph on page 14 of Mr. S. C. Ghose's recent pamphlet called 'Indian Railway Committee, State Management of Indian Railways' regarding wasteful railway competition?

(b) If the answer be in the negative, will the Government be pleased to accept a copy of the same from me?

(c) Will the Government be pleased to explain how they can entrust the management of the Indian State Railways to Companies in the face of such clear evidence of reckless and wasteful competition as shown in the pamphlet?

(d) If the answer be that the Indian Railways, in entering into competition with one another, did nothing unusual and did not go to the same extent as the American or the English Railway Companies did, will the Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that, while by far the largest partners in Indian Railways are the Indian taxpayers, the Railways of England and America are the properties of private individuals, and that therefore any loss of revenue, due to wasteful competition in India, would mean loss of public revenue, whereas in the case of American or English Railways such competition would mean loss of money of private individuals only?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a), (b), (c) and (d). The Government are in possession of the pamphlet referred to. The only other remark that they propose to make is that they must decline in an answer to this question to enter into a discussion of the relative merits of State versus Company management.

UNDUE PREFERENCE FOR EUROPEANS ON RAILWAYS.

91. * Mr. K. Ahmed : Has the Government of India got with them the information which the Bombay Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau furnished to the Railway Committee in the matter of undue preference being shown to the Europeans (vide "P. S." on page 187 of the Railway Committee's Report, Volume III), and will the Government be pleased to publish, for the benefit of the Assembly, this information ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : The information referred to is not in the possession of Government.

CONTRACTS BETWEEN SECRETARY OF STATE AND INDIAN RAILWAYS.

92. * Mr. K. Ahmed : (a) Is it not a fact that the contracts between the Secretary of State and the Railway Companies provide that the Government are not liable to pay any compensation that may be due to any legislation in India ?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to lay on the Table a copy of each contract with the Bengal-Nagpur Railway, the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway and the South Indian Railway ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) The contracts referred to contain a clause to the effect that no claim shall be made upon the Secretary of State by the Company for compensation in respect of the prejudicial effect upon the undertaking or the profits thereof of any Act of the Legislature or of any Act of the Legislature of general applicability for the time being in force.

(b) Copies of the contracts in question have been placed in the Library for reference by Honourable Members of the Legislature.

TRANSFER OF THE DACCA SECTION OF THE EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY TO THE ASSAM BENGAL RAILWAY.

93. * Mr. K. Ahmed : (a) Is it not a fact that Assam Bengal Railway is a losing concern and that the Government expended nearly 18 crores of rupees as capital outlay and had, in addition, to pay another 8 crores of rupees or more in the way of interest, from 1895 to March, 1920, not covered by the net earnings ?

(b) Is it not a fact that instead of taking over this line with a view to work it as a State concern, attempts have been made to make over the Dacca branch of the Eastern Bengal Railway to this non-paying Assam Bengal Railway Company ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : (a) The reply is in the affirmative.

(b) The question of transferring the Dacca Section of the Eastern Bengal Railway is still under consideration, and no definite decision has so far been reached.

MILEAGE, OFFICERS AND TRAFFIC ON STATE-OWNED RAILWAYS IN INDIA IN 1910-11 AND 1920-21.

94. * Mr. K. Ahmed: Will the Government be pleased to furnish the following particulars in the public interest :

- (a) total mileage of open lines of State-owned railways in 1910-11 and in 1920-21, giving particulars for each railway separately ;
- (b) total number of superior officers (Indians and Europeans) in the Engineering, Traffic, Locomotive and Audit Departments for the years 1910-11 and 1920-21 for each such railway ;
- (c) total ton-miles of traffic carried in 1910-11 and 1920-21 for each railway ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: With reference to (a) and (c), a statement showing the total open mileage, unit mileage of passengers and freight, ton mileage of goods of all State-owned Railways in India, including Branch lines worked by them, for the years 1910 (January to December) and 1920-21 (April 1920 to March, 1921) is being sent to the Honourable Member.

(b) The information may be obtained from the printed Classified List of Officers in the various Departments of all Railways in 1910-11 and 1920-21 issued by the Railway Board, copies of which are available in the library for reference by the Honourable Members of the Legislature.

INDIANS IN COMPANY-WORKED STATE RAILWAY LOCOMOTIVE AND CARRIAGE DEPARTMENTS.

95. * Mr. K. Ahmed: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state what steps have been or are being taken by the Company-worked State Railway Locomotive and Carriage Departments to take in Indians who have passed the I. Sc. or B. Sc. examination of Indian Universities as apprentice mechanics, to eventually fill up the posts of Assistant Loco. Foremen, Loco. Foremen, Head or Assistant Locomotive and Carriage Fitters ?

(b) What training allowance is paid to Indians of such qualifications and to European, Anglo-Indian lads of lower or similar educational qualifications for the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th year of their training, and on what pay and position the Indians start, after training is over, as compared with the pay and position given to Europeans and Anglo-Indians ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) and (b). I would refer the Honourable Member to my reply on the 15th September, 1921, to Question No. 184 put by Mr. K. C. Neogy. The whole question is still under the consideration of Government.

* Mr. K. Ahmed: Will Government be pleased to decide one way or the other as soon as possible, as they have taken a long time to decide the same ?

† Colonel W. D. Waghorn: The matter is one which cannot be decided rapidly. It is under consideration.

SALARIES OF INDIAN AND EUROPEAN PERMANENT-WAY INSPECTORS ON STATE AND OTHER RAILWAYS IN INDIA.

96. * Mr. K. Ahmed: Will the Government be pleased to state:

- (a) how many Indians are employed as Permanent-Way Inspectors and Sub-Permanent-Way Inspectors on State Railways, and how many on the East Indian, Great Indian Peninsula, and the Bengal-Nagpur Railways, and how many Europeans are employed in such appointments on each of these railways?
 (b) Is there any difference in the salaries and travelling allowances paid to Indian Inspectors as compared with the European Inspectors?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: The information is being obtained from the several railway administrations and will be sent to the Honourable Member.

PERSONS EXPELLED FROM CANTONMENTS IN INDIA DURING PAST FIVE YEARS.

97. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Will the Government be pleased to state how many persons have been expelled from Cantonments in India during the past 5 years under section 216 of the Cantonment Code of 1916?

(b) What were the offences they had committed?

(c) Were the offenders informed of the charges against them, and their explanations obtained before being expelled?

(d) In how many cases were appeals preferred against the order of expulsion?

(e) In how many cases was the order of expulsion upset and in how many upheld?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) and (b). The Government of India regret that they cannot furnish this information in full, for the reasons stated in my reply† to Question No. 242 asked by Lala Girdharilal Agarwala on the 19th September last. If the Honourable Member so desires, a copy of the list of persons ordered to leave cantonments during the past two years under sections 215 and 216 of the Cantonment Code will be furnished to him.

(c) The Government have no information. As pointed out in the reply‡ to part (a) of Question No. 242 asked on the 19th September last, the Commanding Officer of a Cantonment can remove from the Cantonment, within a time to be specified in the notice, and prohibit from re-entering it, any person whom he thinks it expedient to exclude from the Cantonment, and need not assign any reason therefor, subject to the conditions stated. It is open to the persons excluded to appeal against their order of expulsion.

(d) and (e). The information asked for by the Honourable Member is not immediately available, but will be obtained and communicated to him in due course.

REPEAL OF SECTION 216 OF CANTONMENT CODE, 1916.

98. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Have the Government or His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief received any representations to repeal section 216 of the Cantonment Code, 1916? If so, what action do Government intend to take in regard to this section?

Sir Godfrey Fell: Yes. The question is now under consideration and Government hope shortly to announce the action which they propose to take with reference to this matter.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED IN IMPERIAL COUNCILS AND ACTION TAKEN THEREON.

99. * Sardar Gulab Singh: Will the Government be pleased to print all the Resolutions adopted in the Imperial Councils in a tabular form showing the action of the Government taken thereon?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The attention of the Honourable Member is drawn to the statements† laid on the table on the 16th instant in reply to a similar question asked by Mr. Agnihotri in September last, and to the reply‡ given to the unstarred question put by M. K. Reddi Garu to-day which will be published in the official reports of the Debates of the Legislative Assembly. Further information required in regard to the Resolutions adopted by the Council of State and the Official Resolutions adopted by the Legislative Assembly during the Simla Session is being collected and will be laid on the Table in due course.

DISCONTINUANCE OF RESERVED ACCOMMODATION IN RAILWAY TRAINS FOR CERTAIN CLASSES OF PASSENGERS.

100. * Sardar Gulab Singh: Is any action taken to discontinue the reserved accommodation in railway trains for certain classes of passengers in accordance with the assurances given last session by the President of the Railway Board?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: Railway Administrations were addressed on the subject of limiting the reservation of Intermediate and third class compartments for Europeans and Anglo-Indians to mail and fast passenger trains only. Their views have been received and are now under consideration.

DISTINCTION BETWEEN ENGLISH AND INDIAN TRAINED ARMY NURSES.

101. * Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: Will Government be pleased to state whether they make any distinction (a) in professional qualifications, (b) social recognition, and (c) salaries, between English and Indian trained Army nurses?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) No. The only professional qualification required of candidates for either service is that they should be fully qualified trained nurses.

(b) Government make no distinction in the manner suggested.

(c) Yes. The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the § statement laid on the table in reply to Question No. 254, asked on the 19th September last.

Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: With reference to the replies given to (a) and (b) will Government be pleased to state why they do not act up to their principles?

(No reply was given.)

SENIORITY OF LADY SUPERINTENDENT OF A BRITISH OVER THAT OF AN INDIAN STATION HOSPITAL.

102. * Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: Will Government be pleased to state whether the lady superintendent-in-charge of a British Station Hospital, no matter how junior she is, is officially recognised as senior to a lady superintendent-in-charge of an Indian Station Hospital, even though the latter be many years her senior?

Sir Godfrey Fell: The senior nursing sister of the British Station Hospital is responsible for the supervision of the nursing arrangements in all the hospitals in the station and is, consequently, the official senior of the matron of the Indian Station Hospital. It can rarely happen, however, that the matron of an Indian Station Hospital is senior in point of service to the senior nursing sister of the British Station Hospital.

DISCONTENT AMONG NURSES IN INDIAN TROOPS HOSPITALS.

103. * Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: Is Government aware that great discontent prevails amongst the nurses employed in the Indian Troops Hospitals on account of the inferior way in which they have been treated as compared with those nurses who have been trained and enlisted in England?

Sir Godfrey Fell: The Government of India are not aware that any discontent prevails amongst the nurses employed in Indian Troops Hospitals.

PROPORTION OF BEDS PER WORKING NURSE IN BRITISH AND INDIAN STATION HOSPITALS.

104. * Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: Will Government be pleased to state what is the proportion of beds per working nurse in (a) British station hospitals, (b) Indian station hospitals?

Sir Godfrey Fell: In British Station Hospitals, the proportion of beds per nurse is approximately 38 to 1; while in Indian Station Hospitals the proportion is approximately 100 to 1.

NUMBER OF NURSES IN BRITISH AND INDIAN STATION HOSPITALS, AND EXPENDITURE OF THEIR UPKEEP.

105. * Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: Will Government be pleased to state what is the total number of the nurses employed and annual expenditure of their upkeep (a) in British Station Hospitals and (b) Indian Station Hospitals?

Sir Godfrey Fell: The figures are as follows:

Total number of nurses employed in British Station Hospitals	233
Total number of nurses employed in Indian Station Hospitals	66

INSTRUCTIONS TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE SRINIVASA SASTRI RE THE DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE.

111. * Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will Government be pleased to state whether any instructions were given to the Right Honourable Srinivasa Sastri, on behalf of the Government of India, relating to the Disarmament Conference at Washington?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to lay the correspondence conveying the same on the Table, or in the Library of the House for private information of Members?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) and (b). Mr. Sastri was not given any precise instructions as to the attitude which he should adopt on any question which might arise at the Conference.

It was intended that he should consult the Secretary of State for India before he committed India to any important decision, and the Secretary of State would have consulted the Government of India in such a case if he had thought this necessary.

COST OF MR. SASTRI'S DELEGATION TO AMERICA.

112. * Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will Government be pleased to state the total cost of Mr. Sastri's delegation to America, and whether any part thereof will be borne by the British Government?

(b) Is Mr. Sastri's delegation to America a delegation on behalf of the British Empire or a separate delegation on behalf of India alone?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) Government have as yet no definite information.

(b) Mr. Sastri was appointed to be the representative of India on the British Delegation to the Conference.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: May I know if India is one of the contracting parties to the Pacific Contract?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: I am afraid I must ask for notice of that question.

UNIFORMITY OF TREATMENT FOR POLITICAL PRISONERS.

113. * Rai G. C. Nag Bahadur: (a) Are the Government of India aware of the Circular issued by the Government of Bihar and Orissa re the treatment of political prisoners, and of the Press Communiqué issued by the Government of Bengal under date 30th December, 1921, creating a new class of prisoners called, for the purpose of treatment in jails, Special Class Prisoners?

(b) With a view to secure uniformity of treatment for this particular class of prisoners, do the Government of India propose to issue a general circular of instructions for observance by all the Provincial Governments?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) Yes.

(b) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the answer given on the 10th instant to a similar question asked by Pandit Jawahar Lal Bhargava.

TRANSFER OF THE CANTONMENT OF HYDERABAD SIND.

114. * Mr. W. M. Hussanally: (a) Is it a fact that in 1918 Major Fowler, then Commanding Karachi Brigade, in his No. 4738-I. R., dated 6th

June, while recommending the transfer of the Cantonment of Hyderabad Sind to Ganja Takar, said: 'The site on which the City of Hyderabad, the Sadar Bazar, and the Cantonment is situated is at present very congested and overcrowded, they all run into one another; there is no room for expansion for any of them and if any epidemic starts in one, it runs through all.'

Again:

'The state of affairs now must be much worse in the city. We know there is always some disease raging there: plague, cholera, smallpox or malaria owing to there being no open spaces between the City, Sadar Bazar and Cantonment, it is almost impossible to keep it from spreading throughout.'

(b) Do Government propose to remove the said Cantonment to a safer place for reasons stated by Major Fowler?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the replies given on the 10th January last to part (c) of his Question No. 29 and Question No. 30.

INDIAN SENIOR GOVERNMENT INSPECTORS OF RAILWAYS TO WATCH DISTRIBUTION OF WAGONS.

115. * Mr. K. Ahmed: (a) In view of the fact that serious complaints of undue preference in favour of Europeans and discrimination in the matter of wagon supply, were made before the Railway Committee, particularly by Indian merchants (vide "P.S." on page 187, Volume III of Railway Committee's Report), do Government propose to order that the Senior Government Inspectors of Railways should be asked to conduct inquiries in connection with registration of goods and distribution of wagons, unless this action has already been taken by the Railway Board?

(b) Do the Government propose to direct that one of the Senior Government Inspectors of Railways should be from amongst the qualified Indians, from the rank from which Government Inspectors are drawn, instead of all such Inspectors being Europeans?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) Government Inspectors have already been asked to inquire and report on the subject referred to, with a view to ascertaining whether the systems adopted provide satisfactory means for the equitable distribution of wagons available at stations to merchants generally.

(b) The duties and responsibilities of a Government Inspector of Railways necessitate his being a fully qualified Railway Engineer. There is no bar to the appointment of qualified Indians as Government Inspectors, but a reference to the Classified List of the State Railway Establishment—in the Library—will show that, while there is a large number of young Indian Engineers now in the Railway Department, who will qualify for advancement in due course, there are very few Indian Railway Engineers of sufficient experience and standing available at the present time for employment in the Inspection branch.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Am I to understand that Government cannot find any Indians available, qualified for the post of Senior Government Inspector?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: There is one Indian, I believe, at the present moment, who is officiating as a Government Inspector.

DUTIES OF SENIOR NURSING SISTER IN A STATION.

116. * Lieut.-Col. H. A. J. Gidney: Will Government be pleased to state whether the following section 4, paragraph 30-A, is a corrected reconstruction of paragraph 62, Army Regulations, Volume 6?

' Section IV, paragraph 30-A, is reconstructed as follows :

' The lady superintendent, or the senior nursing sister in a station, will supervise, and be responsible for the efficiency of the nursing of all patients and the general nursing arrangements in the British Station Hospital and families hospital. She will also visit the Indian Station Hospital and advise the Officer Commanding on all matters affecting the nursing of the patients. Where nurses have been allotted for duty in hospitals for Indian troops, she will be responsible for the manner in which they carry out their duties. '

Paragraph 62, Army Regulations, India, Volume VI

Sir Godfrey Fell: The answer is in the affirmative.

(Question No. 117 was withdrawn.)

Mr. Denys Bray: A translation of the Anglo-Afghan Treaty is placed on the table. It is a more literal translation of the Persian original than that contained in the communiqué issued on the conclusion of the Treaty which was based in parts on telegraphic reports.

(Translation.)

TREATY.

PREAMBLE.

The British Government and the Government of Afghanistan with a view to the establishment of neighbourly relations between them have agreed to the Articles written hereunder whereto the undersigned duly authorised to that effect have set their seals:—

Article I.

The British Government and the Government of Afghanistan mutually certify and respect each with regard to the other all rights of internal and external independence.

Article II.

The two High Contracting Parties mutually accept the Indo-Afghan Frontier as accepted by the Afghan Government under Article V of the treaty concluded at Rawalpindi on the 8th August, 1919, corresponding to the 11th Ziqada, 1337 Hijra, and also the boundary west of the Khyber laid down by the British Commission in the months of August and September, 1919, pursuant to the said Article, and shown on the map attached to this treaty by a black chain line; subject only to the realignment set forth in Schedule annexed which has been agreed upon in order to include within the boundaries of Afghanistan the place known as Tor Kham, and the whole bed of the Kabul river between Shilman Khwala Banda and Palosai and which is shown on the said map by a red chain line. The British Government agrees that the Afghan authorities shall be permitted to draw water in reasonable quantities through a pipe which shall be provided by the British Government from Landi Khana for the use of Afghan subjects at Tor Kham, and the Government of Afghanistan agrees that British officers and tribesmen living on the British side of the boundary shall be permitted without let or hindrance to use the aforesaid portion of the Kabul river for purposes of navigation and that all existing rights of irrigation from the aforesaid portion of the river shall be continued to British subjects.

The British Government agrees that the Amir of Afghanistan shall be treated as the equal of the British Majesty and the Sovereigns of all other Powers and to permit the establishment of an Afghan Legation in London, and the Government of Afghanistan likewise agrees to receive in Kabul a Minister from His Britannic Majesty the Emperor of India and to permit the establishment of a British Legation at Kabul.

Each party shall have the right of appointing a Military Attaché to its Legation.

Article IV.

The Government of Afghanistan agrees to the establishment of British Consulates at Kandahar and Jalalabad, and the British Government agrees to the establishment of an Afghan Consul-General at the headquarters of the Government of India and three Afghan Consulates at Calcutta, Karachi and Bombay. In the event of the Afghan Government desiring at any time to appoint Consular officers in any British territories other than India, a separate agreement shall be drawn up to provide for such appointments, if they are approved by the British Government.

Article V.

The two High Contracting Parties mutually guarantee the personal safety and honourable treatment each of the representatives of the other, whether Minister, Consul-General or Consuls, within their own boundaries, and they agree that the said representatives shall be subject in the discharge of their duties to the provisions set forth in the second Schedule annexed to this treaty. The British Government further agrees that the Minister, Consul-General and Consuls of Afghanistan shall within the territorial limits within which they are permitted to reside or to exercise their functions, notwithstanding the provisions of the said Schedule, receive and enjoy any rights or privileges which are or may hereafter be granted to or enjoyed by the Minister, Consul-General or Consuls of any other Government in the countries in which the places of residence of the said Minister, Consul-General and Consuls of Afghanistan are fixed; and the Government of Afghanistan likewise agrees that the Minister and Consuls of Great Britain shall within the territorial limits within which they are permitted to reside or to exercise their functions, notwithstanding the provisions of the said Schedule, receive and enjoy any rights or privileges which are or may hereafter be granted to or enjoyed by the Minister or Consuls of any other Government in the countries in which the places of residences of the said Minister and Consuls of Great Britain are fixed.

Article VI.

As it is for the benefit of the British Government and the Government of Afghanistan that the Government of Afghanistan shall be strong and prosperous, the British Government agrees that whatever quantity of material is required for the strength and welfare of Afghanistan, such as all kinds of factory machinery, engines and materials and instruments for telegraph, telephones, &c., which Afghanistan may be able to buy from Britain or the British dominions or from other countries of the world, shall ordinarily be imported without let or hindrance by Afghanistan into its own territories from the ports of the British Isles and British India. Similarly the Government of Afghanistan agrees that every kind of goods, the export of which is not against the internal law of the Government of Afghanistan and which may in the judgment of the Government of Afghanistan be in excess of the internal needs and requirements of Afghanistan and is required by the British Government, can be purchased and exported to India with the permission of the Government of Afghanistan. With regard to arms and munitions, the British Government agrees that as long as it is assured that the intentions of the Government of Afghanistan are friendly and that there is no immediate danger to India from such importation in Afghanistan, permission shall be given without let or hindrance for such importation. If, however, the Arms Traffic Convention is hereafter ratified by the Great Powers of the world and comes into force, the right of importation of arms and munitions by the Afghan Government shall be subject to the proviso that the Afghan Government shall first have signed the Arms Traffic Convention and that such importation shall only be made in accordance with the provisions of that Convention. Should the Arms Traffic Convention not be ratified or lapse the Government of Afghanistan, subject to the foregoing assurance, can from time to time import into its own territory the arms and munitions mentioned above through the ports of the British Isles and British India.

Article VII.

No Customs duties shall be levied at British Indian ports on goods imported under the provisions of Article VI on behalf of the Government of Afghanistan for immediate transport to Afghanistan, provided that a certificate signed by such Afghan authority or representative as may from time to time be determined by the two Governments shall be presented at the time of importation to the Chief Customs Officer at the port of import setting forth that the goods in question are the property of the Government of Afghanistan and are being sent under its orders to Afghanistan and showing the description, number and value of the goods in respect of which exemption is claimed; provided, secondly, that the goods are required for the public services of Afghanistan and not for the purposes of any State monopoly or State trade, and provided, thirdly, that the goods are, unless of a clearly distinguishable nature, transported through India in sealed packages which shall not be opened or sub-divided before their export from India.

And also the British Government agrees to the grant in respect of all trade goods imported in India at British ports for re-export to Afghanistan and exported to Afghanistan by routes to be agreed upon between the two Governments of a rebate at the time and place of export of the full amount of Customs duty levied upon such goods, provided that such goods shall be transported through India in sealed packages which shall not be opened or sub-divided before their export from India.

And also the British Government declares that it has no present intention of levying Customs duty on goods or livestock of Afghan origin or manufacture, imported by land or by river into India or exported from Afghanistan to other countries of the world through India and the import of which into India is not prohibited by law. In the event, however, of the British Government deciding in the future to levy Customs duties on goods and livestock imported into India by land or river from neighbouring States it will, if necessary, levy such duties on imports from Afghanistan; but in that event it agrees that it will not levy higher duties on imports from Afghanistan than those levied on imports from such neighbouring States. Nothing in this Article shall prevent the levy on imports from Afghanistan of the present Khyber tolls and of octroi in any town of India in which octroi is or may be hereafter levied, provided that there shall be no enhancement over the present rate of the Khyber tolls.

Article VIII.

The British Government agrees to the establishment of trade agents by the Afghan Government at Peshawar, Quetta and Parachinar, provided that the personnel and the property of the said agencies shall be subject to the operations of all British laws and orders and to the jurisdiction of British Courts; and that they shall not be recognised by the British authorities as having any official or special privileged position.

Article IX.

The trade goods coming to (imported to) Afghanistan under the provisions of Article VII from Europe, etc., can be opened at the railway terminuses at Jamrud, in the Kurram and at Chaman for packing and arranging to suit the capacity of baggage animals without this being the cause of re-imposition of Customs duties; and the carrying out of this will be arranged by the trade representatives mentioned in Article XII.

Article X.

The two High Contracting Parties agree to afford facilities of every description for the exchange of postal matter between their two countries, provided that neither shall be authorised to establish Post Offices within the territory of the other. In order to give effect to this Article, a separate Postal Convention shall be concluded, for the preparation of which such number of special officers as the Afghan Government may appoint shall meet the officers of the British Government and consult with them.

Article XI.

The two High Contracting Parties having mutually satisfied themselves each regarding the goodwill of the other, and especially regarding their benevolent intentions towards the tribes residing close to their respective boundaries, hereby undertake each to inform the other in future of any military operations of major importance which may appear necessary for the maintenance of order among the frontier tribes residing within their respective spheres, before the commencement of such operations.

Article XII.

The two High Contracting Parties agree that representatives of the Government of Afghanistan and of the British Government shall be appointed to discuss the conclusion of a Trade Convention and the convention shall in the first place be regarding the measures (necessary) for carrying out the purposes mentioned in Article IX of this treaty. Secondly, (they) shall arrange regarding commercial matters not now mentioned in this treaty which may appear desirable for the benefit of the two Governments. The trade relations between the two Governments shall continue until the Trade Convention mentioned above comes into force.

Article XIII.

The two High Contracting Parties agree that the first and second schedules attached to this treaty shall have the same binding force as the Articles contained in this treaty.

Article XIV.

The provisions of this treaty shall come into force from the date of its signature, and shall remain in force for three years from that date. In case neither of the High Contracting Parties should have notified twelve months before the expiration of the said three years the intention to terminate it, it shall remain binding until the expiration of one year from the day on which either of the High Contracting Parties shall have denounced it. This treaty shall come into force after the signatures of the Missions of the two Parties and the two ratified copies of this shall be exchanged in Kabul within 2½ months after the signatures.

ANGLO-JAPANESE TREATY RELATING TO INDIA.

204. Mr. Muhammad Faiyaz Khan : Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table that part of the Anglo-Japanese Treaty which relates to India ?

Mr. Denys Bray : The Agreement is a public document having been published in 1911 by His Majesty's Stationery Office as Treaty Series No. 18. I will, however, send a copy to the Honourable Member if he so desires. He is no doubt aware that the Agreement terminates on the ratification of the Quadruple Pacific Treaty.

REVISED ARMS ACT RULES.

205. Mr. Muhammad Faiyaz Khan : Will the Government be pleased to lay on the table old and revised Arms Act Rules, with copies of revised Arms Act Rules by different Provincial Governments since January, 1920 ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The Indian Arms Rules, 1909, and issues prior to that year are out of print, and Government are not prepared to have them re-printed in order to lay copies on the table. If the Honourable Member so desires, a copy of the Rules of 1909 can be supplied to him on application to the Home Department.

Copies of the Indian Arms Rules, 1920, have been supplied to the Library of the Chamber for the use of Members, and Government see no necessity for laying further copies on the table.

It is presumed that by 'revised Arms Act Rules by different Provincial Governments' the Honourable Member means subsidiary rules and instructions issued by Local Governments. The Government of India do not possess these and cannot, therefore, lay them on the table.

REDUCTION OF SENTENCE OF PANDIT K. K. MALAVIYA AND PANDIT G. A. MALAVIYA.

206. Mr. Muhammad Faiyaz Khan : (a) Will the Government be pleased to state if it is true that the punishment of Pandit K. K. Malaviya and Pandit G. A. Malaviya has been reduced to six months' simple imprisonment from 18 months' rigorous imprisonment? If it is true, will the Government be pleased to state if these two are sons or relatives of Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state if any other prisoner or prisoners' punishments have been reduced? If so, what is their number, and the amount of punishments reduced? Under what section and for what act have these two Pandits been tried and punished, and under what section and for what act has Mr. Nisar Ahmud Khan Sherwani of Aligarh been tried, and for how many months or years has Mr. N. A. K. Sherwani of Aligarh been sent to jail; and what is the difference between the offences of Mr. N. A. K. Sherwani of Aligarh and Pandit K. K. Malaviya and Pandit G. A. Malaviya of Allahabad?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: (a) Yes. These two gentlemen are understood to be closely related to Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya.

(b) Government have no precise information as to the number of sentences which have been reduced. They have, however, seen statements in the newspapers to the effect that a number of reductions have been given. The two Pandits were sentenced under section 17 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908. Mr. N. A. K. Sherwani was convicted under section 153-A of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

208. Mr. Muhammad Faiyaz Khan: Will the Government be pleased to state if it is true that in the month of December, 1921, His Excellency the Viceroy received a deputation with an address, consisting of some of the Mussalmans of Delhi? If it is true, will the Government be pleased to state their numbers, and how many of them were title-holders, holders of any honorary offices, such as Honorary Magistrate, Honorary Munsif, etc.?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Yes. According to Press reports, the deputation consisted of 23 Muhammadans, two of whom were title-holders. It is not known how many hold honorary offices.

HIGH CLASS INSTITUTE FOR GEOLOGY AND MINERALOGY AND TRAINING AND RESEARCH WORKS IN TANNING FOR INDIA.

209. Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary: Will the Government be pleased to state what (if any) steps are likely to be taken, and when, for the establishment for all India of:

(a) an up-to-date high class central institute for teaching of geology and mineralogy?

(b) central up-to-date scientific training and research works in tanning ?

Mr. A. C. Chatterjee : (a) Steps are being taken to establish an up-to-date high class school of Mining and Geology at Dhanbad. A Principal and a Governing Body for the school were appointed last year. Proposals regarding the buildings, equipment, staff and curriculum of the school have been framed by the Governing Body and the Principal, and are now being examined by the Government of India. Owing to the present financial stringency, it is not possible to proceed with the scheme as quickly as was originally contemplated, but it is proposed to make a provision of Rs. 1,00,000 in the next year's budget for the collection of materials for the building of the school.

(b) The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given on the 17th March, 1921, to a question on the same subject put by the Honourable Mr. Sambanda Mudaliar. It has been decided that owing to the financial position it is not possible to ask for a grant for this purpose during the next financial year.

(b) The amount spent on and paid to Bus and other companies and individuals for similar purposes ?

(c) Will the Government also please state what would be the cost of electric railway or tramway communication between Delhi and Raisina ?

(d) Will the Government also please state what, if any, are the objections to and difficulties in the way of such a connexion being established ?

Colonel Sir S. D'A. Crookshank : (a) Information is being collected regarding the amount spent on, and allowed for, conveyance and travelling allowance to Government servants, Members of the Legislative Assembly and Council of State from Delhi to Raisina and back, and will be laid on the table as soon as it has been compiled. As all Members of the Governor General's Executive Council have residential accommodation in old Delhi during the cold weather season, the question does not affect them. It is regretted that it is not possible to supply similar information regarding the amount spent on transport of stores and materials.

(b) The only expenditure incurred is on the bus service and is shown below :

	Rs.
1919-20	46,649
1920-21	53,897

There is a claim for additional payment which has not yet been settled.

(c) No regular estimate has been prepared, but the cost of a six-mile single track electric tramway with six tramcars is roughly estimated at Rs. 12,60,000.

(d) There are no engineering difficulties in the way of such a connection, but the number of passengers carried would be so small that such a tramway could not be worked profitably. Moreover, until the reconstruction of the roads through Pabar Gunj in connection with the railway lay-out has been completed, it would not be possible to contemplate the provision of any such means of communication.

ANNUAL INCREASED EXPENDITURE ON REFORMS.

211. Sardar Gulab Singh : Will the Government be pleased to state the annual expenditure increased by introducing the present Reforms in the country ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The Honourable Member is referred to the answer given on the 10th January, 1922, to Beohar Raghbir Sinha's question on the subject. A copy of the statement giving the full information will be furnished to him in due course.

RELIEF TO CENTRAL GOVERNMENT THROUGH SUBJECTS TRANSFERRED TO PROVINCES.

212. Sardar Gulab Singh : To what extent is the Central Government relieved of work on account of the subjects and authorities transferred to the Provincial Councils and the Ministers, Councillors and Governors ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : Certain subjects have been transferred and certain powers have been delegated to provincial authorities, and to that extent the Central Government have been relieved of definite classes of work. On the other hand, the introduction of the Reforms has considerably increased the work of the Central Government in certain branches of administration. It is too early as yet to say what the permanent net effect of the Reforms will be on the volume of work to be done by the Central Government, but, up to the present, the result would appear to be a very great net increase in the work of some Departments. I cite my own Department, the Home Department, as a case in point.

GROUPING OF INTERMEDIATE CLASS COMPARTMENTS.

213. Sardar Gulab Singh : Is it not practicable that Intermediate class compartments in one train be placed together to save inconveniences to children and ladies in securing their seats ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn : It is believed that Intermediate class compartments are placed together on trains whenever practicable. Difficulty arises, however, when Intermediate class compartments form part of the accommodation in two or more composite carriages on the same train, when it is not always possible to keep them together.

POSITION OF ASSISTANT SURGEONS WITH TEMPORARY COMMISSIONS.

214. Dr. Nand Lal : (i) Will the Government be pleased to state :

(a) What is the exact interpretation of letter No. 018151-4 (A. G.-9), dated Simla, 29th September, 1921, from the Deputy Secretary to the Government of India, Army Department, to the Chief Secretary to the Government, Punjab, as, under this letter, the Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals, Punjab, has issued orders that the Assistant Surgeons who held temporary commissions in the Indian Medical Service and who have reverted to civil employ will not, in future, use, or be addressed by, their military rank in official correspondence?

- (b) As to whether the construction put by the Inspector-General of Hospitals, Punjab, is correct?
- (c) Can such Assistant Surgeons use their military rank; and, if so, in what manner?
- (d) On what grounds the aforesaid letter was issued?
- (ii) Will the Government be pleased to state as to whether letter No. 018151-4 (A. G.-9), dated Simla, 29th September, 1921, alluded to in part 1, clause (a), is meant to be applicable to the Punjab alone?
- (iii) Will the Government be pleased to state the rights and privileges attached to the rank which demobilized officers of the Indian Army and the Indian Medical Service have been permitted to retain by His Majesty the King under Army Instruction (India) No. 104 of 1920 with regard to the wearing of uniforms, attendance on the ceremonial occasions, precedence, exemptions from the provisions of the Arms Act, and Travelling Allowance when attending Government duty?

Sir Godfrey Fell: (i) (a) The interpretation of the letter referred to by the Honourable Member is that, while the Government of India consider that a record of the military service rendered by civil officers should be maintained in the Civil Lists, they are of opinion that the use of their military rank by civil officers, while acting in their civil capacity, is undesirable as the military rank will frequently have no relation to the civil status of the officers concerned.

(b) Yes.

(c) Yes, unofficially or socially.

(d) The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply given to part (a) of his question.

(ii) No. The letter, as stated therein, refers to all civil officers of the Indian Services and was addressed to all Local Governments.

(iii) The Honourable Member will be furnished with a statement which answers this part of his question.

INDIANS IN SUPERIOR ESTABLISHMENT OF STORES DEPARTMENT OF STATE RAILWAYS.

215. Dr. Nand Lal: Will the Government of India be pleased to state as to:

- (a) What is the percentage of the Indians (excluding the officiating) in the Superior Establishment of the Stores Department of the State Railways?

(b) How many officers there are in all and how many of them are Indians and on what Railways they are working ?

(c) If there are only 2 or 3 Indian officers, why it is so, and when their number is going to be increased ?

Colonel W. D. Waghorn: (a) 8 per cent.

(b) There are 25 officers in all and 2 of them are Indians. Both are employed on the North-Western Railway. They joined the Department in 1919 and 1920, respectively, and the second is still completing his training.

(c) It has been decided ordinarily to fill future vacancies in the Stores Department from Indian Engineering Colleges, but, as the establishment is a small one and as vacancies are not frequent, it will be some time before the effects of this decision fully declare themselves.

MESSAGES FROM THE COUNCIL OF STATE.

Mr. President: A Message has been received from the Council of State respecting the Bills which have been passed in that Chamber. Secretary will read it.

Secretary of the Assembly: A Message has been received from the Secretary of the Council of State which reads as follows :

' Sir, I am directed to inform you that the Council of State has, at its meeting of the 23rd January, agreed without amendments to the following Bills which were passed by the Legislative Assembly :

(1) A Bill further to amend the Indian Electricity Act, 1910.

(2) A Bill further to amend the Indian Factories Act, 1911.'

Mr. President: The Secretary will lay on the table the Message informing the Assembly of the Bill which has been passed by the Council of State.

Secretary of the Assembly: Sir, in accordance with rule 25 of the Indian Legislative Rules, I lay on the table the Bill to amend the Benares Hindu University Act, 1915, which was passed by the Council of State on the 23rd January 1922.

RESOLUTION - RE: COMMITTEE ON CURRENCY AND EXCHANGE.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey (Bombay Millowners' Association : Indian Commerce) : Mr. President, I beg to move :

'That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that a Committee, with a majority of Indian members, be appointed to consider the whole question of :

(1) the present policy of Currency and Exchange ;

(2) the opening of the Indian Mints to the free coinage of gold ; and

(3) the location of the Gold Standard Reserve in India ;

and to report with its recommendations at an early date'.

Mr. President, this House will remember that about two years ago, the Secretary of State appointed a Committee known as the Babington-Smith

Committee, and that Committee reported that the exchange ratio of 1s. 4d. be raised to 2s. per rupee. Unfortunately, the Committee sat at a time when the conditions were abnormal and the price of silver, on which our Rupee exchange mainly depends, rose to 80d., while, before the war, it was somewhere near 24 or 25d. So, the Committee's report was mainly based on the assumption that silver would continue to keep high and that it would be impossible, under those circumstances, to maintain the rate of 1s. 4d. which was current for well nigh 25 years previously. Sir, I do not wish to discuss, at this juncture, whether the Committee was right in setting aside the views laid before it by the representatives of the commercial community of India. All the members except one were non-Indians, and that solitary gentleman was our friend, Mr. Dadiba Dalal, who is now, I am very glad to see, a Member of the Council of the Secretary of State. He appended a masterly Minute of Dissent and his prognostications have nearly all come true. I have no doubt, Sir, that the majority was actuated by the best of motives, but if Indian views had been more taken into consideration and if more Indian representatives had been on the Committee, India's interests would not have been overlooked as they have been done by that Committee. Sir, I take it that it is India's misfortune that, when questions of currency and exchange, questions of life and death to the trade and industries, were being considered, Indian representatives on the Committee should not have been in sufficient numbers to make their influence felt. I was in London in 1919 and I gave evidence before the Committee on behalf of the Bombay Millowners' Association and I was able to see, as I was the last witness, in what direction the Committee was leading, and I warned the Committee of the danger of deciding questions of this character when the silver prices were abnormally high. The main assumption of the Committee was that, owing to the short supply of silver and the Pittman Act, silver would continue to be high. The other argument they used was the prevalence of high prices in India. Now, the amelioration of the evil of high prices was not one of the terms of reference to this Committee, but the arguments were dragged in, in order to support their contention of 2s. to the rupee. In the first place, I may point out to this House that it is very dangerous to play with the settled ratio of exchange in order to ameliorate the evils of high prices. If one Government raises exchange in order to cure high prices, after a few years another Government may reduce exchange in order to cure trade depression. We have seen that in England, and in other countries also, high prices were prevailing last year, but no body suggested in England as a solution the manipulation of the gold value of pound sterling. I must, however, give credit to the Committee for clearly indicating the circumstances which would necessitate a reconsideration of this question or its recommendations. In paragraph 51, the Committee said :

'There is one qualification which it is necessary to add to the above statement.' It seems probable that prices generally will remain at a high level for a considerable time, and that any return to lower levels will be gradual; but if, contrary to this expectation, a great and rapid fall in world prices were to take place, a new element of disturbance would be introduced. The costs of production in India might fail to adjust themselves with equal rapidity to the lower level of prices, and Indian exports might suffer to an extent which would endanger the maintenance of exchange at the level which we propose. In that case it would be necessary to consider the problem afresh, and take the measures which might be required by the altered circumstances.'

Sir, its anticipations of future prices have not been justified. In fact, as everybody knows, prices have fallen, not only of silver, which has come down from 80*d.* or 78*d.* to nearly 35*d.* to-day, but prices of iron and steel, cotton, tea, jute and indeed of everything, has fallen during the last two years. Particularly, our leading income crops, tea, cotton, jute, etc., are now practically at the pre-war level. What would have happened if the 2*s.* exchange was successful, and the prices of all these income crops would have gone down by a third? I leave it to this House to imagine. I maintain, therefore, Mr. President, that the contingency contemplated by the Babington-Smith Committee has arisen, and it is therefore necessary that we should re-examine the whole question. The only practical way of re-examining such an important question is through the appointment of an expert Committee and, as I said, India's views must be properly heard, and Indians should have a majority on that Committee. Sir, it may be argued that the position is still abnormal, and that things all over the world have not settled down, and that, therefore, it is inopportune to re-examine the question at present. But those who thus argue forget that we are not writing on a clean slate. Government, on the recommendations of the Babington-Smith Committee, have already altered our ratio from 1*s.* 4*d.* to the rupee to 2*s.* and, if any one argues that 2*s.* must be maintained in the books although it is untenable, I think that is not a very good argument for not re-examining the question. I may further say that this statutory 2*s.* to the rupee in our books is doing the greatest amount of mischief. In the first place, nobody believes that the 2*s.* a rupee is attainable and I am sure by this time, after the trial of last year, Government themselves must have been convinced that it is hopeless now to expect to raise our exchange to 2*s.* I have said, Mr. President, that the statutory 2*s.* is doing the greatest mischief to the commercial community, and I will show to this House how. One thing more than any other which disturbs the regular trade is the uncertainty of exchange. In September or October last, the trade looked up a little and the exchange began to rise to 1*s.* 5½*d.*, and the merchants were uncertain of the Government attitude, whether they would force up the exchange to 2*s.* or would leave things to themselves. No statement from Government came as to their attitude. One set of merchants took one view and another set took another view, and in their anxiety as to the uncertainty of exchange people did not cover their purchases and there was again a drop and people lost an opportunity. I maintain, Sir, therefore, that it is desirable that the statutory standard should be brought down to such a level as to create the minimum disturbance in trade. I am not at present proposing any concrete ratio. It is for the Committee of experts and non-official members that may be upon it to examine the question and say what will be that standard. It may be that the Committee, after looking to all the circumstances of the case, may decide that it is not desirable to permanently fix the ratio just at present, and may, in the meantime, recommend an interim policy of say 1*s.* 6*d.* I am not suggesting any definite figure—or any other figure which may minimize the risk to the mercantile community. The Committee may further consider and clearly lay down whether, and to what extent, Government should interfere in the natural course of exchange. At present, the policy of Government in regard to that is not fixed. It is within the power of the Secretary of State at present, if the balance of trade goes in our favour, to try to raise exchange, by artificial means, to as high a figure as he can. He can use our Gold resources in England, he may refuse to sell Council Bills, and there are a number of other ways which the people in the trade know, by which the Secretary of State can manipulate exchange if he likes. And when we know that the advisers of the Secretary of State are wedded to 2s. a rupee, I do not find fault with the merchants if they have no confidence, in the absence of any definite policy, that the Secretary of State will not use that power if occasion arises.

There is no doubt, Mr. President, that an unduly manipulated exchange will do great harm to all kinds of interests in India. Take, for instance, agriculture. With an artificial 2s. to the rupee they will get 40 per cent. less for their produce than what they would otherwise receive. The Government will continue to collect revenue in the appreciated rupee and this raises automatically the land-tax by fifty per cent., for no fault of the agriculturist. Then, again, take, for instance, the industrial development. An artificial exchange will retard the development of industries, because foreign competition will come in, and by this artificial method Government would be practically giving a bounty of 50 per cent. to the foreign manufacturers. As regards merchants, I have already said that they would prefer a ratio which is more likely to be maintained than an artificial high one.

As regards the second part of my Resolution, about the opening of mints to the free coinage of gold, I have not much to say. The Government of India have accepted the policy of opening mints to the free coinage of gold; in fact, they had arranged with the Royal Mint to open a branch in India, but it was because of the war that the scheme had to be dropped. The Babington-Smith Committee has recommended that as soon as possible a branch of the Royal Mint should be opened; but, if the Royal Mint refuses to open this branch on some technical ground, I think the Committee might consider whether it would not be desirable to mint gold mohurs or some other kind of gold coin of equal fineness and weight to the English sovereign, but that must be the last resort. Sir, I believe that until we have a proper gold currency, we will never be free from the anxiety of currency problems off and on. India will not stand any further the policy that has been followed in the past of pouring in as much silver as possible into India and preventing gold from entering into India. I may only read a few lines from the Minority Report of Mr. Dalal. He says in paragraph 68:

'The fact that the maintenance of exchange was so readily abandoned and the sale of rupee bills continued, combined with the persistent flooding of India with silver token money, gives ground for the theory that fixity of exchange was only the ostensible object of the policy and that the real the object was to compel India to take silver in place of gold money. Further, it is a policy which is settled and managed in London, and which necessarily operates in the markets of London and India. That the interests of the London market have not been without influence in shaping the policy may be gathered from the enormous sums, of money or investments belonging to the Indian currency which have been accumulated there.'

At that time there were about 87 or 88 million pounds accumulated there:

'The profits on silver coinage were steadily collected into the Gold Standard Reserves in London, and now that the coinage of silver has ceased to be profitable, a new departure has been made in the issue of currency notes in India on the security of investments in London which has had the effect of rapidly accumulating an enormously increased store of Indian currency money in London.'

Now, as regards the third part of my motion, the location of the Gold Standard Reserve in India, it has a long history behind it. It was in 1912 that I moved a Resolution in the Imperial Legislative Council at Calcutta recommending that all gold of the Gold Standard Reserve should be located in India. At that time, all the Chambers of Commerce, both Indian opinion and European opinion, were unanimous that the gold must remain in India because, in time of war or panic, the gold could not be secured from England. Well, at that time the country fought but the gold remained in London and what was the effect?

It was not only kept in England, but was invested in long-term securities. The war came in and there came down the value of securities and a large amount of our Gold Standard Reserve had to be written down. Even now, the Babington-Smith's Committee has recommended that half of it should be brought to India.

It says :

' There is, however, a strong sentiment in India in favour of the location of the whole or, at any rate, a large part of the Reserve in India. In currency matters the possession of public confidence is an asset of great value and we therefore think it advisable to comply with the Indian demand, so far as this can be done without detracting from the utility of the fund for the purposes for which it exists. Gold in India can be made available for the purpose of foreign remittance either by export or by transfer to the Paper Currency Reserve in India against a corresponding release of Paper Currency assets in the United Kingdom or in circumstances of urgency by arranging to earmark it for the Bank of England. We consider, therefore, that a portion of the gold in the Gold Standard Reserve should be held in India ; but the gold so held should not exceed one-half of the total '.

and so on.

Well, even the Babington-Smith Committee said : ' Take half. ' What is the present position ? We have in India not a single ounce of gold of our Gold Standard Reserve. In spite of the passing of 2½ years since the report was made, all gold is to-day in England. I think the time has now come when we must insist that all our gold be kept in India. If gold had been kept in India, it would have been very useful during the silver crisis. Instead of waiting and waiting and raising the exchange and at one time bringing our paper currency to the verge of inconvertibility, we would have given gold to the people and the currency difficulties would have been avoided. What did we do ? We prevented silver coins from going out into the country and allowed our currency notes to go down to discount up to 19 per cent. All that would have been avoided if our gold had remained in India and this House must insist that India's gold should remain in India. I hope, Mr. President, Government, on whom the great responsibility lies for seeing that the commercial communities are not inconvenienced and that the people are not put to unnecessary loss, will see their way to accept this Resolution.

Mr. C. W. Rhodes (Bengal : European) : I have deserted my duties on the Fiscal Commission in order to take part in this discussion. Like Dives of old, I have been in torment on one Commission and I desire to prevent my friends in this Council from sharing a like fate on another. Fiscal statistics we have in plenty, but statistics of the pre-war period are of very little use, of the war period of still less use, and since then trade has been like the troubled sea that cannot rest. We are, therefore, endeavouring to make bricks without straw. The Committee now suggested by my Honourable friend is going to a worse fate. He tells us that the Babington-Smith Committee was appointed at an abnormal time. I do not think any of us would dispute that fact. But, Sir, are the times normal now ? If this House decides to appoint it, I can prophesy an unhappy life and a discredited end. My Honourable friend has hinted that it will not be the first Currency Committee to have this unhappy experience, but this will make me none the less sorry for those Members who have the temerity to embark on such a troubled sea without compass or helm. On what facts will this Committee build? India is not in a ring fence. Indian exchange is not a matter like the village tank which can be left to a district board. The causes which are upsetting our currency and exchange are not national but international and the cleverest brains in Europe and America are at present seeking a solution in vain. Does my Honourable friend think that we can anchor our frail bark on a quicksand, or that we can stabilise the rupee for all the currencies of the world to revolve round it? As a matter of fact, we all seem to be revolving round the American dollar and that, itself, is by no means a fixed star. I would suggest in all seriousness that, if this Committee is appointed, it should start a tour of the world, and, having solved the financial problems of Europe, it should return to settle the rupee.

I do not intend to weary the House by dealing separately with the three points of the Resolution with which the Honourable Mover has dealt in a way that suggests that he thinks the Committee is already appointed. I have no doubt that in regard to them the experts will have much to say in times to come, though I honestly believe that in such matters, as the opening of a mint and the transfer of the Gold Standard Reserve to India, the question will not lie with the Government or this House, but with the force of circumstances which may compel certain changes. In regard to the first item, namely, the present policy of currency and exchange, the policy (if policy it may be called) is admittedly one of drift and masterly inactivity. During 1921, when Government allowed the rupee to find its own restless level, the American cross rate swung like a pendulum, and the Indian balance of trade, which gave hope of re-adjustment in July and August, again went heavily against India. And yet, the rupee only varied three pence three-eighths during 1921; a serious variation, I admit, judged by pre-war standards but a dead level comparative to the fluctuations of the previous year. It would be futile to suggest that the improvement is due entirely to the absence of Government control or, to borrow a word which the Honourable Mover has used, of Government interference. We have, however, discovered that, left to themselves, there are forces at work which put the brake both on a rise and a fall in exchange and we have been trading with some slight sense of security without living in daily dread of some new communiqué which will upset the present insecure balance. It is a trying time of reconstruction and I earnestly beg this House to do nothing to add to the difficulties under which commerce and industry are labouring to-day. The evils of the last upset have not yet disappeared, but commonsense and goodwill, which are slowly re-appearing both in India and England, are leading to an adjustment of conflicting interests. We are not yet out of the wood and we still require time before the situation is sufficiently well in hand to justify fresh experiments. My Honourable friend will doubtless tell me in reply that he is only proposing an inquiry and not immediate action. There I entirely disagree with him. The very appointment of a Committee will constitute a definite action which will have a definite effect on the trade of the country. I quite agree that an inquiry will eventually be required but surely that time will come when the question becomes a national, rather than an international one. In the meantime, matters cannot stand still. A Committee would mainly deal with the theoretical aspects of the question.

[Mr. C. W. Rhodes.]

But I can assure my Honourable friend that plain, practical facts will force the issue, probably long before any Committee could report. If the Secretary of State requires funds in London, beyond his sterling borrowing powers, funds he must have and the hard logic of facts will drive the Government to place those funds there, quite irrespective of any theories as to whether the rupee is to be fixed eventually at 1s. 4d., 1s. 8d. or 2s. Now, my Honourable friend has stipulated for a majority of Indian members and he certainly did not give his reasons. The Honourable Member told us that Government altered the ratio from 1s. 4d. to 2s. In the same breath, he told us they would never be able to reach 2s. Surely these statements are mutually destructive. My only stipulation would be for the best brains in the country and I care not whether they are Indian or European. In this matter, as in all others, our interests are one, and I gladly support the Honourable Member as a fellow member of Commerce in expressing the view that what we want, if our trade and industry are to develop, is the fullest possible help from a stable exchange and a sound currency. Last January, the Associated Chambers of Commerce unanimously decided in favour of a policy of suspended animation and I see nothing in the history of the past twelve months to convince me they were wrong. I see nothing in the present position to indicate that the time is opportune or the data available for an inquiry now. May I invite the attention of my friends to the Resolution accepted by the Brussels Financial Conference which we must recognise as a competent authority. The Resolution was that :

‘Public attention should be especially drawn to the fact that the reduction of prices and the restoration of prosperity are dependent on the increase of production and that the continual excess of Government expenditure over revenue represented by budget deficits is one of the most serious obstacles to such increase of production, as it must, sooner or later, involve the following consequences :

- (a) A further inflation of credit and currency,
- (b) A further depreciation in the purchasing power of the domestic currency and a still greater instability of the foreign exchanges,
- (c) A further rise in prices and the cost of living.

The country which accepts the policy of budget deficits is treading the slippery path which leads to general ruin and to escape from that path no sacrifice is too great.’

These, Sir, are weighty words, and I commend them to the attention of Honourable Members at this particular juncture. Is our own House in order? Does the position in England, France, Italy, Germany and Russia supply conditions under which a new currency scheme can be elaborated? I think not. I do not deprecate discussion, but, for that, no Committee is necessary. The facts are before us and as the situation develops, I hope we shall have the fullest discussion in public and in the press and elsewhere, so that, if possible, we can discover another Lindsay to point the way when the situation becomes clearer. But, in the meantime, I dread the nightmare of fresh Government action. If I may be permitted, I will quote my own words addressed to the Associated Chambers of Commerce just a year ago :

‘One thing I would urge upon the Government and that is, not to attempt to dam up the flow of economic forces unless next time they are absolutely certain that they have the resources to keep the dam intact. Far better let the currents ebb and flow than risk again a bursting dam.’

I think, Sir, that the experiences of the last twelve months have justified those words, and I am confident the Honourable the Finance Member will not be able to give us any assurance whatever that he has the power at present to put into force any decision at which a Committee now appointed might arrive.

But I would quote a greater authority. The present Financial Secretary said in another place last March :

' Could a Committee enable the starving population of Austria to buy India's goods? Could a Committee put Italy on her feet again financially? Could a Committee solve the problem of Germany's reparations payments? Could a Committee evolve order out of chaos in Russia?'

The answer was ' No ' last March, and the answer is ' No ' to-day.

I therefore ask the Honourable Mover not to press his Resolution, and I trust the House will not accept it. But I welcome the debate if only to give the Government the opportunity of repeating what the Financial Secretary said last March, namely :

' If there is going to be any fundamental change, any new rate to be settled or any attempt at a permanent solution, neither the Government of India nor the Secretary of State will do this off his own bat.'

I think, Sir, the whole House will be unanimous in asking the Government to repeat and adhere strictly to this pledge.

Mr. Manmohandas Ramji (Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau : Indian Commerce) : Sir, without going into the merits of the question raised by this Resolution, I urge that we have not yet had sufficient time to think and to adjust our exchange policy. Last February, I mean in February, 1920, a change in the currency policy was effected, and we have not yet passed through the disastrous effects of that change and it is too early now to attempt any further change by the appointment of such a Committee. I therefore suggest that we should wait and see the effects of the present policy, and also see that the world conditions are more stable and more suitable before there is another change at all.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras : Nominated Non-Official) : Sir, I, like my friend, Mr. Rhodes, have been a truant from the Fiscal Commission, and, if I remain here to-day I do so for the purpose of learning in this debate something about this problem which has not a little bearing upon the questions we have to decide as members of the Fiscal Commission. Sir, Mr. Manmohandas Ramji has told us that it was only very recently that a Committee sat and came to a conclusion upon this question, and that it is too early to summon a new Committee because that would have the effect of upsetting the trade conditions. I greatly sympathise with what has been said by him. At the same time, it is desirable that there should be a pronouncement by Government, by the Honourable the Finance Member, as to whether it is possible to bring about a condition of soundness in exchange, which Mr. Rhodes also pleaded for. Sir, Mr. Rhodes said that the time is not opportune for the appointment of a Committee at present, and he asked : ' While conditions are international and not national, can a Committee do any good?'. But is there any chance, during the next fifty years to come, of conditions becoming national and not international? With the position of the mark in Germany, and with the chaotic conditions in Russia and Austria, is there any chance, during the next fifty years to come, of the condition of affairs being national and not international, and of Indian exchange and currency being not dependent upon international considerations ?

I do not think, Sir, that the reasons given by Mr. Rhodes really lead to the conclusion that we should hold our hands. If we are to wait 12 Noon. for an atmosphere where the conditions would be national, it will take a very long time.

There are one or two points which I should like to place before the House, so that the Honourable the Finance Member may give us a reply. It is true, Sir, that, until 1920-21, India had a trade balance : that is to say, our exports were larger than our imports as a result of which we had a trade balance, which enabled us to pay the interest upon the heavy debt of 1,75 millions due from this country and also to pay the services and persons who have retired and settled in England. In 1920-21 there was an adverse balance against India to the extent of 79½ crores of rupees, as a result of which there has been great unsteadiness in the matter of exchange, and so on. Also, the Secretary of State has been issuing Council Bills and the Government of India Reverse Council Bills, and, as a result of these operations, there has been a further complication in the exchange problem. Now, the question which I beg to ask the Finance Member is this : ' What has become of the Gold Reserve which was, as Sir Vithaldas Thackersey has pointed out, due to India : and how have the operations of the Secretary of State affected the sending out and bringing in of gold into this country ? ' I believe the Finance Member and the whole House will agree that some attempt should be made to re-open the mint for gold coinage in this country. That is absolutely necessary. But, it may be asked, where is the gold to come from, for the purpose of coining, and is not that dependent upon the answer which the Finance Member can give as to the result of the operations of the Secretary of State in issuing Council Bills ? Sir, so far as this country is concerned, the larger proportion of its imports are from England, while it exports very largely to foreign countries. The result is that a large quantity of gold which should, in the natural course of events, come into India from foreign countries is, to a certain extent, prevented from coming in by the operations carried on by the Secretary of State. That, really, is the cause of all the troubles from which India has been suffering for so many years : and, if I intervene in this debate, it is for the purpose of eliciting an answer from the Finance Member as to what steps he proposes taking in order to prevent the Secretary of State carrying on his operations, so that gold may flow into this country as it ought to. It may be said by the Honourable the Finance Member that, at the present moment, normal conditions have not set in and our trade balance would continue to remain adverse, mainly because Germany has not been rehabilitated in world trade as much as we should desire. But, supposing that normal conditions do come in, is there any chance of the Secretary of State not operating in the way in which he has been doing to prevent gold coming into India ? That is the question to which I should like an answer.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I rise to speak with great diffidence. I was trying to study the subject, but my attention was drawn to the forewords of a learned and recent monograph on the subject. It is an expression of opinion by an Honourable Member in the British Parliament. The Member said—I am reading from an extract from Hansard, dated 21st December, 1920—he said :

‘ Indeed, I have read that only one person knows the real arcana of foreign exchanges, and he is in a lunatic asylum ’.

So, my enthusiasm has considerably cooled down as I do not wish to follow him to that interesting place. But, all the same, it might clear the air if we tried to discuss the subject from a commonsense point of view. One fact is patent, that not very long ago the rupee value rose to 2s. 10d. and to-day it is 1s. 4d. It is, of course, varying daily, telegraphic transfers at the moment being quoted at a little above 1s. 3d. ; a few months ago, it rose to 1s. 5d. and so the average of this year may be put down at 1s. 4d. I am not going to discuss the reasons for these fine fluctuations or the causes which promote daily fluctuations. There is the outstanding fact that the rupee has rapidly fallen from 2s. 10d. and to-day it is 1s. 3d. or a little more. A variation of this kind is bad for trade and commerce, bad for people who have to meet liabilities in the London market and bad for the whole country generally as it re-acts on the prices. In order that prices may assume a normal level, it is necessary that the exchange should not so fluctuate and be normal. The question is : what policy of currency and exchange should be pursued? The present policy, I understand, is one of inaction. I do not see what other policy can be pursued at the present moment. But one thing stands out ; that is, that our currency policy was based on what is called the Gold Exchange Standard. It was the Gold Exchange Standard that helped to preserve the stability of our exchange in pre-war times. The position was that we had a Gold Reserve in England, and, whenever there was a fluctuation in exchange, that is, when the exchange showed a downward tendency, Reverse Council Bills were sold in this country and the Secretary of State paid therein gold from the Reserve, in the London market. That was how he regulated the exchange ; whenever there was any marked tendency of rise or fall in the exchange, he sold Council Bills there at 1s. 4d. or a little above, and Reverse Council Bills were sold in this country at a rate slightly below but seldom below 1s. 3 $\frac{2}{3}$ d. Now the great blunder that was made was the selling of Reverse Council Bills on a large scale during the time that the rupee value rapidly rose to 2s. 9d. or thereabouts. There is no justification in economics for selling Reverse Council Bills when the exchange is in favour of India. By so doing we know what losses we have incurred. I am speaking from memory and I think the net loss of India would be something like Rs. 60 crores.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Finance Member) : No.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri : It was stated to be 35 crores last year. I am not in possession of the exact figures, but I believe the loss, we have incurred, would exceed Rs. 50 crores.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : No.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri : I am speaking subject to correction. It was not less than Rs. 35 crores last year, but I recollect that there were certain items which remained to be adjusted last year, and, before the adjustments are placed before us during the Budget statement, I am not in a position to definitely say whether the net loss has exceeded Rs. 35 crores or it is very much where it is. But one thing is certain that our Gold Reserve in London has got depleted, and, now that it has got depleted, my view is that the Gold Exchange Standard, upon which the stability of our currency depended, has now broken down. So long as we cannot build up a sufficient and mobile Gold Reserve, we cannot possibly regulate the exchange with the same certainty as we were capable of doing before the war. Of course, I do not share the views of my Honourable friend, Sir Vithaldas Thackersey, that we should never try to raise the rupee to the basis of 2 shillings, but, with regard to that, there is difference of opinion. The view of the average man in the street, of the consumers generally, which may not be the view of the commercial community or the manufacturers and exporters generally, is that a 2 shilling rupee will ease down the prices. Anyhow, we want a stability of exchange. May I not ask : ' So long as we have to pay a large amount of Indian revenue in the shape of Home charges, how shall we be prejudiced if we had the rupee fixed at 2 shillings ? ' Now, a further reason for fixing the rupee at 2 shillings is that it would be the preliminary stage for the establishment in India of a gold currency. I do not see any way out of our present difficulties except the pursuance of a policy gradually working up to the gold currency. Then, the other proposition which my friend, Sir Vithaldas Thackersey, has advanced will be possible, viz., the opening of Indian mints to the free coinage of gold and the location of a Gold Standard Reserve in India. Therefore, my submission is, that there is a good deal of scope for inquiry with regard to the matter. The system, that formerly existed, viz., the Gold Exchange Standard system, since the depletion of our Gold Reserve Balances in England, has, in my opinion, absolutely broken down, and, therefore, there is at present a necessity for inquiry, and I do not say that immediately a Committee should be appointed, but discussion on this question will clear peoples' ideas rather than the reverse. Therefore, I beg to support my friend, Sir Vithaldas Thackersey's Resolution. Although his premises and my premises do not agree, the conclusions agree. This reminds me of a judge who was a little eccentric, but had a strong sense of justice ; and whenever he delivered judgments, though his premises were sometimes wrong, yet his conclusions were generally right. I commenced by saying that the man who professes to be an infallible judge on the question of currency exchange is, perhaps, in the lunatic asylum, but, having said that, I would not labour this question any longer. I am prepared to make allowances for individual views. With regard to the Resolution, I do say that there can be no harm done by a free discussion of this very momentous question by a Committee.

Mr. R. A. Spence (Bombay : European) : Mr. President, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar led his points by asking for information from the Finance Member as that was one of the reasons which he had come up from the Fiscal Commission for. I also, Sir, would like to have a little information from the Finance Member in regard to the opening of the Indian mints for the coinage of gold. Might we know what happened to the gold coins that were coined in the Indian mints ? It certainly took a certain amount of money to coin those gold mohurs. I do not know whether any Members of the House have ever seen a mohur. (Voices—' I have seen.') A few Members have seen. I believe a very large quantity of gold, in the form of sovereigns, used to come out regularly to this country. What happened to it ? What will happen to that gold if it comes out to this country in the future ? It will simply go into the form of gold ornaments. What is the use, under such circumstances, of going to the expense of opening a branch of the Royal Mint in India for the coinage of gold coins which are probably going to be melted down and used as ornaments? It is a waste of money.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : I recognise, Sir, the importance which the Assembly has attached to this question, for I notice that no less than seven Members have tabled the same Resolution in identical words. For my part, however, I rejoice that the chance of the ballot fell to my Honourable friend, Sir Vithaldas Thackersey, for we remember from the days of the old Council which used to assemble in Calcutta in the free Morley-Minto days how valiant a protagonist Sir Vithaldas has been on behalf of certain claims of India in regard to our exchange and currency operations. I rejoice moreover because he is a practical man, because he knows at first hand the problems of the money market and he has not sought to confuse issues to-day by any considerations of a purely doctrinaire nature. He has not, for instance, developed a post-mortem examination into the Report of the Babington-Smith Committee, and I shall not in following him dwell at any great length on the history of the Report of that Committee and the operations with which we were concerned in attempting to give effect to its recommendations. There is very little value in the gruesome process of an autopsy and to-day I hope we shall be able to give our attention purely to the practical problems of the present and of the future.

Now, Sir, I recognise that the demand for a further Committee of inquiry into our exchange position is widespread and extends far beyond this Assembly. I will, if Sir Vithaldas Thackersey will allow me, re-state in my own words the position as it has been put forward to us at different times. We are told that the retention on our Statute Book of a rate which is divorced from actual circumstances is detrimental in two ways. In the first place, it distorts the national accounts; in the second place, it vitiates the course of trade, because, as Sir Vithaldas himself remarked, both importers and exporters are doubtful whether Government does not intend at some time or another to take steps to make that rate effective. Let me add another point to which he has not called attention, namely, that there are also a considerable number of importers who refuse to implement contracts into which they entered in the past, on the ground that Government is under the responsibility of taking steps to raise the level of exchange to the two shilling figure. We are told, therefore, that India, having by the force of circumstances lost the advantage of a stabilised exchange, we, so far from assisting India in her difficulty, have increased the complexity of the case, for we keep on our Statute Book a figure which leaves trade in doubt as to the measure of Government interference in the future, with a view to making our statutory figure effective. Indeed, Sir Vithaldas went so far as to say that, when exchange rose last September, traders were doubtful whether we were not going to take some steps to manipulate exchange, and, therefore, did not cover their transactions. In parenthesis I will remark that, if they did so, it was surely their own fault, for we made it very clear during the course of the past year that we did not intend to take any such steps.

That is the problem as it has been presented to us, and the supporters of the proposed Committee suggest that we should remove from the horizon of trade this distorting figure of our two-shilling exchange and give them something which would clear their mental vision in regard to their future operations. Now, Sir, when we go somewhat further and ask not what we might desire the Committee to consider but what we might expect it to effect, I think that its supporters fall into two classes. The first, which I might without any disrespect describe as the more theoretical, hopes that the Committee could, as the result of inquiry, actually stabilise exchange or, at all events, lay down for us a new rate of exchange which, by the exhibition of the proper administrative methods, might be maintained for some considerable period of time to come. The second class of thinker, whom I will describe as the more practical of the two, merely asks that in the interval, pending the time when, owing to the improvement of trade conditions, it will be possible to reconsider the problem, in that interval, the operations of Government shall be guided by advice of the Committee as to what it should do and what it should avoid in the interests of trade.

Now, Sir, I will consider to begin with the first class, which I have described as the rather more theoretical of the two. Now, I wish to make it clear that I do not now intend to take up the attitude that the report of the Babington-Smith Committee was the last and final word on the subject; I think also that the House knows me well enough to accept my assurance that I do not in what I shall say to-day in any way discount the value of eliciting the best Indian opinion on this difficult question. That the Home authorities do not discount the value of such opinion is, I think, shown amply by the recent appointment of Mr. Dalal to the India Council, an appointment which I may say I welcome as heartily as Sir Vithaldas Thackersey himself. But, nevertheless, I say with great confidence and without the slightest hesitation that if any one here or outside this Assembly thinks that any Committee appointed now could either stabilise exchange or lay down a new rate at which exchange might be expected to be maintained either by the movement of trade or by the manipulations of Government, then his hopes are entirely illusory. I follow my Honourable friend, Mr. Rhodes, in what he has said on this subject; the problem is an international one, and is not confined to India alone. The question was raised in another place last March. Every commercial man there expressed the same opinion as Mr. Rhodes has placed before you to-day. Why, Sir, even the Proposer of the Resolution in that other place had to admit that not even a Committee of Archangels could be expected to find a solution to the exchange rate at the present time. Let me give briefly to the House my reasons for the confident statement I have made. The level of our exchange depends of course on the external demand for the rupee, and the demand for the rupee in turn depends on the foreign demand for India's products. Now, when the trade of the whole continent of Europe is weltering in a chaos of depression, is it possible that any Committee would be able to predicate when that demand is likely to revive in such strength as to affect our rupee and to what extent it is likely to affect our rupee? Then, Sir, there is another problem, secondary if you like, but still important, namely, the position of gold. We know that, as the rupee rises, the price of gold must fall, and it is an interesting problem, but a problem which I think it would be difficult to explore with any certainty, as to how far the demand for gold in India would extend if the price were to fall materially, say to twenty rupees per tola. We know that when the price does fall, India is apt to use all her resources to obtain cheap gold. The import of gold in itself has the effect of liquidating a favourable trade balance, and to that extent lowering the rupee. Here, then, is a second indefinite factor of the very greatest difficulty, and taking these two indeterminate factors together, viz., the difficulty of prophesying the extent of the revival of the balance of trade on the continent and the difficulty of prophesying what would be the demand for gold in India when gold became cheap, the elements of uncertainty are so great that I believe that no Committee could at present—I say advisedly at present—safely make any recommendation to this House. Assume that a Committee had been appointed last March in reply to the demand then made, I know of no better illustration of the difficulties which would have confronted it than the course of subsequent events in this country. During the autumn it looked as though we might expect a revival of the balance of trade; there was of course no definite saving of the pendulum, but exports were gaining on imports and the rupee was rising; yet, at the very moment, that the rupee stood at its highest, there occurred a cataclysmal fall of the German mark,—a fall due, perhaps not even to economic conditions but to political conditions. However that may be, the mark fell heavily, the demand for our exports suddenly dropped and the rupee dropped also. Now, Sir, I put it to the House whether it is advisable or reasonable to ask a Committee to consider the future of exchange at a time when our exchange itself is but a flickering flame, blown about by every breath of the continental exchanges—I say, Sir, let trade stabilise itself before we begin to predicate conditions which are necessary for stabilising exchange. The Committee might condemn our 2 shillings gold rate—they condemn it whole-heartedly, but even so we should advance no further unless they can propose a stable substitute. Here, I think, comes in the danger of the proposal which Sir Vithaldas puts forward. He commenced by suggesting only an inquiry and an investigation; but I think he himself recognised fully that this was not enough, for he committed himself to the suggestion that the Committee might put forward some definite rate less destructive of the interests of the country than our 2 shillings gold figure. He did not, it is true, commit himself to a figure; it might be 1*s.* 4*d.* or 1*s.* 6*d.* or 1*s.* 8*d.*, but it had to be some definite rate. Sir, what would be the use of suggesting any rate to us for insertion on the Statute Book unless we were prepared to support it with administrative measures, that is, that when exchange fell below that rate, we should be prepared to sell Reverse Councils to maintain it? Would the Honourable Member honestly advise us in present circumstances to take such steps to support what he describes as an intermediate rate? Would any commercial member here suggest that we should now attempt to substitute on our Statute Book a rate which looked as if it would be operative for a few years to come, and attempt to support it by administrative measures? Why, Sir, I believe that the attempt to do so would in itself be more detrimental to trade—I follow my friend, Mr. Rhodes, in this respect—more detrimental to trade than our present ‘policy of masterly inaction.’ In short, Sir, Sir Vithaldas’ suggestion begins with a Committee of inquiry, it ends inevitably in a suggestion that we fix a new rate amid abnormal conditions and maintain this rate artificially.

Now, Sir, for the second class of persons, those whom I have described as those who would have the Committee address itself only to the immediate problems before us. Let me state the nature of these problems as I myself see them when we saw that we could not maintain a rate of 2 shillings gold and that our attempt to do so was doomed to failure, we declined to throw into the battle our few remaining battalions, the Gold Standard Reserve and the Sterling Investments remaining in the Paper Currency Reserve; those of course we still hold. Now, it may be that there are those who fear that we may still intend to take steps directly to support exchange by the utilisation of those reserves. I think, however, that we were supported by commercial opinion in this country in our refusal to dissipate the whole of our resources, and, in our present determination to keep these as far as possible intact. But it may nevertheless still be some who fear that we may be intending to use these reserves artificially to raise exchange. Now the method by which we could utilise those reserves would, of course be only that of re-opening the sale of Reverse Councils: and I can give the Assembly this much guarantee, at all events, that we should not re-open the sale of Reverse Councils in order to maintain exchange or to raise exchange in the manner suggested, without first coming to this Assembly. (Hear, hear.) But, Sir, I think that the practical man is really not himself afraid of our attempting artificially to raise exchange by direct methods of this nature. His apprehension may be voiced in somewhat different terms; he realises that, in the present state of depression, anything that we could do by utilising our sterling reserves would be probably doomed to failure, and he gives us sufficient credit for common sense to assume that we shall not make that attempt. What he fears is, that as trade revives, as India regains her lost balance of trade and a rising demand for rupees at home, then the Secretary of State will deliberately stand out of the market in order to let that demand force the rupee up to the 2s. gold standard. That, I think, is his real apprehension. Let me give the House in as few words as possible the exact bearing of this; the matter is of course a little technical. The Secretary of State has to make payments on behalf of India in the ordinary course of affairs of about £20 or 30 millions a year, added to which of course is the expenditure on account of capital outlay on railways and the like. Ordinarily, he would keep himself in funds by selling Councils. But, if he can manage either by utilising any resources of his own, or by raising fresh loans, to stand out of the market, then, if there is a strong demand for rupees, it is clear that he will be assisting the rupee to climb the ascending scale. And the practical man now asks, whether I can tell him whether when trade re-establishes itself, when the former balance in favour of India is revived and the demand for rupees again becomes active, the Secretary of State will deliberately stand out, using every device to keep himself in funds rather than selling Councils, or whether he will sell Councils at any rate which the market may give him? That, I think, is really the question which the practical man is asking me to answer to-day. Now, Sir, on that point, I think, I can remove some of his apprehensions. There are two substantial grounds on which he is entitled to feel some confidence in the matter. In the first place, it is clear that there must be some considerable delay before a state of affairs arises in which the abstention of the Secretary of State becomes effective, that is to say, before there is such a strong demand for the rupee that his abstention from the market will have the effect of raising the rupee level. There must be a solid balance of trade in favour of India, a balance of trade so solid that it will counter-balance that flood of remittance which some people tell us is waiting in order to swamp down exchange as it has once done before. I do not myself pretend to estimate the amount of remittance that is waiting. It is a difficult problem, but I mention it only because we are frequently told that there is a large quantity of remittance that is only waiting for a favourable rate of exchange to go Home. But my point is that there must be a solid balance of trade in favour of India, sufficiently solid to counter-balance any demand for remittance from this side. That is one point. The second is even more important, namely, that the Secretary of State's ability to stand out of the market for any length of time, as Mr. Rhodes pointed out, is very limited. We know the amount of his resources. Last year he financed himself largely for his current needs by drawing on the War Office against payments that we had made out here on account of the employment of Indian troops overseas; that source of supply is now failing him as has of course the Gold Standard Reserve, and the small remainder of our investments in the Paper Currency Reserve to draw against. But his power to utilise those reserves depends upon our power to deflate our paper currency out here. I know the apprehensions felt in some of our money markets regarding the possibility of a rapid deflation of our paper currency; I confine myself here to saying that events have shown that our power of rapid deflation is by no means considerable. Since it is our power to deflate which in its turn decides the power of the Secretary of State to draw against the Gold Standard and Paper Currency Reserves at Home, since his power to finance himself by starting loans is also not unlimited, it is inevitable, as Mr. Rhodes pointed out, that the force of circumstances will before long drive him to the market to keep himself in funds, and when the Secretary of State sells Council Bills, he ceases to have any power to raise exchange. I hope, Sir, that I have succeeded in removing some of the apprehensions which the practical man has felt regarding the steps which we can take, or are likely to take in the immediate present, and, I think, therefore, that I may put it to the House with confidence that there will be very little value in appointing a Committee to examine this section of our problems.

Now, Sir, let me turn to the second part of the Resolution. It proposes that the suggested Committee should consider the question of opening the Indian Mints to the free coinage of gold. Now, I must really assume that my Honourable friend, Sir Vithaldas Thackersey, expert as he is in these questions, has really included this in his Resolution to satisfy the feelings of some of his friends, rather than because he himself supposes that this question does actually need the further investigation of an expert Committee. He is well aware, Sir, that it was a cardinal feature in the policy of the Babington-Smith Committee that the Indian Mints should be opened to the free coinage of gold. Indeed, one of the intentions of the Committee in fixing the rupee on a gold basis was to permit of the free use of gold currency in India, and the opening of the Mints to the free coinage of gold is an aid to such a process, though of course it is not in itself an essential condition of it. We, Sir, are prepared out here to coin gold as soon as the need for gold currency arises. Sir Vithaldas Thackersey suggested that the Royal Mint might on technical grounds refuse to allow us to do so. He need have no fear on that score. I can give him a guarantee that as soon as the demand for gold currency arises, the Mint will be ready for it. It is clear, however, Sir, that so long as the present premium on gold as compared with its statutory parity exists, no such demand can arise. It could not indeed arise, as the Honourable Member himself knows quite well, even if we reduced our statutory rate to Rs. 15 to the £ or Rs. 16 or even Rs. 17 to the £, for, I think, that gold is selling to-day at about Rs. 28 a tola, which means the value of gold in the sovereign is over Rs. 17½. No coin could circulate for a minute if its gold value was above its face value. That would be exactly the same with the Indian coin to which Sir Vithaldas Thackersey referred. The bullion value will fluctuate from day to day, and when it fell below its face value, it would circulate; the minute it rose above its face value, it would go into the melting pot. In these circumstances, Sir, the question of opening the Indian Mints to the coinage of gold is not one of practical politics, nor will be until we can hit, on such a Mint par as we can be sure that the bullion value will not go above it. On that point, then, I think, Sir Vithaldas will probably be prepared to accept my answer as sufficient.

Now, Sir, I come to the third part of that Resolution. I can give him here, I fancy, the assurance which he requires. At present, the Gold Standard Reserve is not, as I think, perhaps the House might have inferred from the words used by the Honourable Member, held in long-term securities. It is held mainly in British Treasury Bills which are easily realisable. Now it is obvious that if it should be necessary for the Secretary of State to place himself in funds—and I have already described to the House the circumstances in which he may have to do so—by drawing on the Gold Standard Reserve, we should have to ear-mark out here a corresponding amount of money, for the Gold Standard Reserve is of course a self-contained fund. What is withdrawn from London we have to replace here. The net result will then of course be a transfer of the Gold Standard Reserve from London to India. The Secretary of State has agreed that if and when such transfers are made, the Gold Standard Reserve out here should, to the extent of the gold we possess, be held in the form of gold. Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar asked us what the Secretary of State had done with our gold—or at least I understood his question to be to this effect. I think Sir Vithaldas Thackersey also suggested that the whole of India's gold was being held in London. That, Sir, is not of course the case,—far from it. We have 24½ million pounds of India's gold in India. We hold this in the Paper Currency Reserve, and the process I have described will involve the transfer of the gold from the Paper Currency Reserve to the Gold Standard Reserve. It is more than probable that the Secretary of State will, in the course of the following year, have to draw upon the Gold Standard Reserve. The process of transfer will then of course begin and one of Sir Vithaldas Thackersey's ambitions will be in course of satisfaction.

Sir, I have no desire to meet the general case which has been put before us by purely negative arguments. I recognise that there is general anxiety felt on this subject, but I think that the House will agree with me after what I have said that there is really no need at all for any expert investigation on the second and third points mentioned in the Resolution. The policy has been laid down in a manner which, I am sure, will commend itself to the House, and only awaits for the march of events to become operative. As regards the first part of the Resolution, Sir, I have put my case not on any opposition to further investigation by technical experts or men of affairs, but merely on the ground that, in the present state of international trade, such an investigation would be of no avail whatever. The instability of conditions is such that I fear with Mr. Rhodes that if a Committee were to inquire into the case now, it would only end in failure, a failure which might be more damaging to India than the present policy and inaction. But, Sir, if the march of events should be quicker than we anticipate, should developments occur which would seem to make further expert investigation necessary, then I should not have the slightest hesitation in proposing the appointment of such a Committee, and a committee moreover on which Indian opinion will be fully represented.

Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary (Calcutta : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : Sir, remembering what Sir Malcolm Hailey told the Imperial Legislative Assembly in September before last, when the question came up in connection with the consideration of Mr. Dalal's dissent, I am not surprised - indeed I am re-assured - that he adheres to the undertaking he had given then, that the question shall be subjected to revision as soon as circumstances are favourable. From what we have heard from the business men to-day, both European and Indian, I am afraid the lay Members of this Assembly, who have no desire to qualify for the lunatic asylum, will have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that, although Sir Vithaldas Thackersey has made himself responsible for this Resolution, it ought not to command support in this Assembly. The European point of view may, by some, be considered to be different from the Indian. But we have here acute differences of opinion amongst Indian business men also. That, I think, ought to be enough to dispose of the position for the present, so far as lay Members are concerned.

To my mind, Sir, there are two other considerations other than those already urged, why we ought to stay action for the present and wait for further developments which are coming on apace. I have great faith in Mr. Dalal, and join with Sir Vithaldas Thackersey and Sir Malcolm Hailey in welcoming his appointment to the Council of the Secretary of State. For the first time in the annals of that Council, Indian financial public opinion will be accurately and fearlessly represented. I think we ought to see what his advice is able to achieve in the matter of the bogey man of 'solid facts' about the Secretary of State's demand that is always being brought forward in aid of unmasterly activity. We are told that we should await the return of normal conditions, and, I think, we await Mr. Dalal and his appointment to see how far they will assist in making masterly inactivity rational.

In the second place, Sir, I hope, though members of the Fiscal Commission are behaving in the truant-like fashion, twice confessed to-day, they ought to be able to give us something tangible and soon, otherwise I shall begin to dread Mr. Rhodes' fears about Committees and Commissions. If upon the trade balance in favour of India depends, as it must, largely, the solution of the question, I think we must wait and see what trade balance will be assured under the recommendations, that some expect, will be made by the Fiscal Commission. What is the amount of protection they are going to recommend? How is the question of Imperial Preference going to be dealt with? These and corresponding retaliation are some of the considerations upon which the future trade balance of India will depend, and the sooner those recommendations come or are given effect to, the better will be the chances for India's financial and exchange adjustments. Sir, those who have followed the deliberations of the Fiscal Commission know that, in their greed for work, they are turning themselves into an Industrial Commission, into a Railway Commission, and I believe also into an Education Commission. Probably they will turn themselves into an Exchange and Currency Commission also and will have a great deal to say with regard to those questions. Even if we do not get a helpful lead from them, their deliberations about their own legitimate topic regarding Protection and Imperial Preference and allied subjects will certainly open out new vistas, of which we cannot refuse to take note particularly with regard to what may be the trade balance of India. For these considerations, Sir, I think we ought to adhere to the policy of 'wait and see' for a little longer. There will be nothing to prevent Sir Vithaldas Thackersey from bringing up a demand for inquiry as soon as the necessity arises and materials are ready. Probably in connection with the next Budget, when a big deficit may be Sir Malcolm Hailey's misfortune to have to announce to the House, there will be such an occasion. But I should not allow the artificially manipulated German mark, or for the matter of that, the fabulous German gold chemical, or otherwise, to interfere with the straight-forward and business-like solution of a question which we ought to make national as soon as we possibly can. We have been told that we should wait till it ceases to be international and becomes national. How is it going to be so unless, we, here in this Assembly, take a firm stand and an attitude about which there can be no mistaking in the business world of Europe or anywhere else? With it, is largely connected the question of unrest which is largely economic. We have to work out our own salvation, and must do so early in our own way but, I am afraid, the materials before us are not all that real experts would like to have.

Undoubtedly when a practical financier speaks of current events, he has to give the go-by to the theoretical and the academic economist and we have to depend upon every day and current practical facts, which I believe ought to be collected and focussed by such a Committee as Sir Vithaldas Thackersey demands and to which Sir Malcolm Hailey and the European business-men have and can have no objection. But we are not satisfied—those who cannot go deep into the matter—that the materials that would now be available would be far different from those which the Babington-Smith Committee had before it or any of those people who have been working since on the question. The result may therefore be equally disastrous or worse. I quite agree with Sir Malcolm Hailey that no great gain

I P. M. would follow from a gruesome post mortem examination of the kind that he has referred to, particularly after the handsome manner in which he told the Assembly how the Government had erred in the matter in connection with the last Budget. It ought to be the last word on the subject. So far, I do not think that except by way of warning, we can usefully go into matters that have gone before. Otherwise I would quote Sir David Barber, whom I met in London and with whom I had a short discussion about this matter. He had to say much in the way of a grievance that he was not listened to many years ago and may yet have to be. After many years he feels that, if his advice had been followed, the difficulty that India is in now, even in spite of the war, would not have arisen. We cannot with advantage go into pre-historic matters in acutely live and changing subjects like this. And we shall have to depend for current facts upon people who understand them and collect them honestly and assiduously. Such a Committee will have to come soon, but not immediately.

M. K. Reddi Garu (South Arcot cum Chingleput: Non-Muhammadian Rural): I beg to move the following amendment:

'In place of the words 'be appointed' substitute the words 'be elected by the non-official Members of the Legislature'.

I should not be on my legs to-day with my amendment when a most complicated question is being discussed. But, Sir, while attending to the course of discussion, I felt as if I heard a note of warning, coming from afar, whispering in my ears, a truly Biblical warning :

'If these be thy gods, O, Israel ! woe be indeed unto thee, the land of vain regrets.'

I evidently think it is a note of warning against the personnel of this would-be Committee now under discussion. It is no doubt, known to you all, that we have had enough sorrows as the result of the composition and the recommendations of the Babington-Smith Committee. It seems to me that we should be over-careful at least in the selection of this Committee. In this Committee we shall not want men who ever worship at the altar of the Olympian gods, nor those who are ever ready to dance to the tune of the Government. On the other hand, we want men, who will not sell their birth-right and their country for a handful of silver or for a ribbon to stick in their coat. Sir, we want men true to their conscience and true to their country, men with mature wisdom and ripe experience, men who have made a life-long study of those most seducing, most deceiving and most dangerous of all problems, the problems of exchange and currency. We do not want men who cannot understand the very rudimentary principles of economics, that prices are the functions of three variables, namely, the volume of currency, the demand and supply of commodities. We do want men who would discuss and thresh out these problems from the different aspects in the true light impartially, and favour the establishment of a currency on a self-adjusting, automatic bases, conducted with the widest possible measure of publicity.

Sir, our country is not in dearth of such eminent men and we have enough and to spare. If necessary, I can give you the names of three score and ten, not in any way inferior to the men who occupy the Treasury Benches, either here or in England, worthy to serve in such Committees. So, let it not be said of us at any future date that our Committee is not truly representative of the people, and that the Committee is a packed one, packed with broken horses, who would dance to the whip of the vested interests. I would request the House to think twice, nay a hundred times, if necessary, before rejecting my amendment, because we are dealing with a problem which touches the pockets of every man in the country.

Sir, whatever may be the personnel of this Committee, whether elected or nominated, allow me to place a few facts which are very likely to be overlooked by the members of this Committee. First, with regard to the Home Charges, the Indian tax-payer's liability to pay in sterling is the root cause of his perpetual handicap, and the critics demand that liability should practically cease. The right remedy for this is to substitute an Indian agency, as far as may be possible, and leave the trade conditions to adjust themselves according to the prevailing relative values of silver and gold.

There is another question, the less said about it the better, the question of the purchase of silver in England by the Secretary of State. Instead of purchasing it in the open market by a public tender, our proverbially charitably disposed Secretary of State persists in the continuity of the old policy of purchasing silver in his own country and through only one or two interested brokers, at a price much higher than that paid by the Royal Mint of His Majesty. What private motives the Secretary of State's Council has, we know not, but they are all honourable men. I know not what reasons actuate them in the continuance of this disastrous policy—it is better understood than stated. I leave it to you to judge for yourselves.

Again, the Royal Mint of England is stoutly opposed to the establishment of a branch at Bombay; if that is true, what motives prompt them, I am at a loss to understand.

As regards the Gold Standard Reserve, its location in England cannot but be misunderstood here; because, if I remember aright, it has not been used more than twice to maintain the stability of exchange since its establishment in 1901. Its location in England has been of immense benefit to the British merchants and the public and even to the Dominion Governments at all times. In this connection, let me read out to you a passage in one of the memoranda submitted to the Babington-Smith Committee on this subject of holding the Reserve in England:

'There is no use in ignoring the heart-burning caused in India at the investment of a major portion of this Reserve in securities among a rich population who can certainly manage without this loan, while the trade in India suffer at times from a Bank rate of 8 per cent. to whom two or even three crores during the busy season would be a welcome shower'.

Sir, I do not think that those who talk glibly about tinkering with the Currency realise the gravity and seriousness of the political issues involved; the sullen discontent prevailing all over the country has only an economic background—the problem of poverty.

To sum up, India now wants not gold, nor a Gold Exchange Standard which is neither fish, flesh, nor good red herring, but a standard which can be relied upon for deferred payments, which will not increase the burden of the debtor at the expense of the creditor, and which would not fluctuate in value according to the Government here, or a Minister there, and which will, in short, perform the function of money as satisfactorily as any standard can.

With these few words, I move my amendment.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: I am afraid that I have not had time to accept the invitation of Mr. Reddi and consider his amendment two hundred or three hundred times before opposing it; for I feel myself obliged to oppose it forthwith. It has been supported by such unusual arguments and accompanied by such insinuations, that I cannot feel that it is one which can possibly commend itself to the House. Sir, in the first place, the Honourable Member suggested that previous Committees were composed of gentlemen who joined them 'for the sake of a handful of gold.' Does he mean to cast on the illustrious members of such Committees, as the Fowler, Chamberlain or Babington-Smith Committees, the insinuation that they sought to line their pockets by the advice which they pretended to give in the interests of India? Again, does he suggest that it is only the Members of this House who can be trusted not to enter into a Committee with similar motives? There are on the Fiscal Commission at present many members who are not Members of this House. Does the Honourable Member mean to convey an imputation that they are likely to give advice to the Legislature based on their own private and personal interests? I repudiate at once any such suggestion and I am sure that the House will join with me in feeling that if the only thing which the Honourable Member can urge in favour of restricting the members of the Committee to elected Members of this House, is that other Committees have been swayed by personal motives, then his case is indeed a weak one. He has again, going beyond the definite proposition that the Committee, if appointed, should be elected in the manner suggested in his amendment, going beyond that, he has suggested that if such Committee were appointed and in such manner, they and no other Committee would be able to put an end to the scandal of the purchase of silver by the Secretary of State.

Sir, the fact that the purchase of silver by the Secretary of State is made in London has been criticised and attacked in the past. It has been said that buying in London is contrary to the interests of India. That is as it may be; it is a controversial point on which I do not wish to enter into now. The point I wish to make is that the Honourable Member, if I understand him aright, has here brought a definite accusation against the India Office of so arranging these purchases of silver as to conduce to their personal benefit. Again, Sir, I can do nothing but repudiate so extraordinary a suggestion against an honourable body. Now let me come to the substance of the amendment. I will not refer again to the unusual grounds on which Mr. Reddi has thought fit to support his amendment, nor will treat the proposal on its merits. What he suggests is that the Committee, if appointed, should be elected by the non-official Members of this Legislature. Well, I am sorry, Sir, that I should be thought unfit to cast a vote in a matter of this nature. I am sorry that my other official friends here are thought to be men of such low mental or perhaps moral capacity that their assistance in the selection of the Committee would not be welcomed. But leaving that aside, my major objection is this. If you want a Committee which will give you the best advice on this subject, it must be taken from men who have a large, a wide and a liberal education in financial matters. The House would not be well advised to confine a Committee on so highly controversial, complicated and expert a subject to its own Members. That is a point of substance on which I hope the House will agree with me. When I look round the benches before me, I ask whether in this Assembly, for it must be from the Assembly alone that if this amendment is accepted, the Members will be drawn, you will be able to obtain all the expert advice that you require on a question of this nature. I do not in any way seek to depreciate the merits and the attainments of the Members of this Assembly, but on a subject of this nature, so vital to the interest of Indian trade and commerce and consequently so vital to the future of India's political development, you should not seek to obtain a Committee purely from among your own Members. You should so range far and wide and so enlarge the field of selection as to get the very best advisers you can find in India.

Mr. President : The question is that the following amendment be made :

'In place of the words 'be appointed' substitute the words 'be elected by the non-official Members of the Legislature.'

The motion was negatived.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey : Before I reply to the details of the debate, I must convey my gratitude to the Honourable Member for the compliment he has paid me. At the same time, I am sorry to say, that I differ from him on several points pertaining to my Resolution. My Honourable friend, Sir Malcolm Hailey, is one of our cleverest debaters, and he has, in his reply, avoided altogether the main issue that brings forward this Resolution. If I were to go into details and to reply to all his arguments, I am afraid my speech would go on after lunch, but, as I should like to finish my reply before we adjourn, I shall confine myself only to two or three main issues raised by him. The main issue is the statutory standard of 2s. With regard to the power of the Secretary of State to artificially raise that exchange to 2s. if he likes, the reply of my Honourable friend is that the Secretary of State is too poor to carry out that power. Most of our gold has been squandered away. The Honourable Member did not use the word 'squandered', but I say it has been squandered away in selling Reverse Council Bills. Then, again, he says that the Secretary of State is living, owing to certain circumstances, upon the amount which Government is to receive in England for Military Expenditure in India on behalf of the Home Government, and, therefore, he is too poor and we need not fear that he will carry out his power. I want Government to make a declaration that the Secretary of State will not use his power. Unless we are assured that he will give up that power, this House should insist that that power be taken away from him. That is the main issue. If the Honourable Member is prepared to declare to-day that that power will not be used, I am perfectly satisfied. But that kind of undertaking has not been forthcoming from the Honourable Member and the only conclusion that this House can arrive at is, that, whenever an opportunity occurs, the Secretary of State may carry out that power. Now, I warn Government against any such action. The Secretary of State did utilise his powers in 1920 and in the early part of 1921. With what result? Imports were encouraged and exports were discouraged. Merchants ordered large quantities of goods on the assumption that they could buy them at a fair value, and Government's action landed them in heavy losses. What consolation is it to these merchants that, when the Budget time comes, you say: 'We made a mistake. Forgive us. We will not do it again'.

This House should insist that Government should declare that they will not use this power and, in the absence of such undertaking, this House should appoint a Committee so that it may be in possession of certain facts and figures on which the House may be able to pass legislation taking away that power from the Secretary of State. After the merchants lost heavily, the astonishing statement was made in this House (I had not the honour of being a Member of the House then) that Government never gave any undertaking that they would maintain exchange at 2s. I do admit that Government never gave an undertaking but what was the meaning of passing legislation fixing 2s. as a standard, making accounts on that basis and selling Reverse Council Bills. We maintain that your action has been worse than your assurances and, on the top of this, we are told that Indian merchants broke their contract.

They say: 'You are all dishonest merchants, you do not honour your drafts'. I do not say that Government are directly responsible, but I put these facts before you in order to prove to this House that it is dangerous to allow this power to remain in the hands of the Secretary of State. It may be that the Secretary of State or his advisers have now changed their view, and been convinced that Mr. Dadiba Dalal was right in his minority report. That is, perhaps, why he has been nominated to the Secretary of State's Council—perhaps, as my Honourable friend, Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikary, has said, the question is being seriously considered. All these assumptions may be true. But that is not a sufficient guarantee that the Secretary of State will not manipulate exchange when the opportunity occurs. On the contrary, what does my Honourable friend, Sir Malcolm Hailey, say? He says, opportunities may occur. Trade may revive, and, then, the Secretary of State may be justified in raising exchange. Well, it comes to the same thing. Not only does Government not give us an assurance that it will not use this power, but it gives a clear indication to us that the power may be used.

Then, with regard to the reply of my Honourable friend about the temporary policy. Well, my object in moving this Resolution for the appointment of a Committee was clearly this: no action or no decision of the character that one can contemplate in a large policy, like that on Currency and Exchange, can be moved in this Council in a direct way, that is, in the nature of a proposal 'do so and so.' Many Members, not knowing the facts, might then say: 'what right has the Mover to definitely say: 'do this, or do that'?' Therefore, the best way of dealing with an important question is through the appointment of a Committee. If a Committee is appointed, and if it comes to the conclusion that a change in the policy is necessary, well, this House will then insist on its being carried out. I do not think, at that time this House will be afraid to carry out and insist upon the policy recommended by the Committee because my Honourable friend, Mr. Rhodes, had said: 'Well, the Honourable Member cannot give a reply and we should not expect it'. I think, when the time comes, he shall give a reply, and the House shall dictate its policy.

Then, with regard to Reverse Councils, my Honourable friend said: 'We do not intend to sell Reverse Councils; we shall not sell Reverse Councils unless we come to this House'. My Honourable friend knows perfectly well that he need not sell Reverse Councils in order to raise exchange. When the trade demand arises, he may refuse to sell Council Bills—he will use the gold resources and not sell Reverse Councils; he will raise loans in England and artificially raise exchange, and not sell Reverse Councils. What is the use of arguing before this House that Government will not sell Reverse Councils, as if the selling of Reverse Councils would raise the rate artificially? All these things can be done so long as the power of the Secretary of State remains.

Then, we have been told that, all over the world, the exchanges are disorganized, trade is disorganized, they have no money to buy our goods: therefore, exchange is weak. But who is complaining about the weak exchange? What we are complaining of is the artificial raising of the exchange. And, then, if you follow the natural course, what will be the natural exchange? Perhaps 1s. 6d. If you allow things to go on on their natural level, it will be 1s. 6d. and not 2 shillings. We have often heard from various sources including the Associated Chambers of Commerce, and several Members here have also said: 'Do not interfere with exchange'. I exactly repeat the same sentence: 'Do not interfere with exchange'. Allow it to go on its natural level. But Government do not say that they will give up the power to interfere. That power, I again repeat, must be taken away by supporting this Resolution.

There is only one point, Mr. President, that I should like to refer to, viz., about the opening of the Gold Mint. We have been told that Government were quite ready to open it. Well, in order that the Committee may consider the question in all its aspects, I have included it in my Resolution; and, of course, if Government are prepared to open the mints to the coinage of gold, I will be perfectly satisfied. With regard to the Gold Standard Reserve, I think I do not agree with everything that has fallen from my Honourable friend. It has been a long complaint, a complaint nearly as old as the time when the Gold Standard Reserve was formed, that it was wrong to leave our gold in London. I will give you the old history in a few words: First, the Gold Standard Reserve was kept in England, not kept in Treasury Bills, as has been said to-day to the great credit of Government, but lent to the English Banks at a low rate of interest. When India protested against this policy, the Secretary of State invested it in long-term securities. We again protested that, if we required it at a moment's notice, it could not be available. Then, the Chamberlain Committee, I believe, condemned the policy. Now, our funds are invested in Treasury Bills. But that is also dangerous and I will explain why it is so. We had 30 million pounds in London before the War broke out. Did we get a single ounce of gold when the time came? Well, the Bank of England's total metallic reserve was about 30 or 40 million pounds. When war broke out, instead of getting our gold back, we had to go on accumulating our gold. We had to keep our gold payable to us for our exports. I think our funds went up—I am speaking from memory to somewhere between 150 and 180 million pounds. At that time we had a currency crisis in India. We had no silver. We had no gold. We wanted to bring out gold here to avoid a currency crisis. If gold had been brought out, people would have been very pleased to take gold instead of rupees. But London did not return us our gold: and we had to buy silver at 50 or 60*d.* Was it not a wrong policy to keep our Gold Reserve there? It is all very well to say: 'We can sell the Treasury Bills and bring the gold whenever you want'. But it is when panic arises, when war breaks out, when we badly want out gold, that it can never be available. Therefore, the right policy is that gold must be kept in India for the purposes for which it was intended.

I think, Mr. President, I have done. I only appeal to this House not to be carried away by the very able arguments of my friend, Sir Malcolm Hailey. The question is too serious to be left over. We must bring our gold back; we must take away the power of the Secretary of State to manipulate exchange. If I do not carry this Resolution, the only satisfaction I will have will be that it is not my fault that the House has not accepted it.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Sir, my reply will be very brief, for I fear that the House may already be weary of this discussion. I perceive now the inwardness of Sir Vitthaldas Thackersey's Resolution: an inwardness which I may say was somewhat concealed by the form of the Resolution which he put forward. He asks for a Committee, but that is not that he wants. What he wants is a definite declaration from me which will bind the action of the Secretary of State; failing that, he wants to have a Committee that will put such pressure upon the Secretary of State that he will be unable to take any further action; failing his compliance with the requirements of that Committee, Sir Vitthaldas requires this House to legislate in order to amend the Government of India Act. That is what he wants. What he asked for, and what we met to debate—was a Committee. Sir Vitthaldas Thackersey says: 'That is a small point. I do not really care whether you have a Committee or not. What I want is a declaration and legislation.' Well, Sir, I came here to discuss the subject of a Committee; Sir Vitthaldas puts that on one side.....

Sir Vitthaldas D. Thackersey: May I explain to the House that the only way in which a Member can force his view on a Resolution of this character is through a Committee.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Sir, I put the case as it seems to me. I put the case that in asking for a Committee Sir Vithaldas has really been asking for something quite different; and he has been asking the House, as he himself admits, to assume a power of control which it does not possess, and which a Committee could not give it.

Now, Sir, as to the declaration, I will only say one word. He requires from me a definite declaration that the Secretary of State will take no artificial steps to raise exchange. I, Sir, took another course in dealing with the Resolution; I gave a very practical and conclusive reply, namely, that the Secretary of State in present circumstances had practically no power to take such steps, not of course on account of any legislative disability, but, as Mr. Rhodes said, owing to the force of circumstances. He has not resources and cannot raise resources sufficient for the purpose. Sir Vithaldas suggested that the reason was that all our resources had already been squandered. He told us of the disabilities of India owing to previous financial mismanagement; he said that our case would be far different if we had been allowed to import gold during the war. He harked as far back as 1920 in his condemnation of our policy. But, Sir, he did not meet my definite point that the Secretary of State's power at present to influence exchange is very small indeed. What, Sir, could a Committee do in the circumstances? The Committee could only say: 'In our opinion it is undesirable that the Secretary of State should now take any artificial means to raise exchange'; and the Secretary of State could only reply: 'Where do I possess such means? If you will show me where I possess the means, I may be able to give you an answer.' But, in truth, Sir, he has not those means; he has no indefinite power of standing out of the market; he has no indefinite power of raising loans; and as I told the House, all the probability lies in the direction of his having to come on the market for Councils himself; and if he does come on the market for Councils, then infallibly he has lost the power of raising exchange. That is a point which Sir Vithaldas did not care to meet.

Then, Sir, Sir Vithaldas was apparently willing to recognize that there was no need for a Committee on the subject of the opening of the Indian Mints to the free coinage of gold. He has handsomely, I think, admitted that. But he has not accepted the point which I put to him and to the House in regard to the Gold Standard Reserve. He is still unsatisfied. And why, Sir, is he unsatisfied? Because he holds that the Gold Standard Reserve was mismanaged in the past. He can not meet the point I have made to-day, that the Gold Standard Reserve is on the point of being transferred to India at present. I definitely pointed out to the House that as soon as the Secretary of State had to draw against the Gold Standard Reserve, then we should have to transfer the gold now in our Paper Currency Reserve to the Gold Standard Reserve, and that would have the effect of transferring the Gold Standard Reserve to India. Sir Vithaldas, I think, in his anxiety not to let the Secretary of State or the India Office or ourselves off too lightly in regard to what he regards as the errors of the past, somewhat obscured the immediate points of the present. I gather that he attaches value to the appointment of a Committee in order that that Committee might support him in his criticisms of what he regards as the mistakes of old times. If that is his view of the appointment of a Committee, then, Sir, I say for once he is deserting his character as a practical man. What a Committee is needed for—if it is needed at all—is to advise us as to the future and not to endorse his recriminations about the past.

Finally, Sir, he still holds that a Committee would be of some value as it would enable us to establish some interim rate of exchange. I honestly do not believe that there is a single commercial man in this country who would support him in asking that an interim rate of exchange should be established, or that it should be supported by Government, by those very means which Sir Vithaldas Thackersey has so often repudiated. I do not believe that he would find in the commercial community any genuine support for such measures in the present instability of the world's exchanges. May I remind the House of the old gibe regarding the mental activities of the metaphysician. I do not wish to see that gibe applied to a Committee of this House; I do not wish it to be said that, like the metaphysician, it resembled a blind man groping in a dark room for a black cat which was not there.

Mr. President: The question is :

'That this Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that a Committee with a majority of Indian members, be appointed to consider the whole question of :

- (1) the present policy of currency and exchange;
- (2) the opening of the Indian Mints to the free coinage of gold; and
- (3) the location of the Gold Standard Reserve in India;

and to report with its recommendations at an early date.'

RESOLUTION RE: THE ABOLITION OF IMPRESSED LABOUR, CONVEYANCE AND PROVISION.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated: Labour Interests): Sir, I beg to move the following Resolution which stands in my name:

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to take immediate steps for the abolition of impressed labour, conveyance and provision, wherever it obtains in India either under Local or Imperial statute or under local custom.'

Sir, whilst speaking on this Resolution I do not propose to trace in detail the origin of this custom from its very beginning. It is sufficient for my purpose to say that this practice of impressed labour is as old as the British rule in India. (A voice: 'Older'), Sir, this practice is also prevalent in all parts of India in one form or another. In spite of the variations that we see in the different parts, there are many common features which we find in every part of the country. The system may be described in short in the following way:

A Government officer goes on tour. He has to fix his tents; he wants labour. He sends for the headman of the village who gets hold of the people in that village, brings them to the camp and makes them do the work for the officer. This practice is also extended to making the people do several other things. In the hill districts of the United Provinces, in the division of Kumaon, coolies are pressed into service to take the baggage of the officers and the tourist friends of the officers. In Sind, people are impressed to repair the roads for the motor car of the officer to travel smoothly on. Then, when the officer is on tour, he also requires certain provisions. He requires earthen pots for his water, so the village kumbhar or potter is pressed into service and asked to supply these earthen pots. Sometimes he is fully paid, many times inadequately paid, and in a number of cases not paid at all. The banya also is asked to take his shop to the tent of the officer. The officer, who is an exalted person, unlike most people, will not go to the banya's shop nor will he agree to send his servant there. The banya must take his shop to the officer's tent. I do not intend to say that the banya is not paid. He is in many cases paid, but the rates are fixed by Government, without having regard to the current prices, and the banya must suffer the loss if the latter are higher than the former. This practice also varies in some other provinces. In Sind, for instance, they have got a system of rasai. There are some small officers who collect funds from the villagers called rasai funds, and out of these funds the expenses of the touring officers, high and low, but many times low, I admit, are met. In order to collect this fund, the village officer also collects a cess—the provincial Government knows that it is collected and it is called lappo, a handful, and every one must contribute a handful, to entertain the officers who visit the village. Then, the touring officer requires carts. He is paid a good travelling allowance, but he is not expected to keep carts in his service. Whenever he goes to a village and he wants to transfer his camp, he again goes to the headman of the village and asks him to provide him with carts. Sometimes the villagers require the carts for their own use. The crop is waiting to be transported from the fields to the depôt, but the need of the officer is greater; he is a privileged person and the villagers' crops must remain in the fields; the carts are pressed into service. These are the ways in which labour, provisions and carts are pressed into service by the Government officers.

All this is not sanctioned by law, as far as I know. I could hardly trace any legislation either in the provincial statute books or in the Imperial statute book by which people could be compelled to work for officers, people could be compelled to take their shops to the officer's tents or to give their carts for the use of the officers. Government officers know that there is no law by which this practice is sanctioned, but they are doing it. But there are some laws which give power to Government to compel people to work on certain occasions. These laws are generally connected with irrigation. There is the Bombay Irrigation Act, the Northern India Irrigation Act, the Burma Irrigation Act and several other Irrigation Acts by which the Irrigation officers are empowered to compel the labouring classes to work on irrigation works under certain emergencies. In these Acts there is some difference, I admit. For instance, in the Bombay Act, every able-bodied man is compelled to work during a time of emergency. In the other Acts it is not that every man is compelled to work. They make a discrimination. It is the men of the labouring classes only who are compelled to work and not the people of the higher classes. If the land-holder happens to be a Brahmin or an educated man, or a merchant, he is not compelled to work, but it is the men of the labouring classes who are compelled to work. Then there is the Indian Forest Act under which people can also be compelled to help the forest officers in certain circumstances. Even the lofty heights of the Simla hills are not free from the evil of impressed labour. Mr. Stokes and Mr. Andrews have revealed to the world certain shocking incidents that took place on those hills. This system is a kind of oppression and also gives rise to petty tyrannies. On this point I do not propose to trust to my own opinion. I should like to read, from a report of the Committee which the United Provinces Government appointed to consider this question, a passage which will show how the matter stands. This is what the report says :

'The district reports show that the complaints regarding the present system are well-founded and that there is practical unanimity as to their nature. They need only to be briefly stated. The banya complains that he is very frequently compelled to attend camp or to pay for exemption from attendance; that he does not ordinarily receive payment for supplies at current rates, that he has invariably to give free food to the tahsil chaprassis attached to the camp and, finally, that he receives no compensation for the trouble and expense involved in carrying supplies to the camp at some distance from his shop

'The village people are not vocal, and their complaints are not so loudly proclaimed; but the Chamar is seldom paid for his labour or the Kumbhar for his earthen pots, while the tenant is not infrequently called upon to supply the straw which, according to the custom of the country, the landlord should provide, and to place his carts at the disposal of officers at inconvenient seasons, and those who supply eggs and milk seldom receive the prices which the touring officer actually pays for them.

'The grievance of cart-owners is that their carts are often impressed, that their only means of avoiding impressment when it is inconvenient is by buying off the tahsil chaprasi, while the rates paid to them are ordinarily considerably below those current in the open market at the time.'

Sir, this is from the report of a Committee appointed by the United Provinces Government and is signed by Mr. L. Porter and a number of Government officers, as well as other Members of the United Provinces Council. This will make it clear to the Members of this Assembly that this practice is not free from oppression and petty tyranny. I cannot understand what the defence of Government is in allowing this practice to continue in existence in this twentieth century. Sir, it may be admitted that in old times say 100 or 200 years ago, the people of India did not understand the value of money. But, now, even the people in the jungles understand the value of money. If the Government officers want labour and if they offer fair wages, I am quite sure there will not be any difficulty in getting labour at any place in the country. When it is possible for labourers to be transported hundreds of miles away from their homes, to places like Assam, why should it be difficult for people, if they offer fair wages, to get labourers in the district itself? The other argument that is sometimes used is that the roads are not good and sometimes, in hilly country, it becomes necessary to compel people to take the baggages of officers. Sir, the British rule in India has been continuing for more than a hundred years, and I do not think it is to the credit of the British Government if they have to bring forward the argument that there are no roads in the country and so people must be compelled into service. Then it is sometimes said that the officers do not pay for the provisions because people in India are so hospitable that they are willing to give provisions to the officers free. Sir, the people in India are hospitable. But they are hospitable to guests whom they invite or whom they choose to entertain. I do not think the people in India are so hospitable that they would entertain that guests who force themselves upon them. Then, Sir, in some places it is said this labour is a contract of the land settlement. Reference to this is made in the literature connected with this subject. Sir, as regards this, what I feel is that if there is a condition in the land settlement that people can be pressed into service, I would say, the sooner the conditions of land settlement are changed, the better.

This practice at the present day has no justification on any ground. If 3 P.M. the Government Officers want labour, if they want carts, or if they want provisions, they can easily get them if they are prepared to pay a fair wage, if they are prepared to pay fair price and if they are prepared to pay fair rates for transport. Let them go into the world as ordinary people, not as privileged people, and pay what private people pay. When I had to move in villages—and I can assure the Members of this Assembly that I have moved in villages for months together—I have found no difficulty in getting carts or provisions whenever I wanted them: the only thing is, you must pay the fair price; Government officers are paid for all that they require by the Government. I therefore feel that to-day there is no justification whatsoever for this practice. As regards the several Irrigation Acts that exist, I admit at once that, under certain circumstances, conscription or compulsion is necessary. Even in European countries, in an emergency of war, conscription is used. But the Governments of those countries do not make a difference between the people belonging to the higher classes and the labouring classes. We hardly hear of that in England or France or Germany. Whenever they wanted soldiers, they made no difference between a young boy belonging to an aristocratic family and a young boy belonging to the labouring class, but unfortunately the Government of India does make that difference. In order to convince, the Assembly of the truth of my statement, I will only read one section from one of the Acts. It is the Madras Compulsory Labour Act, 1858, section 1. I shall not read the whole section, but only a few words bearing on the point.

‘Whenever it shall appear to the officer in charge of any tank, river or canal or of any anicut or other like work that there is imminent danger of the embankment of such tank, river or canal being breached,’ as I said I shall not read the whole section but only the important words :

[Mr. N. M. Joshi.]

' such officer shall require the head or heads of the village or villages in the vicinity to call upon all able-bodied male persons of the labouring classes in such village or villages to co-operate in the work necessary for preventing or repairing the breach '.

It is the able-bodied people of the labouring classes only who are to be compelled, and not the other classes. Sir, although I see that, under certain circumstances of grave emergency, it is necessary to compel people to do a certain kind of work, I can hardly see the need for this distinction in such an emergency, between a labouring class man and a man belonging to the higher class. The fields belong to all sorts of people. They belong to Brahmins, they belong to educated people, they belong to merchants, they belong also to labouring classes, and if a breakdown of the embankment will cause damage to the community, it causes damage to all classes of people, and not to one class of people only, and, if people are to be compelled to serve, why only restrict that conscription, as I call it, to the labouring classes? I do not think Government will be able to justify their position in this matter in any way. In this connection, I must confess that the Bombay Irrigation Act is much fairer in this respect. It says :

' And thereupon every able-bodied person who resides or holds land in the vicinity or the locality '.

Now, Sir, I have described what the existing system of forced labour is, and how it harasses the people in various ways; how, also, there is no sanction in law for this custom and how there is hardly any justification for its existence. The whole practice or custom of forced labour is against the modern spirit of individual freedom. No man should be compelled to do work for a master against his will. I need not remind the Members of this Assembly that this principle has been laid down in section 374 of the Indian Penal Code. As many of the Members of this Assembly are lawyers, I need not read the section. It makes it penal for anyone to compel any other person to render him service against his will.

Then, I would also like Government to consider this question from another point of view. This harassing of the people in the villages leads to a great discontent in the country. Unfortunately, as the United Provinces report has said, the village people are not vocal. They do not hold meetings. They do not hold processions. They do not pass Resolutions and send them to Government. But let Government remember that every kind of oppression, every kind of small tyranny, creates discontent all the same in the hearts of the people in the villages, and that discontent, although it may not be expressed in words, will be expressed in one form or another at some time or other. I have heard it said several times, even from the Government Benches, that the political agitators and the non-co-operators take advantage of the small complaints of the people that exist, and that they thus gather strength to their movement. Is it the fault of the non-co-operators or the political agitators that they take advantage of the real grounds of discontent that exist among the people? If the non-co-operators or the political agitators know the art of agitation, they ought to take advantage of every such circumstance of discontent.

It is the fault of the Government that allows this discontent to exist and to continue. If I were a non-co-operator, I am quite sure I would take advantage of every real ground of discontent that exists among the people and that is allowed to remain by the Government in spite of knowing that it exists. I would, therefore, like the Government to take note of this fact very clearly that there is discontent in the country, and that that discontent will be utilised—and I may say very fairly utilised if it exists—by political agitators or the non-co-operators for their own purposes. I shall not blame them if they do it.

Now, Sir, let us see what Government has done to remove these real grounds of complaint and discontent. Several times these questions have been brought forward before Local Governments. Last year, in the United Provinces Council, a Resolution was moved, and the United Provinces Government appointed a Committee. That Committee has made some recommendations to improve the system and to mitigate the evils. Then, as regards Sind, complaints were heard about this practice in Sind. Two years back, my friend, the Honourable Mr. G. M. Blurgri, moved a Resolution and Government appointed a Committee and that Committee reported two years back. But the Government of Bombay is so solicitous about the welfare of the people in the villages that it is only last week, after two years, it has reviewed that report and published its Resolution.

This clearly shows the anxiety of the Government to remove the real grounds of discontent of the people. I would like the Government of India now to take the matter into their own hands and not to trust to the Local Governments to do justice to people in this matter. It may be said by the Government of India that they trust to the Local Governments to do it. I would ask the Government of India whether this is not a question of law and order. It is their own officers who, against the law, without being sanctioned by the law, compel people to do service for them in various ways. People do not make complaints, but is it not the duty of Government to take cognisance? Only recently I heard in this Assembly that the non-co-operators intimidate people. People did not come forward with complaints and still Government found out a way to stop the intimidation. The village people do not come forward with complaints. Is it not the duty of the Government, in the same way, to take action, without complaints being made to them, and stop this evil practice? (Hear, hear.) Sir, if the matter is left to the Local Governments, I do not hope that this system will be ended. The Local Governments will try to mend it to some extent, mitigate its evils as the recommendations of the United Provinces and Sind Committees show. But the time has come when no mitigation, no mending will do. We insist upon the individual's right of freedom and the Government of India must come forward to end the system, without waiting for its being mended by the Local Governments. Local Governments will not end it, because the local committees of Local Governments include the officers who at one time or another have made use of this system and benefited from it, and do you trust to these officers to do justice to people? I, at least, do not, and it is not fair to expect justice from those who at one time or another have benefited from this system. I therefore appeal to the Government of India to take this matter into their own hands as a matter of law and order. To-day it does not appear to be a matter of order, it is a matter of law no doubt; but I want to ask the Government whether they want to wait till this matter becomes a matter of order, peace and good government. But I do not think they want to wait till this matter becomes a matter of peace and order. I therefore appeal to them to take up this matter into their hands and remove this real ground of complaint, which exists, without doubt, in almost all the provinces of the country. Sir, the representatives of the Government of India in this Assembly have several times expressed profusely their sympathy for the masses, the labouring classes and the working classes. But, if I were to speak frankly my opinion, I would tell them that they care more for the grievances of the classes, the educated classes, the politically minded classes, than they care for the grievances of the people, the masses, the labouring classes and the working classes. No doubt, as I said, the labouring classes are mute and not vocal, but a Government, that professes to make it their special interest to protect and safeguard the interests of the masses, cannot and must not wait till the masses begin to speak and express their grievances. I, therefore, hope and hope strongly that the Government of India will take up this matter into their hands as an urgent matter, as a matter of law and order and arrive at a very satisfactory solution at an early date.

Khan Bahadur Sarfaraz Hussain Khan (Tirhut Division : Muhammadan) : There is no doubt that I do not know much about impressed labour ; but, as a Zamindar, I have some experience of what takes place in a zamindari. Just a few days ago, I received here from my village servant a copy of a notice which was served on me by the Magistrate regarding the paltan or the troops that had come there, stating that they should be supplied with fuel, so much of this and that, and so on. I did not know what to do. I simply wrote to them saying that they should act legally. I do not know whether the villagers are properly paid for the things supplied. But so far as my knowledge goes, and I do not blame Government, they are not paid adequately. Any way, what I would impress upon Government is this, that they may at least take this fact into very serious consideration. I quite agree with my Honourable colleague, that these small causes of discontent are taken advantage of by non-co-operators. The village men do not understand anything. They do not understand the law. They do not understand whether there is any difference between the Viceroy and the District Magistrate or the police. They simply take into consideration that there is zulum. The discontent spreads from one place to another until it becomes a very big thing. It is therefore in the interest both of Government and of individual liberty that I should impress upon Government the desirability of accepting this Resolution.

Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava (Ambala Division : Non-Muhammadan) : Sir, the system of impressing labour, conveyance or provisions is, at this hour of the day, an anachronism and deserves to be abolished as soon as possible. Its basis is the old old story of the necessity of the hour, and its sole justification is to secure some convenience and facility for the officers and officials who have to go on tour and to enable them to save some of their valuable time. No doubt these are advantages which should be taken into consideration, but to my mind they are quite incommensurate with the burdens which they impose on the persons who have to bear them. It might be said that the principle that no person can be unlawfully compelled to labour against his will is well recognised under section 374 of the Indian Penal Code and any person who violates that principle may be proceeded against under that section, but, in practice, that section is more honoured in the breach than the observance. The mischief does not consist in compulsion alone but, as sometimes happens, the non-payment of wages, hire and prices and oftentimes inadequate payments are its concomitant evils. It is the business of the State to see that every person is secure in the fruits of his labour and gets full price for what he sells and full remuneration for the work which he does. In this connection, be it said to the credit of the Government of the province to which I have the honour to belong, that recently serious attempts have been made to tackle this important and difficult problem. Instructions have been issued by the Punjab Government to all the heads of districts to fix the places where officers going on tour should halt in every tahsil; contractors have been appointed to supply provisions, and officers have been enjoined to see that these instructions are strictly followed, and that payments are made in their presence. But, Sir, it is not one province alone that matters. The question concerns the whole of India, and what is wanted is not the improvement of the system, but the eradication of the evil practice altogether, which is objectionable on more grounds than one. A great deal of discontent and heart-burning is caused amongst Zamindars by this system, which generally goes by the name of Begar, and it is a matter of common knowledge that the subordinate officials and menial staff work great havoc among them while accompanying the officers going on tour. I think, therefore, that the time has come when this system should be abolished altogether, and officers and officials who have to go on tour should make their own arrangements for provisions and labour and conveyance just as when they are at their headquarters, and strenuous efforts should be made to put a stop to this evil practice.

Khan Bahadur Zahiruddin Ahmed (Dacca Division: Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I support the Resolution with reservations. This impressment of labour, conveyance and provision leads only to oppression. I must say, it is a pernicious system. If Government finds that the system cannot be abolished in all the provinces all at once, I think, there ought to be exceptions. At the same time, I must say we have created our own difficulties in this respect. The country has been overrun by the non-co-operators whose chief aim is to make the Government of the country a total failure. I have come to know cases—and they are not a few—in my province where boatmen point-blank refused to ferry across the river Government servants simply because they are in the service of Government. This is due to the teaching of the non-co-operators. Such cases cannot be tolerated and any Government, in its own defence, cannot but keep such a system in practice until the time when the activities of the non-co-operators do cool down. I do not know when such time will come and I shall be thankful to my Honourable friend, the Mover, to enlighten me on the subject. The whole trouble is that there is co-operation among the non-co-operators, but there is no co-operation among the co-operators. This lethargy on the part of the co-operators has brought the country on the verge of a catastrophe. Such is, after all, the case, and this is most deplorable. It is no use ignoring facts and mincing matters. Under such circumstances, how can loyal citizens all at once advise Government to let go all the weapons in its armoury lest the good government of the country becomes an impossible task? The country has been brought to such a pass that even we cannot get rid of a pernicious system, this being due to those unreasonable non-co-operators. My Honourable friend complains why only the labouring class men are impressed, to the exclusion of zamindars or the mercantile class. May I ask my friend who represents labour, will he be pleased to say how he would like it if he was impressed for service? May I ask how many land-owning people or mercantile men would like to go for impressment in the place of labour?

Mr. J. Hullah (Revenue Secretary) : Sir, Mr. Joshi's counsel of perfection aims, I think, at grievances that arise out of an old custom, rather than, as I hope to show, out of any recognition by Government of that custom. And here let us get rid at once of the confusion that often exists in the public mind between impressed labour with payment and impressed labour without payment. Impressed labour without payment is begar. That is and should be the meaning of the word begar. But it is loosely used; I have seen it used even in a Local Government's communiqué for paid labour; and owing to this confusion there has arisen an idea that unpaid labour is recognized by Government on a large scale. That is not so at all. Mr. Joshi himself has admitted that his researches have not revealed any cases in which, under law or rule or executive order, unpaid labour, conveyance or provision is recognized. There are, as he has told us, certain cases where impressed labour on payment is recognized, and he mentioned straightaway the first great class of cases, sanction in which is given under the Irrigation Acts, to the power of impressing labourers in times of grave emergency, when there is fear of a canal or a reservoir being breached, or something of that kind. He mentioned the Acts which allow it, the Northern Canals Act, the Bombay Irrigation Act, the Madras Compulsory Labour Act, the Burma Canals Act, and the Burma Embankments Act. I gather from Mr. Joshi that he does not object to that provision in itself. What he objects to is that only labourers can be conscripted; why should not the merchant be conscripted? Mr. Joshi has forgotten to tell us that the Acts also lay down that payment must be made; what is more, they lay down that payment must be made at the highest market rate; indeed in the Northern Canals Act it is said that payment must be made at a rate higher than the highest market rate. Now, I suppose that a Canal Officer, even when he impresses labour, wants value for money received. Would he get value from the efforts of a merchant with a spade? I do not suppose that anybody will really object to the power of impressment for the purpose of repairing a canal in emergency. As a matter of fact, I believe that this power is very seldom, if ever used. Two Irrigation officers of great experience, one from the Punjab and one from the United Provinces, have told me that never in their experience has this power been used. The people of the countryside naturally know what damage will occur to their own crops, to their own lands, if the canal breaches and they are ready enough to come forward and work. But, seeing the immense loss of revenue, the great expenditure that will be necessary in repairing the canal, to say nothing of the risk of destruction of crops, of cattle and of loss of human life, surely this is a power—but only as a reserve—that we should keep in our hands. We should keep this resource in our hands so that if we cannot get our canals repaired in time of emergency by voluntary labour, we should get compulsory labour and well-paid labour at that. But Mr. Joshi's Resolution is so sweeping, so all-embracing, that if we accepted it, we should have to wipe out these provisions of those Acts.

The subject is also important in its military aspect. I need not dwell in detail on the practice of conscription which prevails in many countries: I need not touch on billeting. I need not mention the great interference, not only with personal liberty, but also with trade and commerce, that was effected by the Defence of India Rules during the war, and I need not say how readily that interference was accepted. We have to deal not with times of war, but with normal times, times, we hope, of peace. The Army Regulations lay down that, when troops are about to march, requisitions may be made on the civil officers. They do not, of course, say how the civil officers are to set about complying with those requisitions. Certain statutes allow the power of impressment. There are two old Regulations in Bengal, No. 2 of 1806 and No. 6 of 1825, where obligation is laid on landholders to provide for transport of troops on the march. Bombay also has an old Regulation of 1827, which empowers the district magistrate, in certain circumstances, to impress transport, guides and supplies. I do not know whether those Regulations are ever used. Similarly, there is the Punjab Military Transport Act, which, when a notification is published by the Local Government, allows the impressment on hire or the compulsory purchase of boats, carts and other means of transport. I do not know whether that Act, although it was passed during the war, has ever been utilised. But here, again, I submit, that it is right to reserve, for military purposes at any rate, the power of impressment. What is the alternative? If you are not satisfied that you can get your carts immediately in any emergency, the Army, I imagine, will have to maintain transport on a much greater scale than at present, and I am not authorized by the Finance Department to commit the Government to the heavy expenditure that would be necessary to maintain standing transport, which will be idle for a great part of the year or perhaps for the whole year, simply in order that there may be no difficulty in emergency, and I do not suppose that the Assembly would wish me to do so.

There is a third class of cases, which is hardly impressment at all, but since a power is given to call on a man for his services at any time, it should be mentioned. I refer to service-tenures where a man, by reason of a favoured tenure is liable to be called upon to render service. The most notable instance of this which I have come across is in Coorg, where persons, called Jamma Coorgs, hold lands on half revenue, and, in consideration of this favoured tenure, are bound to render escort duty and to do other services for Government officers. We are told by the Chief Commissioner of Coorg that this obligation is practically never exacted, and I imagine that if we offered Jamma Coorgs the option of being relieved of this obligation or paying for their land at full rates, they would prefer to continue as at present.

The impressed labour that I have mentioned up to the present does not, I think, cause in the aggregate any very great inconvenience or hardship. Now, I come to what is really the gravamen of the charge, the hardships that are caused on the country side by Government officials and their tours. These hardships, so far as they exist, are inflicted in two ways, first by the subordinate Government officials who reside in the villages, and, secondly, by officers who tour and take subordinates with them. To take the first class first, we have the patwari, I think, in Madras, he is called the karnam, the forest guard, and the head constable or the constable. The patwari needs a man to carry his plane-table and his survey chain or to carry his voluminous records on the numerous occasions when he is summoned as a witness in the civil courts; the forest guard takes a man with him into the lonelier parts of the jungle; the head constable or the constable, perhaps when he is on beat duty in the country, gets a man to carry his kit and his great coat. As a rule, all these subordinate officials employ for these purposes some village servant who is in receipt of regular emoluments and whose duty it is to render these services. It may be admitted that occasionally this village servant is not available and some casual villager is impressed. That practice is absolutely discountenanced and, in my experience, whenever it comes to light, it is severely punished.

Now, as regards the tours of officers. Touring is necessary—I think that is admitted by everybody. Touring, it is widely said, causes considerable inconvenience to the people. I believe all officers do their best to make their touring as little inconvenient as possible to the people, and I believe that all officers do their best to see that supplies are paid for, and, what is much more difficult, that the payment reaches the persons for whom it is intended. The whole question of the touring of officers and their subordinates—and it is generally admitted that it is the subordinates and not the officers who give the most trouble—has been gone into already by several Local Governments. An Honourable Member has already referred to the inquiry which has been made in the Punjab and the orders that have been passed. The United Provinces Government, as we have been told, appointed a Committee; that Committee has reported and the Local Government, I see, has just got out its orders. The report of the Committee is a very interesting one, not only on account of the thoroughness which it goes into the whole question, but also on account of its ready admission of the difficulties that are to be encountered. I note that, in order to meet the inconvenience that is caused by the pitching of officers' tents, the Committee has recommended that every officer shall take on tour with him a gang of paid labourers for this purpose, 4 or 6 men. Some of us may think that the remedy is worse than the disease. If it is a fact that the retinues of officers cause so much hardship and inconvenience, surely it is unwise to increase their size. However, that is the only recommendation that the Committee can make to meet the inconvenience which they think exists. Mr. Joshi has also mentioned the orders of the Bombay Government in Sind. One particular point which he mentioned, namely, that compulsory labour was used for the repair of roads, is specifically mentioned in these orders and the practice is absolutely forbidden.

Now, the fact is that no law, not even the most Draconian law, will ever bring an end to these practices, so far as they exist owing to oppression by subordinates. The only remedy lies in the spread of education, the growth of a spirit of self-reliance and the knowledge that unlawful demands can be successfully resisted. And here do not let us go away with the idea that the oppression such as exists is carried on only by Government officials. An immense amount of oppression is carried on by the landlords themselves. I do not wish to speak against them as a class; but it is a fact that many of the landlords do exact conveyance, services and supplies on an altogether unauthorised scale. As a rule it is the non-resident landlords who are the greatest offenders. When a villager falls into the hands of a money-lender, who does not reside in the village, he sends in his place a kamdar or a *muktia*r or some disreputable underling of any kind, who, in the name of his master and purporting to be acting under the authority of his master, exercises oppression of the grossest kind. Here, again, the only remedy is the spread of education and the growth of a spirit of self-reliance. But let those who accuse Government officials of harassment and oppression, look to the extent where on the countryside this oppression is practised by private persons, not even under guise of the public interest.

I have mentioned what Local Governments have done, how they have taken the matter up, how their Committees have reported; and I may say that they have accepted the recommendations of their Committees practically in full. In a reply to Mr. Joshi given about a year ago, I said that the Government of India did not propose to take the initiative in so far as Governor's provinces were concerned, but we undertook to investigate the subject with regard to other territories. That, I think, is the correct attitude, the only correct constitutional attitude. Mr. Joshi says that the Government of India should take the initiative, because the Local Governments, being composed of officers who are interested, are not likely to do justice to the people. Now, first let me mention that the Committees appointed by the Local Governments had majorities of non-officials on them, and, secondly, are there not in the Governor's provinces representative Assemblies? Mr. Joshi has not mentioned them at all. What is the use of Devolution, what is the use of giving provinces representative Assemblies if we are going to interfere in all their domestic concerns? The Local Governments and their Assemblies know the local conditions, they know the local customs, they know how far these customs are justifiable, how far they are acceptable to the people; they know how much touring is necessary in the interests of efficiency and good administration; they know whether any abuses exist and what should be done to remedy those abuses. The people can make their voices heard through their own representatives in their local Assemblies. Why should we interfere? Any interference on our part, any dictation on our part, would be resented, and, I think, justifiably resented. But we have, in regard to the territories directly under our own control, namely, the North-West Frontier Province, Baluchistan, Coorg, Delhi and Ajmer, Merwara, made inquiries as to how far impressment, paid or unpaid, is allowed or recognised, and the replies received show that there is practically no official recognition of anything of the kind. In Coorg, there is the case of the Jumma Coorgs, with which I have already dealt. In Baluchistan, there is no official recognition. In Delhi, the only provision is that regarding impressment of canal labour which, as I have already mentioned, is allowed under the Northern India Canals Act. In Ajmer, there exists an old order which allows earthen cooking pots to be borrowed and used without payment. That practice we are now suppressing. Also in Ajmer, to a certain extent where Government fuel reserves are not available, fuel is allowed to be taken without payment. That practice also we are going to stop. But in our reference to the Local Governments we only asked how far these practices were recognised. We did not ask to what extent unrecognised practices which cause hardship or inconvenience to the people exist. That we shall now do, and we undertake to do our very best to remove any hardship or inconvenience which is caused not only by recognised practices, if any exist, but also by unrecognised practices through the misbehaviour of officials of any rank.

I have shown now that so far as the Canal Acts are concerned, we cannot surrender our reserve power of impressment. I have shown that we cannot surrender it for military purposes. I have also shown that in cases where there are service-tenures, there is no need to surrender the practice if the practice in those cases be impressment at all. Lastly, I have submitted, and I repeat that, so far as Governor's provinces are concerned, this is not a matter for the Government of India, and we do not propose to take action in regard to those territories. As regards our own territories, we are doing our best and we shall continue to do so.

Munshi Iswar Saran (Cities of the United Provinces : Non-Muham-madan Urban) : Sir, I have listened with considerable interest to the speech of Mr. Hullah, but I deeply regret I remain unconvinced. Mr. Hullah is perfectly right in referring to the oppression of tenants by some Zamindars and I say most clearly that those Zamindars should hold down their heads with shame that they should oppress their own countrymen. But, I submit, Sir, that two wrongs do not make one right. If there is oppression by Zamindars, that is no reason why there should be oppression by Government servants either high or low. Moreover, is Government to follow their evil example? Mr. Hullah has told us that in answer to a question put by Mr. Joshi last year, he made certain inquiries, and what he says to our amazement is that he only made inquiries about—I will use his own words—the recognised practices, and now he undertakes to make inquiries about the effect of unrecognised practices. I am feeling rather surprised, Sir, that Government should not have known that the effects of unrecognised practices are perhaps worse than the effects of recognised practices.

Mr. J. Hullah : May I explain, Sir? Mr. Joshi's question was only in respect of recognised practices.

Munshi Iswar Saran : Sir, we are told that, in cases of emergency, Government wishes to retain this power and that Government is equally anxious to retain this power in the case of troops marching from one place to another and to these two has been added the power that has to be exercised in the case of service tenures. Now, Sir, I submit that on the statement made by Mr. Hullah himself we find that there is no reason or justification at all for the continuance of this system. Mr. Hullah says that so far as the repair of canals is concerned, never has this power been used, because people on the country-side are themselves anxious to come forward and voluntarily work in order to repair the canals. They feel that if they do not come forward to repair the canals, the injury will be theirs. I ask, then: 'Why, then, retain this power? If people have the good sense of always coming forward to work voluntarily, why reserve this power in your hands?'

Then, Sir, Mr. Hullah has told us that, as far as service tenures in Coorg are concerned, the Chief Commissioner says that this obligation is never enforced. If the report of the Chief Commissioner be right, that is a reason for the non retention of this power in the hands of Government.

The third case is when troops are marching. We have been told about conscription and billeting. I do not pretend to know much about the condition of affairs in England or in other countries. But I am inclined to think—I speak subject to correction—that it is only during the time of the war that you billet soldiers in private families. I do not know—I shall be very grateful if some Honourable Member will enlighten me—that in times of peace you can go over to a man's house and say: 'Now, my good man, look here, half a dozen soldiers are going to put up at your house.' If that be so, Sir, then, I say, in all humility, that we shall not follow the English model.

As regards conscription, there too, I venture to think, that it applies only to war times. If war breaks out, if India is at war with some other country, most certainly, not only take our carts, not only impress our labourers, not only take provisions, but take something more, take our very lives. But in normal times and times of peace, I do submit that this system is wrong. Mr. Hullah will pardon me if I say that he has really missed the whole object of this debate. He talks about inconveniences. It is not the inconvenience of the system so much that hurts us. It is because we want freedom for human beings that we have brought forward this Resolution before this Assembly. What I say is this, I am speaking for myself, if you impressed a cooly, if you took him away from his plough against his wishes and if you paid him Rs. 500 a day, even then I would protest against it. I deny your right of taking labour from a man against his wishes. I deny your right of taking away his cart against his wishes, and I deny your right of taking his provisions against his wishes. If he is willing, take it by all means. You may induce him, you may persuade him, but do not, I say, take anything by force. If you do so, you degrade human nature. I know it, and it is a matter of my own personal experience, poor people, artisans, have come and told me: 'Sir, winter time is coming. We cannot be sure. The tahsil chaprasi might take us away and we might not be able to keep our promise and come and work for you.' Is it imagined that this sort of dread raises the dignity of man in the eyes of these people? I submit, it does not.

Sir, Mr. Joshi has spoken rather strongly because he feels strongly. There is no doubt that various Local Governments and happily, the Local Government of my own province, have moved in the matter, but, I submit, they have not gone far enough. They have these Committees. This is how generally the machinery of Government moves, if I am wrong I hope I shall be corrected. First they wait to see if there is some agitation or some sort of protest loud and strong. Then they start thinking. After that they say: 'Let us appoint a Committee'. These Committees are the panaceas of all human ills! After that, the Committee is appointed, there is an inquiry by the Committee and then it sends up its report. A long time is then taken over the consideration of that report and then comes out the result. The result is that the Government is prepared to go a little way. Now, I ask this Assembly to say, in clear terms, if it wants that labour, conveyance or provision should be taken from Indians against their wishes. If not, we shall say to these various Local Governments: 'You have done a great deal'—and speaking for myself I am much obliged to them for what they have done,—but we shall say to them: 'You have not done all that you should have done. You have not done full justice in the case.'

It may be that there are certain emergencies, during the time of war and so on when exceptional measures have to be resorted to. I do say that Mr. Joshi will be the first man to agree that his Resolution does not refer to those abnormal conditions. Mr. Joshi's Resolution relates to normal conditions of peace, when every day transaction takes place. I fail to understand why in such times, Government should find it difficult to get provisions, carts, labourers. Take private individuals. They have huge wedding parties, shooting parties, etc., and sometimes they require hundreds of labourers, hundreds of carts, and, if they are able to manage them, I ask, in all seriousness, how is it that Government is not able to manage them? I do not wish to refer to petty tyranny, and for once I am in entire agreement with Mr. Hullah when he says: 'You may have a perfect law, but you cannot prevent these little tyrannies.' That is perfectly true. Mr. Hullah has very rightly told us that the real remedy is the education of the masses and their development of the spirit of self-reliance. I agree with him. What I say is this. If the masses were self-reliant, they would simply make it impossible for any chaprasi or head constable or patwari to take labour from them against their wishes. They would simply say: 'No, we won't submit to your orders.' But as they are not able to do it, it is for us who are in charge of their interests here to invite Government to do justice which is long overdue.

Rai Bahadur Bishambhar Nath (Allahabad and Jhansi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I beg to support the Resolution moved by my friend, Mr. Joshi. My objection to the system of begar or impressed labour is based, first of all, on the fact that it encroaches upon the liberty of the people. Secondly, it brings a great hardship to them, and unfortunately the victims are not the rich and powerful but the illiterate and the poor. Imagine a person going on some urgent business with his cart, a Tehsil chaprasi or policeman comes in his way and forcibly takes possession of the cart and the poor villager has to follow him to the Tehsil. Then, perhaps, the order is only for 10 carts. But the Tehsil chaprasis would go and impress 50, take tips, bring only 10 and release others from whom the illegal toll has been exacted. This is only one case, which illustrates my point, of how the system is worked. It is open to horrible corruption and is a constant source of harassment to our simple and illiterate countrymen.

Thirdly, Sir, I would insist on the abolition of this relic of slavery in the interest of the Government itself. There is nothing which makes it so unpopular as the begar system. It is associated with the Government and naturally the feelings of the people who are harassed get embittered. It is true, the Government work has got to be done. But certainly the mighty Government ought to be resourceful enough to devise means for the execution of their work without interfering with the liberty of the people and subjecting them to unnecessary hardship and suffering.

With these few words I commend the Resolution to your acceptance.

Mr. Abdur Rahim (North-West Frontier Province: Nominated Non-Official): When I listened to the speeches of my Honourable friends, I thought that, as a Zamindar, it was my sacred duty to offer some observations and place my personal experience before the House. I have much pleasure in supporting this Resolution on a good many grounds. My first ground is this. When reforms were begun, I think we started from the wrong side. First, we must have the liberty of the individual or what I should call personal liberty; then liberty of speech and liberty of the press. Well, Sir, some Honourable gentleman said something about Zamindars. Well, fortunately I am one of the Zamindars in the North-West Frontier Province and I say that no Zamindar can possibly take money which is to be paid to other people, because when the officer who made the payment says that he has paid the money, the Zamindar will have to face the unpopularity of his own people. There is another reason why this begar system is bad. It is because the labourer never gets what is his due. I think it is the sacred duty of every one here, whether official or non-official, to stop this begar system. These poor people have been fighting for the cause of His Majesty, for the cause of the country and, if this begar system is not stopped, it will be a disgrace. The Honourable Member said that they impressed labour on payment. Why should it be impressed if it is on payment. When the war was going on, in our own province the Honourable Chief Commissioner gave orders that no cart and no labour should be given either to the military people or anybody else unless those people were paid whatever wages they required. The result was that cartmen from different districts were coming because the military people were liberally paying.

But what I say is this. If officers have to go on tour, they get traveling allowance. It is, therefore, not right to find comfort at the expense of poor Zamindars. I think, in conscience, they should make their own arrangements instead of giving trouble to the Zamindars: and I say that it is the duty of the official Members and the non-official Members and every Indian to see that we do away with the begar system, so that the Zamindars may not be inconvenienced. As I said, when any officer comes, he is welcome. I say from my own experience, and this must be so in the Punjab and other provinces, that wherever the begar system is utilised by Patwaris and other petty officers, when officers come on tour, people run away whenever they come to know that the begar system will be enforced. So I say that the arrival of the officers is welcome, but I again request the Honourable Members that they may with one voice support this Resolution.

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma (Revenue and Agriculture Member): Sir, there does not seem to be much difference between the Government point of view and that expressed by Honourable Members on the main issue before the Council. But, unfortunately, there seems to be a confusion of thought and misunderstanding owing to several points being mixed up in this Resolution and the wide prevalent feeling of dissatisfaction, as viewed in this Council, with the way in which, possibly, the administration is carried on in some parts regarding the questions to which this Resolution relates. Government do not want any power to impress labour or conveyance or provisions for the purpose of enabling their officers to tour conveniently. Mr. Joshi has not quoted any executive order, law or statute under which,—except in the cases to which allusion has been made at length both by him as well as by Mr. Hullah—he has not quoted any executive orders or rules under which this power is sanctioned by the Government, and, therefore, there is nothing for the Government of India to do by way of sending out instructions to Local Governments with regard to impressed labour, conveyance and provisions in respect of touring on which great stress has been laid. That is where my difficulty comes in. We are perfectly at one in condemning these practices where these abuses have crept in, in spite of precautions which the Government have been taking for a considerable time past: and, as Mr. Hullah said, if, unfortunately, in any places, carts are forcibly impressed, people are compelled to labour, provisions are forcibly taken, for the convenience of officers, that is a practice not sanctioned by law,—and no Government officer can enforce such practices by any penalties attached under any statute. Therefore, the question is really one of administration: and if, in any individual case, an officer offends against good morals and sound administrative methods, it is for the people of the tract concerned to bring to the notice of the higher authorities those malpractices, and I am sure that these malpractices will be condemned readily by the authorities concerned.

The only practices which are sanctioned by law are where power is given to the Executive to impress labour in grave emergencies in which it would be disastrous to allow a canal or a river bank to be breached, washing away, it may be, hundreds of miles of fertile land and silting it up with sand, or washing away villages and towns. It is only in such emergencies that power is taken by the Executive, under existing laws, to impress labour, and that only in respect of villages adjoining the works which have to be undertaken during those perilous times. Wherein does the freedom of the subject come in here? I thought it was a social duty, a moral duty on the part of every villager, whether he belongs to the labouring classes or not, to co-operate with the officers of Government, to go to the spot where there is danger and to work in restoring the canal or embankment, as the case may be. It is not therefore a question of freedom, but a question of the duty resting upon every person to give his aid in time of emergency for the public weal so long as he is a member of society. And if there are recalcitrant persons who refuse to recognize this social duty, which they ought in reality to undertake without any payment, then the law steps in and says that the executive officers should and must be in a position to take labour from them and pay them at the highest rate possible. There is no question of individual liberty being infringed in a case of that description at all. The point does not arise and I think that, even in the most socialistic state, the Government must compel its lazy citizens, the citizens who have no conception of their moral duty, to do work for the State, at any rate in times of emergency.

Then, again, take the case of the military. There may be no question of war, but suppose there is a dangerous riot and troops have to pass through the country to reach the locality, or have to be moved from one place to another. What does the law say? The law says that the military officer in charge has to ask the civil officer of the district to furnish him with supplies en route according to his requisition. The civil officer will have to arrange as best he can, and he will most probably ask the officers subordinate to him to make the necessary arrangements. The law, the Bengal Regulation, the Bombay Regulation and the other Regulations, all enjoin upon the civil authorities that specific classes of persons, artisans, labourers and others, are to help in making the passage of the troops easier. There is absolutely nothing in that illegal or immoral, or which infringes the liberty of the subject. It merely asks the civil authorities to make provision for the passage of troops through the country. Supposing that no such arrangements were made, the military, as you know, would take the law into their own hands. They would obtain all the labour they required and the position would probably be worse than when the existing precautions are taken in the manner laid down by the civil statutes. It must be remembered also that it is only in exceptional cases, in cases of emergency, in cases where labour would not otherwise be forthcoming, and for the safeguarding of the general convenience, that this power of impressing labour or supplies on payment is given. All that the Government says is that it is impossible for it to surrender these powers, which it has to utilize in emergencies of the description I have given.

The reason why the Government are not in a position to accept the Resolution, as it stands, is not because it wishes, somehow or other, to retain the power under which these abuses can continue, so long as the people can wink at them or are not yet sufficiently vociferous as to make it impossible for the Government to keep it, but because it asks us to take immediate steps for the abolition of impressed labour, conveyance and provision, wherever it obtains in India, either under local or Imperial statute or under local custom. It is impossible for us to undertake to repeal local laws, Imperial laws and customary laws in cases which I have mentioned, and I think in a way Mr. Joshi himself admitted, when he spoke on his proposition, that there are exceptions which must be met. Therefore, Sir, I would submit to the House that, inasmuch as Government have undertaken to do all that they can in respect of provinces directly under their administration, they cannot be asked to do more. Mr. Hullah has gone into the constitutional position at great length. If any Honourable Member of this House would bring to the notice of the Government of India that any Local Government, notwithstanding a Resolution of the Legislative Assembly, notwithstanding a Bill having been passed to modify any local law in that House, refuses to give effect thereto, then it would be for the Government of India, in the exercise of their supervising power under section 30 of the Government of India Act, to take the necessary steps, if any. But, for goodness' sake, let not the Members of this House ask the Government of India to abrogate completely the machinery which has been set up under the Reform Scheme, whereby vast powers have been granted to the Local Governments and to the Local Legislatures, whereby law and order are the first concern of Local Governments and not of the Government of India. Let us not tinker with that machinery, simply because we think that in a particular place Government or the Legislature is not able to come up to the mark. Let us not tinker with that machinery, but watch it sympathetically and carefully, and it is only when provincial Governments refuse blindly or wilfully and perversely to obey the mandates of their Legislatures, in this respect or in any other, that the Members of this House would be perfectly justified in coming up to the Government of India and making out a case for the exercise of their powers, and I, therefore, hope that this House would not press for Government taking any steps whatever in respect of provincial Governments and Administrations in what are known as Governor's provinces. We have told you that, under the law, there is nothing offending against good sense or taste or conducive to any ill-will, and that, if any Honourable Member would bring to our notice that in any province such laws are being wrongly administered, then surely it would be for us to see that these abuses are rectified. There seems to be a misunderstanding with regard to one of the remarks which fell from Mr. Hullah. No statement has been made on behalf of the Government that Zamindars, in general or on the whole, exercise their powers unlawfully or do not give the ryot what is his due or what is given to him for the purpose of its transmission. What he stated was that it is not individual officers of Government alone that perhaps are offenders, but the subordinates of the Zamindars also or it may be individual Zamindars. Nothing has been said on behalf of the Government to wound the susceptibilities of any class, and it was never meant to be the case. I hope, therefore, Sir, that, in making these reservations, Mr. Joshi will be able to see his way to accept the position of Government.

Mr. S. C. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars : Landholders) : Sir, I beg to make a few observations on the Resolution that has been put before the House to-day. No one, I think, objects to labour or conveyance or provision being impressed whenever there is an emergency. No one would, for instance, object that works such as bunds, whenever they are in danger of being breached, should not be quickly repaired with impressed labour or that the military, in their campaigns, should not be so aided. What is wanted is that the Government should assume a very stern attitude in the matter of unpaid impressed labour for normal purposes. Supposing an official is habitually guilty of such impressment of labour or conveyance or provision, and there is no doubt with regard to it, my own idea is that the Government should at once send him away, and not in any measure seek to whitewash his guilt. A few examples made thus will, no doubt, apply the requisite corrective to the evil. The evil is a great one and no one can rightly seek to make out that it is only the subordinate officials who are guilty of this misdemeanour. The officers too, so far as I can see, would be open to the charge. To say that their bills are being regularly paid by officers is, I think, an incorrect statement. If it is true that there is a grievance, let there be no attempt to belittle it. If the Government of India only make up their mind to give effect to their professed intention in their own jurisdiction, I think a very wholesome example will be set to the rest of the country. No interference is desirable and I think the Honourable Mr. Joshi will be the last man to suggest that the Government of India should unduly interfere in the concerns of the Local Governments. All that he wants to urge is that this evil, which is oftentimes wrongly represented as naturally springing from Indian hospitality, should be done away with. Except on occasions of emergency it should not be tolerated. If the Government propose to redress people's grievances and to conciliate them, and if they are desirous that there should be no alienation of hearts, really a very firm attitude should be taken in the matter by Government. It should be made very clear both to subordinates and to officers who draw allowances that they are in no circumstances to go in for impressment of labour or conveyance or provisions.

With these remarks, I resume my seat.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : Sir, I beg to move an amendment in the light of the remarks made by the Honourable the Member in charge of this Department. I beg to propose an amendment which will be acceptable, I take it, to the Government. It runs as follows :

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to undertake the examination of the question of the abolition of impressed labour, conveyance and provisions wherever it obtains in India either under local or Imperial statute or under local custom.'

I think, Sir, that the Resolution, as it runs, is a counsel of perfection, but, human nature being what it is, I realise the practical difficulties which Government officers and other people feel. This has been the custom of the country where great works have been carried out by means of labour, willingly given sometimes and sometimes enforced. Great temples have been constructed, great historical monuments have been constructed in this way and the custom of the country does recognise this sort of labour. It is mildly forced, it is not really forced in the sense in which civilised beings should be ashamed of. But oftentimes man requires some sort of force to do even the right thing. We are not so ideally perfect and the people are not sufficiently educated enough to advance voluntarily, and, therefore, I do think in such cases some sort of impressed labour is necessary so long as it does not offend against the laws of humanity. Take, for instance, Sir, where I live in the Tanjore district. There we have got a huge river; sometimes the stream bursts in the middle of the night and, unless you secure the stream and secure the water there, the whole village perhaps would be flooded and the whole village may have to starve, including those unfortunate labourers who have to labour in the fields. And, therefore, I do think that, in such cases you have to have some power under the law in order to get enforced labour. You cannot allow the flood to take its course and let the village lands and the village itself be submerged. There are cases of forced labour and forced labour, and it is, therefore, I think, inadvisable to pass this Resolution as it stands: 'To take immediate steps for the abolition of impressed labour, etc.'

I know it is very often abused. Although I am a landlord myself, I do plead guilty to the soft impeachment made by Mr. Hullab. I know that my tenants feel that they ought to carry my baggage, when I go to the village and have to return to the station; and I do not know where I would be without them in covering the distance of three or four miles between the village and the station. Of course, it may not be what you will have in an ideal society; but it is not impressed labour, and to go and say that you must abolish all these things seems to me to be a counsel of perfection. I do not think any society will ever reach that stage. No doubt my friend, Mr. Joshi, is a great lover of the labourer; but I do not know whether, if he had lands to manage, villages to manage, and property to manage, he would advocate such a state of things. I know, Sir, it was recently published in the papers, as reference was made to military requirements, that one regiment was marched in the Northern Sircars and Tahsildars were told that they should supply cows in calf. Now, that was most humiliating, most annoying to the people, to the Tahsildars and Deputy Collectors. It was stated in the 'Svarajya' of Madras, I do not know whether it is true, that one Tahsildar actually died of heart failure on hearing of this order. Such sort of things ought not to be. Therefore, I say there is a good deal of evil to be examined and I hope it will be thoroughly examined. No doubt it is a matter affecting the Local Governments, but it is really a subject which affects also the Central Government; and I do appeal to the Central Government to seriously examine it, so as to impress upon all Local Governments that these old customs will not do. I myself should be very willing indeed if I had all the old customs in my village enforced. I would benefit by it; but my own people do not like it and I quite sympathise with the growing sentiments of the people. We should respect humanity and, therefore, Sir, I ask the Government to undertake the examination of this question at an early date. That is my amendment.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, I consider myself to be a very fortunate being in not possessing an inch of land and also the other encumbrances which would have compelled me to make use of impressed labour. Sir, my Honourable friend said that India is a country where by custom impressed labour has been sanctioned and considered necessary, and he indicated that it had been used in old times also and he said that we all want great works of utility as well as of beauty to be erected in our country to beautify our country and to make it rich, and he justified, on that ground, the use of impressed labour for such a purpose. I assure him that I am not one of those people who would feel proud of even the Taj Mahal, if it had been built with forced labour; I would not feel proud of a country overflowing with the water of canals, if they had been dug with forced labour. Sir, after all; there is some value to be attached to human freedom. I am sorry, my Honourable friend does not attach any importance to that freedom. There is no doubt in my mind, Sir, that impressed labour cannot be tolerated in this country. It was said, on the side of Government, that on certain occasions, impressed labour becomes necessary, such as during times of war. I again repeat that I am not against the use of certain forms of compulsion during times of war. I am in favour of conscription, if in that conscription no discrimination is made. My Honourable friend, Mr. Rangachariar, drew a picture of an over-flooded river destroying a whole village. I appeal to him to say whether, at such a time, he would not himself come forward and offer his labour. Would he make any discrimination between a labourer and a great pleader like himself? Sir, my Honourable friend, Mr. Sarma, will say: 'You are lacking in the sense of social duty.' That is what he said only a few minutes back. I do not really want to say more on this subject, because I have already spoken for a long time, as I anticipated most of the arguments that would be brought forward from the Government Benches and gave my replies to them. I do not think that the Members representing Government have added anything new. But, Sir, there is only one point on which I should like to say a few words, and it is this. My Honourable friend, Mr. Hullah admitted that the evil practice exists, but he said that these practices cannot be removed except by the panacea of education. Sir, I am one of those people who believe that education is the real panacea, but I ask my Honourable friend to say who it is that kept this country in ignorance after 150 years of British rule. Is it the people of India who kept themselves in ignorance or is it the British Government? Whose duty was it to educate the people

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma : It is poverty and three hundred millions.

Mr. N. M. Joshi : If the Government had done its duty, I am quite sure that, by this time, the people of India would have been not only educated but self-reliant, but the Government did not discharge their duty in this matter. Moreover, if people had been educated and self-reliant, where would have been the need for the Government which calls itself the special friend of the masses? It is the duty of the Government to protect the masses as long as they are not educated and self-reliant. My friend, Mr. Ahmed, from Bengal, asked, when people would be free from the tyranny of the non-co-operators? You cannot expect people to be free from the tyranny of the non-co-operators as long as the non-co-operators know there are Government officials whose tyrannies are tolerated. Do you think that Government will be able to suppress the tyranny of the non-co-operators as long as there are causes of real discontent for the non-co-operators to work upon? If you want to free the people from the tyrannies of the non-co-operators, remove all causes of discontent, and then only the power of the non-co-operators will be reduced. I do not want to dwell any longer on this subject. I am not willing to accept the amendment of Mr. Rangachariar.

The Honourable Mr. B. N. Sarma: Sir, I may state that the Government are perfectly willing to accept Mr. Rangachariar's amendment and to undertake an examination of the kind suggested.

Mr. President: The original question was :

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to take immediate steps for the abolition of impressed labour, conveyance and provision, wherever it obtains in India either under local or Imperial statute or under local custom.'

Since which an amendment has been moved in the following terms :

'For the words ' take immediate steps for ' substitute the words ' undertake the examination of the question of '.'

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: The question is that the following Resolution, as amended, be accepted :

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council to undertake the examination of the question of the abolition of impressed labour, conveyance and provisions wherever it obtains in India either under local or Imperial statute or under local custom.'

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday, the 25th January, 1922.

THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member) : Sir, I move for leave to withdraw the Bill further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, which was introduced in the Legislative Assembly on the 1st March, 1921.

Honourable Members will remember that this Bill was circulated for opinion as the result of a motion in this Assembly in March last. We received the opinions of Local Governments before the September Session. I then proposed to ask the Assembly to take the Bill further into consideration, but later decided to postpone that motion in order to enable me to obtain the assistance of a strong legal Committee to examine certain provisions of the Bill. That Committee sat and, as a result of its deliberations, the principle of the Bill has been changed materially. I, therefore, now seek leave of this Assembly to withdraw the present Bill and propose, within two or three days, to introduce a new Bill which will embody the provisions proposed by the Committee, because I think that that is a more suitable way of dealing with these proposals than proceeding with the Bill as it stands. I hope the Assembly will be able to accede to this request.

Mr. President: The question is :

'That leave be given to withdraw the Bill further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure 1908.'

The motion was adopted.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: Sir, I withdraw the Bill.

THE DELHI UNIVERSITY BILL.

Mr. H. Sharp (Education Secretary) : Sir, I beg to move :

'That this Assembly do recommend to the Council of State that the Bill to establish and incorporate a unitary teaching and residential University at Delhi, be referred to a Joint Committee of this Assembly and of the Council of State and that the Joint Committee do consist of 2 Members.'

I should like, Sir, if I may be permitted, to suggest at once a slight amendment to this motion, namely, that for the number '12' the number '14' should be substituted. It is desirable to have, and there are advantages in having, a small Committee in matters of this sort, but we found, on looking into it, that we could not get a sufficiently representative body out of 12 Members, and, if I may, I should like to substitute '14' for '12'.

Mr. President: The question is :

'That this Assembly do recommend to the Council of State that the Bill to establish and incorporate a unitary teaching and residential University at Delhi, be referred to a Joint Committee of this Assembly and of the Council of State and that the Joint Committee do consist of 14 Members.'

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division : Non-Muhammadan) : Sir, before this Bill is consigned to a Select Committee, I should like to make a few observations on the existing Bill. The constitution of this University is described in the preamble as 'a University of a unitary teaching and residential type'. I have no objection to this description provided the Honourable Mover of this Resolution gives an assurance to this House that the word 'unitary' will be interpreted liberally, that the existing colleges of Delhi, the three Arts colleges, will be given a certain right to teach in the University and that, subject to the approval of the Academic Council, their teachers will be recognised as teachers of the University. The term 'unitary' in its rigid sense, as applied to Dacca and Lucknow, excludes the existing colleges and converts them into merely residential hostels. There is no doubt that the tutorial staff attached to these colleges performs a very different function to that which is performed by a unitary system as applied to the University of Calcutta. I have no doubt that the Honourable Mover of this Resolution desires that the three colleges in Delhi should whole-heartedly co-operate with the University of Delhi with a view to make it a success, and, in that view I hope the Honourable Mover will assure the governing bodies of those colleges that their identity will not be wholly destroyed in the new University of Delhi.

So much for the constitution of the University. I now pass on to its curriculum. The Honourable Mover will, I venture to think, agree with this House that, of the existing 11 Universities in this vast country, there is not a single University which possesses a Musical Faculty. Coming as he does and as I do from the great Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, he will realise the necessity of such a Faculty. Students in this country have to apply to the Trinity College of Music in London or the Royal Academy of Music for their proficiency certificates, and, I think, the University of Delhi would greatly improve its constitution and prestige if it added the Faculty of Music to the Faculties therein described. I do not desire to say much with reference to the Faculties of Law, Medicine, Engineering and Agriculture beyond this, that the undergraduates and graduates of the University of Delhi should be given the right of prosecuting their further studies in the adjoining Universities of Lahore and Allahabad, a right which they possess to-day.

There must be a recognition by these Universities of the right of the graduates to prosecute their further studies for their legal degree and of undergraduates to prosecute their further studies in Medicine, Engineering and Agriculture.

I now pass on to the government of the University. The Honourable Mover will find that, under the scheme proposed in the Bill, of a total number of about 99 members of the Court, the majority are ex-officio and nominated members and the elected members are in a minority. I suggest, for his favourable consideration, that the Court should consist of a majority of elected members. This could be easily achieved by giving the graduate representatives 30 instead of 25 members in the Court. This Honourable House and the Council of State are given under the Bill only six seats in the Court. I understand that, in the preliminary discussion which culminated in the draft of this Bill, the intention was to give the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State six each, instead of six for both the Houses. I suggest that the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State should be represented on the Court in proportion to their numerical strength. As such, I would suggest that 12 members be elected by the elected Members of this House and 6 members by the elected Members of the Council of State, thus giving the two Houses of the Legislature 18 members for the Court. That will give the elected members a slight numerical superiority in the Court. In the Executive Council, I find, again, a disparity between the nominated and ex-officio members on the one hand and the elected members on the other and I suggest that this Honourable House should have a direct representation on the Executive Council and that it should elect three members from among the elected Members of the Legislative Assembly and that the Council of State should similarly elect one member, and that would give them four members in the Executive Council of about 20.

I now pass on to other matters. The Honourable Mover will find that, in regard to the constitution of the Court, the Chief Commissioner of Delhi has been given the except onal power of appointing members to the Court subject to the number fixed by the Chancellor. That may be an indeterminate number, and I do not see any ground why the Chief Commissioner of Delhi should be given the power of direct appointment to the Court. I should have thought that this Honourable House, as it is going to finance the University of Delhi and will continue to take a paternal interest in its literary offspring, would be given such power, even assuming that it was necessary, and I therefore ask the Honourable Mover to revise this provision, if not altogether to omit it.

Now, Sir, I turn to the power of the Chancellor. Honourable Members will find that these powers are somewhat wider than those possessed by the

[Dr. H. S. Gour.]

Universities of Lucknow and Dacca : see section 50 of the Lucknow University Act and section 51 of the Dacca University Act. I suggest, as I believe it is intended, that a clear provision should be inserted in section 45, making it clear that these powers will cease after the establishment of the University. I also think, Sir, that members of the Court should possess the power to propose the addition or alteration of the existing Statutes, but such a proposal should, in the first instance, be submitted to the Executive Council of the University who should draw up a report and send the proposal on to the Court for final decision. I find that, in the present Bill, the Vice-Chancellor is to be appointed by the Chancellor. The Honourable Member in charge of the Bill could not be unaware of the provision made in Allahabad for the election of the Vice-Chancellor, and, while perhaps the first Vice-Chancellor of this University may not be elected, I suggest that his appointment should rest with the Chancellor, with the concurrence of the Executive Council of the University. As regards finance, I understand that only about Rs. 75,000 are to be submitted to the vote of this House in the ensuing financial year. That is an extremely modest and small sum to start a University with. In the years to come, this University, if it is to live up to its reputation as a University established in the Imperial Capital of India, will require larger and more substantial financial assistance from the public and from the Legislature. I would, therefore, suggest to the Honourable Mover to consider the proposal to give the donors to the University a direct interest in its administration : and I suggest that donors of Rs. 20,000 or more should be made life members of the Court, and that donors above Rs. 5,000 to Rs. 20,000 should be given the right to elect not more than 10 per cent. of their number, subject to the maximum of 10 members for the Court of the University. I would also, in this connection, suggest the advisability of inserting a provision for the appointment of patrons from amongst those who make valuable and substantial pecuniary contributions to the University. In this connection, I would ask the Honourable Mover also to consider whether it would not be wise to have a Pro-Chancellor and a Pro-Vice-Chancellor. I make these observations because the Joint Committee, which is about to be constituted, may have something to go upon, and this Honourable House may be in a position to convey its wishes to the Select Committee upon these various points. The Honourable Member, in charge of this Bill knows that Members of this House feel strongly, and even enthusiastically, in favour of any proposal which is calculated to advance learning in this country, and there is no Member in this House who is not anxious to advance the cause of University education here. We welcome this proposal and welcome it heartily. The suggestions I have made are made in a friendly spirit, intended to strengthen and promote the cause of University education in Delhi, and I hope the Honourable Mover of this Resolution will accept my proposal.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar (Madras : Nominated Non-Official) : Sir, the many persons who were anxious for the establishment of a University in Delhi are getting somewhat nervous about the provisions contained in the Bill. I was originally asked by my friends in Delhi to move a Resolution upon this subject, and I thought they were very enthusiastic over it, but, now that the Bill has been before the public, there is a pardonable feeling of anxiety regarding the provisions of the Bill. And, Sir, I have been asked by my friends to intervene in the debate for the purpose of drawing the attention of the Honourable Mr. Sharp to some of the vices in the Bill. Now, before I proceed further, I should like to allay some misgivings which have been entertained regarding the principles of the Bill. As everybody knows, the Sadler Commission, which is responsible for the changes which this country is going to witness in regard to educational matters, contemplated two kinds of Universities: one dealt with the existing Universities, the other dealt with the Universities to come into existence later on. As regards the existing Universities, which, as everybody knows, have been affiliating colleges, have been regulating the curriculum of studies, and have been examining bodies, that Commission said that they should as far as possible continue to affiliate, continue to have recourse to professors to teach higher branches of knowledge, and to appoint, from among the professors in the colleges, teachers who will be able to lecture not only in their own colleges but in affiliated colleges as well. That is the position, so far as the existing Universities are concerned. As regards the Universities to be started, if I remember aright, the Commission contemplated that they should be entirely unitary Universities, Universities engaged in teaching, and, on that suggestion, the Dacca and the Lucknow Universities have been established. Now, Sir, with regard to these Universities, on two points there is no difference of opinion. That is, as regards the colleges to be established, the Commission contemplated that they should be only second-grade colleges, or colleges teaching up to the intermediate studies and that the rest of the teaching should be undertaken by University professors to be appointed. But there is one matter upon which there has been some considerable difference of opinion; that is, as regards the position of the existing colleges which are to be attached to the University to be established, and that applies specifically to the case of Delhi. Where there are some established colleges, what is to be the position of these colleges? Are these colleges to be asked to give up the teaching of the higher Courses of study and to be reduced to the position of second-grade colleges, or are they to continue as before, the University taking upon itself the function simply of teaching certain subjects? Now, Sir, even here, opinion is unanimous upon the question that, as regards the Honours Course in the University, the existing colleges should not be asked to take up teaching work, because it is rightly felt that the equipment necessary for teaching the Honours Course cannot be expected in these various colleges. For example, take the science teaching. The apparatus that is necessary, and other things would not be found to exist, in the same efficient way and in the same efficient manner, in a private college as it would be in a University college. Therefore, there is no doubt upon that matter; the Commission was unanimous that, with regard to the higher teaching, the teaching for the Honours Course, it should be confined, as far as possible, to University professors to be appointed.

There is, however, one important matter upon which there is a considerable difference of opinion; that is as regards the preparation of these students for the Pass Course. As regards the Pass Course, Sir, the members of the Commission were of opinion, if I have read their report correctly, that the existing colleges should be allowed to prepare students for the Pass Course, and that, if new colleges are to be established, those colleges should have nothing to do with the preparation for the Pass Course, but that, if possible, the new students should go into the existing colleges, and that the new colleges should, as far as possible, be only Intermediate colleges which would prepare the students for the University course.

[Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Ayyar.]

That I take to be the recommendation of the Sadler Commission. Now, coming to the University of Delhi, the question is naturally asked, what is the position of the Government in regard to the three existing colleges. These colleges have really created educational life in this city; are you going to reduce them to the position of second-grade colleges or are you going to allow them to continue to teach for the B. A. Pass Course, allowing the University Professors to teach for the Honours Course? That is the question which is being asked for the last two or three days and which has been disturbing the minds of the various professors in the colleges, and I ask Mr. Sharp to give an assurance upon that matter. I may mention that when I read the Statement of Objects and Reasons, I thought there would be no difficulty about the matter, because the Statement of Objects and Reasons contemplates apparently that the existing colleges should be allowed to continue the teaching as before. It says:

'As the provision of sufficient funds for the complete realization of this University and the erection of suitable buildings will be a matter of time, it is proposed in the first instance to commence work with the existing colleges in their present buildings and to permit them gradually to modify their organisation, especially with reference to the separation of Intermediate classes in such a manner as to permit of the development of the University in its eventual form.'

I thought there would be some provision in the body of the Act with reference to this paragraph in the Statement of Objects and Reasons. I must say that I have searched in vain for anything which will enable this promise contained in paragraph 3 of the Statement of Objects and Reasons to be carried out. There is no provision, either transitory or permanent, which would enable the House to judge that it is the object of the promoters of this Bill that, so far as these three colleges are concerned, they will be allowed to continue to teach at least for the Pass Course until the University develops itself in such a manner as to make it possible for these colleges to give up the teaching altogether. I would suggest to Mr. Sharp to make it possible for the professors of these various colleges to be absorbed in the new University. It would then take away the sting of the objection which is being felt. If the existing professors are grafted as University professors, then, these people will have no difficulty whatsoever, and finally when the University develops itself fully, these colleges may be reduced to the position of second-grade colleges. That is a matter upon which some sort of assurance is necessary, and I hope Mr. Sharp will give such an assurance as would allay the feeling which is being felt in regard to this matter. Now, Sir, there are only one or two minor matters upon which I should like to say a few words. I find the University contemplates establishing only certain faculties; certain other faculties are not to be brought into existence for a considerable time to come. The teaching in the University should be of such a character as would enable the students to seek their education in other Universities where the new Faculties are in existence. Take concrete instance, the Law Faculty. There is no provision for a Law Faculty in the Bill. Now, the teaching in the B. A. course should be of such a character that a B. A. of this University must be able to find easy entrance into a Law college in any of the other Universities, for example, Allahabad, Lucknow, and so on. That is one question which should be borne in mind. Another matter, upon which I spoke to Mr. Sharp and about which I am particular, is this, that the course of education in the University should be of such a character as would enable the students who find it difficult to continue the study to find admittance easily in other colleges. This is a serious difficulty which is being felt all over the country. For example, a father has employment in Delhi for about 3 or 4 years and he sends his son to a college here to be educated and afterwards he is transferred to Madras or Calcutta, and the Madras or Calcutta University authorities say that the education imparted in Delhi is not of such a character as would enable the student to get admission into the same kind of class in the college at Calcutta or Madras. That is a serious difficulty and many a parent has found great difficulty in consequence of this. I want Mr. Sharp's assurance that the curriculum of studies in the University will be of such a character that it would be easy for a student studying for a particular examination to find easy entrance either in Calcutta, Madras or Bombay when it becomes necessary for him to leave this place. These are matters upon which I should like to have assurances, and if such assurances are given, I am quite sure that persons who are feeling nervous over the provisions of the Bill will be satisfied.

Mr. S. C. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars : Landholders) : Sir, my Honourable friends, Dr. Gour and Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, have undoubtedly voiced the sentiments on the subject of those who are engaged in University work in the city of Delhi. The existing colleges are very anxious to have their own entities duly recognised by the provisions of the Bill that has been put before us to-day. It has been said by my Honourable friend, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, that, in the body of the Bill, there is nothing which might enable the authorities to recognise these three colleges. I find, however, that there are some 3 sections of the Bill, under which the requisite recognition might be granted to these three colleges. I would draw the attention of the House to section 26, which says :

' Subject to the provisions of this Act, the statutes may provide for all or any of the following matters,' and among these matters, clause (g),

' The recognition and management of colleges and halls not maintained by the University, and the withdrawal of such recognition.'

Further, under section 28, I find :

' Subject to the provisions of this Act and the statutes, the ordinances may provide for all or any of the following matters,' and among these matters, No. (A) :

' The conditions of residence of the students of the University and the conditions requisite for the recognition of colleges and halls not maintained by the University.'

So under section 32. If there is a desire to do so on the part of those who have drafted the Bill, or on the part of the Select Committee that considers the Bill, due provision can easily be made for the recognition of these colleges in Delhi; and it is very desirable that such a recognition should be granted to them. They have grown gradually, stage by stage. They have now become highly organised institutions and serve very useful purposes in the economy of the province, and I respectfully submit that these colleges should not, on that account, be, contrary to their wishes, reduced to the position of Intermediate colleges. It is desirable that they should have the degree courses. I am rather doubtful as to the necessity or desirability of permission being given to these colleges to do Honours work. I have studied the report that has been put forward by the Sadler Commission and my idea is that Honours teaching should be centralised in the University, as far as possible, for it is not easy for every college to command a duly equipped laboratory, nor is it competent to organise its laboratories properly, and without such an organisation and such an equipment, higher standards of education could not be easily maintained in every individual institution. But it is very desirable that the number of graduates should increase. I know that some will insist upon the quality of education that is being imparted in colleges at the cost of the necessary dissemination of knowledge, and would make out that the number of colleges and the number of students should be restricted from that point of view. Proper education of a reasonably high type should be imparted to the bulk of students. But education of the highest type could be extended to comparatively a few.

I would beg to point out that we have no technical education worth the name, and that our B.A. degree is a good admission test to the various walks of life. I have found from experience that, if a man secures the degree of B.A., he is generally fitted for doing work in most of the avocations of life, and, from this point of view, I would be inclined to support institutions that are fairly well equipped, fairly well organised, for the purpose of imparting instruction for the B.A. degree. I would, in this connection, like to read what the Sadler Commission have said with regard to the utility of such colleges and the necessity of strengthening them :

'If the colleges are to exercise a greater and a deeper influence, it can only be by their being strengthened; and this can, in our judgment, be best achieved by giving them a fuller partnership in the University, and by enriching them by a real co-operation with the University, instead of leaving them as more or less isolated institutions, each dependent upon its own resources.'

This is said in Volume IV, page 248; and elsewhere, they go on to say :

'The Teaching University of Calcutta must, therefore, be a University of colleges superficially resembling Oxford and Cambridge, and more closely, the reconstructed University of London. * * * * * It must be a system wherein the University will be really responsible for the character of the teaching given in its name. * * * It must be a system wherein the colleges, while stronger and freer than they now are, and able to command more fully than ever the loyalty of their students, will neither be tempted to rival the University or claim independence of it nor have reason to feel any jealousy or fear of it, or to regard it as a competitor. If such a synthesis of college and University is to be achieved, the colleges which take part in it must be much stronger and better equipped for their work than most of them now are. * * * They must be prepared to work in harmony with one another and with the University to an extent now unknown. * * *

These ends can be secured if, in addition to the lectures provided by the colleges exclusively for the use of their own students, the courses of all the best lecturers in the University and in its constituent colleges are thrown open to all qualified students for whom there is room. * * * * * But these conditions imply a very complete departure from the existing system. They imply, in the first place, a carefully wrought-out system of co-operation between the University and its constituent colleges, whereby, in addition to, or as a substitute for, the ordinary college lectures, public and formal instruction given by either University or college teachers appointed for this purpose by the University shall be thrown open to Honours students, and also, though in a less degree, to pass students, from all the constituent colleges.'

I will read only three or four sentences more :

'The organisation of efficient co-operation between the colleges and University is one of the principal aims of the proposals which we shall put forward later in this chapter. * * Upon the University would obviously fall the responsibility of organising the co-operative system of lecturing, all the colleges contributing their share, and the University making provision for the filling up of gaps, as well as for the avoidance of needless reduplication and overlapping. Upon the colleges would fall responsibilities not less important. They would, of course have to provide their share of the total lecturing staff giving instruction to the whole University. They would have to provide courses of lectures and classes for their own students, and especially for the pass men'.

These institutions could be greatly strengthened by and could greatly benefit the creation of a University such as is intended by the Bill before us. The University teachers could help in the teaching of the degree courses of study in such colleges, and some of the best professors, lecturers or readers engaged in these colleges could be appointed to the University. Such a co-operation could materially improve the character generally of the education imparted to students. I have no objection to the establishment of a unitary teaching University which should be a model University ; but I am afraid the whole scheme has not been laid bare before the House.

It is said that buildings will be constructed for the University at a cost, I think, of about 35 lakhs. The recurring annual expenditure will be about Rs. 75,000. I wonder if Rs. 75,000 will suffice. If once you start a University, it will be very necessary for you to incur a large outlay and I do not know if, at this time, such a large outlay could be easily sanctioned by the Assembly.

I would also draw attention to one other thing, and that is this. So far as I see, there would be but about 500 to 600 students in the various colleges in Delhi. Is it right to start a University when the number is so small? Other places are probably riper, for instance Poona, which has about 5,000 students. If any expenditure is to be incurred on starting a new University, it ought to be incurred in the case of a city like Poona or a province like Sind. However, there are some considerations against this suggestion, e.g., that Delhi is an Imperial City in an Imperial Province, and it will befit the dignity of this province to have a University. On that ground, probably, there should be no objection to starting a University here.

There is one other thing also to which I would draw attention. This Bill is a very important Bill and ought in fairness to have been circulated to the different educational institutions for opinion ; and it should, I think, have been sent to newspapers for comments. This would be a modern University and, if you want to organise it properly, the suggested preliminary course would be reckoned, I suppose, by anybody who lends a thought to the matter, as being correct.

Since the Delhi University is going to be a modern University, the popular element again ought, I think, to be much stronger than it would be if the Bill is passed as it is. By way of illustration, I would refer to a provision such as this, in section 9 and clause 7 :

'Every proposal for the conferring of an honorary degree shall be subjected to the confirmation of the Chancellor.'

If it is a felt by the Court of the University that an honorary degree should be conferred upon any distinguished man, I think it should not be necessary for the Court to make a reference to the Chancellor and get his sanction before any Resolution for the conferring of a degree is passed by the Court. The constitution of the Court is not, I think, rightly conceived. It ought to be thoroughly representative; it ought to represent all walks of life, and I think this is the intention of the University Commission presided over by Sir Michael Sadler. If we are to keep to the recommendations that have been made by the Commission, we might also bear in mind the recommendation with reference to the constitution of the Court. What I have said with regard to the Court would be equally applicable to the Executive Council and the Academic Council. The powers of the officials ought to be circumscribed and more powers should be given to the University and the University Court and Councils. And they should be more representative.

Before I sit down, I would once again draw the attention of the House to the necessity of not insisting upon the merging of the entities of the three Delhi colleges in the Delhi University. If the three colleges which are doing their work well have the desire to continue their work, there should be nothing to prevent their continuing it.

It should not become the object of the Bill to see that these three institutions disappear or are reduced to the Status of Intermediate Colleges. They serve a very useful purpose, and they should be allowed, on that account, not only to exist but every facility should be afforded them for strengthening their existence.

Mr. J. P. Cotelingham (Madras: Nominated Indian Christian): I would like to make a few general remarks on the Bill before us. In doing so, I would like to endorse the views expressed by Dr. Gour as to the constitutional powers of the University as stated in the Bill.

In the Statement of Objects and Reasons we have been given to understand that the Bill has been framed on the model of the Dacca University recommended by the Calcutta University Commission. The framers of the Bill have not confined themselves to the Dacca University Act, but they had also before them the provisions of the Lucknow University Act. If we look at the working of both these Universities which are unitary teaching and residential, we find that the colleges that ought to form a constituent part of the University have to a great extent lost their individuality. And if, according to the recommendation of the Calcutta University Commission, the University should be organised primarily as a teaching University composed of the incorporated and the constituent colleges, I see no reason why, in starting a University for Delhi, we should follow so closely the Acts laid down for Dacca and Lucknow Universities. It would be a great pity if the existing colleges, as has been pointed out by the previous speakers, should lose their individuality. I see no reason why the Delhi University should not itself be a model University, and the existing colleges, while contributing to the life and strength of the Delhi University, should not also have preserved to them as such their individual and corporate character. It has been mentioned that the University would do its part in regulating the Honours and Post-Graduate courses and in providing professors and lecturers. That is expected. But in the interchange of professors and lecturers, a great deal can be gained by the co-operation of three colleges that are at present engaged in higher education in the city of Delhi. I think this is an admirable opportunity for showing how the existing colleges can all be utilised in the working of the University without their identity being merged in that of the University.

The Delhi University, for some years to come, will not have a large number of students. As matters stand, we have between 500 and 600 students on the rolls of all the three colleges put together; and, if it is decided to separate the Intermediate classes, there are barely 250 to 300 students who will avail themselves of the instruction given in the B.A. classes and in the classes for the Honours courses. If the framers of the Bill for the Delhi University are not going to be obsessed by the recommendation made by the Calcutta University Commission as to the excision of the Intermediate classes, there will be a sufficient number of students to form the nucleus of a strong teaching and residential University. Unfortunately, the circumstances that prevailed in Calcutta were such that the Calcutta University Commission had to come to the conclusion that the only way of improving University education was by cutting off the two Intermediate classes and having them attached to the High School. The situation in Calcutta, as will be known to Honourable Members of this House, is very different from the situation elsewhere. We, in Madras, are not so badly off as regards the quality of the students in the Intermediate classes. I, for one, am not yet able to understand that it is absolutely necessary for the improvement of collegiate education that the two Intermediate classes should be cut off and joined to the High School classes. If, here in Delhi, we are to follow the recommendation made by the Calcutta University, we shall have a smaller number of students to begin with and we shall lose all the co-operation that we can get from the three existing colleges. Speaking on behalf of the students in the Intermediate classes, I would say that they would lose by being added to the High School, whereas they would gain a great deal if the classes were to be attached to the colleges educating or teaching up to the degree. I am not one of those who think that the final word has been pronounced by the Calcutta University Commission on the matter of University reform, and therefore, while still we have the opportunity of making satisfactory provision for University work in Delhi, I trust that this question also will be considered in the Select Committee.

One other observation only, Sir, I would like to make before I sit down. I find that there is no provision made for any examination for admission of students to the University.

In fact, in clause 7, sub-section (6), it is distinctly stated that :

'It shall not be lawful for the University to frame or conduct courses, maintain classes or conduct examinations for the purpose of preparing or testing students for admission to the University.'

I hope more light will be thrown upon it by Mr. Sharp when he replies to the observations made here. In the Chapter on Admissions and Examinations, in clause 34, sub-section (2), there is no reference made to any examination for admission to the University. With these few remarks I resume my seat.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated : Labour Interests) : Sir, I too would like to get some explanation from the Honourable Mover of this Resolution before I decide either to support or to oppose it. Sir, in the matter of educational policy, there are two ideals. The first ideal is that the quality of the education which is being given at present should be improved and the other ideal is that higher education should be spread among the people as widely as possible. The two ideals are not inconsistent with each other, but, on account of the limit to our resources, it does not become possible always to carry out both these simultaneously. It, therefore, becomes necessary for the Government and for those who control the educational policy of the country to see which of these two ideals should be first carried out or should be given more importance. I find from the attitude of the Government, that they are more in favour of improving the quality of education, even if the spread of education suffers somewhat. This is indicated by the great speed, I may call it the speed of the Express Train, at which the Government is starting a new type of University, namely, the unitary residential, in India. They have given up suddenly the old type of the University that existed and did very good work in this country for a number of years. Sir, personally I believe, and even the Government of India will believe, that this new type of University is an experiment which must be tried sufficiently long before the whole country adopts it as the fittest type of University for us. The unitary and residential type of University has got certain essential features. The colleges must be in the vicinity of each other if the education or the instruction that is given is going to be really unitary. Then the largest number of boys must be residential in quarters or in halls which are controlled by the University. These are the two essential factors of a unitary residential University. Now, I would like to know, in the first place, from the Honourable Mover of this Resolution where he is going to locate the headquarters of this University, whether in the city of Delhi or in Raisina, four or five miles away from the city. This is a point of great importance from the point of view of the spread of education, and therefore I want a clear explanation and a clear statement from the Honourable Mover of this Resolution on this point. If the University is to be located finally, if not to-day, in Raisina, Sir, I believe that that University will come in the way of the spread of higher education in the Province and the city of Delhi. The University will be away four or five miles from the homes of boys, and those boys who cannot afford to go and live in the University halls or the University residential quarters will not be able to get the benefit of higher education. Sir, it is a matter of common knowledge that, as regards the spread of education, the more the centres of education, the greater is the spread. If, in the city of Delhi, there is only one college, it can attract a certain number of students, but, if there are colleges which are spread over the city of Delhi, say three colleges in different parts of the city, the number of students that will be attracted to the three colleges will certainly be larger. I do not think the truth of that statement can be contradicted by any one. From that point of view, if the University is located in Raisina, it will be difficult for the colleges in Delhi to be affiliated to that University, and I think, from the statements made in this Bill, as well as from the first speech of the Honourable Mover of this Resolution, it appears that the final aim of the University will be to have all the colleges located somewhere near Raisina. The colleges in the city of Delhi, then, cannot be affiliated to that University, if the University is going to be a really unitary and residential University. If the constitution of the new University will come in the way of the colleges in the city of Delhi being ultimately affiliated to the University, I, for one, shall oppose this proposal altogether. It was said by the previous speakers that the rights of the existing colleges should be safeguarded. I will go one step further and say this, that, if some people hereafter want to start some more colleges in the city of Delhi, a little apart, a little distant from the seat of the University, they should not be prevented from starting those colleges. (Hear, hear.) Sir, this point also must be made very clear.

Then, secondly, as regards the term 'residential', I should also like to get some explanation whether the University will compel boys to reside in certain halls controlled by them and which boys will be thus compelled; whether those boys, whose parents or relatives live in the city of Delhi or who can get accommodated in families in Delhi, will be compelled to go to the University halls to reside. This point must be made clear before I decide either to support or oppose the motion, for I believe it is a wrong policy for any University or for any Government to try to take away boys from homes not only from their own homes, but from the homes of their relatives or from the families of their friends, in order that they should go and live in the halls maintained by the University. After all, the home is a more natural surrounding for any boy who wants to be educated as a good citizen, and, therefore, residence in the University hall is the last resort in my opinion for those who cannot make proper arrangements for their accommodation in families. I am not, therefore, against the University making arrangements for those who cannot make their own proper arrangements in the city with families, either their own or of their friends or of their relatives. I should like to get a clear enunciation of the policy of the Government regarding the University in this matter.

Then, Sir, there is another point about which I should like to say a few words, and it is this. The modern spirit of University education is that this education should not be confined to a few boys who have the means of spending their whole time in securing higher education. Even the ancient Universities of Oxford and Cambridge 50 years ago found it necessary to extend their work beyond the boundaries of the University. Those Universities found that their work was not complete unless and until they brought the large mass of the society into their sphere of work, and, for that purpose, the Universities in England started work, called the University Extension Work, the work of spreading culture and higher education amongst not only a few boys but amongst the whole society, the whole mass of the working classes, as well as those who had not the benefit of getting University education during their boyhood. I shall like to know whether the Delhi University is going to undertake this kind of work, the work of spreading culture and higher education amongst the society in general. Sir, regarding this matter, there is some reference in section 7, sub-section 5 :

'In addition to recognised teaching, tutorial and other instruction shall be given under the control of the University in each college'.

I do not know what is the clear meaning of this section, but if this means that the Delhi University is going to undertake the work of University extension, I shall be very much satisfied, but, if it does not mean that, I would insist that there should be a provision in this Bill throwing definite responsibility upon this new University to undertake the work of University extension, and, if the Government does not accept this principle of a modern University, I am going to oppose the Resolution. Sir, I am not against the tax-payers' money being spent, even for the education of a few boys, but, at the same time, let us remember, when we spend money, and we are going to spend most of the money for this University out of the country's finances, let us take care that the society in general, the whole community will derive benefit besides those who will enter the portals of this University. On these two points I want clear information as to the policy of Government in regard to the new University. //

Mr. J. Chaudhuri (Chittagong and Rajshahi Divisions: Non-Muhammadan (Rural): I rise to support the principle of the Bill and also the motion that it be referred to the Joint Committee. The criticism that has been directed as to the details of the Bill may be considered by the Select Committee and I am sure that they will receive due consideration at these Committees. I shall take this opportunity of explaining to the House the principle upon which the Bill is based. It is based upon the sound principle laid down in the Report of the University Commission over which Dr. Sadler presided. I may tell this House that there are only two great experts in England on the question of education. One is the Right Honourable Fisher and the other is Dr. Sadler. Dr. Sadler has not only made a special study of the University system in England but also on the Continent, and, over and above that, he came out to this country, and for a year patiently studied the system that obtains in the Calcutta University. In the recommendations that he has made, he has tried to remedy the defects, shortcomings and drawbacks of the Calcutta University. The Calcutta University is a multi-collegiate University and it has of late developed a system of University teaching which I may describe as topheavy. It is now paying special attention to Post-Graduate study and the defect of the Calcutta University is that the under-graduate study is being neglected and is left entirely to the colleges without any material help or assistance from the University. The chief function that the Calcutta University exercises in respect of under-graduates, is that it is an examining body. It collects fees from the University students, appoints examiners and the examiners only go through the papers. The Calcutta University does not assist in, or supplement, the work of the colleges in teaching the under-graduates. It, no doubt, supervises to a certain extent the colleges but takes no part in teaching. What the Calcutta University is doing is that it is spending all its resources, which comprise the surplus left over from examination fees, in the up-keep of a large staff of lecturers for Post-Graduate teaching and this system has brought it almost to the verge of bankruptcy. There is a fundamental difference between the system which obtains at the Calcutta University and the system which obtains at Oxford, Cambridge or the Edinburgh University. When I was in England, I made a study of the system of University education there. First of all, I shall explain the system of teaching that is followed at the Oxford and Cambridge Universities. These Universities are, no doubt, multi-collegiate Universities, but they possess this advantage that all the colleges at Oxford or Cambridge are situated in one place. Thus the colleges are in a position to help each other. For instance, at Oxford, none of the colleges, except one or two, keep any laboratory for the teaching of science. So far as I remember there is no laboratory in any of the premier colleges, such as the Balliol College, the New College or Christ Church. There is only one laboratory in the Trinity College exclusively for the use of the students of that college. But there is a well-equipped laboratory kept and maintained by the University. At Oxford, it is the Clarendon Laboratory, and at Cambridge it is the Cavendish Laboratory. The science students of the University are allowed facilities for carrying on their studies in experimental science at the University laboratory. Thus the University fulfills the functions of a teaching University so far as the undergraduates and the colleges are concerned, inasmuch as it furnishes facilities which the colleges are not in a position to furnish. Further, it is not possible for every college to keep a staff of lecturers or efficient teachers of a variety of subjects. A multi-collegiate system, when confined to one place, a place like Oxford or Cambridge, is helpful in this way. One college maintains an expert in economics, another in physical science, a different one in mathematics, and so on. Now, what the University authorities do at the beginning of a session is that they arrange for a system of inter-collegiate and University lectures. A course of elementary or advanced lectures on any particular subject by trained teachers as also by University professors is arranged at one or other of the University colleges or halls. Now, the students from the different colleges who are studying a particular subject are directed by their college tutors to attend these lectures. The primary function of the English Universities is the teaching of the undergraduates. The unitary Universities have no colleges but the teaching is done by the University itself. Let us take a University like that at Edinburgh. In the Edinburgh University, there is

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind : Muhammadan Rural) : May I rise to a point of order? The learned gentleman is giving a lecture on the teaching at Edinburgh University and at Oxford. He is saying nothing about the Delhi University.

Mr. President : I am very unwilling to interrupt the interesting discussion of the Honourable Member, but I am waiting to hear him mention Delhi.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri : I am explaining by reference to what I have said, the system which is proposed to be introduced and described in the Bill as the unitary system. I am quite relevant, for this reason that the system which has been introduced by Dr. Sadler, and which is embodied in this Bill, is not purely the unitary system, but as I was explaining, an adaptation of the system of unitary Universities to the existing circumstances in India. The Leeds University, the Edinburgh University, and all the more modern Universities in England are unitary Universities. At Dacca, there were two colleges, which have been split up into three, one being an Intermediate College, and the other two have been remodelled and they constitute the University. But if the separate identity of the colleges at Delhi are preserved, the University need only supplement the efforts of the colleges. If the system which is a compromise between a multi-collegiate and a unitary system is introduced at Delhi, as it is proposed to be introduced, the mistakes that have been made with regard to the Calcutta University in the past will be avoided. The future University system in India should be modelled on unitary lines. Wherever a new University is established, as the one that has been established at Dacca or at Lucknow, and the one that is going to be established in Delhi, it should be based on the recommendations of the Sadler Commission. We should not fall into the error into which the Calcutta University has fallen, namely, that of building up a big University composed of colleges distributed over a wide area, say from Chittagong on the one side to Bankura on the other. The Calcutta University has become an unmanageable body. On this occasion, I am not going to discuss how far Dr. Sadler's system can be appropriately adapted to the existing conditions of the Calcutta University. There are difficulties in the way, but I absolutely see no difficulty in the introduction of this system, or its adaptation to the proposed Delhi University. Some of my friends, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar and Mr. Shahani, said that the colleges should not teach up to the Honours standard. But I see no reason why the colleges should not teach up to the Honours standard, if they want.

Dr. H. S. Gour: May I correct the Honourable speaker on a question of fact. There are only 20 students. There is no Honours Course, I believe. I believe, there is an Honours Course only in one college.

Mr. J. Chaudhuri: So, I say, if there is an efficient staff, I see no reason why that college should not teach up to the Honours standard. The University at Delhi should include within its scope the two or three existing colleges; the colleges may help each other, and the University supplement the efforts of the colleges. For instance, there may not be a Chair of Chemistry or a well-equipped laboratory at Delhi. If the University founds a Chair in Chemistry, the students who are studying Science may go to the University laboratory to study Chemistry. There is, however, one objection which will have to be practically solved by the Committee, and that is, that, if it is proposed that the existing divergence between the Intermediate course and the College course should be brought about, in my opinion it should be brought about gradually and not all at once. That is the system which, I am sure, will be followed in Calcutta also. If we separate the Graduate course and the Intermediate course at once, such a sudden disruption may make many of the colleges to collapse.

With regard to such matters of detail, the Select Committee will give their best consideration, and when the University is founded, the University authorities will also take them into consideration. I should not like that any of these colleges would suffer in any way. I do not see any insuperable difficulty in working out a scheme for adapting the existing colleges within the University Scheme. One defect of the Calcutta University system is this, that the Matriculation standard is very low in Calcutta now and an under-graduate, after matriculating and taking up the college course, cannot make any rapid progress. To ensure such progress, school education must be improved, and, if education up to the School Final is sound, then you can curtail the period of University training. The Sadler Commission recognises that the University training should take only three years. If you delegate the education up to the Intermediate course to the secondary school or second grade colleges, then it will not prolong the period of education. It will give, to begin with, sound education and in the course of three years, as at Oxford or Cambridge, one can complete one's college career. Now, one of the great drawbacks and hardships of the Calcutta students is this. It takes them six years to come out as an M. A. But we know that the M. A. course is by no means any higher than the B. A. Honours Course at Cambridge or Oxford. There, after entering the University, one takes one's Honours degree in three years. If the system recommended by Dr. Sadler and his Commission is adopted in this country, then it will curtail also the time in which our under-graduates will be able to complete their University career. With regard to Post-Graduate education, I would do away with lectures, promote research, self-help, self-reliance in the matter of study and would give the higher degrees by reference to thesis on evidence of research or original work. I do not wish to take up more time of the House. I think I have been able to explain to the House what the present system is and the system that this Bill proposes to introduce. The system recommended by Dr. Sadler in the University Commission Report is not only a sound one, but is quite an up-to-date one. I would, therefore, ask this House to lend their unqualified support to this Bill. I am sure that the details of the Bill may be safely left to the Committee and that, when the Committee submit their report, the whole House will be free to discuss and take the Bill into consideration in all its details.

Mr. H. Sharp: Sir, I had no idea, when I entered the Assembly this morning to move this simple motion, that I was going to evoke a discussion lasting over about an hour and a half. I am glad, however, that we have had this discussion, because certain matters have been mentioned in such a way as to clear the air and to emphasise their importance both in this Chamber and also before the Joint Committee. I am also glad to see the very great interest which has been evinced by various Members of the House in this subject of the Delhi University, and I am particularly gratified by the reception which the principle of this Bill has received from Dr. Gour and from Mr. Chaudhuri. The only note of discord regarding the principle of the Bill, if indeed I need call it a note of discord, has been raised by my friend, Mr. Joshi; and I am sure that Mr. Joshi's remarks are not for one moment prompted by any hostility either to the scheme as such or to the cause of higher education. But, as we know, Mr. Joshi is very jealous of the rights and privileges of such classes as might perhaps not benefit directly by this kind of education. The opening remarks of Mr. Joshi have, I am glad to say, given me an opportunity of just mentioning a remark which fell from his lips yesterday—but at the moment I should not have been in order in saying anything about it—with reference to the spread of primary education. Now, as I have not had an opportunity of saying anything on this subject in this Assembly, I should like to take this opportunity of reiterating emphatically what I remember I did say ten years ago almost to a month in the Legislative Council regarding the attitude of Government towards elementary education in this country. Government does not desire to check the spread of primary education. On the contrary, Government has always given it every encouragement. The duty of spreading primary education is primarily the duty of local bodies—Municipalities and District and Local Boards. But Government has always done what it can to assist them, not merely by Resolutions on paper and so on, but, as I am sure some Members here will recollect, by substantial grants at times when funds were available and, even when so much money was not available, by giving what could be given to this object. And, if Mr. Joshi will consider the proportion of money spent on education to the revenues of this country and compare it with the proportion to the revenues of other countries, he will see that we do not fall behind with reference to those other countries.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Publish a comparative statement.

Mr. H. Sharp: I shall be glad, if Mr. Joshi has any doubt, to show him some figures. There was one remark which Mr. Joshi made, which I should like to correct, because possibly it has caused a little misunderstanding in other minds as well. I think he said that the Government of India had abandoned the idea of affiliating Universities. Far from it. Certainly the Government of India has not abandoned that idea. In the Resolution on Education of February, 1913, if I remember aright, the Government of India clearly enunciated its policy regarding Universities as the necessary, essential, unavoidable preservation of the affiliating Universities; but it hoped to see carved out of their jurisdiction Universities of a newer type, Universities of the unitary type, of which we have heard a good deal this morning.

[Mr. H. Sharp.]

Now, Mr. Joshi asked me direct for assurances on certain points. I think those points were as follows :

- (1) the location of the University ;
- (2) the conditions of residence ; and
- (3) the possibility of University extension.

I understand that those are the points on which he desired an assurance.

As regards the location of the University, I will admit at once to Mr. Joshi that, at present, the idea is that this University will be located eventually at Raisina. But it will be in a good position, not too far from the city; and I have myself seen colleges, such as the Gujarat College in Ahmedabad, and other colleges in India, which have been located at some distance from the city, as much as four miles. Dr. Gour knows of a college in his province . . .

Dr. H. S. Gour: Yes, the Jubbulpore College.

Mr. H. Sharp: The Robertson College, Jubbulpore. Dr. Gour will recollect that College; its location has had no detrimental effect upon the numbers of the college. On the other hand, hostels can be situated in more sanitary and airy sites, there is room for larger playgrounds and the taking up of land is much more economical than if a college were in the middle of a city. But I may say at once, for the comfort of Mr. Joshi that the location of a University—I mean to say the minutiae of its location—are not fixed by legislation. As I said the other day, since the plan of the new city was made, a large plot has been set aside for this University in what seemed to us to be a very good place; but we are not bound to that by this legislation.

Now, as regards residence, I understand that the point at issue is, can students live with their relatives and friends in Delhi? Certainly they can; and I would invite attention to clause 31 of the Bill along with the statutes, clause 11, sub-clause (2). Those two passages I think are the clearest, as giving a definition of the conditions of residence. Of course, they do not give, by any means, all that might be said on the point, because this point is left to further statutes and ordinances; but that is the intention, and the Bill, as it stands, and the Statutes as they stand, do not bind down everybody necessarily to live in a hostel or a hall, although all must be attached, for the purposes of tuition, etc., to such an institution.

Now, as regards University extension—after all, this is, so to speak, the fine flower of established institutions of old date and of elaborate systems of education. But I can assure Mr. Joshi that, if this Bill, as it stands, does not compel the University to set up any system of University Extension Lectures, there is not one word which would prevent the University from so doing; and I would ask Mr. Joshi whether he considers that this measure, which has been laid before the Assembly, should be so rigidly drawn as to leave no option, no room, for voluntary expansion to the University itself. Should we not leave many of these things that have been spoken of this morning to the authorities of the University? We cannot take a University, so to speak, by the nose and lead it along utterly against its own will. And, with reference to what Mr. Joshi said, and, with reference to certain other remarks that I have heard this morning, I cannot help feeling that there has been just a little danger of trenching upon those matters which must necessarily be dealt with in the Statutes or in the Ordinances or by Regulations of the University bodies themselves.

I do hope that Mr. Joshi will be satisfied with what I have said. I am sure he does not want to bind down this University, so to speak, in such a rigid way that it is obliged to do certain things, the possibility of which can only be seen when the University has got going. To do so would surely be going beyond the ordinary functions of University legislation.

Now, passing to other matters, many points were brought up this morning, such as the method of making Statutes, the selection of the Vice-Chancellor, the bringing in of donors, the creation of appointments of patrons and possibly of Pro-Chancellor and Pro-Vice-Chancellor. All these are matters which I have no doubt will be discussed in the Joint Committee. I do not think I need mention them this morning.

There are, however, one or two points which I must mention, because I have been asked direct questions or I have been asked for assurances here and now.

As regards the Faculties, I would invite attention to clause 22 of the Bill. Only the initial Faculties are mentioned, those the formation of which is already more or less easy. Other Faculties can be framed as the opportunity occurs; and I certainly join with Dr. Gour in hoping that this University will have facilities not merely for training in Music but for training in other forms of Indian Art.

There were just two little points which I should mention regarding the constitution. Dr. Gour said that the original intention was that there should be six Members of each of the two Chambers. I am afraid I cannot remember, after this lapse of time, whether that was the intention or not. It is, of course, possible that there may have been a little misunderstanding about it; but that is a matter which certainly will be looked into in the Joint Committee.

With reference to the nominees of the Chief Commissioner, I should point out, in order that there may be no misunderstanding, that the number of nominees is fixed by the Chancellor, not by the Chief Commissioner. However, that again is a matter which will be considered in the Joint Committee.

A matter of some importance, which was brought forward both by Dr. Gour and by Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar, is the right of the students of this University to enter, at various stages, into other Universities, in order to complete their graduation or training. There is nothing in this measure which will bring about any deprivation of any existing right, and I myself hope and believe that there will be full reciprocity in these matters. But, here again, we have to leave a considerable amount to the option of the Universities themselves. It is, of course, possible that one University might say that the Degrees of another—let us say, the Degrees which it is necessary to take prior to starting on the professional part of a medical course—were not quite up to its standard. I am sure, Mr. Seshagiri Ayyar will agree with me that that would be a perfectly legitimate position for a University to adopt. While, therefore, there is nothing in this Bill which will deprive any student of any existing right, the matter is one which has to be left to a considerable extent, to the University authorities. And, after all, this University will have, along with other Universities, to prove its capacity for the training of students when the authorities are formed and the instruction begins.

Now, there was one other point—the admission of students to the University. Mr. Cotelingam said that there was no provision for the admission of students to the University. I think that he will find that clause 34 of the Bill makes the necessary provision. Possibly it does not go quite so far as certain other University Acts read with the Regulations of those Universities; but I do not think that it is necessary that we should go so far as that at present. After all, this is a matter in which a good deal must be left for the Ordinances, and, whatever arrangements may be made for the admission of students and for their examination, I propose to bring before the Joint Committee one or two points with reference to this, which I think will meet the difficulty felt by Mr. Cotelingam, although I do think that he has exaggerated that difficulty, if I may say so.

I think, Sir, that it only remains for me to speak on one matter, and that is one of very great importance indeed. It has been mentioned by Dr. Gour and also by Professor Shahani. The words 'unitary University' in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, and some phrases throughout the Bill, appear to have given rise, in certain quarters, to a little apprehension. I think that, perhaps, I can make this point clear to the Assembly if I deal with it under two heads.

The first head has reference to the University in its early or transitional stage. Now this leads me on to speak of what Dr. Gour said about the powers of the Chancellor, namely, clause 45. I fully agree that that clause does look rather deterrent; and it will be within the memory of Members that I thought it right to call their special attention to that clause when I introduced the Bill, because I did feel that it seemed to present a vulnerable point in the Bill. Now, what is the position? The position is that we are faced with the fact that we have three Arts Colleges and also a Medical College situated in Delhi, organised in their own way. Also, we do not want to place before the Assembly any very large demand for starting this University just at present. Dr. Gour mentioned a moderate sum, and Professor Shahani doubted whether that sum would be quite sufficient to begin with. It certainly would not be sufficient to bring the University into complete shape, full-fledged like Minerva from the head of Jove. Certainly not. We must look forward to a transitional stage during which it will not be possible—with due respect to Mr. Cotelingam—to separate the Intermediate classes from the Degree classes, or to bring in all the other changes which are contemplated in this Bill, and we shall not be able for some time to erect the buildings, not merely because money is not forthcoming at the present time, but because buildings take some time to put up. We are, therefore, faced with this difficulty, that we have to provide for the transitional period, which may be rather long. Now, how do I visualise the condition of the Colleges during this transitional period? They will remain in their present buildings. They will run their Degree classes. They will run their Intermediate classes. But we hope that gradually they will begin to adapt themselves, possibly in some cases by cutting off the Intermediate classes and so on, to the ultimate organisation which is contemplated in this measure. That will be their condition during this transitional period, and that is the reason why we have had to put in rather unusual powers, which I think rather frightened Dr. Gour. Well, I can assure Dr. Gour, and I can assure other Members here that I also was a little bit frightened by this clause and we shall consider it very carefully in the Joint Committee.

Now the second head that I have to speak of is the ultimate shape of the University. I do not think, Sir, that I am breaking any confidences if I give a little of the history of this case. When I introduced this Bill, I stated that we had had a meeting of representatives of the colleges in December, 1919, at which this idea of a unitary University was, I think I used the words 'enthusiastically and, I might say, unanimously adopted'. Well, there has recently grown up a little doubt in the minds of some of the representatives of colleges as to whether they were not, perhaps, giving up a little bit too much to the University.

(At this stage Mr. Deputy President took the Chair.)

I am sure, that is a feeling with which every body will sympathise; but I myself am doubtful whether any such apprehension is really warranted by the terms of this measure. I have spent many hours recently, since I came down to Delhi from Simla, in talking with representatives of the colleges and putting in points here and there which I thought would meet their wishes. Well, I have again had another talk with them since this Bill was introduced, and I find that their wishes are not yet quite met. This is a matter which we shall have an opportunity of discussing in the Joint Committee, and I hope that we shall be able to hammer something out. I do not really think it will require any radical change at all to satisfy the representatives of the colleges. For

I P. X. the moment, I may say, there is no intention whatever of destroying the identities of these colleges, nor has there ever been. We have a University of the unitary type which has been established at Dacca. Now, the Dacca colleges are older, more established, and, I think I may say, stronger colleges than two of those which are situated at Delhi, but I have not heard any complaints; I have not heard that they have lost their identity, although they are not even called colleges but are called Halls. Professor Shahani quoted some passages out of the Calcutta University Commission Report. But I must point out that the passages which he quoted have reference to the scheme which was put forward for reconstituting the University of Calcutta, and that the reconstitution of the University of Calcutta was never intended by the Commission to turn it into a unitary University. It was to be a University in which a certain amount of co-operative teaching was to be performed. But the Commission were faced with this difficulty, which we are not faced with here, that they had an enormous area in Calcutta itself with a very large number of colleges, and colleges of very different potentiality, and also with the still more difficult problem of a vast area in the mofussil with many colleges which would have to continue on some system of affiliation.

Those were the difficulties with which they were faced in Bengal. Here in Delhi, we have not those difficulties, and it ought to be possible to hammer out something more simple, more efficient, more economical, something that will combine the preservation of the identity of the existing colleges with the idea of a University which will be able to guide and help and control, without interfering unduly with any domestic matters. (Hear, hear.)

I need not say more upon this fascinating subject of the organisation of Universities, because my friend, Mr. Choudhuri, has already given you a lucid explanation of what a unitary university is and of its advantages; and I think that, if any difference does remain between Professor Shahani and myself, it is really one not of principle, but simply of degree. Is the University to be the handmaid of the colleges, or are the colleges to be the assistants, the willing assistants, of the University, and the collaborators with it? That is all. It is not a question of principle, it is a question of degree. (Mr. S. C. Shahani: Completely organised in themselves.) Professor Shahani says: 'completely organised in themselves.' I am a prudent man and I am not going to give myself away over the word 'organised', because to tell you the truth, Sir, I am not quite sure what it means; but we shall be able to consider the definition of the word 'organised' when we go to the Joint Committee.

I have not been able, Sir, to touch on all the points which have been raised this morning in this extremely interesting discussion. But I do hope that I have touched on those which, the Assembly will agree with me, are the most important and vital points; and I do hope that I have convinced Mr. Joshi, so that he will not, in any way, oppose the motion which I have placed before the House this morning. There are many other matters, some of which have been touched upon this morning, which we shall have to discuss in the Joint Committee; and, when this Bill emerges from it, I trust that Members will see that the remarks made this morning have not fallen on deaf ears.

Mr. President: The question is:

'That this Assembly do recommend to the Council of State that the Bill to establish and incorporate a unitary teaching and residential University at Delhi, be referred to a Joint Committee of this Assembly and of the Council of State and that the Joint Committee do consist of 14 Members.'

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till Twenty Minutes to Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Twenty Minutes to Two of the Clock. Mr. President was in the Chair.

THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX BILL.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey (Finance Member) : Sir, I beg to move:

'That the Report of the Joint Committee on the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to income-tax and super-tax be taken into consideration.'

The motion was adopted.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated: Labour interests) : I want to point out that there are some amendments standing in my name which I never intended sending. I do not know who made the mistake.

Mr. President : If the Honourable Member did not intend to send them, he need not move them.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally (Sind : Muhammadan Rural) : I beg to move :

'That the Bill be recommitted to the Joint Committee to suggest amendments to Chapter II of the Bill.'

My object, Sir, in moving this motion is two-fold. Firstly, Sir, I want that this new institution of a Board of Inland Revenue should be knocked on the head. It is mentioned by the Joint Committee that this Board will, at the present moment, consist of only one member, but I dare say that, in course of time, it will be a regular Board of more than one member as the term implies. At the present moment, when the finances of the country are in a very bad way, we should not create any new offices of this kind. It will be for the very serious consideration of this House whether it should agree to a proposal of this kind at this juncture. But my more important object is that the Bill be referred back to the Joint Committee for a reconsideration of the question of associating non-official agency with the income-tax officers of various grades and denominations mentioned in the Joint Committee's Report, for the purpose of assessment of the tax as well as for the purpose of hearing appeals. Sir, the practice under English law is that the administration of the income-tax is consigned to various bodies and these bodies are first the Board of Inland Revenue, known as the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, secondly, general Commissioners, thirdly, additional Commissioners, and fourthly, the special Commissioners. The Board of Inland Revenue exercises general control over the officials of the Board of Revenue and the non-official bodies, and is responsible to Parliament. For income-tax purposes, England and Wales are divided into divisions according to Mr. President : In what respect does the Honourable Member differentiate his proposal from an ordinary amendment to the Bill ?

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : I want to associate non-official agency with the assessment of income-tax as well as with the hearing of appeals and I want to show what the law in England is on the subject.

Mr. President : I am not dealing with the merits of the point. I am dealing with the method the Honourable Member has adopted. Is the Honourable Member satisfied that the Joint Committee did not take these points sufficiently into consideration to justify recommitment of the Bill ?

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : On that point there has been a considerable difference of opinion on the part of the Joint Committee, as well as the All-India Committee that met in Simla some time ago, and so far as the Joint Committee is concerned, it did consider this question, I admit, but at a time when several Members who were in favour of this proposal were away and they carried this proposal by a majority of 7 against 5. The principle is a very important one and I think the question should be reconsidered by the Joint Committee, because, if we consider that point here, it will take a lot of time as the whole of Chapter II will have to be recast. Therefore, I think, Sir, that it is fit and proper that the whole question should be referred back to the Joint Committee with a mandate from this House to reconsider this question and, if they come to the conclusion that we should have non-official agency associated with income-tax officers, they should recast Chapter II altogether.

Mr. President : I find nothing in the Report of the Joint Committee to indicate that the consideration given to the subject was inadequate, and if the members of the Committee were not agreed as to the manner in which they should deal with this subject, they would surely have expressed their grievance in the form of a Minute of Dissent. I find no Minute of Dissent and, unless the Honourable Member can give me more substantial reasons, I do not think I can allow him to move the motion standing in his name.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : I had a conversation with a member of the Joint Committee, who is a Member of the Council of State, the Honourable Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas, and he told me that he is quite in favour of the principle, and so is the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, but he was unfortunately away on that particular day when this discussion took place in the Joint Committee.

Mr. President : The Honourable Member is only making his case worse by referring to a Member of the other Chamber, with whom we have nothing to do.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : He was a member of the Joint Committee.

Mr. President : We are only concerned with the members of the Joint Committee who are in this House.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : I am entirely in your hands as to whether I am in order or not. It is a very important question which ought to be considered fully and this House has hardly the time or the opportunity to consider it. On that ground I think the Bill should properly again be referred back to the Joint Committee.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : Sir, on behalf of Government, I may say that we are perfectly prepared to discuss this question on the floor of the House.

Mr. President : I think this is the proper place to discuss it. I have been asking the Honourable Member whether he can point to anything in the proceedings of the Committee or in the Report of the Committee, to show that there was any opinion expressed in the Committee that the question was inadequately examined or that it should be referred to the judgment of this House. If the Honourable Member thinks that the method adopted by the Committee was inadequate, he has not put that case to me. I can find nothing in the Report of the Committee to justify the course which he has taken.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : I quite admit that so far as the Report goes, there is nothing to show that, but I would bring it to the notice of the House that even the Bengal Chamber of Commerce very strongly recommended that course, and I am informed—how far I am correctly informed I do not know—that even the Chairman of the Joint Committee, Sir Alexander Murray, favoured this proposal but did not press his view.

Mr. President : If the Chairman of the Joint Committee thought it inadvisable to press his view, the Honourable Member need not press it. (Laughter.)

Mr. S. C. Shahani (Sind Jagirdars and Zamindars : Landholders) : Sir, my first amendment is that the phrase 'Collector of Income-tax' be substituted for 'Income-tax Officer.' My reason for this amendment is that the designation that I suggest will carry more weight, and I really do not understand why the Income-tax Officer, who has now so far been called the 'Collector of Income-tax,' should hereafter be called 'Income-tax Officer'.

The second amendment which I propose is that the appointments of Assistant Commissioner and Income-tax Officer be made by the Governor General in Council.

Mr. President : We will take one amendment at a time.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : Sir, with regard to this point, I may say that the question of nomenclature has caused at different times a considerable amount of difficulty. We originally proposed that these officers should be called 'Assessors.' Now, Sir, I do not know whether there is attached to the name and functions of an Assessor, that is to say, a judicial Assessor, any such implication as makes that name unpopular in the country, but we received a number of representations asking us to remove the name 'Assessor' from the Bill and to substitute some other nomenclature. Mr. Shahani wishes to call these officers 'Collectors'. Now, Sir, I think perhaps he has been misled by the fact that, in the existing Act, we do refer everywhere to the Collector, but the Collector, in that case was, in the majority of cases also the Collector of the District. The word 'Collector' has a definite meaning in the Revenue Acts, and we wish to avoid any confusion with that officer, just as, coming to another grade, we desire to avoid using the term 'Deputy Commissioner' because the term 'Deputy Commissioner' has also a definite meaning in the Criminal Procedure Code. The new class, we call 'Income-tax Officers,' will, for the most part, be Provincial Service Officers, and we do not desire that any confusion should arise between their functions and those of the regular Collector of the District. It is for that reason, Sir, that we chose the term 'Income-tax Officer'; and, after a full discussion of various alternatives, it was decided by the Committee that this was the most convenient one to use.

Mr. President : Amendment moved :

'Substitute 'Collector' of Income-tax' for 'Income-tax Officer' wherever it occurs in the Bill.'

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. N. M. Joshi : Sir, as I was explaining some time before, I am at a loss to know how this amendment came to be printed on this paper. I sent some amendment to another Bill, the Emigration Bill, but the Department has that amendment on this list of amendments to the Income tax Bill.

Mr. President : No doubt, that is good news for the Finance Member.

Bai Bahadur S. P. Bajpai (Lucknow Division : Non-Muhammadan Rural) : Sir, I rise to move the following amendment which stands in my name :

'After clause 2 (1) (b) insert the following :

'(c) Any income derived from forestry :

'Provided the piece of land on which the forest grows is either assessed to land revenue in British India or subject to a local rate assessed and collected by officers of Government as such.'

'And re-number clause (2) (1) (c) as clause 2 (1) (d).'

Sir, I regret to note that the representation of the Zamindars on the Select Committee to consider the Income-tax Bill was anything but adequate. It is, therefore, no wonder that the interest of the Zamindars did not receive sufficient attention at the hands of the Committee. Sir, I believe it will be admitted by all my Honourable colleagues here that forests are to a very great extent indispensable not only for the development of agriculture, but also of industries. I fail to see why a Zamindar growing a forest on a piece of land, which is assessed to land revenue, should also be called upon to pay income-tax. I may tell the Honourable the Finance Member that income derived from forestry is not even half as much as can be obtained from agriculture. Zamindars are doing very useful work ; their loyalty is proverbial ; they have received very high encomiums for war services from His Majesty the King-Emperor down to the Collectors. Their benefactions are known far and wide. Is it then desirable to overtax them and cripple their useful activities? I, certainly, with due deference to the Honourable the Finance Member, think that it is not fair that, simply because a Zamindar grows a forest, he should be called upon to pay both land-revenue and income-tax. In my humble opinion, justice, equity and good conscience demand that none should be taxed twice over. With these words, I commend this amendment to the acceptance of the House.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : Sir, as to the representation of the landowning class on the Joint Committee, well, the appointment of the Joint Committee was in the hands of the two Houses, and, if no proposals were at the time put forward for a larger representation of that class, I think perhaps the House will see the reason is fairly obvious. It is that that class enjoys by law the privilege of avoiding income-tax entirely on any revenue that they raise from their land. Now, Sir, I admit the Honourable Member's main point that forests are indispensable to the country, but I am under the necessity of asking him, when he puts forward this amendment, what exactly he means by forestry. We had ourselves in the original Bill intended to include the word 'forestry' but when we came to discuss it, we found it very difficult indeed to arrive at any definite interpretation. If it is intended that a man who grows trees or forests on his own land should not be taxed for any income that he derives from them, then, I say, it is already sufficiently provided for, in section 2 (1) (a), which exempts :

'Any rent or revenue derived from land which is used for agricultural purposes.'

We tried, but could not improve on that definition. If, on the other hand, he means that a man who takes a contract in a forest, say in a Native State, and earns an income thereby, should escape from income-tax, then I, for one, am not with him. I would point out that if the House accepts his amendment, all such persons, viz., those who take contracts in forests for cutting down and selling the timber would escape assessment. It is for that reason that we ourselves have made no such amendment as he himself has now put forward and we have left the matter to the ordinary operation of the Act. I would add that if this point is not sufficiently clear from the Act, I am prepared to make it perfectly clear by executive instructions that if a land-owner grows on his own land, which is assessed to land-revenue, forests or trees and derives income therefrom, he will not be assessed on such income.

Rai Bahadur S. P. Bajpai: Sir, I am very thankful to the Honourable the Finance Member. All that I wanted the Government to do, he has agreed to do. I am perfectly satisfied with the assurance given by him. I did not say anything on behalf of the contractors. I only spoke on behalf of the Zamindars whose interests, I hope, will be quite safe now.

Mr. President: Amendment moved :

' After clause 2 (1) (b) insert the following :

' (c) Any income derived from forestry :

' Provided the piece of land on which the forest grows is either assessed to land-revenue in British India or subject to a local rate assessed and collected by officers of Government as such'

' And re-number clause (2) (1) (c) as clause 2 (1) (d).'

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Baba Ujagar Singh Bedi (Punjab : Landholders) : The amendment which I am to move to-day, I believe the Honourable Members will agree with me, is of such an important nature, that it deserves a close examination of the House.

Before I read out my amendment, I would humbly request the Government to kindly explain their policy, frankly and openly, and say whether or not they intend to exempt the agricultural product from the operations of the present Income-tax Bill, for I fear that, if the words of the clause which I wish to get amended remain as they are, there is every apprehension of the destruction of this class—I mean that of the landholders—on which rests the magnificent edifice of the Government.

Sir, I recollect here the story of a bangle who was once carrying his bundle of glass bangles on his back when, to his great misfortune, a policeman, with a baton in his hand, approached him, gave a stroke on his bundle and said : ' What is in this that you are carrying ' . ' Sir,' the poor man, in a trembling tone replied : ' Just one more stroke and you will find nothing in it.'

Sir, exactly the same is the condition of the poor landholders. The excessive burden of heavy taxation is crushing them down. The so-called theory of State-landlordism, to analyse which I will not pause, does not only claim one-half of their produce, but in some cases actually 30 per cent. has been realised ; while all other communities are taxed to the extent of one anna or so per rupee, although I am not jealous of them.

I readily admit that clause VIII of sub-head 3 of Rule No. 4 to the said Bill exempts ' agricultural income ' from the operations of income-tax, but I am quite surprised to find that the definition of ' agricultural income,' as given in sub-clause (iii), clause (b), of sub-head (1) of Rule No. 2, is quite incomprehensive in giving the desired effect, of exemption.

[Baba Ujagar Singh Bedi.]

May I read out, Sir, for the information of the House, the said sections and clauses :

'Agricultural income'

says clause VIII of sub-head 3 of rule No. 4 :

'means the sale by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in-kind of the produce raised or received by him, when he does not keep a shop or stall for the sale of such produce.'

Now I leave it entirely to the House to judge whether or not the original words of the definition, if left as they are, will meet the required purpose of exempting the agricultural income.

May I, here, ask a few questions which may throw some light on the incomprehensiveness of the said definition :

- (1) If a certain landholder, named A, sells half of his produce this year and the other half the next year, does the act mean shopping ?
- (2) If a landholder sells 50 maunds on Monday, 70 maunds on Friday and 125 maunds on Saturday, does this sale mean shopping ?
- (3) If a landholder of the class who have purchased lands to get some profit out of them as well as the safeguard of their money, does not sell his produce for full five years and does it after that, will it be regarded as shopping ?
- (4) It being a fact that all the well-to-do landholders, who have land produce more than their requirements, keep it in different stalls, to show to the public the different qualities they have, does this stocking mean shopping ?
- (5) If a landholder sends his produce to a mundi (market) to some 'arti' (a broker) to dispose of it, does it mean that he is keeping a shop ?
- (6) There are many cases when, in times of scarcity, some generous landholders open their stalls for retail, to help the poor and the famine-stricken people. Would it mean that he has opened a shop ?

I have raised these few questions just to give the House an idea of the incomprehensiveness of the definition, which gives no line of demarcation between the shop of a regular banya and that of a cultivator.

It is just possible that the Government might say that a landholder opens a shop when he retails his produce, for thereby he makes double profits. Then, Sir, may I ask for the sake of argument as to whether there is any line of division between wholesale and retail dealing ; and if such is the case, do the Government give any concession to general wholesale dealers and treat differently the retail merchants ?

If this plea is brought forward, I cannot conceive for a single moment any life or strength in it. That a man, who has paid a tax and a very heavy tax on his produce, should be re-taxed, because he is selling it in small quantities, would mean, in other words, that he should throw away his produce and should give it to foreign big companies for export, at a very low price.

Sir, if this is the principle, I cannot understand how the landholders will be able to meet the high rate of assessment, which is realised by the Government from their limited incomes.

Therefore, I would humbly suggest to the Honourable the Finance Member either to give some definition of the words 'shop' and 'stall' or to delete them altogether from the clause or to kindly accede to my amendment, which reads as follows :

'That the following be inserted between the words 'produce' and 'or' :
'not being the produce of his land.'

The sub-clause thus reading as follows :

'The sale by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in-kind of the produce raised or received by him, when he does not keep a shop or stall for the sale of such produce, not being the produce of his land, or'

This amendment, in my humble opinion, seems comprehensive enough to cover the object of the Government and also goes to protect this class—which is the back-bone of both the country and the Government.

With these few words, I beg leave to commend my amendment to the House.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : I see the Honourable Member is labouring under some anxiety on behalf of the land-owning community. But from his speech one would imagine that we had suddenly imported into the Act some new and astounding proposition. Could it be believed from what the Honourable Member has said that this identical sub-clause has formed part of the Income-tax Act and without alteration ever since that Act has been in existence? Its operation so far has certainly not ended in the disastrous consequences which were feared by the Honourable Member. I do not think that the land-owning classes have been driven into ruin by it, nor, if it remains unaltered, do I think that a single landowner will pay more in the future than he has in the past. As to the rather long series of questions which he has asked, I can give him definite answers. If a landholder sells half of his produce this year and half next year, there is, of course, no shop. The Act refers entirely to the keeping of a shop. If he withholds his produce for five years and then sells it, equally there is no shop. If he opens a shop for retail sale in times of famine or scarcity, then, Sir, it is true in that case he would be keeping a shop, but I assume that if he is the philanthropist that the Honourable Member predicates, he probably would be selling his produce at or below cost price. In that case there would be no profit or a loss and he would be paying no income-tax.

I do not know whether these replies are satisfactory to the Honourable Member. I again suggest to the House that it is unwise to alter a clause which has stood for so many years and, as far as we are aware, has caused no inconvenience or injustice in its operation. In any case, if any alteration is required, I would strongly advise the House not to accept that put forward by the Honourable Member for, if I read it aright—and it is a little difficult to understand—if I read it aright, it would have the effect of relieving of assessment any man who keeps a shop and at the same time draws an income from agricultural land. That, in itself, would not be a very desirable consequence.

Bhai Man Singh (East Punjab: Sikh) : Sir, the practical effect of this clause on the agriculturist is this, that, any agriculturist who has got vast lands cannot open a shop for the sale of the produce of these lands. This is a definite hindrance in the way of such a man entering trade. Either he must be prepared to pay double tax for his produce or he must be contented not to open a shop for the sale of grain etc. I see no reason why a man selling his own grain should be required to pay a tax for it, whether he sells it to a banya directly or whether he sells it through a shop of his own. The practical difficulty alluded to by the Honourable the Finance Member,—though I do not think that it was very definitely stated—was that if a man owning land opened a grain shop he would not pay any income-tax for its income at all. We can very well see that there are two sides to it. If a man buys grain from other people and sells it, it is one part of it; if he sells his own wheat, which is the produce of his own field, that is quite a different thing. This sub-clause, as it stands, taxes a man for selling wheat which is the produce of his own land as well. There is no reason why we should tax him over again, simply because he sells it in a shop. If you think a man can hoodwink the income-tax officer by all means, let that officer be more vigilant; let him prove that the man has sold much more grain than he can get from his own fields and tax him for its profits. There is absolutely no reason for saying, that, because a man sits down in a shop and sells the produce of his land and thereby he can hoodwink the income tax officer, so we should tax the produce of his own land as well on which he has already paid land revenue, and thereby tax the produce of land twice over. This, I think, is very hard for the agriculturists and, with these remarks, I support the amendment.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : Sir, there is a practical difficulty now that it has been pointed out. Under the old Act, the Honourable the Finance Member has to admit that agricultural income is defined so as to include :

'Any income derived from the sale by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in-kind of the produce raised or received by him when he does not keep a shop or stall for the sale of such produce.'

Let us take paddy or wheat, as the case may be. Supposing a landowner, who is also a shopkeeper, sells not only his own paddy but also paddy which he buys. As the clause now runs, it may be open to the construction that even for the sale of such produce he will be liable for income-tax. (A Voice : It is not so.) I do not know why my learned friend interrupts and says it is not. I bestowed some consideration on the matter, but my friend is ready to answer, it is not. I quite agree that it ought not to be, but to say it is not so, is rather venturesome, and, therefore I ask for an explanation from the Honourable the Finance Member what is the object of keeping that clause. The object, apparently, is not to tax him where he sells his own produce. Apparently, that is the object which the Legislature has in view. Where he sells other people's produce he is liable, but what is the object in keeping this clause when he does not keep a shop or stall for the sale of such produce? Would it not be better to omit it altogether?

Mr. G. G. Sim (Joint Secretary : Finance) : The reason why these words are contained in this clause is simply to have a handy distinction between the man who indulges in a regular trade in grain dealing and the man who occasionally sells his own grain. There is no double taxation whatsoever involved in this sub-clause, as was suggested by Bhai Man Singh. Where a man keeps a regular shop for dealing in grain, all that he is taxed upon for income-tax purposes, is merely the profits of the shop and not the profits he gets from cultivating the land.

Mr. President: Amendment moved :

'At the end of sub-clause (1) (b) (iii) of clause 2 of the Bill between the words 'produce' and 'or' add the words 'not being the produce of his land'.'

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was adopted.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey (Bombay Millowners Association : Indian Commerce) : Mr. President, I beg to ask your permission to allow me to replace the word 'Collector' by the words 'Income-tax Officer' in my amendment, because I find that, throughout the Bill, the term 'Income-tax Officer' is used.

My amendment, which I now beg to move, runs as follows :

'In clause 2 (14) for the words 'a registered' the word 'an' be substituted; and at the end after the word 'partners' the words 'of which the prescribed particulars have been registered with the Income-tax Officer in the prescribed manner' be added.'

The effect of this amendment will be that the clause will be worded exactly in the same way as in the existing Act. In the original Bill, it was proposed by Government that this clause be omitted altogether, and no distinction be made between registered and unregistered firms; but later on, in the Select Committee, it was thought desirable, in order to minimise the inconvenience to smaller firms, that some definition should be introduced; and, when they introduced the definition, they amended it in such a way that, instead of registration being with the Income-tax Officer, they provided for a legally registered document. There have often been suggestions made by some people that all partnerships should be registered, but such proposals have always been opposed by the Indian Mercantile Community on grounds of practical difficulties. I am not discussing at this stage the merits or demerits of such a proposal but, if all the partnerships are to be registered, it should be by a law directly applicable and directly brought forward in this House, and not in this indirect way, by which we make registration practically compulsory, because the effect of the clause, as recommended by the Select Committee, will be that, if firms do not register their partnership, they will not be entitled to refund of the super-tax in cases where it has already been paid by the partners on the same income, and thus super-tax shall have to be paid twice on the same income. The original clause has worked very satisfactorily. All the partners of a firm have to make out a proper partnership document and register it with the Income-tax Officer, and, when he was satisfied he registered the document and gave the necessary certificate, the income-tax being afterwards charged according to law.

I hope Government will see the reasonableness of this and accept my amendment.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : Sir, I accept that amendment on behalf of the Government.

The motion was adopted.

Clause 1, Clause 2, as amended, and Clause 3 were added to the Bill.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : I move the following amendment :

‘ To clause 4 (2) of the Bill, add the following :

‘ Explanation : - When a person carries on operations in British India and abroad, the mere fact that income, profits, or gains are received abroad and invested there, is taken into account in the balance sheet prepared in British India, does not amount to receipt within the meaning of this section ’

I do not think that many words are needed to commend this amendment for the acceptance of the Assembly. It only enacts what has been recognised by Courts as the accepted principle in construing the word ‘ received.’ But the question has been raised, to my knowledge, in the case of a Bank on the West Coast in Calicut, which has operation both in Cochin and in Malabar. The profits earned in Cochin were invested there and brought into account in the head office and they were sought to be charged. I think a similar case arose in Bombay, where a Company has got branches in the Native States and there also the same thing happened. Of course, the Madras cases did not go to Court. I know that the Bank was charged for those profits, although they were not actually received in British India. In the House of Lords, it has been decided, with reference to a similar case in England, that such profits should not be deemed to be profits received. I have taken this ‘ Explanation ’ from Halsbury’s Laws of England where he states it in this way.

I am advised that the word 'are' there is bad grammar. I think 'is' is perhaps a better word, although I have no doubt about the former. I think the sentence reads all right. I thought there was doubt about the word 'are', but I think the sentence, as it is, is all right. I propose that this 'Explanation' be added.

Mr. G. G. Sim : Sir, I quite agree with the Honourable Member that in the circumstances mentioned in his 'Explanation' profits received abroad and taken into account in the balance sheet prepared in British India are not liable to taxation, but I do not understand how they could possibly be held to be liable to taxation under the Bill as it stands. The cases referred to by the Honourable Member arose under the existing Act and he also referred to certain cases under the English law. But this provision—sub-clause (2)—is a new provision. It never appeared in the Act before and it makes it perfectly clear, I think, that profits and gains arising abroad are never liable to taxation until they are actually received or brought into British India. The 'Explanation' is, therefore, I consider, unnecessary. But I do not oppose it on that account merely. The 'Explanation' assumes that profits are to be taxed according to the receipts credited or expenditure debited in the assessee's account. The Committee which dealt with this Bill have spent a considerable amount of time in trying to make it perfectly clear that people need not be assessed in that particular manner, but, if they choose, they can be assessed on the basis of cash transactions, that is to say, according to the money actually received and money actually expended, and this 'Explanation' seems to throw some doubt on the question whether a man can elect to have his account done on a cash basis.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : I do not see how it throws any doubt on the point raised by my friend. The word 'received' is in the English Act and the existing Act. The words are 'received in British India' and, therefore, the question will arise, and I want to make the point clear. As my friend has no objection to the principle of the 'Explanation', I do not know why he should object to the 'Explanation' as the question has been raised. I know it has been the subject-matter of a suit in the High Court of Bombay and in fact three Judges had to sit over it. I, therefore, think that the 'Explanation' is necessary.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer (Tanjore-cum-Trichinopoly : Non-Muhammadsan Rural) : In the interests of grammar, I suggest that the word 'are' before 'received' be omitted, and for the word 'is' before 'taken' the word 'are' be substituted.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : I agree.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : As Mr. Sim has explained, we do not regard this as in any way necessary. But if the House desires to have the 'Explanation' inserted in the Act, my advice will be that the word 'income' should also be omitted because 'income' is not mentioned in the sub-clause which refers only to profits and gains.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : I have no objection.

Mr. President : Amendment moved :

To clause 4 (2) of the Bill, add the following :

Explanation.—When a person carries on operations in British India and abroad, the mere fact that profits or gains received abroad and invested there, are taken into account in the balance sheet prepared in British India, does not amount to receipt within the meaning of this section.'

[Mr. President.]

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was adopted.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: This is only a formal amendment. It runs as follows :

'After sub-clause (3) (vi) of clause 4, insert the following :

'(vii) legacies not being annuities granted under a will' and re-number (vii) and (viii) as (viii) and (ix).'

In the original Act, as it was, legacies were excluded, but, in consequence of a doubt expressed as to whether annuities were included in legacies, the new Bill proposed to omit the word 'legacies' and I see in the report of the Joint Committee that they consider clause (vii), as it stands, does include legacies. It may be contended that legacies were sought to be included in the new Bill. Nobody looks at the report of the Select Committee or the Statement of Objects and Reasons when they construe the section and it might be open to the construction I have put. I think, therefore, that there is no harm in inserting this sub-clause as sub-clause (vii) in order to exclude legacies not being annuities granted under a will.

Mr. G. G. Sim: Sir, this point was discussed in the Joint Select Committee, and they were advised by the legal authorities consulted that legacies were clearly covered by sub-clause (3) (vii) of the Bill. The insertion of the word 'legacies' would, I think, throw a doubt on the question of whether sums similar to legacies such as gifts, are also included if they are not specifically mentioned. I am not a lawyer, Sir, but I would abide by the advice which was given by my lawyers.

Mr. President: Amendment moved :

'After sub-clause (3) (vi) of clause 4, insert the following :

'(vii) legacies not being annuities granted under a will' and re-number (vii) and (viii) as (viii) and (ix).'

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Clause 4, as amended, was added to the Bill.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: I move the following amendment :

In clause 5 (4) substitute 'by the Governor General in Council' for 'by the Commissioner of Income-tax.'

We have no Assistant Commissioners, but, judging by what happens in my own province, I find that the Collectors of Income-tax have so far been appointed, not by the Commissioner in Sind, who would be very like the Commissioner of Income-tax, but by the Local Government, the Government of Bombay. The Collector of Income-tax has been drawing salaries varying between Rs. 500 and 1,000 and I take it that the salary of the Assistant Commissioner would be something like Rs. 1,500 or Rs. 1,200 to 1,500. To my mind, it is not desirable that such important appointments should be made by the Commissioner of Income-tax. The whole of the Income-tax Department should be placed under the supervision and control of the Government of India, and I therefore propose that these appointments be made by the Governor General in Council and not by the Commissioner of Income-tax.

Mr. President: Before I put the amendment, I would point out to the Honourable Member that the reading of the clause would be in the following unusual form:

'Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax and Income-tax Officers shall, subject to the control of the Governor General in Council, be appointed by the Governor General in Council,' and so on. Does he wish to retain the words 'subject to the control of the Governor General in Council'?

Mr. S. C. Shahani: I am sorry I have forgotten to indicate that the words 'subject to the control of the Governor General in Council' must disappear.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: Our new Income-tax administration scheme assumes that the Commissioners themselves will be appointed by, and be under the direct control of, the Government of India.

Mr. S. C. Shahani: Amend the language.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey: It, therefore, seems to me to be the proper function of the Commissioner (who will be an officer under the control of the Government of India) to appoint Income-tax Officers, and it is altogether unnecessary to bring the appointment of each Income-tax Officer up to the Government of India. So long as the Government of India retains, as is proposed in the Bill, the control of the operations of the Commissioner in making these appointments, it seems to me, Sir, that this is amply sufficient. It is useless for us to organise a branch of the Central administration on a definite scale, which provides that local arrangements will be in the hands of Commissioners, if, at the same time, we have to issue orders ourselves from the Secretariat on each point of administrative detail.

Bhai Man Singh: I rise to support the amendment of my Honourable friend, Professor Shahani. We are to see that persons of what status are to be Assistant Commissioners and Income-tax Officers and Commissioners. I know in my province,—and I believe the same is the case in other provinces as well,—that the Commissioner of Income-tax is to be selected from a grade of officers of the rank of Senior Deputy Commissioners or Commissioners, and the Assistant Commissioners are to be selected from among the Provincial Civil Service or the Indian Civil Service, officers in grades of say, between 800 and 1,200 or something of that kind, and the Income-tax Officers are selected mostly from amongst the Provincial Service men. As a matter of fact, I know that, in the Punjab, a number of Income-tax Officers who are called Collectors are taken from Provincial Service men.

Mr. President: The question is what authority should appoint these officers and not the class from which they should be drawn.

Bhai Man Singh: I am referring to the grade of men who are appointed to these places and then I will come to the other thing and draw the attention of the House as to whether posts of this grade should be left to be filled up by an officer of the grade of Commissioner or whether they should be filled by some higher authority. In the Provincial Governments, we know that no officer in the grade of Provincial Service is to be appointed by any Commissioner. They are to be selected by the Local Governments. We have not got any substitute for the Local Government unless we call the Commissioner to be a substitute. But when we begin to select persons of the grade of Commissioners to be Commissioners of Income-tax, then we cannot say that they hold the same position as the Local Government. Assistant Commissioners are never to be selected by persons who hold the grade of Commissioners. Now it would be a very deplorable state of things if such high officers are to be selected by an officer who is in the grade of a Commissioner. I would therefore urge most strongly that some higher authority should be in charge of these selections.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: I beg to support this amendment. At present, Income-tax Collectors are appointed by Local Governments. Commissioners of Divisions and even the most senior of them do not get pay higher than Rs. 4,000, and their powers, so far as the Local Administration is concerned, are limited to appointments which carry pay up to Rs. 150 or 200, whereas these Income-tax Officers would draw much higher salary than that. They will draw at least Rs. 400 or 500 a month, and, if these officers are appointed by the Income-tax Commissioner, then, the position of these Income-tax Officers would be much lower than what it is now and their prestige will suffer in consequence. Therefore, I think, that the power of appointing these officers should vest in the Local Governments direct, if not in the Government of India, but, as these officers will not now be under the control of the Local Government, the only alternative is that these appointments should be made by the Government of India.

Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey: There is a great deal in what is said by the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill, that unnecessary work should not be thrown upon the Government of India. At the same time, instead of leaving the matter to a local officer, like the Commissioner of Income-tax, who is at the head of the income-tax officers in the districts, if the authority were vested in the Board of Inland Revenue at the head office here, I think it will meet the case. That Board will, at present, I understand, consist of only one person and that person will always be in touch with headquarters and, if that man has been given the authority of appointing the Assistant Commissioners and Income-tax Officers, I think a great deal of the objection raised by Professor Shahani may be met. At the same time, it would not throw any large burden on the Government of India.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala (Burma : Non-European) : I am afraid this opposition by my Honourable friends is based upon a misconception of the provisions of this Bill. If we examine the Bill, we find that the Bill proposes to replace the present system under which the Local Governments administer the Income-tax Act as agents of the Government of India. The idea now is to have a separate Income-tax Department and, under this provision, the Government of India appoints its own officer, who is nominated by the Governor General in Council, to represent what at present is represented by the Local Government. He takes the place of the Local Government and, therefore, the appointment, though it is left with the Commissioner, is in the hands directly of the Government of India, as the Commissioner is himself directly appointed by the Governor General. Besides, there are these qualifying words 'subject to the control of the Governor General in Council.' Therefore, if the Commissioner makes a wrong appointment, the Governor General can interfere and stop that appointment. So, I submit that if my Honourable friends will look at the arrangement now proposed, they will find that it will be a far more satisfactory arrangement that the Commissioner who represents the Governor General in Council in every province is placed in charge of these appointments. Besides there is one other point. The intention is that these Assistant Commissioners should ordinarily be taken from the Local Government. I mean they may be officers employed by the Commissioner, and the Commissioner, being on the spot, will be in a much better position than the Governor General in Council can ever be. On these grounds, I submit these remarks for consideration of my Honourable friends who are supporting the amendment.

Rao Bahadur C. S. Subrahmanayam (Madras ceded districts and Chittoor : Non-Muhammadian Rural) : Sir, I support the amendment moved by my friend. Apart from the detailed arguments that have been put forward by my Honourable friend, I say, on principle, the appointments rest with the Government of India, for this simple reason that it is an All-India Department, and the officers, especially the Assistant Commissioners, have large powers under this Act, and appointments made by the Government of India will command greater confidence than appointments made by Commissioners in each province. Well, of course, there has been a bit of confusion of thought in the arguments submitted. The point is simply that this Department, being a Department of the Government of India, and responsible in some measure to this Assembly, and where any question connected with its administration would come up for discussion, it is better that these appointments, at any rate the appointments of Assistant Commissioners, should be kept in the hands of the Government of India directly. As for Income-tax Inspectors, that is a different matter. There may be very many, there is the question of time, and all that. As to my Honourable friend, Mr. Ginwala's objection, if the appointments are to be made by the Local Government, as suggested by one of the previous speakers, no doubt it would be an illogical position, but what we want is that these higher offices should be made wholly by the Government of India. Of course, in making those appointments, we know that the Government of India would consult the Commissioner, would take the advice of the Local Government, as to the calibre, quality, character of the men appointed, but anyhow, the appointments must be made from here, so that the Department, in all its various branches, will be more easily amenable to criticism or discussion in this Assembly. Therefore I, Sir, support the amendment moved by Mr. Shahani, and, I think, it is a matter of principle on which this amendment rests.

Mr. G. G. Sim : There appears to be some confusion in the minds of several Honourable Members regarding the provisions of this clause. It is not intended, in any way whatsoever, to change the existing practice. The clause prescribes that these particular officers will, subject to the control of the Governor General in Council, be appointed and dismissed by the Commissioner of the Province. This particular control by the Governor General in Council, as explained in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, it is proposed to exercise through the Local Government. Every appointment made by the Commissioner will be subject to the approval of the Local Government, and any person dismissed from the service can appeal to the Local Government. That is clearly explained in the Statement of Objects and Reasons. The draft letter, conferring these powers on the Local Governments, was shown to the Select Committee, and the Select Committee, in their Report, have stated that they are in thorough agreement with these proposals. They suggested no change whatsoever in the present system under which these appointments will be determined by the Local Government.

Mr. President: Amendment moved :

In clause 5 (4), omit the words 'subject to the control of the Governor General in Council' and substitute 'by the Governor General in Council' for 'by the Commissioner of Income-tax.'

The question I have to put is that that amendment be made.

The Assembly then divided as follows :

Clauses 5 and 6 were added to the Bill.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, the amendment which I have to move is :

'In clause 7 (1) after the words 'private employer' insert the following: 'who has entered into an agreement with the Income-tax Officer in accordance with the prescribed conditions to recover the tax on behalf of Government'.'

Mr. S. C. Shahani : Sir, what about my other amendment*?

Mr. President : It is not an amendment, but merely an expression of opinion. The Honourable Member could have raised his point
3 P.M. on the question that the clause stand part of the Bill.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : The new Bill makes a very serious departure from the existing law. I do not know if Honourable Members have seen the alterations made in the new Bill. It imposes on all private employers the liability to pay the income-tax due by their employees. There are private employers and private employees. There are several landholders in my province who pay handsome salaries to their agents and yet they do not keep proper accounts. Many of the landholders do not keep accounts and they do not know how to do it. They have to take note of the liability of their employees for income-tax whether they are earning sufficient income and also whether they are entitled to any reductions. This is an attempt to impose upon private employees the liability to pay the tax due by the employees and then to recover it from the pay of the employees. All these statutory obligations are sought to be cast on private employers, and that is a new departure quite unsuited to the conditions in this country, and I therefore ask the Government not to make this departure. This is not the time to make such a wide departure from the existing law. I therefore commend this amendment to this House.

Mr. G. G. Sim : Sir, in this matter the Honourable Member disagrees with the finding of the Joint Select Committee and also the Committee which met at Simla to make proposals for the amendment of the Act. Both these Committees held the definite opinion that this change should be made. They, unlike Mr. Rangachariar, were of opinion that the time had come to bring in this change. The question was debated, at some length in the Select Committee and the Select Committee held that the provision should stand.

Mr. President : The question is :

'In clause 7 (1) after the words 'private employer' insert the following: 'who has entered into an agreement with the Income-tax Officer in accordance with the prescribed conditions to recover the tax on behalf of Government.''

The motion was negatived.

Clauses 7 and 8 were added to the Bill.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : Sir, I beg to move that :

' In clause 9 (f) after the word ' property ' where it occurs for the second time, insert the words ' situate in cities or municipal towns, and ' .

The object of this amendment is to exempt, from income-tax, house property which is situate in rural areas. Supposing a person is a landholder or a merchant and he has got a country residence in his village, he has now got to include it in the income-tax return, giving the annual rental value of that property. These houses are usually ancestral residences which have been there very long and in a country like this, where we have to deal with a vast population which go from villages to settle in towns, for professional or trade purposes or as officials, to be called upon to pay income-tax on their houses in rural areas is not right. I, therefore, propose by this amendment to make house property liable to income-tax only in cases where such property is situate either in cities or municipal towns. That is the object of this amendment which I now move.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : Sir, it would, I think, be better if I had an opportunity of ascertaining first of all from the Honourable Mover of this amendment what exactly is the definition he attaches to the word ' city ' . I myself am not aware of any Act which defines a city.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar : For the purpose of the Census, places with a population of 50,000 and upwards are taken as cities.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : That is the first time I have ever heard that census definitions are equivalent to legislative enactments. Then again, as regards municipal towns, I suppose that the Honourable Member is aware that the result of passing his amendment would be that, whereas property situated in Delhi city would come under assessment, property situated in the civil station where we are now sitting would not come under assessment, for it is not a municipal town. It happens to be a notified area. Similarly, property in Raisina would not come under assessment. The country is full of small towns which are neither cities nor municipal towns; but they contain many wealthy citizens, and I myself see no reason whatever why these citizens should enlist the sympathy of Mr. Rangachariar and escape assessment. You are, as a matter of fact, protecting one class against the other. The interests of the general taxpayer are that nobody should escape assessment; that the tax should be levied on everybody equally alike; and I myself can see no reason why the rural assessee should be favoured in this respect as against the urban assessee. Let that be the effect which Mr. Rangachariar wishes to attain. I claim that he does not attain it fully by his amendment, but even a revised amendment would be objectionable from that point of view.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer: (Tanjore cum Trichinopoly : Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I should like to point out that the object, which my friend, Mr. Rangachariar, has in view, is practically attained by the proviso in clause 2. It is distinctly provided there:

‘ Provided that the building is on or in the immediate vicinity of the land, and is a building which the receiver of the rent or revenue or the cultivator or the receiver of the rent-in-kind by reason of his connection with the land, requires as a dwelling-house, or as a store-house, or other out-building.’

Therefore, dwelling houses in villages required by agriculturists or cultivators would be exempt.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: Sir, but for Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer's intervention, I should not have risen to reply. Oftentimes a man has an ancestral house in a village which is of no use to him; oftentimes, it is a burden to him; but he has to include it in the return. Therefore, I think, to rely merely on the proviso would not be sufficient. I think the object of the Income-tax Act is not to assess such property. Income-tax is a tax on income derived from professions, trades and such other things. This is purely a property which is quite outside any earning area, and I therefore press my amendment.

Mr. President: Amendment moved.

‘ In clause 9 (1), after the word ‘ property ’ where it occurs for the second time, insert the words ‘ situate in cities or municipal towns, and ’.’

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Rai Bahadur S. P. Bajpai: Sir, I rise to move that:

‘ In clause 9 (1), after the words ‘ his business ’ insert the words ‘ or residence ’.

Sir, I have never been able to understand why residential houses should be liable to taxation. The owner of a house occupying it for residential purposes does not derive any income from it. All the money he has spent on construction of the house lies idle. He has, besides, to pay so many taxes, municipal taxes and so forth. The mere fact that this sort of taxation has been in vogue for a pretty long time does not justify its continuance. I think it is only fair that residential houses should be exempted from liability to taxation under the Income-tax Act. With these words, I commend this amendment to the acceptance of the House.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala (Agra Division : Non-Muhammadan Rural): Sir, I also support this amendment. It is known to everybody that many people build houses at a very heavy cost and they live in those houses themselves. They do not like to let those houses. Under those circumstances, the money is locked up. It brings no interest or profit—and then it means an expense which is not favoured by anybody. I know the principle that the general taxpayer should not be set against an individual taxpayer, but, in cases where people build their own houses for their own residence, I submit, it is not fair or proper that those houses should be taxed.

Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava (Ambala Division : Non-Muhamadan) : Sir, this amendment stands in my name also. Income-tax should be assessed on the income which one actually derives and not on the income which he may possibly derive. If a man who is the owner of a house occupies it for his residence, he does not derive any income from that house. If the principle that the tax should be assessed, not only on the income which one gets, but that it should be assessed on the income which he may possibly get, were adopted, then a good many anomalies would arise. Take a hypothetical case. A man possesses Rs. 20,000. out of which he deposits Rs. 15,000 in the Bank or invests it in some other way, and keeps Rs. 5,000 in his iron safe—he does not invest that amount in any way. Is he to be assessed on the income which he derives from the investment of Rs. 15,000 only, or is he to be assessed for the income to be derived by the investment of the whole amount of Rs. 20,000? I think the reply should be that he should be assessed on the income which he derives from Rs. 15,000 only and not on the income which he could have derived by investing the whole amount of Rs. 20,000. A man who has built a house will be reduced to the position of a tenant, if he is to be assessed on the income which he could have derived by renting it to a tenant—that is to say, the owner of a house will be deemed to be his own tenant—which is quite anomalous. I know there was a similar provision in Act II of 1886, that, when a building was occupied by its owner, it was deemed to be a source of income, but there is no justification for its retention now—especially when provision has been made for the exclusion of such portions of the property, consisting of any buildings or lands appurtenant thereto, as the owner may occupy for the purpose of his business. When property which is occupied by the owner for his business is to be excluded, there is no justification whatsoever for not excluding the property which he occupies for residential purposes.

Mr. G. G. Sim : Sir, I do not quite understand how any particular hardship is involved in taxing a man on the annual value of the house which he occupies. The Honourable Member who has just sat down has put us the case of a man who owns Rs. 20,000, part of which he invests in the purchase of a house. Well, take the case of two people with the same income, one of whom lives in his own house and pays no rent. Everybody has got to have a house, and his next door neighbour pays a rent of Rs. 3,000. Why should the man who has an income of Rs. 20,000, who has got a house of his own, be taxed at exactly the same figure as a poorer man who, with the same income, owns no house and has to find the rent of his house out of his income?

This tax has always been imposed since income-tax was first imposed in India. It is imposed, so far as I know, in every country in exactly the same way. The cost of omitting this provision from the Bill would be enormous. It would mean exempting most of the house property in India. The result would be that an enormous burden would be shifted from the backs of those people who are fortunate enough to own their own houses, to the backs of those who have to occupy rented houses. It would be impossible for the Government to accept any proposal of this nature. It would make a radical change in the whole system of taxation and there appears to be no justification for it whatsoever.

Mr. President : Amendment moved :

' In clause 9 (1), after the words ' his business ' insert the words ' or residence '.'

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Bhai Man Singh : Sir, the amendment that stands in my name runs as follows :

' At the end of clause 9, sub-clause (1), add the following proviso :

' Provided that no income-tax shall be assessed for any income of the property assessed to land revenue.'

My reason for making this amendment is very simple.

Mr. President : Which amendment is the Honourable Member moving ?

Bhai Man Singh : I am moving No. 7 in the typewritten list, Sir.

Mr. President : He does not wish to move No. 5 ?

Bhai Man Singh : No, Sir, I have already submitted that I do not wish to move No. 5.

Mr. President : Then I must first call on Mr. Bhargava to move his amendments.

Rai Bahadur Pandit J. L. Bhargava : Sir, the following amendments are consequential amendments to the amendment which I proposed and which has been rejected by the House, and, therefore, they do not arise :

' In clause 9 (1) (i), delete the words ' where the property is in the occupation of the owner or ' and substitute the words ' the property ' for the word ' it ' in line 2.'

Bhai Man Singh : Sir, the amendment which I am proposing to move now is as follows :

' At the end of clause 9, sub-clause (1), add the following proviso :

' Provided that no income-tax shall be assessed for any income of the property assessed to land revenue.'

My object is very simple. There is absolutely no reason for saying that such and such a place is already paying a certain sort of tax; we will realise another tax from it. I know the provision to the effect that the land revenue paid over it is to be deducted from the income-tax that is to be assessed.

Mr. President : Does the Honourable Member mean to insert his proviso at the bottom of the page after the italic type in the Bill :

' Provided that the aggregate of the allowances made under this sub-section shall in no case exceed the annual value ?'

He wants to add another proviso ?

Bhai Man Singh: Yes, Sir.

Mr. President: Then I will call upon him later on. Mr. Bajpai.

Rai Bahadur S. P. Bajpai: Sir, the amendment * standing in my name does not arise now as it recommended merely a consequential change.

* In sub-clause (1) (i) of clause 2, delete the words beginning from 'is' in the first line up to 'it' in the second line.'

Mr. W. M. Hussanally: Sir, I beg to move that :

In sub-clause (1) (i) of clause 2, substitute 'one-fifth' for 'one-sixth' in the last line'.

This would only be fair to house-owners because when prices of material and labour have gone up so high, the original percentage for repairs fixed years ago is very small and it entails a great hardship especially in places where there are Rent Acts in existence under which a landlord cannot raise the rent by a single farthing, and, therefore, he has to pay much more heavily than this one-sixth out of his pocket to carry out repairs. I have, therefore suggested that the one-sixth should be raised to one-fifth.

Mr. G. G. Sim: Sir, I am afraid it is impossible to accept this amendment. The question was discussed by the Committee and they decided that the allowance of one-sixth is an exceedingly generous one. The Honourable Member said that the cost of building material has gone up. That is perfectly true. So have the rents.

If a house was rented previously at Rs. 600, the owner got an allowance of Rs. 100. He now puts up the rent to Rs. 1,200 and he gets an allowance of Rs. 200. I have seen no case quoted anywhere where this allowance of one-sixth, which is given to the owner whether he spends the money in repairs or not, has proved to be insufficient. The general impression I have found is that it is grossly excessive. (Laughter.)

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar: I support the amendment. I am the owner of house property in Madras, and I can testify, from my own personal experience, that, notwithstanding the rise in rents, the cost of repair is not covered by one-sixth of the annual value. (Hear, hear.) It costs much more. If the rents have gone up, the mason's charges, the bricklayer's charges, the carpenter's charges, and the cost of various other commodities have gone up, and the exasperating sufferings we have to suffer at the hands of these tenants (Laughter), tenants who always trouble you for this and that and whom you can never satisfy,—we have all that to take into account. I, therefore, join issue with Mr. Sim when he states that an allowance of one-sixth is enough. One-sixth is certainly not enough and I can testify to it. Moreover, the House ought to know that we have to pay heavy municipal rates and no deduction is made for municipal rates for that purpose. In every town, in Bombay, Madras and Calcutta, municipal rates are going up on house property like anything, and it is the house property which has to bear income-tax taxation and local rates, and there is a great deal of force in the amendment which has been moved. If it were left to me, I would omit the whole of the house property from liability in this respect, but this is a very reasonable request and it ought to be acceded to.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : Sir, Mr. Sim has given reasons why my Department would have serious reason to regret if this amendment were passed. For my own part, I am perfectly prepared to leave it to the House. If the House really thinks that landlords are the humanitarians that Mr. Rangachariar professes that class to be, then, let them be given a larger allowance for repairs. If, on the other hand, the House thinks that landlords are what we tenants sometimes call them, let it leave the clause as it stands.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : The only point I would bring to the notice of the House, in reply, is that Mr. Sim has taken no account of the several Rent Acts, which are existing now in the Presidency Towns and other cities. Under the local Rent Acts, which have been in existence since 1918, no landlord can enhance the rent. (An Honourable Member : 10 per cent. is allowed.) I agree that 10 per cent. increase is allowed, but that only upon the rental of 1916 which is entirely inadequate considering present circumstances. The rents cannot be enhanced according to the law of supply and demand.

Mr. President : Amendment moved :

'In sub-clause (1) (i) of clause 9, substitute 'one-fifth' for 'one-sixth' in the last line.'

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : I beg to move :

'In sub-clause (1) (iv) of clause 9 of the Bill, after the word 'rent' where it first occurs, insert the words 'or municipal or local taxes or rate' and, at the end, add the words 'or taxes or rate'.'

My submission is that when the houses are situate in big cities, where municipal tax and many other taxes have to be paid, it is the least that I demand that deduction should be made on account of taxes so paid. This does not require any elaboration. It is very clear that on houses in which owners live or which they have let to tenants, in every case they have to pay a large number of taxes in municipal towns. This would not affect houses or buildings which are not situate in municipal towns, and I submit that there is no reason why such a deduction should not be allowed. The Select Committee has not given any reason. They simply say : we agree that no deduction on account of municipal or local taxes should be allowed in this clause. With these few words, I move my amendment.

Mr. G. G. Sim : Sir, the Honourable Member has said that there is no reason for disallowing municipal taxes. If he will refer to the report of the Select Committee which dealt with what has become the present Income-tax Act, he will find the reasons given, and he will also find them stated in the reply given by Sir George Lowndes in respect of a similar motion. It was pointed out that municipal taxes are a personal expense. Sir George Lowndes, if I may quote from the speech made in connection with the present Act, pointed out :

'Municipal taxes are a purely personal expense. You may have a house with water laid on, municipal water, and if you pay rates for it, that is paying for something in addition to the house. Supposing you have no water laid on, you have to provide it otherwise. The man who gets water from a municipality will be allowed the municipal tax ; the other, who does not get it, will receive no allowance. As far as I can understand it, that is able to say that that petty amount of municipal taxes should be deducted and thereafter the rest of the income from house property may be taxed.

Mr. Deputy President : Amendment moved :

'In sub-clause (1) (iv) of clause 9 of the Bill, after the word 'rent' where it first occurs, insert the words 'or municipal or local taxes or rate' and, at the end, add the words 'or taxes or rate.'

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Bhai Man Singh : Sir, the amendment that stands in my name is as follows :

'At the end of clause 9, sub-clause (1), add the following proviso :

'Provided that no income-tax shall be assessed on any income of the property assessed to land revenue.'

My plain object in putting forward this amendment is that when a certain property is assessed to one sort of tax, there is no reason why we should again assess it to another sort of tax. The effect of the present Bill, as it stands, is that if a man in a village builds a certain house and attaches to it a certain piece of land for gardening or anything of that sort, that house, as well as the land appertaining to it, would be assessed to income-tax as well. First they have to pay land revenue and then income-tax. Of course, I find that the land revenue paid by him is to be deducted out of the income-tax amount. All the same, I cannot understand the reason why we should assess the property first to land revenue and then assess it to income-tax.

If the property is so much changed in its nature that it is no more an agricultural property and has to be taxed with income-tax, we should take steps to have the land revenue remitted and to tax it with income-tax. I do not understand why, when a certain property is taxable with land revenue, it should be taxed over again with income-tax as well.

Mr. G. G. Sim : This clause applies only to land with buildings upon it. Land revenue is not always assessed upon such land. When assessed, it is not assessed by taking into consideration the amount of profit that can be made by constructing a building upon the land. It merely has reference to the agricultural value. Land revenue in such a case is on the same footing as ground rent paid to a private landlord. Provision is made accordingly in the Bill for deducting ground rent where ground rent is charged and land revenue where it is charged. But the Honourable Member's proposal would have the effect that if a piece of land has once been assessed to land revenue, and if profits are made from erecting buildings upon it, such profits will not be liable to income-tax. The proposal is one which I do not think would commend itself to the House.

Bhai Man Singh : One word, Sir, in reply, that if a building is built upon a piece of land which is assessed to land revenue, we could separately assess to income-tax the rent of the building, excluding the piece of land or appurtenant land which may be used by the owner as a garden or a compound.

Mr. Deputy President : Amendment moved :

'at the end of clause 9, sub-clause (1) add the following proviso :

'provided that no income-tax shall be assessed on any income of the property assessed to land revenue.'

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer : Sir, the object of my amendment* is simple ; it is to carry out clearly the intention of the Select Committee. The Select Committee has stated that, in the proviso to sub-clause (2) of clause 9, they have substituted the word 'total' for the word 'aggregate' in order to make it clear that it is the taxable income of the owner and not the aggregate income of the owner that is referred to. I wish to make the intention quite clear by inserting the word 'taxable' before the word 'total.'

Mr. G. G. Sim : Sir, I am afraid that the amendment has been put forward under misapprehension of the somewhat loose phraseology in the Report of the Committee. The Committee certainly meant that it was only income liable to taxation under this Bill that should be brought into account. But the words 'taxable income' are nowhere used in the Bill. If the Honourable Member will refer to the definition of 'total income', he will find, I think, that the actual words used by the Select Committee give exactly the result he wishes. 'Total income' means the total amount of income, profits or gains from all sources to which this Act applies. It cannot include any other income. It does not include agricultural income.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer : I must state for the information of Mr. Sim that, as a matter of fact, my agricultural income has been taken into account in calculating the total income for this purpose, and that is why I wish to add the word 'taxable.'

Mr. G. G. Sim : May I explain, Sir, that that was owing to the fact that previously the words used were 'aggregate income.' It has been changed to 'total income,' which, we have been advised by our legal authorities, is restricted entirely to income taxable under the Bill, and it cannot, under any circumstances, apply to agricultural income. The phrase 'taxable income' is nowhere used in the Bill. It can have no definite meaning.

Sir P. S. Sivaswamy Aiyer : Even in the present Act 'total income' was used.

Mr. G. G. Sim : 'Aggregate' income, not 'total' income.

Mr. Deputy President : Amendment moved :

'That in the Proviso to clause 9 (2) between the words 'total' and 'income' in the last line, insert the word 'taxable'.'

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : Sir, I move the last amendment to clause 9 of the Income-tax Bill. It runs as follows :

'In the Proviso to sub-clause (2) of clause 9, for '10 per cent.' substitute '6 per cent.'

'In the proviso to clause 8 (2), between the words 'total' and 'income' in the last line insert the word 'taxable.'

[Mr. G. G. Sim.]

what my Honourable friend means. It is almost an absurdity. These local rates are just like personal expenses for which we do not allow abatement of income-tax. They are like the expenses for servants, motor cars, clothes, or anything of that sort. Expenditure on such things as municipal scavenging, etc., are treated as purely personal expenses and are not allowed in England. We do not propose to allow it out here.'

Apart from that, I should like to point out that this proposal means that this Assembly is going to allow local authorities to tax income before the Central Legislature may do so. In any case it would be impossible to agree to a proposal of this nature owing to the heavy financial loss involved. That was pointed out by the Simla Committee. There a much more modest proposal was put forward that allowance be made on account of municipal taxes only in cases where houses are rented. It was admitted that it was most unreasonable to ask for an allowance on account of municipal rates where a man occupies his own house and the proposal simply was that the deduction should be allowed where a man made it a business to let houses. A rough estimate was made of what the cost of any such concession would be and it was discovered that in Calcutta alone, the loss of income-tax, if this concession alone were given, would amount to six lakhs a year. I see no reason for accepting this amendment. It has been rejected every time the Income-tax Bill has been under discussion. It was objected to by both the Committees which have dealt with this question and I think that the reasons that I have given are conclusive.

(At this stage Mr. Deputy President took the Chair.)

(Lala Girdharilal Agarwala rose to reply and Mr. W. M. Hussanally rose to speak.)

Mr. Deputy President : The Honourable Member did not rise in his place in time.

Mr. W. M. Hussanally : I am sorry. I have got a similar amendment and, therefore, I should like to speak a few words in support of my friend Mr. Agarwala. The only objection which I can see that has been taken to this amendment is that the taxes paid to the municipal or other local authorities are in the nature of personal expense. I fail to see how it can be at all construed that taxes paid to the municipal authorities over house property are in the nature of personal expense. These taxes are various in their character. In the first place, there is the house tax, then, there is land rent, next water-tax, drainage, etc. Just compare the case of municipal towns and towns where there is water laid on and other municipal towns where there is no water. What is the difference? A tenant, where there are no water works, has to supply himself with water and pays for it, whereas in a municipal town, where there are water-works, the landlord pays for water to the municipality, while the tenant gets free advantage of it; similarly, if you compare the case of a landlord in such towns where there is no house tax with the case of a landlord in a municipal town where there is a house tax, the landlord in the town where there is no house tax gets undue advantage over the landlord who has to pay house-tax. These are essentially taxes which the landlord has to pay in order to earn the little net income from his property on which he has invested large amounts of money. These house properties in various towns do not pay even as much as 3 per cent. or 4 per cent. I know, Sir, in Karachi, from which place I come, house property does not even pay as much as 3 or 3½ per cent. There are other towns like Bombay where perhaps the house property pays even 10 per cent., but in places like Karachi house property does not pay and does not give an inducement to capitalists to invest money in house property although houses are very badly wanted in such towns. Therefore, I strongly support the amendment.

The Honourable Sir Malcolm Hailey : I should like to join issue with Mr. Hussanally in his statement that the only ground taken by Mr. Sim in his reply was that municipal taxation is a species of personal expense. That is not, of course, the only ground. There was a very important statement by Mr. Sim, namely, that if you allow this amendment, you will lose so much taxation that it will be necessary for us to raise our rates in order to recoup ourselves for what we have lost. (Voices : 'You can do that.') Where will the assessee gain if we have to come to the Assembly to raise rates in order to make this loss up? Now we have framed this Bill throughout with the intention of making our procedure as easy as possible for the assessee. We have nowhere tried so to frame it as to bring in fresh taxation to ourselves. I think I might very reasonably, in the circumstances, appeal to the House not to support an amendment which will have the effect of causing a very considerable loss of money to the general treasury. But, Sir, that is not really the only point. There is a valid point of substance. Let us take the general taxable income of the country as a whole. A number of the assessees live in towns. The town taxes them for certain services rendered. It is not true that it taxes them merely for supplying water or light; it taxes them for general municipal purposes and municipal services. But we also tax them for certain services rendered. We tax them for the general protection of the country; the contributor to central revenues pays for the protection of the country and the major services which we carry on in its interest. The main question really is this: are you going to allow the local tax-gatherer to have the first cut at the general taxable revenue? If you are willing to do so, you must be prepared to make a very heavy sacrifice; and I claim, and I think the House will support me in claiming, that the major services must have the first claim on the general taxable capacity of the country.

(At this stage, Lala Girdharilal Agarwala rose to speak.)

Mr. N. M. Joshi : Mr. Agarwala has spoken once and he has not got the right of reply as the Mover of the amendment.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : It was said that municipal taxes are levied for general convenience, including water. I do not want that house property which is situated in municipal towns should be exempted from taxation, but I simply want what monies paid actually on account of such taxes and rates, as are described in my amendment, should be included as proper expense. For example, in the city of Allahabad, from which I come, there is a rule that a person whose house is situated within 600 feet of the municipal tap where the municipal water line goes, is liable to pay water-tax although he may not take water. There is also a rule to the effect that a tenant may, without the consent of the owner of the property, have water laid in the house, if there is no water, and deduct the cost from the rent. Besides these, there are other taxes, for example, house tax. Those gentlemen who are living in cities know how much the cost of city life is increasing day by day. In view of all these circumstances, I submit, it is not unreason-

[Lala Girdharilal Agarwala.] •

Now, Sir, this clause affects those persons only who live in their own houses. Now, the first amendment on the subject was by my Honourable friend, Mr. Bajpai, which I also supported, namely, that residential houses should be exempted from the tax. That has been lost. The next amendment was that municipal taxation and local rates should be deducted as a proper expense. That also has been lost. Now, the result is that residential houses are to be taxed, and municipal and other taxes have to be paid. My last amendment, which is before the Honourable House just now, is that only 5 per cent. should be allowed on the maximum annual value of the income of a person, and that this may be deducted as the maximum amount. Now, I submit, that if 10 per cent. is allowed, that would be rather too much.

I submit that if 10 per cent. is allowed that would be too much and would be hard. Honourable Members will be pleased to remember 4 P.M. that now-a-days living has become very dear, and more so in the case of joint Hindu families. If there is a joint Hindu family consisting of, say, 10 persons including children, they have to spend for education, they have to spend for food, clothing, etc. Besides these, they have to spend for marriages and many other things. I submit that if 10 per cent. is taken out of their income for the purpose of income-tax, that would be too much, and I do not see that there will be very great loss if the amount is put down at 5 per cent. instead of 10 per cent. The real desire of the persons who are living in their own houses is, that the residential houses should not be taxed at all. Now, after all these other amendments have been disallowed, I submit, that this last amendment, which is a modest one, should not meet with the same fate.

Mr. R. A. Spence (Bombay : European) : I ask the Honourable the Mover of this amendment if he knows of any houses in this country which are obtainable by tenants for 5 per cent. of their income.

Lala Girdharilal Agarwala : My Honourable friend puts a personal question whether a tenant can get a house for 5 per cent. of the income. My reply to him is that perhaps he may not be able to get a house or in some cases he may be able to get a house. That depends upon the conveniences and the sort of house that my Honourable friend wants and the place where he wants it. If my Honourable friend wants a house in Raisina after the Legislative Assembly has broken up, probably he will be able to get a house for 1 per cent. of the income. (Laughter.) In fact some people would be willing to pay something to a gentleman who will keep the house in proper order. What I beg to submit is this. The case of those persons who live in rented houses cannot be compared to the case of those who live in their own houses. In some cases, persons who have built their own houses or who have inherited very costly houses from their ancestors would not like to leave them. Gentlemen who live in rented houses, even though they pay 10 per cent., do not keep houses when they go on leave. The house remains vacant. I know a certain gentleman in Allahabad who, when he came down to Allahabad, encamped just opposite to my house, Durbhanga Castle. They do not take any houses on rent. They may have to pay something higher on the hills, but when they come to the plains, they live in camps. Taking the average life of a Government servant to be 30 years, how much does he pay? Sometimes he remains in camp and sometimes he does not take any house. The Law Member has got a house worth a lakh of rupees in Allahabad, but here he lives in a rented house and pays rent. There are many persons with small houses who live in their houses. I submit that all these considerations should be taken into account. It is not too much for me to ask that the amount should be cut down to 5 per cent. instead of 10.

Mr. Deputy President : Amendment moved :

' In the proviso to sub-clause (2) of clause 9, for ' 10 per cent.' substitute ' 5 per cent.'

The question is that that amendment be made.

The motion was negatived.

Clause 9 was added to the Bill.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Thursday, the 26th January, 1922.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : No such scheme is under the consideration of the Government of India.

COMMUNICATION FROM SECRETARY OF STATE RE TREATMENT OF POLITICAL PRISONERS.

122. * Mr. K. C. Neogy : (a) Have Government received any communication recently from the Secretary of State on the question of special treatment of persons sentenced to imprisonment on charges of a political character ?

(b) If so, will Government be pleased to state its purport and what action has been taken thereon ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : (a) Yes. (b) Government are not prepared to state the purport of the communication which is still under consideration.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Arising out of the answer just given, is there not special treatment given in England to political prisoners ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : So far as I am aware, no special treatment is accorded to political prisoners in England. Certain prisoners are classed as first division prisoners and certain prisoners are classed in the second division ; I do not think there is any special treatment prescribed for political prisoners as such. I speak subject to correction.

Mr. K. Ahmed : Have the Government of India heard from various provinces that these political prisoners are very badly treated, that no blankets are supplied to them, and that political prisoners of different castes are not provided with meals properly according to their religion ?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : The information that I have in regard to prisoners who have recently been convicted under the Criminal Law Amendment Act or under the Seditious Meetings Act is that they receive differential treatment and are well treated.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Are the Government of India in a position to say that blankets, utensils and cooking pots are supplied according to the requirements?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent: The administration of Jails is a provincial subject, and I am afraid the Government of India have no detailed information as to the supply of crockery and cutlery to particular prisoners.

Mr. K. Ahmed: Is it not a fact that there are a very limited number of blankets supplied to the prisoners.

Mr. President: Order, order. The Honourable Member is aware that the administration of jails and prisons is a provincial subject. He must get his colleagues in the Bengal Council to ask these questions.

SITUATION IN GUNTUR.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member): Sir, may I now answer the question which was asked by Sir Jamssetjee Jejeebhoy, of which he has given me private notice. The Government of Madras have issued a communiqué on this subject, and it appeared in the newspapers of the 21st January. I have a reproduction of that communiqué here, and if any Honourable Member expresses a wish to that effect, I am quite prepared to read it out to the Assembly now. (Cries of 'Read it.')

The telegram begins:

'Regarding the state of affairs in Guntur, where civil disobedience, non-payment of taxes campaign and resignation of village officers are in operation, the Madras Government propose to undertake emergency legislation in the direction of amending the Madras Revenue Recovery Act, mainly to do away with the intervening period allowed under the present Act between distraint and attachment of property and to bring at once to sale the effects of ryots who refuse to pay their dues. Other steps will also be taken by the Government on the executive side, such as the institution of extra police at the expense of the inhabitants, subject to such exemptions as may be ordered by Government in favour of persons who shall, by a date prescribed, have paid into the Government treasury or to the officer appointed for the purpose the taxes due from them. Owing to combination to prevent bidding, Government will undertake to provide land for members of the depressed classes. With regard to resignations of village officers, Government say that they cannot be accepted in the present circumstances, and if officers refuse to carry on their duties, they must be dismissed.'

On receipt of private notice of the present question I wired to the Madras Government inquiring whether any further information was available; and I have received a telegram yesterday saying that no further detailed information was available, but that the Collector regards the situation as serious and has apparently not succeeded in collecting any appreciable amount of taxes. No disturbance had as yet been reported. At the urgent request of the Local Government a section of armoured cars and a company of Indian infantry have been sent to Guntur to co-operate with the local authorities. I have no further information than that.

STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Mr. President: I ask the Honourable the Home Member whether he is in a position to make a statement regarding Government Business for next week.

The Honourable Sir William Vincent (Home Member) : Sir, I will begin by stating, if I may, the business for Saturday. In addition to the business left over from yesterday's meeting, it is proposed to introduce the following two Bills : (1) A Bill to provide penalties for spreading disaffection among the police and for kindred offences. (2) A Bill further to amend the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, and the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, in order to provide for the award of costs by way of damages in respect of false or vexatious claims or defences in civil suits or proceedings. That, Sir, is the Bill to which I referred in this Assembly yesterday.

On Wednesday, the 1st of February, 1922, the Government have allowed time for the discussion of the following Resolutions. This, I may say, has been done after consultation with a number of leading Members of this Assembly : Mr. Joshi's Resolution on female suffrage, and Sir Sivaswamy Aiyer's Resolution on the Indian Navy.

Rao Bahadur T. Rangachariar (Madras City : Non-Muhammadan Urban) : May I ask, Sir, when the Resolution on Retrenchment will be taken up?

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division : Non-Muhammadan) : May I ask, Sir, whether my Resolution for the appointment of a Retrenchment Committee was understood to be set down for the 1st, and whether it is likely to be taken up?

The Honourable Sir William Vincent : I think the Honourable Member is in error in saying that I gave any undertaking that it would be put down for the 1st. I said I would give him a Government date early in February and I hope to be able to do so. I cannot state the exact date now, but, I think, it will be the 6th or 8th. This must be regarded as a provisional statement.

GOVERNOR -GENERAL'S ASSENT TO BILLS PASSED BY THE LEGISLATURE.

Mr. President : I have to acquaint the House that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to give his assent to the following Bills passed by both Chambers of the Indian Legislature :

The Indian Electricity (Amendment) Act, 1922.

The Indian Factories (Amendment) Act, 1922.

RESOLUTION RE: ABOLITION OF DISTINCTION BETWEEN 'VOTABLE' AND 'NON-VOTABLE' ITEMS IN THE BUDGET.

Mr. P. P. Ginwala (Burma : Non-European) : Sir, I beg to move the following Resolution :

'This Assembly recommends to the Governor General in Council that such steps as may be necessary may be immediately taken to abolish the distinction between 'Votable' and 'Non-Votable' items in the Budget, and to submit the whole of the Budget to the vote of this Assembly.'

Before going on with the discussion of this Resolution, I may just remind the House that at Simla we spent the best part of two days in debating Mr. Majumdar's Resolution, which was known as the Swaraj Resolution, and that we were told, at the end of the two days, that no further progress in the direction of Self-Government was possible without fresh legislation by Parliament. We were also told that Parliament had set down a limit of 10 years, before which nothing could reasonably be done, but that, if the House was of opinion that the ten years fixed was too long, that opinion would be conveyed to His Majesty's Government, in order that the time may be shortened. Soon after that, in reply to a question in the House of Commons, the Secretary of State stated, with reference to this Resolution, that he was of opinion that a Commission could be appointed within the limit of 10 years, but that no further legislation could be undertaken, without the appointment of a Commission, even within that period. Now, Sir, that is the position with regard to what may be expected of Parliament. We must have a statutory Commission appointed before any further inquiry can be undertaken and any recommendations made. My submission to the House, however, is that long before any legislation by Parliament becomes necessary you have got to show that all other powers conferred either on the Governor General in Council or on this House are exhausted, that we have obtained everything that we could under the reasonable exercise of those powers from the Governor General, and that we have after that reached a stage when legislation is required in order to free ourselves from the control of the Secretary of State and of Parliament.

The position briefly, but differently, put is this. We have to pass through three stages before we can obtain for ourselves full responsible Government. The first is that we must get as much as we can out of the Governor General in Council, that is to say, we must free ourselves from what was described at Simla by the Honourable the Finance Member himself as the tyranny of our natural enemy the Executive Government, represented by the Governor General in Council. Next we must free ourselves from the control of the Secretary of State, and, lastly, of Parliament, and, when that is done, India has Swaraj. But, before these two later stages are reached, much, I submit, can be done by a reasonable modification of the Government of India Act by establishing conventions, by entering into mutual understandings and by mutual compromises. Now, Sir, it has been truly said that political power really rests with the person in whose custody is the national purse. The history of your country has shown that all her battles for freedom have been fought and won, round the national purse and its control has meant the control of the Executive Government. In order that this House should have real power, it should obtain real control over the national purse. That is the first and the most important step towards responsible Government. I respectfully submit that, in order to achieve this, it is not necessary to have any legislation by Parliament, because, as I shall show presently to the House, it is open to the Governor General or to the Governor General in Council to exercise his powers under the Government of India Act in such a way as to secure to this House a reasonable control over the national purse.

The Budget is placed before the House under section 67-A of the Government of India Act. That is reproduced on page 54 of the Legislative Assembly Manual. The first clause of section 67-A says that :

' The estimated annual expenditure and revenue of the Governor General in Council shall be laid in the form of a statement before both Chambers of the Indian Legislature in each year '.

[Mr. P. P. Ginwala.]

That is sub-section (1). Then in sub-section (3) of the same section there are what are called the exceptions. That sub-section reads as follows :

'The proposals of the Governor General in Council for the appropriation of revenue or moneys relating to the following heads of expenditure shall not be submitted to the vote of the Legislative Assembly, nor shall they be open to discussion by either Chamber at the time when the annual statement is under consideration, unless the Governor General in Council otherwise directs'.

The position may be explained thus : first of all the estimates are put before the House ; then, under this sub-section, there are certain exceptions, but these exceptions are subject to the proviso contained in the words 'unless the Governor General otherwise directs' and the Governor General has, therefore, got the power to direct that the whole of the Budget may be placed before the House ; in other words, these exceptions only arise if the Governor General does not otherwise give his directions ; and it follows that, if the Governor General chooses to give his directions to place the whole of the Budget, including the excepted items, for the vote of the Assembly, he can do so. Now, I submit, with great deference to all the lawyers present in this House and also to the legal advisers of the Government, if they have advised to the contrary, that this is a correct interpretation of the statute as it stands. When the words of a statute are clear, it is a fundamental maxim that the words must be interpreted in their grammatical and ordinary sense, and I doubt very much if any person reading this statute, as it stands, would come to any other conclusion than that these words 'unless the Governor General otherwise directs' govern both the previous sentences, and imply that the Governor General has the discretion not only to submit the estimates for discussion but also to submit them to the vote of this House. The next question then is what are these exceptions which it is in the power of the Governor General to ignore if he so chooses? First, the interest and sinking fund charges on loans ; (2) expenditure, of which the amount is prescribed by or under any law ; (3) salaries and pensions of persons appointed by, or with the approval of, His Majesty or by the Secretary of State in Council ; (4) salaries of Chief Commissioners and Judicial Commissioners ; and (5) expenditure classified by the order of the Governor General in Council as (a) ecclesiastical ; (b) political ; and (c) defence. In this last clause, there is an exception within an exception. First of all, the Governor General in Council has got the power to classify expenditure under the heads ecclesiastical, political and defence. Now, Sir, if we were to arrive at a Convention, if we were able to give something in return to the Governor General in Council and so come to a compromise, it would be open to the Governor General in Council not to make any classification at all. He can do so if he chooses, for there is no statutory obligation on his part to make any classification. But if he does, though I say it is not necessary for him to do so, there is still another authority in the person of the Governor General who has the discretion to place those subjects before this House for discussion, and ask for a vote of this House on them.

I do not propose to deal in detail with the first four classes, because they refer to Statutory obligations, and, even if those items were included in the Budget, a vote upon them will be a mere formality. I cannot conceive of any occasion when this House may interfere with Statutory obligations imposed by this Act or any other Act, though it will have the satisfaction of having a vote even in respect of those items.

The most important, of course, is this sub-clause (5), Ecclesiastical, Political and Defence. If you examine the Budget of last year, as it was presented to the House - I have not been able to rectify the figures in the light of subsequent discussions, but I will take the Budget only as it was presented to the House - you will find that there was a total expenditure of Rs. 129 crores in round figures out of the revenues. Out of that, a sum of Rs. 24½ crores, i.e., less than one-fifth, was votable by the House, and a sum of Rs. 104½ crores was not votable. Of this sum of Rs. 104½ crores, Rs. 66 crores was set apart for the Army. It was subsequently reduced to Rs. 62 crores, I believe. Political charges were about Rs. 2 crores, and ecclesiastical charges about Rs. 31 lakhs. The balance of this non-votable item, namely, Rs. 36 crores was for what may be described as the civil administration. All this was non-votable. So that, you see, Sir, that every five rupees in six was not votable. The Army alone was responsible for half our total expenditure. This is a very old question, which has been debated both in this Council and in other places and in newspapers, but the time has arrived, when it has become necessary for the Executive Government to satisfy this House, in order that the Members of this House may afterwards satisfy the country that all this enormous expenditure is necessary in the interests of the country. We are accused, Sir, of not co-operating with the Government to the extent to which the Government expect, but the Government fails to realise our own position. When we are told that, out of this revenue of Rs. 129 crores the first bite is taken by the Military Department, we are not even allowed formally to scrutinise any item. We are not allowed to debate questions of policy, we are not allowed to see what frontier defence means, we are not allowed to see how the Army does its work, and yet we are expected to go and tell the country that what the Executive Government does is right and, therefore, they must accept it. Now, Sir, I put it to you that, in your own interests, it would be better and more expedient, especially in the present political condition of the country, to lay your cards on the table and here, on the floor of the House, satisfy every Member of this Assembly that this expenditure is required and that India cannot defend herself unless this expenditure is incurred, and I assure you that there is not a single Member of this House who will not stand by you. What you want us to do is to go out to the country and tell the people that this expenditure is necessary, that their attacks upon it are ill-advised and that the safety of India depends upon this expenditure. If you do what I have asked you to do, we shall have got something to say. But here, in this position, what can we tell? All my knowledge of the Army is gathered from a memorandum that I read last year, from an informal discussion that we had on one or two occasions and from the newspaper reports that we read now and again. Is that sufficient knowledge upon which we can conscientiously go to the country and say that what the Government is doing is right and that the defence of India requires an enormous expenditure? Do you suppose, Sir, that, if we had this power which we are asking for, we would exercise it in such a way that the defence of the country would be in jeopardy? Do you think that we shall wipe out our national debt if it was submitted to our vote? Do you think that the churches will be closed down or that anything dangerous to the interests of the country will be done by us? On the contrary, if you trust us and if you place more responsibility in our hands, we would exercise it in a far more responsible manner than we are expected to do under the present conditions, because, now, while you saddle us with responsibility, you do not allow us to scrutinise your own position

[Mr. P. P. Ginwala.]

Why should you expect us to take any responsibility if you do not take us into your confidence? Why are you so afraid? If you are able to lay the cards on the table and satisfy us that you are playing a proper game, there can be no question that the whole House and the whole country will be with you.

Now, Sir, I know that Government will come forward with certain objections. First of all, the Governor General in Council will say that, even if my legal contention is right, they cannot do anything. In fact, the answer has been given more than once that it is not the function of the Governor General in Council to advise the Governor General. When I received such an answer in a formal letter, I said to myself: 'If that is the conception that the Governor General in Council has of his duty, the sooner we get rid of him the better.' They may, of course, take their stand behind the letter of the constitution and say that the Governor General in Council cannot advise the Governor General. But, I think, Sir, that we are entitled to assume that the Governor General, isolated as he may be constitutionally, keeps himself in touch with what is going on in this House and in the country, and that, therefore, he knows what our opinion is and realises what we ask him to do. But, even if he did not take any interest in our proceedings, even if he never followed the debates and never read the papers, still there is a procedure by which we can bring matters to his notice. I will briefly refer to that. It is provided for in the Rules—Rule 138 on page 47 of the Legislative Assembly Manual of Business and Procedure. It says that communications from the Assembly to the Governor General should be made by a formal address after a motion made and carried in the Assembly, or through the President. If this House accepts this Resolution and if our Honourable friends constituting the Governor General in Council have any doubt in their mind as to whether they can convey this message to the Governor General, a second motion may be made on this subject for moving an address to the Governor General and praying that effect be given to our Resolution of to-day.

Then, we shall be told as we have been told before, that the Governor General in Council is responsible to the Secretary of State and through him to Parliament and, if he gives up any of his powers here without consulting the Secretary of State and his colleagues in His Majesty's Government, that responsibility cannot be properly discharged. Sir, what is the implication in that, what is the assumption? It means that if the Governor General in Council entrusts us with these more extensive powers, then these powers will be so exercised by this House that he will be prevented from performing his duties properly and carrying out his functions in the manner contemplated by the Government of India Act. Speaking for myself and for many Members of this House, I repudiate such a charge. We shall do nothing that will prevent the Governor General or the Governor General in Council from carrying out his or their statutory duties and fulfilling his or their responsibility both to the Secretary of State and to the House of Commons.

So much for the legal aspect of the case. I shall now just briefly point out some of the practical reasons why the Governor General should try and meet us as far as possible if this Resolution is adopted. The Governor General in Council has got to realise, as we also realise, that the Government of India Act has created a most impossible constitutional position, both for the Governor General in Council and for ourselves. As reasonable men, we have got to get out of that impossible position by coming to such a compromise as will prevent that impossible position from wrecking the Reforms. What do we find by looking at it from the point of view of the Governor General? You find an elected majority in this House, an elected majority of Members which has not yet, if I may say so without disrespect, come into its own, a majority that has always been amenable to reason, has always listened to argument, and has always been willing to listen to anything that will conduce to the best interests of the country. I see some smiles on the Treasury Benches, because there have been occasions on which it has been said that we have not listened to reason but had made up our minds before coming to the House. I think that argument applies to both sides of the House. (Laughter.) But you have got to reckon with the possibility of this elected majority not being always with you if they find that you are unreasonable in the execution of the powers entrusted to you and in the discharge of your duties towards this House. That is a factor which has got to be taken into account, whether it becomes important immediately or hereafter. Then you have got now a deficit budget. We do not know, I am not in the secrets of the Finance Department, but it is conjectured, and it is being commented upon, that the deficit this year will probably be anything between 30 and 40 crores. That deficit has somehow to be met out of additional taxation or perhaps, I do not know, the fertility of the Finance Department's brains may devise some other method. It is an unfortunate circumstance that this House, as soon as it has come into being, has got to meet a deficit Budget. Last year the deficit was 18 crores. (An Honourable Member: 19 crores.) This year we may have anything between 30 and 40 crores. That deficit, the country will say,—and many reasonable men will say, is due to army expenditure. Of course, the anticipations of the Finance Member may not have been fully realised, customs duties have not flowed in as he expected, Exchange also has not behaved satisfactorily, and a number of unfortunate events have happened. But the fact still remains that there is a tremendous deficit, and this House, which was inaugurated by the Reforms, has got to be a party to additional taxation without any chance of scrutinising the most important item on the expenditure side. How does the Honourable the Finance Member think this House is going to listen to such proposals unless, as I say, on the floor of this House he satisfies us that this deficit was due to causes over which nobody had any control, that the army had to run on its present lines and that no reduction is possible.

Let us turn to the other side of the picture. Supposing that the Governor General in Council does not think it advisable, from his point of view, to take this House into his confidence, I do not wish to be misunderstood, but would it be a matter of surprise if, as reasonable men, the Members of this House consider themselves justified in exercising the powers that have been conferred upon them by statute. If the Governor General in Council will not exercise his discretion in order to ease the situation, this House will be compelled to exercise its powers, constitutionally conferred upon it. I pray that this may not be taken in the nature of any threat because we have not the slightest intention of making any such threat, but I am just trying to point out the impossible position that may be created if some sort of compromise is not arrived at before long on this point. What is it that we can do? We can hit you all round. We can run amock. At present, if you look at your demands, for instance, in respect of general administration, you will find that we can close down every important office and give the Governor General a holiday. If his pay is not on the estimates, practically all his staff is. We shall dismiss his stenographer, his chaprassi. (Laughter.) We shall refuse his hill allowance and he can do what he likes. With regard to the Army, we shall say to the Army Secretary : 'Your pay is not on the estimates. But you will not have your superintendent, your stenographer. We won't give you servants, and you can stay in Delhi and enjoy fresh air.' In the same way, we can disintegrate practically the whole administration. Then we have got last year by a fortunate chance this convention established that the Finance Bill is to be in operation for one year only at a time.

That Finance Bill includes one of the most important sources of your revenue—the Income-tax—besides other taxes. Income-tax and Customs are the two most important sources of your revenue. We will say : 'All right, you don't show us how you spend your money. We won't pass your Finance Bill.' The idea is to make the Civil and the Military Departments fight like Kilkenny cats, so that the Civil authorities may prevail upon the Military authorities to put their Budget on the table of the House and internecine warfare may go on to the advantage of the House in the long run. Then, against that, of course, the Governor General may say : 'Oh, yes, you may do what you like. I have got my extraordinary powers. I shall restore these items that you have rejected. I shall get the Finance Bill passed through my Council of State or if the Council of State does not pass it, I shall pass it under my extraordinary powers, and also Parliament has got paramount authority to legislate for the whole Empire and what you cannot do in this House, we shall get done by Parliament.' But, Sir, is not that going a much longer way than is necessary to go first to compel us to exercise powers in a way which may lead to a deadlock and then compel the Governor General to use his extraordinary powers in this extraordinary fashion? Would it not be simpler for him to place the whole of the Budget, especially the Army Budget, before the House, and, if the House rejects any item, would it not be simpler for him to restore that item, as he may under section 67-A to which I have referred? Clause 7 of that section reads as follows :

'The demands as voted by the Legislative Assembly shall be submitted to the Governor General in Council, who shall, if he declares that he is satisfied that any demand which has been refused by the Legislative Assembly is essential to the discharge of his responsibilities, act as if it had been assented to, notwithstanding the withholding of such assent or the reduction of the amount therein referred to, by the Legislative Assembly.'

Clause 8 runs as follows :

'Notwithstanding any thing in this section the Governor General shall have power, in cases of emergency, to authorise such expenditure as may, in his opinion, be necessary for the safety or tranquility of British India or any part thereof.'

Now, as practical men, with practical commonsense, which is the safer course for the Governor General or the Governor General in Council to adopt the extraordinary course of compelling this House to use its extraordinary powers, followed by retaliation by the Governor General or the Governor General in Council by the use of their extraordinary powers, or this simple remedy by which if this House cuts down any military expenditure on insufficient grounds to restore those grants. You may take it, Sir, that knowing that the Governor General has got the power to restore any item that is rejected by the House, this House will take good care that it does not place itself not only in the wrong with the Governor General but with the public. This House cannot with impunity reject items which the Governor General must restore, any more, Sir, than can the Governor General continue to over-rule us by the extraordinary powers that he has got. He may do it once or twice, but the time will come when he will realise that his extraordinary power must be reserved for extraordinary occasions and that in any case extraordinary occasions should not be created by any person who has not extraordinary powers in his hands. One point more and I shall finish. As I pointed out to you, an impossible position has been created, or, if it has not been created, can be created. This House will, in the ordinary course, be dissolved in another two years. It is possible, Sir, that you may find that, after all, you have not had to contend against very stubborn majorities in this House, as it is constituted. You may find that, in spite of our demands being reasonable, we may be in a minority. But take it from me, Sir, that, when this House is replaced by another House, you will not find men so reasonable as you have found us. If you are not reasonable to them, they will not fail to be unreasonable to you, and they will use their powers to the utmost and they will create a deadlock in this House because the majority will be theirs. Then what will you do? Will you come to terms with those of our critics who have kept out of the House and who have avoided your Council, who are abusing you every day and who will come here to abuse you, or will you come to terms with this House which is prepared to stand by you, provided you stand by it, which is willing to assist you in every possible way and to enable you to carry out your constitutional duties provided that you allow it also to feel that it is in a position to perform its duty towards the public to whom it owes its existence? Sir, any practical man would say: 'I will make my terms now, because I can get better terms. I will not wait until I have got to surrender.' I therefore appeal to you, Sir, to be reasonable. If you have got any doubt as to the legal position, give the benefit of the doubt to this House and do not give yourself the benefit of that doubt, for there is nothing, I submit, to prevent you from exercising your discretion in a way conducive to peace and harmony between the Governor General in Council and the Members of this House. These are not hard terms that we are asking for. They are reasonable terms. If you refuse them, you will find that you will be responsible, if hereafter a state of affairs arises which makes the business of this House difficult, if not impossible.

Dr. H. S. Gour (Nagpur Division: Non-Muhammadan): Sir, two vital questions are raised by the Honourable Mover's Resolution, one the construction to be placed on section 67-A of the Government of India Act, and the other one of expediency. If the Honourable Members will turn to paragraph 3 of section 67-A of the Act, they will find that the language used in that clause is somewhat ambiguous; for it says that:

'The proposals shall not be submitted to the vote of the Legislative Assembly, nor shall they be open to discussion by either Chamber at the time when the annual statement is under consideration, unless the Governor General otherwise directs.'

It is perfectly obvious that, placing upon this clause the narrowest construction possible, the Governor General is entitled to direct that the proposals may be open to discussion. Of this, there can be no doubt. It is an old power.

[Dr. H. S. Gour.]

But the question as to whether the Governor General has further power to direct that the proposals shall be submitted to the vote of the Legislative Assembly raises in the minds of some Members some doubt; and that is the crux of the whole case. I submit, as the Honourable Mover of this Resolution has pointed out, that, if there is any doubt in the construction of this clause, that doubt should be resolved in favour of this House. It is an exceptional clause, and exceptions must be narrowly construed. It is not intended to limit the power of this House and I, therefore, venture to think that, if there is any doubt, as I admit there is, it must be decided in favour of this House. But, whatever may be the attitude of the Honourable Members on the opposite Benches as regards the submission of the proposals to the vote of this House, there can be no doubt that it is open to the Governor General to permit discussion of the proposals enumerated in that clause. So much for the law. Now, as regards the question of expediency, I am extremely glad to find my Honourable friend, Sir Godfrey Fell, present in the House. Honourable Members will recall the Budget discussion that took place in this House last year, when the Honourable Sir Godfrey Fell, speaking for himself, if I remember aright, opined that he should be glad if the military Budget was open to the discussion of this House.

Mr. N. M. Samarth (Bombay : Nominated Non-Official) : To the vote of this House.

Dr. H. S. Gour : And to the vote of this House ; if I am wrong, the Honourable Member who is here will correct me. Now, that is as regards expediency, and expediency regarding a matter upon which the Military Department seem to entertain no doubt. As regards other matters, interest, sinking funds and the like, these are of subordinate importance. As the Honourable Mover has pointed out, the most important expending Department of the Government of India is the Military, and, if the Secretary of the Military Department, speaking here for himself, had no objection to the discussion and vote of this House on the military Budget, I think there should be no difficulty whatever for the Government to accede to the proposal now made. I do not wish, Sir, to anticipate the gloomy forebodings of the coming Budget. I hope and I devoutly hope, that the deficit adumbrated by the Honourable Mover will not be so appalling as he has forecasted. If it is, it will create the gravest constitutional crisis in the history of this House. I do not wish to go into the details of that Budget, because it is not before this House, and I should commend the proposition which the Honourable Mover has made for the acceptance of this House without reference to what is possible in the coming year. We should confine our case to the broad issue that this question raises. Last year, when there was a discussion, judging from newspaper reports, it was said that the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for India expressed the opinion that the Government of India Act had yet not been exploited. Well, Sir, I do not know what were the ipsissima verba of the Secretary of State's message. I hope the Honourable the Home Member will take us into his confidence and tell us what that despatch was. But be that as it may, popular feeling in this country is that we must exploit the Government of India Act before we go any further. An attempt was made here the other day by one of the Honourable Members of this House when he asked the Government to appoint Standing Committees and associate them with the various branches of the administration. My
