LEAGUE OF NATIONS

NATIONALITY OF WOMEN

Convention on the Nationality of Women concluded on December 26th, 1933, at the Seventh International Conference of American States at Montevideo

NOTE BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL

1. The above-mentioned question was placed on the agenda of the present session of the Assembly, by a decision of the Assembly of September 25th, 1934, as the result of the following letter, dated September 21st, 1934, and addressed to the President of the Assembly by the delegations of the Argentine Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, Latvia, Mexico, New Zealand, Panama, Siam, Turkey, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Yugoslavia :

" In view of the worldwide restrictions upon the rights of women — the right to earn a living, the right to an education, to hold public office, to enter the professions — and in view of the interdependence of nationality and the right to work, the following delegations request that there be brought before the First Committee the Convention for Equality for Women in Nationality entered into at the recent Conference of American Republics at Montevideo.

" Trusting that this action may be taken immediately, etc. :

" (Signed) M. LITVINOFF (U.S.S.R.).
Stefan OSUSKÝ (Czechoslovakia).
Cemal HÜSNÜ (Turkey).
F. CASTILLO NAJERA (Mexico).

W. MUNTERS (Latvia).
J. M. CANTILO (Argentine).
Constantin MAYARD (Haiti).
J. SUBBOTITCH (Yugoslavia)."

2. The text of the Convention referred to in the above letter is as follows :

CONVENTION ON THE NATIONALITY OF WOMEN.

" The Governments represented in the Seventh International Conference of American States :

" Wishing to conclude a Convention on the Nationality of Women, have appointed the following Plenipotentiaries :

" Who, after having exhibited their full powers, which were found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following :

" Article 1.

" There shall be no distinction based on sex as regards nationality, in their legislation or in their practice.

" Article 2.

" The present Convention shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties in conformity with their respective constitutional procedures. The Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Uruguay shall transmit authentic certified copies to the Governments for the afore-mentioned purpose of ratification. The instrument of ratification shall be deposited in the archives of the Pan-American Union in Washington, which shall notify the signatory Governments of said deposit. Such notification shall be considered as an exchange of ratifications.

" Article 3.

" The present Convention will enter into force between the High Contracting Parties in the order in which they deposit their respective ratifications.

" Article 4.

" The present Convention shall remain in force indefinitely, but may be denounced by means of one year's notice given to the Pan-American Union, which shall transmit it to the other signatory Governments. After the expiration of this period, the Convention shall cease in its effects as regards the Party which denounces, but shall remain in effect for the remaining High Contracting Parties.

" Article 5.

" The present Convention shall be open for the adherence and accession of the States which are not signatories. The corresponding instruments shall be deposited in the archives of the Pan-American Union, which shall communicate them to the other High Contracting Parties.

" IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the following Plenipotentiaries have signed this Convention in Spanish, English, Portuguese and French, and hereunto affix their respective seals in the city of Montevideo, Republic of Uruguay, this twenty-sixth day of December, 1933."

3. The Convention was signed on December 26th, 1933, by the plenipotentiaries of the Argentine Republic, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras[1], Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Salvador[2], the United States of America[3] and Uruguay.

4. In reply to an enquiry by the Secretary-General as to the effect of Article 5, the Director of the Pan-American Union has been good enough to inform him that, in virtue of an interpretation given by the Supervisory Committee of the Pan-American Union, the Convention may be considered to be open to accession by all States, including States not members of the Pan-American Union. In taking its decision, the Supervisory Committee placed on record that the interpretation adopted in the particular case was not to be considered a precedent for the interpretation of other treaties and conventions in which similar clauses appear.

5. In documents C.342.M.158, C.342(a).M.158(a) and C.342(b).M.158(b).1934.V, the Secretary-General has circulated to the Governments the information supplied by Governments down to the close of the fifteenth ordinary session of the Assembly (1934) in regard to the extent to which they have found it possible to adopt the principle of identical treatment of the sexes in the matter of nationality. A further document containing information received from Governments since the fifteenth ordinary session of the Assembly will be circulated in due course.

[1] With the following reservation :

" The delegation of Honduras adheres to the Convention on Equality of Nationality, with the reservations and limitations which the Constitution and laws of our country determine."

[2] With the following reservation :

" Reservation to the effect that, in Salvador, the Convention cannot be the object of immediate ratification, but that it will be necessary to consider previously the desirability of reforming the existing Naturalisation Law, ratification being obtained only in the event that such legislative reform is undertaken, and after it may have been effected."

[3] With the following reservation :

" The delegation of the United States of America, in signing the Convention on the Nationality of Women, makes the reservation that the agreement on the part of the United States is, of course and of necessity, subject to Congressional action."

It is understood that legislation of May 24th, 1934, has since brought the law of the United States into conformity with the Convention.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

STATUS OF WOMEN

Proposal of Certain Delegations for Examination by the Assembly of the Status of Women as a whole and not merely in relation to Nationality, with Particular Reference to the Treaty signed at Montevideo on December 26th, 1933, by Uruguay, Paraguay, Ecuador and Cuba

The Secretary-General has the honour to circulate to the Assembly :

(a) The letter of September 26th, 1934, which transmitted the above-mentioned proposal to the President of the Assembly and which was signed by the following delegations : Argentine Republic, Bolivia, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Uruguay.

(b) The text of the Treaty referred to in the proposal of September 26th, 1934. This Treaty was signed by Uruguay, Paraguay, Ecuador and Cuba.

The text of a resolution on the subject of the status of women which was adopted at the Conference of American States held at Montevideo from December 3rd to 26th, 1933, is reproduced for the information of the Assembly as an Appendix to the present document.

(a) Letter of September 26th 1934 addressed to the President of the Assembly.

In consideration of the fact that the League of Nations is an international organisation designed to defend human rights, the following delegations deem it urgent that the League take cognisance of the present widespread and alarming encroachments upon the rights and liberties of women and, recognising that the League has no more loyal supporters in its work for international peace than the women of the world, believe that the League should show its appreciation of the services of women by giving immediate attention to every circumstance imperilling their welfare.

Since the Bureau has found it impossible to give consideration at the present time to the subject of the nationality of women and has, we understand, put this subject on the agenda of the next session of the Assembly, we, the undersigned, request that there be included on the agenda, not only the subject of women's nationality, but also the entire status of women, giving particular attention to the Treaty signed by four Governments at Montevideo (December 1933) to remove all legal distinctions based on sex.

We also request the Assembly, or the proper authorities as an emergency matter, to bring the whole critical situation affecting the position of women before the Council of the League at the earliest possible moment.

(b) EQUAL RIGHTS TREATY.

The Governments of URUGUAY, PARAGUAY, ECUADOR and CUBA,

Believing that it is possible to raise the status of women throughout the world by means of an international agreement :

Have decided to conclude a Treaty to that end, and for that purpose have appointed as their plenipotentiaries :

[Here follow the names of the plenipotentiaries.]

Who, having communicated to one another their full powers found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles :

Article 1.

The Contracting States agree that, upon the ratification of this Treaty, men and women shall have equal rights throughout the territory subject to their respective jurisdictions.

Article 2.

This Treaty shall take effect for the States which ratify it, provided it is ratified by at least two States, as soon as the ratifications have been deposited with the Government of Uruguay.

Article 3.

This Treaty shall remain open as long as may be necessary for adherence by all the States of the world. Every instrument of adherence shall be deposited with the Government of Uruguay, and the Treaty shall immediately upon such deposit become effective as between the States thus adhering and the other States which are parties to the Treaty.

Article 4.

The Government of Uruguay shall furnish each Government named in the preamble and every Government subsequently adhering to this Treaty with a certified copy of the Treaty and of every ratification or adherence, and also shall notify said Governments immediately upon the deposit of each ratification or adherence.

IN FAITH WHEREOF the respective plenipotentiaries sign and seal the present Treaty in the Spanish and English languages, both texts have equal force.

DONE in the city of Montevideo, Uruguay, on this twenty-sixth day of December, nineteen hundred and thirty three.

Appendix

CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS OF WOMEN.

Resolution adopted at the Seventh Conference of American States held at Montevideo from December 3rd to 26th, 1933.

The Seventh International Conference of American States :

Whereas :

The granting of political and civil rights within each country involves an exact knowledge of ethnic, social, and cultural conditions and of deeply rooted customs, all of which cannot be acquired except after long and arduous study ;

Such conditions differ substantially from country to country ;

The concession of such rights belongs exclusively to the sovereign bodies of each State, and an international conference of the character of the present Conference cannot impose binding obligations on these matters without curtailing the sovereign rights of the different States ;

In view of this, it would seem unwise to conclude a treaty on the granting of civil and political rights to men and women ;

It would be well, nevertheless, to respond to the urgent and well-grounded petitions of the Inter-American Commission of Women, which seek this equality of rights,

Resolves :

To recommend to the Governments of the Republics of America that they endeavour, so far as the peculiar circumstances of each country will conveniently permit, to establish the maximum of equality between men and women in all matters pertaining to the possession, enjoyment and exercise of civil and political rights.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Annex to the Report[1] on the Work of the Council and the Secretariat to the Sixteenth Ordinary Session of the Assembly of the League of Nations

RATIFICATION OF AGREEMENTS AND CONVENTIONS CONCLUDED UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

SIXTEENTH LIST

Note by the Secretary-General.

In accordance with the instructions contained in the report adopted by the Council of the League of Nations during its forty-third session on December 6th, 1926, the Secretary-General has the honour to submit herewith to the Members of the Council a list, in chronological order, of the international agreements which have been concluded under the auspices of the League. The list shows the States which have become parties to these agreements by ratification or accession or definitive signature; the States which have signed but have not yet ratified them, and, finally, the States which have neither signed nor acceded, although they took part in the conferences at which the agreements were drawn up or have been invited to become parties thereto.

According to the decision taken by the Council at its forty-ninth session on March 6th, 1928, the present list contains in addition the reservations affixed or declarations formulated either in signing or in ratifying or in acceding to the agreements which have been concluded under the auspices of the League of Nations.

The International Labour Conventions and other instruments which concern the International Labour Organisation have been grouped at the end of this document.

Germany (July 5th, 1933)
Reciprocity, 5 years, from March 1st, 1933, as regards disputes which might have arisen after February 29th, 1928, date of the ratification of the declaration made on this subject at Geneva on September 23rd, 1927, or to disputes arising in future with regard to situations or facts subsequent to the said ratification. Cases where the parties have agreed or shall agree to have recourse to another method of pacific settlement are excepted.

Greece (July 19th, 1935)
Reciprocity, 5 years, as from September 12th, 1934.
For the classes of disputes mentioned in Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court, with the exception of:

(a) Disputes relating to the territorial status of Greece, including disputes relating to its rights of sovereignty over its ports and lines of communication;

(b) Disputes relating directly or indirectly to the application of treaties or conventions accepted by Greece and providing for another procedure.

This acceptance is effective as from the date of signature of the present declaration.

* Declaration not subject to ratification.

2. Optional Clause recognising the Court's Jurisdiction, as described in Article 36 of the Statute (continued).

(Geneva, December 16th, 1920.)

In Force.

Ratifications.

*Haiti (September 7th, 1921)
Unconditional.

Hungary (August 9th, 1934)
Reciprocity, 5 years, with effect as from August 13th, 1934.

India (February 5th, 1930)
Reciprocity, 10 years, and thereafter until such time as notice may be given to terminate the acceptance, over all disputes arising after the ratification of the present declaration with regard to situations or facts subsequent to the said ratification,

Other than disputes in regard to which the parties to the dispute have agreed or shall agree to have recourse to some other method of peaceful settlement, and

Disputes with regard to questions which by international law fall exclusively within the jurisdiction of India,

And subject to the condition that the Government of India reserve the right to require that proceedings in the Court shall be suspended in respect of any dispute which has been submitted to and is under consideration by the Council of the League of Nations, provided that notice to suspend is given after the dispute has been submitted to the Council and is given within ten days of the notification of the initiation of the proceedings in the Court, and provided also that such suspension shall be limited to a period of twelve months or such longer period as may be agreed by the parties to the dispute or determined by decision of all the Members of the Council other than the parties to the dispute.

Iran (September 19th, 1932)
Reciprocity in any disputes arising after the ratification of the present declaration with regard to situations of facts relating directly or indirectly to the application of treaties or conventions accepted by Iran and subsequent to the ratification of this declaration, with the exception of:

(a) Disputes relating to the territorial status of Iran, including those concerning the rights of sovereignty of Iran over its islands and ports;

(b) Disputes in regard to which the Parties have agreed or shall agree to have recourse to some other method of peaceful settlement;

(c) Disputes with regard to questions which by international law, fall exclusively within the jurisdiction of Persia.

However, the Imperial Government of Iran reserves the right to require that proceedings in the Court shall be suspended in respect of any dispute which has been submitted to the Council of the League of Nations.

The present declaration is made for a period of six years. At the expiration of that period, it shall continue to bear its full effects until notification is given of its abrogation.

Irish Free State (July 11th, 1930)
Reciprocity, 20 years.

Italy (September 7th, 1931)
Reciprocity, 5 years, subject to any other method of settlement provided by a special convention, and in any case where a solution through the diplomatic channel or, further, by the action of the Council of the League of Nations could not be reached, on the following classes of legal disputes arising after the ratification of the present declaration, and concerning:

(a) The interpretation of a treaty,

(b) Any question of international law,

(c) The existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation,

(d) The nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

Latvia (February 26th, 1935)
Reciprocity, 5 years, over all disputes which might have arisen after February 26th, 1930, date of deposit of the ratification of the declaration made at Geneva on September 10th, 1929, or to disputes arising in future with regard to situations or facts subsequent to the said date, except in cases where the parties have agreed or shall agree to have recourse to another method of pacific settlement.

The present declaration is made for a period of five years. At the expiration of that period, it shall continue to bear its full effect until notification is given of its abrogation.

Lithuania* (January 14th, 1935)
Reciprocity, 5 years.

* Declaration not subject to ratification.

2. Optional Clause recognising the Court's Jurisdiction, as described in Article 36 of the Statute (continued).

(Geneva, December 16th, 1920.)

In Force.

Ratifications.

*Luxemburg (September 15th, 1930)

Reciprocity, in any disputes arising after the signature of the present declaration with regard to situations or facts subsequent to this signature, except in cases where the Parties have agreed or shall agree to have recourse to another procedure or to another method of pacific settlement. The present declaration is made for a period of five years. Unless it is denounced six months before the expiration of that period, it shall be considered as renewed for a further period of five years and similarly thereafter.

*Netherlands (August 6th, 1926)

Reciprocity, 10 years, in any future disputes, excepting those in regard to which the parties would have agreed after the coming into force of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice to have recourse to another method of pacific settlement.

New Zealand (March 29th, 1930)

Reciprocity, 10 years, and thereafter until such time as notice may be given to terminate the acceptance, over all disputes arising after the ratification of the present declaration with regard to situations or facts subsequent to the said ratification,

Other than disputes in regard to which the parties to the dispute have agreed or shall agree to have recourse to some other method of peaceful settlement, and

Disputes with regard to questions which by international law fall exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Dominion of New Zealand,

And subject to the condition that His Majesty's Government in New Zealand reserve the right to require that proceedings in the Court shall be suspended in respect of any dispute which has been submitted to and is under consideration by the Council of the League of Nations, provided that notice to suspend is given after the dispute has been submitted to the Council and is given within ten days of the notification of the initiation of the proceedings in the Court, and provided also that such suspension shall be limited to a period of twelve months or such longer period as may be agreed by the parties to the dispute or determined by a decision of all the Members of the Council other than the parties to the dispute.

*Norway (October 3rd, 1926)

Reciprocity, 10 years.

*Panama (June 14th, 1929)

Reciprocity.

*Paraguay (May 11th, 1933)

Unconditional.

Peru (March 29th, 1932)

Reciprocity, 10 years, in any dispute arising with regard to situations and facts subsequent to ratification, except in cases where the parties have agreed either to have recourse to another method of settlement by arbitration, or to submit the dispute previously to the Council of the League of Nations.

*Portugal (October 8th, 1921)

Reciprocity.

Roumania (June 9th, 1931)

Reciprocity, 5 years, in respect of the Governments recognised by Roumania and on condition of reciprocity in regard to legal disputes arising out of situations or facts subsequent to the ratification by the Roumanian Parliament of this accession and with the exception of matters for which a special procedure has been or may be established and subject to the right of Roumania to submit the dispute to the Council of the League of Nations before having recourse to the Court.

The following are, however, excepted:

(a) Any question of substance or of procedure which might directly or indirectly cause the existing territorial integrity of Roumania and her sovereign rights, including her rights over her ports and communications, to be brought into question;

(b) Disputes relating to questions which, according to international law, fall under the domestic jurisdiction of Roumania.

The provisions of this Statute do not apply to any disputes or differences concerning points or questions which cannot be submitted to arbitration in accordance with the political Constitution of this Republic.

The provisions of this Statute also do not apply to disputes which arose before that date or to pecuniary claims made against the Nation, it being further understood that Article 36 binds Salvador only in regard to States which accept the arbitration in that form.

Siam (May 7th, 1930)

Reciprocity, 10 years, in all disputes as to which no other means of pacific settlement is agreed upon between the Parties.

* Declaration not subject to ratification.

[1] Article 26 of the Covenant provides: " Amendments to this Covenant will take effect when ratified by the Members of the League whose representatives compose the Council and by a majority of the Members of the League whose representatives compose the Assembly ".

The Annex to the Supplementary Report on the work of the Council and the Secretariat for 1929 (document A.6(a).1929, Annex) contains, moreover, complete details concerning the amendments to Articles 4, 6, 12, 13 and 15 of the Covenant. These amendments being now in force, no reference is made to them in the present document.

[2] The Assembly adopted at its fifth ordinary session (1924) a resolution according to which it is no longer opportune to ratify the first amendment to Article 16 of the Covenant adopted in 1921. As a consequence of this resolution, the first amendment to Article 16 adopted by the Assembly at its second ordinary session does not appear in the present report. See under No. IX the new amendment adopted in 1924.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA (September 18th, 1931)

The Czechoslovak Republic will regard itself as being bound only in relation to States which will have ratified the Convention of September 26th, 1927, on the Execution of Foreign Arbitral Awards, and the Czechoslovak Republic does not intend by this signature to invalidate in any way the bilateral treaties concluded by it which regulate the questions referred to in the present Protocol by provisions going beyond the provisions of the Protocol.

DENMARK (April 6th, 1925)

Under Danish law, arbitral awards made by an Arbitral Tribunal do not immediately become operative; it is necessary in each case, in order to make an award operative, to apply to the ordinary courts of law. In the course of the proceedings, however, the arbitral award will generally be accepted by such Courts without further examination as a basis of the final judgments in the affair.

ESTONIA (May 16th, 1929)

Limits, in accordance with Article 1, paragraph 2, of this Protocol, the obligation mentioned in paragraph 1 of the said article to contracts which are considered as commercial under its national law.

FRANCE (June 7th, 1928)

Reserves the right to limit the obligation mentioned in paragraph 2 of Article 1 to contracts which are considered as commercial under its own national law. Its acceptance of the present Protocol does not include the Colonies, Overseas Possessions or Protectorates or Territories in respect of which France exercises a mandate.

Reserves the right to limit the obligation mentioned in the first paragraph of Article 1 to contracts which are considered as commercial under its national law.

MONACO (February 8th, 1927)

Reserves the right to limit its obligation to contracts which are considered as commercial under its national law.

NETHERLANDS (including Netherlands Indies, Surinam and Curaçao) (August 6th, 1925)

The Government of the Netherlands reserves its right to restrict the obligation mentioned in the first paragraph of Article 1 to contracts which are considered as commercial under Netherlands law.

Further, it declares its opinion that the recognition in principle of the validity of arbitration clauses in no way affects either the restrictive provisions at present existing under Netherlands law or the right to introduce other restrictions in the future.

POLAND (June 26th, 1931)

Under reservation that in conformity with paragraph 2 of Article 1, the undertaking contemplated in the said article will apply only to contracts which are declared as commercial in accordance with national Polish law.

PORTUGAL (December 10th, 1930)

(1) In accordance with the second paragraph of Article 1, the Portuguese Government reserves the right to limit the obligation mentioned in the first paragraph of Article 1 to contracts which are considered as commercial under its national law.

[2] This Schedule which appeared in the annexes to the supplementary report on the work of the Council and the Secretariat is reproduced here for purposes of information.

[3] Subject to adherence or denunciation as regards the Belgian Congo.

[4] In accordance with the following reservation:

The articles of the present Convention, if ratified by His Britannic Majesty's Government, shall apply to the Government of British India, Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, Hong-Kong, and Wei-hai-Wei in every respect in the same way as they shall apply to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; but His Britannic Majesty's Government reserve the right of signing or denouncing separately the said Convention in the name of any Dominion, Colony, Dependency, or Protectorate of His Majesty other than those which have been specified.

In virtue of the above-mentioned reservation, Great Britain signed the Convention for the following Dominions, Colonies, Dependencies, and Protectorates:

On December 17th, 1912, for Canada, Newfoundland, New Zealand, Brunei, Cyprus, the East Africa Protectorate, Falkland Islands, Malay Protectorates, Gambia, Gibraltar, Gold Coast, Jamaica, Johore, Kedah, Kelantan, Perlis, Trengganu, Malta, Northern Nigeria, Northern Borneo, Nyasaland, St. Helena, Sarawak, Seychelles, Somaliland, Southern Nigeria, Trinidad, Uganda; on February 27th, 1913, for the Colony of Fiji; on April 22nd, 1913, for the Colony of Sierra Leone, the Gilbert and Ellice Islands Protectorate and the Solomon Islands Protectorate; on June 25th, 1913, for the Government of the Commonwealth of Australia; on November 14th, 1913, for the Bahamas Islands and for the three Colonies of the Windward Islands, that is to say, Grenada, St. Lucia and St. Vincent; on January 30th, 1914, for the Leeward Islands; on February 11th, 1914, for British Guiana as well as for British Honduras; on March 11th, 1914, for the Government of the Union of South Africa; on March 28th, 1914, for Zanzibar, Southern and Northern Rhodesia, Basutoland, the Bechuanaland Protectorate and Swaziland; on April 4th, 1914, for the Colony of Barbados; on April 8th, 1914, for Mauritius and its dependencies; on July 11th, 1914, for the Bermuda Islands; on August 21st, 1924, for Palestine and together with France for the New Hebrides; on October 20th, 1924, for Iraq.

[5] Subject to the approval of the Colombian Parliament.

[6] The signature of the Protocol of Signature of the Powers not represented at the Conference as well as its ratification were given by Denmark for Iceland and the Danish Antilles; the signature of the Protocol respecting the putting into force of the Convention was given separately by Denmark and Iceland.

[7] With the reservation that a separate and special ratification or denunciation may subsequently be obtained for the French Protectorates. France and Great Britain signed the Convention for the New Hebrides, August 21st, 1924.

1. International Opium Convention. The Hague, January 23rd, 1912 (continued).

2. First Opium Conference of the League of Nations.

(Signed at Geneva, February 11th, 1925.)

In Force.

Ratifications.	Other State to whose Signature the Agreement is open.
British Empire (February 17th, 1926) The signature of this Protocol is subject, in respect of British Protectorates, to the conditions contained in Article XIII of the Agreement.	China
India (February 17th, 1926)
France (April 29th, 1926)
Japan (October 10th, 1928)
Netherlands (including Netherlands Indies, Surinam and Curaçao) (March 1st, 1927)

[1] With the reservation of Articles 15, 16, 17, 18 and 19 (Persia having no treaty with China) and paragraph (a) of Article 3.

[2] With the reservation of Articles 15, 16, 17, 18 and 19 (Siam having no treaty with China).

[3] Subject to the following declaration: " Opium not being manufactured in Sweden, the Swedish Government will for the moment confine themselves to prohibiting the importation of prepared opium, but they declare at the same time that they are ready to take the measures indicated in Article 8 of the Convention if experience proves their expediency."

[4] Subject to ratification and with the declaration that the Swiss Government will be unable to issue the necessary legal enactments within the terms fixed by the Convention.

[5] The Agreement and the Protocol came into force on July 28th, 1926. See Treaty Series of the League of Nations, Vol. LI, p. 337; Vol. LIX, p. 401 and Vol. LXXVIII, p. 489.

2. First Opium Conference of the League of Nations.

(Signed at Geneva, February 11th, 1925.)

In Force.

Ratifications.

PORTUGAL (September 13th, 1926)

While accepting the principle of a monopoly as formulated in Article I, does so, as regards the moment at which the measures provided for in the first paragraph thereof shall come into force, subject to the limitation contained in the second paragraph of the article.

The Portuguese Government, being bound by a contract consistent with the provisions of the Hague Convention of 1912, will not be able to put into operation the provisions of paragraph 1 of Article VI of the present Agreement so long as its obligations under this contract are in force.

SIAM (May 6th, 1927)

Under reservation of Article I, paragraph 3 (a), with regard to the time when this provision shall come into force, and of Article V. The reason for these reservations had been stated by the First Delegate of Siam on November 14th, 1924. The Siamese Government is hoping to put into force the system of registration and rationing within the period of three years. After that date, the reservation in regard to Article I, paragraph 3 (a), will fall to the ground.

XI. SUPERVISION OF THE INTERNATIONAL TRADE IN ARMS AND AMMUNITION AND IN IMPLEMENTS OF WAR.

1. CONVENTION FOR THE SUPERVISION OF THE INTERNATIONAL TRADE IN ARMS AND AMMUNITION AND IN IMPLEMENTS OF WAR.[1]

(Geneva, June 17th, 1925.)

Not in Force.

Ratifications or definitive Accessions.

BRITISH EMPIRE
Does not bind India or any British Dominion which is a separate Member of the League of Nations and does not separately sign or adhere to the Convention.
This ratification will not become effective until the ratifications of the said Convention by all the following Powers — i.e., Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Germany, Italy, Japan, Spain, Sweden and United States of America — have become effective in accordance with Article 41 of the Convention.

AUSTRALIA (a)
Subject to the reservation that this accession shall not take effect until ratifications of the Convention in respect of Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Germany, Italy, Japan, Spain, Sweden and the United States of America have been deposited with the French Government.

CHINA

DENMARK
The Danish Government makes the entry into force of this Convention, as far as Denmark is concerned, subject to its being put into force both in Sweden and in Switzerland.

EGYPT

2. Convention on the Execution of Foreign Arbitral Awards (continued).

(Geneva, September 26th, 1927.)

In Force.

Ratifications.

Denmark (April 25th, 1929)
Under Danish law, arbitral awards made by an Arbitral Tribunal do not immediately become operative; it is necessary in each case, in order to make an award operative, to apply to the ordinary Courts of Law. In the course of the proceedings, however, the arbitral award will generally be accepted by such Courts without further examination as a basis for the final judgment in the affair.

All the provisions of the Act.	Provisions relating to conciliation and judicial settlement (Chapters I and II) and general provisions dealing with these procedures (Chapter IV).	Provisions relating to conciliation (Chapter I), and general provisions concerning that procedure (Chapter IV).

(v) Disputes with any Party to the General Act who is not a Member of the League of Nations.

2. That His Majesty reserves the right in relation to the disputes mentioned in Article 17 of the General Act to require that the procedure prescribed in Chapter II of the said Act shall be suspended in respect of any dispute which has been submitted to and is under consideration by the Council of the League of Nations, provided that notice to suspend is given after the dispute has been submitted to the Council and is given within ten days of the notification of the initiation of the procedure, and provided also that such suspension shall be limited to a period of twelve months or such longer period as may be agreed by the parties to the dispute or determined by a decision of all the Members of the Council other than the parties to the dispute.

3. (i) That, in the case of a dispute, not being a dispute mentioned in Article 17 of the General Act, which is brought before the Council of the League of Nations in accordance with the provisions of the Covenant, the procedure prescribed in Chapter I of the General Act shall not be applied, and, if already commenced, shall be suspended, unless the Council determines that the said procedure shall be adopted.

(ii) That, in the case of such a dispute, the procedure described in Chapter III of the General Act shall not be applied unless the Council has failed to effect a settlement of the dispute within twelve months from the date on which it was first submitted to the Council, or, in a case where the procedure prescribed in Chapter I has been adopted without producing an agreement between the parties, within six months from the termination of the work of the Conciliation Commission. The Council may extend either of the above periods by a decision of all its Members other than the parties to the dispute.

(b) Disputes concerning questions which by international law are solely within the domestic jurisdiction of States and in particular disputes relating to the territorial status of Greece, including disputes relating to its rights of sovereignty over its ports and lines of communication.

Subject to the following reservations:

I. The following disputes shall be excluded from the procedure described in the said Act:

(a) Disputes arising out of facts or situations prior to the present accession;

(b) Disputes relating to questions which international law leaves to the sole jurisdiction of States;

(c) Disputes affecting the relations between Italy and any third Power.

II. It is understood that, in conformity with Article 29 of the said Act, disputes for the solution of which a special procedure is provided by other conventions shall be settled in accordance with the provisions of those conventions; and that, in particular, disputes which may be submitted to the Council or Assembly of the League of Nations in virtue of one of the provisions of the Covenant shall be settled in accordance with those provisions.

III. It is further understood that the present accession in no way affects Italy's accession to the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and to the clause in that Statute concerning the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court.

(Geneva, December 14th, 1928.)

In Force.

Ratifications or definitive Accessions.

INDIA (May 15th, 1931 a)

A. Under the terms of Article 11, the obligations of the Convention shall not extend to the territories in India of any Prince or Chief under the suzerainty of His Majesty the King Emperor.

B1 Article 2 I (a). — The provisions for returns of "transit trade" made in Annex 1, Part 1, 1 (b) shall not apply to India nor shall returns of the "land frontier trade" of India be acquired.

(2) Article 2. II (a). — The question whether a general census of agriculture can be held in India and, if so, on what lines and at what intervals still remains to be settled. For the present, India can assume no obligations under this article.

(3) Article 2. III (b). (1). — For farms in the "permanently settled" tracts in India, estimates of the cultivated areas may be used in compiling the returns.

(4) Article 2. III (b). (2). — The returns of quantities of crops harvested may be based on estimates of yield each year per unit area in each locality.

(5) Article 2. III (d). — Complete returns cannot be guaranteed from Burma, and in respect of the rest of India the returns shall refer to Government forests only.

The Government of India further declared that, with regard to the second paragraph of Article 3 of the Convention, they cannot, with the means of investigation at their disposal, usefully undertake to prepare experimentally the specified tables, and that for similar reasons they are not in a position to accept the proposal contained in Recommendation II of the Convention.

[1] The present Convention shall come into force as soon as the amount of the contributions, whether obligatory or voluntary, to the Special Reserve due from the Governments which have ratified the Convention attains the sum of twenty-five million francs. If this condition is not realised before December 31st, 1931, a Conference of the Governments which have ratified the Convention shall be called by the Council of the League of Nations. This Conference will determine new conditions for the coming into force of the Convention (Article 16).

[2] On signing this Convention the Swedish Plenipotentiary made the following declaration:

"The Swedish Government reserves the right to make its ratification of this Convention depend on the attitude which the Governments of Denmark and Norway shall adopt towards it."

[3] The present Convention entered into force on July 9th, 1933, in accordance with its Article 30. See Treaty Series of the League of Nations, Vol. CXXXIX, p. 301; Vol. CXLVII, p. 361 and Vol. CLII, p. 344. Provided always that the provisions of the Convention other than Articles 2 to 5 shall only be applicable from the first of January in the first year in respect of which estimates are furnished in conformity with Articles 2 to 5 (Article 30).

(Geneva, July 13th, 1931.)

Ratifications or definitive Accessions.

2. The Government of the United States of America reserves the right to impose, for purposes of controlling transit through its territories of raw opium, coca leaves, all of their derivatives and similar substances produced by synthetic process, measures by which the production of an import permit issued by the country of destination may be made a condition precedent to the granting of permission for transit through its territory.
3. The Government of the United States of America finds it impracticable to undertake to send statistics of import and export to the Permanent Central Opium Board short of 60 days after the close of the three months' period to which such statistics refer.
4. The Government of the United States of America finds it impracticable to undertake to state separately amounts of drugs purchased or imported for Government purposes.
5. Plenipotentiaries of the United States of America formally declare that the signing of the Convention for limiting the Manufacture and regulating the Distribution of Narcotic Drugs by them on the part of the United States of America on this date is not to be construed to mean that the Government of the United States of America recognises a regime or entity which signs or accedes to the Convention as the Government of a country when that regime or entity is not recognised by the Government of the United States of America as the Government of that country.
6. The plenipotentiaries of the United States of America further declare that the participation of the United States of America in the Convention for limiting the Manufacture and regulating the Distribution of Narcotic Drugs, signed on this date, does not involve any contractual obligation on the part of the United States of America to a country represented by a regime or entity which the Government of the United States of America does not recognise as the Government of that country until such country has a Government recognised by the Government of the United States of America.

Belgium (April 10th, 1933)

This ratification does not include the Belgian Congo, nor the Territory of Ruanda-Urundi under Belgian mandate.

Brazil (April 5th, 1933)

Great Britain and Northern Ireland (April 1st, 1933)

His Majesty does not assume any obligation in respect of any of His colonies, protectorates and overseas territories or territories under suzerainty or under mandate exercised by His Government in the United Kingdom.

Canada (October 17th, 1932)

Australia (January 24th, 1934)

This accession applies to Papua, Norfolk Island and the mandated territories of New Guinea and Nauru.

4. Convention for limiting the Manufacture and regulating the Distribution of Narcotic Drugs (continued).

(Geneva, July 13th, 1931.)

In Force.

Ratifications or definitive Accessions.

Japan (June 3rd, 1935)

The Japanese Government declare that, in view of the necessity of close co-operation between the High Contracting Parties in order to carry out most effectively the provisions of the Convention for limiting the Manufacture and regulating the Distribution of Narcotic Drugs, signed at Geneva on July 13th, 1931, they understand that the present position of Japan, regardless of whether she be a Member of the League of Nations or not, is to be maintained in the matter of the composition of the organs and the appointment of the members thereof mentioned in the said Convention.[1]

Lithuania (April 10th, 1933)

Mexico (March 13th, 1933)

The Government of the United States of Mexico reserves the right to impose in its territory—as it has already done—measures more severe than those laid down by the Convention itself, for the restriction of the cultivation or the preparation, use, possession, importation, exportation and consumption of the drugs to which the present Convention refers.

Monaco (February 16th, 1933)

The Netherlands (including the Netherlands Indies, Surinam and Curaçao) (May 22nd, 1933)

New Zealand (June 17th, 1935 a)

Nicaragua (March 16th, 1932 a)

Norway (September 12th, 1934 a)

Panama (April 15th, 1935)

Peru (May 20th, 1932 a)

Poland (April 11th, 1933)

Portugal (June 17th, 1932)

The Portuguese Government makes every reservation with regard to its colonies as to the possibility of regularly producing the quarterly statistics referred to in Article 13 within the strict time-limit laid down.

Roumania (April 11th, 1933)

Salvador (April 7th, 1933 a)

(a) The Republic of Salvador does not agree to the provisions of Article 26, on the ground that there is no reason why the High Contracting Parties should be given the option of not applying the Convention to their colonies, protectorates, and overseas mandated territories.

(b) The Republic of Salvador states that it disagrees with the reservations embodied in Nos. 5 and 6 of the declarations made by the plenipotentiaries of the United States of America regarding Governments not recognised by the Government of that country; in its opinion, those reservations constitute an infringement of the national sovereignty of Salvador, whose present Government, though not as yet recognised by the United States Government, has been recognised by the majority of the civilised countries of the world. Their recognition is due to their conviction that that Government is a perfectly constitutional one and affords a full and complete guarantee of the performance of its international duties, inasmuch as it enjoys the unanimous, decided and effective support of all the inhabitants of the Republic, whether citizens of the country or foreigners resident therein.

As it respects the internal regimes of other nations, the Republic of Salvador considers that the Convention in question, being of a strictly hygienic and humanitarian character, does not offer a suitable occasion to formulate such political reservations as have called forth this comment.

Siam (February 22nd, 1934)

As its harmful-habit-forming drugs law goes beyond the provisions of the Geneva Convention and the present Convention on certain points, the Siamese Government reserves the right to apply its existing law.

Spain (April 7th, 1933)

Sudan (August 25th, 1932 a)

Sweden (August 12th, 1932)

Switzerland (April 10th, 1933)

[1] The Agreement shall not come into force until it has been ratified by all the High Contracting Parties. The date of its coming into force shall be the ninetieth day after the receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations of the last ratification. (Article VI.)

[2] Came into force August 25th, 1933.

The signatures are to be regarded as affixed in the light of the statements made during the discussions by the representatives of the various countries; these statements are contained in the Minutes of the Conference, and are to be interpreted in the sense of paragraph IV of Article 6 of the Final Act.

[3] The Government of the Irish Free State has informed the Secretariat that it regrets not to be in a position to accept this Act which it had signed ad referendum.

[4] The Czechoslovak Government informed the Secretariat that it is unable to take a decision as regards its signature given ad referendum before September 22nd, 1933. The Czechoslovak Government further informed the Secretariat, on September 21st, 1933, of its acceptance of the Act, calling attention at the same time to the declaration made by the Czechoslovak delegate at the Wheat Conference, by which the Czechoslovak Government reserved the right to make further reservations on approval of its signature, and added that it agrees to the reduction of Customs duties, provided that such reduction shall not affect the maintenance of remunerative prices for home-grown cereals. A decision regarding the remunerative level of prices can only be taken with due consideration of the conditions prevailing in Czechoslovakia.

XXXIX. REFUGEES.

CONVENTION RELATING TO THE INTERNATIONAL STATUS OF REFUGEES.

(Geneva, October 28th, 1933.)

In Force.

Ratifications or definitive Accessions

Bulgaria (December 19th, 1934)

Subject to the following reservations:

I. Article 1. — The Bulgarian Government maintains the reservations made by the Bulgarian delegate on signing the Arrangement of June 30th, 1928[2], concerning the extension to other categories of refugees of certain measures taken in favour of Russian and Armenian refugees.

II. Article 2. — The departure from the country of refugees in possession of Nansen certificates (passports) shall be governed by the general regulations in force in this respect. Bulgarian consuls will be empowered in cases of force majeure to extend Nansen certificates issued in Bulgaria for a period of three months. The cost of visas for Nansen certificates shall be fixed in accordance with the tariff applicable to the nationals of the country by which the certificate was issued.

III. Article 6. — Exemption from cautio judicatum solvi shall be at the discretion of the courts in each individual case.

IV. Article 7. — The Bulgarian Government cannot accept points (a) and (d).

V. Articles 8 and 10 (formerly 7 and 9). — Disability and old-age pensions shall be paid (regard being had to the possibilities of the fund concerned) to the persons entitled, their heirs and assigns, provided always that such persons are resident in the country.

VI. Article 13. — The Bulgarian Government cannot accept the first paragraph, as refugees resident in Bulgaria are subject to the same treatment in fiscal matters as other foreign nationals resident in the country.

VII. Article 15. — The Bulgarian Government cannot accept paragraphs 2 and 3.

Signatures not yet perfected by Ratification

BELGIUM

Subject to the following reservations:

(1) Article 2, paragraph 3, relating to the right conferred on consuls to extend Nansen certificates, cannot be accepted by the Belgian Government;

(2) Article 9, in so far as it concerns the application of the provisions of the domestic legislation relating to "unemployment insurance", cannot be accepted;

(3) Article 10, concerning social insurance laws, cannot be favourably received;

(4) Article 14, which concerns the enjoyment of the rights and favours accorded to foreigners, subject to reciprocity, cannot be admitted;

(5) The Belgian Government in accepting the present Convention is not assuming any obligation as regards the colony of the Congo or the mandated territories of Ruanda-Urundi.

EGYPT

Article 1:

Apart from such modifications or amplifications as each Contracting Party may introduce in this definition, my Government reserves the right to extend or limit the said definition in any way.

Article 2:

Bearers of Nansen certificates may not be admitted into Egypt unless the said certificates contain a visa for return to the countries by which they were issued. If these refugees are authorised to sojourn in Egypt, the competent local authorities reserve the right to issue to them Egyptian travel papers.

Article 3:

These authorities reserve the right to expel such refugees at any moment for reasons of public security.

[1] This Convention came into force on June 13th, 1935, in accordance with its Article 20.
[2] This reservation was worded as follows:

"On the understanding that the present Arrangement applies only to such refugees as are at the present date on Bulgarian territory."

(Geneva, October 28th, 1933.)

In Force.

Ratifications or definitive Accessions.

Czechoslovakia (May 14th, 1935 a)

Subject to the following reservations:

"A. The Czechoslovak Government will regard as refugees within the meaning of Article 1 only such persons as formerly actually possessed Russian or Turkish nationality, lost it before January 1st, 1923, and have not acquired any other nationality.

"B. The accession of the Czechoslovak Republic does not apply to:

"(a) Paragraph 3 of Article 2, whereby consuls are qualified to extend Nansen certificates;

"(b) Paragraph 3 of Article 3, so far as it limits the power of the national authorities to expel persons who constitute a danger to the safety of the State and public order; nor, of course, do the provisions of Article 3 in any way affect expulsions by order of the courts, or obligations deriving from extradition treaties or from the Czechoslovak laws regarding the extradition of aliens;

"(c) The whole of Article 7, which exempts refugees from the application of the provisions of laws and decrees for the protection of the national labour market;

"(d) The whole of Article 14, which waives the condition of reciprocity;

"(e) The whole of Article 15, which deals with the creation of local committees.

"C. Articles 4 and 5, dealing with the juridical condition of refugees, and Articles 8, 9, 10 and 11, dealing with industrial accidents and welfare and relief, will be applied in Czechoslovakia only so far as the laws of the country permit."

Norway (June 26th, 1935)

With reservation as regards the provisions of Article 2, para. 3, and Article 14.

Signatures not yet perfected by Ratification.

Article 4:

Moreover, as regards the acquired rights referred to in paragraph 3 of Article 4 of the draft Convention, it should be stipulated that in order to ensure respect for such rights due account must be taken of international public order and of internal public order as the latter is conceived and applied in Egyptian law. Further, in order to dispel any misunderstanding, it should be stipulated that the rights in question are only those relating to personal status.

Article 13:

This article must not in any case invalidate or impair our reservation relating to Egyptian travel papers together with the consequences involved in the application of that reservation.

Article 14:

Our signature does not apply to this article.

Article 15:

The Egyptian Government wishes it to be understood that the committees referred to in Article 15 will not be invested with the powers laid down in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the said article in the event of its desiring to reserve the said powers for the representatives of the local authority.

The Egyptian Government reserves the right to substitute, should the case arise, and whenever it may think fit, assimilation to nationals, for the most favourable treatment granted to nationals of a foreign country, in all the provisions of the Convention in which such treatment is stipulated.

FRANCE

Subject to the following reservations:

(1) Article 7 shall not preclude the application of the laws and regulations fixing the proportion of wage-earning foreigners that employers are authorised to employ in France;

(2) The organisation, in France, of committees such as are provided for in Article 15 shall not, if it takes place, confer on them powers incompatible with the existing laws in the matter of finding employment;

RATIFICATION OF INTERNATIONAL CONVENTIONS CONCLUDED UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Results of the Fifth Enquiry addressed by the Secretary-General to the Governments under the Assembly's Resolution of October 3rd, 1930

Series of League of Nations Publications

V. LEGAL.
1935. V. 4.

NOTE BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL.

Under the Assembly's resolution of October 3rd, 1930, it is the duty of the Secretary-General:

(a) (Point I of the resolution)

Annually to ask those Members of the League and non-member States which, having signed a Convention concluded under the League's auspices, have not ratified it within one year from the date at which it ceased to be open for signature, to inform him of their intentions with regard to ratification; and

(b) (Point II of the resolution)

At such intervals as he considers suitable, to ask those Members of the League which have neither signed nor acceded to Conventions concluded under the League's auspices within five years from the date at which they became open for signature to inform him of their views with regard to those Conventions.

In the present year, the Secretary-General has taken action under both points of the above-mentioned resolution. As regards Point I, it was only necessary to ask the Governments whether they had anything to add to the statements already made by them, as this part of the resolution has not, since last year, become applicable to any new Convention.

The present document contains the replies received this year by the Secretary-General to these two enquiries.

This document is in continuation of documents A.30.1931.V, A.25.1932.V, A.17.1933.V and A.13.1934.V, which contain the results of the preceding enquiries made by the Secretary-General.

This Convention is now being examined by the competent authorities with a view to its ratification (letter of June 4th, 1935).

Chile.

The Government of Chile, after carefully considering this Convention, has decided not to ratify it for various reasons, one of which is the fact that the Governments of Argentina, Bolivia and Peru are not contracting parties to the Convention and are the only countries with which Chile is connected by international railways (letter of February 12th, 1935).

Finland.

The Finnish Government has decided to submit this Convention again to the competent authorities for their opinion as to the possibility of putting it into force in Finland (letter of July 8th, 1935).

Uruguay.

This Convention was submitted to Parliament for consideration ; it is now being examined by the competent technical authorities, and the Government of Uruguay intends to ratify it as soon as the necessary legislative approval has been received (letter of May 14th, 1935).

GOVERNMENTS WHICH HAVE NOT MODIFIED THE REPLIES GIVEN BY THEM TO PREVIOUS ENQUIRIES AND CONTAINED IN DOCUMENTS A.30.1931.V, A.25.1932.V AND A.13.1934.V :

Uruguay.

This Convention was submitted to Parliament for consideration ; it is now being examined by the competent technical authorities, and the Government of Uruguay intends to ratify it as soon as the necessary legislative approval has been received (letter of May 14th, 1935).

GOVERNMENTS WHICH HAVE NOT MODIFIED THE REPLIES GIVEN BY THEM TO PREVIOUS ENQUIRIES AND CONTAINED IN DOCUMENTS A.30.1931.V, A.25.1932.V AND A.13.1934.V :

Chile, Lithuania, Panama, Salvador, Spain.

CONVENTION RELATING TO THE TRANSMISSION IN TRANSIT OF ELECTRIC POWER, AND PROTOCOL OF SIGNATURE.

(Geneva, December 9th, 1923.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Bulgaria.

This Convention is now being examined by the competent authorities with a view to its ratification (letter of June 4th, 1935).

Chile.

After carefully considering this Convention, the Government of Chile has come to the conclusion that it is unable to ratify it, the Convention being contrary to the provisions of the Chilian legislation regarding this matter (letter of December 17th, 1934).

Uruguay.

This Convention was submitted to Parliament for consideration ; it is now being examined by the competent technical authorities, and the Government of Uruguay intends to ratify it as soon as the necessary legislative approval has been received (letter of May 14th, 1935).

(Geneva, December 9th, 1923.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Bulgaria.

This Convention is now being examined by the competent authorities with a view to its ratification (letter of June 4th, 1935).

Chile.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs has carefully considered this Convention and has come to the conclusion that, in view of the geographical situation of Chile, the provisions of the Convention are of no interest for this country (letter of December 13th, 1934).

Uruguay.

This Convention was submitted to Parliament for consideration ; it is now being examined by the competent technical authorities, and the Government of Uruguay intends to ratify it as soon as the necessary legislative approval has been received (letter of May 14th, 1935).

CONVENTION FOR THE SUPERVISION OF THE INTERNATIONAL TRADE IN ARMS AND AMMUNITION AND IN IMPLEMENTS OF WAR.

(Geneva, June 17th, 1925.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

United States of America.

This Convention was ratified by the United States of America on June 21st, 1935, " subject to the reservation that the said Convention shall not come into force so far as the United States of America is concerned until it shall have come into force in respect to Belgium, the British Empire, Czechoslovakia, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Sweden and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics ". The instrument of ratification will shortly be forwarded to the American Ambassador at Paris for deposit with the Government of the French Republic, subject to the aforesaid reservation (letter of June 26th, 1935).

Brazil.

The National Congress will be invited to take a decision as regards this Convention (letter of March 27th, 1935).

Bulgaria.

This Convention is now being examined by the competent authorities with a view to its ratification (letter of June 4th, 1935).

Finland.

With regard to this Convention, the Finnish Government sees no reason to make any change in the attitude of strict reserve which it has always adopted towards any project for regulating only the trade in these products without introducing a similar control of the corresponding industry (letter of July 8th, 1935).

Uruguay.

This Convention was submitted to Parliament for consideration ; it is now being examined by the competent technical authorities, and the Government of Uruguay intends to ratify it as soon as the necessary legislative approval has been received (letter of May 14th, 1935).

CONVENTION REGARDING THE MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS EMPLOYED IN INLAND NAVIGATION, AND PROTOCOL OF SIGNATURE.

(Paris, November 27th, 1925.)

REPLY RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Finland.

As Finnish ships very seldom navigate the inland waterways of other countries, and foreign ships equally seldom visit those of Finland, the Convention in question would be of very little practical importance to Finland. It would, moreover, entail considerable changes in existing Finnish legislation. For the moment at least, therefore, the Finnish Government does not consider it expedient to ratify the Convention (letter of July 8th, 1935).

GOVERNMENT WHICH HAS NOT MODIFIED THE REPLY GIVEN BY IT TO PREVIOUS ENQUIRIES AND CONTAINED IN DOCUMENTS A.30.1931.V AND A.13.1934.V :

United States of America.

There has been no change in the situation regarding this Convention, with respect to the United States of America, since the last report to the Secretariat (letter of June 26th, 1935).

France.

A Bill for the ratification of this Convention was adopted by the Chamber of Deputies and is now pending before the Senate (letter of June 19th, 1935).

Japan.

The entry into force of this Convention in Japan must be preceded by certain amendments to national laws. These amendments will form part of the general revision of the Japanese criminal code which is at present being carried out by the Japanese Government. In these circumstances, the Japanese Government will not be able to ratify the Convention until after the entry into force of the new criminal code in question (letter of August 19th, 1935).

CONVENTION ON CERTAIN QUESTIONS RELATING TO THE CONFLICT OF NATIONALITY LAWS.

(The Hague, April 12th, 1930.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Union of South Africa.

The ratification of this Convention would necessitate the passing of legislation which the Union Government do not, at present, propose to introduce (letter of June 12th, 1935).

Australia.

A Bill for the implementation of the provisions of Chapter III of the Convention was introduced in the Senate of the Parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia during the last Parliament, but lapsed with prorogation. A second and similar Bill was introduced in the House of Representatives on November 29th, 1934, and was in the second reading stage when Parliament went into recess on April 11th, 1935. This Bill will probably be proceeded with in due course, and when it has been passed, ratification of the Convention will be effected (letter of May 2nd, 1935).

Belgium.

A Bill for the approval of this Convention will be placed before the Chambers in the near future (letter of May 9th, 1935).

Japan.

The Japanese Government intends to ratify this Convention. As, however, the entry into force of the Convention must be preceded by certain amendments to national laws, the Government proposes to ratify it after these amendments have been made, and this has not yet been done (letter of August 19th, 1935).

The Netherlands.

A Bill was placed before the States-General on June 13th, 1935 (letter of June 26th, 1935).

Union of South Africa.

The Union Government have decided to ratify this Protocol and the necessary steps to that end are now being taken (letter of June 12th, 1935).

Japan.

The Japanese Government intends to ratify this Protocol. As, however, the entry into force of the Convention concerning nationality must be preceded by certain amendments to national laws, the Government proposes to ratify it after these amendments have been made, and this has not yet been done (letter of August 19th, 1935).

These authorities are hoping, however, that the Convention can be submitted to the Legislative Council during the course of the present year (letter of April 6th, 1934).

Yugoslavia.

The Inland Waterways Department of the Royal Ministry of Communications has accomplished the preliminary work for the legalisation of this Convention. The text is now under consideration by the Royal Ministry of Justice, which will take, so far as it is within its province, the necessary steps to put this Convention into effect and to supplement the existing national laws and bring them into line with the provisions of this Convention. As soon as the joint work of the aforesaid Department and the Ministry of Justice is completed, the Royal Ministry of Foreign Affairs will submit this Convention to Parliament for approval, after which it will be ratified (letter of June 26th, 1935).

Yugoslavia.

The Royal Government maintains the view it has already expressed in the notes previously addressed to the Secretariat of the League of Nations on this subject (letter of June 26th, 1935).

CONVENTION FOR THE CREATION OF AN INTERNATIONAL AGRICULTURAL MORTGAGE CREDIT COMPANY, WITH CHARTER AND STATUTES.

(Geneva, May 21st, 1931.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL:

Bulgaria.

This Convention is now being examined by the competent authorities with a view to its ratification (letter of June 4th, 1935).

Finland.

The Finnish Government's present opinion is that this Convention cannot be ratified until the participation of certain other States in which economic conditions are similar is assured (letter of July 8th, 1935).

The Netherlands.

The position regarding this Convention is the same as last year (letter of June 26th, 1935).

Sweden.

The Swedish Government, for the reasons previously given, does not contemplate ratifying this Convention at the present time (letter of June 8th, 1935).

CONVENTION FOR THE REGULATION OF WHALING.

(Geneva, September 24th, 1931.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Australia.

The Commonwealth Government has been in consultation with the State Governments so far as the control of whaling within territorial waters is concerned, and it is proposed that a Bill for giving effect to the provisions of the Convention so far as the matter comes within the powers of the Commonwealth will be introduced into the Commonwealth Parliament as soon as possible. It is hoped that the Commonwealth will be able subsequently to ratify this Convention (letter of May 2nd, 1935).

Austria.

The Federal Government has decided to ratify this Convention and the instrument of ratification relating thereto will be deposited with the Secretariat in the near future (letter of June 4th, 1935).

Finland.

The Finnish Government is contemplating ratifying this Convention and has already put the necessary technical preparations in hand (letter of July 8th, 1935).

India.

As stated in the letter of May 3rd, 1935, it will be impossible to deposit the instrument of ratification until certain legislation to give effect to the Convention in India has been passed. It has not yet been found possible to pass this legislation, and the Government of India regret that they cannot at present indicate when it will be possible (letter of July 8th, 1935).

GOVERNMENTS WHICH HAVE NOT MODIFIED THE REPLIES GIVEN BY THEM TO PREVIOUS ENQUIRY AND CONTAINED IN DOCUMENT A.13.1934.V :

Albania, Belgium, Greece, Roumania.

GENERAL CONVENTION TO IMPROVE THE MEANS OF PREVENTING WAR.

(Geneva, September 26th, 1931.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Bulgaria.

This Convention is now being examined by the competent authorities with a view to its ratification (letter of June 4th, 1935).

Sweden.

The Swedish Government, for the reasons previously given, does not contemplate ratifying this Convention at the present time (letter of June 8th, 1935).

Uruguay.

This Convention was submitted to Parliament for consideration ; it is now being examined by the competent technical authorities, and the Government of Uruguay intends to ratify it as soon as the necessary legislative approval has been received (letter of May 14th, 1935).

SUPPRESSION OF OPIUM-SMOKING. AGREEMENT.

(Bangkok, November 27th, 1931.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

India.

This Agreement will be ratified if and when the assent of the Burma Legislature is obtained to the requisite legislation (letter of July 8th, 1935).

Japan.

The Japanese Government is now taking the necessary steps with a view to ratifying this Agreement (letter of August 19th, 1935).

SIGNATURE OR ACCESSION BY MEMBERS OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS IN THE CASE OF CONVENTIONS WHICH THEY HAVE NOT SIGNED OR TO WHICH THEY HAVE NOT ACCEDED WITHIN A PERIOD OF FIVE YEARS FROM THE DATE ON WHICH THE CONVENTIONS BECAME OPEN FOR SIGNATURE.

SLAVERY CONVENTION.

(Geneva, September 25th, 1926.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The position of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics with regard to its accession to this Convention is unaltered. The accession of the Soviet Government to this Convention is therefore not contemplated at the present time (letter of July 7th, 1935).

Venezuela.

The considerations which have prevented the Government of Venezuela from acceding to this Convention are based on the fact that the political constitution, in enumerating the guarantees which it accords to citizens, contains the following provision : " Personal freedom and hence . . . (b) slavery is permanently proscribed, and slaves setting foot on the soil of the Republic shall be free ", and on the fact that forced labour does not exist in Venezuela outside the penitentiaries. Further, in view of its geographical position and of the fact that it is bordered by countries in which slavery is also prohibited, the Republic offers no possibility of slave traffic (letter of June 25th, 1935).

CONVENTION AND STATUTE ESTABLISHING AN INTERNATIONAL RELIEF UNION.

(Geneva, July 12th, 1927.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Union of South Africa.

The Union Government regret that they are unable to vary their previous decision not to become a party to this Convention (letter of June 24th, 1935).

Australia.

The Commonwealth Government does not see its way at present to accede to this Convention (letter of May 2nd, 1935).

Austria.

Considerations of a financial order prevent at present the accession of Austria to this Convention (letter of May 10th, 1935).

Denmark.

The Danish Government does not consider that it can, under the present circumstances, accede to this Convention (letter of July 15th, 1935).

SLAVERY CONVENTION.

(Geneva, September 25th, 1926.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The position of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics with regard to its accession to this Convention is unaltered. The accession of the Soviet Government to this Convention is therefore not contemplated at the present time (letter of July 7th, 1935).

Venezuela.

The considerations which have prevented the Government of Venezuela from acceding to this Convention are based on the fact that the political constitution, in enumerating the guarantees which it accords to citizens, contains the following provision : " Personal freedom and hence . . . (b) slavery is permanently proscribed, and slaves setting foot on the soil of the Republic shall be free ", and on the fact that forced labour does not exist in Venezuela outside the penitentiaries. (Geneva, July 12th, 1927.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Union of South Africa.

The Union Government regret that they are unable to vary their previous decision not to become a party to this Convention (letter of June 24th, 1935).

Australia.

The Commonwealth Government does not see its way at present to accede to this Convention (letter of May 2nd, 1935).

Austria.

Considerations of a financial order prevent at present the accession of Austria to this Convention (letter of May 10th, 1935).

Denmark.

The Danish Government does not consider that it can, under the present circumstances, accede to this Convention (letter of July 15th, 1935).

Estonia.

It is only owing to budgetary questions that the accession of Estonia to this Convention has been postponed (letter of September 3rd, 1935).

Irish Free State.

The Government of the Irish Free State, after careful reconsideration, are at present unable to hold out any prospect of their accession to this Convention (letter of April 25th, 1935).

The Netherlands.

The Government of the Netherlands does not contemplate acceding to this Convention. The Government is of opinion that the advantages resulting from the conclusion of this Convention are not sufficient to justify, at a time when strict economy is essential, the financial obligations it involves for the High Contracting Parties (letter of June 26th, 1935).

Norway.

The Norwegian Government regrets that, owing to the financial situation, it does not consider it possible to ask the Storting to vote the measures necessary for the accession of Norway to this Convention (letter of April 15th, 1935).

Panama.

This Convention will be submitted for the approbation of the National Assembly with a view to accession (letter of April 22nd, 1935).

Sweden.

The accession of Sweden to this Convention is not contemplated at present (letter of June 8th, 1935).

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The position of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics with regard to its accession to this Convention is unaltered. The accession of the Soviet Government to this Convention is therefore not contemplated at the present time (letter of July 7th, 1935).

CONVENTION ON THE EXECUTION OF FOREIGN ARBITRAL AWARDS.

(Geneva, September 26th, 1927.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Latvia.

The accession to this Convention necessitates certain amendments of the Latvian legislation. The accession is, however, contemplated and the preliminary work connected therewith is already in course (letter of July 13th, 1935).

Norway.

The laws in force in Norway prevent the accession of Norway to this Convention. The Norwegian Government is, however, considering the question of proposing a modification of the law on this subject (letter of April 15th, 1935).

Panama.

Instructions will be given in due course to the representative of the Republic of Panama to the League of Nations to sign this Convention, which will then be submitted to the National Assembly for ratification (letter of April 22nd, 1935).

Poland.

The Polish Government does not intend to accede to this Convention (letter of May 1st, 1935).

Uruguay.

This Convention was submitted to Parliament for consideration ; it is now being examined by the competent technical authorities, and the Government of Uruguay intends to accede to it as soon as the necessary legislative approval has been received (letter of May 14th, 1935).

GOVERNMENTS WHOSE REPLIES HAVE NOT YET REACHED THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Albania, Chile, Iraq, Japan, Lithuania, Paraguay, Salvador.

PACIFIC SETTLEMENT OF INTERNATIONAL DISPUTES. GENERAL ACT.

(Geneva, September 26th, 1928.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Union of South Africa.

The arrangements to which the Union is a party are considered to provide adequate means for the settlement of international disputes. The Union Government do not, therefore, intend to accede to the General Act (letter of June 24th, 1935).

Austria.

The Austrian Government considers it necessary to postpone examination of its possible accession to this Act, pending the result of the negotiations now taking place between the interested States with a view to reinforcing security in the Danube Basin (letter of May 10th, 1935).

Czechoslovakia.

The Government of the Czechoslovak Republic has decided, in principle, to accede to this Act. As to the date of its accession, however, the Government of the Czechoslovak Republic desires to choose the time which will seem to it most appropriate, in view of the fact that this matter entails for Czechoslovakia a question of a practical nature entirely independent from the principle of the General Act (letter of May 15th, 1935).

Ecuador.

If the Government of Ecuador has not yet acceded to this Act, this delay is due to the somewhat complicated procedure instituted by the Constitution of the Republic for the ratification of such instruments. These necessitate the preliminary examination of the Senate, whose considerable amount of work causes very often these questions to be discussed and settled with some delay (letter of April 29th, 1935).

Hungary.

Hungary is unable, at the present time, to accede to this Act (letter of July 11th, 1935).

Latvia.

It is contemplated to accede to this Act in the near future (letter of July 13th, 1935).

Panama.

This Act will be submitted for the approbation of the National Assembly with a view to accession (letter of April 22nd, 1935).

Poland.

The Polish Government does not intend to accede to this Act (letter of May 1st, 1935).

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The position of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics with regard to its accession to this Act is unaltered. The accession of the Soviet Government to this Act is therefore not contemplated at the present time (letter of July 7th, 1935).

Uruguay.

This Act was submitted to Parliament for consideration ; it is now being examined by the competent technical authorities, and the Government of Uruguay intends to accede to it as soon as the necessary legislative approval has been received (letter of May 14th, 1935).

Venezuela.

Although the Government of Venezuela has not yet acceded to this Act, it has taken it as a model in arbitration treaties recently concluded by it with several countries. Accession to this Act is only a question of time, and it will in all probability be laid before the Legislative Chambers at their sessions next year (letter of June 25th, 1935).

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION RELATING TO ECONOMIC STATISTICS, AND PROTOCOL.

(Geneva, December 14th, 1928.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

United States of America.

This Convention is under consideration and will probably be laid before the President within a short time for transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to adherence (letter of June 26th, 1935).

Ecuador.

If the Government of Ecuador has not yet acceded to this Convention, this delay is due to the somewhat complicated procedure instituted by the Constitution of the Republic for the ratification of such instruments. These necessitate the preliminary examination of the Senate, whose considerable amount of work causes very often these questions to be discussed and settled with some delay (letter of April 29th, 1935).

Panama.

This Convention will be submitted for the approbation of the National Assembly with a view to accession (letter of April 22nd, 1935).

Turkey.

The Government of the Turkish Republic was unable to sign the Convention at the time, as the reservations which were presented by its delegation were not accepted by the Conference. The Government of the Republic desires, however, to study the question again and to consider whether it would now be in a position to accede to this Convention (letter of June 8th, 1935).

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The position of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics with regard to its accession to this Convention is unaltered. The accession of the Soviet Government to this Convention is therefore not contemplated at the present time (letter of July 7th, 1935).

Uruguay.

This Convention was submitted to Parliament for consideration ; it is now being examined by the competent technical authorities, and the Government of Uruguay intends to accede to it as soon as the necessary legislative approval has been received (letter of May 14th, 1935).

Venezuela.

This Convention is at present being examined by the competent services. The Government's accession to it is only a matter of time, and the Convention will in all probability be submitted to the Legislative Chambers at their sessions next year (letter of June 25th, 1935).

GOVERNMENTS WHOSE REPLIES HAVE NOT YET REACHED THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Afghanistan, Albania, Argentine Republic, Bolivia, China, Colombia, Dominican Republic, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iran, Iraq, Liberia, Lithuania, Mexico, Nicaragua, New Zealand, Paraguay, Peru, Salvador, Siam, Spain.

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF COUNTERFEITING CURRENCY, AND PROTOCOL.

(Geneva, April 20th, 1929.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Union of South Africa.

After careful reconsideration of the matter, the conclusion has been reached that, owing to certain difficulties which prevent the Union Government from ratifying and becoming a party to the above-mentioned Convention, as stated in a letter of July 27th, 1929, the Union Government are not yet in a position to accede to the Convention or to the Protocol.

The question how these difficulties can be met will in the near future be discussed; and as soon as they have been overcome, the Union Government will reconsider the matter of acceding to the Convention (letter of June 24th, 1935).

Australia.

This Convention is still under consideration, and the Commonwealth Government hopes to be able to advise the Secretariat about it at an early date (letter of May 2nd, 1935).

Ecuador.

If the Government of Ecuador has not yet acceded to this Convention, this delay is due to the somewhat complicated procedure instituted by the Constitution of the Republic for the ratification of such instruments. These necessitate the preliminary examination of the Senate, whose considerable amount of work causes very often these questions to be discussed and settled with some delay (letter of April 29th, 1935).

Finland.

The Finnish Government is considering the question of acceding to this Convention. The necessary technical arrangements to this effect will probably be completed during the course of this year (letter of July 8th, 1935).

Latvia.

The competent authorities have declared themselves in favour of accession to this Convention. It is presumed that the formalities shall be accomplished in the near future (letter of July 13th, 1935).

Mexico.

The Mexican Government has approved Mexico's accession to this Convention and the instrument of accession will shortly be forwarded in order to be deposited with the Secretariat by the Mexican representative accredited to the League of Nations (letter of March 27th, 1935).

Sweden.

The question of the possible accession of Sweden to this Convention is at present under consideration by the competent Swedish authorities (letter of June 8th, 1935).

Turkey.

The Government of the Turkish Republic intends to accede to this Convention and to the Protocol relating thereto in the near future. The delay in acceding is only due to the accomplishment of the necessary legislative formalities in order to render the national Turkish legislation to conform with the provisions of the Convention. These formalities have just been completed (letter of June 8th, 1935).

Uruguay.

This Convention was submitted to Parliament for consideration ; it is now being examined by the competent technical authorities, and the Government of Uruguay intends to accede to it as soon as the necessary legislative approval has been received (letter of May 14th, 1935).

Venezuela.

This Convention is at present being examined by the competent services. The Government's accession to it is only a matter of time, and the Convention will in all probability be submitted to the Legislative Chambers at their sessions next year (letter of June 25th, 1935).

AGREEMENT CONCERNING THE PREPARATION OF A TRANSIT CARD FOR EMIGRANTS.

(Geneva, June 14th, 1929.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Czechoslovakia.

This Agreement will shortly be submitted to the Government for approval and for decision with regard to the signature to be affixed (letter of May 15th, 1935).

Estonia.

The Estonian Government was in favour of acceding to this Agreement, but, for reasons of a purely practical character, it has thought it preferable to wait for the accessions of Latvia and Sweden, as these two countries would be crossed by the majority of people leaving Estonia for European or overseas countries.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs is however of opinion that the reconsideration of this point of view seems at present possible, and it will inform the Secretariat as soon as the question of the accession of Estonia to the Agreement is favourably settled (letter of September 3rd, 1935).

Irish Free State.

The attitude of the Government of the Irish Free State in regard to this Agreement is conditioned by the consideration that, as emigrants in transit do not pass through the Irish Free State, and as the number of emigrants from the Irish Free State passing in transit through other countries is thought to be negligible, the Agreement could only have a very limited, if any, application in respect of the Irish Free State. The Government of the Irish Free State are, however, submitting the question of the signature of this Agreement to a further examination (letter of April 25th, 1935).

Latvia.

The Latvian Government does not consider it expedient to accede to this Agreement, in view of the objections to which its contents have given rise on the part of the competent authorities (letter of July 13th, 1935).

Norway.

The Norwegian Government, being of opinion that this Agreement does not contain any improvement to the present conditions, does not consider that it can accede to it (letter of April 15th, 1935).

Sweden.

The accession of Sweden to this Agreement is not contemplated at present (letter of June 8th, 1935).

NOTE BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL.

On January 14th, 1935, the Council approved a proposal of the Secretary-General to the effect that, in view of the fact that the questions of the nationality and of the status of women had been placed on the agenda of the Assembly, the Secretariat should be authorised to circulate to the Assembly " statements from the women's international organisations, or any committee of representatives of those organisations, setting out their views and desiderata on either of the above subjects ".

In view of the number and length of the statements received, the Secretary-General has felt unable to reproduce in the present document separate statements from organisations whose views are also expressed in the joint statement presented by the " Women's Consultative Committee on Nationality ". Such separate statements were received from the Equal Rights International and the International Council of Women. They have been filed in the archives of the Secretariat.

The Secretary-General has also felt himself precluded by the terms of the Council's resolution and the practice of the League from including statements from national associations. Such a statement, opposing as ineffective and dangerous to the real interests of women a treaty by which States would bind themselves to accord " equal rights " to men and women, and in general any attempt to deal with the status of women by a single general legislative formula, and asking for preliminary enquiry into so-called discriminations between the sexes, was received from the National League of Women Voters of the United States of America. The National Consumers' League (U.S.A.) has submitted a statement opposing the so-called "equal rights" treaty, on the ground that it endangers protective labour legislation for women.

INTERNATIONAL ALLIANCE OF WOMEN FOR SUFFRAGE AND EQUAL CITIZENSHIP.

NATIONALITY OF WOMEN.

PRINCIPLES ON WHICH THE LAW OF THE NATIONALITY OF WOMEN SHOULD BE BASED.

The International Alliance of Women for Suffrage and Equal Citizenship is composed of national auxiliaries in thirty-nine countries and numbers among its members millions of women who belong to all races, classes, creeds and political parties. Since 1917, it has been working systematically and continuously, both internationally and through its national auxiliaries, to secure for the married woman under the laws of every state her own independent nationality and the same right as a man to retain or to change her nationality.

The following are the principles on which the law of the nationality of women should be based :

A. Independent Nationality of the Married Woman.

In matters of nationality, the married woman should not be treated as dependent on her husband, but should be recognised as an independent person, and to this end legislation should be based on the following principles :

(a) That the nationality of a woman should not be changed by reason only of marriage, or a change during marriage in the nationality of her husband;

(b) That the right of a woman to retain her nationality or to change it by naturalisation, denationalisation or denaturalisation shall not be denied or abridged because she is a married woman, and

(c) That the nationality of a married woman shall not be changed without her consent, except under conditions which would cause a change in the nationality of a man without his consent.

Under legislation based on these principles, a husband and wife would, in some cases, be of different nationalities and, in others, of the same nationality. But in no case would they be compelled to be of the same nationality, since each would have an independent nationality in his or her own person.

B. Special Facilities for One Spouse to acquire the Nationality of the Other.

It often happens that a man who marries a wife of a nationality different from his own wishes to and does take by naturalisation the nationality of his wife, and many States give him facilities for doing so. And where a woman has a similar choice, as she already has in some States, she may take her husband's nationality by naturalisation. In this connection, it is desirable in national laws :

(d) That special facilities should be given for one spouse to take the nationality of the other.

C. Derivation of Nationality equally from Both Parents.

Nationality at birth is in general derived from the place of birth (jus soli) and/or from the father, or, in a few cases, from the mother (jus sanguinis). It is not desirable that the nationality of the father should be treated as of greater importance than that of the mother. National laws should provide :

(e) That the nationality of the mother should be transmitted to a child under the same conditions as that of the father.

Under such a provision, the child of parents of two different nationalities derives at birth, under jus sanguinis, both the nationality of its father and that of its mother. It has double nationality with its advantages and disadvantages, just as does a child which at birth takes both its father's nationality and that of the place where it is born.

D. Equal Nationality Conditions for Both Sexes.

Already the universal rule is (there are no exceptions, so far as we are aware) that the unmarried woman has independent nationality in her own person on the same terms as a man. But a complete statement of the principles essential in legislation for the woman, both married and unmarried, must include :

(f) That there shall be no distinction based on sex.

Present Position, National and International.

A. Present National Position: Reforms adopted between 1917 and 1935.

(a) The Married Woman's Personal Independent Nationality. — In 1917, apart from some of the South-American Republics, the nationality of a married woman as a general rule followed that of her husband. It had not always been so. These South-American Republics had retained an old rule that a woman kept her own nationality after marriage with a foreigner. This old rule had formerly been in force in a number of countries of Europe and of European civilisation, but they had changed it during the nineteenth or in the beginning of the twentieth century.

The nineteen years between 1917 and 1935 have seen a revolution in the application of the rule that the nationality of a married woman follows that of her husband. And, in 1935, this rule can no longer be properly described as general. To-day States comprising almost half the population of the world permit a woman national with a foreign husband to retain her own nationality after marriage : in some cases, she does so automatically, in others, subject to her making an application to retain it or a declaration of her intention to retain it. These States include the Argentine, Brazil, Chile, Paraguay, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United States of America, Uruguay, Belgium, Colombia, Guatemala, Irish Free State, Panama, Ecuador, Luxemburg, Albania, China, Cuba, Estonia, Liberia, Roumania, Spain, Turkey and Yugoslavia. The first fourteen of these States go further in the direction of recognising the independent personal nationality of the married woman in that none of them confers its nationality on a foreign woman who marries one of its nationals, except with her consent. China does not confer its nationality on the foreign woman who marries a Chinese national unless she loses her own nationality by such marriage. The first seven of these States put the married woman in the same position as a man as regards her nationality. Then too, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden do not deprive a woman national of her nationality when she marries a foreigner when she continues to reside or is domiciled in her own country. A French woman keeps her nationality on marriage with a foreigner unless either on her own initiative she acquires her husband's or if her first matrimonial domicile is outside France and her husband's State automatically confers his nationality upon her. French nationality is not conferred upon a foreign woman who marries a Frenchman unless she has either (a) lost her own nationality or (b) applies for naturalisation.

(b) Special Facilities for One Spouse to acquire the Nationality of the Other. — The desirability of giving facilities to a husband to acquire the nationality of his wife has been recognised in some countries where the law is equal between husband and wife, such as the Argentine ; in some where the married woman's independent nationality is partly recognised, as in China and France, and, in some in which the wife's nationality follows that of her husband, such as Italy and Japan. These five countries reduce the number of years required for naturalisation of a foreign man who marries a woman national.

The most significant change in the direction of giving special facilities for one spouse to acquire the nationality of the other was made in the United States of America in 1934, when the law was made equal as between husband and wife. The United States Act provides (a) that, except in time of war, a man or woman citizen on marriage with a foreigner may renounce his or her citizenship, and (b) that the time of residence in the United States before naturalisation is reduced from five years to three in the case of a foreign man or woman married to a United States citizen.

(c) Derivation of Nationality from Father and Mother on the Same Terms. — In cases where nationality is dependent on the place of birth (jus soli), the question of equality of derivation of nationality from father and mother does not arise. And in States in which nationality is derived both from the place of birth and from a parent, the question of equality arises only in the case of children born outside the country. States which to-day provide in their law for transmission of nationality on the same terms from a mother as from a father include the Argentine, Chile, Paraguay, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United States of America and Uruguay.

(d) Equality of Conditions as between Men and Women together with the Independent Nationality of the Married Woman. — The countries where the married woman has independent nationality and where there is no distinction based on sex, either with respect to her nationality or the derivation of nationality from a parent, include the Argentine, Chile, Paraguay, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United States of America and Uruguay.

B. Present International Position: Three International Conventions open for Ratification.

Any international consideration of the question of the nationality of women involves the consideration of whether it is or is not desirable for States to ratify one or more of the three international Conventions dealing with the matter, or whether a new convention is needed. These three international Conventions which are now open for ratification either by all States or by the American Republics included in the Pan-American Union are : (1) the Hague Nationality Convention 1930, (2) the Nationality Convention adopted at Montevideo in 1933 and (3) the Nationality of Women Convention adopted at Montevideo in 1933.

(a) The Hague Convention 1930. — The Hague Nationality Convention of 1930 contains four articles (8, 9, 10 and 11) specially dealing with the married woman.

Under Article 8, many women are enabled to retain their own nationality on marriage with a foreigner. But the article is designed, not to recognise the right of the woman to her own nationality, but to prevent statelessness. While it prevents a woman from losing her nationality on marriage with a foreigner when she does not acquire her husband's nationality, it does not give her the right to retain her nationality on marriage with a foreigner whose nationality she thereby acquires. It makes her nationality depend, not on herself, but on her husband's nationality or the law of his country.

It is only Article 10 that recognises the independent nationality of the married woman and only in the particular case of a husband who changes his nationality during marriage.

Articles 8, 9 and 11 are applicable as between two States, one of which in general deprives a woman national of her nationality when she marries a foreigner and the other of which imposes its nationality automatically on a foreign woman who marries one of its nationals. A State which ratifies the Convention therefore recognises the dependence of a woman's nationality on her husband's as an accepted principle of the law of nationality.

The first chapter of the Convention deals with general principles. By Article 1, each State is allowed to determine who are its own nationals, and other States are to recognise this so far as is consistent with " the principles of law generally recognised with regard to nationality ", one of which is the principle of the dependence of the wife's nationality on her husband's. Then, by Article 4, a State may not afford diplomatic protection to one of its nationals against a State whose nationality such person also possesses, and, by Article 5, within a third State, a person with double nationality may in certain cases be treated by that third State as of either of these nationalities. The woman who has kept her own nationality and also had her husband's imposed upon her has double nationality. If her own State has ratified the Convention, it has waived its right to give her protection as its national against her husband's State, and in certain cases even against a third State. Only in very rare cases does marriage give a man double nationality, so that men are not affected by ratification of the Convention in the same way as women.

A woman to whom the Convention applies who has kept her own nationality and also by marriage automatically acquired her husband's may find herself when abroad in her husband's country, or even in a third country, deprived of the privileges belonging to her own nationality and without redress, because her own State, by ratifying the Convention, has waived its right to protect her in some particular difficulty in which she may find herself. Ratification of this Convention is therefore against the interests of women.

(b) The Montevideo Nationality Convention, 1933. — Two separate Conventions dealing with women were adopted by the States represented at the Pan-American Conference at Montevideo in 1933. The Nationality Convention also dealt with other aspects of nationality, but contained the following article :

> " Article VI. — Neither matrimony nor its dissolution affects the nationality of the husband, or wife or of their children."

The Convention therefore lays down one of the essential principles—namely, that the married woman shall have independent nationality in her own person unaffected by her marriage. The fact that this Article VI appears in one of the Conventions signed by the States present at the Montevideo Conference is important as indicating that these States are in favour of recognising the independent personal nationality of the married woman.

(c) The Montevideo Nationality of Women Convention 1933. — The second Convention dealing with the nationality of women adopted at Montevideo is that referred to in the agenda of the Assembly. In addition to the formal articles about ratification, etc., it contains one effective article as follows :

> " There will be no distinction based on sex as regards nationality in their legislation or in their practice."

This article so far as it applies to the nationality of the married woman lays down only one of the two essential principles. It provides that there shall be equality between the sexes, but it fails to provide that that equality shall be on the basis of the independent nationality of the married woman. If does not provide as does the other Montevideo Nationality Convention of 1933 that matrimony shall not affect nationality. It is possible for a State under this Convention to base its law on both these principles of equality and independent nationality for husband and wife, but it is not required to do so. This has been done, for example, by Chile and the United States of America, which have both ratified. But it is also possible under the Convention to leave the married woman without her own independent nationality. For example, if, in a State in which the domicile of the married woman follows that of her husband, nationality were made to depend on domicile, this would be legal equality, but, in fact, the woman's nationality would follow her husband's : equality de jure but not equality de facto. To take another example in which under the Convention there would be equality but not independent nationality for either husband or wife : under it legislation might make it compulsory for husband and wife to take the same nationality, that of either the husband or the wife, to be agreed upon at marriage. Such a law is equal for both but denies independent nationality to both. It does not give to either a real choice of nationality. For one, at least, it is a choice between nationality and marriage. The ratification of this Convention, therefore, is not a step in the right direction, for it does not ensure improvement in the position of the married woman.

C. Summary of the Indications of a Growing Acceptance of the Principle of the Independent Nationality of the Married Woman, 1917-1935.

We have given above [1] a list of States (which may not be complete) which have recognised to a greater or less extent the independent nationality of the married woman. Some of the South-American States there named had never made marriage the deciding factor in a married woman's nationality. The other States there named, between 1917 and 1935, have adopted legislation to make the nationality of the married woman wholly or partly independent of marriage. These are the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United States of America, Belgium, Irish Free State, Luxemburg, Albania, China, Cuba, Estonia, Liberia, Roumania, Spain, Turkey, Yugoslavia and France, and, subject to conditions as to residence or domicile, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden.

It is to be noted too that many of these States, including the most populous, not only permit a woman national to keep her own nationality after marriage with a foreigner, but also do not, without her consent, confer their nationality on a foreign woman who marries one of their nationals.

While the Hague Codification Conference in 1930 did not incorporate in its Nationality Convention the principle of the independent nationality of the married woman, it did foreshadow development on the lines of the adoption of this principle in its recommendation VI which reads :

> " The Conference recommends to States the study of the question whether it would not be possible :
> " (1) To introduce into their law the principle of the equality of the sexes in matters of nationality, taking particularly into consideration the interests of the children, and,
> " (2) Especially to decide that, in principle, the nationality of the wife shall henceforth not be affected without her consent either by the mere fact of marriage or by any change in the nationality of the husband."

Another indication of this tendency is the declaration of policy made by the delegate from the United Kingdom in the 1931 Assembly of the League as follows :

> " The United Kingdom Government consider that it is right that all disabilities in matters of nationality should be removed, and that in so far as nationality is concerned, a married woman should be in the same position as a man—married or unmarried—or any single woman."

Then, too, the fact that the States present at the Pan-American Conference at Montevideo in 1933, including South-American Republics and the United States of America, signed two Conventions dealing with nationality, one of which is based on the principle of the independent nationality of the married woman and the other on the principle of equality between the sexes, is an indication of the support there is for the international acceptance of the principle of the independent nationality of the married woman on the basis of equality between the sexes.

New Convention needed.

In order to promote the universal adoption, nationally and internationally, of both these essential principles in regard to nationality, the Alliance, in accordance with the resolution adopted at its twelfth congress, held in Istanbul in April 1935, asks for the adoption of an international convention to provide in matters of nationality :

> " That husband and wife should each enjoy independently their own personal nationality ; that a woman whether married or unmarried should have the same right as a man to retain or to change her nationality, and that, in every respect, there should be equality of the sexes and such as to include the following :
> " I. Retention of Nationality.
> " 1. A woman shall not lose her nationality by reason
> " (a) That she married a foreigner, or,
> " (b) That, during her marriage, her husband loses his nationality by naturalisation in another country or otherwise.
> " 2. Where, before the coming into force of legislation based on this Convention, a woman has lost her nationality by reason of the fact that she married a foreigner or that her husband had lost his nationality by naturalisation or otherwise, she shall, on her own application, reacquire her nationality.
> " II. Acquisition of Nationality.
> " 1. A foreign woman shall not, by reason of marriage, acquire the nationality of her husband.
> " 2. Naturalisation of the husband during marriage shall not involve naturalisation of the wife.
> " 3. A married woman shall be naturalised under the same conditions as a man.
> " 4. Special facilities shall be given for one spouse to acquire the nationality of the other.
> " 5. Where, before the coming into force of legislation based on this Convention, a woman by marriage or by the naturalisation of her husband acquires his nationality, she shall retain it unless she makes a formal declaration of alienage.
> " III. With respect to derivation of nationality from a parent, the nationality of one parent shall be given no preference over that of the other."

STATUS OF WOMEN.

Other international women's organisations with more specialised programmes will doubtless be submitting memoranda to the League on specific points. The main object of the Alliance is the attainment of " a real equality of liberties, status and opportunities between men and women " (Article II of its Constitution). We have therefore dealt mainly with the question of equal political rights for men and women, as underlying all other forms of equality, with only a brief reference to other questions.

Political Rights.

Until recently, the trend of political evolution was towards a system of government based on direct representation of the people through delegates elected to some form of Parliament. It would be true to say that in every country which had adopted this principle, the consequence of its application to men was that women demanded the same right of representation. That demand was an inevitable and logical consequence because representative government rests upon a democratic basis, and it cannot be denied that women form half of the human race and therefore of the people of any country. As far, therefore, as the arguments for democratic government are concerned, it cannot be contested that it is essential for the reality of the system that women should have the same rights as men.

In recent years, the representative form of government has been challenged by other systems, corporative, collective or authoritarian. But whatever system is considered or adopted, whether it be one of these conceptions or the representative form of government, it will not fulfil itself if women, who are otherwise qualified under the system itself, are excluded from participation on the grounds of sex alone.

Other Electoral Rights.

There are other less important electoral rights (for various forms of local government) where the same principle applies. If they are less vital in theory, in practice they are often no less important for women than direct participation in the central government. But we do not propose to deal with this question in detail, because the lesser right would surely be included in the larger, and the principle of equal status once adopted, would inevitably apply in such cases.

Present Position.

We attach to this Memorandum two documents prepared by Alliance members, which illustrate our thesis :

(a) A summary in tabular form, showing the countries where women enjoy suffrage rights, in varying degrees of completeness, and those where such rights exist for the male citizen but are not extended to women ;

(b) A pamphlet embodying a study of women's rights in the existing Constitutions of modern States, with brief excerpts from those Constitutions. [1]

This latter pamphlet shows that in the Constitutions dealt with in thirty-two States of Europe, five in Africa, four in North America, twenty in Central and South America, and twelve in Asia, there are seven in Europe, two in Africa, one in North America, thirteen in Central and South America and eight in Asia which make no direct reference to women's rights. Moreover, it would not be correct to deduce by a simple process of subtraction that the remaining States in these continents give equal rights to men and women. On the contrary in some States, the rights rest only on laws which are subject to repeal, or are limited by special qualifications as to age, education, good conduct, etc., which are not demanded from male citizens. In others of the States, the clauses of the constitution establishing equality between the sexes are no longer observed. It will be seen therefore that there is a wide field in which women have still to gain political equality.

Eligibility to Public Offices.

The right to the franchise is closely bound up with the right to stand for election, and in the above remarks we intend to make no distinction between what is known as the active and passive franchise—i.e., the right to vote and the right to stand for election. It is against the interests of the community that the choice of individuals best qualified to represent different interests and to take a direct and active share in the government of the country should be limited on the grounds of sex alone.

But apart from membership, whether by election or by nomination, of the governing bodies of the State and of the community, there are other functions of equal importance which are filled by nomination or by public examination, as, for instance, posts in the civil and diplomatic services, seats on special commissions, delegation to international meetings, etc. The full and active participation of women in the government of their country fails of attainment so long as they are excluded, by statute or by custom, from such posts or from the necessary preparation for such posts.

Value of Women's Participation in Public Life.

We cannot doubt that the real inclusion of women in important posts of administration would be to the good of humanity, always provided that they had first been given full opportuntiy of preparation for such posts. The removal of an injustice is in itself a good to the State. Moreover, the exclusion of women must often mean the exclusion of a highly gifted and competent individual ; it means the exclusion of the direct experience of maternity, with its consequent concern with youth. Much is said about the importance to a nation of its children, but too much weight is laid on the function of the woman in bearing children.

[1] This document has been filed in the archives of the Secretariat.

It is essential to utilise her experience in planning for the child's life, which enables her to see how the laws of the State may best be adjusted to meet the needs of the new generation. Study of social legislation adopted by countries where women vote and sit in Parliament will afford ample proof of the value of this experience.

It is a commonplace that the woman who takes an enlightened interest in public affairs is a factor for peace, but she can only be an important factor when she exercises a direct influence.

Lastly, the practical knowledge of women in the economics of daily life cannot be disregarded, since economic questions vitally affect national and international well-being. Women as a sex cannot be consulted as a specialised trade, industrial or professional organisation is consulted. The sum of their experience can only be available through their normal and natural status as citizens on identical terms with their fellow-men.

Inequalities in Other Spheres.

We would very briefly point out that most legal systems discriminate against women in regard to their position in the family, in regard to their earnings and property and in regard to their nationality. On the latter point, the League of Nations possesses a mass of documentation in support of this statement.

In the domain of morals, inequality is universal. There exists to some extent in every country a class of women, the prostitute, who is subject to special laws which make her more or less of an outcast. We appreciate very highly the action taken by the last Assembly in adopting the resolutions presented by the Advisory Committee on Traffic in Women and Children pointing out the injustice and uselessness of the system of regulation of prostitution. That system or other special legislation directed solely against the immorality of women, which cannot exist without the corresponding immorality of men, still, alas, continues.

In the economic sphere, equality is still further to seek. We constantly see attacks made on the fundamental right of every woman of freedom to earn a livelihood by her own labour. All other workers are helped, not hindered, by their Governments ; women alone are restricted and hampered, and refused free access to fields of labour, not on the grounds of incapacity, but on those of sex alone. We are aware that consideration of these questions in the international sphere comes within the scope of the International Labour Office ; but in national legislation there is no hard and fast line to be drawn, and Governments, when considering the question of equal status between men and women, cannot ignore this vital question.

In all these matters, for the reasons stated in our introductory paragraphs, we forbear to give details, but ardently desire that they be taken into careful consideration in the light of the full information which we count upon our fellow societies to provide. Every disability tends to make harder for women their share in both home and public life, and those who call them the weaker sex are most ready to add to their disadvantages and handicaps. In a complex civilisation, it is vital that a woman as mother, wife or worker should be allowed to develop freely her talents and capacities and to exercise her full responsibility.

Conclusion.

On the grounds thus presented, we respectfully beg the League of Nations to give this question of the status of women the attention which it deserves. We believe that the increasing closeness of international relations, the growing exchange of populations, has made this question ripe for more than national consideration. It is in this belief that the Congress recently held by the Alliance at Istanbul, at which representatives from thirty-one countries were present, adopted the following resolution :

> " The Alliance, considering that the equality of the sexes in all departments of life is the aim towards which all women's efforts should be directed, decides to support by all the means in its power the principle embodied in Article I of the Treaty signed at Montevideo in December 1933, the text of which is as follows :
> > " ' The contracting States agree that, upon the ratification of this Treaty, men and women shall have equal rights throughout the territory subject to their respective jurisdictions.' "

We believe that for the League of Nations to draw up an International Convention which, without in any way infringing on national sovereignty, should ask the contracting States to agree that the participation of their citizens in the affairs of the State shall not depend on sex, would be truly in the interests of international life. It is surely an essential basis for all international co-operation between States that Governments should speak in the name of their entire peoples, and no Government which refuses to count all its adult inhabitants as citizens can so speak with any degree of reality.

We are aware that the view has been expressed that the status of women is a purely national question which cannot be dealt with internationally without curtailing the sovereign rights of the States. We cannot seee that this question differs from many others which have been dealt with by international agreements. Take notably the question of nationality, the very basic right underlying all other rights in the State, since it determines to whom any national rights shall belong. And yet this question has formed the subject of many international agreements.

No international agreement can properly be said to infringe national sovereignty if it merely asks of the States ratifying it that they shall at their discretion accept certain lines of common agreement to be incorporated in their national law.

The true view is, therefore, that each ratifying nation accepts as its own a common standard, recognised as necessary in view of the close interdependence of modern States.

President.

WORLD'S YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

STATUS OF WOMEN.

Concern of the World's Y.W.C.A. for the Improvement of the Status of Women.

The World's Young Women's Christian Association has always been vitally concerned with questions relating to the responsibilities and the contribution of women in every walk of life and to the improvement of their whole status. It therefore welcomes the opportunity provided by the Council of the League of Nations of stating its views on the question of the whole status of women, with special reference to a convention on the subject of equality of rights as between men and women which was signed at Montevideo in December 1933, by Cuba, Ecuador, Paraguay and Uruguay.

Proposed International Convention not a Solution of the Problem.

The Association considers that the adoption of an international draft Convention, drawn in general terms on lines similar to the text of the Equality of Rights Treaty proposed at the Montevideo Conference, is not an adequate method of dealing with so complicated a problem as that of equality of status as between men and women in all departments of life. Such a method cannot take into account the claims of motherhood and of the family nor can it allow for the great variety of social and economic conditions in different countries; nevertheless the status of all the citizens of these countries must depend to a large extent on these conditions and moreover must be greatly influenced by the stage of development in each country.

Protective Laws Overridden by the Draft Convention as Proposed.

Among the members of the Association—who number nearly a million and are drawn from fifty-one countries—there are many young women in industry; it is therefore in close touch with the lives and working conditions of these women. The Association has always stood with women in industry in opposing any movement to deprive them of the protection they have secured by means of special legislation. National bodies of organised industrial women have repeatedly stated that they set a high value on the protection this legislation affords, and the arguments advanced by some non-industrial groups in favour of its abolition have at no time been accepted by the qualified representatives of the women workers concerned. [1] It has been ascertained from experts in international law that an international draft Convention introducing equality as between men and women in general terms, such as Article I of the text of the Equal Rights Treaty proposed to the Montevideo Conference, would override the existing International Labour Conventions applying to women and so deprive women in industry of their protection. This reason alone would make it impossible for the Association to support a draft Convention covering the whole status of women.

The Right of Women to Work.

At the same time, the Association vigorously opposes the growing tendency to restrain women from entering employment hitherto deemed suitable for them and to prohibit their continuing in employment in which they have already proved their competence.

In particular, it desires to record its concern in regard to restrictive legislative measures passed and applied within the last two years (in seven European countries and one Australian State) limiting the careers to which women have access, excluding women from admission to posts for which their training had fitted them or compelling them to resign posts which they were actually occupying when the legislation in question was introduced. These measures exclude married intellectual workers (such as teachers, public servants and medical women) from employment or severely curtail their opportunities of employment; some countries restrict their salaries. In one leading industrial country, [1] discrimination may be legally exercised against all women in industry ; in another, [2] the Government has asked that wherever possible women shall be replaced by men. In a number of other countries, including the United States of America, where special legislation has not yet been introduced to restrict the right of women to work, there is a noticeable tendency to resort to discrimination ; this is being directed against all women in some cases ; in others, against married women only. The Association views the adoption of this policy with great and increasing anxiety, and, since the principle of equality of treatment as between men and women is to be examined, it would urge that a tendency so gravely endangering the position of women should not escape attention.

A True Equality of Opportunity.

The World's Y.W.C.A. holds that women have a special contribution to make to the solution of the problems of to-day, recognising that, on occasion, this may call for joint action by women on some point which particularly concerns them. The Association strongly supports the principle that in political and civil life a true equality of opportunity should be open to men and women, and works for the realisation of this principle through educational programmes. But the Association firmly believes that while it is to the general interest that the field of women's activities should be enlarged, it is by working in close co-operation that men and women alike can best serve the common good.

Need of an Enquiry into the Status of Women in Different Countries.

The Association is of opinion that the only logical method of approach to so large a question would be to explore the ground nationally, so as to determine more fully than has yet been done incontrovertible facts, both in law and practice, in regard to the status of women in each country. It must be remembered that " equality before the law ", or even suffrage, does not necessarily imply equal opportunities for training, or for entry into occupations, professions or civil services. It must therefore be ascertained what special difficulties need to be overcome in order to effect a real improvement in the status of women. The character and degree of these difficulties are bound to differ widely from one country to another, but, whether they are social, civil, political or economic, it would seem that definite national action might best be stimulated by preliminary work undertaken within the country.

The Association suggests that Governments should undertake to enquire into the actual status and position of women in their countries and that this enquiry should be placed under the authority of an International Commission.

Such work would facilitate the preparation of a comparative study on the status of women, and it is the view of the Association that if the results of such a study were brought together they would provide a basis for eventual international action in the matter of the status of women in the various departments of their present or future activities. Recommendations on specific points could then be made with much greater confidence.

When the proposal for a draft international Convention was taking shape, the Association at once put forward this view and has maintained it throughout the discussions of the women's organisations.

Conclusion.

The World's Y.W.C.A. desires to record its satisfaction that this question has been brought forward. The Association once more impresses upon the Assembly the urgent need for the improvement of the status of women and reiterates its conviction that such improvement can best be achieved by specific international agreements based upon careful comparative study.

When such a study is undertaken, the Association will be ready to co-operate in any possible way.

OPINION OF THE STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE OF INDUSTRIAL WOMEN'S ORGANISATIONS (UNITED KINGDOM).

(Pamphlet published in October 1927 by the Labour Party.)

Women and Night-Work.

The experience in munition factories during the war brought once more into evidence the half-forgotten facts of unregulated nightwork—deterioration in health caused by the difficulty of securing sufficient rest by day ; disturbance of home life with its injurious effects upon the children, and diminished value of work done (Report on Women's Employment by the Health of Munition Workers Committee).

If women could be relieved of domestic duties, it may be that their resistance to industrial fatigue would approximate more nearly to that of men, but legislation has to deal with things as they are.

Women and Lead-Poisoning.

The restrictions, for example, of women employed in certain painting processes where lead is used are due, not to fear of the women, but to the definite medical belief that women are more subject to lead-poisoning than men.

The greater susceptibility of women to lead-poisoning has been the subject of very careful examination in the Potteries. The evidence of Dr. T. M. Legge, Medical Inspector of Factories, given before the Departmental Committee in 1908 was conclusively borne out by the figures of the greater incidence of lead-poisoning amongst women. His opinion is the opinion of the organised workers in the trade represented by the National Society of Pottery Workers, of whom the majority are women.

Effects of Special Regulations.

In our opinion, the position of women in the industrial world during the last hundred years has been strengthened by every regulation for their protection which has been adopted.

The worker who cannot be exploited at the employers' will because the law does not permit it, gains a stronger and not a weaker position in the industrial world. Legislation has had to step in to give women a chance of achieving a more equal footing with men. Without such protection, it is not equality that the man achieves but far greater inequality.

Annex 2.

EXTRACT FROM THE REPORT PRESENTED BY THE DELEGATES OF THE BRITISH LABOUR PARTY TO THE WOMEN'S COMMITTEE OF THE LABOUR AND SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL AT ITS MEETING ON JANUARY 11TH AND 12TH, 1930.

Working women's demands for equality are tempered with a knowledge of the facts of industry, and while now and again they may agree in some demand for equality they cannot too strongly condemn the reactionary and disastrous theory that all protective legislation should be swept away unless men and women can be included in it on the same terms.

The Office of the Standing Joint Committee of Industrial Women's Organisations of Great Britain stated, on May 31st, 1935, that, in regard to protective legislation, their " opinion is quite unchanged ".

Annex 3.

OPINION OF THE NATIONAL WOMEN'S TRADE UNION LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

This organisation has a direct and affiliated membership of over a million persons. It is a federation of trade unions with women members, and with a membership of persons who endorse its principles and accept its platform. Many national and international unions and state federations of labour are linked to the League by affiliation and help to further its aims, and by financial assistance, to accomplish its purpose. It is endorsed by the American Federation of Labour. The fundamental principle upon which the National Women's Trade Union League of America bases its work is the organisation of women wage-workers into trade unions. Throughout the thirty-one years of its existence, it has been the spokesman of the women wage-earners in the United States and the interpreter of their problems, which have grown in complexity with mass production, modern speed, mechanisation and the depression, and which should not be further complicated by the equal rights issue.

WHY THE NATIONAL WOMEN'S TRADE UNION LEAGUE OF AMERICA OPPOSES BOTH A CONVENTION ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN BY THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS AND THE EQUAL RIGHTS TREATY.

The National Women's Trade Union League of America which has always opposed in its own country the very debatable issue of " equal rights between women and men " through a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution of the United States, wishes to file with the League of Nations this special protest against an international movement of this sort, considering such procedure even more complicated and more undesirable than national action on this subject.

International Blanket Action on Equal Rights for Women is full of Pitfalls.

Such a blanket attempt to give women a status equal to that of men would be fraught with difficulties and conducive to confusion since conditions and needs of women vary greatly from country to country. Such an effort to cover at one fell stroke conditions in various and varied fields, aiming as it does to give women equality in all rights under the law—in the economic field, in labour legislation, in political rights, in educational opportunities, in civil rights, in nationality rights—seems impracticable and detrimental to the real interests of women. The pitfalls of any such general programme are not all easily perceptible before it is put into effect. Where legal injustices obviously exist for women as compared with men, a much safer remedial course would be to conduct special campaigns or drives to adjust specific injustices or inequalities.

Equal Rights Movement aims to abolish Special Labour Laws for Women.

One avowed purpose of this international movement is to abolish special labour legislation for women enacted in various countries over a long period of years, because of definite need of such laws. The National Women's Trade Union League of America is thoroughly familiar with this field, has made a special study of the disastrous effects that would result from the achievement of such purpose, and is therefore deeply concerned about this whole matter.

Status of Women Convention would lead to Abolition of Special Conventions for Women of the International Labour Organisation.

If the League of Nations were to adopt the proposed Convention on the status of women it would apparently lead to the abolition of the following Conventions adopted by the International Labour Conference in its effort to build up international standards along such lines :

1. The Child-birth Convention adopted in 1919 in an effort to establish international standards to safeguard women at the most crucial time of their lives—the maternity period—in the interests, not only of women, but also of the race. This type of legislation obviously can apply only to women, but the whole issue is a broader one than that of women's rights. Even from the viewpoint of the woman as an individual worker, this Convention tends, not only to protect her health and that of her children but also to guarantee her a job and income during the maternity period instead of permitting her to be deprived of such by the actions of individual employers.

2. The Night-work Convention adopted in 1919 to safeguard women against night employment, which authorities definitely agree is an abnormal activity with harmful physiological, psychological and social effects for all workers, but particularly detrimental to women, so many of whom are home makers and mothers and who tend to perform household and family duties by day instead of getting as much rest as men night-workers do. (This Convention, as revised in 1934, exempts women holding responsible positions of management who are not ordinarily engaged in manual work.)

3. The clause which is contained in the White-lead Convention (regulating the use of white lead by all persons and adopted in 1921) and which prohibits the employment of women at industrial painting involving the use of white lead. It is particularly imperative to protect women against lead poisoning because of the detrimental effects of this disease on women's reproduction functions.

Equal Rights Ttreaty would abolish National Labour Laws for Women.

Furthermore, one purpose of the Equal Rights Treaty, upon which the proposed Convention on the status of women would be founded, is to try to bring about the abolition of special labour legislation for women in every country which might ratify this Treaty. Therefore, the National Women's Trade Union League of America fears that, if the League of Nations were to adopt the above-mentioned Convention, this would stimulate an interest in the Equal Rights Treaty on the part of individual countries and encourage them to ratify the Treaty.

The Situation in the United States of America would be particularly serious.

Ratification of the Treaty by the United States, for example, would be particularly serious. It is feared that such a step would not only prevent the enactment of any special labour laws for women in the future, but would almost inevitably lead to the abolition of all such laws including the hour and minimum wage legislation for women in industry now on the statute books of various States. Such a result would mean that women in industry in the United States would not be safeguarded by any permanent legal standards—either State or national or international—on such important matters as working hours and minimum wage. Since, according to the Constitution, the power to enact labour legislation rests almost entirely with the States, permanent national laws along these lines for both sexes or ratification of the Conventions of the International Labour Organisation which apply to both men and women are difficult to attain. (The N.R.A. hour and wage provisions covering both sexes in the United States were temporary.)

Moreover, though the proponents of special labour laws agree that, wherever feasible, these should apply to both sexes, it is a well-known fact that, in the United States, general hour and wage standards for men have been considered extremely difficult to establish through legislation in view of the constitutional amendment prohibiting restriction of freedom of contract. Such laws for women have been easier to enact because, in some cases, when tried in the courts as to constitutionality they have been upheld on the basis of the right of the police power of the State to safeguard the health and morals of women workers, in view of the fact that they are different from men, in being the mothers of the race and also the greater victims of excessive exploitation by unscrupulous employers.

Abolition at one fell stroke of the special labour legislation for women in the various States, that has been built up during a century, would work great hardship to women in industry and to their families.

Equal Rights Proponents have Misunderstanding as to Needs of Industrial versus Professional Women.

The proponents of equal-rights legislation have a misunderstanding as to the types of women covered by the laws, and as to the special needs of industrial women. In the United States, special labour legislation applies to industrial women who have declared themselves in favour of it. These laws do not cover women in the professions and in supervisory and executive business positions, yet the sponsors of the Equal Rights Treaty belong to these ranks. On the other hand, important organisations of business and professional women are definitely opposed to the Treaty and in favour of special labour laws.

There are striking differences in the needs and environments of the women in industry on the one hand and the women in business and the professions on the other. The problems of the former are the collective problems of a great mass of women doing similar or identical work, largely routine with practically no opportunity for a career, and no outlook for anything but a monotonous job, and too often a prey to exploitation unless safeguarded. The business or professional woman has an individualised job in most instances, which naturally develops in her an individualistic viewpoint ; and her education and acquired experience furnish her with valuable equipment with which to forge ahead and reach a desired goal. She should not try to impose her individualism upon the woman in industry, thereby causing her serious hardships. She should not combat special labour legislation for women in industry, but she can aim rather to have women of her own type specifically exempted from these laws if she wishes.

The women in industry and their allies in favour of the laws are willing to let the business and professional women be the judges of their own needs, and, in return, ask that industrial women be allowed to speak for themselves, without interference from women who oppose the laws though not affected by them.

Equal Rights Proponents have Misunderstanding as to Industrial Conditions.

The proponents of the equal-rights legislation are opposed to special labour laws due to misunderstandings about industrial conditions. They object on the basis that these interfere with women's freedom of contract. Though these laws may limit the workers' freedom of contract they limit the employer's as well, his freedom to exploit women, to work them for overlong hours, at a mere pittance. Moreover, a worker dependent upon earnings has no real freedom of contract beyond the purchasing power of these earnings. Wage-workers must have jobs to live, and their freedom of choice of jobs is determined by the amount of money they possess to buy the wherewithal for living. Freedom of contract under such circumstances does not exist. In fact, workers think so little of this freedom of contract that they voluntarily surrender it and join trade unions.

Equal Rights Proponents have Misunderstanding as to Effects of Special Labour Laws for Women.

The proponents of equal-rights legislation object to the special labour laws on the basis that they cause discrimination against women. Experience and investigation do not substantiate this opinion. A report of the Women's Bureau of the United States Department of Labour on a detailed investigation of the subject conducted several years ago shows that women are necessary to industry, and when the laws are properly and carefully written, women are not barred or dismissed from industrial work because of hour and wage legislation, except perhaps in very rare instances. Although women may be barred from some jobs because of night-work prohibition by law, the social and health benefits of such legislation seem to make it advisable.

The proponents of the equal-rights legislation fail to realise what great benefits women in industry have derived from special labour laws. Wage-earning women are generally less able than men to combat injustices and build up employment standards for themselves, because women are less extensively organised, are assigned more often to unskilled jobs, have in many cases the additional time-consuming burden of home and family duties to perform, and, in general, have a weaker economic status. Women have therefore greater need of legislation to safeguard their interests.

Equality of Rights is an Indefinite Term.

The proponents of equal rights do not realise the uncertainty involved in the term equality between men and women in the matter of labour legislation. This term is really meaningless, there is so much inequality among different groups of wage-earning men in the labour world that there are no definite standards for men on which to base the equality of women with men in the field of industry.

Equal Rights Proponents stress Legal Rights in preference to Human Rights.

Proponents of the equal-rights legislation make the mistake of stressing legal rights in preference to human rights. Experience in the United States has proved that special labour legislation has been a great benefit, not only to women as workers and as human beings but also to their families and to the communities. Legal standards for women workers mean, not only better standards and conditions of employment for women, but often for men also, who in many instances have profited indirectly by requirements to improve standards for women. The legal standards for women's employment make for better standards of living for women and their families.

Legal Equality prevents Industrial Equality.

Proponents of legal equality between men and women in clinging to an abstract principle and refusing to face facts fail to perceive the pitfall—that legal equality does not mean industrial equality. Legal equality of women with men does not achieve, but in reality prevents, industrial equality. Because women in industry have, in view of reasons given above, a weaker economic status than have men, who have gained certain definite standards through organisation, special labour laws establishing for women better employment standards serve to bridge the differences between them and men and to prevent exploitation of women.

Laws cannot prevent all Discrimination against Women.

The proponents of the equal rights fail to realise that all discrimination against women cannot be abolished by law. Neither treaty nor a status of women convention could guarantee to put women on an equal basis with men in the field of employment, since there are many discriminations due, not to law, but to prejudice. Though all legislation relating to labour and employment were the same for the two sexes, this would not prevent employers from employing men instead of women for various jobs. Nor could such legislation compel the public, when seeking professional service of various types, to engage women to the same degree as men.

WOMEN'S CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE ON NATIONALITY CREATED BY THE COUNCIL OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS. [1]

I. STATEMENT.

Believing that the pronouncements of the League of Nations and the enactment of world conventions may have far-reaching consequences for women—for greater freedom or greater subjection—various Women's International Organisations have been instrumental in bringing to the attention of the delegates to the League of Nations the Equal Nationality Treaty and the Equal Rights Treaty. These have been placed on the Agenda of the sixteenth Assembly.

The International Organisations of Women forming this Committee ask the Assembly to give its approval to the Equal Nationality Treaty that was signed at Montevideo in December 1933, by nineteen American Republics and has since been ratified and incorporated into the law in the United States, Chile, Mexico, and Honduras, and which in its principle clause reads as follows :

> " There shall be no distinction based on sex as regards nationality, in their legislation or in their practice," and to the Equal Rights Treaty, which was signed by representatives of the Governments of Cuba, Ecuador, Paraguay and Uruguay, and in its principle clause reads as follows :

> " The contracting States agree that, upon ratification of this Treaty, men and women shall have equal rights throughout the territory subject to their respective jurisdictions."

They further ask that these Treaties be submitted to all the Members of the League that are not already signatories.

This Committee wishes to reaffirm the principles set forth in its Reports to the Assembly in September 1931, 1932, 1933 and 1934 in the matter of equality in nationality, and asks the Assembly to delete or amend those articles of the Hague Nationality Convention that are in conflict with the principle of equality embodied in the Montevideo Nationality Treaty, and to ensure that all future codification of international law undertaken under the auspices of the League shall be free from inequalities based on sex (vide our report of 1932).

It further wishes to state that it considers the question of nationality as only one phase of the whole issue of equality between men and women and that in its present report it will deal in its arguments, facts and conclusion with the larger problem involved in the Montevideo Equal Rights Treaty.

1 Note by the Secretariat. — The title assumed by this Committee does not indicate that it is a technical advisory committee of the League. It consists of representatives of five of the eight organisations which, in 1931, accepted the League's invitation to set up a committee which was to consist of their representatives and was to formulate on their behalf joint proposals regarding the nationality of women for communication to the Assembly (see introductory note to the communication from the Committee reproduced in the Minutes of the First Committee of the Assembly for the year 1933, page 45). In the Assembly Minutes, the original Committee is described as the " Committee of Representatives of Women's International Organisations ".

II. ARGUMENTS FOR EQUAL RIGHTS.

The world-wide acceptance of the principle of equality embodied in the Equal Rights Treaty is demanded by eleven of the largest and most important International Women's Organisations comprising a membership of over fifty million women.

The world needs the wisdom of women in all departments of life quite as much as it needs that of men. Men and women must go forward together as human beings, as entities, above sex distinctions. Only through the co-operation of men and women as citizens and workers and their united action can world betterment be achieved.

In the past, the liberation of men from serfdom and slavery brought about great advance in civilisation. We declare that the liberation of women from their inferior position, which in some cases even amounts to slavery, will bring about equal advancement for the world.

We appreciate that, in different countries of the world, civilisation is at different stages of development, and we know the League of Nations as a body cannot legislate nationally, it can only lay down fundamental principles through its world conventions and the conventions of its organ, the International Labour Office. But these conventions of the League of Nations become guiding principles for the Member States of the League. Therefore, the need for the League to take a stand for equality is very great, at the present time, when women in many countries are being deprived of their essential human rights.

We endorse the passionate appeal of the Inter-American Commission of Women made in their report to the seventh international Conference of American States at Montevideo, December 1933, where the Equal Rights Treaty was signed by four countries :

> " The Inter-American Commission of Women bases its recommendations of a Treaty guaranteeing to women absolute legal equality with men upon the single principle of liberty. By liberty is understood the opportunity for all individuals to achieve the greatest development of their faculties. We believe that this should be the sacred objective of all politics . . . In the fundamental law of the American nations, it is recognised that, among males, no man possesses the right to rule over other men except by their explicit consent."

In National Legislation there has been a gradual tendency within the last fifty years all over the world to regard a woman as a citizen, a person capable of independent control of her own life and property, a responsible parent. There have been new laws granting women suffrage, equal educational opportunities, and there have been Sex Disqualification Removal Acts—laws giving married women equal property, guardianship and nationality rights.

There are prominent women in the professions, women bankers, women lawyers, women scientists and women artists. There are a number of women in the National Legislature of various countries, and some have become members of the Government and ambassadors. There are women governors and mayors and women magistrates and judges. The United States to-day has a woman Cabinet Member, a woman Ambassador, a woman Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and a woman Director of the Mint.

Yet in spite of this progress throughout the world, there is a rising tide everywhere of unjust discrimination against women ; discriminations in every department of life, the tendency to exclude them from public office, from the higher civil service posts, from opportunities for higher education enjoyed by men, from the labour markets by replacing women by men, in fact, a universal attempt to force women back into the home.

Henri Fuss, Chief of the Unemployment Section of the International Labour Office, points out that in statistics gathered in thirty-four countries in November 1934, in the autumn of the year about 4,000,000 women were out of employment. He says in an article in the International Labour Review, April 1935, Vol. XXXI, No. 4 :

> " In consequence of the economic depression, there has been a growing demand during the last few years for restrictions on the employment of women ; and although sometimes moral and practical reasons based on women's duty in the home are alleged, the principle aim is to make room for men in vacancies produced by the exclusion of women. Measures of this kind have in fact been taken recently in certain countries, applying, in the first place, to married women and women in public service.
> " In Germany, an Act of June 30th, 1933, provided for the dismissal of married women civil servants whose material support was permanently secured by the income of their family. It also stipulated that no woman could be permanently appointed to a Government service before the age of 35.
> " In Austria, a Decree of December 15th, 1933, provided for the dismissal of every married woman engaged as a public official or wage-earning or salaried employee in the service of the State if and when her husband, provided he also was in the service of the State, attained a salary exceeding a fixed amount. The Decree allowed one exception, however—namely, that any woman with more than three children might keep her post. This would be curious if the principal object was to enable mothers of families to fulfil their home duties, but can easily be explained by the need for earning money in large families.

" The restrictions on the employment of married women soon spread from public services to other branches of activity. The first measures adopted in this respect were directed against what are sometimes called multiple earnings—that is to say, the simultaneous employment of several persons belonging to the same household . . .

" The measures for the exclusion of women which aims at giving men preferential rights to employment have not been limited to married women, and, in certain countries, apply to all women whatever their conjugal condition . . .

" In Italy, a legislative Decree of November 28th, 1933, authorised Government departments to limit the number of women allowed to compete for posts or to exclude them altogether from competing. These measures were soon extended from public departments to private industry . . .

" A similar tendency is shown in the Yugoslav Order of March 31st, 1934, which limited the number of posts reserved for women in the postal, telegraph and telephone services. The maximum proportion of women in posts requiring a university degree was fixed at 30%, in that of posts requiring a certificate of complete secondary studies 25% and in lower posts for which four years of secondary study is required 10%.

" In the Netherlands, a circular of the Minister of the Interior, dated March 19th, 1934, recommended the local authorities, not only to observe strictly the provisions concerning dismissal on marriage, but also as far as possible to replace women by men in posts not specifically requiring female labour.

" In Luxemburg, a Grand Ducal Order of April 14th, 1934, . . . provided that a special permit must be obtained from the Director-General of Labour and Social Welfare for the engagement of female office staff, not only in public administrative departments, but also in private undertakings.

" Finally in Belgium, Father Rutten, Senator, introduced a Bill on February 13th, 1934, to limit the employment of married women in factories, workshops, workyards and offices. On April 12th, 1934, a circular of the Prime Minister stated that the Government had decided until further notice to reserve for men all available posts in public administrative departments, including shorthand-typists' posts. On top of these there came . . . the Royal Order of December 8th, 1934, which authorises the Minister of Labour and Social Welfare ' to fix a percentage for the number of married and unmarried women in each branch of industry, with a view to the possible replacement of the surplus by involuntarily unemployed men.' "

M. Henri Fuss gives many other facts which are too lengthy to quote here. But his conclusions are interesting. He says, in part :

" From the economic standpoint, women workers are still indispensable in the overwhelming majority of industries, not only because without them these industries would suffer from a shortage of labour . . . but also because the wages of every woman worker represent purchasing power . . . Contrary to a rather widespread belief, persons who work for remuneration do not deprive some one else of employment, because their own earnings give them the power to purchase goods or services that give employment to other persons. Finally, it may be recalled that many women, single, widowed or divorced, alone or with dependents, are obliged to earn their livelihood . . . According to a detailed enquiry in the Union of South Africa, out of 343 employed women who replied to a questionnaire, 34% belonged to families without a male breadwinner, 6% were the principal breadwinner of the family, 40% helped to support the family and, in addition, over 11% who lived alone nevertheless helped to support certain relatives . . . Even as things are at present it would be a step in the wrong direction to regard openings for employment as a matter of rivalry between men and women. There are already sufficient elements of discord in human society without adding to them in this way."

Thus, while the International Labour Office has stood for protection of women in certain industries, it does not endorse the policy of restricting women's work or replacing women by men.

Miss Grace Abbott, the Government representative from the United States of America at the recent International Labour Conference, June 1935, says :

" Women work for the same reasons as men . . . They must work to live . . . A very small minority of women who are engaged in gainful employment might live comfortably without working. So could a small minority of men. We do not criticise the young man of independent means who applies himself seriously and effectively to business or the professions . . . The members of this Conference also know, I think, that gainful employment of women is no new development. In the days when subsistence farming was universal, men and women both worked on the home farm . . . Men and women have from necessity and not from choice followed their work from the home to the factory. Forces over which they have no control have compelled them to, and the world has profited . . . If, in our industrial society the opportunity of work is denied them, all that is offered to women, married or unmarried, or at least to many of them, is the alternative of destitution or the pursuit of that ancient but outlawed profession for women." (Provisional Record of the International Labour Office, June 15th, 1935.)

Answering Miss Abbott's speech, the Director of the International Labour Office, Mr. Butler, said :

" I entirely agree with Miss Abbott that women's work is not only an individual necessity in most cases but that it also has the same economic value as the work of men." (Provisional Record of the International Labour Office, June 17th, 1935.)

Legal Endorsement of the Treaties.

Both Equality Treaties were endorsed by the Governing Board of the American Institute of International Law at its meeting at Havana, Cuba, October 31st, 1929. They were endorsed a second time by the Governing Board of the American Institute of International Law in Washington, October 31st, 1931. On the latter occasion, the Institute also recommended the adoption of the two Treaties by the seventh Conference of American Republics, to be held at Montevideo in November 1933.

Support by Women's Organisations.

The principle embodied in the Equal Rights Treaty has been endorsed by :

International Women's Organisations :

(1) The Inter-American Commission of Women (Montevideo meeting, December 1933) ;
(2) The International Soroptimists Clubs (Paris Congress, July 1934) ;
(3) Women's Consultative Committee on Nationality created by the Council of the League of Nations (Geneva meeting, July 1934) ;
(4) World Committee of Women against War and Fascism (Paris Congress, August 1934) ;
(5) Women's International League for Peace and Freedom (Zurich Congress, September 1934) ;

National endorsements of the Treaty continue to come in daily.

In view of the foregoing facts, and the many discriminations against women shown in the reports which follow from different countries, which are evidence of the crying need of women everywhere to be upheld in their campaign for social, political and economic justice, we ask the Assembly of the League of Nations to give its approval to the Montevideo Equal Rights Treaty and submit it to all Members of the League not already signatories.

III. THE STATUS OF WOMEN IN VARIOUS COUNTRIES. [1]

The Women's Consultative Committee has had reports from groups and organisations of women throughout the world showing discriminations against women in every field of life—political, economic and social. Space is too limited to give these reports in full ; therefore a brief digest of some of the reports has been made. Needless to say, this does not give a complete picture in any country and may not contain the latest enactments ; but it is sufficient to show the many discriminations against women and the need for the adoption of the principle of equality as between men and women.

Nor have we attempted to deal with the shameful double moral standard and the consequent inequality, unfairness and indignity to which women are subjected. This would need a seperate report. We declare, however, that laws concerning prostitution should be applied to men as well as to women. There will never be a new and better world until there is one moral standard, without distinction of sex. One of the main reasons for demanding an Equal Rights Treaty is that it would put an end to the double moral standard, and combat the White Slave Traffic.

A. Europe.

Suffrage. — There are eighteen countries where women can vote on equal terms with men : Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Danzig, England, Estonia, Finland, Iceland, Ireland, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxemburg, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Spain, Sweden, Turkey and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. In five countries, women have limited suffrage : Belgium, Greece, Hungary, Portugal, Roumania. In four countries, women cannot vote on any terms : Bulgaria, France, Monaco, Switzerland. In two countries where women had the right to vote, suffrage has practically been suppressed—i.e., Austria and Germany. In Italy, women had a limited suffrage, but here the right is no longer made use of.

France.

A digest of a report by Maria Vérone, representative of the International Council of Women says :

Nationality. — Unless she expressly declares otherwise, a Frenchwoman who marries a foreigner keeps her nationality on condition that the first home of the married couple is in France.

Married Women. — In marrying, the woman loses her civil rights. She can neither make contracts nor plead in court, nor be a guardian without the authorisation of her husband. She cannot enter into commerce or a profession without his consent. In the matter of property, the husband has the right to administer it whether held in common or separately ; even in the case of a separation or divorce, the wife cannot sell or mortgage real estate which belongs to her without marital authorisation. The parental rights belong only to the father.

Salaries of Married Women. — According to the law of 1907, the married woman who enters a profession which is distinct from that in which her husband is engaged has the right to her own earnings. She can with the money she has saved from her work buy furniture or real estate and she can sell or mortgage these without the consent of her husband. Also, this law gives her the advantage under the given circumstances of pleading in court, if necessary, without the consent of her husband.

Industry. — There are numerous restrictive laws regulating women's work ; as for instance, in the matter of night-work, except that in certain inferior work, badly paid, and which men do not wish to undertake, these restrictions are not imposed. Women can elect and be elected to professional bodies, such as an industrial board of arbitration, workers' councils and tribunals or chambers of commerce.

Professions. — Women can enter all the professions. They can be doctors, lawyers, architects, engineers and public officials. The mixed civil service competitions permitted women sometimes to be placed ahead of men. These mixed competitions have been replaced by separate competitions for each sex, and the possibility of advancement has been limited or suppressed for women.

Teachers. — Women may be teachers in all the school grades and may be members of the faculty of a university.

Germany.

The following facts are taken from many sources which are given in the appendix :

When the German Republic was established in 1919, the Constitution provided equal rights for men and women, but the period of economic depression and the Hitler regime have practically deprived women of all these rights. Hitler, addressing 35,000 women in the fall of 1934 said, according to an article in the New York Times, September 9th, 1934 :

> " The idea of political and economic equality for women is a product of decadent Jewish intellectualism and unworthy of the German women. There can be no antagonism between the sexes if each remembers the mission and function that God gave them. We have but one message for women, that is the child. The two worlds must not mix. Man's world is the nation. The woman's field is husband and child."

[1] Information from Australia, Belgium, Canada, Japan and Latvia was received too late for inclusion in this statement.

Yet there are 2 million more women in Germany than men. These women must support themselves. In an article in the American magazine Equal Rights, of October 6th, 1934, by Miriam Beard, the noted writer and author of " America through Women's Eyes " says :

" Under the Nazi regime, Aryan women suffer as well as Jewish women, peasants suffer as well as emancipated career carvers ; all girls endure discrimination, all mothers must face the loss of their children, who at almost every waking hour are snatched from them by Brown drill-masters who prepare them for war . . . Listen to Minister Goebbels : ' We Nazis have put women out of public life, nature fits women for life behind house walls and not in the open '.

" But even in those cramped quarters she is to be denied her children ; Goebbels tells her to give them cheerfully to the Nazis who would know better than she does how to steel them to ' heroic sacrifices ' on the battlefields . . . In other words, Hitler has undone in a single year the achievements of a decade of Republican Germany. He has rendered valueless the vote which Social Democracy gave women in 1919. He has made useless the legislatures to which women were just admitted. He has been squeezing women out of the thousands of government posts they had just won and he has abolished the Constitution's provision for protecting women office-holders. He is pushing them from the professions, law, medicine, teaching, social service, to which they had just won entry and from the German universities whose barriers they had just climbed. Their influence is wiped from public life where it had scarcely begun to spread."

It is stated that, in one year, unemployment was reduced from 5 to $2^1/_2$ millions. What is not stated is that in that year the number of women employed decreased from 11.5 to 6 million. The State Secretary of the Board of Finance, Reinhardt, declared in May 1934 that the figure of 6 millions of employed women must be lowered as speedily as possible to 3 million. In March 1934, there were 575,074 women on the unemployment list according to the Central Office of Labour Exchanges, yet the Board of Finance insists : " Cases of an employer taking on women in positions which might be filled by males will no longer be permitted ". In an attempt to induce women to leave employment, a marriage loan was instituted whereby on marriage a thousand or more marks were to be given to the newly married couple on condition that the woman gave up her work. But as the loan was only a loan and had to be paid back little by little, it has not proved an unmitigated blessing. In Easter 1934, 600,000 girls left elementary schools. The household year was established for their benefit whereby they were to work in homes for a year without pay. This has resulted in the complete undermining of domestic service as a wage earning occupation. The German Labour Front in June 1934 admitted that more than 25% of these girls get no holiday. In January 1934, there were as many as 242 labour camps for women. In the textile industry, replacement of the women workers by men is taking place on a big scale. The Federation of German Hosiery Manufacturers decided that by June 30th, 1934, all women engaged on hosiery were to be replaced by men. In the numerous work schemes drawn up by the assimilated unions and the authorities, only one exception to the universal dismissal of women is permitted—namely, where the requirements of industry make woman's labour indispensable.

It is this fact, that women are essential in certain industries, that has prevented a greater dismissal. It is interesting to note that in the first year of the Hitler regime in the munition factory of Wistengers more than 1,400 employees were engaged, nearly all of them women or young girls. In the chemical industry at Mainz on the Rhine at that time 1,300 employees were taken on and they were nearly all women. In Germany, as elsewhere, women are not so largely driven out of inferior jobs as out of the better paid places and positions. Women in the medium and higher official positions are liable to arbitrary dismissal. The authorties are to be guided by the principle that in the National-Socialist State women officials and employees are to be eliminated as far as possible from the public service or are to be moved to lower-paid grades. This follows on a law of May 1933 which expressly declared that women officials could be paid at a lower rate than men. They cannot hold any municipal posts except under less favourable conditions than men.

United Kingdom.

A digest of a report edited by Miss Dorothy Evans, representative of the Equal Rights International, reads as follows :

Since 1928, women have exercised the same political rights as men, except that peeresses may not sit in the House of Lords.

The professions are all open to women except the Army, Navy and Air Force, and women may not be ministers in some of the churches. They may not be members of the Stock Exchanges. But all judiciary positions are open to them and they are required to serve on juries.

State Services. — Women are required to resign on marriage. The diplomatic and certain technical posts are reserved for men. The higher civil positions, though nominally open to both sexes, tend to be filled by men.

Industrial women workers find the opportunities of earning a living curtailed by a number of laws which apply only to women and which shut them out from any trade using the three-hour shift system, from all night-work, from work under ground, from industries in the white-lead processes, from weight lifting, etc. By trade union agreements, women are excluded altogether from certain trades and processes, for instance, in the printing, clothing, tailoring, textile and building trades, where competition with men is feared.

There is a strong and growing prejudice against the increase of women in lucrative employment. It has been publicly claimed that to turn out the women workers would solve the unemployment problem. In July 1934, there were 3,524,800 insured women workers. If this great army of self-supporting women were turned out there would indeed be a critical unemployment problem and many more persons who are now assisted by the employed women would be thrown on to public assistance. As it is, the unemployment insurance funds are fed by women workers, the premium required being proportionately higher for the restricted benefits which they are entitled to draw than the premium the men pay for their greater benefits.

Inequality of pay is general, except in the medical profession. In the two professions which absorb the largest number of women, education and the civil service, the salary of the woman averages four-fifths that of a man in the same grade. This affects their pensions which are based on salary.

In agriculture, women's wages are often as low as half those of men, and even in certain industries where trades boards and joint industrial councils have been set up to protect the sweated workers, these boards have stabilised this gross differentation of pay. The result is that underpaid workers tend to oust men and the whole standard of living in an industry is lowered.

There are over 15,000,000 women in England to-day doing a hard day's work in the home. Yet these housewives are not regarded as workers but appear in the census and the law as " dependants " of some male worker. They are in truth his employees but have no rights as such, as other workers have, no regulation of hours, no provisions as to holidays, no guarantee of remuneration. There is no national insurance for the health of housewives beyond maternity benefit. [1]

Married Women. — Many discriminations in the law touch the married woman, putting her in an invidious position in the matter of her liability to income tax, legal domicile, her property rights and her power to make a contract.

If a British woman marries an alien and thereby gains his nationality, she loses her own. She is thus bereft of her citizenship rights in her own country and its protection abroad. A married woman is ineligible for naturalisation.

Hungary.

A digest of the report of Frau Meller, representative of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, says :

The right to vote for women is restricted. There are educational and other qualifications and she cannot vote before the age of 30. A woman cannot become a judge or member of a jury. She is shut out from the law faculty of the universities and academies. She cannot enter the legal profession and this prevents her from occupying the higher posts in the civil service.

A married woman automatically has her husband's citizenship and domicile. In the family life, the husband is the head of the family and his word is " decisive ". The legal effect of this is that the father can independently and according to his own discretion take measures in regard to the child's person or property—namely, concerning the child's education and training and way of life. According to the Guardianship Law, the father by a will or document can exclude the mother from the right of guardianship without giving motives. A woman, except in her quality of mother or mother by adoption, cannot be a guardian. If as a mother she is a guardian, she can handle the child's property without liability only during her widowhood and until she remarries. There is, of course, no such restriction for the father. The mother, if she is the natural and legal guardian, has no right to appoint a guardian in case of her death. She cannot exclude any one who is lawfully a legal guardian.

The wife's occupation and her liberty of choice is determined by the " decisive " word of the husband. According to the Domestic Labour Law, if the husband objects, the wife cannot go into service. If the wife goes into service in spite of her husband's objection and he claims her back the contract is broken. In all occupations, even the professions, the wife is restricted in her choice by the " decisive " word of the husband. There is no legal discrimination between men and women as to the salary of civil employees except that the " rent " of a married woman is half that of a man or unmarried woman. But the advancement of women in the civil service is barred by the exclusion of women from the legal profession.

Irish Free State.

In a digest of a report drawn up by a Conference of Women's Organisations, which was convened by the Irish Women Workers' Union, Louie Bennet, Secretary, says :

The Constitution provides that " every person, without distinction of sex . . . is a citizen of the Irish Free State and shall enjoy the privileges and be subject to the obligations of such citizenship ". In spite of the Constitution, discrimination on a purely sex basis does exist.

Nationality. — There is equality in nationality, except that the father only transmits nationality. Widows obtain concessions not applicable to men.

Jury service is not compulsory for women, only voluntary, with the result that women litigants and culprits find themselves almost always before an entire male jury.

Criminal Law. — The Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1935 is based on a double standard of morality.

Employment, Civil Service. — Women must retire on marriage. Widows are not allowed to re-enter the service. Married men with dependants receive additional allowances. There is no such provision for women with dependants. The lowest rates of pay are in the grades confined to women. Equal opportunity for promotion is not given. There is sex differentiation in wages in several departments.

Teachers. — The salaries of women teachers in primary schools are less for women than for men. The lowest wage for women is £128 and for a man £140. The maximum salary for a woman is £295 and for a man £377 per annum. All women teachers are compelled to retire on marriage.

[1] This might be said of housewives in practically all countries.

Industry. — Recent legislation gives women an inferior economic status to that of men. In the Unemployment Assistance Bill of 1933, widows and spinsters were completely omitted from benefits. After an agitation, unemployed women were included but not on a basis of equality with men. Discrimination is also shown in the rates of assistance.

Section 12 of the Employment Bill now before the Dail gives the Minister for Industry power to make at his discretion regulations prohibiting the employment of female workers in any form of industrial work or fixing the number of females who may work in a given industry. This legislation is fraught with danger, not only for women workers but also for men.

Lithuania.

The report from the National Council of Women, the Catholic Women's Organisations and the University Women says :

The State Constitution provides for equal rights for both sexes in all spheres of legislation with one exception which concerns nationality. A woman who marries a foreigner loses her nationality.

But the equality principle is not strictly observed and particularly in the matter of paid work. In May 1933, a decree was passed against " multiple earnings ". This decision resulted in the married woman being obliged to give up her work. This Act was due to two causes—the economic crisis and to secure for men some of the positions filled by women. Generally, it is very difficult for an intellectual woman to secure work. Women are not usually appointed to the higher and more responsible and better paid employments.

It is to be noted that the present position of women in Lithuania is not intolerable . . . but we are frightened by the attempts to restrict women's right to work and yet more that public opinion; supplied by the example of other countries, will support the idea that women should return to the kitchen and the nursery and so make it more difficult to fight against this opinion.

Netherlands.

In a brief report from the Netherlands, the following facts are given :

Since 1922, when the Constitution was revised, a woman has the same constitutional rights as man. She may vote for the representative bodies. She has also, on the whole, the same civic rights as long as she is not married, the one exception being that she is still excluded from certain professions. She may not be appointed as a notary or judge, nor can she officiate as an arbiter.

For a married woman the situation is totally different. She then comes under the authority of the husband. She is barred from civic rights, just as children and lunatics. Her private property and income come under her husband's management and are at his disposal, unless before marriage she has stipulated that she shall retain the right to manage her own property. The father has complete parental rights over the minor children. Although the Matrimonial Law has remained unchanged since 1838, all attempts thus far to improve it have failed.

The economic position of women was satisfactory up to the economic crisis. She was free to choose the position for which she was qualified. Now this is changed, not only for married women, who are discharged from all government posts on the day of their marriage, but also for the women who are not married. The woman has hardly any chance of appointment to public posts, however qualified she may be. Both married and unmarried women are being replaced by men. This is not only true of women in government posts and as teachers, but also for workers in private employment. Although the struggle to earn a living in the Netherlands is difficult for a man, it is infinitely worse for a woman.

Scandinavian Countries.

Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Finland have been noted for some years for their progressive legislation in regard to women. Perhaps in these countries more than anywhere else, there more nearly exists equality between the sexes. We give reports from two of these countries as illustrating the large measure of equality which women enjoy.

Denmark.

In response to a questionnaire sent out by the International Council of Women, the National Council sent answers. A digest of these answers is given below :

Political Rights. — They are equal for men and women. Women have the same legislative rights and may be elected to both houses of Parliament. They may be Government Ministers, may hold office as mayor or judge and serve as a juror.

Property Rights are the same for men and women. A woman may inherit, make contracts and bring actions before the court.

Nationality. — A Danish woman loses her nationality by marrying a foreigner, if, by the marriage, she acquires a foreign nationality and leaves the country. The father transmits his nationality to legitimate children.

Economic Status. — A woman has the same rights as a man to Government posts, with the exception of Military and Ecclesiastical positions. She receives the same pay and has the same chance for promotion. In the professions and business, the status is the same for women as for men. The position of women in banks is lower than that of men, even if in principle there is equality. Some institutions dismiss their women employees on marriage. In industry, the position is the same for both, except that women's wages are generally lower than those of men.

Agriculture. — About one-fifth of the persons employed in agriculture are women. Women are proprietors of farms of all types and sizes and run them well.

In closing their report, the Danish section said : " Denmark no doubt belongs to the countries where equality between men and women exists to a great extent ; and we should like to stress the fact that we have not many special regulations for women. In our opinion there is a connection between these two facts. However, traditional and sex prejudice still exist; the higher administrative posts are occupied by men, and we sometimes see that the formal equality is not put into practice, especially in the case of married women."

Finland.

A digest of a report sent by Mme Tilma Hainari, President of the National Council of Women in Finland, says :

There is women's suffrage on the same basis as for men. On general principles, women are qualified, according to a law enacted in April 1924, to hold public office in Finland the same as men. They may be appointed to every public office and function. They may be appointed judges and may enter the diplomatic or consular service. However, certain restrictions were made by a Government Ordinance of November 1927 at present in force. By that ordinance, certain posts, because of their special character, were reserved only for men—all posts in the Ministry of Defence, except minor office jobs. Other posts, for instance, only to be held by men are that of a prosecutor in court martial proceedings, director in prisons for men, county governor, chief of police, manager of the Customs House, inspector of education in boys' schools, locomotive-engine driver, chief factory inspector, naval officials, etc. On the other hand, certain posts are reserved only for women—chief warder in the women's prison, inspector of education in the girls' schools, inspector of domestic economy, etc. The above Law does not distinguish between married and unmarried women.

Although the law legally grants wide possibilities to women to hold Government offices, women have not thus far obtained the highest administrative offices or judiciary positions, because the law has only been in force a short time. In the field of education, women have long had equal standing with men both in official positions and in remuneration. In the Ecclesiastical law of 1869, still in force, no distinction as to sex is made, but up to the present, because of long-established custom, no woman has been ordained minister of a church.

The Labour Legislation in Finland has hitherto followed the principle that adult men and women needed equal protection against dangers which growing industrialism creates. All provisions concerning working-hours, periods of rest, extra work, night-work, etc., applied in the same way to every employee 18 years of age or over, independent of sex. Owing to Finland having ratified some international Conventions, a few special rules have been added for women. Women under 20 are not allowed to work as seamen on Atlantic traffic ships. All females are prohibited from any painting work of an industrial character involving the use of white lead. Women under 21 are not to be employed loading or unloading vessels, and there are certain regulations in regard to women about to become mothers.

As regards the status of married women, the Marriage Law of 1930 is based on equality between husband and wife. It abolished the guardianship of the husband over the wife and granted her equal property rights. The married woman can make wills, draw up contracts in financial transactions, and both plead and prosecute in court. She has also equal rights with the father as the guardian of their children. It is to be noted, however, that the father determines the nationality of the legitimate child. A Finnish woman does not lose her citizenship by marrying a foreigner unless she has moved out of the country and become the citizen of another country.

Switzerland.

From the eleventh report, prepared by the Swiss Associations of University Women in 1935, a few facts are taken and given in brief :

Women engage in public work because of economic necessity. In 1888, for 100 men in professions or trades there were 33 women ; in 1900, the proportion of women was 30; in 1914 to 1920, 34; and in 1934, it was 32. This indicates that women working in the professions or trades have not greatly increased and have not therefore replaced men workers.

Of the women working, 70% are single, or widows, or divorced. According to the census of 1929, women's work was divided up as follows : for every 100 women, 40 were engaged in agriculture, 30 in industry, 11 in hotels, 10 in commerce, 1 in transport and 3 in other professions. The statistics of 1930 show hardly 3.8% of the single women working in administrative posts or the liberal professions. Among married women, the rate was 2%. The case of both husband and wife holding an administrative position is very rare.

The economic crisis has had a twofold menace for women : she is not only a victim of unemployment, but her place is demanded by an unemployed man. This attack against women's work, however, is chiefly directed against the women who hold posts of some importance and not against women working on the farms or in industry.

In the teaching profession and the administrative posts, the economic crisis has been used to make a big attack against " multiple earnings " in the same family. This attack has been both Federal and by cantons.

In many cantons, a law has been proposed to prevent married women from teaching. In the Canton of Geneva, a law of May 1933 proposed that all women in administrative posts should give up their positions if they were married. By a law enacted December 1934 to secure reduction in expenses, men's salaries were to be cut 10%, while those of women were to be cut from 16 to 50%.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

In a digest of a report by Mme. Duchêne, the representative of the " World Union of Women against War and Fascism ", she says :

The Russian dictatorship of the proletariat declares complete social, economic and political equality between men and women. They have the same political rights, the same right to use and share the land, the same marriage rights, the same parental rights, the same rights in the matter of divorce (Soviet Code, Article 33).

Women in Industry. — In the case of employment in trades or industries, the conditions are the same for both and the same salary for the same work is given. Until recently, there were no laws especially for the protection of women in industry, but some have lately been enacted, while, at the same time, efforts are being made to increase the work available for women.

International Labour Office. — Mme. Thibert, in answer to a letter, says: "There is special protection for women in Russia . . . in difficult and dangerous trades . . . A Decree of May 9th, 1931, sets forth the conditions under which a woman may drive a tractor. This decree calls for medical examination . . . If a woman drives a tractor without springs, she is entitled to three days' rest a month. But if women's work is restricted for motives of health, hygiene or danger, there are, on the other hand, certain types of work and professions which are reserved especially for women. Two decrees: December 8th, 1930, and January 16th, 1931, listed such positions, most of them requiring high qualifications, and it was recommended that women be especially employed in these occupations.

B. Asia.

According to the Constitutions of China, Ceylon, India, and Mongolia, women have voting rights, and, in Palestine and Siam, limited voting rights.

India.

A brief digest of the report by the All-Asian Women's Association, sent by Rani L. Rajwade, organising secretary, follows:

It is agreed by all that the progress of the Indian women during the last twenty years has been incredibly swift. All kinds of outworn conventions have been set aside and every kind of social reform and advancement for the country has had enormous impetus, though this advancement is still held to be far below that of the Buddhist and Vedic eras, when women seemed to have had complete equality with men and were held in the highest honour.

Education. — The customs of child marriage and consummation immediately after puberty and the Purdah system are the causes of a low standard of physique and health among Indian women, and a concerted effort is being made to rid the country of these evils. In some parts of India, Purdah is rapidly disappearing. The average literacy (in their own mother tongue) of the Indian people is only about 10%. The rate of literacy of the Indian women is only 3%. In Madras, there is only one educated girl to six educated boys. The Government is to be criticised for not providing sufficient money for girls' education. The higher education is open to boys and girls equally, but only a small percentage of girls continue their education to the end of the college course. Co-education is gaining ground. It is general in the universities. There are now women doctors, lawyers, teachers, scientists, accountants, journalists, poets, artists, musicians, philosophers, politicians and sannyasinis.

Economic Status. — There are nine million more men than women in India, therefore there is no surplus of unmarried women seeking employment. In the teaching profession, women are paid higher than men owing to the shortage of good women teachers. In other positions, women get paid less than men for the same work and are generally debarred from the better paid work. All trades are, however, open to women. In agriculture, which is the occupation of 80% of India's population, men and women work together as comrades. The 90,000 women who used to work underground in mines are being rapidly eliminated from that work, much against their wish, as no substitute source of employment has been provided.

Property Rights. — The Moslem laws are the best concerning the rights of inheritance and the possession of property by women. The laws relating to Hindu women are out of gear, caused by the introduction and the development of modern conditions into the individual and group life of India. Things must work themselves out. In Baroda and Mysore, great reforms in the legal position of women have recently been instituted. A similar revision in the legal position of Hindu women in the British provinces is being clamoured for all over India. The six million people of Malabar are an exception to the present state of affairs. Matriarchy has held its sway there for thousands of years, and under that system women hold all the property and it descends through the female line.

Political Status. — The present-day Government has accepted the principle that women should have the same rights as men of voting and of being elected to the various legislative and local government bodies. While this position is satisfactory in theory, in practice the Government has given the franchise to only about a million women as compared with ten million men. The chief reason for this disparity is the undue emphasis laid on qualifications based on property and education. The success with which Indian women have taken on the full responsibilities and duties of citizenship has been exceptional and quite surprising. There are women members of the legislative councils and there are also members of municipal councils and district boards. One woman was Deputy Speaker of the Madras Legislative Council for three years and one woman Minister for Health in Travancore State.

Mr. S. C. Bose, in an address in Vienna, March 3rd, 1935, says: "Indian women have an advantage over European women in as much as they do not have to fight for their rights as the suffragettes had to in Europe. What slender rights men have in India to-day are shared by women . . . By participating in the freedom movement in all its aspects, women have made their position unassailable and their demands (for equality) irresistible."

Hindu Women's Disabilities. — V. V. Joishi, High Court Pleader, of Baroda, says: "The Hindu law declares that women are incapable of enjoying certain rights which men possess. The son inherits the property of his father, but the daughter does not . . . Girls have absolutely no voice in the selection of their husband and they are completely at the mercy of their parents or guardians. She is treated as a chattel, a thing to be given away or disposed of . . . If the wife refuses to live with her husband, he can keep her even by force. She cannot dissolve the marriage . . . Man can marry as many wives as he likes during the life of the first wife. But a woman cannot marry a second husband and if she does so, she is punished by the criminal law . . . The right to property and the right to inheritance are more or less denied to women. The wife may have her deceased husband's property taken from her by sons, brothers or cousins; she has only right to maintenance. She is not the full owner of property and can therefore only enjoy the income of property and must keep it intact for the heirs."

Palestine.

A report of Dr. Rosa Welt-Straus, delegate of the All-Asian Women's Conference to this Committee, reads as follows :

Personal Status: The personal status of a Palestinian woman varies with the religious community to which she belongs. In 1922, the ecclesiastical courts of the three religious faiths were granted jurisdiction and executive power in the matter of personal status, which, according to law, comprises inheritance, marriage, divorce, guardianship, testimony, wage-earning and property rights. Antiquated laws deprive women of even the most elementary liberty, according to the religious community to which she belongs. As some women under these laws were entirely deprived of the right to inherit and were thus often exposed to want and misery, the Government introduced new enactments which give Jewish and Christian women the right to appeal to the civil courts in matters of inheritance. A woman, since last year, is not forced to return to her husband against her will.

Suffrage. — General suffrage has not been introduced in Palestine. All Jewish women, however, since 1920 have the vote and the right to be elected to the Jewish National Assembly on equal terms with men.

Municipal Suffrage. — Only the women of Tel Aviv, the all-Jewish and largest city in Palestine, have been granted this right on equal terms with men. In all other cities, only men have the municipal vote.

Nationality. — There is gross discrimination against women in the matter of nationality. In the regulations under the Palestine Citizenship Order, Official Gazette, September 16th, 1934 : " Disability means the status of being a married woman or a minor, lunatic or idiot or otherwise legally incompetent ". Wife and minor children take automatically the husband's and father's citizenship and lose it automatically if his is revoked. In a later enactment, exception is made in case the wife is a Palestinian by birth.

Education. — Literacy is making rapid progress. It is still very low among the Moslem Arab women, much higher in the Christian Arab population. There the Government law schools are open to men and women of the entire population on equal terms for both sexes.

Professions. — Men and women are admitted to practise on the same terms as physicians, dentists, lawyers, architects, chemists, etc. Women teachers work on equal terms with men teachers.

Industry. — The Government introduced a number of regulations restricting women. (Industrial Employment of Women and Children Ordinance, Official Gazette, November 29th, 1927.) There is no minimum wage ordinance. Generally, women are paid less than men for the same work. The Jewish Labour Union with 80,000 men and women members stands for complete equality for men and women.

Agriculture. — The small farms are worked by families, the women usually doing a great part of the work. In the Jewish colonies, men and women work on equal terms. The Jewish National Fund has recently introduced a change in its contracts. Instead of the husband only, now both husband and wife are leaseholders. Women also may apply for a leasehold on the same terms as men. Thus it appears that some measure of equality has within the last years been introduced in Palestine.

C. South Africa.

Suffrage. — There is women's suffrage in South Africa for the white race. In Rhodesia and Kenya, men and women have equal voting rights irrespective of race.

A brief report from the Association of University Women says :

Discriminations:

(1) All civil service posts are not open to women ;
(2) Women teachers are paid on a lower scale than men and must resign on marriage ;
(3) In some universities, women are paid lower salaries than men for the same work ;
(4) Women are prevented from obtaining employment underground in mines.

D. South and Central America.

Suffrage. — In four countries, women vote on the same terms as men : Jamaica, Porto Rico, Ecuador and Uruguay. In two countries, the vote is limited : Brazil and Peru ; and in fifteen countries, they have no vote : Argentine, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay and Venezuela.

We give in brief some facts taken from a report of the Inter-American Commission of Women, prepared for the seventh international Conference of States at Montevideo, December 1933 (Doris Stevens, Chairman) :

The Right to hold Public Office. — Women cannot hold public office on the same terms as men in sixteen countries, but can do so in three countries—namely, Brazil, Ecuador and Uruguay.

Right to enter Professions. — Women may not do so in twelve countries ; the law is silent on the matter in five countries, and women may enter the professions on the same terms as men in two countries —Colombia and Cuba.

Right to engage in Business. — A married woman cannot engage in business without the consent of her husband or the court in twelve countries ; the law is silent about the matter in three countries, and in four countries—Argentine, Colombia, El Salvador and Nicaragua—she may do so without the consent of her husband or the court.

Conjugal Domicile. — A wife has no voice in determining the conjugal domicile in any of the nineteen countries while she and her husband live together.

Married Woman's Property. — A wife may not administer her own separate property on the same terms as her husband in thirteen countries ; she may do so in five countries—Colombia, Costa Rica, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama. In one country, the information is inconclusive.

Parental Rights. — The mother has not joint authority with the father over their common legitimate children in any of the nineteen countries. In the case of illegitimate children, the mother has greater responsibility in fourteen countries and there is equal responsibility in five countries—Argentine, Dominican Republic, Haiti, Honduras and Paraguay.

It will be seen from the above that the women suffer the greatest injustice with regard to their legitimate children. The Inter-American Commission report says :

> " In nineteen countries of the Americas, we find it set forth in the law that mothers do not have the joint right equally with fathers to determine the future of their common offspring. Nature's law says woman is fit to bear children ; man's law says she is not fit to direct them."

E. North America.

Suffrage. — Women can vote on the same terms as men im Canada, Newfoundland and the United States.

United States of America.

The following statement as to conditions in the United States is taken from many sources, which are given in the annex :

According to the Law in many states, the right to vote, the right to hold public office, the right to enter the professions, the right to engage in business, the right to witness public documents—all these are the same for women as for men ; there is no sex distinction.

Right to serve on Juries. — Women may not serve on juries in twenty-seven States, and they may do so in twenty-one States and the District of Columbia.

Married Women. — In most states the wife may administer her own separate property on the same terms as her husband administers his. She has with him joint control over their common legitimate children and has greater responsibility than the father over her illegitimate children. But the wife has legally no voice in any state in determining the conjugal domicile. The Federal law gives the woman complete equality in nationality with man. She may keep her nationality after marriage to an alien, and may on equal terms with the husband transmit her nationality to her children.

Economic Rights. — More than ten million women were listed as wage-earners in 1930. Of these, about a million and a half, practically as many women as men, were engaged in the professions. The rest were working as servants, as factory hands, in agriculture and as clerks and stenographers. Yet, in spite of this great advance of American women, there is to-day in the United States, as everywhere, an attempt to force women out of public positions and back into the home. In the matter of discrimination against married women, in an investigation of 6,117 cases, about a fifth reported discriminations. And of these, only a quarter had no dependants ; almost a third had the entire responsibility for others of their families ; well over half shared the responsibility with others.

Congress in 1932 succumbed to the depression crisis, and the House slipped a Marital Status Clause into the Economy Act. This Clause 213 provided that in any reduction of personnel in any branch of the service, if married persons were living together, that one or the other be dismissed from Government service. The obvious intent of this clause, though written in terms of sex equality, was the ousting of married women. Immediately 45 women, all of them highly efficient workers, whose term of service averaged fifteen years and all of them with dependants, were dismissed from the service, losing, not only their income, but also the right to reappointment and to a civil pension. Privation and financial loss followed upon these dismissals. Payment on homes which were being bought by instalments could not be kept up. Many dependants were thrown on public or private charity, and there have been serious social results. At first couples, terrified by impending financial disaster, separated in order to keep their jobs. When the Civil Service Commission ruled that this would not prevent dismissals, they resorted to divorce. Engagements were broken up. Young couples in the civil service are living together without any legal marriage.

The Government, by the Economy Act Clause 213, has set a pattern which is being followed by private employers, and by State, county and local governments, as a justification for dismissing married women. Dismissals are spreading from married women to women in general. The check girls and cigarette saleswomen protested to the New York State Department of Labour, because under a new law they were forbidden to work after 10 p.m.

In any statement about equal rights for women in the United States it must be pointed out that, while the laws of most states as stated above put women in a very good position, the laws in some States are often very far behind the times. There are more than a thousand laws in the United States discriminating against women. These laws cover more than sixty points of inequality. These discriminations touch women in every sphere of life and activity. There are, for instance, still States where the father may will away the child from the mother, where the child's earnings belong to the father alone, where the wife's earnings belong to the husband, where women teachers in school have not the same pay as men. In order that women may not be subject to the idiosyncrasies of the various States' legislatures, a Federal Equal Rights Amendment wa sintroduced into the United States Congress in January 1935, and reads as follows : " Men and women shall have equal rights throughout the United States and in every place subject to its jurisdiction. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation." This amendment is now before Congress.

There has been discussion as to whether the discriminations against women should not be eliminated one by one by specific laws in the various States, rather than by a constitutional amendment. The women point to the extreme slowness of doing it State by State. In ten years, from 1920 to 1930, one organisation secured the removal of 141 discriminatory laws in the States. A splendid achievement, but there remain still about a thousand discriminations. In Maryland, in 1920, there were thirty-four discriminatory laws against women. In fifteen years, through a devoted group of feminists, eight have been removed but twenty-six still remain. Obviously, therefore, to remove a thousand discriminations in forty-eight States, generations of women must be born, live and die without seeing the job accomplished, unless there is a Constitutional Amendment.

F. Women under Alien Rule.

A digest of a report by Miss Monica Whatley, secretary of the Six Point Group, United Kingdom, gives some facts concerning the status of native women in lands under alien rule. The United Kingdom has not created the conditions described in foreign lands under her rule, but those conditions continue to exist in spite of British rule.

British Territories (Africa).

In many parts of Africa the native woman is so completely " property " that she is not only purchased and bartered but inherited. The father has absolute right to choose the husband for the daughter. An unmarried girl whose father dies is assessed as " goods " and shared by the male heirs. No man may have a wife without paying her owner a price.

In Rhodesia, though the law does not recognise the girl's right to her own body, there is a law to protect her from coercion.

In Natal, the Native Code lays down the price that may be asked for a girl wife.

Union of South Africa. — The " ownership " of girls is upheld by the courts, but the purchase does not confer wifehood under the law. In Basutoland, a reservation over which the British Colonial Office still keeps a measure of control, a measure was passed in 1915 by which no native woman may cross the frontiers into Union territories without the sanction of her " natural guardian "—namely, her owner. If she does, she is liable to fine or imprisonment. This Act was signed by Lord Buxton, Governor-General, and Sir Cecil Rodwell, Imperial Secretary. By the Treaty of Protectorate, the Bechuana chiefs stipulated there should be no coming of age for women. In 1868, by a High Court Decree, it was declared contra honor mores to countenance polygamy. But the purchase of girls continued. It was decided that none of the purchased girls could be wives; they are therefore in the position of purchased concubines. The purchased girls have no redress and the men still have the right to own and sell their daughters. Purchased wives are not supported by their purchaser. They have to support him and have no claim on his wages if he works.

Southern Nigeria. — Here slavery still exists. Lord Lugard, Governor of Southern Nigeria, says in dealing with the freeing of slaves : " The male slaves are at liberty to assert their freedom and offer themselves as labourers for wages . . . The case of women is complicated by questions of marriage, concubinage, dowries and divorce . . . based, it may be, on the payment of the ' dowry '. A woman slave who pays her ransom finds herself not free but in the custody of the Government, who may place her in a Mission or in some other form of restraint until a husband is found for her.

Cameroons. — It is claimed that chiefs have rights of possession over all unmarried girls. Widows are assumed to have caused their husband's death and are subjected to shocking treatment subsequent to the decease of a husband.

British Territories (Asia).

China. — Hong-Kong. — The Chinese custom of keeping Mui Tsai is a system akin to slavery. Slavery was abolished in China years ago, yet every year thousands of women and girl children are openly sold. Hong-Kong was ceded to the United Kingdom in 1842 ; the census of 1921 reckoned there were some 9,000 Mui Tsai or domestic slaves upon the island. In 1923, a law was passed which provided that no more Mui Tsai were to be engaged nor any female servant under ten years old. Those having Mui Tsai must have them registered. At the same time, it is a fact that, in Hong-Kong, the law does allow a girl to be bought and sold under the subterfuge of adoption and her position as the property of her purchaser remains the same as that of the Mui Tsai without the protection of registration. If the child slave does not die of ill usage, her owner can sell her for a wife or to a house of licensed prostitution, where girls frequently suffer terrible beatings.

Cyprus. — During the last three years, Turkish girls in Cyprus have been sold at the rate of twenty a month to Arabs in Palestine in search of wives, and the traffic still continues.

If we accept the definition of slavery as drawn up by the League of Nations Slavery Convention of 1926 that " slavery is the status of a person over whom all or any of the powers attaching to the right of ownership are exercised ", we cannot deny that the status of women in many instances is only that of a slave, since the right of ownership of her own person is denied her.

French Territories (Africa).

A brief report by Maria Vérone, of the International Council, on the status of women in the French colonies, says :

The native woman is subject to the customs of the country, but certain legal provisions have been made which modify a little her very unhappy state.

Algeria. — According to a law of 1930, and a decree of 1931, certain rights have been given the Arab women of Algeria, whose position formerly was worse than that of animals. They can now demand a divorce from their husbands in the case of abandonment, insufficient support, or the disappearance of the husband, for a period of two years. They have the right to inherit, whereas formerly they were disinherited and had no property rights whatever.

West Africa. — In Gabon and the Cameroons, the woman is bought by her future husband. In many places, a rich man can buy as many wives as he likes ; they are in reality his slaves working for their master, who often ill-treats them and underfeeds them. In the Cameroons, on the death of the husband, the wife is the property of the heir. This custom, suppressed in certain places, still exists in the interior.

French Territories (Asia).

Indo-China. — The greatest evil is in connection with the children who are born of the union of natives and Europeans. The latter are usually public officials. These children are generally abandoned by the father and become wretched outcasts, rejected alike by both natives and Europeans.

IV. CONCLUSION.

Enough has been given in the foregoing report to make it quite evident that throughout the world there are unjust discriminations against women. These discriminations have not brought prosperity to the nations. It is to be noted that the countries which are held to be most civilised and progressive are those very countries where some measure of equality has been given. But even in these countries, the status of women is being lowered.

The acceptance of an International Convention establishing the worldwide recognition of complete equality of rights between the sexes is the only remedy for this situation. The slightest breach in the principle of equality means a lowering of women's legal and economic status which renders the rights already won unstable.

The attempt to secure equal rights for women, nation by nation, is not sufficient. It would require generations to bring about a world change by such a method, just as in the United States the method of winning equal rights State by State was found to be an unending task. The Equal Rights Treaty should be approved by the Assembly as a body and then presented to all the Members of the League not already signatories. Each nation could then embody the principle in its laws according to the needs of that nation. As the country developed and men acquired greater rights, women would equally enjoy these rights.

Therefore, the Consultative Committee, representing 45 million women, appeals to the delegates of the Assembly to take this new and forward-looking step of supporting the Equal Rights Treaty, which would make the Assembly of 1935 historic.

JOINT STANDING COMMITTEE OF WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL ORGANISATIONS.[1]

for securing the Appointment of Women to the International and Expert Committees of the League of Nations.

STATUS OF WOMEN.

The Joint Standing Committee of Women's International Organisations has noted that, on the agenda of the Assembly of the League of Nations, there appears the consideration of the status of women.

While the Joint Committee is not concerned to express its views on this question as a whole, it is concerned with the particular question of the equal opportunities of women and men in regard to all posts in or in connection with the League of Nations itself. That equality is guaranteed in the Covenant of the League and its application in practice is the sole matter with which our Joint Committee is concerned.

We are aware that, as regards the appointment of women members to the Committees and other bodies of the League, in some cases it is solely the Governments of the States Members who make such appointments. In other cases where appointments are made by the Council of the League, we are not unaware of the difficulties caused by the comparatively small number of women who, in their respective countries, have access to positions such as would make them specially qualified for appointment to the League Committees. This aspect of the question, therefore, tends to fall under that wider consideration of the status of women which is being dealt with by other bodies.

But my Committee is seriously concerned with the position of women in the Secretariat of the League, not in individual cases, but taking that service as a whole. The study of the staff reveals the fact that, so far from there appearing to be that steady improvement in the relative position of women which might have been expected to occur from the opportunities of acquiring experience provided by time, the number of women in higher posts tends rather to decrease. We are aware that a process of rationalisation has recently been carried out, and we had hoped that this would have reacted favourably by permitting the reasonable promotion of competent and experienced women members of the staff.

We would desire respectfully to emphasise that, in the administration of the League, the ideals of justice and equality for which it stands should consciously be kept in mind alongside the need for a high standard of efficiency. Just as the matter of a certain proportion of nationals of the different States Members is borne in mind, other factors being equal, so surely a certain fair distribution of the posts between men and women would suitably be considered, without detriment to efficiency of the personnel which must, of course, be the first consideration of those responsible for a great service.

NATIONALITY AND STATUS OF WOMEN.

Immediately after the war, numerous European countries and a few outside Europe accorded to women equal suffrage and the right of election to official bodies. These changes seemed to satisfy the demand for equality between the sexes and many were of the opinion that a definitely feminist movement would no longer be necessary. Soon, however, it became evident that this political equality was not the end and final goal of the equal rights campaign, but only a first step on the road leading to complete sex equality. The fact that women had won equal rights in one sphere of public activity led to an investigation of the opportunities existing in other spheres and an examination of all male rights in order to ascertain what further steps were possible and necessary to achieve complete equality between the sexes.

Certain legal hardships, which women themselves had not realised in the days before they won their independence and entered the ranks of paid workers, now became intolerable, and the new demands were not initiated by organisations but came from the women themselves, because the practical difficulties they experienced showed them that they were not yet completely freed from their shackles. The question of the nationality of married women, for example, assumed special importance owing to the fact that, when new States were created, a great many people were placed in the position of immigrants, the result being that many women either became stateless or, after living in a country with advanced laws and customs favourable to women, found themselves under a backward regime with laws framed according to bygone ideas. It is therefore an error to consider the demands of the women's organisations as purely academic and not based on urgent practical needs.

The civil rights of women are not as yet really secure in any country. The International Co-operative Women's Guild, which carries out its activities within the framework of a great worldwide trading organisation, made an investigation a few years ago into the personal rights of women in the co-operative movements of the various countries. This showed that there are still countries where the provisions of the civil code make it difficult for married women to become members of co-operative societies because they are unable to make a contract without the consent of their husbands and cannot undertake any liabilities which might become a charge on the family income. Conditions differ so widely that almost every country has different laws, and this puts great difficulties in the way of any international agreement.

There are two classes of legislation. In many cases, it is essential that each country must frame and administer independently its own laws, but, on the other hand, certain forms of legislation can only become operative if they are approved by, and also form part of, the code of other States. This applies to the nationality of married women. Within the last few years, for instance, it happened that a country anxious to accord fuller rights to its women could not do so without the collaboration and assistance of other States. National action cannot solve this problem; an international convention forming the basis for a universal settlement is essential. It is for this reason that all the women's organisations have always pressed for an international solution, and during the last few years all the important women's organisations have been forced to give special attention to this question because it has been proved again and again that any insecurity as to nationality affecting any member of the family entails hardships, not only for the wife and children, but also for the husband. We do not wish to trace here the thorny path that the women's organisations had to travel in order to attain their objective, but we should like to explain that, after the Hague Codification Conference of 1930, the International Co-operative Women's Guild did not oppose the decisions of the Conference but supported the ratification of the Hague Convention solely because of its conviction that this did, in fact, bring relief to a number of women. In Austria, for instance, a woman gained the right to resume her own nationality if her marriage with a foreigner were dissolved through death or divorce. Moreover, the Hague decision that a woman shall not lose her own nationality unless she takes that of her husband is decidedly an improvement on existing legislation. Again, Article 10, which provides that a married couple cannot change their nationality during the course of the marriage without the consent of the wife, certainly improves the woman's position, for, if the wife's consent is to be a determining factor, the husband will be forced to consult his wife's wishes before making a decision. No one will maintain that the Convention solves fully all the problems at issue. The Conference itself adopted by twenty-seven votes to two a resolution urging the various States to examine the legal position in their country with a view to ascertaining whether it would not be possible to introduce into their laws the principle of complete equality between the sexes. In this connection, we should like to draw attention to a danger that should not be overlooked when framing national or international legislation to accord the sexes equal rights—namely, the repeal of absolutely essential laws affecting women in order to bring about complete legal equality with men.

Under the marriage laws obtaining in some European countries, for instance, a husband is responsible for his wife's debts if incurred in providing for the needs of the household, while the wife has no similar liability. In such cases, it would have to be considered whether it would be more advisable to extend the liability to both parties or frame entirely new laws applicable to both sexes and more in harmony with present social and economic conditions. A hard and fast rule as to complete equality can be specially dangerous to protective legislation affecting women as mothers. Here, where there is no equality of function, legal equality cannot exist. Even in the Soviet Union, where the principle of equality between the sexes as regards industrial provisions has been very widely introduced, there has been no attempt made to sweep away all protective legislation applicable to women as mothers and prospective mothers.

We venture to suggest that all these considerations make it imperative that the League of Nations should consider this question in all its bearings and not be content with evolving a mere formula, for we are convinced that great care and foresight will be needed to avoid a solution damaging to the interests of women and children. Unfortunately, the method at present adopted by the League—and it is the League that must conduct any further investigations into the problems at issue—seems too circumscribed to achieve the desired result. The International Co-operative Women's Guild is of the opinion that, instead of setting up a non-statutory committee of women's organisations, it would have been preferable to appoint a Committee answerable to the League which, like any other permanent League Commission, would have the task of making a complete study of the questions included in its terms of reference. This Committee should be composed of both sexes and should include lawyers and statesmen, as in the case of the Health Committee, the Child Welfare Committee and others. An advantage of such a Committee would be that all kinds of women's organisations could be represented on it, whereas, at present, large groups of women, such as those forming the Catholic, Socialist and Trade Union organisations, whose point of view differs from that of the Women's Consultative Committee, are not in a position to collaborate in its work. Success will only be possible if the interests of all the different women's groups, together with the legal and political aspects of the problem, receive full consideration and a policy formulated which will ensure a just and satisfactory solution of the whole question. At present, we feel that it is not receiving from the League the attention it deserves, although we appreciate the fact that the nationality of married women is on the agenda of the 1935 Assembly. If the Assembly would use its powers to set up a special committee composed of prominent jurists, representatives of those countries opposed to equal nationality rights and representatives of all the important women's organisations, there would appear to be a possibility of ultimately framing a Convention that would not take the form of an empty formula but would put forward concrete proposals giving a real lead to the various Governments.

The International Co-operative Women's Guild approves the action of the Consultative Committee in calling for a revision of the Hague Convention's nationality provisions. The Guild agrees that these did not go far enough, although they were undoubtedly a first step towards the solution of a very weighty problem. We should welcome the ratification of a fresh Convention recognising the principle of equality between the sexes, but we are anxious that this should not merely state a theoretical formula but should include proposals for something more definite than a recommendation that all States should seek to abolish, both in law and in practice, all discriminations between men and women as regards nationality. Such a recommendation would, we fear, be interpreted by each State according to its own views and would not lead to the adoption of a common policy by all the women's organisations. The Convention would thus be applied according to the circumstances prevailing in each country and, as at the present time there is in many countries a strong tendency to oppose the principle of equality and still further limit the rights of women, it seems probable that in such cases it would lead to a further curtailment of a married woman's independence and her right to control over her own person. Moreover, from a legal standpoint, it is possible that, even though equal nationality rights might be granted in theory, provisions as to the nationality of the children might make it so difficult for a married woman to exercise her right to decide her own nationality that this would, in fact, prove wholly illusory. The International Co-operative Women's Guild feels, therefore, that it can only endorse the proposals of the Consultative Committee if these are regarded as providing a basis and guiding principles for a complete investigation into all aspects of the problem in order to ensure that, after having won theoretical equality, women do not find themselves in practice in a still more dangerous position than they are at present.

In our opinion, such an investigation should give particular consideration to the following points :

The provisions governing the acquisition of nationality by a woman :

(1) On marriage ;

(2) During the course of the marriage ;

(3) When the marriage is dissolved by divorce or through death.

In this connection, it would be essential that the wife's consent should be asked either verbally or in writing both by the authorities of the country she is leaving and those of the country where she is about to settle. Not until a definite declaration on this point has been obtained can other allied problems be dealt with satisfactorily.

Due consideration must also be given to the interests of the children. In no question affecting the marriage laws must the interests of the children be treated as of secondary importance, for nothing has a worse effect on the physical and mental welfare of young people than for them to be the centre of parental disputes and forced to live in an atmosphere of perpetual conflicts which may give rise to all kinds of cruelties. The parents themselves will not always be influenced by considerations of what will be best in the future interests of their children; they are more likely to be swayed by the question of property rights or a love of their own homeland, even though there may be better social and educational prospects for their children in the new country, and such considerations will often outweigh the question of what is best for the children.

This matter, moreover, is closely bound up with the question of the parents' rights over their children and whether the State or the parents shall decide the nationality of the children. There are instances, for example, where sons of military age who were still minors were not allowed to change their nationality although younger members of the family were permitted to do so, with the result that the family was split in two. In how far the rights of parents are to take precedence of the claims of the State is likely to become a very important question as the State in all countries tends to concern itself more and more with the life and education of the child out of school hours.

We feel, therefore, that it is imperative to ask more from the League of Nations than the elaboration of a mere formula which, however valuable it may have proved as a means of stimulating women's interest and establishing the principle of equality, will not in itself provide a solution of one of the most difficult and complicated of those problems that demand an international solution.

As always, the International Co-operative Women's Guild declares itself ready to give all possible support to the work of the League and places itself and its members at the League's disposal in any way that may help to bring about a satisfactory solution of all the above-mentioned problems.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL WOMEN.

STATUS OF WOMEN.

The International Federation of Business and Professional Women welcomes the consideration by the 1935 Assembly of the League of Nations of the question of the " whole status of women, with special reference to a Convention on the subject of the equality of rights for both sexes which was signed at Montevideo in December 1933 by Cuba, Ecuador, Paraguay and Uruguay ", and appreciates the opportunity provided by the Council to express its views upon this question.

The Federation primarily concerned with the Economic Status of Women.

As an organisation whose membership is composed of some 100,000 women engaged in earning their living in the professional and commercial field in twenty-two countries of the world, the Federation is primarily concerned with the economic aspect of the status of women. The Federation stands for the establishment of conditions which will assure to women, and to men as well, the fullest possible opportunity for the development of whatever capacities they may possess.

The Federation has long been gravely concerned with the difficulties its members face in their work, difficulties whose fundamental cause lies in the inequalities of status still existing between men and women. Even where equality exists in law, in practice women are often severely handicapped by habit and prejudice. This is particularly apparent in times of economic depression, as evidenced by the reaction against women's right to work during the past three years,

The growing tendency to exclude women from employment is viewed by the Federation with increasing anxiety. Numbers of its own members in all countries cannot find work, whilst the younger generation of women faces an increasing limitation of opportunity both of training and of obtaining work in the future.

Protective Legislation and the Equality of Rights Convention.

While urgently desirous of an improvement in the status of women by international agreement between Governments, the Federation, as early as 1932, declared its position on the question of the adoption of an international convention drafted in similar terms to the text of the Equality of Rights Convention, Article No. 1, by pointing out that, while the Federation was "in favour of equal rights as regards the constitutional and civic rights of women, the social implications of the Equal Rights Bill were so involved and the conditions applicable to the members of the International Federation so diverse that is was felt impossible to take action on the Equal Rights Treaty as a whole".

The Federation has always stood for the maintenance of the just and recognised standards which labour has built up through the years to prevent the exploitation of working men, women and children, and would deplore any breaking down of such standards, which organised industrial women have repeatedly declared to be essential to their welfare. Where, however, the legislation establishing these standards has adversely affected the interests of business and professional women, the Federation has consistently demanded the exemption of such categories of workers.

Need for Investigation into the Whole Status of Women.

Recognising that the usefulness of any international agreement must ultimately depend upon national action, based on a knowledge of the varying social and economic conditions in each country, the Federation considers that the only reasonable method of approach to a solution of so complex a problem as equality of rights between the sexes is by way of investigation into the status of women in each country.

The Federation has already initiated a programme of research into the economic status of women in the countries where its national branches are established. This investigation is only in its elementary stage, but attached to this memorandum is a list of the most important research studies which have already been made by the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs in the United States of America and published in that country. In general, the aim of these studies has been to discover the psychological and economic factors which govern women's success in and suitability for professional and commercial life, the extent to which they have been affected by unemployment and whether or not age and sex curtail their opportunities for advancement.

Other national federations are at the moment engaged in research on similar lines.

Exclusion of Women from Employment and Increasing Limitation of their Opportunities of Training and Work.

No investigation can be made into the question of the economic status of women without recognising that, whereas formerly much of the work of production was entirely in the hands of women, who were the administrators of household industries, these industries in the modern economic order have been taken out of the home and commercialised.

"In seeking gainful employment to-day, women, like men, are actuated by economic necessity, . . . and by a desire to lift standards of living for themselves, their families and their dependants. . . . It is certain that the necessity to provide for dependants is an important factor for women as well as for men." [1] "As long as men's incomes are insufficient to cover civilised requirements or even elementary necessities, millions of girls and married women are forced to supplement the family income by seeking work. Furthermore, even where there is no economic necessity, there are large numbers of women who would still work for their own satisfaction and whose skill forms a necessary element in the scheme of production." [2]

While there is a mass of evidence to show that women's work is "an essential and not easily dispensable element in the modern economic order", [3] past experience and recent events have proved that this fact is not yet sufficiently realised. Even in normal times women are often severely handicapped in seeking training and employment by such restrictions as :

(a) Non-admittance to the study and practice of certain professions in certain countries ; [1]

(b) Denial of opportunity for promotion to higher executive or administrative positions, regardless of ability, qualifications or experience ;

(c) Refusal to appoint married women or to allow women to retain their positions after marriage ;

(d) Payment of lower salaries than those given to men for similar duties, regardless of ability, qualifications or experience.

Moreover, since the economic depression became acute, not only have these restrictions been more widely applied, as, for instance, in Canada and the United States of America, where there is an increasing tendency to discriminate against women, but women's opportunities for training and employment have been further curtailed by new legislative measures, excluding women from positions which they had already filled with ability, efficiency and even distinction.

This type of legislation has limited salaries, excluded from employment married women, such as lawyers, doctors, public servants and teachers, or has greatly restricted their opportunities of training and work, and, in one country [2], has provided that " wherever possible women shall be replaced by men ".

The Federation, whose membership includes not only the office worker, but also the scientific, technical and administrative woman, considers that, quite apart from all question of right or justice, such action is economically unsound and will prove no solution for the unemployment problem which all countries face to-day.[3] Leaving aside the fact that in many occupations the employment of women is a technical necessity, the Federation is persuaded that their exclusion from employment or from exercising their trades or professions will not only decrease their power of purchasing goods but also of purchasing services, for many women create employment for both sexes in the enterprises which have been built up and maintained by their own initiative and energy.

The Federation stands for a closer working co-operation between men and women and deplores the increasing tendency once more to make sex the criterion in the choice of workers, instead of considerations of ability, qualifications, efficiency and experience.

The Federation trusts that steps will be taken in the near future to explore the whole question of women's work and that Governments will refrain from passing further restrictive legislation until the subject has been more clearly and definitely surveyed and analysed.

Enquiry into the Whole Status of Women by an International Commission.

Recognising the need for definite improvement in the whole status of women, the Federation urges that an enquiry should be made by Governments into the present status and position of women in their countries, taking into account the legal, social, political and economic aspects of the question, and suggests that this enquiry should be placed under the authority of an International Commission appointed by the League of Nations. The aim of this enquiry should be to reveal the best methods of improving the status of women in each country, and to establish the measure of agreement on definite points now possible between Governments, taking into account existing difficulties both in law and practice. The results of such an investigation should provide an effective basis for further concerted international action.

The Federation earnestly trusts that such an enquiry will be undertaken at the earliest possible moment, and offers its co-operation wherever possible.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF UNIVERSITY WOMEN.

STATUS OF WOMEN.

The International Federation of University Women has noted with interest that the Assembly is asked by certain delegations to examine the status of women as a whole and not merely in relation to nationality. As a member of the Liaison Committee of Women's International Organisations, the Federation has subscribed to the principle of equality set forth in the Treaty signed at Montevideo. This memorandum draws attention to one or two aspects of the question which have a special interest for university women.

Basis of the International Federation of University Women.

If the status of women in the intellectual world had not changed remarkably within the last century, the International Federation of University Women could not exist. Its basis of membership is the possession of a university degree, and it is, roughly speaking, about fifty years since women have been given the freedom of the universities. That means freedom to enjoy the highest academic and professional training available. The opportunity to enter professions for which that training has fitted them has followed at various intervals of time in different countries and in different professions. But at this stage in the world's history it can confidently be stated that in the field of intellectual work women have begun to prove their use to the community. Those of exceptional ability have enjoyed liberty to develop their gifts along the most suitable lines, and a large number of very competent workers have been able to use their intelligence where it can be of most benefit to others—i.e., in the kind of work for which they are best fitted. The International Federation of University Women is mainly composed of women actively engaged in professional work in thirty-seven countries.

The Contribution of University Women to the World's Work.

It is sometimes said that women are well qualified for administrative and organising work, but less gifted for original, independent labour in the high altitudes of the academic or scientific world. It is too early as yet to compile trustworthy statistics to combat this easy generalisation, for the proportion of women able to devote their energies to pure research is still small and only the future can produce the true measurement of their developed ability. But it is permissible to point out that, even in this comparatively early period of more adequate opportunity, women have done first-class original work in many fields.

In science, for instance, we may cite, in addition to the famous name of Mme. Curie, the names of Professor Johanna Westerdyk, Professor Elisabeth Schiemann, Dr. Florence Sabin, Dr. Hariette Chick, Dr. G. Elles, as a few among many who have made valuable contributions to knowledge.

As physicians and surgeons, women have made immense progress within the limited time they have been enabled to practise. In the United Kingdom alone, there were 5,391 women on the Medical Register in 1933. Hospitals staffed entirely by women have worked excellently. The appointment of women as professors in the medical faculty of universities (e.g., Professor Laimi Leidenius, of the University of Helsinki) is itself good evidence of their standing, for it is still true that, in most countries, a woman needs to be better qualified than a man if she is to obtain an appointment open to both sexes on nominally equal terms. The recognition gained by such women as Lady Barrett and Dr. Alice Hamilton is not due to their work having been remarkable as the work of women, but simply to its unqualified merit.

Names of women distinguished for their learning and originality could be cited in many other fields—archæology, anthropology, history, philology, philosophy, jurisprudence, economics. In practical field work, the planning and supervising of important excavations, women such as Miss G. Caton Thompson, Dr. Hanna Rydh and Dr. Dorothy Garrod have been remarkably successful, thus disproving in the most simple and effective manner the hoary theory of women's inability to control and organise male labourers.

In the great profession of teaching, women have been largely occupied for a considerable time. But whereas in the past the majority of women teachers were employed to instruct young children or girls, who were not expected to be much educated, to-day large numbers of secondary schools of the " lycée " or " gymnasium " class are staffed by women. In the universities themselves, a certain number of women are employed, chiefly as " assistants ", some as lecturers or " dozents ", and a few as professors. The table given below (published by the International Federation of University Women in 1932) shows the general distribution of men and women students and teachers in the universities of a number of countries, as given by returns made in 1929-30. The percentage of women on the teaching staff is low, a fact by no means wholly accounted for by the greater " marriage mortality " among women. The percentage of women professors is very low indeed, but the fact remains that, at the time this table was drawn up, there were seventy-eight women holding professorial appointments in the countries given.

In Government civil services, university women have obtained the right, in many countries, to hold posts in the higher administrative grades, and have justified the confident expectation that they would do well. In public life, a number have been or are Members of Parliament, and in this connection we may mention Miss Eleanor Rathbone, who herself represents the Combined Universities in the United Kingdom Parliament.

University women are also found in the ranks of engineers and architects, where they are performing very good work. We may instance here the winning of the open competition for designs for the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre at Stratford-on-Avon by a woman architect, Miss Scott. As museum curators and librarians, university women hold a number of highly responsible positions. Very recently, the State of New South Wales appointed a distinguished woman to the important post of Mitchell Librarian.

The few examples cited above might be multiplied indefinitely, for women have shown themselves prompt to respond to the chances they have had of bearing their share in the more " intellectual " kinds of labour. But all we desire to do here is to give a general outline of the present position. There are many departments of intellectual work and in most of them women will be found at work.

The Reaction against Women Intellectual Workers.

The International Federation of University Women has noted, with grave concern, the recent tendency in many countries to arrest the progress of women in the sphere of intellectual work. The replies to an enquiry circulated last year among the National Associations of University Women made it clear that few countries are free from a tendency to place obstructions in the path of the professional woman. Legislative measures have been enforced by some States, and threatened by more. Municipal and other local authorities have yielded to pressure brought to bear upon them and have sought to palliate the unemployment of men by reducing the possible competition of women. Since questions of employment are matters for the International Labour Office, we do not attempt here to enter in any detail into that question or to quote examples of the restrictions from which our members have suffered. But they are numerous and very serious in their immediate effect on the status of university women as well as ominous for the future. Restrictions imposed on the entrance of women students to the university are a further effort to make doubly sure the elimination of competition in the professions. Economic stress, combined with muddled thinking, has had paralysing effects on the present position and future prospects of women intellectual workers.

The Need for a more Constructive Policy.

The incidence of unemployment is mainly felt, at present, by younger graduates and married women. To deprive young people of the hope of a useful career and to dismiss married women from posts they have proved themselves competent to fill is likely, in the long run, to be an expensive waste of good material. The International Federation of University Women is convinced that such short-sighted policy is fundamentally mistaken. To deny to women intellectual workers the right to earn their living by the practice of a profession and to drive them into household labour, without respect to their vocational abilities, is not the road towards a more civilised world, but a return to primitive conditions. What young women with a capacity for intellectual work need is the opportunity of leading an active life in the exercise of a profession, with reasonable security of the tenure of positions honourably obtained by good work.

Not only on economic grounds, but also and even more emphatically on the ground of the common human right to develop natural capacity to the utmost and to use special training in directions where it can be of the fullest service, does the International Federation of University Women urge that every effort should be made to reverse the present tendency to debar women either from obtaining the education suited to their highest capacities or from using that education, when obtained, in the service of the community.

Since the whole question of employment is closely bound up with the status of individuals, it is obvious that the legal and economic status of women in each country is a matter of the first importance to their ultimate welfare. The International Federation of University Women urges, therefore, that all possible steps shall be taken to secure to women the place they have earned in the polity of nations.

RESOLUTION PASSED BY THE COUNCIL OF THE FEDERATION AT BUDAPEST ON SEPTEMBER 4TH, 1934.

Considering the value of work accomplished by women in scholarship and scientific research, in the exercise of the liberal professions, in social work, in highly responsible administrative posts and generally in the departments of public life ;

And considering that, since paid work by women is an integral part of our modern economic organisation, to revert to forms of social organisation of a bygone age will afford no effective solution of the present economic crisis ;

And considering that unemployment is due, not to a shortage of work available, but principally to economic complications for which the remedy cannot be found in limitation of opportunities for work by individuals but rather in international co-operation through which alone a solution of the problem can be reached :

The International Federation of University Women,

Strongly deprecates the tendency increasingly evident in the majority of countries by new regulations to debar women from careers for which they are well qualified, whether on grounds of sex or marriage ;

Considers that such regulations are inimical to the family which is itself the foundation of society ;

And desires to affirm its profound conviction that it is only by permitting and encouraging women to play a full and responsible part in the intellectual life of their country that the civilisation and the prosperity of future generations may be developed on a sound basis of general understanding and enlightenment.

OPEN DOOR INTERNATIONAL FOR THE ECONOMIC EMANCIPATION OF THE WOMAN WORKER.

STATUS OF WOMEN.

This Statement deals mainly with the Rights of the Woman in her Capacity as a Worker for Pay.

While the Open Door International desires to see the women of every country of the world enjoying equality of status and equality of rights as between men and women in all relationships of life, its own special task is to secure equality of status and equality of rights as between men and women in their capacity as workers for pay. This statement, therefore, deals mainly with that aspect of the question.

The Status and Rights of the Man are taken as the Human Normal: the Status and Rights of the Woman are always Lower.

The status of an individual is the sum total of his rights and duties. In every community, it is the status of the man which is taken as the normal. [1] His rights are accepted as those pertaining to the human being. To the woman are always denied some of these human rights. In one country or another, she is denied the right to personal liberty, the right to hold property, to contract, to sue and be sued, the right to education, the right to vote and to eligibility, the right to independent personal nationality, the right to enter trades and professions or to hold public office. In one country or another, the woman is dealt with as a negotiable chattel, or sold into marriage or treated like a slave licensed for the lusts of men. In many countries, marriage itself deprives the woman of human rights. There is no country in which, in her capacity as a worker seeking to sell her labour for gain, the woman is not denied by reason of sex or marriage or childbirth some of the normal human rights enjoyed by the male worker.

The Human Rights which make up the Status of the Man in his capacity as a Worker or Earner.

Among the fundamenfal rights which make up the status of a man in his capacity as a worker or earner are :

(a) The right to enter any trade or profession or calling and the opportunity for education and apprenticeship ;

(b) The right to sell his labour for gain without requiring an authorisation from a third party ; together with

(c) The right to control his own earnings free from the control of another ;

(d) The capacity personally to enforce these rights by process of Law.

It is an accepted commonplace that the enjoyment of these rights distinguishes the status of the freeman from that of the slave, which has been defined as " the status or condition of a person over whom any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership are exercised ".

It is fundamental, too, that a man can only enjoy the right to work if he exercises it under the same conditions as other workers ; that is, if he is not subject to any restrictions (except such as apply equally to all men alike) as to the kind of work, or the conditions of work, or the materials in which he may work.

Among other rights which a man enjoys to-day in his capacity as an earner in certain communities are those which ensure to him on the same terms and at the same rate as other men minimum rates of pay and benefits or allowances under national insurance schemes for sickness, invalidity, old age and unemployment.

To give Equal Status and Equal Rights as between Men and Women must involve giving to Women the Same Rights as Men enjoy in their Capacity as Earners.

To ask for equal status and equal rights as between women and men means to ask, among other things, for the same rights for women as for men in their capacity as earners, and to ask for these rights irrespective of marriage or childbirth.

[1] It is true that in some countries both the males and the females of certain races or communities are denied such normal rights.

It means to ask that a woman shall have the right to enter any trade, profession or calling and be free to sell her labour for gain under the same conditions as a man, without requiring for this an authorisation from her husband, or the court, or any other person.

It means that she shall have personal control of her own earnings and the capacity personally to enforce their payment.

It means that regulations for the health and welfare of the worker shall apply equally to both sexes.

It means that any prohibition or regulation of employment, underground or at night, or where phosphorus or lead compounds or other dangerous materials are used, shall apply equally to both sexes.

It means that the rates of minimum wages and of benefits and allowances and contributions under national insurance schemes for unemployment, sickness, invalidity, or old age shall be the same for women as for men, and be payable on the same conditions.

It means that a woman shall not be prohibited from earning for six weeks after childbirth.

It means that employers shall not be required to make special arrangements for the woman worker, or the child-bearing or nursing woman; but that all regulations to safeguard the health of the worker shall apply equally to both sexes, and that help given in connection with the birth of a child shall not result in any restriction on the freedom and opportunities of the mother to earn.

The Enjoyment by Women in their Capacity as Earners of Equal Status and Equal Rights with Men would benefit and truly protect the Woman.

Nothing but good can result from recognising in legislation that a woman is a human being, and from giving her in her capacity as a worker for pay equality of status and of rights with the man. In this way only can the woman worker be truly protected.

It is as true of a woman as of a man that it is in her interest that she should be free to sell her labour for gain without the authorisation of her spouse or the court, and that she should control her own earnings, and have the capacity personally to enforce their payment.

It is equally true that any restriction on this right, not equally applied to men, is against the economic interest of the woman, and undermines her status as a worker.

It is equally true that special regulations applied to women and not to men—wrongly described by some as "protective" and advocated by many well-meaning philanthropists in the supposed interest of the woman—are in fact against her economic interest. They do not protect her. They facilitate her exploitation. This is true irrespective of marriage, pregnancy or childbrith.

Marriage is not a reason for depriving a woman of any human right. Marriage is not a reason for curtailing her right to earn. To refuse to employ a married woman is to deny the woman earner's right to marriage. It is, moreover, a denial of her common humanity. To restrict the married woman's right to earn is to deal a blow at her right to education, apprenticeship and professional training, and tends to perpetuate the low status of all women earners by encouraging the limitation of their employment to unskilled and consequently low-paid processes.

Neither pregnancy nor childbirth is a reason for curtailing the right of a woman to earn. It is a right she should enjoy as a human being. It is unjust and against the public interest thus to lower her earning capacity at the time of her greatest need. She, as others, should decide for herself. She alone knows her own situation and needs.

It is possible to provide help for a child about to be born or newly born without damaging the mother, but it is always wrong to penalise the mother or to restrict her rights as an earner. Burdens placed on the employer of the pregnant or nursing woman in the supposed interest of the woman and her child are automatically shifted by the employer on to the woman. If he is required to pay wages during absence arising out of childbearing, if he must allow time off to the woman for nursing her child, he takes care that he himself will not suffer. He protects himself by paying women low wages, or by ceasing to employ pregnant or even married women.

Any regulation of the hours or place or conditions or kind of work can only benefit, and therefore can only truly protect, the woman worker, if it applies to all workers, men and women alike. Applied to one sex only, it is economic tyranny. Any regulation or prohibition dealing with health and welfare, heavy or unhealthy work, dangerous materials or processes, night-work, work underground, and conditions and rates of minimum wages, unemployment, sickness, invalidity and old-age benefits, in order really to protect should apply equally to men and women.

A Wrong Interpretation of the Term "Equal Rights" would be a Danger to Women.

The text of an international convention intended to give equality as between men and women must be such that ratification by a State necessarily involves bringing its national legislation into line with equality of rights between men and women ; that is, "denouncing" [1] existing international Treaties or Conventions which are contrary to such equality, and altering existing national laws which are contrary to such equality. For example, three of the States which signed the Convention on Equality of Rights for Both Sexes adopted at Montevideo in December 1933, or requested the President of the Assembly to hold this discussion—Argentine, Cuba and Uruguay—should have to free themselves from the obligations under the Washington Conventions of 1919 to prohibit the employment of women at night and after childbirth, and to alter any legislation giving effect to these prohibitions, so that women should have the same freedom to earn as other workers, and that provision for the child at the time of its birth should not result in restriction on the freedom of the mother (see Annex, for examples of such international Conventions and national laws). It is therefore of the utmost importance that the words used in a convention intended to give equality of rights should be so clear and definite that they can only be interpreted in this sense.

The Convention on Equality of Rights for Both Sexes, adopted at Montevideo in December 1933, is incorrectly described in the letter to the President of the League of Nations Assembly, in which ten States asked for a discussion on this subject, as one "to remove all legal distinctions based on sex". The operative article of that Convention in fact, reads as follows :

> "The Contracting States agree that, upon the ratification of this Treaty, men and women shall have equal rights throughout the territory subject to their respective jurisdictions."

The term "equal rights" includes for women the economic rights advocated in this statement. But some people deny that to place a restriction on the woman worker which they wrongly describe as "protective" is to deprive her of any right. [2]

It would constitute a great danger to the economic position of the woman worker if an international convention, purporting to give equality of rights in all spheres, were to be interpreted so as to make it possible to exclude women from the economic rights advocated in this statement. This would be to deny that these economic rights are rights where women are concerned. It is therefore esssential that the text of any international convention should be clear on this point.

Action the Assembly is asked to take.

The Open Door International therefore asks that, if the Assembly adopts an international convention purporting to give equal status and equal rights as between men and women, such convention shall be so worded as to make it clear :

(a) That the equal status and equal rights proposed include for a woman, irrespective of marriage or childbirth, equal status and equality of rights with a man in her capacity as a worker for pay, so that a woman shall be free to work and protected as a worker on the same terms as a man, under legislation and regulations dealing with conditions and hours, entry, training and payment (including minimum wages and insurance), which are based on the nature of the work and not upon the sex of the worker ;

(b) That a ratifying State undertakes :

(i) To free itself from its obligations under any international convention which it may have ratified and which is inconsistent with the policy laid down in (a) above (see Annex below) ;

(ii) To repeal all national legislation and regulations inconsistent with this policy (see Annex below) ;

(iii) To enact national legislation to give effect to this policy.

[2] There are also some who say that the above quoted text of this particular Convention does not ensure equality of rights as between men and women, but only equality of rights as between one man and another, and equality of rights as between one woman and another.

ST. JOAN'S SOCIAL AND POLITICAL ALLIANCE.

NATIONALITY OF WOMEN.

St. Joan's Social and Political Alliance, which is an organisation of Catholic women working to secure the political, social and economic equality of men and women and which is represented in twenty different countries, supports the principle of complete equality in nationality rights for men and women, whether married or unmarried, and views with satisfaction the inclusion of this subject on the agenda of the sixteenth Assembly of the League of Nations.

The Alliance hopes that an international convention may be drawn up incorporating the principle of equality and clearly expressing the right of a married woman to an independent personal nationality on equal terms with men.

The Alliance strongly supports the view expressed in the International Petitions of Catholic Men and Catholic Women (document A.33.1932.V), which were presented to the thirteenth Assembly of the League, begging " that a woman, whether married or unmarried, should have the same right as a man to retain or change her nationality ".

The Alliance is also in complete accord with the detailed resolution on this subject passed by the International Alliance of Women for Suffrage and Equal Citizenship at their congress at Istanbul, which is appended.[1]

STATUS OF WOMEN.

St. Joan's Social and Political Alliance welcomes the inclusion of the subject of the status of women on the agenda of the sixteenth Assembly of the League of Nations. The Alliance attaches the greatest importance to this question, believing that the raising of the status of women throughout the world is not only a matter of justice but is one of social urgency, in that on it depends the release of the full services of women, half of humanity, for work in solving the problems and sufferings of the world.

[1] The text of this resolution will be found in the statement of the International Alliance for Suffrage and Equal Citizenship.

Knowing that other international women's organisations have prepared for submission to the League a detailed statement concerning disabilities which women suffer in various countries, St. Joan's Alliance has not duplicated such a statement.

St. Joan's Alliance stands for full equality of women (married or unmarried) with men in all matters relating to the enjoyment of civil and political rights, including in particular equal rights of exercising electoral, legislative, juridical, executive or administrative powers and the right of being elected to or sitting on or voting as members of any public body exercising any such powers, and admission to all public employment, functions and honours, or the exercise of any professions or trades, with equal opportunities of advancement and without difference of pay.

In this way, we maintain the ideal may best be realised of giving every human being, man or woman, the opportunity of carrying out their own vocation without artificial obstacle.

The Alliance believes that it is possible to raise the status of women by means of an international convention and it urges that, in any international convention designed to give equal status to women with men, it should be made quite clear that any countries ratifying it accept the principles of equality set out above.

UNION INTERNATIONALE DES LIGUES FÉMININES CATHOLIQUES.

STATUS OF WOMEN.

[Translation.]

The present memorandum is submitted by the Bureau of the Union internationale des Ligues féminines catholiques as a contribution to the work being done by the League of Nations in regard to the legal status of women.

This memorandum does not deal with the problem as a whole, but is intended only as a statement of the attitude adopted by the Union in regard to certain fundamental points.

It cannot be denied that this legislative work is at present urgently needed in many countries.

Whereas, in certain countries, women, even if adults, are deprived of personal freedom or are subjected to the shame of slavery, in other countries their legal status ensures for them, even if married, unlimited personal freedom and absolute economic independence, by which the stability of the family group may be endangered, and, finally, in other countries, the law perpetuates a situation of unjustifiable inequality as between men and women, by placing the married woman, more particularly, in a position of inferiority which is contrary to her personal dignity and by assimilating her to minors in respect of all acts of civil life, the Bureau of the Union internationale des Ligues féminines catholiques considers that laws, the object of which is to ensure for women the place due to them in the world, might with advantage be based upon the following considerations :

Woman is a person created for the attainment of a personal end which it is her right and duty to pursue freely.

Differences of a physiological and psychological character between man and woman do not imply any inferiority of either as compared with the other but lead to natural differences in aptitude for the performance of functions that are different but of equal importance.

The happiness of men and women, no less than the happiness of humanity, demands that each of them should be concerned for the common welfare and should perform those services for which they are respectively fitted by the aptitudes bestowed upon them by the Creator.

Such services cannot be real or complete unless men and women respectively make to society, in all the domains which require it, the human contribution which corresponds to the specific differencies in their natures.

In regard to the domain of the family, which is the basis of society, the welfare of society, the welfare of man and woman united in marriage, the welfare of children, (1) demand the unity, stability and indissolubility of the conjugal union, (2) call for the co-operation of both parties to the marriage in the direction of the family group and in the work of educating the children. Consequently, the law should, in particular :

(1) Guarantee to woman freedom that is consistent with her nature and her dignity, freedom to choose her state of life and, if she chooses to marry, freedom to choose or freedom to accept her husband, respect of her right to provide for her own support by work that is adequately renumerated ;

(2) Recognise in fact the principle of equality in the matter of morals as between the sexes ;

(3) Contain provisions to the effect that a woman may never be deprived of her nationality ; that, in the event of her marriage, her nationality should not be affected

unless she freely consents thereto and that prospective parties to a marriage who are of different nationality shall each be entitled to adopt the nationality of the other, since it is natural that the family should have a common nationality and that such nationality should be determined as is best for the family group ;

(4) Adopt the notion of " co-operation " rather than that of " subordination " as the principle underlying the legal provisions which govern the respective rights and duties of the parties to marriage but, nevertheless, provide for the delegation of authority to the husband and father in the event of disagreement between the parties to the marriage constituting a serious danger to the life of the family group, subject at all times to the wife's right of appeal ;

(5) So regulate the system of property that the management of the family property is effected through the co-operation of the two parties to the marriage ;

(6) Admit the equal rights of man and woman in matters of guardianship and inheritance ;

(7) Intervene, so far as is necessary and possible, in order to create conditions of economic life of such a character that the work of the father may be sufficient to provide the resources that are necessary for the family and thus contribute to the removal of that inequality in the distribution of burdens which too frequently occurs in the families of wage-earners where, in present circumstances, the mother has to discharge, not only the duties of an occupation, but also those of household work.

NATIONALITY OF WOMEN.

SECOND REPORT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL ON THE INFORMATION OBTAINED IN EXECUTION OF THE RESOLUTIONS OF THE ASSEMBLY AND THE COUNCIL.

In documents C.342.M.158, C.342(a).M.158(a), and C.342(b). M.158(b).1934.V, the Secretary-General summarised the information received from Governments down to the close of the fifteenth ordinary session of the Assembly (September 1934) in regard to the Nationality of Women.

Since that date, the Governments of South Africa, Australia, Czechoslovakia, Danzig, France, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Poland and Turkey have transmitted further information which is summarised below:

SOUTH AFRICA.

The ratification of the Hague Nationality Convention would necessitate the passing of legislation which the Union Government does not at present propose to introduce.

AUSTRALIA.

A bill is pending before Parliament to carry out the provisions of the Hague Nationality Convention which relate to the nationality of married women. The bill will probably be passed and the Convention will then be ratified.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA.

A foreign woman automatically acquires Czechoslovak nationality on marriage with a Czechoslovak national. She keeps such nationality even after a separation has been decreed or the marriage been dissolved by death of the husband or divorce. Annulation of the marriage annuls the acquired nationality.

Where Czechoslovak nationality is granted to the husband (naturalisation), the wife also takes that nationality unless she is separated or divorced.

If a woman has acquired Czechoslovak nationality by naturalisation at a time when she was separated from her husband, she loses the benefit of the nationality on resuming conjugal life with the husband.

Series of League of Nations Publications
V. LEGAL
1935.V.6.

According to a well-established rule, a married woman whose marriage has not been dissolved by separation (de corps et des biens), divorce, or death or presumed death of her husband, is incapable of acquiring Czechoslovak nationality for herself individually by the process of naturalisation.

A Czechoslovak woman automatically loses that nationality on marrying a foreigner. This result follows in all cases; it is not possible for a Czechoslovak woman to marry a foreigner and retain Czechoslovak nationality.

A Czechoslovak woman who has married a foreigner does not recover Czechoslovak nationality on the death of her husband or on separation or divorce; if the marriage is annulled, she is reinstated in Czechoslovak nationality.

DANZIG.

The Senate of the Free City considers that the nationality law of Danzig has proved satisfactory and that any change in its provisions is unnecessary.

Danzig nationality is acquired by a foreigner through marriage with a Danzig national, and also through naturalisation of the husband if naturalisation for the wife is applied for at the same time and she is able to release herself from her former nationality. Acquisition of Danzig nationality through appointment as an official extends to the wife of the official. Danzig nationality is lost by marriage to a foreigner if such marriage confers the foreign nationality on the wife, but the widow or divorced wife of a foreigner who at the time of marriage was a Danzig national can recover Danzig nationality under prescribed conditions. Acquisition by naturalisation of a foreign nationality involves loss of Danzig nationality, and the loss applies also to the wife. Release of a married woman from Danzig nationality can be made only on application by her husband and, if he is a Danzig national, must be accompanied by an application for his release from Danzig nationality; the consent of the wife is necessary.

FRANCE.

The effect of marriage upon a woman's nationality continues to be governed by Article 8 of the law of August 10th, 1927.(1)

A bill was, however, presented on March 6th, 1934, to the Chamber of Deputies for the purpose of altering various provisions of the law of August 10th, 1927, and in particular of repealing paragraph 3 of Article 8 of that law which provides that a Frenchwoman marrying a foreigner loses her French nationality if the couple after marriage establish their first domicile outside France, and the wife necessarily acquires her husband's nationality under the national law of the husband.

(1) This article provides that a Frenchwoman marrying a foreigner who establishes his domicile in France shall retain French nationality unless she expressly declares her desire to acquire her husband's nationality under the provisions of the national law of the latter.
The article further provides that a foreign woman marrying a Frenchman shall not acquire French nationality except on her express request or in the case where, under her national law, she necessarily follows the condition of her husband.

If this paragraph were repealed, the law would permit a Frenchwoman marrying a foreigner to retain her original nationality in all circumstances. The change would thus be in conformity with Recommendation No.VI of the Conference of 1930 for the Codification of International Law.

NETHERLANDS.

Bills have been submitted to Parliament to provide for ratification of the Hague Nationality Convention and Protocols and to effect the necessary modifications in Netherlands law.

The Nationality Convention was signed on behalf of the Netherlands with a reservation excluding Articles 8, 9 and 10. The proposed legislation, however, brings the law into conformity with Articles 8 and 9 by providing that a woman shall not lose Netherlands nationality on marriage with a foreigner, or on acquisition of a foreign nationality by her husband, unless and until she acquires her husband's nationality.

NEW ZEALAND.

New Zealand, like the United Kingdom and Canada (document C.342.M.158.1934.V, p.2), while maintaining the general rule that the wife of a British subject shall be deemed to be a British subject, and the wife of an alien to be an alien, has enacted legislation bringing her existing law into conformity with the provisions of the Hague Convention dealing with the nationality of married women.

The New Zealand act, however, further provides that every woman who at the time of her marriage to an alien was a British subject and who, by reason of her marriage, has acquired the nationality of her husband may, within a certain time limit, make a declaration in the prescribed form and manner that she desires to retain, while in New Zealand, the rights of a British subject, and thereupon she shall, within New Zealand, be entitled to all political and other rights, powers, and privileges, and be subject to all obligations, duties, and liabilities, to which a natural-born British subject is entitled or subject.

POLAND.

The existing law of Poland is considered to deal with the nationality of women in a manner which on the whole is satisfactory and by no means prejudicial to women. No changes are expected in the near future. In any case, changes could not be retroactive, since to alter a nationality acquired under a treaty or under Polish law would produce chaos in the legal status of the woman concerned. The general rule under treaties concluded by Poland which affect the nationality of married women is that such women take the nationality of their husbands.

An alien woman who marries a Polish subject acquires Polish nationality. She may, however, lose her Polish nationality at any moment, independently of her husband, by acquiring the nationality of a foreign country or recovering the nationality of the State to which she formerly belonged.

As regards the loss of Polish nationality consequent on acquiring foreign nationality, the rights of married women are more extensive than those of their husbands. Men must have the special permission of the Polish authorities to acquire foreign or discard Polish nationality. Such permission is not required by women.

In principle, the acquisition of Polish nationality by a husband confers that nationality on his wife, but if the wife does not desire to acquire Polish nationality together with her husband, she may make application to that effect in agreement with her husband.

On the other hand, an alien woman may apply for Polish nationality independently of her husband, in which case it is immaterial whether her husband is a foreigner or a Polish subject, and whether he resides in Poland or abroad.

If a husband loses Polish nationality, whether in consequence of acquiring foreign nationality or of accepting public office or entering military service in a foreign State without the permission of the competent Polish authority, such loss of nationality extends automatically to his wife. Even in such cases, however, there is a possibility of the woman's being exempted from loss of Polish nationality, if she lodges the necessary application. A married woman may also be exempted from losing her Polish nationality where her husband was deprived of such nationality under the provisions of the Ordinance of the Council for Defence of the Realm of August 11, 1920.

A married woman who accepts public office in a foreign country without the approval of the relevant Polish authority, loses her Polish nationality, independently of the nationality of her husband.

A Polish woman marrying a foreigner loses her Polish nationality only if, by the fact of marriage, she acquires the nationality of her husband.

The principle (Recommendation No.VI of the Codification Conference, paragraph 2) that no change should be made in a woman's nationality without her consent finds no support in the provisions of the present Polish Nationality Act. In view of the possibilities that Polish legislation, as the above instances show, already affords of exempting married women from losing or acquiring the Polish nationality of their husbands, and in view of the importance of domestic harmony, the introduction into Polish legislation of the above-mentioned principle of the non-extension of a husband's nationality to his wife, if the wife refuses to consent, is not desirable. If such a rule were introduced into Polish legislation, it would not infrequently react unfavourably on the interests (education) of the children, who would often be deprived of the necessary parental care - for instance, if the mother, being a foreigner, was for any reason (e.g., because of destitution, sickness, etc.) deported from her husband's and her children's country. In the event, again, of the husband - a Polish subject - dying, the mother, who as a foreigner might find it difficult to bring up the children who are Polish subjects, could leave her husband's and children's country unhindered, abandoning the children to their fate.

In spite of the statutory possibilities, only a few isolated cases occur of married women asking to be exempted from the acquisition or loss of Polish nationality. It follows, that, on the whole, there is little demand by married women in Poland to possess a different nationality from that of their husbands or children and no need to alter the law on the subject.

TURKEY.

The law on nationality (No.1312) provides (Article 13) that a Turkish woman shall not lose her nationality through marriage with a foreigner unless she expresses the desire to acquire her husband's nationality and is officially authorised to do so (Article 7).

The competent department considers that the above-described provisions are sufficient to safeguard women's rights in connection with nationality and that there is no occasion to contemplate any change in the Turkish law on the subject.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

NATIONALITY AND STATUS OF WOMEN

STATEMENTS PRESENTED BY INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S ORGANISATIONS

(Supplement)

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S COMMITTEE OF THE LABOUR AND SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL. [1]

EQUALITY OF RIGHTS FOR WOMEN.

The rights of women in the spheres of nationality and of civil legislation, and in the labour market, are losing ground in certain countries and in others are subject to attacks of some severity. There is reason, therefore, to welcome the initiative taken by the Consultative Committee of Women's Organisations with a view to having women's questions placed on the agenda of the League of Nations.

In all the chief women's organisations, the problem of women's rights has been and still is the object of sustained investigation. The International Women's Committee of the Labour and Socialist International, representing the ensemble of the women's movements of the countries affiliated to the Labour and Socialist International, has not failed to give attention to it, and ever since the Hague Convention (1930) has defined its position on the question of the NATIONALITY OF MARRIED WOMEN.

It is hardly necessary to dwell upon all the sometimes tragic difficulties which the different state of the law, varying, one might almost say, from one country to another, entails for women and often for their children, nor is there much need to point out the necessity of international agreement.

It is right, therefore, to acknowledge the efforts of the countries which are signatories of the Treaty of Montevideo. It is to be feared, however, that ratification of this Treaty by all States would be in reality a step detrimental to the position of women in certain countries and would prejudice those women whose emancipation is being sought. It appears to the International Women's Committee of the Labour and Socialist International that the text proposed in it (" There shall be no distinction based on sex as regards nationality, in their legislation or in their practice ") undoubtedly constitutes an excellent slogan, but that it would mean a definite disadvantage for the women citizens of countries such as Belgium, France, Luxemburg and Yugoslavia, which grant the right to choose nationality to women marrying one of their nationals, or such as the United States of America, Belgium, France, Luxemburg, Estonia and Roumania, which give the right to women marrying a foreigner.

The International Women's Committee of the Labour and Socialist International has admitted the Hague Convention as a basis, viewing it as an advantage on some existing national laws, in the hope that it would be improved and would lead to a right of choice being introduced in all countries. Accordingly, at its meeting in January 1931, it passed a resolution affirming

" This memorandum was unanimously adopted by the International Women's Committee of the Labour and Socialist International at a meeting held on August 31st and September 1st, 1935, at Brussels, under the Chairmanship of Mrs. J. " It therefore constitutes the expression of the unanimous wishes of the working women organised in the Socialist parties which are affiliated to the Labour and Socialist International."

the wife's right of choice and demanding that she " would have the right to decide, on her marriage to a foreigner, whether or not she wished to accept her husband's nationality, and that she must not run the risk of losing her own nationality and becoming a foreigner without her consent " ; and further renewing its support of the principle that " a woman must be able to keep her nationality even after marriage ".

The question was further discussed by the International Socialist Women's Congress in July 1931, when the following statement was adopted :

" The necessity for the international regulation of the nationality of married women is already recognised.

Independent of the fact that the obtaining or changing of nationality should be made as easy and simple as possible for all men and women by international agreement, and that, in particular, the tragic fate of being without nationality should be avoided, efforts must be made to obtain for women :

" (1) A right of option at marriage. In the majority of cases the woman will be desirous of having the same nationality as her husband. This she should be entitled to by a mere declaration of will within a legally stipulated period. But, in order that she shall not be compelled automatically and compulsorily to lose her own nationality and adopt that of her husband, as is the case with regard to the relations between a number of States to-day, she should herself be able to choose whether she will retain her own nationality or adopt that of her husband.

" (2) In order that a change of nationality during the course of married life on the part of the man shall not automatically apply to the wife should this be contrary to her desire and interests, the woman shall also have the right of option in this eventuality. Should she desire to change her nationality at the same time, however, she shall not be compelled to commence a separate process of nationalisation.

" By simply formally placing the married woman upon an equal plane with the man as regards the obtaining and loss of nationality, the legal position of hundreds of thousands of women would be worsened.

" (3) The right of the women to repatriation (the right to the re-acquisition of the former nationality) in consequence of the dissolution of the marriage by legal separation or by the death of the husband, which right already exists in many countries, should be made general by international agreement.

"(4) In order that women ignorant of the law shall also be in a position to benefit from the laws, women must everywhere be informed of the legal position upon marriage, as well as in the event of a change of nationality on the part of the husbands, and their declaration demanded. "

In various countries, the same demand has been reiterated by women's organisations. In our view, the position was admirably expressed in the resolution agreed upon by a Committee representative of Belgian Women's Organisations which was adopted on March 22nd, 1932 :

" (1) That a woman's nationality should not be affected by her marriage unless she expresses a wish to that effect ;

"(2) That, in order to safeguard the unity of the family, a right of choice should be granted to the wife ;

(a) At the time of marriage ;

(b) During married life, in the event of the husband changing or losing his nationality ;

(c) After the dissolution of the marriage ;

" (3) That the choice should be operative free of cost, and that the wife should be asked to declare her wish in full knowledge of the position after a reminder by the competent authority, so that these provisions may not remain a dead letter for the majority of women little versed in the law. "

It is, then, on the basis of its own resolution that the International Women's Committee of the Labour and Socialist International invites the League of Nations to work out the text of a Convention to safeguard the married woman's right of choice and to protect her from a change of nationality without her consent.

Civil and Legal Equality and Equality in the Labour Market.

The International Women's Committee of the Labour and Socialist International is unanimous in demanding the reforms in the sphere of civic rights which are needed in almost every country. A woman must cease to be " the eternal minor ".

Concerning the right of women to work, the Committee holds that the attacks upon this right are unjust and the restrictions imposed in most countries indefensible. It views with serious concern the restrictive measures passed and put into operation within the last two years in seven European countries and New Zealand, to exclude women from posts for which they are fitted by training or in some cases to force them to resign from posts which they actually held when the legislation in question was introduced. It also regards with alarm the tendency in some countries which have not actually passed restrictive laws against the employment of women to discriminate in certain occupations, sometimes against married women, sometimes against all women.

On the other hand, in view of the declared views of organised women workers, particularly in the highly industrialised countries, it would be impossible for this Committee to agree to any convention which would deprive women workers of the protection which special industrial legislation has given them. The arguments put forward by non-industrial women's organisations in favour of the abolition of protective legislation for women workers have not been accepted by those who are qualified to speak on behalf of the women workers. It is the view of the women workers concerned that such legislation has helped to raise the economic status of women and has been the means of protecting women workers in many industries from excessive exploitation.

In times of crises there is, however, a danger which we must guard against—that, under the guise of laws for the protection of health and motherhood, the field of women's employment may be unjustly restricted.

In the face of all those dangers, the International Women's Committee of the Labour and Socialist International adheres to the declaration of the Montevideo Treaty concerning civil equality and labour equality, whilst reserving the right to support or promote any legislation for the protection of motherhood or the protection of labour in general.

However, the International Women's Committee of the Labour and Socialist International demands that all questions relating to the work and protection of woman wage-earners remain under the competence of the International Labour Organisation.

The present events having sufficiently proved the magnitude and importance of women's problems, the International Committee supports and endorses the motion of the International Co-operative Women's Guild to ask for the institution of a Commission on Women's Problems at Geneva.

This Commission would take the place of the Consultative Committee of Women's Organisations, which does not embrace all such bodies and which includes no representative of the international organisations of working women.

The International Women's Committee of the Labour and Socialist International declares itself in full agreement with the International Women's Co-operative Guild in the latter's demand that this Commission on women's problems should be permanent and that " it should include both men and women members, together with jurists and statesmen, as is the practice on the Commissions for Public Health, Child Protection and others ".

All the leading women's organisations should also be represented on it, such as the Socialist movement, Women Trade Unionists, Co-operative movement and Christian workers movement, who cannot at present make themselves heard at the League of Nations and whose standpoint differs from that expressed by the Women's Consultative Committee.

Only in this way, by a wide and thorough study of all the women's interests concerned, by discussion of them amongst all the parties interested and by representation at the League of Nations of all shades of women's opinion, will it be possible to reach an equitable solution of these highly complex and urgent problems.

The International Women's Committee of the Labour and Socialist International:

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

NATIONALITY AND STATUS OF WOMEN

(Supplement No. 2)

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF TRADE UNIONS' INTERNATIONAL COMMITTEE OF TRADE UNION WOMEN.[1]

It has been very satisfactory to note the considerable amount of progress which has been achieved since the war in the way of the political, civil, economic and social rights of women, and in a number of international fields of political, economic and social life.

In some countries, women have attained complete political equality, in others they have also attained complete equality in the way of civil rights. It cannot be denied, however, that in many countries — even those which are considered to be the most enlightened and advanced in the political and social fields — this evolution towards equality between the sexes has not proceeded at the pace set immediately after the war. On the contrary, in some countries, differential treatment and discrimination between the rights of men and women are still practised to such an extent that they arouse indignation each time the attention of public opinion, and especially that of women, is drawn towards them.

POLITICAL AND CIVIL EMANCIPATION.

There is a steady increase in the number of women who are struggling for their political and civil emancipation, and their efforts to attain equality continuously find more support among the whole body of public opinion, men as well as women.

The International Committee of Trade Union Women notes that the League of Nations is again taking up this question by placing the problem of the nationality and the general status of women on the Agenda for the Assembly.

The International Committee of Trade Union Women, in complete agreement with the International Federation of Trade Unions of which it forms a part, holds that :

(a) The married woman should have the right of option either to keep her own nationality or to take her husband's nationality, and that the nationality of a woman shall not be changed for the sole reason of (i) her marriage, (ii) a change in the nationality of her husband made during the marriage.

(b) The right of the woman to repatriation — i.e., the right of the re-acquisition of former nationality, in consequence of the dissolution of the marriage by legal separation or by the death of the husband, which right already exists in many countries — should be made general by international agreement.

(c) In order that women ignorant of the law shall also be in a position to benefit from the laws, women must everywhere be informed of the legal position upon marriage, as well as in the event of a change of nationality on the part of the husband, and their declaration demanded.

[Translation.]

" In this memorandum, the International Federation of Trade Unions' International Committee of Trade Union Women has put forward the point of view and expressed the wishes of nearly two million wage-earning women occupied in industry, commerce and transport, who adhere to the Federations which constitute the International Federation of Trade Unions."

General Status of Women.

On the second point of the general status of women, the Committee is in general agreement with the principle of equality stated in the Treaty of Montevideo, but it would utter a warning against a hasty decision on this Treaty. It notes with alarm that the proposal to remove all legal distinction based on sex may be a menace to the protective legislation already secured for women workers by the movement in some countries.

It realises that the problems which are raised are of considerable complexity and probably of greater scope than is imagined by some organisations which urge the immediate and complete application of their demand. It would therefore recommend the greatest care and caution in the choice of terms and texts, which might easily give rise later on to abuses in the way of interpretation. It is enough to take as an example Article 1 of the Treaty of Montevideo on the subject of the status of women, which demands absolute equality between men and women. Such a formula could be interpreted as applicable also to social legislation and more particularly to legislation for the protection of women and the mothers of the future, which was certainly never intended by the authors of the Treaty.

In this connection, the International Committee of Trade Union Women urgently draws the attention of the League of Nations to the fact that, in any case, the examination of any social aspect, and of labour legislation, is and should remain the exclusive domain of the International Labour Organisation. The International Committee of Trade Union Women is convinced that it speaks on behalf, not only of the women workers it represents, but of nearly all women workers — employees, technicians and others — of the world when it demands the maintenance of social protection for women and mothers and an even more rapid development of protection in industry, commerce, agriculture and in work in the home, where the necessity is making itself felt with even greater urgency.

For all these reasons, the International Committee of Trade Union Women would propose that:

(1) All questions relating to the status of women should be submitted to a more thorough consideration and, if possible, should be examined in the first place by a consultative committee of representatives from international women's organisations.

(2) All aspects of the question relating to social and labour legislation should be remitted to the International Labour Organisation for consideration and report by the appropriate committee of that organisation.

RÉSOLUTION
RELATIVE A L'ÉTABLISSEMENT D'UNE
COUR PERMANENTE DE JUSTICE INTERNATIONALE

approuvée par l'Assemblée de la Société des Nations, Genève, le 13 décembre 1920.

1. L'Assemblée à l'unanimité déclare approuver, avec les amendements qu'elle y a apportés, le projet de Statut de la Cour permanente de Justice internationale, qui, préparé par le Conseil aux termes de l'article 14 du Pacte, a été soumis à son approbation.

2. Le Statut de la Cour, vu les termes particuliers dudit article 14, sera soumis, dans le plus bref délai, aux Membres de la Société des Nations pour adoption sous forme de Protocole dûment ratifié constatant qu'ils reconnaissent ce Statut. Le soin de procéder à cette présentation est confié au Conseil.

3. Dès que ce Protocole aura été ratifié par la majorité des Membres de la Société, le Statut de la Cour sera en vigueur et la Cour sera appelée à siéger, conformément audit Statut, dans tous les litiges entre les Membres ou Etats ayant ratifié, ainsi que pour les autres Etats auxquels la Cour est ouverte aux termes de l'article 35, alinéa 2, dudit Statut.

4. Ledit Protocole restera également ouvert à la signature des Etats mentionnés à l'Annexe au Pacte.

RESOLUTION
CONCERNING THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE

passed by the Assembly of the League of Nations, Geneva, December 13th, 1920.

1. The Assembly unanimously declares its approval of the draft Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice — as amended by the Assembly — which was prepared by the Council under Article 14 of the Covenant and submitted to the Assembly for its approval.

2. In view of the special wording of Article 14, the Statute of the Court shall be submitted within the shortest possible time to the Members of the League of Nations for adoption in the form of a protocol duly ratified and declaring their recognition of this Statute. It shall be the duty of the Council to submit the Statute to the Members.

3. As soon as this protocol has been ratified by the majority of the Members of the League, the Statute of the Court shall come into force and the Court shall be called upon to sit in conformity with the said Statute in all disputes between the Members or States which have ratified, as well as between the other States, to which the Court is open under Article 35, paragraph 2, of the said Statute.

4. The said protocol shall likewise remain open for signature by the States mentioned in the Annex to the Covenant.

visé par l'article 14 du Pacte de la Société des Nations.

Les Membres de la Société des Nations, représentés par les soussignés dûment autorisés, déclarent reconnaître le Statut[1] ci-joint de la Cour permanente de Justice internationale de la Société des Nations, approuvé par le vote unanime de l'Assemblée de la Société, en date, à Genève, du 13 décembre 1920.

En conséquence, ils déclarent accepter la juridiction de la Cour dans les termes et conditions prévus dans le Statut ci-dessus visé.

Le présent Protocole, dressé conformément à la décision de l'Assemblée de la Société des Nations du 13 décembre 1920, sera ratifié. Chaque Puissance adressera sa ratification au Secrétariat général de la Société des Nations, par les soins duquel il en sera donné avis à toutes les autres Puissances signataires. Les ratifications resteront déposées dans les archives du Secrétariat de la Société des Nations.

Le présent Protocole restera ouvert à la signature des Etats visés à l'Annexe du Pacte de la Société.

Le Statut de la Cour[1] entrera en vigueur ainsi qu'il est prévu par ladite décision.

Fait à Genève, en un seul exemplaire, dont les textes français et anglais feront foi.

PROTOCOL OF SIGNATURE OF THE STATUTE OF THE PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE provided for by Article 14 of the Covenant of the League of Nations.

The Members of the League of Nations, through the undersigned, duly authorised, declare their acceptance of the adjoined Statute[1] of the Permanent Court of International Justice, which was approved by a unanimous vote of the Assembly of the League on the 13th December, 1920, at Geneva.

Consequently, they hereby declare that they accept the jurisdiction of the Court in accordance with the terms and subject to the conditions of the above-mentioned Statute.

The present Protocol, which has been drawn up in accordance with the decision taken by the Assembly of the League of Nations on the 13th December, 1920, is subject to ratification. Each Power shall send its ratification to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations; the latter shall take the necessary steps to notify such ratification to the other signatory Powers. The ratification shall be deposited in the archives of the Secretariat of the League of Nations.

The said Protocol shall remain open for signature by the Members of the League of Nations and by the States mentioned in the Annex to the Covenant of the League.

The Statute of the Court[1] shall come into force as provided in the above-mentioned decision.

Executed at Geneva, in a single copy, the French and English texts of which shall both be authentic.

[1] The instrument of ratification deposited with the Secretariat of the League of Nations by the Government of Salvador on August 29, 1930, states that the ratification of the Optional Clause was given subject to certain reservations expressed in the Decision of the Executive Power of May 26, 1930, and reading as follows:

TRADUCTION DU SECRÉTARIAT DE LA SOCIÉTÉ DES NATIONS.

Les dispositions de ce Statut ne s'appliquent pas aux contestations ou différends touchant des points ou questions qui ne sauraient être soumis à l'arbitrage conformément à la constitution politique de cette République.

Les dispositions de ce Statut ne s'appliquent pas non plus aux différends surgis avant cette date ni aux réclamations d'ordre pécuniaire formées contre la Nation, étant entendu également que l'article 36 du Statut lie seulement le Salvador à l'égard des Etats qui acceptent l'arbitrage dans cette forme.

TRANSLATION BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

The provisions of this Statute do not apply to any disputes or differences concerning points or questions which cannot be submitted to arbitration in accordance with the political Constitution of this Republic.

The provisions of this Statute also do not apply to disputes which arose before that date or to pecuniary claims made against the Nation, it being further understood that Article 36 binds Salvador only in regard to States which accept the arbitration in that form.

[2] The Imperial Government of Persia recognise as compulsory, ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other State accepting the same obligation, that is to say, on condition of reciprocity, the jurisdiction of the Permanent Court of International Justice, in accordance with Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court, in any disputes arising after the ratification of the present declaration with regard to situations or facts relating directly or indirectly to the application of treaties or conventions accepted by Persia and subsequent to the ratification of this declaration, with the exception of:

(a) disputes relating to the territorial status of Persia, including those concerning the rights of sovereignty of Persia over its islands and ports;

(b) disputes in regard to which the parties have agreed or shall agree to have recourse to some other method of peaceful settlement;

(c) disputes with regard to questions which, by international law, fall exclusively within the jurisdiction of Persia.

However, the Imperial Government of Persia reserve the right to require that proceedings in the Court shall be suspended in respect of any dispute which has been submitted to the Council of the League of Nations.

The present declaration is made for a period of six years. At the expiration of that period, it shall continue to bear its full effects until notification is given of its abrogation.

Geneva, October 2, 1930.

Sont exceptés néanmoins:

a) toute question de fond ou de procédure pouvant amener directement ou indirectement la discussion de l'intégrité territoriale actuelle et des droits souverains de la Roumanie, y compris ceux sur ses ports et ses voies de communication;

b) les différends relatifs à des questions qui, d'après le droit international, relèvent de la juridiction intérieure de la Roumanie [1].

Pologne.

Au nom de la République de Pologne, sous réserve de ratification, le soussigné déclare reconnaître comme obligatoire de plein droit et sans convention spéciale, vis-à-vis de tout autre Membre de la Société des Nations ou Etat acceptant la même obligation, la juridiction de la Cour permanente de Justice internationale, conformément à l'article 36 paragraphe 2 du Statut de la Cour, pour une durée de 5 années, sur tous les différends futurs qui s'élèveraient après la ratification de la présente déclaration au sujet de situations ou de faits postérieurs à cette ratification, sauf les cas où les parties auraient convenu ou conviendraient d'avoir recours à un autre mode de règlement pacifique.

La présente déclaration ne s'applique pas aux différends:

1) qui concerneraient des questions que le droit international laisse à la compétence exclusive des Etats, ou

2) qui s'élèveraient entre la Pologne et des Etats qui refusent d'établir ou de maintenir des relations diplomatiques normales avec la Pologne, ou

3) qui se trouveraient directement ou indirectement en rapport avec la Guerre mondiale ou la guerre polono-soviétique, ou

4) qui résulteraient directement ou indirectement des stipulations du Traité de Paix signé à Riga le 18 mars 1921, ou

5) qui auraient trait aux dispositions de droit interne en rapport avec les points 3) et 4) [2].

(Roumania.)

[1] The Roumanian Government declares that it accedes to the Optional Clause of Article 36 of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice for a period of five years in respect of the Governments recognised by Roumania and on condition of reciprocity in regard to legal disputes arising out of situations or facts subsequent to the ratification by the Roumanian Parliament of this accession and with the exception of matters for which a special procedure has been or may be established and subject to the right of Roumania to submit the dispute to the Council of the League of Nations before having recourse to the Court.

The following are, however, excepted:

(a) any question of substance or of procedure which might directly or indirectly cause the existing territorial integrity of Roumania and her sovereign rights, including her rights over her ports and communications, to be brought into question;

(b) disputes relating to questions which, according to international law, fall under the domestic jurisdiction of Roumania.

(Poland.)

[2] On behalf of the Republic of Poland, subject to ratification, the undersigned recognises as compulsory, ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other Member of the League of Nations or State accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Permanent Court of International Justice in conformity with Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court, for a period of 5 years, in any future disputes arising after the ratification of the present declaration with regard to situations or facts subsequent to such ratification, except in cases where the parties have agreed or shall agree to have recourse to another method of peaceful settlement.

The present declaration does not apply to disputes:

(1) with regard to matters which, by international law, are solely within the domestic jurisdiction of States, or

(2) arising between Poland and States which refuse to establish or maintain normal diplomatic relations with Poland, or

(3) connected directly or indirectly with the World War or with the Polono-Sovietic War, or

(4) resulting directly or indirectly from the provisions of the Treaty of Peace signed at Riga, on March 18, 1921, or

(5) relating to provisions of internal law connected with points (3) and (4).

RÉSOLUTION

adoptée par l'Assemblée de la Société des Nations, Genève, le 14 septembre 1929.

2. L'Assemblée fait sien le vœu ci-après qui a été adopté par la Conférence:

adopted by the Assembly of the League of Nations, Geneva, September 14th, 1929.

1. The Assembly adopts the amendments to the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and the draft Protocol which the Conference convened by the Council of the League of Nations has drawn up after consideration of the report of the Committee of Jurists, which met in March 1929 at Geneva and which included among its members a jurist of the United States of America. The Assembly expresses the hope that the draft Protocol drawn up by the Conference may receive as many signatures as possible before the close of the present session of the Assembly and that all the Governments concerned will use their utmost efforts to secure the entry into force of the amendments to the Statute of the Court before the opening of the next session of the Assembly, in the course of which the Assembly and the Council will be called upon to proceed to a new election of the members of the Court.

2. The Assembly associates itself with the following recommendation adopted by the Conference:

> " The Conference recommends that, in accordance with the spirit of Articles 2 and 39 of the Statute of the Court, the candidates nominated by the national groups should possess recognised practical experience in international law and that they should be at least able to read both the official languages of the Court and to speak one of them; it also considers it desirable that to the nominations there should be attached a statement of the careers of the candidates justifying their candidature."

PROTOCOLE

CONCERNANT LA REVISION DU STATUT DE LA COUR PERMANENTE DE JUSTICE INTERNATIONALE [1].

1. Les soussignés, dûment autorisés, conviennent, au nom des gouvernements qu'ils représentent, d'apporter au Statut de la Cour permanente de Justice internationale les amendements qui sont indiqués dans l'annexe [2] au présent Protocole et qui font l'objet de la résolution de l'Assemblée de la Société des Nations du 14 septembre 1929.

2. Le présent Protocole, dont les textes français et anglais feront également foi, sera soumis à la signature de tous les signataires du Protocole du 16 décembre 1920, auquel est annexé le Statut de la Cour permanente de Justice internationale, ainsi qu'à celle des Etats-Unis d'Amérique.

3. Le présent Protocole sera ratifié. Les instruments de ratification seront déposés, si possible avant le 1er septembre 1930, entre les mains du Secrétaire général de la Société des Nations, qui en informera les Membres de la Société et les Etats mentionnés dans l'annexe au Pacte.

4. Le présent Protocole entrera en vigueur le 1er septembre 1930, à condition que le Conseil de la Société des Nations se soit assuré que les Membres de la Société des Nations et les Etats mentionnés dans l'annexe au Pacte, qui auront ratifié le Protocole du 16 décembre 1920, mais dont la ratification sur le présent Protocole n'aurait pas encore été reçue à cette date, ne font pas d'objection à l'entrée en vigueur des amendements au Statut de la Cour qui sont indiqués dans l'annexe [2] au présent Protocole.

5. Dès l'entrée en vigueur du présent Protocole, les nouvelles dispositions feront partie du Statut adopté en 1920 et les dispositions des articles primitifs objet de la revision seront abrogées. Il est entendu que, jusqu'au 1er janvier 1931, la Cour continuera à exercer ses fonctions conformément au Statut de 1920.

6. Dès l'entrée en vigueur du présent Protocole, toute acceptation du Statut de la Cour signifiera acceptation du Statut revisé.

7. Aux fins du présent Protocole, les Etats-Unis d'Amérique seront dans la même position qu'un Etat ayant ratifié le Protocole du 16 décembre 1920.

[1] Ce Protocole est entré en vigueur le 1er février 1936, conformément à la résolution de l'Assemblée du 27 septembre 1935 et au rapport qui a été adopté par le Conseil le 23 janvier 1936.

En vue des prescriptions du paragraphe 6, le présent Protocole a cessé d'être ouvert à la signature à partir du 1er février 1936.

PROTOCOL

1. The undersigned, duly authorised, agree, on behalf of the Governments which they represent, to make in the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice the amendments which are set out in the Annex[2] to the present Protocol and which form the subject of the resolution of the Assembly of the League of Nations of September 14th, 1929.

2. The present Protocol, of which the French and English texts are both authentic, shall be presented for signature to all the signatories of the Protocol of December 16th, 1920, to which the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice is annexed, and to the United States of America.

3. The present Protocol shall be ratified. The instruments of ratification shall be deposited, if possible before September 1st, 1930, with the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who shall inform the Members of the League of Nations and the States mentioned in the Annex to the Covenant.

4. The present Protocol shall enter into force on September 1st, 1930, provided that the Council of the League of Nations has satisfied itself that those Members of the League of Nations and States mentioned in the Annex to the Covenant which have ratified the Protocol of December 16th, 1920, and whose ratification of the present Protocol has not been received by that date, have no objection to the coming into force of the amendments to the Statute of the Court which are annexed[2] to the present Protocol.

5. After the entry into force of the present Protocol, the new provisions shall form part of the Statute adopted in 1920 and the provisions of the original articles which have been made the subject of amendment shall be abrogated. It is understood that, until January 1st, 1931, the Court shall continue to perform its functions in accordance with the Statute of 1920.

6. After the entry into force of the present Protocol, any acceptance of the Statute of the Court shall constitute an acceptance of the Statute as amended.

7. For the purposes of the present Protocol, the United States of America shall be in the same position as a State which has ratified the Protocol of December 16th, 1920.

[1] This Protocol came into force on February 1st, 1936, in accordance with the Assembly resolution of September 27th, 1935, and with the report which was adopted by the Council on January 23rd, 1936.

In view of the provisions of paragraph 6, the present Protocol has ceased to be open for signature as from February 1st, 1936.

[2] The amended Statute in which these amendments are incorporated is reproduced on page 35 of this document (For the Annex to the present Protocol, see document C.492.M.156.1929.V).

FAIT à Genève, le quatorzième jour de septembre mil neuf cent vingt-neuf, en un seul exemplaire qui sera déposé dans les archives du Secrétariat de la Société des Nations. Le Secrétaire général adressera des copies certifiées conformes aux Membres de la Société des Nations et aux Etats mentionnés dans l'annexe au Pacte.

DONE at Geneva, the fourteenth day of September nineteen hundred and twenty-nine, in a single copy which shall be deposited in the archives of the Secretariat of the League of Nations. The Secretary-General shall deliver authenticated copies to the Members of the League of Nations and to the States mentioned in the Annex to the Covenant.

STATUT
DE LA COURT PERMANENTE DE JUSTICE INTERNATIONALE

visé par l'article 14 du Pacte de la Société des Nations, tel qu'il a été amendé conformément au Protocole du 14 septembre 1929.

Article premier.

Indépendamment de la Cour d'Arbitrage, organisée par les Conventions de La Haye de 1899 et 1907, et des Tribunaux spéciaux d'Arbitres, auxquels les Etats demeurent toujours libres de confier la solution de leurs différends, il est institué, conformément à l'article 14 du Pacte de la Société des Nations, une Cour permanente de Justice internationale.

CHAPITRE PREMIER.

Organisation de la Cour.

Article 2.

La Cour permanente de Justice internationale est un corps de magistrats indépendants, élus, sans égard à leur nationalité, parmi les personnes jouissant de la plus haute considération morale, et qui réunissent les conditions requises pour l'exercice, dans leurs pays respectifs, des plus hautes fonctions judiciaires, ou qui sont des jurisconsultes possédant un compétence notoire en matière de droit international.

Article 3.

La Cour se compose de quinze membres.

Article 4.

Les membres de la Cour sont élus par l'Assemblée et par le Conseil sur une liste de personnes présentées par les groupes nationaux de la Cour d'Arbitrage, conformément aux dispositions suivantes.

En ce qui concerne les Membres de la Société qui ne sont pas représentés à la Cour permanente d'Arbitrage, les listes de candidats seront présentées par des groupes nationaux, désignés à cet effet par leurs Gouvernements, dans les mêmes conditions que celles stipulées pour les membres de la Cour d'Arbitrage par l'article 44 de la Convention de La Haye de 1907 sur le règlement pacifique des conflits internationaux.

En l'absence d'accord spécial, l'Assemblée, sur la proposition du Conseil, réglera les conditions auxquelles peut participer à l'élection des membres de la Cour un Etat qui, tout en ayant accepté le Statut de la Cour, n'est pas Membre de la Société des Nations.

Article 5.

Trois mois au moins avant la date de l'élection, le Secrétaire général de la Société des Nations invite par écrit les Membres de la Cour d'Arbitrage appartenant aux Etats mentionnés à l'Annexe au Pacte ou entrés ultérieurement dans la Société des Nations, ainsi que les personnes désignées conformément à l'alinéa 2 de l'article 4, à procéder dans un délai déterminé par groupes nationaux à la présentation de personnes en situation de remplir les fonctions de Membre de la Cour.

Chaque groupe ne peut, en aucun cas, présenter plus de quatre personnes, dont deux au plus de sa nationalité. En aucun cas, il ne peut être présenté un nombre de candidats plus élevé que le double des places à remplir.

Article 6.

Avant de procéder à cette désignation, il est recommandé à chaque groupe national de consulter la plus haute Cour de Justice, les Facultés et Ecoles de Droit, les Académies nationales et les sections nationales d'Académies internationales, vouées à l'étude du droit.

Article 7.

Le Secrétaire général de la Société des Nations dresse, par ordre alphabétique, une liste de toutes les personnes ainsi désignées: seules ces personnes sont éligibles, sauf le cas prévu à l'article 12, paragraphe 2.

Le Secrétaire général communique cette liste à l'Assemblée et au Conseil.

Article 8.

L'Assemblée et le Conseil procèdent indépendamment l'un de l'autre à l'élection des membres de la Cour.

STATUTE
FOR THE PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE

provided for by Article 14 of the Covenant of the League of Nations as Amended in accordance with the Protocol of September 14th, 1929.

Article 1.

A Permanent Court of International Justice is hereby established, in accordance with Article 14 of the Covenant of the League of Nations. This Court shall be in addition to the Court of Arbitration organised by the Conventions of The Hague of 1899 and 1907, and to the special Tribunals of Arbitration to which States are always at liberty to submit their disputes for settlement.

CHAPTER I.

Organisation of the Court.

Article 2.

The Permanent Court of International Justice shall be composed of a body of independent judges, elected regardless of their nationality from amongst persons of high moral character, who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices, or are jurisconsults of recognised competence in international law.

Article 3.

The Court shall consist of fifteen members.

Article 4.

The members of the Court shall be elected by the Assembly and by the Council from a list of persons nominated by the national groups in the Court of Arbitration, in accordance with the following provisions.

In the case of Members of the League of Nations not represented in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, the lists of candidates shall be drawn up by national groups appointed for this purpose by their Governments under the same conditions as those prescribed for members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration by Article 44 of the Convention of The Hague of 1907 for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

The conditions under which a State which has accepted the Statute of the Court but is not a member of the League of Nations, may participate in electing the members of the Court shall, in the absence of a special agreement, be laid down by the Assembly on the proposal of the Council.

Article 5.

At least three months before the date of the election, the Secretary-General of the League of Nations shall address a written request to the Members of the Court of Arbitration belonging to the States mentioned in the Annex to the Covenant or to the States which join the League subsequently, and to the persons appointed under paragraph 2 of Article 4, inviting them to undertake, within a given time, by national groups, the nomination of persons in a position to accept the duties of a member of the Court.

No group may nominate more than four persons, not more than two of whom shall be of their own nationality. In no case must the number of candidates nominated be more than double the number of seats to be filled.

Article 6.

Before making these nominations, each national group is recommended to consult its Highest Court of Justice, its Legal Faculties and Schools of Law, and its National Academies and national sections of International Academies devoted to the study of Law.

Article 7.

The Secretary-General of the League of Nations shall prepare a list in alphabetical order of all the persons thus nominated. Save as provided in Article 12, paragraph 2, these shall be the only persons eligible for appointment.

The Secretary-General shall submit this list to the Assembly and to the Council.

Article 8.

The Assembly and the Council shall proceed independently of one another to elect the members of the Court.

Article 9.

Dans toute élection, les électeurs auront en vue que les personnes appelées à faire partie de la Cour, non seulement réunissent individuellement les conditions requises, mais assurent dans l'ensemble la représentation des grandes formes de civilisation et des principaux systèmes juridiques du monde.

Article 10.

Sont élus ceux qui ont réuni la majorité absolue des voix dans l'Assemblée et dans le Conseil.

Au cas où le double scrutin de l'Assemblée et du Conseil se porterait sur plus d'un ressortissant du même Membre de la Société des Nations, le plus âgé est seul élu.

Article 11.

Si, après la première séance d'élection, il reste encore des sièges à pourvoir, il est procédé, de la même manière, à une seconde et, s'il est nécessaire, à une troisième.

Article 12.

Si, après la troisième séance d'élection, il reste encore des sièges à pourvoir, il peut être à tout moment formé sur la demande, soit de l'Assemblée, soit du Conseil, une Commission médiatrice de six membres, nommés trois par l'Assemblée, trois par le Conseil, en vue de choisir pour chaque siège non pourvu un nom à présenter à l'adoption séparée de l'Assemblée et du Conseil.

Peuvent être portées sur cette liste, à l'unanimité, toutes personnes satisfaisant aux conditions requises, alors même qu'elles n'auraient pas figuré sur la liste de présentation visée aux articles 4 et 5.

Si la Commission médiatrice constate qu'elle ne peut réussir à assurer l'élection, les membres de la Cour déjà nommés pourvoient aux sièges vacants, dans un délai à fixer par le Conseil, en choisissant parmi les personnes qui ont obtenu des suffrages soit dans l'Assemblée, soit dans le Conseil.

Si parmi les juges il y a partage égal des voix, la voix du juge le plus âgé l'emporte.

Article 13.

Les membres de la Cour sont élus pour neuf ans.

Ils sont rééligibles.

Ils restent en fonction jusqu'à leur remplacement. Après ce remplacement, ils continuent de connaître des affaires dont ils sont déjà saisis.

En cas de démission d'un membre de la Cour, la démission sera adressée au Président de la Cour, pour être transmise au Secrétaire général de la Société des Nations.

Cette dernière notification emporte vacance de siège.

Article 14.

Il est pourvu aux sièges devenus vacants selon la méthode suivie pour la première élection, sous réserve de la disposition ci-après: dans le mois qui suivra la vacance, le Secrétaire général de la Société des Nations procédera à l'invitation prescrite par l'article 5, et la date d'élection sera fixée par le Conseil dans sa première session.

Article 15.

Le membre de la Cour élu en remplacement d'un membre dont le mandat n'est pas expiré achève le terme du mandat de son prédécesseur.

Article 16.

Les membres de la Cour ne peuvent exercer aucune fonction politique ou administrative, ni se livrer à aucune autre occupation de caractère professionnel.

En cas de doute, la Cour décide.

Article 17.

Les membres de la Cour ne peuvent exercer les fonctions d'agent, de conseil ou d'avocat dans aucune affaire.

Ils ne peuvent participer au règlement d'aucune affaire dans laquelle ils sont antérieurement intervenus comme agents, conseils ou avocats de l'une des parties, membres d'un tribunal national ou international, d'une commission d'enquête, ou à tout autre titre.

En cas de doute, la Cour décide.

Article 18.

Les membres de la Cour ne peuvent être relevés de leurs fonctions que si, au jugement unanime des autres membres, ils ont cessé de répondre aux conditions requises.

Le Secrétaire général de la Société des Nations en est officiellement informé par le Greffier.

Cette communication emporte vacance de siège.

Article 19.

Les membres de la Cour jouissent dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions des privilèges et immunités diplomatiques.

Article 9.

At every election, the electors shall bear in mind that not only should all the persons appointed as members of the Court possess the qualifications required, but the whole body also should represent the main forms of civilisation and the principal legal systems of the world.

Article 10.

Those candidates who obtain an absolute majority of votes in the Assembly and in the Council shall be considered as elected.

In the event of more than one national of the same Member of the League being elected by the votes of both the Assembly and the Council, the eldest of these only shall be considered as elected.

Article 11.

If, after the first meeting held for the purpose of the election, one or more seats remain to be filled, a second and, if necessary, a third meeting shall take place.

Article 12.

If, after the third meeting, one or more seats still remain unfilled, a joint conference consisting of six members, three appointed by the Assembly and three by the Council, may be formed, at any time, at the request of either the Assembly or the Council, for the purpose of choosing one name for each seat still vacant, to submit to the Assembly and the Council for their respective acceptance.

If the Conference is unanimously agreed upon any person who fulfils the required conditions, he may be included in its list, even though he was not included in the list of nominations referred to in Articles 4 and 5.

If the joint conference is satisfied that it will not be successful in procuring an election, those members of the Court who have already been appointed shall, within a period to be fixed by the Council, proceed to fill the vacant seats by selection from amongst those candidates who have obtained votes either in the Assembly or in the Council.

In the event of an equality of votes amongst the judges, the eldest judge shall have a casting vote.

Article 13.

The members of the Court shall be elected for nine years.

They may be re-elected.

They shall continue to discharge their duties until their places have been filled. Though replaced, they shall finish any cases which they may have begun.

In the case of the resignation of a member of the Court, the resignation will be addressed to the President of the Court for transmission to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

This last notification makes the place vacant.

Article 14.

Vacancies which may occur shall be filled by the same method as that laid down for the first election, subject to the following provision: the Secretary-General of the League of Nations shall, within one month of the occurrence of the vacancy, proceed to issue the invitations provided for in Article 5, and the date of the election shall be fixed by the Council at its next session.

Article 15.

A member of the Court elected to replace a member whose period of appointment has not expired, will hold the appointment for the remainder of his predecessor's term.

Article 16.

The members of the Court may not exercise any political or administrative function, nor engage in any other occupation of a professional nature.

Any doubt on this point is settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 17.

No member of the Court may act as agent, counsel or advocate in any case.

No member may participate in the decision of any case in which he has previously taken an active part as agent, counsel or advocate for one of the contesting parties, or as a member of a national or international Court, or of a commission of enquiry, or in any other capacity.

Any doubt on this point is settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 18.

A member of the Court cannot be dismissed unless, in the unanimous opinion of the other members, he has ceased to fulfil the required conditions.

Formal notification thereof shall be made to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, by the Registrar.

This notification makes the place vacant.

Article 19.

The members of the Court, when engaged on the business of the Court, shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities.

Article 20.

Tout membre de la Cour doit, avant d'entrer en fonction, en séance publique, prendre engagement solennel d'exercer ses attributions en pleine impartialité et en toute conscience.

Article 21.

La Cour élit, pour trois ans, son Président et son Vice-Président; ils sont rééligibles.

Elle nomme son Greffier.

La fonction de Greffier de la Cour n'est pas incompatible avec celle de Secrétaire général de la Cour permanente d'Arbitrage.

Article 22.

Le siège de la Cour est fixé à La Haye.

Le Président et le Greffier résident au siège de la Cour.

Article 23.

Le Cour reste toujours en fonction, excepté pendant les vacances judiciaires, dont les périodes et la durée sont fixées par la Cour.

Les membres de la Cour dont les foyers se trouvent à plus de cinq jours de voyage normal de La Haye auront droit, indépendamment des vacances judiciaires, à un congé de six mois, non compris la durée des voyages, tous les trois ans.

Les membres de la Cour sont tenus, à moins de congé régulier, d'empêchement pour cause de maladie ou autre motif grave dûment justifié auprès du Président, d'être à tout moment à la disposition de la Cour.

Article 24.

Si, pour une raison spéciale, l'un des membres de la Cour estime devoir ne pas participer au jugement d'une affaire déterminée, il en fait part au Président.

Si le Président estime qu'un des membres de la Cour ne doit pas, pour une raison spéciale, siéger dans une affaire déterminée, il en avertit celui-ci.

Si, en pareils cas, le membre de la Cour et le Président sont en désaccord, la Cour décide.

Article 25.

Sauf exception expressément prévue, la Cour exerce ses attributions en séance plénière.

Sous la condition que le nombre des juges disponibles pour constituer la Cour ne soit pas réduit à moins de onze, le Règlement de la Cour pourra prévoir que, selon les circonstances et à tour de rôle, un ou plusieurs juges pourront être dispensés de siéger.

Toutefois, le quorum de neuf est suffisant pour constituer la Cour.

Article 26.

Pour les affaires concernant le travail, et spécialement pour les affaires visées dans la partie XIII (Travail) du Traité de Versailles et les parties correspondantes des autres traités de paix, la Cour statuera dans les conditions ci-après:

La Cour constituera pour chaque période de trois années une chambre spéciale composée de cinq juges désignés en tenant compte, autant que possible, des prescriptions de l'article 9. Deux juges seront, en outre, désignés pour remplacer celui des juges qui se trouverait dans l'impossibilité de siéger. Sur la demande des parties, cette chambre statuera. A défaut de cette demande, la Cour siégera en séance plénière. Dans les deux cas, les juges sont assistés de quatre assesseurs techniques siégeant à leurs côtés avec voix consultative et assurant une juste représentation des intérêts en cause.

Les assesseurs techniques sont choisis dans chaque cas spécial d'après les règles de procédure visées à l'article 30, sur une liste d' « Assesseurs pour litiges de travail », composée de noms présentés à raison de deux par chaque Membre de la Société des Nations et d'un nombre égal présenté par le Conseil d'administration du Bureau international du Travail. Le Conseil désignera par moitié des représentants des travailleurs et par moitié des représentants des patrons pris sur la liste prévue à l'article 412 du Traité de Versailles et aux articles correspondants des autres traités de paix.

Le recours à la procédure sommaire visée à l'article 29 reste toujours ouvert dans les affaires visées à l'alinéa premier du présent article, si les parties le demandent.

Dans les affaires concernant le travail, le Bureau international aura la faculté de fournir à la Cour tous les renseignements nécessaires et, à cet effet, le Directeur de ce Bureau recevra communication de toutes les pièces de procédure présentées par écrit.

Article 27.

Pour les affaires concernant le transit et les communications, et spécialement pour les affaires visées dans la partie XII (Ports, Voies d'eau, Voies ferrées) du Traité de Versailles et les parties correspondantes des autres traités de paix, la Cour statuera dans les conditions ci-après:

La Cour constituera, pour chaque période de trois années, une chambre spéciale composée de cinq juges désignés en tenant compte autant que possible des prescriptions de l'article 9. Deux juges seront, en outre, désignés pour remplacer celui des juges qui se trouverait dans l'impossibilité de siéger. Sur la demande des parties, cette chambre statuera. A défaut de cette

Article 20.

Every member of the Court shall, before taking up his duties, make a solemn declaration in open Court that he will exercise his powers impartially and conscientiously.

Article 21.

The Court shall elect its President and Vice-President for three years; they may be re-elected.

It shall appoint its Registrar.

The duties of Registrar of the Court shall not be deemed incompatible with those of Secretary-General of the Permanent Court of Arbitration.

Article 22.

The seat of the Court shall be established at The Hague.

The President and Registrar shall reside at the seat of the Court.

Article 23.

The Court shall remain permanently in session except during the judicial vacations, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court.

Members of the Court whose homes are situated at more than five days' normal journey from The Hague shall be entitled, apart from the judicial vacations, to six months' leave every three years, not including the time spent in travelling.

Members of the Court shall be bound, unless they are on regular leave or prevented from attending by illness or other serious reason duly explained to the President, to hold themselves permanently at the disposal of the Court.

Article 24.

If, for some special reason, a member of the Court considers that he should not take part in the decision of a particular case, he shall so inform the President.

If the President considers that for some special reason one of the members of the Court should not sit on a particular case, he shall give him notice accordingly.

If in any such case the member of the Court and the President disagree, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 25.

The full Court shall sit except when it is expressly provided otherwise.

Subject to the condition that the number of judges available to constitute the Court is not thereby reduced below eleven, the Rules of Court may provide for allowing one or more judges, according to circumstances and in rotation, to be dispensed from sitting.

Provided always that a quorum of nine judges shall suffice to constitute the Court.

Article 26.

Labour cases, particularly cases referred to in Part XIII (Labour) of the Treaty of Versailles and the corresponding portions of the other Treaties of Peace, shall be heard and determined by the Court under the following conditions:

The Court will appoint every three years a special chamber of five judges, selected so far as possible with due regard to the provisions of Article 9. In addition, two judges shall be selected for the purpose of replacing a judge who finds it impossible to sit. If the parties so demand, cases will be heard and determined by this Chamber. In the absence of any such demand, the full Court will sit. In both cases, the judges will be assisted by four technical assessors sitting with them, but without the right to vote, and chosen with a view to ensuring a just representation of the competing interests.

The technical assessors shall be chosen for each particular case in accordance with rules of procedure under Article 30 from a list of "Assessors for Labour Cases" composed of two persons nominated by each Member of the League of Nations and an equivalent number nominated by the Governing Body of the Labour Office. The Governing Body will nominate, as to one-half, representatives of the workers, and, as to one-half, representatives of employers from the list referred to in Article 412 of the Treaty of Versailles and the corresponding Articles of the other Treaties of Peace.

Recourse may always be had to the summary procedure provided for in Article 29, in the cases referred to in the first paragraph of the present Article, if the parties so request.

In Labour cases, the International Office shall be at liberty to furnish the Court with all relevant information, and for this purpose the Director of that Office shall receive copies of all the written proceedings.

Article 27.

Cases relating to transit and communications, particularly cases referred to in Part XII (Ports, Waterways and Railways) of the Treaty of Versailles and the corresponding portions of the other Treaties of Peace, shall be heard and determined by the Court under the following conditions:

The Court will appoint every three years a special Chamber of five judges, selected so far as possible with due regard to the provisions of Article 9. In addition, two judges shall be selected for the purpose of replacing a judge who finds it impossible to sit. If the parties so demand, cases will be heard and determined by this Chamber. In the absence of any such demand, demande, la Cour siégera en séance plénière. Si les parties le désirent, ou si la Cour le décide, les juges seront assistés de quatre assesseurs techniques siégeant à leurs côtés avec voix consultative.

Les assesseurs techniques seront choisis dans chaque cas spécial d'après les règles de procédure visées à l'article 30, sur une liste d'« Assesseurs pour litiges de transit et de communications », composée de noms présentés à raison de deux par chaque Membre de la Société des Nations.

Le recours à la procédure sommaire visée à l'article 29 reste toujours ouvert dans les affaires visées à l'alinéa premier du présent article, si les parties le demandent.

Article 28.

Les chambres spéciales prévues aux articles 26 et 27 peuvent, avec le consentement des parties en cause, siéger ailleurs qu'à La Haye.

Article 29.

En vue de la prompte expédition des affaires, la Cour compose annuellement une chambre de cinq juges, appelés à statuer en procédure sommaire lorsque les parties le demandent. Deux juges seront, en outre, désignés, pour remplacer celui des juges qui se trouverait dans l'impossibilité de siéger.

Article 30.

La Cour détermine par un règlement le mode suivant lequel elle exerce ses attributions. Elle règle notamment la procédure sommaire.

Article 31.

Les juges de la nationalité de chacune des parties en cause conservent le droit de siéger dans l'affaire dont la Cour est saisie.

Si la Cour compte sur le siège un juge de la nationalité d'une des parties, l'autre partie peut désigner une personne de son choix pour siéger en qualité de juge. Celle-ci devra être prise de préférence parmi les personnes qui ont été l'objet d'une présentation en conformité des articles 4 et 5.

Si la Cour ne compte sur le siège aucun juge de la nationalité des parties, chacune de ces parties peut procéder à la désignation d'un juge de la même manière qu'au paragraphe précédent.

La présente disposition s'applique dans le cas des articles 26, 27 et 29. En pareils cas, le Président priera un, ou, s'il y a lieu, deux des membres de la Cour composant la Chambre, de céder leur place aux membres de la Cour de la nationalité des parties intéressées et, à défaut ou en cas d'empêchement, aux juges spécialement désignés par les parties.

Lorsque plusieurs parties font cause commune, elles ne comptent, pour l'application des dispositions qui précèdent, que pour une seule. En cas de doute, la Cour décide.

Les juges désignés, comme il est dit aux paragraphes 2, 3 et 4 du présent article, doivent satisfaire aux prescriptions des articles 2, 17, alinéa 2; 20 et 24 du présent Statut. Ils participent à la décision dans des conditions de complète égalité avec leurs collègues.

Article 32.

Les membres de la Cour reçoivent un traitement annuel.

Le président reçoit une allocation annuelle spéciale.

Le vice-président reçoit une allocation spéciale pour chaque jour où il remplit les fonctions de président.

Les juges désignés par application de l'article 31, autres que les membres de la Cour, reçoivent une indemnité pour chaque jour où ils exercent leurs fonctions.

Ces traitements, allocations et indemnités sont fixés par l'Assemblée de la Société des Nations sur la proposition du Conseil. Ils ne peuvent être diminués pendant la durée des fonctions.

Le traitement du Greffier est fixé par l'Assemblée sur la proposition de la Cour.

Un règlement adopté par l'Assemblée fixe les conditions dans lesquelles les pensions sont allouées aux membres de la Cour et au Greffier, ainsi que les conditions dans lesquelles les membres de la Cour et le Greffier reçoivent le remboursement de leurs frais de voyage.

Les traitements, indemnités et allocations sont exempts de tout impôt.

Article 33.

Les frais de la Cour sont supportés par la Société des Nations de la manière que l'Assemblée décide sur la proposition du Conseil.

CHAPITRE II.

Compétence de la Cour.

Article 34.

Seuls les Etats ou les Membres de la Société des Nations ont qualité pour se présenter devant la Cour.

Article 35.

La Cour est ouverte aux Membres de la Société des Nations, ainsi qu'aux Etats mentionnés à l'Annexe au Pacte.

the full Court will sit. When desired by the parties or decided by the Court, the judges will be assisted by four technical assessors sitting with them, but without the right to vote.

The technical assessors shall be chosen for each particular case in accordance with rules of procedure under Article 30 from a list of "Assessors for Transit and Communications Cases" composed of two persons nominated by each Member of the League of Nations.

Recourse may always be had to the summary procedure provided for in Article 29, in the cases referred to in the first paragraph of the present Article, if the parties so request.

Article 28.

The special chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 27 may, with the consent of the parties to the dispute, sit elsewhere than at The Hague.

Article 29.

With a view to the speedy despatch of business, the Court shall form annually a Chamber composed of five judges who, at the request of the contesting parties, may hear and determine cases by summary procedure. In addition, two judges shall be selected for the purpose of replacing a judge who finds it impossible to sit.

Article 30.

The Court shall frame rules for regulating its procedure. In particular, it shall lay down rules for summary procedure.

Article 31.

Judges of the nationality of each of the contesting parties shall retain their right to sit in the case before the Court.

If the Court includes upon the Bench a judge of the nationality of one of the parties, the other party may choose a person to sit as judge. Such person shall be chosen preferably from among those persons who have been nominated as candidates as provided in Articles 4 and 5.

If the Court includes upon the Bench no judge of the nationality of the contesting parties, each of these parties may proceed to select a judge as provided in the preceding paragraph.

The present provision shall apply to the case of Articles 26, 27 and 29. In such cases, the President shall request one or, if necessary, two of the members of the Court forming the Chamber to give place to the members of the Court of the nationality of the parties concerned, and, failing such or if they are unable to be present, to the judges specially appointed by the parties.

Should there be several parties in the same interest, they shall, for the purpose of the preceding provisions, be reckoned as one party only. Any doubt upon this point is settled by the decision of the Court.

Judges selected as laid down in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of this Article shall fulfil the conditions required by Articles 2, 17 (paragraph 2), 20 and 24 of this Statute. They shall take part in the decision on terms of complete equality with their colleagues.

Article 32.

The members of the Court shall receive an annual salary.

The President shall receive a special annual allowance.

The Vice-President shall receive a special allowance for every day on which he acts as President.

The judges appointed under Article 31, other than members of the Court, shall receive an indemnity for each day on which they sit.

These salaries, allowances and indemnities shall be fixed by the Assembly of the League of Nations on the proposal of the Council. They may not be decreased during the term of office.

The salary of the Registrar shall be fixed by the Assembly on the proposal of the Court.

Regulations made by the Assembly shall fix the conditions under which retiring pensions may be given to members of the Court and to the Registrar, and the conditions under which members of the Court and the Registrar shall have their travelling expenses refunded.

The above salaries, indemnities and allowances shall be free of all taxation.

Article 33.

The expenses of the Court shall be borne by the League of Nations, in such a manner as shall be decided by the Assembly upon the proposal of the Council.

CHAPTER II.

COMPETENCE OF THE COURT.

Article 34.

Only States or Members of the League of Nations can be parties in cases before the Court.

Article 35.

The Court shall be open to the Members of the League and also to States mentioned in the Annex to the Covenant.

Les conditions auxquelles elle est ouverte aux autres Etats sont, sous réserve des dispositions particulières des traités en vigueur, réglées par le Conseil, et dans tous les cas, sans qu'il puisse en résulter pour les parties aucune inégalité devant la Cour.

Lorsqu'un Etat, qui n'est pas Membre de la Société des Nations, est partie en cause, la Cour fixera la contribution aux frais de la Cour que cette partie devra supporter. Toutefois cette disposition ne s'appliquera pas, si cet Etat participe aux dépenses de la Cour.

Article 36.

La compétence de la Cour s'étend à toutes affaires que les parties lui soumettront, ainsi qu'à tous les cas spécialement prévus dans les traités et conventions en vigueur.

Les Membres de la Société et Etats mentionnés à l'Annexe au Pacte pourront, soit lors de la signature ou de la ratification du Protocole, auquel le présent Acte est joint, soit ultérieurement, déclarer reconnaître dès à présent comme obligatoire, de plein droit et sans convention spéciale, vis-à-vis de tout autre Membre ou Etat acceptant la même obligation, la juridiction de la Cour sur toutes ou quelques-unes des catégories de différends d'ordre juridique ayant pour objet:

a) L'interprétation d'un traité;

b) Tout point de droit international;

c) La réalité de tout fait qui, s'il était établi, constituerait la violation d'un engagement international;

d) La nature ou l'étendue de la réparation due pour la rupture d'un engagement international.

La déclaration ci-dessus visée pourra être faite purement et simplement ou sous condition de réciprocité de la part de plusieurs ou de certains Membres ou Etats, ou pour un délai déterminé.

En cas de contestation sur le point de savoir si la Cour est compétente, la Cour décide.

Article 37.

Lorsqu'un traité ou convention en vigueur vise le renvoi à une juridiction à établir par la Société des Nations, la Cour constituera cette juridiction.

Article 38.

La Cour applique:

1. Les conventions internationales, soit générales, soit spéciales, établissant des règles expressément reconnues par les Etats en litige;

2. La coutume internationale comme preuve d'une pratique générale acceptée comme étant le droit;

3. Les principes généraux de droit reconnus par les nations civilisées;

4. Sous réserve de la disposition de l'article 59, les décisions judiciaires et la doctrine des publicistes les plus qualifiés des différentes nations, comme moyen auxiliaire de détermination des règles de droit.

La présente disposition ne porte pas atteinte à la faculté pour la Cour, si les parties sont d'accord, de statuer ex æquo et bono.

CHAPITRE III.

PROCÉDURE.

Article 39.

Les langues officielles de la Cour sont le français et l'anglais. Si les parties sont d'accord pour que toute la procédure ait lieu en français, le jugement sera prononcé en cette langue. Si les parties sont d'accord pour que toute la procédure ait lieu en anglais, le jugement sera prononcé en cette langue.

A défaut d'un accord fixant la langue dont il sera fait usage, les parties pourront employer pour les plaidoiries celle des deux langues qu'elles préféreront, et l'arrêt de la Cour sera rendu en français et en anglais. En ce cas, la Cour désignera en même temps celui des deux textes qui fera foi.

La Cour pourra, à la demande de toute partie, autoriser l'emploi d'une langue autre que le français ou l'anglais.

Article 40.

Les affaires sont portées devant la Cour, selon le cas, soit par notification du compromis, soit par une requête, adressées au Greffe; dans les deux cas, l'objet du différend et les parties en cause doivent être indiqués.

Le Greffe donne immédiatement communication de la requête à tous intéressés.

Il en informe également les Membres de la Société des Nations par l'entremise du Secrétaire général, ainsi que les Etats admis à ester en justice devant la Cour.

The conditions under which the Court shall be open to other States shall, subject to the special provisions contained in treaties in force, be laid down by the Council, but in no case shall such provisions place the parties in a position of inequality before the Court.

When a State which is not a Member of the League of Nations is a party to a dispute, the Court will fix the amount which that party is to contribute towards the expenses of the Court. This provision shall not apply if such State is bearing a share of the expenses of the Court.

Article 36.

The jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it and all matters specially provided for in Treaties and Conventions in force.

The Members of the League of Nations and the States mentioned in the Annex to the Covenant may, either when signing or ratifying the protocol to which the present Statute is adjoined, or at a later moment, declare that they recognise as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other Member or State accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all or any of the classes of legal disputes concerning:

(a) The interpretation of a Treaty;

(b) Any question of International Law;

(c) The existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;

(d) The nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

The declaration referred to above may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain Members or States, or for a certain time.

In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 37.

When a treaty or convention in force provides for the reference of a matter to a tribunal to be instituted by the League of Nations, the Court will be such tribunal.

Article 38.

The Court shall apply:

1. International conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognised by the contesting States;

2. International custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;

3. The general principles of law recognised by civilised nations;

4. Subject to the provisions of Article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.

This provision shall not prejudice the power of the Court to decide a case ex æquo et bono, if the parties agree thereto.

CHAPTER III.

PROCEDURE.

Article 39.

The official languages of the Court shall be French and English. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in French, the judgment will be delivered in French. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in English, the judgment will be delivered in English.

In the absence of an agreement as to which language shall be employed, each party may, in the pleadings, use the language which it prefers; the decision of the Court will be given in French and English. In this case the Court will at the same time determine which of the two texts shall be considered as authoritative.

The Court may, at the request of any party, authorise a language other than French or English to be used.

Article 40.

Cases are brought before the Court, as the case may be, either by the notification of the special agreement or by a written application addressed to the Registrar. In either case the subject of the dispute and the contesting parties must be indicated.

The Registrar shall forthwith communicate the application to all concerned.

He shall also notify the Members of the League of Nations through the Secretary-General, and also any States entitled to appear before the Court.

Article 41.

La Cour a le pouvoir d'indiquer, si elle estime que les circonstances l'exigent, quelles mesures conservatoires du droit de chacun doivent être prises à titre provisoire.

En attendant l'arrêt définitif, l'indication de ces mesures est immédiatement notifiée aux parties et au Conseil.

Article 42.

Les parties sont représentées par des agents.

Elles peuvent se faire assister devant la Cour par des conseils ou des avocats.

Article 43.

La procédure a deux phases: l'une écrite, l'autre orale.

La procédure écrite comprend la communication à juge et à partie des mémoires, des contre-mémoires, et, éventuellement, des répliques, ainsi que de toute pièce et document à l'appui.

La communication se fait par l'entremise du Greffe dans l'ordre et les délais déterminés par la Cour.

Toute pièce produite par l'une des parties doit être communiquée à l'autre en copie certifiée conforme.

La procédure orale consiste dans l'audition par la Cour des témoins, experts, agents, conseils et avocats.

Article 44.

Pour toute notification à faire à d'autres personnes que les agents, conseils et avocats, la Cour s'adresse directement au gouvernement de l'Etat sur le territoire duquel la notification doit produire effet.

Il en est de même s'il s'agit de faire procéder sur place à l'établissement de tous moyens de preuve.

Article 45.

Les débats sont dirigés par le Président et à défaut de celui-ci par le Vice-Président; en cas d'empêchement, par le plus ancien des juges présents.

Article 46.

L'audience est publique, à moins qu'il n'en soit autrement décidé par la Cour ou que les deux parties ne demandent que le public ne soit pas admis.

Article 47.

Il est tenu de chaque audience un procès-verbal signé par le Greffier et le Président.

Ce procès-verbal a seul caractère authentique.

Article 48.

La Cour rend des ordonnances pour la direction du procès, la détermination des formes et délais dans lesquels chaque partie doit finalement conclure; elle prend toutes les mesures que comporte l'administration des preuves.

Article 49.

La Cour peut, même avant tout débat, demander aux agents de produire tout document et de fournir toutes explications. En cas de refus, elle en prend acte.

Article 50.

A tout moment, la Cour peut confier une enquête ou une expertise à toute personne, corps, bureau, commission ou organe de son choix.

Article 51.

Au cours des débats, toutes questions utiles sont posées aux témoins et experts dans les conditions que fixera la Cour dans le règlement visé à l'article 30.

Article 52.

Après avoir reçu les preuves et témoignages dans les délais déterminés par elle, la Cour peut écarter toutes dépositions ou documents nouveaux qu'une des parties voudrait lui présenter sans l'assentiment de l'autre.

Article 53.

Lorsqu'une des parties ne se présente pas, ou s'abstient de faire valoir ses moyens, l'autre partie peut demander à la Cour de lui adjuger ses conclusions.

La Cour, avant d'y faire droit, doit s'assurer non seulement qu'elle a compétence aux termes des articles 36 et 37, mais que les conclusions sont fondées en fait et en droit.

Article 54.

Quand les agents, avocats et conseils ont fait valoir, sous le contrôle de la Cour, tous les moyens qu'ils jugent utiles, le Président prononce la clôture des débats.

La Cour se retire en chambre du Conseil pour délibérer.

Les délibérations de la Cour sont et restent secrètes.

Article 41.

The Court shall have the power to indicate, if it considers that circumstances so require, any provisional measures which ought to be taken to reserve the respective rights of either party.

Pending the final decision, notice of the measures suggested shall forthwith be given to the parties and the Council.

Article 42.

The parties shall be represented by Agents.

They may have the assistance of Counsel or Advocates before the Court.

Article 43.

The procedure shall consist of two parts: written and oral.

The written proceedings shall consist of the communication to the judges and to the parties of cases, counter-cases and, if necessary, replies; also all papers and documents in support.

These communications shall be made through the Registrar, in the order and within the time fixed by the Court.

A certified copy of every document produced by one party shall be communicated to the other party.

The oral proceedings shall consist of the hearing by the Court of witnesses, experts, agents, counsel and advocates.

Article 44.

For the service of all notices upon persons other than the agents, counsel and advocates, the Court shall apply direct to the Government of the State upon whose territory the notice has to be served.

The same provision shall apply whenever steps are to be taken to procure evidence on the spot.

Article 45.

The hearing shall be under the control of the President or, if he is unable to preside, of the Vice-President; if neither is able to preside, the senior judge present shall preside.

Article 46.

The hearing in Court shall be public, unless the Court shall decide otherwise, or unless the parties demand that the public be not admitted.

Article 47.

Minutes shall be made at each hearing, and signed by the Registrar and the President.

These minutes shall be the only authentic record.

Article 48.

The Court shall make orders for the conduct of the case, shall decide the form and time in which each party must conclude its arguments, and make all arrangements connected with the taking of evidence.

Article 49.

The Court may, even before the hearing begins, call upon the agents to produce any document, or to supply any explanations. Formal note shall be taken of any refusal.

Article 50.

The Court may, at any time, entrust any individual, body, bureau, commission or other organisation that it may select, with the task of carrying out an enquiry or giving an expert opinion.

Article 51.

During the hearing any relevant questions are to be put to the witnesses and experts under the conditions laid down by the Court in the rules of procedure referred to in Article 30.

Article 52.

After the Court has received the proofs and evidence within the time specified for the purpose, it may refuse to accept any further oral or written evidence that one party may desire to present unless the other side consents.

Article 53.

Whenever one of the parties shall not appear before the Court, or shall fail to defend his case, the other party may call upon the Court to decide in favour of his claim.

The Court must, before doing so, satisfy itself, not only that it has jurisdiction in accordance with Articles 36 and 37, but also that the claim is well founded in fact and law.

Article 54.

When, subject to the control of the Court, the agents, advocates and counsel have completed their presentation of the case, the President shall declare the hearing closed.

The Court shall withdraw to consider the judgment.

The deliberations of the Court shall take place in private and remain secret.

Article 55.

Les décisions de la Cour sont prises à la majorité des juges présents.
En cas de partage de voix, la voix du Président ou de celui qui le remplace est prépondérante.

Article 56.

L'arrêt est motivé.
Il mentionne les noms des juges qui y ont pris part.

Article 57.

Si l'arrêt n'exprime pas en tout ou en partie l'opinion unanime des juges, les dissidents ont le droit d'y joindre l'exposé de leur opinion individuelle.

Article 58.

L'arrêt est signé par le Président et par le Greffier. Il est lu en séance publique, les agents dûment prévenus.

Article 59.

La décision de la Cour n'est obligatoire que pour les parties en litige et dans le cas qui a été décidé.

Article 60.

L'arrêt est définitif et sans recours. En cas de contestation sur le sens et la portée de l'arrêt, il appartient à la Cour de l'interpréter, à la demande de toute partie.

Article 61.

La revision de l'arrêt ne peut être éventuellement demandée à la Cour qu'à raison de la découverte d'un fait de nature à exercer une influence décisive et qui, avant le prononcé de l'arrêt, était inconnu de la Cour et de la partie qui demande la revision, sans qu'il y ait, de sa part, faute à l'ignorer.

La procédure de revision s'ouvre par un arrêt de la Cour constatant expressément l'existence du fait nouveau, lui reconnaissant les caractères qui donnent ouverture à la revision, et déclarant de ce chef la demande recevable.

La Cour peut subordonner l'ouverture de la procédure en revision à l'exécution préalable de l'arrêt.

La demande en revision devra être formée au plus tard dans le délai de six mois après la découverte du fait nouveau.

Aucune demande de revision ne pourra être formée après l'expiration d'un délai de dix ans à dater de l'arrêt.

Article 62.

Lorsqu'un Etat estime que dans un différend un intérêt d'ordre juridique est pour lui en cause, il peut adresser à la Cour une requête, à fin d'intervention.

La Cour décide.

Article 63.

Lorsqu'il s'agit de l'interprétation d'une convention à laquelle ont participé d'autres Etats que les parties en litige, le Greffe les avertit sans délai.

Chacun d'eux a le droit d'intervenir au procès, et s'il exerce cette faculté, l'interprétation contenue dans la sentence est également obligatoire à son égard.

Article 64.

S'il n'en est autrement décidé par la Cour, chaque partie supporte ses frais de procédure.

CHAPITRE IV.

AVIS CONSULTATIFS.

Article 65.

Les questions sur lesquelles l'avis consultatif de la Cour est demandé sont exposées à la Cour par une requête écrite, signée soit par le Président de l'Assemblée ou par le Président du Conseil de la Société des Nations, soit par le Secrétaire général de la Société agissant en vertu d'instructions de l'Assemblée ou du Conseil.

La requête formule, en termes précis, la question sur laquelle l'avis de la Cour est demandé. Il y est joint tout document pouvant servir à élucider la question.

Article 66.

1. Le Greffier notifie immédiatement la requête demandant l'avis consultatif aux Membres de la Société des Nations par l'entremise du Secrétaire général de la Société, ainsi qu'aux Etats admis à ester en justice devant la Cour.

Article 55.

All questions shall be decided by a majority of the judges present at the hearing.
In the event of an equality of votes, the President or his deputy shall have a casting vote.

Article 56.

The judgment shall state the reasons on which it is based.
It shall contain the names of the judges who have taken part in the decision.

Article 57.

If the judgment does not represent in whole or in part the unanimous opinion of the judges, dissenting judges are entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

Article 58.

The judgment shall be signed by the President and by the Registrar. It shall be read in open Court, due notice having been given to the agents.

Article 59.

The decision of the Court has no binding force except between the parties and in respect of that particular case.

Article 60.

The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.

Article 61.

An application for revision of a judgment can be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also to the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.

The proceedings for revision will be opened by a judgment of the Court expressly recording the existence of the new fact, recognising that it has such a character as to lay the case open to revision, and declaring the application admissible on this ground.

The Court may require previous compliance with the terms of the judgment before it admits proceedings in revision.

The application for revision must be made at latest within six months of the discovery of the new fact.

No application for revision may be made after the lapse of ten years from the date of the sentence.

Article 62.

Should a State consider that it has an interest of a legal nature which may be affected by the decision in the case, it may submit a request to the Court to be permitted to intervene as a third party.

It will be for the Court to decide upon this request.

Article 63.

Whenever the construction of a convention to which States other than those concerned in the case are parties is in question the Registrar shall notify all such States forthwith.

Every State so notified has the right to intervene in the proceedings: but if it uses this right, the construction given by the judgment will be equally binding upon it.

Article 64.

Unless otherwise decided by the Court, each party shall bear its own costs.

CHAPTER IV.

Advisory Opinions.

Article 65.

Questions upon which the advisory opinion of the Court is asked shall be laid before the Court by means of a written request, signed either by the President of the Assembly or the President of the Council of the League of Nations, or by the Secretary-General of the League under instructions from the Assembly or the Council.

The request shall contain an exact statement of the question upon which an opinion is required, and shall be accompanied by all documents likely to throw light upon the question.

Article 66.

1. The Registrar shall forthwith give notice of the request for an advisory opinion to the Members of the League of Nations, through the Secretary-General of the League, and to any States entitled to appear before the Court.

En outre, à tout Membre de la Société, à tout Etat admis à ester devant la Cour et à toute organisation internationale jugés, par la Cour ou par le Président si elle ne siège pas, susceptibles de fournir des renseignements sur la question, le Greffier fait connaître, par communication spéciale et directe, que la Cour est disposée à recevoir des exposés écrits dans un délai à fixer par le Président, ou à entendre des exposés oraux au cours d'une audience publique tenue à cet effet.

Si un des Membres de la Société ou des Etats mentionnés au premier alinéa du présent paragraphe, n'ayant pas été l'objet de la communication spéciale ci-dessus visée, exprime le désir de soumettre un exposé écrit ou d'être entendu, la Cour statue.

2. Les Membres, Etats ou organisations qui ont présenté des exposés écrits ou oraux sont admis à discuter les exposés faits par d'autres Membres, Etats et organisations dans les formes, mesures et délais fixés, dans chaque cas d'espèce, par la Cour, ou, si elle ne siège pas, par le Président. A cet effet, le Greffier communique en temps voulu les exposés écrits aux Membres, Etats ou organisations qui en ont eux-mêmes présentés.

Article 67.

La Cour prononcera ses avis consultatifs en audience publique, le Secrétaire général de la Société des Nations et les représentants des Membres de la Société, des Etats et des organisations internationales directement intéressés étant prévenus.

Article 68.

Dans l'exercice de ses attributions consultatives, la Cour s'inspirera en outre des dispositions du Statut qui s'appliquent en matière contentieuse, dans la mesure où elle les reconnaîtra applicables.

Le soussigné certifie que le présent document contient copie conforme des Protocoles de 1920 et de 1929, ainsi que le texte amendé du Statut de la Cour.

Genève, le

Pour le Secrétaire général:

Conseiller juridique du Secrétariat.

The Registrar shall also, by means of a special and direct communication, notify any Member of the League or State admitted to appear before the Court or international organisation considered by the Court (or, should it not be sitting, by the President) as likely to be able to furnish information on the question, that the Court will be prepared to receive, within a time-limit to be fixed by the President, written statements, or to hear, at a public sitting to be held for the purpose, oral statements relating to the question.

Should any Member or State referred to in the first paragraph have failed to receive the communication specified above, such Member or State may express a desire to submit a written statement, or to be heard; and the Court will decide.

2. Members, States, and organisations having presented written or oral statements or both shall be admitted to comment on the statements made by other Members, States, or organisations in the form, to the extent and within the time-limits which the Court, or, should it not be sitting, the President, shall decide in each particular case. Accordingly, the Registrar shall in due time communicate any such written statements to Members, States, and organisations having submitted similar statements.

Article 67:

The Court shall deliver its advisory opinions in open Court, notice having been given to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations and to the representatives of Members of the League, of States and of international organisations immediately concerned.

Article 68.

In the exercise of its advisory functions, the Court shall further be guided by the provisions of the Statute which apply in contentious cases to the extent to which it recognises them to be applicable.

The undersigned certifies that the present document contains a true copy of the Protocols of 1920 and 1929, as well as the amended text of the Statute of the Court.

Geneva,

I. REPORT TO THE COUNCIL ADOPTED BY THE COMMITTEE ON JANUARY 15TH, 1936.

The Committee for the International Repression of Terrorism, set up under the resolution adopted by the Council on December 10th, 1934, held a second session at Geneva from January 7th to 15th, 1936.

The following were present at this session: [1]

His Excellency Count CARTON DE WIART (Belgium), Minister of State, President; accompanied by: M. Simon SASSERATH, Advocate in the Brussels Court of Appeal, Professor in the Belgian Institute of Graduate Studies.

Sir John Fischer WILLIAMS, C.B.E., K.C. (United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland); substitute: Mr. L. S. BRASS, Assistant Legal Adviser, Home Office.

M. E. J. GAJARDO (Chile), Head of the Permanent Office accredited to the League of Nations.

His Excellency M. Juan Manuel CANO Y TRUEBA (Spain), Minister Plenipotentiary, Head of the Legal Department of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs; substitute: M. José DE LAPUERTA Y DE LAS POZAS, Legal Adviser in the Legal Department of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs.

M. Jules BASDEVANT (France), Professor at the Faculty of Law in Paris, Legal Adviser at the Ministry for Foreign Affairs of the French Republic.

M. Béla DE SZENT-ISTVÁNY (Hungary), Ministerial Councillor at the Ministry for Foreign Affairs; expert: Colonel vitéz Aloyse BELDY.

His Excellency M. Ugo ALOISI (Italy), President of Chamber of the Court of Cassation of the Kingdom of Italy; substitute: Professor Tommaso PERASSI, Professor of International Law at the University of Rome.

M. Lucien BEKERMAN (Poland), Procureur in the Court of Cassation, Chief of Section in the Ministry of Justice.

His Excellency M. V. V. PELLA (Roumania), Minister Plenipotentiary, Professor at the Faculty of Law at the University of Bucharest; substitute: M. Slavko STOYKOVITCH, Professor at the Faculty of Law of the University of Belgrade.

M. E. DELAQUIS (Switzerland), Professor at the University of Geneva.

M. Victor BROWN (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics), Secretary of Embassy.

The Committee considered the replies of the Argentine and Egyptian Governments and the observations submitted by the Netherlands Government [2] on the text appended to the report made to the Council by the Committee at its first session (document C.184.M.102.1935.V).

It also received from the United Kingdom member proposals for amendments to the first part of the Convention and a note on the scheme for an International Criminal Court.

Lastly, the model texts for the repression of terrorism adopted in September 1935 by the sixth International Conference for the Unification of Penal Law at Copenhagen were communicated to the Committee.

Taking into account the considerations suggested by these communications and the observations submitted to it by certain of its members during its second session, the Committee proceeded to a revision of the texts concerning the prevention and punishment of terrorism, and to an examination of the provisions submitted to it at its first session by the Belgian, French, Roumanian and Spanish members for an International Criminal Court.

The Committee considered that it would be preferable to submit two draft Conventions to States for their appreciation.

The purpose of the first Convention would be the prevention and punishment of terrorism (Appendix I) and that of the second the creation of an International Criminal Court (Appendix II).

The Committee was led to adopt this solution by the fact that differences of opinion were manifested both as to the principle and the timeliness of the creation of an International Criminal Court.

Under this system, States which, for reasons of principle or any other reason, feel unable to hand over an accused person to the International Criminal Court in any circumstances, will have the option of becoming contracting parties to the first Convention only.

On the other hand, the acceptance by a State of the Convention for the Creation of an International Criminal Court is conditional on the acceptance by that State of the Convention for the Prevention and Repression of Terrorism.

[1] The following members of the Committee were not able to be present:
His Excellency M. Titus Komarnicki (Poland);
M. Eugène Hirschfeld (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics).

[2] See Appendix III.

The Soviet member considered that the Convention for Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism should contain a preamble emphasising the exceptional gravity of terrorist activities and the danger which they present to international relations. He also stressed the necessity of making it quite clear that the Convention refers to acts of political terrorism with a bearing on international relations.

The Committee considers that all forms of terrorism calling for international co-operation are covered by the texts which it has drawn up.

In the opinion of certain members of the Committee, States themselves should be put under an obligation to refrain from any acts likely to foster terrorist activities directed against public order and security in another State.

The Committee considered that such a provision would be superfluous, since international law imposes on every State the strict obligation, not only to refrain from resorting to such methods, but also to take measures on its own territory against any enterprise likely to endanger the public order and security of other States.

Lastly, the Chilian member, while recognising the connection which may exist between the prevention of terrorism and the subject of the falsification of passports, expressed the opinion that a Convention for Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism should not deal with this latter subject. In his opinion, this subject, which is of much wider range and regarding which certain recommendations now being put into force have already been made by an international conference, might be dealt with in an optional protocol annexed to the Convention.

The Committee thought, however, that provisions concerning the falsification of passports were necessary in a Convention for the prevention of acts of terrorism, since in most cases terrorists who carry on their activities in the territories of several States employ false passports for their journeys.

In submitting to the Council the results of its labours embodied in the present report and the texts annexed thereto, the Committee requests the Council, should it deem it desirable and opportune to do so, to forward the present report and its appendices to the Governments for their observations.

The observations of the Governments should reach the Secretary-General by July 15th, 1936, in order that they may be communicated to the Assembly at its ordinary session of 1936, at which a decision will have to be taken whether a diplomatic conference should be held in 1937 to draw up the Conventions contemplated by the Committee.

The Committee might, if necessary, hold a session shortly after the close of the next ordinary session of the Assembly in order to make a final revision of the texts to be submitted to the diplomatic conference, in the light of the observations of the Governments and the discussions of the Assembly.

January 15th, 1936.

(Signed) CARTON DE WIART,
Chairman.

Appendix I.

DRAFT CONVENTION FOR PREVENTION AND PUNISHMENT OF TERRORISM.

Article 1.

The purpose of the present Convention is to ensure international co-operation for the prevention and punishment of terrorism.

Article 2

With this object, each High Contracting Party should make the following acts criminal offences, whether they affect his own interests or those of another High Contracting Party, in all cases where they are directed to the overthrow of a Government or an interruption in the working of public services or a disturbance in international relations, by the use of violence or by the creation of a state of terror—viz.:

(1) Any act intended to cause death or grievous bodily harm or loss of liberty to:
- (a) Heads of States; persons exercising the prerogatives of the head of the State; their hereditary or designated successors;
- (b) The wives or husbands of the above-mentioned persons;
- (c) Members, officers or servants of Governments;
- (d) Members of constitutional or legislative bodies;
- (e) Persons holding judicial office;
- (f) Diplomatic representatives or consuls;
- (g) Members of the armed forces of the State;

(2) Wilful destruction of, or damage to:
- (a) Public buildings or other public property;
- (b) Means of communication and transport or installations belonging thereto;
- (c) Property belonging to public utility undertakings;

(3) Any wilful act calculated to endanger the lives of members of the public, and in particular interference with the working of means of communication, the use of explosives or incendiary materials, the propagation of contagious diseases, or the poisoning of drinking-water or food;

(4) Manufacture, possession, export, import, transport, sale, transfer or distribution of any material or object with a view to the commission of an act falling within the present article;

(5) Wilfully giving assistance by any means whatever to a person or an accomplice of a person who does any of the acts set out above.

Article 3.

1. Each High Contracting Party should also make criminal offences:

(1) Any attempt to commit any of the acts set out in Article 2;

(2) Any conspiracy, and any direct incitement, whether successful or not, to commit any of the acts set out in Article 2, any wilful complicity and any help given towards the commission of such an act, whether the conspiracy, incitement, complicity or help takes place or is given in the country where the act is, or is to be, committed or in another country.

2. Acts of participation in the offences dealt with in the present Convention will be treated as separate offences when the persons committing them can only be brought to trial in different countries.

3. The as to obligation incitement shall be without prejudice to any rules of domestic law as to treating incitement which has not taken place in public and has not been successful as a criminal offence.

Article 4.

No distinction should be made as regards the protection afforded by the criminal law between acts falling under Articles 2 and 3 which are directed against the State itself, its nationals or its property, and the same acts when directed against another High Contracting Party, his nationals or his property, but this provision is without prejudice to the characterisation of offences and other special provisions of national law, in relation to certain persons mentioned at point (1) of Article 2.

Article 5.

1. In countries where the principle of the international recognition of previous convictions is accepted, foreign convictions for the offences mentioned in Articles 2 and 3 will, within the conditions prescribed by the domestic law, be taken into account for the purpose of establishing habitual criminality.

2. Such convictions will further, in the case of High Contracting Parties whose law recognises foreign convictions, be taken into account, with or without special proceedings, for the purpose of imposing, in the manner provided by that legislation, incapacities, disqualifications or interdictions whether in the sphere of public or of private law.

Article 6.

In so far as parties civiles are admitted under the domestic law, foreign parties civiles, including, in proper cases, a High Contracting Party, should be entitled to all rights allowed to nationals by the law of the country in which the case is tried.

Article 7.

1. In countries where the principle of the extradition of nationals is not recognised, nationals who have returned to the territory of their own country after the commission abroad of an offence mentioned in Articles 2 or 3 should be punishable in the same manner as if the offence had been committed in their own country, even in a case where the offender has acquired his nationality after the commission of the offence.

2. This provision does not apply if in similar circumstances the extradition of a foreigner cannot be granted.

Article 8.

Foreigners who are on the territory of a High Contracting Party and who have committed abroad any of the acts set out in Articles 2 and 3 should be punished as though the act had been committed in the territory of that High Contracting Party, if the following conditions are realised —namely, that:

(a) Extradition has been demanded and could not be granted for a reason independent of the act itself;

(b) The law of the country of refuge, as a general rule, considers prosecution for offences committed abroad admissible;

(c) The foreigner is a national of a country which, as a general rule, considers the prosecution of foreigners for offences committed abroad admissible.

Article 9.

1. The acts set out in Articles 2 and 3 shall be deemed to be included as extradition crimes in any extradition treaty which has been, or may hereafter be, concluded between any of the High Contracting Parties.

2. The High Contracting Parties who do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall henceforward as between themselves recognise the acts set out in Articles 2 and 3 as extradition crimes.

3. Extradition shall be granted in conformity with the law of the country to which application is made and be conditional on reciprocity.

Article 10.

Where in virtue of the present Convention a High Contracting Party has to bring to trial a person accused of one of the offences provided for by Articles 2 and 3, the law of that High Contracting Party shall determine what court shall have jurisdiction to try such person.

Article 11.

1. The carrying, possession and distribution of firearms (other than smooth-bore sporting-guns) and of munitions and explosives should be subjected to regulation, and it should be a punishable offence to transfer, sell or distribute them to any person who does not hold such licence or make such declaration as may be required by the domestic legislation concerning the possession and carrying of such objects.

2. Manufacturers of firearms (other than smooth-bore sporting-guns) should be required to mark each arm with a serial number or other distinctive mark permitting it to be identified, and to keep a register of the names and addresses of purchasers.

Article 12.

1. The following acts should be punishable without regard to whether the passports or equivalent documents concerned are national or foreign, and without regard to the purpose with which the act was performed:

(1) Any fraudulent manufacture or alteration;

(2) The bringing into the country, the obtaining or the possession of forged or falsified passports or equivalent documents knowing them to be such;

(3) The obtaining of passports or equivalent documents by means of false declarations or documents;

(4) The utilisation of passports or equivalent documents which are forged or falsified or were made out for a person other than the bearer.

2. The wilful issue of passports or visas by competent officials to persons known not to have the right thereto under the applicable laws or regulations, with the object of assisting any activity contrary to the purpose of the present Convention, should also be punishable.

Article 13.

Each High Contracting Party should take on his territory appropriate measures to prevent any activity contrary to the purpose of the present Convention.

Article 14.

1. The results of the investigation of offences provided for in Articles 2 and 3 shall in each country and within the framework of the law of that country be centralised in an appropriate service.

2. Such service should be in close contact:

(a) With the police authorities of the country;

(b) With the corresponding services in other countries.

3. It should furthermore bring together all information calculated to facilitate the prevention and punishment of the acts mentioned in Articles 2 and 3 and should, as far as possible, keep itself in close contact with the judicial authorities of the country.

Article 15.

Each service, so far as it considers it desirable to do so, should notify to the services of the other countries, giving all necessary particulars:

(a) Any offence provided for in Articles 2 and 3, even if it is only a contemplated offence, such notification to be accompanied by descriptions, copies and photographs;

(b) Any search after, prosecution, arrest, conviction or expulsion of persons guilty of acts dealt with in the present Convention, the movements of such persons and any pertinent information with regard to them, as well as their description, finger-prints and photographs;

(c) Discovery of documents, arms, appliances or other objects connected with acts mentioned in Articles 2, 3, 11 and 12.

Article 16.

1. The High Contracting Parties shall be bound to execute letters of request in accordance with their domestic law and practice.

2. The transmission of letters of request relating to offences contemplated by the present Convention should be effected:

(a) By direct communication between the judicial authorities; or

(b) By direct correspondence between the Ministers of Justice of the two countries, or by direct communication from the authority of the country making the request to the Minister of Justice of the country to which the request is made; or

(c) Through the diplomatic or consular representative of the country making the request in the country to which the request is made; this representative shall send the letters of request direct to the competent judicial authority, or to the authority indicated by the Government of the country to which the request is made, and shall receive direct from such authority the papers constituting the execution of the letters of request.

3. In cases (a) and (c), a copy of the letters of request shall always be sent simultaneously to the superior authority of the country to which application is made.

4. Unless otherwise agreed, the letters of request shall be drawn up in the language of the authority making the request, provided always that the country to which the request is made may require a translation in its own language, certified correct by the authority making the request.

5. Each High Contracting Party shall notify to each of the other High Contracting Parties the method or methods of transmission mentioned above which he will recognise for the letters of request of the latter High Contracting Party.

6. Until such notification is made by a High Contracting Party, his existing procedure in regard to letters of request shall remain in force.

7. Execution of letters of request shall not give rise to a claim for reimbursement of charges or expenses of any nature whatever other than expenses of experts.

8. Nothing in the present article shall be construed as an undertaking on the part of the High Contracting Parties to adopt in criminal matters any form or methods of proof contrary to their laws.

Article 17.

The participation of a High Contracting Party in the present Convention shall not be interpreted as affecting that Party's attitude on the general question of criminal jurisdiction as a question of international law.

Article 18.

The present Convention does not affect the principle that, subject to the acts in question not being allowed to escape punishment, the characterisation of the various acts dealt with in the present Convention and the determination of the applicable penalties and of the methods of prosecution and trial depend in each country upon the general rules of the domestic law. It further does not impair the right of the High Contracting Parties to make such rules as they consider proper regarding the effect of mitigating circumstances, the right of pardon and the right of amnesty.

Article 19.

The High Contracting Parties agree that any disputes which may arise between them relating to the interpretation or application of the present Convention shall, if they cannot be settled by direct negotiations or by an arbitration arranged between the parties, be referred for decision to the Permanent Court of International Justice. If any or all of the High Contracting Parties who are parties to such a dispute should not be parties to the Protocol of December 16th, 1920, relating to the Permanent Court of International Justice, the dispute shall be referred, at the choice of the parties and in accordance with the constitutional procedure of each party, either to the Permanent Court of International Justice or to a court of arbitration constituted in accordance with the Convention of October 18th, 1907, for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, or to some other court of arbitration.

Article 20.

1. The present Convention, of which the French and English texts are both authentic, shall bear to-day's date. Until . . . it shall be open for signature on behalf of any Member of the League of Nations and on behalf of any non-member State which was represented at the Conference which drew up the present Convention or to which a copy is communicated by the Council of the League of Nations.

2. The present Convention shall be ratified, and the instruments of ratification shall be transmitted to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who will notify their receipt to all the Members of the League and to the non-member States mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

Article 21.

1. After the . . . the present Convention shall be open to accession on behalf of any Member of the League of Nations and any of the non-member States referred to in Article 20 on whose behalf it has not been signed.

2. The instruments of accession shall be transmitted to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who will notify their receipt to all the Members of the League and to the non-member States referred to in Article 20.

Article 22.

Any Member of the League of Nations or non-member State which is ready to ratify the Convention under the second paragraph of Article 20, or to accede to the Convention under Article 21, but desires to be allowed to make reservations with regard to the application of the Convention, may so inform the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who shall forthwith communicate such reservations to the Members of the League and non-member States on whose behalf ratifications or accessions have been deposited and enquire whether they have any objection thereto. Should the reservation be formulated within two years from the entry into force of the Convention, the same enquiry shall be addressed to Members of the League and non-member States whose signature of the Convention has not been followed by ratification. If, within six months from the date of the Secretary-General's communication, no objection to the reservation has been made, it shall be treated as accepted by the High Contracting Parties.

Article 23.

Ratification of or accession to the present Convention by any High Contracting Party implies an assurance by him that his legislation and his administrative organisation are in conformity with the rules contained in the Convention.

Article 24.

1. Any High Contracting Party may declare, at the time of signature, ratification or accession, that, in accepting the present Convention, he is not assuming any obligation in respect of all or any of his colonies, protectorates, overseas territories, or the territories under his suzerainty or territories in respect of which a mandate has been confided to him; the present Convention shall, in that case, not be applicable to the territories named in such declaration.

2. Any High Contracting Party may subsequently notify the Secretary-General of the League of Nations that he desires the present Convention to apply to all or any of the territories in respect of which the declaration provided for in the preceding paragraph has been made. The Convention shall, in that case, apply to all the territories named in such notification ninety days after the receipt thereof by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

3. Any High Contracting Party may at any time declare that he desires the present Convention to cease to apply to all or any of his colonies, protectorates, overseas territories, or the territories under his suzerainty or territories in respect of which a mandate has been confided to him. The Convention shall, in that case, cease to apply to the territories named in such declaration one year after the receipt thereof by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

4. The Secretary-General of the League of Nations shall communicate to all the Members of the League of Nations and to the non-member States the declarations and notifications received in virtue of the present Article.

Article 25.

The present Convention shall not come into force until . . . ratifications or accessions on behalf of Members of the League of Nations or non-member States have been deposited. The date of its coming into force shall be the ninetieth day after the receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations of the . . . th ratification or accession.

Article 26.

After the coming into force of the Convention in accordance with Article 25, each subsequent ratification or accession shall take effect on the ninetieth day from the date of its receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

Article 27.

The present Convention may be denounced on behalf of any Member of the League of Nations or non-member State by a notification in writing addressed to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who will inform all the Members of the League and the non-member States referred to in Article 20. Such denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of its receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, and shall operate only in respect of the Member of the League or non-member State on whose behalf it was notified.

Article 28.

The present Convention shall be registered by the Secretariat of the League of Nations on the date of its coming into force.

Appendix II.

Draft Convention for the Creation of an International Criminal Court.

Article 1.

An International Criminal Court for the trial, as hereinafter provided, of persons accused of an offence dealt with in the Convention for Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism of to-day's date is hereby established.

Article 2.

The Court shall be a permanent body but shall only sit when it is seized of proceedings for an offence within its jurisdiction.

Article 3.

1. In the cases referred to in Article 10 of the Convention for Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism, each High Contracting Party to the present Convention shall be entitled, instead of prosecuting before his own tribunal, to send the accused for trial before the Court.

2. A High Contracting Party shall further be entitled, instead of extraditing, to send the accused for trial before the Court if the State demanding extradition is also a party to the present Convention.

Article 4.

The Court shall be composed of a body of judges chosen regardless of their nationality from amongst jurists who are acknowledged authorities on criminal law and who are or have been members of courts of criminal jurisdiction or possess the qualifications required for appointment to judicial office in their own countries.

Article 5.

The Court shall consist of five regular judges and five deputy judges, each belonging to a different nationality.

Article 6.

1. Any Member of the League of Nations, and any non-member State, in regard to which the present Convention is in force may nominate not more than two candidates for appointment as judges of the Court.

2. The Council of the League of Nations will be requested to choose the regular and deputy judges from the persons so nominated.

Article 7.

1. Judges hold office for ten years. They may be re-appointed.
2. Judges shall continue to discharge their duties until their places have been filled.
3. Though replaced, judges shall finish any cases which they may have begun.

Article 8.

A judge appointed in place of a judge whose period of appointment had not expired will hold the appointment for the remainder of his predecessor's term.

Article 9.

1. Deputy judges shall be called upon to sit in the order laid down in a list.

2. The list shall be prepared by the Court and shall have regard, first, to priority of appointment, and, secondly, to age.

Article 10.

1. Every two years, one regular and one deputy judge shall retire.

2. The order of retirement shall, in the first instance, be determined under the authority of the Council of the League of Nations by drawing lots.

Article 11.

Any vacancy, whether occurring through the expiration of a judge's term of office or for any other cause, shall be filled as provided in Article 6.

Article 12.

A member of the Court cannot be dismissed unless in the unanimous opinion of the other members he has ceased to fulfil the required conditions.

Article 13.

The High Contracting Parties shall grant the members of the Court diplomatic privileges and immunities when engaged on the business of the Court.

Article 14.

1. The Court shall elect its President and Vice-President for two years; they may be re-elected.

2. The work of Registry of the Court shall be performed by the Registry of the Permanent Court of International Justice, if that Court consents.

Article 15.

The seat of the Court shall be established at The Hague. For any particular case, the President may take the opinion of the Court and the Court may decide to meet elsewhere.

Article 16.

A High Contracting Party who avails himself of the right to send a person for trial before the Court shall notify the President through the Registry.

Article 17.

The Court shall apply the substantive criminal law of the State on whose territory the offence was committed. Any dispute as to what is the applicable substantive law shall be decided by the Court.

Article 18.

If, for some special reason, a member of the Court considers he should not sit to hear a particular case, he shall so notify the President so soon as he has been informed that the Court is seized of that case.

Article 19.

1. The presence of five members shall be necessary to enable the Court to sit.

2. If the presence of five regular judges is not secured, the necessary number shall be made up by calling upon the deputy judges.

Article 20.

Where the Court has to apply, in accordance with Article 17, the law of a State of which no sitting judge is a national, the Court may invite a jurist who is an acknowledged authority on such law to sit with it in a consultative capacity as a legal assessor.

Article 21.

So soon as the Court is seized of a case, the President shall notify the State against which the offence was directed, and the State on the territory of which the offence was committed. These States, and any other States, may put before the Court the results of their investigations and any evidence and objects connected with the crime which they have in their possession; these shall be included in the file of the case.

Article 22.

The right to conduct the prosecution shall rest with the State against which the offence was committed. Failing that State, it shall belong to the State on the territory of which the offence was committed, and failing also that latter State, then to the State by which the Court was seized.

Article 23.

Any State or person injured by an offence may constitute itself or himself partie civile before the Court, inspect the file and submit a statement of its case to the Court.

Article 24.

The file of the case and the statement of the partie civile shall be communicated to the person who is before the Court for trial.

Article 25.

The parties may propose the hearing of witnesses and experts by the Court, which shall be free to decide whether they shall be summoned and heard. The Court may always, even of its own motion, hear other witnesses and experts.

Article 26.

1. The Court shall decide whether a person who has been sent before it for trial shall be placed or remain under arrest. Where necessary, it shall determine on what conditions he may be provisionally set at liberty.

2. The State on the territory of which the Court is sitting shall place at the Court's disposal a place of internment and the necessary staff of warders for the custody of the accused.

Article 27.

Any letters of request which the Court considers it necessary to have despatched shall at its demand be addressed by the High Contracting Party on the territory of which the Court is sitting to the State competent to give effect thereto.

Article 28.

No examination of the person sent to the Court for trial, no hearing of witnesses or experts and no confrontation may take place before the Court except in the presence of the counsel for that person, the representatives of the States mentioned in Article 21 and the representatives of the parties civiles, or after due summons to such persons to be present.

Article 29.

1. Accused persons may be defended by regular members of a Bar who have been approved by the Court.

2. If provision is not made for the conduct of the defence by a barrister chosen by the accused and approved by the Court, the Court shall assign to each accused person not having an approved counsel for his defence a counsel selected from advocates duly admitted to a Bar.

Article 30.

1. The hearings before the Court shall be public.

2. Where, nevertheless, the Court decides, by a reasoned and unanimous judgment, that to hear particular witnesses or experts in public would be calculated to prejudice good international relations, it may decide that such hearing shall take place in camera.

Article 31.

The Court shall sit in private to consider its judgment.

Article 32.

The decisions of the Court shall be by majority of the judges.

Article 33.

Every judgment or order of the Court shall state the reasons therefor and be read at a public hearing by the President.

Article 34.

The Court may not entertain charges against any person except the person sent before it for trial, or try any accused person for any offences other than those for which he has been sent for trial.

Article 35.

1. The Court may sentence the persons sent before it to restore property or to pay damages.

2. High Contracting Parties in whose territory objects to be restored or property belonging to convicted persons is situated shall be bound to take all the measures provided by their own laws to ensure the execution of the sentences.

3. The provisions of the preceding paragraph shall also apply where pecuniary penalties inflicted by the Court or costs of proceedings have to be recovered.

Article 36.

1. Sentences involving loss of liberty shall be executed, unless the Court otherwise decides, by the State whose substantive criminal law has been applied.

2. The Court shall determine the way in which any fines shall be dealt with.

Article 37.

Where sentence of death has been pronounced, the State on whose territory such sentence is to be executed shall be entitled to substitute therefor the penalty which, under the law applied by the Court, comes next in order of severity.

Article 38.

The right of pardon shall be exercised by the State which has to enforce the penalty. It shall first consult the President of the Court.

Article 39.

1. Against convictions pronounced by the Court, no proceedings other than an application for revision shall be allowable.

2. The Court in its rules shall determine the cases in which an application for revision may be made.

Article 40.

1. The salaries of the judges shall be payable by the States of which they are nationals on a scale fixed by the High Contracting Parties.

2. There shall be created by contributions of the High Contracting Parties a common fund from which the costs of the proceedings and other expenses involved in the trial of cases shall be defrayed, subject to recovery from the accused if he is convicted. The special allowance to the Registrar and the expenses of the Registry shall be met out of this fund.

Article 41.

The Court's archives shall be in the charge of the Registrar.

Article 42.

The Court shall establish regulations to govern its practice and procedure.

Article 43.

1. The Court shall decide any questions as to its own jurisdiction arising during the hearing of a case; it shall for this purpose apply the provisions of the present Convention and of the Convention for Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism and the general principles of law.

2. Should a High Contracting Party, not being the Party who sent the case in question for trial to the Court, dispute the extent of the Court's jurisdiction in relation to the jurisdiction of his own national courts, this issue shall be treated as arising between such High Contracting Party and the High Contracting Party who sent the case for trial to the Court, and shall be settled as provided in the next following article.

Article 44.

The High Contracting Parties agree that any disputes which may arise between them relating to the interpretation or application of the present Convention shall, if they cannot be settled by direct negotiations, be referred for decision to the Permanent Court of International Justice. If any or all of the High Contracting Parties who are parties to such a dispute should not be parties to the Protocol of December 16th, 1920, relating to the Permanent Court of International Justice, the dispute shall be referred, at the choice of the parties and in accordance with the constitutional procedure of each party, either to the Permanent Court of International Justice or to a court of arbitration constituted in accordance with the Convention of October 18th, 1907, for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, or to some other court of arbitration.

Article 45.

1. The present Convention, of which the French and English texts are both authentic, shall bear to-day's date. Until . . . it shall be open for signature on behalf of any Member of the League of Nations or non-member State on whose behalf the Convention for Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism of to-day's date has been signed.

2. The present Convention shall be ratified and the instruments of ratification shall be transmitted to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who will notify their receipt to all the Members of the League and to the non-member States mentioned in the preceding paragraph. Ratification shall only be allowable if the Member of the League or non-member State has ratified the Convention for Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism.

Article 46.

1. After . . . the present Convention shall be open to accession on behalf of any Member of the League of Nations and any of the non-member States referred to in Article 45 on whose behalf the Convention for Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism has been ratified but the present Convention has not been signed.

2. The instruments of accession shall be transmitted to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who will notify their receipt to all the Members of the League and to the non-member States referred to in Article 45.

Article 47.

1. Any High Contracting Party may declare, at the time of signature, ratification or accession, that, in accepting the present Convention, he is not assuming any obligation in respect of all or any of his colonies, protectorates, overseas territories, or the territories under his suzerainty or territories in respect of which a mandate has been confided to him; the present Convention shall, in that case, not be applicable to the territories named in such declaration.

2. Any High Contracting Party may subsequently notify the Secretary-General of the League of Nations that he desires the present Convention to apply to all or any of the territories in respect of which the declaration provided for in the preceding paragraph has been made. The Convention shall, in that case, apply to all the territories named in such notification ninety days after the receipt thereof by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

3. Any High Contracting Party may, at any time, declare that he desires the present Convention to cease to apply to all or any of his colonies, protectorates, overseas territories or the territories under his suzerainty or territories in respect of which a mandate has been confided to him. The Convention shall, in that case, cease to apply to the territories named in such declaration one year after the receipt thereof by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

4. The Secretary-General of the League of Nations shall communicate to all the Members of the League of Nations and to all the non-member States the declarations and notifications received in virtue of the present Article.

Article 48.

The present Convention shall not come into force until . . . ratifications or accessions on behalf of Members of the League of Nations or non-member States have been deposited. The date of its coming into force shall be the ninetieth day after the receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations of the . . . ratification or accession.

Article 49.

After the coming into force of the Convention in accordance with Article 48, each subsequent ratification or accession shall take effect on the ninetieth day from the date of its receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

Article 50.

1. The present Convention may be denounced on behalf of any Member of the League of Nations or non-member State by a notification in writing addressed to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who will inform all the Members of the League and the non-member States referred to in Article 45. Such denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of its receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, and shall operate only in respect of the Member of the League or non-member State on whose behalf it was notified.

2. Denunciation of the Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism shall ipso facto involve denunciation of the present Convention.

Article 51.

A case brought before the Court before denunciation of the present Convention, or the making of a declaration as provided in Article 47, paragraph 3, shall, notwithstanding, continue to be heard and judgment be given by the Court.

Article 52.

1. The present Convention may be amended, either by the procedure by which it was concluded or by negotiations between the High Contracting Parties.

2. If the amended Convention does not secure acceptance by all the High Contracting Parties, it may notwithstanding be put into force by the majority of those Parties after three months' notice to the other High Contracting Parties.

3. At the end of the three months, the present Convention shall cease to be in force.

Article 53.

The present Convention shall be registered by the Secretariat of the League of Nations on the date of its coming into force.

Appendix III.

REPLIES FROM GOVERNMENTS [1] RECEIVED AFTER THE FIRST SESSION OF THE COMMITTEE.

Argentine Republic.

[Translation.] August 8th, 1935.

The Ministry for Foreign Affairs and Worship of the Argentine Republic has the honour to refer to the Circular Letter of the Secretary-General of the League of Nations (219.1934.V), and to transmit to him, for information, the following report by the police of the Federal capital:

With a view to the suppression of all criminal activities, the police keep a constant watch upon the movements of all suspected persons. Such being the case, they devoted special attention to preventing incitement to and the commission of terrorist offences. Joint international action by the Governments with a view to the suppression of such offences—as advocated in the attached report—would make for success in this sphere by ensuring full co-operation between the various countries, all of which are equally affected by the dissemination of extremist ideas; so dangerous indeed is the character of these ideas that their propagation has created a serious problem. The police, after consideration of the proposals for the suppression of such offences, are accordingly of opinion that the following suggestions might perhaps represent a useful contribution to the achievement of the end in view.

The pooling of information, which is a condition of the proposed co-operation, should take the form of an exchange of particulars regarding known or suspected terrorists, such as finger-prints, full details of parentage and previous history, together with photographs and the chief characteristics of the activities of such persons: constant supervision of all bodies, organisations, etc., which cannot establish their bona fide character and, more particularly, a close watch upon groups of suspected individuals; the immediate dissolution of any body proved to be contemplating terrorist action; the detention and careful identification of the members of such organisations without prejudice to the appropriate legal penalties, etc., together with confiscation of all periodicals, books, pamphlets or other publications designed to further terrorist propaganda, and the deportation to their own countries of all individuals regarded as dangerous.

Egypt.

[Translation.] September 29th, 1935.

I have the honour to inform you that the Egyptian Government is in full sympathy with the aims of the Council of the League of Nations in taking steps for the framing of a preliminary draft international Convention to ensure the repression of conspiracies or crimes committed with a political and terrorist purpose.

[1] The first series of replies is reproduced in document C.184.M.102.1935.V, Appendix IV.

While expressing its agreement with regard to the proposed bases for the conclusion of the above-mentioned international Convention, the Government feels bound to draw the Committee of Experts' attention to the fact that in view of the existence in its territory of the consular courts of the Capitulation Powers, it considers that recourse to the International Criminal Court should be compulsory whenever any offence, which in the Egyptian Government's opinion constitutes an act of political terrorism, is committed in Egyptian territory by a national of any of the Capitulation Powers. In such cases, it would be for the Egyptian Government, the public peace of whose territory and the harmony of whose international relations having been disturbed by the said offence, to send the guilty person for trial before the International Criminal Court.

Furthermore, as regards the rules applicable to passports and identity papers, provision should be made for a stipulation similar to that included in the Convention on the control of the international trade in arms (Article 30) to the effect that the Capitulation Powers would undertake to punish offences of this kind committed by their nationals in the territory of the foreign State, with the same penalties as those laid down by their national laws and applicable in their territory. The Egyptian Government, for its part, is prepared, failing the application of penalties by the consular courts, to undertake to expel any foreigner guilty of any of the offences enumerated in paragraph C[1] of the bases for the conclusion of the Convention.

In the last place, the Egyptian Government agrees to exclude, in its relations with all other States, whether parties to Capitulations or not, assassination from the category of political offences not giving rise to extradition both in the application of extradition treaties and in extradition on the basis of reciprocity.

Netherlands.

[Translation.] September 5th, 1935.

With reference to the Circular Letter of the Secretariat of the League of Nations dated December 27th, 1934 (219.1934.V), concerning the international repression of terrorism, and after reading the report submitted to the Council on the first session of the Committee set up for this purpose, the Netherlands Government desires to submit the following observations and to request the Secretary-General to transmit them to the members of the said Committee in order that it may be aware of them before it meets for its second session.

The French Government in its memorandum and in the French representative's speech in the Council of the League of Nations on December 8th, 1934, expressed the opinion that there was every ground for considering whether international solidarity imposed on every State the duty of co-operating as far as possible in the repression of terrorist crimes for a political purpose. The Netherlands Government shares this opinion in principle; but it considers that the great divergences which at present exist in several countries as regards the fundamental bases of national policy calls for some caution in this connection.

The preliminary draft suggests in Article 2 that each State should render punishable a series of political offences, Most of these are offences which in several countries, including the Netherlands, are already punishable when they concern the country itself. The Netherlands Penal Code also renders punishable certain political offences directed against a foreign State; for example any attempt on the life or liberty of a reigning prince or other head of State is punishable.

As regards Article 2, the Netherlands Government supposes that it does not refer to offences which are not of an international character—i.e., an offence committed by a national against his own State in the territory of that State, without the criminal having gone to another country. On this understanding, the Netherlands Government is prepared to consider an extension of the category of punishable offences as proposed in Article 2; but it cannot accept the text of Article 2 as drafted by the Committee. It considers that the enumeration of the categories of offences which are to be covered by the Convention is much too wide. In the Government's opinion, it would be desirable to limit the offences covered by this article both as regards the persons against whom they are directed and as regards the nature of the offences. The same applies to the later paragraphs of Article 2. If it is desired to render punishable all kinds of incitements and all attempts to commit the offences provided for in the first three paragraphs, too wide a field is covered. In the same connection, attention is drawn to the eighth paragraph, in which reference is made, not only to assistance given to the criminal himself, but also to assistance given to an accomplice of that criminal. Particularly as regards preparatory acts, the Netherlands Government considers that, in the campaign against terrorism, freedom of speech should only be limited to the extent that is strictly necessary.

The Netherlands Government also wishes to lay stress on the necessity of clearly defining the relation between Article 1 and Article 2. It supposes that the Committee has rightly wished to indicate that the offences mentioned in Article 2 only come within the scope of the Convention if they are covered at the same time by the definition given in Article 1. In other words, the term " intentional " which occurs several times in Article 2 means that the offences in question must be committed for the purpose of causing a change in or impediment to the operation of the public authorities or services of the contracting parties or a disturbance of international relations. The Netherlands Government suggests that the relation between Article 1 and Article 2 would be made clearer by reproducing Article 1 in the form of a preamble and by inserting in Article 2—which would then become Article 1—a very precise reference to the preamble.

[1] See document C.184.M.102.1935.V, page 23.

The last paragraph of Article 2 seems somewhat obscure; it would be preferable to replace it by the text contained in the Roumanian Government's memorandum (page 17, No. 6, paragraph 4):

> " Acts of participation in the offences covered by the Convention should be deemed to be separate offences when committed in different countries."

As regards Article 3, the Netherlands Government does not think it advisable to forbid States wishing to do so to make a distinction in their penal codes, in the scale of punishment for offences mentioned in Article 2, between acts directed against the State itself, its nationals or property, and acts directed against another contracting party or his nationals or property.

As the Netherlands does not recognise the principle of the international recognition of previous convictions, our Government is not concerned with the first paragraph of Article 4. As regards the second paragraph, the question of the recognition by other States of legal incapacity, etc., referred to here seems to be of too general a nature for a rule in this connection to be inserted in a draft Convention on terrorism.

In the Netherlands, in which the principle of the extradition of nationals is not recognised, and to which Article 6 therefore applies, Article 5 of the Penal Code stipulates that the Netherlands law covers any act committed by a Netherlands national abroad, on condition that this act constitutes a crime according to Netherlands penal law and is at the same time punishable under the law of the country in which it was committed. Nevertheless, Article 6 would not be wholly acceptable, unless the enumeration contained in Article 2 was considerably modified.

As regards Article 7, the Netherlands Government was doubtful as to the meaning of the expression " a country whose internal legislation recognises as a general rule the principle of the prosecution of offences committed abroad ". Would, for example, the Netherlands, which, in the above-mentioned Article 5 of its Penal Code, allows in certain cases for the prosecution of offences committed abroad, be considered as belonging to the category of countries covered by this article ? If, so, the Netherlands Government could not accept Article 7 in the general form given to it by the Committee. In particular, in the Netherlands Government's opinion, penal law should not be made applicable to offences directed against a foreign State and committed by a foreigner outside its territory.

Article 8 regarding extradition gives rise to the following observations:

The Netherlands, which makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty, is not prepared to consider all the offences referred to in the present Article 2 as being deemed to be included as extradition crimes in any extradition treaty which has been or may hereafter be concluded between the Netherlands and all the other contracting States.

Moreover, the extradition treaties hitherto concluded by the Netherlands Government are based in general on the principle that extradition cannot be allowed for political offences. In view of the wide differences of political opinion which at present exist in different countries on fundamental questions, the time does not seem favourable for completely abrogating this rule. The present circumstances as regards the national policies of different States are not such as to induce the Netherlands to depart from their historic traditions as regards the hospitality offered to political refugees.

In Article 12, it would seem advisable to delete the words " of foreigners ", since States must also take appropriate measures to prevent any activity " of nationals " in the connection referred to.

In the Netherlands Government's opinion, it will be necessary to stipulate clearly the idea of reciprocity between the contracting parties as a basis for the new Convention. In this connection, it would be well to replace in some of the articles the expression " abroad " by the expression " in the territory of one of the High Contracting Parties ".

Her Majesty's Government considers that the establishment of an international jurisdiction would no doubt offer advantages. Particularly in cases in which the State on whose territory the accused has taken refuge objects to extraditing the accused to the injured State, proceedings before an international court might be a useful device likely to relieve the strain between the nations involved. Thus, the objections put forward above to the extension of extradition might be attenuated by the institution of an international court and by the application of Article 9 of the draft Convention.

Nevertheless, an examination of the provisions drawn up by the Belgian, French, Roumanian and Spanish members of the Committee with regard to the organisation and working of such a Court leads us to believe that the actual establishment of such an international jurisdiction may still encounter many obstacles; for there are numerous questions for which no satisfactory solution has yet been found. The Netherlands Government ventures to mention a few of these questions below.

As regards the composition of the Court, the chief aim must be to guarantee the absolute impartiality of this new organ. The Netherlands Government wonders whether it would not be preferable to modify Article 21 on these lines by introducing the rule contained in the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, which lays down that the Assembly and the Council shall proceed to the election of judges independently of one another.

The Netherlands Government wishes to thank the delegations which drew up the rules for the Court for suggesting that The Hague should be chosen as the seat of the new international jurisdiction. While associating itself in principle with the rules contained in the draft with regard to the seat of the Court, our Government wishes to suggest that the court itself should also be entitled to decide whether it should sit in the territory of the contracting party which desires to send a person for trial before the Court; on the basis of the present text of Article 33, paragraph 2, the Court would not possess this right.

Article 34, paragraph 2, also seems to give too much latitude to the contracting party who sends a person for trial before the Court; a general rule in this connection would be preferable.

Contrary to Article 35, paragraph 1, the Netherlands Government would prefer not to entrust the presidency of the Court to a judge who is a national of a State specially concerned in the case.

Articles 40 to 44 regarding preliminary investigations will not be sufficient in cases in which such investigations have not yet taken place in the territory of the State which has brought the case before the Court.

Articles 56 and 57, which deal with the execution of the sentence, raise several questions. Can a State on whose territory the Court has sat and to which the latter has applied with a view to the execution of the penalty be expected to give effect to this request if that State is not itself responsible for the choice of the seat ? As regards Article 57, it should be borne in mind that the penalty which is regarded as the next lighter penalty by the law which the Court has applied might be one which could not be applied in the State in whose territory it would have to be executed; an example is the Netherlands, in which not only the death penalty does not exist, but the Penal Code provides neither for forced labour nor deportation.

In the Netherlands Government's opinion, the Council of the League of Nations, which is an eminently political body, does not seem to be an appropriate body for exercising the right of pardon referred to in Article 58.

As regards Article 59, paragraph 2, allowance must be made for cases in which the law that has been applied makes no provision for revision of cases.

2. REPORT ADOPTED BY THE COUNCIL ON JANUARY 23RD, 1936.

[C.60.1936.V.]

On December 10th, 1934, the Council adopted a resolution setting up a Committee of experts, to be designated by certain Governments selected by the Council, for the purpose of studying the question of international co-operation against terrorism, and drawing up a preliminary draft international Convention on the subject. The Counicl referred to the Committee for consideration certain suggestions formulated by the French Government and any suggestions which other Governments might desire to make. A number of Governments, accordingly, sent proposals and observations to the Committee. Included among the suggestions of the French Government was a proposal for the establishment of an international criminal court competent in certain contingencies to try persons accused of acts of terrorism.

A report on the first session of the Committee, held in April-May 1935, was drawn up by the Committee and circulated to the Council and the Members of the League (document C.184. M.102.1935.V).

As the result of a second session in the present month, the Committee has now presented to the Council a report putting forward a draft Convention for International Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism and a draft Convention for the Creation of an International Criminal Court. Differences of opinion existed in the Committee as to the principle and utility of the establishment of the international criminal court, and it was, therefore, thought wise to embody the provisions dealing with this subject in a separate instrument which the parties to the Convention dealing with terrorism would be free to accept or not.

The Council's resolution of 1934 provided that the procedure laid down for the conclusion of conventions in a resolution of the Assembly of September 25th, 1931, should be followed. In accordance with this procedure, the Committee asks that the Council will circulate its report and the annexed draft Conventions to the Governments for their observations, and that the report and draft Conventions, together with the Governments' observations, shall be submitted to the Assembly at its session of this year. The Committee further suggests that the Assembly, as it is entitled to do under its resolution of 1931, should consider this year whether the procedure laid down in the resolution might not be shortened and a diplomatic conference for consideration of the draft Conventions be convened in 1937. If necessary, the Committee could meet before the conference to make any alterations in the drafts which might seem desirable in the light of the Governments' observations and the discussion in the Assembly.

It is not necessary for the Council to discuss the work of the Committee now. I propose that it should accept the procedure recommended by the Committee and accordingly adopt the following resolution:

> " The Council,
> " Having received the report of the Committee for the International Repression of Terrorism:
> " Directs the Secretary-General to transmit the report to the Governments of the Members of the League and of Germany, the United States of America, Brazil, Costa Rica, Danzig, Egypt and Japan, with the request that these Governments will be so good as to transmit to him, by July 15th next, any observations which they may wish to make;
> " And decides to place the report of the Committee, together with the draft Conventions and the Governments' observations, on the agenda of the next ordinary session of the Assembly."

[Communicated to the Assembly, the Council and the Members of the League.]

REPORT ADOPTED BY THE COMMITTEE.

1. The Committee was set up under a resolution of the Council of September 26th, 1935 (Appendix 1), for the purpose of reporting to the Council and the Assembly on two questions—namely :

(a) The question of the number of the Members of the Council, a question which was raised in 1933 in order to give satisfaction to the claims of those who have come to be known as the " non-grouped " States ; and

(b) The question of the representation of Asia on the Council, and, in particular, of the claim of China to re-enter the Council, as stated in the letter from the Chinese Government which is referred to below.

The Governments composing the Committee were represented as follows :

Argentine Republic: His Excellency M. RUIZ GUIÑAZÚ ; Austria: His Excellency M. Emerich PFLÜGL ; Belgium: M. Maurice BOURQUIN [1] ; United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland: Viscount CRANBORNE (first and second sessions), Viscount CECIL OF CHELWOOD (third session) ; Canada: Dr. RIDDELL (first and third sessions), Dr. RENAUD (second session) ; China: His Excellency M. QUO Tai-Chi (substitute : His Excellency Dr. Hoo Chi-Tsai) ; France: M. René MASSIGLI ; Iran: His Excellency M. SEPAHBODI (first session), His Excellency M. Mostafa ADLE (second session), His Excellency M. Mostafa ADLE and M. Nasrollah ENTEZAM (third session) ; Italy: M. Guido ROCCO ; Latvia: His Excellency M. Jules FELDMANS ; Peru: His Excellency Dr. Francisco TUDELA ; Poland: M. KULSKI (first session), His Excellency M. Tytus KOMARNICKI (second and third sessions) ; Roumania: M. N. HIOTT (first session), His Excellency M. Constantin ANTONIADE (second and third sessions) ; Spain: M. Juan TEIXIDOR Y SANCHEZ ; Sweden: His Excellency M. K. I. WESTMAN ; Turkey: His Excellency M. Cemal Hüsnü TARÁY (first and second sessions), His Excellency M. N. SADAK (third session) ; Union of Soviet Socialist Republics: M. Boris STEIN (first and third sessions), M. HOERSCHELMANN (second session).

The Committee elected M. Guido Rocco (Italy) as Chairman and M. M. BOURQUIN (Belgium) as Vice-Chairman. Viscount CECIL (United Kingdom) was appointed Rapporteur.

[1] The representative of Belgium unfortunately met with an accident which prevented him from taking part in the work of the third session of the Committee.

1936. V. 3.

2. The Committee has held three sessions : on September 28th, 1935 ; on January 24th, 1936 ; and on April 27th and 28th, 1936. In execution of its terms of reference, it twice (on October 1st, 1935, and again on February 13th, 1936) invited the Members of the League to send their observations and proposals to it. It received replies from the following Governments :

South Africa, Argentine, Australia, Austria, Bulgaria, Colombia, Denmark, Estonia, Ethiopia, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Iran, Iraq, Irish Free State, Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Portugal, Spain, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Venezuela.

Other countries which were represented on the Committee had the opportunity of expressing their views in the course of the discussion.

3. The number of non-permanent seats on the Council which resulted from the resolutions adopted by the Council and the Assembly in 1926 is nine. Since 1928, two have always been held by the so-called " semi-permanent " Members of the Council—Spain[1] and Poland[2]—and the remaining seven have been occupied by States belonging to five groups—viz., three seats by Latin-American States, one by a Little Entente State, one by a State of the group of the ex-neutrals, one by a British Dominion, and the remaining seat by an Asiatic State. The " non-grouped " States are those Members of the League which, as they do not belong to any of these groups, are not, in practice, able to secure election to the Council. A temporary remedy for this grievance was found in 1933 in the creation for three years only of a tenth non-permanent seat, to which one of the non-grouped States—Portugal—was elected. This measure left open the question whether a final solution should be sought in a modification of the system by which each group was entitled to one or more seats or in a permanent increase in the size of the Council. The seat in question ceases to exist at the date of this year's elections to the Council.

4. From 1926 to 1934, Asia was represented on the Council by a permanent Member—Japan—and by China (1926-1928, 1931-1934), or by Iran (1928-1931). In 1934, China failed to secure a declaration of re-eligibility and was thus disqualified for election, and Turkey was elected to the Council. In 1935, Japan ceased to be a Member of the League. In consequence of these events, the question of the representation of Asia was raised by China in the letter of May 21st, 1935, to the President of the Council, which is reproduced in Appendix 2.

5. After careful consideration, the Committee has been forced to recognise that the objections which, in 1933, stood in the way of a definitive solution of the questions connected with the non-permanent seats on the Council still exist, and, indeed, have become more acute. At a time when far-reaching issues have been raised as to the ultimate functions of the Council and the League itself, it seems undesirable to attempt permanent changes in the composition or mode of election of the Council. Accordingly, the Committee has sought to put forward for the two problems which have been referred to it a provisional solution which will involve the least possible immediate change in the status quo and will leave the maximum freedom of action in the future to the Council and the Assembly. This attitude has obliged it to pass over various suggestions, which might have been of great interest if measures of a permanent nature had seemed possible, and which contemplated fundamental changes in the group system or the method of election.

6. On the other hand, the Committee feels that it would be undesirable that a definitive solution of the problems connected with the composition of the Council should be postponed longer than is necessary. The provisional solution which it recommends is put forward, and should be adopted, on the understanding that, so soon as circumstances permit, the subject will be taken up again with a view to a final settlement.

7. Some members of the Committee maintained the view that even a provisional solution ought to be sought in a modification of the " group " system rather than in an increase of the size of the Council. In this connection, the representative of Sweden stated that, with the assent of Finland, the group of the ex-neutrals (composed of Denmark, Norway, Sweden, the Netherlands and Switzerland) agreed to take Finland into the group, and he asked if other groups would be willing to make adjustments in the same spirit. The other groups represented on the Committee did not find it possible, in present circumstances, to make a similar offer. The representative of Sweden did not concur in the Committee's proposals until this had been made clear.

8. The proposal made by the Committee, which, as already stated, is one aiming at a purely provisional solution and is subject to the observation made in paragraph 6, is that, for a limited period commencing with the elections of 1936, the number of non-permanent seats (which would otherwise once more fall to nine) shall be raised to eleven by appropriate resolutions of the Council and the Assembly acting under Article 4, paragraph 2, of the Covenant. Of the two seats which would thus be created, the Committee considers that one might provide representation for a group comprising the non-grouped European States, and that the Assembly might consider the other as attributed to Asia. The Committee were very favourably impressed

[1] Spain was elected on September 10th, 1928, and re-elected on September 14th, 1931, and September 17th, 1934.

[2] Poland was elected on September 16th, 1926, and re-elected on September 9th, 1929, October 3rd, 1932, and September 16th, 1935.

by the application of China for representation on the Council at an early date and were unanimous in thinking that means should be found for acceding to this application and for doing so in 1936. It is clear that, in order to do so, the Assembly must declare China re-eligible, since she only ceased to be a Member of the Council in 1934.

9. As regards the period for which the temporary seats were to be created, the Committee decided that, if created, they must be given a provisional character, but they were not agreed as to the best method of doing this. The majority (nine members) favoured the creation of the two seats for three years, which is the normal period for membership of the Council, it being understood that, if a scheme for the reorganisation of the Council should be desired before that period ended, the existence of these seats should in no way be regarded as an obstacle to the adoption of such a scheme. The minority (five members) were of opinion that, in present circumstances, the better plan would be to create the two seats for one year only. They felt that it was desirable to propose the least possible modification of the existing position and that the adoption of a one-year period would give the greatest possible freedom of action to the Council and the Assembly in dealing with the question of the composition of the Council at an early date. This method would, at the same time, make it clear that it was the hope of the Committee that, before the end of the one-year period, a scheme for a definitive settlement would be adopted by the Council.

10. The opinion was expressed that, if the view of the minority was adopted, it would be necessary, in order to guard against possible injustice, to provide, further, that the State occupying either of the seats would not be precluded by the rule regarding re-eligibility from being re-elected to the Council at the close of its tenure of the seat, even without securing a declaration of re-eligibility.

11. One member of the Committee, having raised objections as to the desirability of taking a vote in a comité d'étude, abstained from voting on the question of the period for which the two seats should be created, and one member abstained from voting both on this question and on the question whether there should be a provisional increase in the size of the Council.

Appendix 1.

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE COUNCIL ON SEPTEMBER 26TH, 1935.

The Council,

Having examined the communication of the Chinese Government, dated May 21st, 1935 ;

Noting that, under a resolution of the Assembly of October 2nd, 1933, it was understood that towards the end of the period 1933-1936 the " question of the number of the Members of the Council will be reconsidered and that all the Members of the League will remain entirely free to propose any final solution of this question which they consider desirable " :

(1) Decides to appoint a committee to undertake the study indicated in the above paragraph, and in connection therewith to examine the proposals contained in the communication from the Chinese Government. The Committee, which shall report to the Council and Assembly, shall be composed of representatives of the following Members of the League : Argentine, Austria, Belgium, United Kingdom, Canada, China, France, Iran, Italy, Latvia, Peru, Poland, Roumania, Turkey, Spain, Sweden, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics ;

(2) Requests the Committee to begin its work as soon as possible and authorises the Secretary-General to inform the Members of the League, at the request of the Committee, of the date at which any proposals which they may wish to make in accordance with the resolution of October 2nd, 1933, quoted above, should be received.

Appendix 2.

LETTER OF MAY 21ST, 1935, FROM THE CHINESE MINISTER IN LONDON ADDRESSED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL.

For the first time in the history of the League, the Council is now without any representation of the Far East. This situation, which has arisen as a result of China's non-election to the Council last September and the withdrawal of Japan from the League, cannot be overstressed. It is deplorable for the real interest of the League, whose strength and influence must lie in the universality of its organisation.

The representation of Asia on the League's Council has always been felt to be inadequate. M. Motta, as Rapporteur and Chairman of the First Committee of the seventh Assembly, already urged that " adequate representation should be given to Asia ". He declared that " we cannot overlook even this year or—and more particularly—in future years the claims of the enormous populations and the inexhaustible wealth of Asia ". Those remarks have to-day gathered greater cogency by the events of the last few years.

Other considerations also call imperatively for a more active participation of the Far East in the counsels of the nations. The complexity of the present situation there is such as to require the united wisdom of the world's statesmanship. The continued absence of Far-Eastern representation on the Council, not only is a diminution of the League's prestige and influence, but also it constitutes a danger of undermining the solidarity of the whole collective system. Whether the situation be viewed from the constitutional standpoint or as a question of meeting present political exigencies, it is imperative that means be found to provide for China's participation in the Council at the present juncture.

Circumstances have placed China in a position in which she finds herself to be the outpost of the League in the Far East. In the midst of pressing difficulties, China has unswervingly upheld the principles of the Covenant and has strengthened her ties with the League by an extensive scheme of technical collaboration. She hopes and expects that the League, on its part, will recognise her key position in Asia as well as her special relations with the League, by reason of which she puts forward her claim to a place on the Council.

In view of the urgency and justice of the case, I have the honour to request, on behalf of the Chinese Government, that the Council take forthwith practical steps to secure China's representation on the Council.

(Signed) Quo Tai-Chi.

Appendix 3.

TEXTS GOVERNING THE COMPOSITION OF THE COUNCIL.

Covenant, Article 4, Paragraphs 1, 2 and 2*bis*.

1. The Council shall consist of representatives of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers, together with representatives of four other Members of the League. These four Members of the League shall be selected by the Assembly from time to time in its discretion. Until the appointment of the representatives of the four Members of the League first selected by the Assembly, representatives of Belgium, Brazil, Spain and Greece shall be members of the Council.

2. With the approval of the majority of the Assembly, the Council may name additional Members of the League whose representatives shall always be members of the Council ; the Council, with like approval, may increase the number of Members of the League to be selected by the Assembly for representation on the Council.

2*bis*. The Assembly shall fix by a two-thirds majority the rules dealing with the election of the non-permanent Members of the Council, and particularly such regulations as relate to their term of office and the conditions of re-eligibility.

Rules of Procedure of the Assembly, Rule 22*a*.

1. The Members whose representatives are to sit on the Council as non-permanent Members of that body shall be selected by the Assembly by secret ballot.

2. Where several seats are to be filled, the election shall be made by voting a list of names. Any ballot-paper containing more names than there are seats to be filled shall be null and void.

3. No Member shall be elected at the first or at the second ballot unless it has obtained at least the absolute majority of the votes. If, after two ballots, there still remain seats to be filled, a third ballot shall be held upon a list consisting of the candidates which obtained most votes at the second ballot, up to a number double that of the seats still to be filled, and those Members shall be elected which obtain the greatest number of votes.

4. If two or more Members obtain the same number of votes and there is not a seat available for each, a special ballot shall be held between them ; if they again obtain an equal number of votes, the President shall decide between them by drawing lots.

Rules dealing with the Election of the Non-Permanent Members of the Council, adopted by the Assembly on September 15th, 1926.

Article I.

The Assembly shall each year, in the course of its ordinary session, elect three non permanent Members of the Council. They shall be elected for a term commencing immediately on their election and ending on the day of the elections held three years later by the Assembly.

Should a non-permanent Member cease to belong to the Council before its term of office expires, its seat shall be filled by a by-election held separately at the session following the occurrence of the vacancy. The term of office of the Member so elected shall end at the date at which the term of office of the Member whose place it takes would have expired.

Article II.

A retiring Member may not be re-elected during the period between the expiration of its term of office and the third election in ordinary session held thereafter, unless the Assembly, either on the expiration of the Member's term of office, or in the course of the said period of three years, shall, by a majority of two-thirds of the votes cast, previously have decided that such Member is re-eligible.

The Assembly shall pronounce separately, by secret ballot, upon each request for re-eligibility. The number of votes cast shall be determined by the total number of voting tickets deposited, deducting blank or spoilt votes.

The Assembly may not decide upon the re-eligibility of a Member except upon a request in writing made by the Member itself. The request must be handed to the President of the Assembly not later than the day before the date fixed for the election ; it shall be submitted to the Assembly, which shall pronounce upon it without referring it to a committee and without debate.

The number of Members re-elected in consequence of having been previously declared re-eligible shall be restricted, so as to prevent the Council from containing at the same time more than three Members thus elected. If the result of the ballot infringes this restriction to three Members, those of the Members affected which have received the smallest number of votes shall not be considered to have been elected.

Article III.

Notwithstanding the above provisions, the Assembly may, at any time, by a two-thirds majority, decide to proceed, in application of Article 4 of the Covenant, to a new election of all the non-permanent Members of the Council. In this case, the Assembly shall determine the rules applicable to the new election.

Article IV. — Temporary Provisions.

(Omitted, as no longer applicable.)

ADDITIONAL RULE ADOPTED BY THE ASSEMBLY ON OCTOBER 2ND, 1933.

No Member of the League shall be eligible to be elected as a non-permanent Member of the Council unless it has proposed itself for election, or been nominated by another Member of the League, at least forty-eight hours before the election, which shall not be held before the seventh day of the Assembly's session.

The notice of the candidature shall be given in writing to the Secretary-General, who shall forthwith bring it to the attention of the Assembly. The Secretary-General shall at the time of the election place before the Assembly a list of the Members which have been duly put forward as candidates.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Annex to the Report[1] on the Work of the League for the Year 1935/36 to the Seventeenth Ordinary Session of the Assembly of the League of Nations

RATIFICATION OF AGREEMENTS AND CONVENTIONS

CONCLUDED UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

SEVENTEENTH LIST

Note by the Secretary-General.

In accordance with the instructions contained in the report adopted by the Council of the League of Nations during its forty-third session on December 6th, 1926, the Secretary-General has the honour to submit herewith to the Members of the Council a list, in chronological order, of the international agreements which have been concluded under the auspices of the League. The list shows the States which have become parties to these agreements by ratification or accession or definitive signature; the States which have signed but have not yet ratified them, and, finally, the States which have neither signed nor acceded, although they took part in the conferences at which the agreements were drawn up or have been invited to become parties thereto.

According to the decision taken by the Council at its forty-ninth session on March 6th, 1928, the present list contains in addition the reservations affixed or declarations formulated either in signing or in ratifying or in acceding to the agreements which have been concluded under the auspices of the League of Nations.

The International Labour Conventions and other instruments which concern the International Labour Organisation have been grouped at the end of this document.

Reciprocity, in any disputes arising after the signature of the present declaration with regard to situations or facts subsequent to this signature, except in cases where the parties have agreed or shall agree to have recourse to another procedure or to another method of pacific settlement. The present declaration is made for a period of five years. Unless it is denounced six months before the expiration of that period, it shall be considered as renewed for a further period of five years and similarly thereafter.

The Netherlands* (August 5th, 1936)

Reciprocity, 10 years, as from August 6th, 1936, in any future disputes, excepting those in regard to which the parties would have agreed after the coming into force of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice to have recourse to another method of pacific settlement.

New Zealand (March 29th, 1930)

Reciprocity, 10 years, and thereafter until such time as notice may be given to terminate the acceptance, over all disputes arising after the ratification of the present declaration with regard to situations or facts subsequent to the said ratification,

Other than disputes in regard to which the parties to the dispute have agreed or shall agree to have recourse to some other method of peaceful settlement, and

Disputes with regard to questions which by international law fall exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Dominion of New Zealand,

And subject to the condition that His Majesty's Government in New Zealand reserve the right to require that proceedings in the Court shall be suspended in respect of any dispute which has been submitted to and is under consideration by the Council of the League of Nations, provided that notice to suspend is given after the dispute has been submitted to the Council and is given within ten days of the notification of the initiation of the proceedings in the Court, and provided also that such suspension shall be limited to a period of twelve months or such longer period as may be agreed by the parties to the dispute or determined by a decision of all the Members of the Council other than the parties to the dispute.

Norway* (May 29th, 1936)

Reciprocity, 10 years, as from October 3rd, 1936.

*Panama (June 14th, 1929)

Reciprocity.

*Paraguay (May 11th, 1933)

Unconditional.

Peru (March 29th, 1932)

Reciprocity, 10 years, in any dispute arising with regard to situations and facts subsequent to ratification, except in cases where the parties have agreed either to have recourse to another method of settlement by arbitration, or to submit the dispute previously to the Council of the League of Nations.

*Portugal (October 8th, 1921)

Reciprocity.

Roumania* (June 4th, 1936)

Renewal for 5 years, as from June 9th, 1936, of the declaration of October 4th, 1930, within the limits and subject to the conditions and reservations laid down in the said declaration.

The declaration of October 4th, 1930, read as follows:

" Reciprocity, 5 years, in respect of the Governments recognised by Roumania and on condition of reciprocity in regard to legal disputes arising out of situations or facts subsequent to the ratification by the Roumanian Parliament of this accession and with the exception of matters for which a special procedure has been or may be established and subject to the right of Roumania to submit the dispute to the Council of the League of Nations before having recourse to the Court.

" The following are, however, excepted:

"(a) Any question of substance or of procedure which might directly or indirectly cause the existing territorial integrity of Roumania and her sovereign rights, including her rights over her ports and communications, to be brought into question;

"(b) Disputes relating to questions which, according to international law, fall under the domestic jurisdiction of Roumania."

* Declaration not subject to ratification.

2. Optional Clause recognising the Court's Jurisdiction, as described in Article 36 of the Statute (continued).

(Geneva, December 16th, 1920.)

In Force.

Ratifications.

*Salvador (August 29th, 1930)
The provisions of this Statute do not apply to any disputes or differences concerning points or questions which cannot be submitted to arbitration in accordance with the political Constitution of this Republic.
The provisions of this Statute also do not apply to disputes which arose before that date or to pecuniary claims made against the Nation, it being further understood that Article 36 binds Salvador only in regard to States which accept the arbitration in that form.

Siam (May 7th, 1930)
Reciprocity, 10 years, in all disputes as to which no other means of pacific settlement is agreed upon between the parties.

*Spain (September 21st, 1928)
Reciprocity, 10 years, in any disputes arising after the signature of the present declaration with regard to situations or facts subsequent to this signature, except in cases where the parties have agreed or shall agree to have recourse to another method of pacific settlement.

Sweden* (April 18th, 1936)
Reciprocity, 10 years, as from August 16th, 1936.

*Uruguay (September 27th, 1921)
Reciprocity.

[1] Article 26 of the Covenant provides: " Amendments to this Covenant will take effect when ratified by the Members of the League whose representatives compose the Council and by a majority of the Members of the League whose representatives compose the Assembly ".

The Annex to the Supplementary Report on the Work of the League for 1929 (document A.6(a).1929, Annex) contains, moreover, complete details concerning the amendments to Articles 4, 6, 12, 13 and 15 of the Covenant. These amendments being now in force, no reference is made to them in the present document.

[2] The Assembly adopted at its fifth ordinary session (1924) a resolution according to which it is no longer opportune to ratify the first amendment to Article 16 of the Covenant adopted in 1921. As a consequence of this resolution, the first amendment to Article 16 adopted by the Assembly at its second ordinary session does not appear in the present report. See under No. IX the new amendment adopted in 1924.

With regard to Article IV, see also Article I. The acts mentioned in Article I are punishable under the rules of Danish law only if they fall within the provisions of Article 184 of the Danish Penal Code, which inflicts penalties upon any person publishing obscene writings, or placing on sale, distributing, or otherwise circulating or publicly exposing obscene images. Further, it is to be observed that the Danish legislation relating to the Press contains special provisions on the subject of the persons who may be prosecuted for Press offences. The latter provisions apply to the acts covered by Article 184 in so far as these acts can be considered as Press offences. The modification of Danish legislation on these points must await the revision of the Danish Penal Code, which is likely to be effected in the near future.

NEW ZEALAND (June 9th, 1926)

CZECHOSLOVAKIA (September 18th, 1931)

The Czechoslovak Republic will regard itself as being bound only in relation to States which will have ratified the Convention of September 26th, 1927, on the Execution of Foreign Arbitral Awards, and the Czechoslovak Republic does not intend by this signature to invalidate in any way the bilateral treaties concluded by it which regulate the questions referred to in the present Protocol by provisions going beyond the provisions of the Protocol.

DENMARK (April 6th, 1925)

Under Danish law, arbitral awards made by an Arbitral Tribunal do not immediately become operative; it is necessary in each case, in order to make an award operative, to apply to the ordinary courts of law. In the course of the proceedings, however, the arbitral award will generally be accepted by such Courts without further examination as a basis of the final judgments in the affair.

ESTONIA (May 16th, 1929)

Limits, in accordance with Article 1, paragraph 2, of this Protocol, the obligation mentioned in paragraph 1 of the said article to contracts which are considered as commercial under its national law.

FINLAND (July 10th, 1924)

FRANCE (June 7th, 1928)

Reserves the right to limit the obligation mentioned in paragraph 2 of Article 1 to contracts which are considered as commercial under its own national law. Its acceptance of the present Protocol does not include the Colonies, Overseas Possessions or Protectorates or Territories in respect of which France exercises a mandate.

GERMANY (November 5th, 1924)

GREECE (May 26th, 1926)

ITALY (July 28th, 1924)

JAPAN (June 4th, 1928)

Excluding Colonies.

Chosen, Taiwan, Karafuto, the leased territory of Kwantung, and the territories in respect of which Japan exercises a mandate (February 26th, 1929 a).

LUXEMBURG (September 15th, 1930)

Reserves the right to limit the obligation mentioned in the first paragraph of Article 1 to contracts which are considered as commercial under its national law.

MONACO (February 8th, 1927)

Reserves the right to limit its obligation to contracts which are considered as commercial under its national law.

THE NETHERLANDS (including Netherlands Indies, Surinam and Curaçao) (August 6th, 1925)

The Government of the Netherlands reserves its right to restrict the obligation mentioned in the first paragraph of Article 1 to contracts which are considered as commercial under Netherlands law.

Further, it declares its opinion that the recognition in principle of the validity of arbitration clauses in no way affects either the restrictive provisions at present existing under Netherlands law or the right to introduce other restrictions in the future.

NORWAY (September 2nd, 1927)

POLAND (June 26th, 1931)

Under reservation that in conformity with paragraph 2 of Article 1, the undertaking contemplated in the said Article will apply only to contracts which are declared as commercial in accordance with national Polish law.

PORTUGAL (December 10th, 1930)

(1) In accordance with the second paragraph of Article 1, the Portuguese Government reserves the right to limit the obligation mentioned in the first paragraph of Article 1 to contracts which are considered as commercial under its national law.

(2) According to the terms of the first paragraph of Article 8, the Portuguese Government declares that its acceptance of the present Protocol does not include its colonies.

ROUMANIA (March 12th, 1925)

Subject to the reservation that the Royal Government may in all circumstances limit the obligation mentioned in Article 1, paragraph 2, to contracts which are considered as commercial under its national law.

SIAM (September 3rd, 1930)

SPAIN (July 29th, 1926)

Reserves the right to limit the obligation mentioned in Article 1, paragraph 2, to contracts which are considered as commercial under its national law. Its acceptance of the present Protocol does not include the Spanish Possessions in Africa, or the territories of the Spanish Protectorate in Morocco.

SWEDEN (August 8th, 1929)

Other State to whose Signature the Agreement is open:

China

[1] With the reservation of Articles 15, 16, 17, 18 and 19 (Persia having no treaty with China) and paragraph (a) of Article 3.

[2] With the reservation of Articles 15, 16, 17, 18 and 19 (Siam having no treaty with China).

[3] Subject to the following declaration: " Opium not being manufactured in Sweden, the Swedish Government will for the moment confine themselves to prohibiting the importation of prepared opium, but they declare at the same time that they are ready to take the measures indicated in Article 8 of the Convention if experience proves their expediency."

[4] Subject to ratification and with the declaration that the Swiss Government will be unable to issue the necessary legal enactments within the terms fixed by the Convention.

[5] The Agreement and the Protocol came into force on July 28th, 1926. See Treaty Series of the Leogue of Nations, Vol. LI, p. 337; Vol. LIX, p. 401; and Vol. LXXVIII, p. 489.

2. First Opium Conference of the League of Nations.

(Signed at Geneva, February 11th, 1925.)

In Force.

Ratifications.

Portugal (September 13th, 1926)

While accepting the principle of a monopoly as formulated in Article I, does so, as regards the moment at which the measures provided for in the first paragraph thereof shall come into force, subject to the limitation contained in the second paragraph of the article.

The Portuguese Government, being bound by a contract consistent with the provisions of the Hague Convention of 1912, will not be able to put into operation the provisions of paragraph 1 of Article VI of the present Agreement so long as its obligations under this contract are in force.

Siam (May 6th, 1927)

Under reservation of Article I, paragraph 3 (a), with regard to the time when this provision shall come into force, and of Article V. The reason for these reservations had been stated by the First Delegate of Siam on November 14th, 1924. The Siamese Government is hoping to put into force the system of registration and rationing within the period of three years. After that date, the reservation in regard to Article I, paragraph 3 (a), will fall to the ground.

[1] The Swiss Federal Political Department, by a letter dated July 15th, 1936, informed the Secretariat of the following:

"Under the terms of the arrangements concluded between the Government of the Principality of Liechtenstein and the Swiss Government in 1929 and 1935, in application of the Customs Union Treaty concluded between these two countries on March 29th, 1923, the Swiss legislation on narcotic drugs, including all the measures taken by the Federal authorities to give effect to the different international Conventions on dangerous drugs, will be applicable to the territory of the Principality in the same way as to the territory of the Confederation, as long as the said Treaty remains in force. The Principality of Liechtenstein will accordingly participate, so long as the said Treaty remains in force, in the international Conventions which have been or may hereafter be concluded in the matter of narcotic drugs, it being neither necessary nor advisable for that country to accede to them separately."

XI. SUPERVISION OF THE INTERNATIONAL TRADE IN ARMS AND AMMUNITION AND IN IMPLEMENTS OF WAR.

1. Convention for the Supervision of the International Trade in Arms and Ammunition and in Implements of War.[1]

(Geneva, June 17th, 1925.)

Not in Force.

Ratifications or definitive Accessions.

United States of America
This ratification is subject to the reservation that the Convention shall only enter into force, as far as the United States of America are concerned, when it has entered into force as regards Belgium, the British Empire, Czechoslovakia, France, Italy, Japan, Sweden and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

British Empire
Does not bind India or any British Dominion which is a separate Member of the League of Nations and does not separately sign or adhere to the Convention.
This ratification will not become effective until the ratifications of the said Convention by all the following Powers — i.e., Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Germany, Italy, Japan, Spain, Sweden and United States of America — have become effective in accordance with Article 41 of the Convention.

Australia (a)
Subject to the reservation that this accession shall not take effect until ratifications of the Convention in respect of Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Germany, Italy, Japan, Spain, Sweden and the United States of America have been deposited with the French Government.

Bulgaria

Canada

China

Denmark
The Danish Government makes the entry into force of this Convention, as far as Denmark is concerned, subject to its being put into force both in Sweden and in Switzerland.

Egypt

France
This ratification will not become effective until the ratifications of the Convention by Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Italy, Japan, Sweden and the United States of America have become effective in accordance with Article 41 of the Convention.

Iraq (a)
In accordance with paragraph 3 of Article 28 of the Convention, Iraq assume with regard to its territory the undertakings set forth in paragraph I of Article 28 and the obligations of Articles 19 to 26 inclusive of that Convention, in so far as they are applicable.

2. Convention on the Execution of Foreign Arbitral Awards (continued).

(Geneva, September 26th, 1927.)

In Force.

Ratifications.

Denmark (April 25th, 1929)
Under Danish law, arbitral awards made by an Arbitral Tribunal do not immediately become operative; it is necessary in each case, in order to make an award operative, to apply to the ordinary Courts of Law. In the course of the proceedings, however, the arbitral award will generally be accepted by such Courts without further examination as a basis for the final judgment in the affair.

2. That His Majesty reserves the right in relation to the disputes mentioned in Article 17 of the General Act to require that the procedure prescribed in Chapter II of the said Act shall be suspended in respect of any dispute which has been submitted to and is under consideration by the Council of the League of Nations, provided that notice to suspend is given after the dispute has been submitted to the Council and is given within ten days of the notification of the initiation of the procedure, and provided also that such suspension shall be limited to a period of twelve months or such longer period as may be agreed by the parties to the dispute or determined by a decision of all the Members of the Council other than the parties to the dispute.

3. (i) That, in the case of a dispute, not being a dispute mentioned in Article 17 of the General Act, which is brought before the Council of the League of Nations in accordance with the provisions of the Covenant, the procedure prescribed in Chapter I of the General Act shall not be applied, and, if already commenced, shall be suspended, unless the Council determines that the said procedure shall be adopted.

(ii) That, in the case of such a dispute, the procedure described in Chapter III of the General Act shall not be applied unless the Council has failed to effect a settlement of the dispute within twelve months from the date on which it was first submitted to the Council, or, in a case where the procedure prescribed in Chapter I has been adopted without producing an agreement between the parties, within six months from the termination of the work of the Conciliation Commission. The Council may extend either of the above periods by a decision of all its Members other than the parties to the dispute.

(b) Disputes concerning questions which by international law are solely within the domestic jurisdiction of States and in particular disputes relating to the territorial status of Greece, including disputes relating to its rights of sovereignty over its ports and lines of communication.

ITALY (September 7th, 1931)

Subject to the following reservations:

I. The following disputes shall be excluded from the procedure described in the said Act:

(a) Disputes arising out of facts or situations prior to the present accession;

(b) Disputes relating to questions which international law leaves to the sole jurisdiction of States;

(c) Disputes affecting the relations between Italy and any third Power.

II. It is understood that, in conformity with Article 29 of the said Act, disputes for the solution of which a special procedure is provided by other conventions shall be settled in accordance with the provisions of those conventions; and that, in particular, disputes which may be submitted to the Council or Assembly of the League of Nations in virtue of one of the provisions of the Covenant shall be settled in accordance with those provisions.

III. It is further understood that the present accession in no way affects Italy's accession to the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and to the clause in that Statute concerning the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court.

(Geneva, December 14th, 1928.)

In Force.

Ratifications or definitive Accessions.

INDIA (May 15th, 1931 a)

A. Under the terms of Article 11, the obligations of the Convention shall not extend to the territories in India of any Prince or Chief under the suzerainty of His Majesty the King Emperor.

B1 Article 2 I (a). — The provisions for returns of "transit trade" made in Annex I, Part I, 1 (b) shall not apply to India nor shall returns of the "land frontier trade" of India be acquired.

(2) Article 2. II (a). — The question whether a general census of agriculture can be held in India and, if so, on what lines and at what intervals still remains to be settled. For the present, India can assume no obligations under this article.

(3) Article 2. III (b). (1). — For farms in the "permanently settled" tracts in India, estimates of the cultivated areas may be used in compiling the returns.

(4) Article 2. III (b). (2). — The returns of quantities of crops harvested may be based on estimates of yield each year per unit area in each locality.

(5) Article 2. III (d). — Complete returns cannot be guaranteed from Burma, and in respect of the rest of India the returns shall refer to Government forests only.

The Government of India further declared that, with regard to the second paragraph of Article 3 of the Convention, they cannot, with the means of investigation at their disposal, usefully undertake to prepare experimentally the specified tables, and that for similar reasons they are not in a position to accept the proposal contained in Recommendation II of the Convention.

DENMARK (September 9th, 1929)

In pursuance of Article 11, Greenland is excepted from the provisions of this Convention. Furthermore, the Danish Government, in accepting the Convention, does not assume any obligation in respect of statistics concerning the Faroe Islands.

EGYPT (June 27th, 1930)

FRANCE (February 1st, 1933)

By its acceptance, France does not intend to assume any obligation in regard to any of its Colonies, Protectorates and Territories under its suzerainty or mandate.

GREECE (September 18th, 1930)

ITALY (June 11th, 1931)

In accepting the present Convention, Italy does not assume any obligation in respect of her Colonies, Protectorates and other Territories referred to in the first paragraph of Article 11.

THE NETHERLANDS (September 13th, 1932)

This ratification applies only to the territory of the Netherlands in Europe; the Netherlands do not intend to assume, at present, any obligation as regards the whole of the Netherlands overseas territories.

Netherlands Indies (May 5th, 1933 a)

1. The following shall not be applicable:
   (a) The provisions of Article 2, III, E) and V;
   (b) The provisions concerning the system of valuations known as "declared values" mentioned in Annex I, Part I, § II (See Article 3);
   (c) Article 3, paragraph 2.
2. The returns mentioned in Article 2, IV, shall only apply to coal, petroleum, natural gas, tin, manganese, gold and silver.
3. The statistics of foreign trade mentioned in Article 3 shall not comprise tables concerning transit.[1]

NORWAY (March 20th, 1929)

In accordance with Article 11, the Bouvet Island is excepted from the provisions of the present Convention. Furthermore, in ratifying the Convention, Norway does not assume any obligation as regards statistics relating to the Svalbard.

POLAND (July 23rd, 1931)

PORTUGAL (October 23rd, 1931)

In accordance with Article 11, the Portuguese Delegation declares on behalf of its Government that the present Convention does not apply to the Portuguese Colonies.

1. Convention providing a Uniform Law for Cheques, with Annexes and Protocol (cont).

(Geneva, March 19th, 1931.)

In Force.

Ratifications or definitive Accessions.

(3) The reservation in Article 9, the following provision being added to paragraph 3 of Article 6 of the Uniform Law: "But in such exceptional case the issue of the cheque to bearer is prohibited."

(4) The reservation in Article 15, the following paragraph being added to Article 31 of the Uniform Law: "By presidential decree, promulgated at the instance of the Ministers of Justice and National Economy, it may be decided what institutions in Greece are to be regarded as clearing-houses."

(5) The reservation in the second paragraph of Article 16, it being laid down that "provisions with regard to the loss or theft of cheques shall be embodied in Greek law."

(6) The reservation in Article 17, the following paragraph being added at the end of Article 35: "In exceptional circumstances connected with the rate of exchange of Greek currency, the effects of the stipulation contained in paragraph 3 of the present Article may be abrogated in each case by special legislation as regards cheques payable in Greece. The above provision may also be applied as regards cheques issued in Greece."

(7) The reservation in Article 23, the following being added to No. 2 in Article 45 of the Uniform Law: "which, however, in the case of cheques issued and payable in Greece, shall be calculated in each case at the legal rate of interest in force in Greece." Similarly, the following is added to No. 2 of Article 46 of the Uniform Law: "except in the special case dealt with in No. 2 of the preceding Article."

(8) The reservation in Article 25, the following Article being added to the National Law: "In the event of forfeiture of the bearer's rights or limitation of the right of action, proceedings may be taken against the drawer or endorser on the ground of his having made an inequitable gain. The right to take such proceedings lapses after three years from the date of the issue of the cheque."

(9) The reservation in the first paragraph of Article 26, a provision being enacted to the following effect: "The causes of interruption or suspension of limitation of actions enacted in the present law shall be governed by the rules regarding limitation and short-term limitation of actions."

(10) The reservation in Article 27, a separate Article being appended in the following terms: "Legal holidays within the meaning of the present law shall be all Sundays and all full days of rest observed by public offices."

(11) The reservation in Article 28 and the reservation in Article 29.

(12) The reservation in Article 30.

AFGHANISTAN (June 21st, 1935 a)
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA (April 28th, 1932)

1. The Government of the United States of America reserves the right to impose, for purpose of internal control and control of import into, and export from, territory under its jurisdiction, of opium, coca leaves, all of their derivatives and similar substances produced by synthetic process, measures stricter than the provisions of the Convention.
2. The Government of the United States of America reserves the right to impose, for purposes of controlling transit through its territories of raw opium, coca leaves, all of their derivatives and similar substances produced by synthetic process, measures by which the production of an import permit issued by the country of destination may be made a condition precedent to the granting of permission for transit through its territory.
3. The Government of the United States of America finds it impracticable to undertake to send statistics of import and export to the Permanent Central Opium Board short of 60 days after the close of the three months' period to which such statistics refer.
4. The Government of the United States of America finds it impracticable to undertake to state separately amounts of drugs purchased or imported for Government purposes.
5. Plenipotentiaries of the United States of America formally declare that the signing of the Convention for limiting the Manufacture and regulating the Distribution of Narcotic Drugs by them on the part of the United States of America on this date is not to be construed to mean that the Government of the United States of America recognises a regime or entity which signs or accedes to the Convention as the Government of a country when that regime or entity is not recognised by the Government of the United States of America as the Government of that country.
6. The plenipotentiaries of the United States of America further declare that the participation of the United States of America in the Convention for limiting the Manufacture and regulating the Distribution of Narcotic Drugs, signed on this date, does not involve any contractual obligation on the part of the United States of America to a country represented by a regime or entity which the Government of the United States of America does not recognise as the Government of that country until such country has a Government recognised by the Government of the United States of America.

Japan (June 3rd, 1935)

The Japanese Government declare that, in view of the necessity of close co-operation between the High Contracting Parties in order to carry out most effectively the provisions of the Convention for limiting the Manufacture and regulating the Distribution of Narcotic Drugs, signed at Geneva on July 13th, 1931, they understand that the present position of Japan, regardless of whether she be a Member of the League of Nations or not, is to be maintained in the matter of the composition of the organs and the appointment of the members thereof mentioned in the said Convention.[1]

Liechtenstein [2]
Lithuania (April 10th, 1933)
Luxemburg (May 30th, 1936)
Mexico (March 13th, 1933)

The Government of the United States of Mexico reserves the right to impose in its territory—as it has already done—measures more severe than those laid down by the Convention itself, for the restriction of the cultivation or the preparation, use, possession, importation, exportation and consumption of the drugs to which the present Convention refers.

Portugal (June 17th, 1932)

The Portuguese Government makes every reservation with regard to its colonies as to the possibility of regularly producing the quarterly statistics referred to in Article 13 within the strict time-limit laid down.

Roumania (April 11th, 1933)
Salvador (April 7th, 1933 a)

(a) The Republic of Salvador does not agree to the provisions of Article 26, on the ground that there is no reason why the High Contracting Parties should be given the option of not applying the Convention to their colonies, protectorates, and overseas mandated territories.

(b) The Republic of Salvador states that it disagrees with the reservations embodied in Nos. 5 and 6 of the declarations made by the plenipotentiaries of the United States of America regarding Governments not recognised by the Government of that country; in its opinion, those reservations constitute an infringement of the national sovereignty of Salvador, whose present Government, though not as yet recognised by the United States Government, has been recognised by the majority of the civilised countries of the world. Their recognition is due to their conviction that that Government is a perfectly constitutional one and affords a full and

[1] Before ratifying the Convention with the declaration here set out, the Japanese Government consulted the Contracting Parties, through the intermediary of the Secretary-General. A summary of the correspondence which took place was published in the League of Nations Official Journal for September 1935 (16th Year, No. 9).

[2] The Swiss Federal Political Department, by a letter dated July 15th, 1936, informed the Secretariat of the following:

" Under the terms of the arrangements concluded between the Government of the Principality of Liechtenstein and the Swiss Government in 1929 and 1935, in application of the Customs Union Treaty concluded between these two countries on March 29th, 1923, the Swiss legislation on narcotic drugs, including all the measures taken by the Federal authorities to give effect to the different international Conventions on dangerous drugs, will be applicable to the territory of the Principality in the same way as to the territory of the Confederation, as long as the said Treaty remains in force. The Principality of Liechtenstein will accordingly participate, so long as the said Treaty remains in force, in the international Conventions which have been or may hereafter be concluded in the matter of narcotic drugs, it being neither necessary nor advisable for that country to accede to them separately."

complete guarantee of the performance of its international duties, inasmuch as it enjoys the unanimous, decided and effective support of all the inhabitants of the Republic, whether citizens of the country or foreigners resident therein.

As it respects the internal regimes of other nations, the Republic of Salvador considers that the Convention in question, being of a strictly hygienic and humanitarian character, does not offer a suitable occasion to formulate such political reservations as have called forth this comment.

San Marino (June 12th, 1933)
Siam (February 22nd, 1934)

As its harmful-habit-forming drugs law goes beyond the provisions of the Geneva Convention and the present Convention on certain points, the Siamese Government reserves the right to apply its existing law.

[1] The Agreement shall not come into force until it has been ratified by all the High Contracting Parties. The date of its coming into force shall be the ninetieth day after the receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations of the last ratification. (Article VI.)

[2] Came into force August 25th, 1933.

The signatures are to be regarded as affixed in the light of the statements made during the discussions by the representatives of the various countries; these statements are contained in the Minutes of the Conference, and are to be interpreted in the sense of paragraph IV of Article 6 of the Final Act.

[3] The Government of the Irish Free State has informed the Secretariat that it regrets not to be in a position to accept this Act which it had signed ad referendum.

[4] The Czechoslovak Government informed the Secretariat that it is unable to take a decision as regards its signature given ad referendum before September 22nd, 1933. The Czechoslovak Government further informed the Secretariat, on September 21st, 1933, of its acceptance of the Act, calling attention at the same time to the declaration made by the Czechoslovak delegate at the Wheat Conference, by which the Czechoslovak Government reserved the right to make further reservations on approval of its signature, and added that it agrees to the reduction of Customs duties, provided that such reduction shall not affect the maintenance of remunerative prices for home-grown cereals. A decision regarding the remunerative level of prices can only be taken with due consideration of the conditions prevailing in Czechoslovakia.

XXXIX. REFUGEES.

CONVENTION RELATING TO THE INTERNATIONAL STATUS OF REFUGEES. [1]

(Geneva, October 28th, 1933.)

In Force.

Ratifications or definitive Accessions.

BULGARIA (December 19th, 1934)

Subject to the following reservations:

I. Article 1. — The Bulgarian Government maintains the reservations made by the Bulgarian delegate on signing the Arrangement of June 30th, 1928,[2] concerning the extension to other categories of refugees of certain measures taken in favour of Russian and Armenian refugees.

II. Article 2. — The departure from the country of refugees in possession of Nansen certificates (passports) shall be governed by the general regulations in force in this respect. Bulgarian consuls will be empowered in cases of force majeure to extend Nansen certificates issued in Bulgaria for a period of three months. The cost of visas for Nansen certificates shall be fixed in accordance with the tariff applicable to the nationals of the country by which the certificate was issued.

III. Article 6. — Exemption from cautio judicatum solvi shall be at the discretion of the courts in each individual case.

IV. Article 7. — The Bulgarian Government cannot accept points (a) and (d).

V. Articles 8 and 10 (formerly 7 and 9). — Disability and old-age pensions shall be paid (regard being had to the possibilities of the fund concerned) to the persons entitled, their heirs and assigns, provided always that such persons are resident in the country.

VI. Article 13. — The Bulgarian Government cannot accept the first paragraph, as refugees resident in Bulgaria are subject to the same treatment in fiscal matters as other foreign nationals resident in the country.

VII. Article 15. — The Bulgarian Government cannot accept paragraphs 2 and 3.

Signatures not yet perfected by Ratification.

BELGIUM

Subject to the following reservations:

(1) Article 2, paragraph 3, relating to the right conferred on consuls to extend Nansen certificates, cannot be accepted by the Belgian Government;

(2) Article 9, in so far as it concerns the application of the provisions of the domestic legislation relating to "unemployment insurance", cannot be accepted;

(3) Article 10, concerning social insurance laws, cannot be favourably received;

(4) Article 14, which concerns the enjoyment of the rights and favours accorded to foreigners, subject to reciprocity, cannot be admitted;

(5) The Belgian Government in accepting the present Convention is not assuming any obligation as regards the colony of the Congo or the mandated territories of Ruanda-Urundi.

EGYPT

Article 1:

Apart from such modifications or amplifications as each Contracting Party may introduce in this definition, my Government reserves the right to extend or limit the said definition in any way.

Article 2:

Bearers of Nansen certificates may not be admitted into Egypt unless the said certificates contain a visa for return to the countries by which they were issued. If these refugees are authorised to sojourn in Egypt, the competent local authorities reserve the right to issue to them Egyptian travel papers.

Article 3:

These authorities reserve the right to expel such refugees at any moment for reasons of public security.

[1] This Convention came into force on June 13th, 1935, in accordance with its Article 20. See Treaty Series of the League of Nations, Vol. CLIX, p. 199.

[2] This reservation was worded as follows:

"On the understanding that the present Arrangement applies only to such refugees as are at the present date on Bulgarian territory."

(Geneva, October 28th, 1933.)

In Force.

Ratifications or definitive Accessions.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA (May 14th, 1935 a)

Subject to the following reservations:

"A. The Czechoslovak Government will regard as refugees within the meaning of Article 1 only such persons as formerly actually possessed Russian or Turkish nationality, lost it before January 1st, 1923, and have not acquired any other nationality.

"B. The accession of the Czechoslovak Republic does not apply to:

"(a) Paragraph 3 of Article 2, whereby consuls are qualified to extend Nansen certificates;

"(b) Paragraph 3 of Article 3, so far as it limits the power of the national authorities to expel persons who constitute a danger to the safety of the State and public order; nor, of course, do the provisions of Article 3 in any way affect expulsions by order of the courts, or obligations deriving from extradition treaties or from the Czechoslovak laws regarding the extradition of aliens;

"(c) The whole of Article 7, which exempts refugees from the application of the provisions of laws and decrees for the protection of the national labour market;

"(d) The whole of Article 14, which waives the condition of reciprocity;

"(e) The whole of Article 15, which deals with the creation of local committees.

"C. Articles 4 and 5, dealing with the juridical condition of refugees, and Articles 8, 9, 10 and 11, dealing with industrial accidents and welfare and relief, will be applied in Czechoslovakia only so far as the laws of the country permit."

Denmark (December 21st, 1935 a)

With reservation as regards Articles 7 and 14 of the Convention.

This accession does not include Greenland.

Italy (January 16th, 1936 a)

1. Article 3 of the Convention cannot limit the right of the Italian authorities to apply measures of expulsion to refugees for reasons of national security and public order.
2. In acceding to the Convention, the Italian Government assumes no obligations in regard to its colonies and possessions.

NORWAY (June 26th, 1935)

With reservation as regards the provisions of Article 2, para. 3, and Article 14.

Signatures not yet perfected by Ratification.

Article 4:

Moreover, as regards the acquired rights referred to in paragraph 3 of Article 4 of the draft Convention, it should be stipulated that in order to ensure respect for such rights due account must be taken of international public order and of internal public order as the latter is conceived and applied in Egyptian law. Further, in order to dispel any misunderstanding, it should be stipulated that the rights in question are only those relating to personal status.

Article 13:

This article must not in any case invalidate or impair our reservation relating to Egyptian travel papers together with the consequences involved in the application of that reservation.

Article 14:

Our signature does not apply to this Article.

Article 15:

The Egyptian Government wishes it to be understood that the committees referred to in Article 15 will not be invested with the powers laid down in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the said Article in the event of its desiring to reserve the said powers for the representatives of the local authority.

* * *

The Egyptian Government reserves the right to substitute, should the case arise, and whenever it may think fit, assimilation to nationals, for the most favourable treatment granted to nationals of a foreign country, in all the provisions of the Convention in which such treatment is stipulated.

FRANCE

Subject to the following reservations:

(1) Article 7 shall not preclude the application of the laws and regulations fixing the proportion of wage-earning foreigners that employers are authorised to employ in France;

(2) The organisation, in France, of committees such as are provided for in Article 15 shall not, if it takes place, confer on them powers incompatible with the existing laws in the matter of finding employment;

(3) The French Government, by its acceptance of the present Convention, is not assuming any obligation in regard to the whole of its colonies, protectorates, overseas territories, territories placed under its suzerainty or territories in respect of which a mandate has been confided to it.

[1] The present Procès-verbal will come into force as soon as it shall have been signed in the name of all Governments parties to the Convention of July 13th, 1931 (§ 2).

[2] The Swiss Federal Political Department, by a letter dated July 15th, 1936, informed the Secretariat of the following:

> " Under the terms of the arrangements concluded between the Government of the Principality of Liechtenstein and the Swiss Government in 1929 and 1935, in application of the Customs Union Treaty concluded between these two countries on March 29th, 1923, the Swiss legislation on narcotic drugs, including all the measures taken by the Federal authorities to give effect to the different international Conventions on dangerous drugs, will be applicable to the territory of the Principality in the same way as to the territory of the Confederation, as long as the said Treaty remains in force. The Principality of Liechtenstein will accordingly participate, so long as the said Treaty remains in force, in the international Conventions which have been or may hereafter be concluded in the matter of narcotic drugs, it being neither necessary nor advisable for that country to accede to them separately."

[3] Subject to subsequent decisions regarding the application of the Convention to the Belgian Congo and to the territories under Belgian mandate.

[4] This ratification does not include Greenland.

The Danish Government makes the entry into force of the Convention, as regards Denmark, subject to its being also ratified by Germany, Belgium, France, Great Britain, Italy and The Netherlands.

[5] This Convention shall be put into force in Finland as from January 1st, 1933.

[6] This ratification includes Chosen, Taiwan, Karafuto, the Leased Territory of Kwantung and the South Sea Islands under Japanese mandate.

[7] This ratification does not apply to the Portuguese Colonies.

[8] This Convention takes effect for Switzerland as from October 1st, 1934.

[9] The ratification of the new revising Convention of 1932 involves, ipso jure, denunciation of the present Convention without any requirement of delay, notwithstanding the provisions of Article 21 of the present Convention. The present Convention has ceased to be open to ratification by the Members as from the date of the coming into force of the new revising Convention of 1932 (October 30th, 1934). It remains, nevertheless, in force in its actual form and content for those Members which have ratified it but have not ratified the revising Convention.

[10] This Convention is denounced as regards Spain as from October 30th, 1934, date of the coming into force of the revising Convention of 1932, Spain having ratified the latter Convention on July 28th, 1934.

(Geneva, June 17th, 1925.)

REPLY RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Estonia.

Fourteen Powers must ratify this Convention before a procès-verbal of deposit of ratifications can be drawn up, and the entry into force of the Convention is subject to the conclusion of this procès-verbal. Up to the present date, the Convention has been ratified by fourteen Powers, but the British Empire, Australia, France, Denmark and Sweden have made the coming into force of the Convention conditional upon previous ratification by the other States producing arms and ammunition and implements of war. It is therefore not possible to foresee when this Convention will enter into force. For this reason, Estonia prefers not to ratify this Convention. (Letter of June 30th, 1936.)

CONVENTION ON CERTAIN QUESTIONS RELATING TO THE CONFLICT OF NATIONALITY LAWS.

(The Hague, April 12th, 1930.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Estonia.

The provisions of this Convention were put into force, in practice, by the Estonian Nationality Act, but a formal ratification would only be called for if a large number of countries had ratified the Convention. Up to the present date, the Convention in question has only been ratified by nine countries, five of which are European States. Estonia prefers to wait until the neighbouring States and the most important States of Europe have ratified this Act. Only then can it reconsider the ratification of the Convention. (Letter of June 30th, 1936.)

The Netherlands.

The Second Chamber of the States-General adopted on July 2nd, 1936, a Bill approving this Convention. (Letter of July 6th, 1936.)

GOVERNMENTS WHICH HAVE NOT MODIFIED THE REPLIES GIVEN BY THEM TO PREVIOUS ENQUIRIES AND CONTAINED IN DOCUMENTS A.25.1932.V, A.17.1933.V, A.13.1934.V and A.17.1935.V :

PROTOCOL RELATING TO A CERTAIN CASE OF STATELESSNESS.

(The Hague, April 12th, 1930.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Estonia.

The provisions of this Protocol were put into force, in practice, by the Estonian Nationality Act, but a formal ratification would only be called for if a large number of countries had ratified the Protocol. Up to the present date, the Protocol in question has only been ratified by nine countries, five of which are European States. Estonia prefers to wait until the neighbouring States and the most important States of Europe have ratified this Act. Only then can it reconsider the ratification of the Protocol. CONVENTION PROVIDING A UNIFORM LAW FOR BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES, WITH ANNEXES AND PROTOCOL.

(Geneva, June 7th, 1930.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Brazil.

The legislation of Brazil as regards Bills of Exchange is very complete, and it does not seem to the Brazilian Government that this Convention need concern it, especially in view of the fact that, the time-limit for ratification having expired, it could only become party to the Convention by accession, and this procedure is not contemplated by the Brazilian Government, for the reasons already given. (Letter of June 3rd, 1936.)

Ecuador.

This Convention is at present being examined with a view to its ratification, which will take place as soon as possible. (Letter of April 15th, 1936.)

CONVENTION ON FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.

(Geneva, October 2nd, 1930.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Bulgaria.

The Royal Ministry of Foreign Affairs has drawn the attention of the competent authorities to this Convention with a view to its ratification as early as possible. (Letter of July 8th, 1936.)

Estonia.

Estonia is unable to ratify this Convention, because it would involve considerable financial commitments. Its entry into force depends on the constitution of a guarantee fund of at least fifty million gold francs for the annual loan service. The amount promised falls far short of this sum, towards which Estonia can make only a very small contribution. While recognising the great importance of this Convention from the point of view of social relations and international collaboration, Estonia is, for purely budgetary reasons, unable to ratify it. (Letter of June 30th, 1936.)

The Netherlands.

A Bill for the approval of this Convention was placed before the States-General on February 22nd, 1932 ; the Second Chamber presented a report on April 29th, 1932 ; the Government, in view of the failure of the Disarmament Conference, did not send a note in reply. (Letter of June 29th, 1936.)

Sweden.

The Royal Government does not at present contemplate ratifying this Convention, for the same reasons as previously stated. (Letter of June 26th, 1936.)

AGREEMENT CONCERNING MARITIME SIGNALS.

(Lisbon, October 23rd, 1930.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Estonia.

Estonia is prepared to ratify this Agreement. In principle, there is no reason why she should not do so. The matter is at present regulated in agreement with Latvia, Finland and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. In order to maintain uniformity of regulations, Estonia prefers to wait until the neighbouring countries have also accepted the system of maritime signals provided for in this Agreement. Of those countries, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics has alone affixed its definitive signature to the Agreement. (Letter of June 30th, 1936.)

Sweden.

The Royal Government does not at present contemplate ratifying this Agreement, for the same reasons as previously stated. (Letter of June 26th, 1936.)

CONVENTION FOR THE UNIFICATION OF CERTAIN RULES CONCERNING COLLISIONS IN INLAND NAVIGATION, WITH PROTOCOL-ANNEX.

(Geneva, December 9th, 1930.)

REPLIES RECEIVED TO THE ENQUIRY ADDRESSED THIS YEAR BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL :

Czechoslovakia.

The Committee composed of representatives of the competent Ministries, and entrusted with the preparation of a Bill regulating the conditions of inland navigation from the point of view of private law, has not yet finished its work. The Czechoslovak Government is therefore unable to indicate the date of the Parliamentary debates on this Bill and the ratification of this Convention, which will come into force by the law now being drafted. (Letter of August 13th, 1936.)

The Netherlands.

A Bill for the approval of this Convention was placed before the States-General on November 16th, 1934. The Second Chamber presented a report on July 16th, 1935. The Government's reply is being prepared. (Letter of June 29th, 1936).

Switzerland.

The competent authorities intended to submit this Convention to the Federal Chambers in 1935, but certain difficulties delayed the preparatory work. The Swiss Government hopes, nevertheless, that this Convention may be ratified in the near future. (Letter of March 21st, 1936.)

As the adaptation of Monegasque legislation to the provisions of this Convention appears to be necessary, the question is now under consideration by the Committee on Litigation and Legislative Studies. The Government of the Principality will not be able to ratify until the legislative text bringing the Monegasque law into harmony with the Convention has been adopted. (Letter of April 21st, 1936.)

INTERNATIONAL REPRESSION OF TERRORISM[1]

DRAFT CONVENTION FOR THE PREVENTION AND PUNISHMENT OF TERRORISM

DRAFT CONVENTION FOR THE CREATION OF AN INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT

OBSERVATIONS BY GOVERNMENTS

Series I

NOTE BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL.

In execution of the Council's decision of January 23rd, 1936,[1] the Secretary-General invited the Governments to be so good as to forward to him, by July 15th, 1936, any observations they might desire to submit to the Assembly on the above-mentioned draft Conventions.

Down to the date of publication of the present document, the following Governments have submitted observations:

August 24th, 1936.

His Majesty's Government in the Commonwealth of Australia agrees in principle to the former Convention, but does not favour the creation of an International Criminal Court.

Austria.

[Translation.] July 2nd, 1936.

The Federal Government of Austria has the honour to submit the following observations with regard to the conclusion of a Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism and of a Convention for the Creation of an International Criminal Court.

V. LEGAL V
1936. V. 6

The Federal Government greatly values the work done by the Committee for the International Repression of Terrorism and considers that the two draft Conventions which it framed could be suitably taken as the basis for the proceedings of a diplomatic conference to be summoned in 1937 with a view to the conclusion of the proposed Conventions.

The Federal Government ventures to add that, in its opinion, the provisions of the second Convention form an integral part of any measures to deal with the question of terrorism, so that it would appear to be necessary to bring both Conventions into force simultaneously.

As regards questions of detail, the Federal Government must make it clear that Austrian law does not permit of the extradition of an offender unless he is charged with an offence regarded as a crime (Verbrechen) in Austria itself, whereas the provisions of the first draft Convention also comprise other punishable offences. Were it to ratify this Convention, the Federal Government would therefore be obliged to enter a reservation to the effect that the extradition of an offender could not be granted by Austria for an offence not described as a Verbrechen by the Austrian Criminal Code. This reservation would, however, not be necessary if an appropriate clause were inserted in Article 9 of the first Convention. Such a clause might be modelled on the terms of Article 5, paragraph 4, of the draft Convention for the Suppression of the Illicit Traffic in Dangerous Drugs of 1934.[1] For its own part, the Austrian Government would nevertheless prefer a text authorising each of the contracting parties to define by a general rule which offences are to be regarded as sufficiently serious instead of the text above referred to, which provides that each individual case is to be judged on its merits.

As regards Article 2, paragraph 4, of the first Convention, it would be advisable to introduce a slight qualification by providing that the acts therein enumerated only fall within the scope of the Convention when the said materials and objects are by their very nature capable of being used for the doing of the acts specified by the Convention.

The provisions of Article 12 would appear to go beyond the purpose of the first Convention, as they deal with a matter unconnected with terrorism. In view of the difficulties involved in the insertion of this article in the Convention, the Austrian Government suggests its omission.

Belgium.

[Translation.] July 27th, 1936.

I have the honour to communicate herewith the Belgian Government's observations on the two draft Conventions framed by the Committee for the International Repression of Terrorism.

These observations relate more particularly to the draft Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism, but they also govern the Belgian Government's attitude to the draft Convention for the Creation of an International Criminal Court, since, as is pointed out in document A.7.1936.V, page 2, the acceptance by a State of the latter Convention is conditional on its acceptance of the former.

Under Belgian law (Article 6 of the Law of October 1st, 1833), extradition may not be granted in respect of political offences or of acts related to such offences.

This principle is applied as follows:

1. In the case of political offences proper—that is to say, of offences which are directed solely against the political interests of a State and which do not cause prejudice to private interests—extradition is absolutely precluded.

2. As regards related offences—that is to say, ordinary criminal offences related to a politica offence, the principle of non-extradition is established by the Law of October 1st, 1833.

In the preparatory proceedings (travaux préparatoires) in respect of that law, the following were given as examples of such related offences: If on the occasion of a seditious rising or of an outrage designed to bring about the overthrow of the Government " the people were to seize the arms to be found in shops or arsenals, such acts would constitute theft. If, as often happens, there were also loss of life, it would be a case of murder." [2]

Such cases of theft and murder would be offences related to a political offence.

3. The second category of quasi-political offences consists of complex offences—that is to say, ordinary criminal offences which, without being related to a political offence, nevertheless have a political motive.

This is the subjective conception of political offences.

Under the Law of March 22nd, 1856, referred to by writers on international law as the " Belgian Clause ", the Belgian Legislature decided that this class of political offence was not to be immune from extradition. According to the preparatory proceedings, the law in question, which

[1] This text was retained in the Convention signed on June 26th, 1936, as Article 9, paragraph 4, which reads as follows:

" The High Contracting Party to whom application for extradition is made shall, in all cases, have the right to refuse to effect the arrest or to grant the extradition of a fugitive offender if his competent authorities consider that the offence of which the fugitive offender is accused or convicted is not sufficiently serious."

[2] Translator's note. — Throughout the present document " murder " is used to translate meurtre and " premeditated murder " to translate assassinat.

lays it down that " an outrage against the head of a foreign Government constituting either murder, premeditated murder or poisoning shall not be deemed to be a political offence or offence related thereto ", was designed solely to dispel uncertainty as to whether extradition could be granted in respect of an attempt on the life of a foreign sovereign as it would be if the victim of such a crime were merely a private person (Pasinomie, 1856, page 105, note in first column).

According to the preparatory proceedings (Pasinomie, 1856, pages 107 and 112) and to the " Records of the House of Representatives " of May 25th, 1871, page 1254, attempts on the lives of human beings shall be judged under the ordinary criminal law, whatever their purpose or motive.

Nevertheless, it should be observed that, according to these same documents, acts of civil war (that is to say, related offences as defined under 2 above) were to continue to be non-extraditable; so that, even if such acts were to lead to the death of the head of a foreign State, they would still be non-extraditable under Article 6 of the Law of October 1st, 1833.

These facts having been made clear, there would appear to be no doubt that the draft Convention does not apply to political offences proper.

It is, however, difficult to perceive to what extent the draft would alter the present position as regards quasi-political offences as defined under 2 and 3 above.

The draft had its origin in the assassination of the King of Yugoslavia at Marseilles in 1935 and relates mainly to political crimes.

From the terms of the draft (Article 2), however, the latter would appear to apply to offences under the ordinary criminal law " directed to the overthrow of a Government or an interruption in the working of public services or a disturbance in international relations ".

Are these terms to be interpreted as applying even to related offences as defined above under No. 2 ?

The present draft does not expressly exclude such cases, more particularly those arising out of civil war. (In any case, who is to determine when the state of civil war begins ?)

Does the draft exclude such cases by implication, by specifically referring to offences directed to bring about a change " dans le fonctionnement des pouvoirs ",[1] and not mentioning offences the purpose of which is to bring about a change " dans la forme des pouvoirs ".

If the draft is meant to embrace even the related offences defined in point (2) of Article 2, it would seem that the Belgian Government would be unable to accept it.

But, even assuming that the draft is to be interpreted as applying solely to cases in which the offence, though not related to a political offence, was nevertheless directed to bringing about one of the results enumerated in Article 2, paragraph 1, the Belgian Government is reluctant to bind itself to abandon the subjective conception of political offences in connection with extradition for the acts referred to in Article 2 of the draft, in the manner in which it was expressly ruled out by the Law of March 22nd, 1856 (see 3 above), in regard to attempts upon the life of the head of a State.

It is to be feared that, were it to give such an undertaking, the Belgian Government would risk being obliged to grant extradition in cases in which such action would be incompatible with a proper understanding of the principles of non-extradition in political matters.

This will at once be evident from consideration of the following case: Let it be supposed that the State whose interests " are affected " within the meaning of Article 2, paragraph 1, by offences falling within the scope of that article, subsequently undergoes a change of Government.

In the very nature of things the new Government—if it does not actually make heroes of those of its supporters by whom the offences were committed—will at least refrain from prosecuting them; more particularly, it will not request their extradition.

But, if the interests of the new Government happened in their turn to be " affected " by offences similar to those formerly committed by its own adherents, it would seek to punish the offenders and would request their extradition.

To hand over persons guilty of such acts either to the State requesting extradition or to the International Criminal Court which the second draft Convention proposes to set up might be contrary to a proper understanding of the principle of non-extradition in political matters.

The Belgian Government therefore desires, as far as possible, to retain the right to decide for itself in each particular case whether an offence under the ordinary criminal law is or is not of a political character such as would justify the refusal of extradition.

It is nevertheless willing to give the matter further consideration and its delegation to the League Assembly next September will be happy to proceed, with other delegations, to an exchange of views regarding the two draft Conventions, the examination of which has been placed upon the Assembly's agenda.

1 Translator's note. — The corresponding phrase in the English text is: " directed to the overthrow of a Government . . . "

United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

August 13th, 1936.

1. His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom fully recognise both the importance and exceptional complexity of the proposals contained in the draft Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism and, having regard to the difficulties inherent in the subject, have given the proposals the closest examination.

2. In general, the English criminal law is already sufficient to render criminal the acts mentioned in Article 2, though it deals with such acts in general terms without reference to the particular circumstances in which they are committed. English law is, however, based upon the broad principle that the English courts are only concerned with criminal offences committed and taking effect within the territory, and, although there are a few exceptions to this principle (for example, the English courts would take cognisance of a conspiracy in England to commit murder abroad), very grave consideration would be required before any proposal to extend these exceptions could be accepted.

3. As regards the proposed provisions relating to extradition, though His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom are unable to surrender persons in respect of offences of a political character and their extradition treaties accordingly contain an exception in respect of such offences, the English courts place in this connection a very narrow construction upon offences of a political character. Subject to this narrow exception, the ordinary policy of His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom is to surrender by way of extradition British subjects in respect of offences committed by them abroad. There is, however, a serious lack of reciprocity in this matter. Many States decline to surrender their own nationals to the United Kingdom. His Majesty's Government would welcome a greater measure of reciprocity in this matter.

4. His Majesty's Government consider that the draft Convention merits careful consideration, and they will give the closest attention to the views expressed by other Governments.

5. As regards the proposed Convention for the Creation of an International Criminal Court, His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom have carefully and sympathetically considered the text prepared by the Committee of Experts; but they are of opinion that the time has not yet arrived for the creation of the proposed Court.

6. There would appear to His Majesty's Government to be no general analogy between the existing Permanent Court of International Justice and the proposed International Criminal Court. The existing Court applies recognised rules of international law to the settlement of international disputes and fulfils a function which no other judicial institution can perform. The proposed Court, on the other hand, would apply no single system of substantive law; its judgments would be dependent upon the national law to be applied in the particular case; and its decisions in similar cases would necessarily vary according to the particular national law. The method of trial, the procedure and the rules of evidence play a most important part in the administration of criminal justice, and it is felt that it would not be possible for the International Criminal Court to draw up rules in such matters which would be such as to command general acceptance by public opinion in the different countries. The administration of criminal justice reflects the national traditions and ideas of the different peoples, and it would not appear possible to bring them into unison at the present time. Further, it is thought that the work which the proposed Court would perform can generally be done with more efficiency by national courts. In these circumstances, His Majesty's Government do not see their way to participate in a scheme for an International Criminal Court.

7. His Majesty's Government would not, however, wish to oppose the creation of an International Criminal Court under the auspices of the League of Nations on the ground that they did not themselves propose to participate in the scheme if they were of opinion that the Court would be likely to serve a useful international purpose. So far, however, as His Majesty's Government can foresee, the Court would seldom be used, and, in view of the inherent difficulties of the proposal, they doubt whether the creation of an International Criminal Court would at the present time be conducive to improved international co-operation. Harm, in their opinion, is done to international institutions generally by the establishment of an institution which is not supported by the general assent of public opinion. His Majesty's Government accordingly consider that the time is not yet ripe for the creation of such a Court and suggest that the proposal should, for the time being at any rate, be abandoned.

8. In the event of the proposal being abandoned, Article 10 of the Terrorism Convention would consequentially be deleted. Should it, however, be decided to proceed with a Convention for the creation of an International Criminal Court, His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom are of opinion that Article 10 of the Terrorism Convention should be amended so as to preclude a State from sending to the Court for trial a person who is the subject of a State which has not adhered to the Court Convention.

Estonia.

[Translation.] July 13th, 1936.

The Ministry for Foreign Affairs has the honour to express the complete agreement of the Government of Estonia with the principles laid down in these Conventions. In view, however, of the complexity of the problems involved, the competent authorities have not, down to the present moment, been able to reach their final conclusion as to the Conventions. The Ministry for Foreign Affairs proposes, therefore, to reserve for a later date the final expression of its opinion.

Finland.

[Translation.] May 28th, 1936.

The Finnish Government is of opinion that the adoption and application of conventions similar to the two draft Conventions for the international repression of terrorism would be likely to help the competent authorities to combat extremist movements dangerous to the State itself and to public order. The Finnish Government considers it necessary, however, that the said drafts should be supplemented by stipulations, including among acts punishable under the said Conventions the printing, conveyance and distribution of publications containing exhortations to overthrow by force the Government of any contracting country, or otherwise tending to promote activities with such a purpose. The effectiveness of the Conventions in question would also be considerably enhanced if the contracting parties could agree to prohibit in their respective territories the activities of any organisation aiming at the overthrow by force of the Government of any other country or otherwise promoting the achievement of such a purpose.

Lastly, the practical results of the proposed Conventions depend essentially on continuous co-operation between the competent authorities of the different countries. Such co-operation should be arranged direct between the said special authorities.

Hungary.

[Translation.] July 6th, 1936.

I. As regards the draft Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism, the Hungarian Government has no observations to make except with reference to certain formal provisions of this draft, which are dealt with later under No. IV.

II. With reference to the draft Convention for the Creation of an International Criminal Court, the Hungarian Government wishes to recall the general attitude which it adopted at the outset, when it stated that it was not in favour of the creation of an International Criminal Court. It also ventures to refer to the objections put forward by the Hungarian member of the Committee for the International Repression of Terrorism in this connection during the general discussion which took place on this subject at the April 1935 session and at the second session from January 7th to 15th, 1936.

III. The Hungarian Government, while emphasising once again that it cannot see its way to accept the draft Convention for the Creation of an International Criminal Court and maintaining its general standpoint unaltered, is nevertheless anxious to reply to the request made to it on behalf of the Council and to submit some observations on certain provisions of the draft in question, on the understanding that these observations do not in any way imply that it considers the creation of an International Criminal Court and the conclusion of a Convention on this matter necessary or even desirable.

This being understood, the Hungarian Government submits the following observations:

Ad Article 4.

This text is in accordance with the provisions of Article 2 of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice; in particular, it specifies the class of persons eligible as members of the International Criminal Court.

This article does not, however, contain any provisions ensuring the impartiality of the judges (see Article 16 of the Statute), nor does it provide for the solemn declaration which, in accordance with Article 20 of the Statute, the members of the Hague Court are required to make before taking up their duties.

There is no reason why similar rules should not be laid down for the members of the International Criminal Court, since impartiality is essential when they are trying persons accused of acts of terrorism.

This article deals with the right to conduct the prosecution before the International Court and defines the States competent to conduct it.

It does not, however, make it clear that the International Criminal Court is not entitled to institute proceedings in the absence of a charge and that it must drop the proceedings if the charge is withdrawn. A formal provision to this effect should be inserted, as it is doubtful whether, according to Article 22, a charge is held to be an essential element of the procedure or whether the intention is simply to enable the charge to be upheld without making it a condition of judicial action.

To this lacuna in the draft must be attributed the fact that, contrary to the provisions relating to judges and counsel for the defence (Articles 4 and 29), the text does not define the class of persons from among whom the plaintiff State may appoint its representative.

The counsel of the accused should be expressly mentioned as the person to whom the file of the case, including the statement of the partie civile, should be communicated. This appears to be necessary because the person sent to the Court for trial may not be living or staying at the seat of the Court; in such a case, if the documents are sent to him there may not be time for his counsel to study them properly.

Ad Article 28.

It is doubtless due to an oversight that the text omits to mention that the State which has brought the case before the International Criminal Court should be represented at the examination and hearing of witnesses and experts. The text refers to Article 21, which does not mention the State in question.

Ad Article 30.

There are two objections to point 2.

In the first place, only witnesses and experts are to be heard in camera; the Court should, however, be authorised to adopt this procedure in other circumstances, with the sole general restriction that the Court's judgment or order should in every case be read at a public hearing (Article 33).

Secondly, it appears to be necessary to stipulate that, even when the hearing takes place in camera, the provisions of Article 21 will continue to be applicable—that is to say, the States enumerated in that article and also the State which has brought the matter before the Court should in every case be invited to be present at the hearing, even if it takes place in camera.

Ad Article 35.

The jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court should not be extended to private law matters and the Court should not pronounce upon the restoration of property or decide questions relating to the payment of damages.

In the first place, as regards articles serving as proof of the crime and articles in general which are of some importance from the point of view of criminal procedure, the general principle recognised by extradition treaties is that each State, even if it agrees to extradition, cedes such articles only temporarily, and subject to their return, to the State making the application, because they may be claimed in the extraditing State by persons whose right of ownership or other rights are not affected by the proceedings.

Secondly, as regards damages at private law, it is not advisable to extend the jurisdiction of the Criminal Court beyond its natural limits or to authorise the Court to decide claims which are simply and solely a matter of private law and in respect of which States would have to be compelled to execute the judgment in their territory. Persons having claims of this kind should be requested to follow the normal procedure laid down by law—that is to say, to apply to the courts of the State competent to hear and determine such cases.

Ad Article 36.

No observation is called for in regard to Rule No. 1 to the effect that, in principle, the judgments of the Court shall be executed by the State whose substantive criminal law has been applied; this will usually be the State in whose territory the offence has been committed.

As regards the provision relating to the execution of sentences, the basic principle should be, on the one hand, that the case should be tried with the utmost impartiality and, on the other, that, if the State does not wish to take part in the judicial proceedings and desires to free itself from all responsibility, it can do so by handing over the offender to the International Criminal Court.

The whole Convention should bear the impress of this principle, and none of the provisions should conflict with it.

Impartiality is undoubtedly of the greatest importance, not only as regards the trial of the case, but also—and this point closely affects the accused person—as regards the execution of the sentence. This fundamental principle of the Convention should therefore be applied in full in respect of its execution also.

Consequently, the State which has brought the case before the International Criminal Court so as not to assume responsibility for the proceedings and to hold aloof from the consequences of the offence should not be called upon to execute the sentence unless it agrees to do so.

According to the report of the proceedings of the Committee of Experts, this appears to be the idea underlying Article 36; moreover, it was specifically mentioned in the text of Article 56 of the 1935 draft drawn up by the Belgian, French, Roumanian and Spanish members of the Committee (document C.184.M.102.1935.V), but is not clearly brought out in the new text.

Another defect is that the draft omits to mention the important rule that the State against which the offence has been committed can in no case be responsible for the execution of the sentence.

We need not stress the fact that, if it is the object of the Convention to set up an International Criminal Court to ensure that certain criminal acts will be tried impartially, the possibility that the judgment of this impartial Court may be executed by the injured State which is primarily concerned and incapable of impartiality should be precluded.

Ad Article 39.

Point 2 of this article leaves it to the Court (Article 42) to determine by its rules the cases in which an application for revision may be made.

The class of persons entitled to make an application for revision should be defined in the actual Convention, and in any case it should be expressly stated that the persons mentioned in Articles 22 and 29 will have this right.

Ad Article 40.

According to paragraph 1, the salaries of the judges are payable by the States of which they are nationals. As Article 6 does not require States to nominate candidates who are their nationals, the judges will not necessarily possess the nationality of the State by which they are nominated; they might even be nationals of States that have not acceded to the Convention. Consequently, the rule laid down in paragraph 1 of Article 40 is obviously incorrect; it should stipulate that the salaries of the judges are payable by the State which put forward their candidature.

In this connection, the Hungarian Government wishes once again to draw attention to a gap in the draft, which omits one of the most delicate questions of the International Criminal Court—namely, the question of language. In the Hungarian Government's opinion, this point is of such importance that it would be better not to leave it to be settled by the Court's regulations.

Ad Article 42.

It would be well to add (as part of the Convention) to the provision that the Court shall establish regulations to govern its practice and procedure the stipulation that the Court's procedure will naturally be governed by the principles of modern law relating to criminal procedure.

IV. As regards the provisions of the draft Convention for the Creation of an International Criminal Court relating to interpretation, ratification, accessions, colonies and protectorates, and also to the entry into force and denunciation of the Convention, the Hungarian Government ventures to point out that the text of document A.7.1936.V differs considerably from the Minutes of the meeting held by the Committee of Experts at Geneva on January 14th, 1936.

For instance, there are the following discrepancies:

In the third line of Article 44, after the words " direct negotiations ", the words " or by means of arbitration agreed upon between them " are missing.

According to the Minutes referred to above, this phrase should be inserted in the corresponding articles of the two Conventions, and it is, in fact, embodied in Article 19 of the draft Convention for Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism; but it has been omitted from the second draft, although it was adopted by the Committee for both these draft Conventions.

The same observation applies to the whole of the text of Article 52 of the second draft, which has also been omitted from the first draft.

Moreover, the second paragraph of this article has been drawn up in such a way to make it doubtful whether the amendment of the Convention, if adopted by the majority of the contracting parties, will or will not be binding on States which have not accepted it.

Should an article reproducing the text of Article 52 of the second draft Convention also be inserted, in accordance with the Minutes of the meeting of the Committee of Experts on January 14th, 1936, in the draft Convention for Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism, the Hungarian Government wishes to state forthwith that it regards as unacceptable any interpretation of paragraph 2 of Article 52 to the effect that amendments adopted by the majority of the contracting parties are binding upon all signatory States. In that case, the Hungarian Government would be obliged to request that the text of paragraph 2 should be made more explicit.

Lastly, the Hungarian Government feels obliged to revert once again to certain formal provisions of the two draft Conventions.

In its opinion, Articles 21 and 25 of the first draft and Articles 46 and 48 of the second draft, in their present wording, offer certain drawbacks. For instance, the Convention may be acceded to even before, for lack of ratifications, it has come into force (Article 21 of the first draft and Article 46 of the second draft). This conflicts with the principle that an international convention may only be acceded to after it has come into force. The drawback to Article 25 of the first draft and Article 48 of the second draft is that, as they are worded at present, the entry into force of the Convention may take place independently of the signatory States and even without any of those States having ratified the Convention.

In the Hungarian Government's opinion, Article 21 of the first and Article 46 of the second draft should be amended so as to make accession possible only after the date on which the Convention comes into force. Moreover, the text of Article 25 of the first and Article 48 of the second draft should be revised so as to ensure that the entry into force of the Convention is subject only to ratification by a certain number of Members of the League of Nations or non-member States.[1]

The Hungarian Government wishes to point out that, on July 10th, 1935, it submitted similar observations regarding the second preliminary draft International Convention on the Use of Broadcasting in the Cause of Peace (Circular Letter 44.1936.XII, Annex, pages 19 and 20), and that the Drafting Committee appointed to draw up the text of the draft for submission to the Diplomatic Conference to be held at Geneva on September 3rd, 1936, recognised the soundness of the objections formulated by the Hungarian Government (cf. the above-mentioned document, page 8).

In accordance with this Government's proposals, Articles 10 and 11 of the draft Convention in question were worded as follows:

"Article 10.

"After the entry into force of the present Convention, any Member of the League of Nations and any non-member State referred to in Article 8 may accede to it.

"The instruments of accession shall be sent to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who shall notify the deposit thereof to all the Members of the League and to all the non-member States referred to in the aforesaid article.

"Article 11.

"The present Convention shall enter into force on the ninetieth day following the receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations of the sixth ratification.

"Every ratification effected after the deposit of the ratification mentioned in paragraph 1 of the present article shall take effect on the ninetieth day following the date of receipt thereof by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

"In conformity with the provisions of Article 18 of the Covenant of the League of Nations, the Secretary-General shall register the present Convention on the date of its coming into force."

India.

August 14th, 1936.

As regards the draft Convention for the Creation of an International Criminal Court, the Government of India do not propose to offer any detailed remarks, since they are unable to accept the draft Convention. As the jurisdiction of the Court is limited to the offences set out in the Terrorist Convention (or, possibly, to some of them), and as the Convention, even for these offences, places no obligation upon any party to the Convention to remit any person to the Court, they feel doubtful whether this organisation would serve any practical purpose. Terrorism in India has very little connection at present with that in European countries. The Governments in India have adequate legal powers to deal with it and it appears most unlikely that they would ever wish to resort to the proposed Court. Further, if India accepted the Convention, the institution of the Court would necessitate new legislation in the Indian Legislature, and, even if the Court would serve a useful purpose as regards crimes committed in Europe, the Government of India would not feel justified in introducing legislation to make resort possible to a court situated at such a distance from India. The inconvenience and expense involved in resort to the Court would outweigh any advantages to be obtained from participation in an international administration of criminal law.

As regards the draft Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism, the Government of India observe that, under the operation of Article 23, the enactment of any legislation necessary to bring the law of India and the administrative organisation into conformity with the rules contained in the Convention would be a condition precedent to ratification. It is impossible for them within the time at their disposal to reach definite conclusions regarding the extent, if any, to which the Convention would necessitate amendment of the existing law. In view of certain sections of the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure which provide that offences (or abetments of offences) committed by British-Indian subjects outside British India may be dealt with as if they had been committed within British India, they anticipate that the existing law is likely to be found adequate to implement the more essential provisions of the Convention, though it is probable that detailed examination will disclose certain respects in which legislation would be necessary. They therefore desire it to be understood that their attitude towards this Convention is subject to the possibility that the Indian Legislature would decline to pass legislation the enactment of which might be found to be a condition precedent to ratification, and that the question whether, in that event, resort could properly be had to the extraordinary powers vested in the Governor-General by the Government of India Act, which empower him to pass legislation that is considered essential to the safety and tranquillity of British India, has not been considered. In the second place, it has not been found possible to consult the local Governments in the time allowed, and a similar reservation is necessary as regards consultation with them. In the third place, it is necessary to state that this document refers to the position in British India alone.

[1] Note by the Secretariat. — The provisions here criticised are not an innovation. They represent a method of facilitating the entry into force of general international conventions, and their extension to the greatest possible number of countries, which originated with the conventions adopted at the Barcelona Conference of 1921. Every convention which has been actually concluded under the League's auspices and which is open to accession allows accession to take place before the convention is in force. Since 1928, it has been the regular practice to give to an accession the same force as to a ratification so far as regards the entry into force of the convention.

Subject to the reservations mentioned above, the Government of India are fully in accord with the principle of international co-operation for the prevention and punishment of terrorism, as stated in Article 1 of the draft Convention.

I have the honour to inform you that the competent authorities have considered the draft Conventions and have declared that, in principle, they have no objection to make to them. They reserve, however, their right to express a further opinion at a later date.

[Translation.] July 20th, 1936.

1. Draft Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism.

The most important provisions of the draft are those of Articles 2, 3, 7, 8 and 9.

The Norwegian Government has no objections of principle to Articles 2, 3, 7 and 8.

Under the Norwegian Criminal Code, all the acts enumerated under Nos. 1 to 3 of Article 2 are punishable both as ordinary or as aggravated crimes intended to cause death, grievous bodily harm or loss of liberty (Criminal Code, Chapter 9, cpr. Article 96, Chapters 21 and 22), crimes against property (Chapter 28) or crimes against public security (Chapter 14). The same applies to attempts to commit the above mentioned crimes. Generally speaking, the penalties provided for in the Criminal Code are also applicable to persons guilty of participation in such crimes.

Article 2, No. 4, and Article 3, No. 1 (2), refer to certain preparatory acts less directly connected with the actual crimes. As a general rule, such preparatory acts are not punishable under Norwegian law. For this reason and as both the determination of guilt and also the definitions of " attempt " and " participation " vary greatly from country to country, the Norwegian Government considers that the draft Convention should do no more than refer, in so far as these questions are concerned, to the municipal law of the individual States.

Persons guilty of the acts mentioned in Articles 7 and 8 could no doubt be prosecuted in Norway in all cases (Criminal Code, Article 12, Nos. 3*c* and 4*b*). As regards offences committed abroad by foreigners, Article 13, paragraph 2, of the Criminal Code nevertheless provides that criminal proceedings can only be instituted if the act in question is also punishable in the country in which it was committed; furthermore, the sentence cannot be heavier than that which might be passed in the foreign country in question. The Norwegian Government does not, however, consider it necessary to enter a reservation as the result of these provisions of its Criminal Code.

The chief importance of the draft Convention resides, no doubt, in the proposals regarding the treatment of political crimes and, above all, extradition. It would appear that the obligation as to extradition embodied in Article 9 overrides the obligation to institute criminal proceedings under Article 8.

The objections of principle that might be raised against restrictions upon the right of asylum, however, would also apply in Norway to the obligation to institute criminal proceedings. In cases in which the request for the extradition of an offender guilty of a political crime has been refused, there has never been any question of instituting criminal proceedings in Norway, even when the express conditions under which such proceedings are permissible, in virtue of Article 12, No. 4, of the Criminal Code, have been fulfilled.

Article 3 of the Norwegian Extradition Law of June 13th, 1908, contains the following provisions:

> " Extradition may not be granted in respect of any political crime or of any ordinary crime committed in connection with a political crime and with the purpose of assisting the attainment of the end aimed at by that crime.
> " The crime of causing death or grievous bodily harm to the head of a State or to a person belonging to the family of the head of a State may nevertheless give rise to extradition, provided always that the crime was not committed in connection with another political crime."

The draft Convention could not therefore be accepted unless the above law were amended.

The Norwegian Government is not convinced of the wisdom of adopting, at the present juncture, general restrictions on the right of asylum, which would be the result of the acceptance of the provisions of the draft. It nevertheless considers that certain acts must be punishable and also give rise to extradition, even when they constitute political crimes or are connected with such crimes. Murder and attempted murder fall within this category; nevertheless, an exception should perhaps be made in respect of acts committed in open fight. Nor has the Government any special objection to extending international repression so as to include crimes intended to cause grievous bodily harm or loss of liberty. The crimes mentioned under No. 3 of Article 2 of the draft should be regarded from the same point of view as they are also of a nature to endanger human lives.

On the other hand, the Norwegian Government considers that the acts mentioned in Article 2, No. 2, should not be included in the above-mentioned category. In serious cases, these acts would come under the provisions of No. 1 or No. 3 of the article; otherwise, the right of asylum must be granted; provided always that the acts in question are to be regarded as political crimes within the meaning of the law. The same applies to the preparatory acts mentioned in Articles 2 and 3.

The Norwegian Government desires, lastly, to point out that, in its opinion, the provisions of Articles 14, 15 and 16 are of particular importance and to them it gives its fullest support. These articles are designed to centralise criminal investigations and to institute mutual assistance during criminal proceedings, together with a service for the mutual exchange of information.

2. Draft Convention for the Creation of an International Criminal Court.

The Norwegian Government regrets that, for reasons of principle, it is unable to support this draft.

Netherlands.

[Translation.] July 15th, 1936.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands has the honour to forward to the Secretary-General, in respect of the Kingdom of the Netherlands in Europe, the following observations concerning the two draft Conventions drawn up by the Committee—viz., the draft Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism, and the draft Convention for the Creation of an International Criminal Court.[1]

The Netherlands Government is perfectly ready to co-operate, in so far as may be possible, in an international attempt to put down terrorist crimes having a political object. Nevertheless, the two drafts prepared by the Committee call for the following comments:

As regards Article 2, the Netherlands Government is of opinion that it should be clearly understood that the acts enumerated in that article will only fall within the scope of the Convention when committed for the purpose of bringing about " the overthrow of a Government or an interruption in the working of public services, or a disturbance in international relations, by the use of violence or by the creation of a state of terror ". It will not, therefore, be enough that such an act should be of a nature to bring about the overthrow of a Government or a disturbance in international relations, as mentioned above. The efforts of the person committing the act must have been deliberately directed towards such an end. The Netherlands Government is doubtful as to whether the words " lorsque lesdits faits tendent à " make this sufficiently clear.[2]

The Netherlands Government is further of opinion that the enumeration of the categories of offences which are to be covered by the Convention is too wide. This observation applies to Article 2, No. 5, under which it is a punishable offence to give assistance to an accomplice of a person who commits any of the acts mentioned in that article; the Government considers that this clause should only apply to assistance given to the criminal himself.

The Netherlands Government considers that the Convention being naturally limited to international acts, this fact implies that Article 2 should not deal with offences which are in no way international in character—i.e., offences committed against a State by one of its own nationals in its own territory and without the criminal's having proceeded to any other country.

[1] The present note reproduces certain observations regarding this problem already set forth in the note of September 5th, 1935, and published in document A.7.1936.V, in so far as their relevance has remained unaffected by the Committee's subsequent proceedings.

[2] Translator's note. — The English text has " in all cases where they are directed to . . . "

The words " any wilful complicity [1] and any help given towards the commission of such an act " in Article 3, paragraph I (2), would appear to be too wide in scope; it should be understood that help given towards the commission of such an act would only be punishable if the person by whom the help was given had the deliberate intention (volonté) to assist the commission of the criminal act.

The drafting of Article 3, paragraph 3, with regard to incitement is not quite clear. The Netherlands Government assumes that it is to be interpreted to mean that, as a rule, incitement which has not taken place in public must always be punished like that which has taken place in public, and that the exception made in paragraph 3 merely relates to incitement which has not taken place in public when such incitement has not been successful.

Article 7 calls for the comments made in the previous note in respect of Article 6. As the Netherlands does not admit the principle of the extradition of nationals, a provision (Article 5) has been included in the Criminal Code to the effect that Netherlands law shall apply to any act committed by a Netherlands subject in foreign territory, provided always that such act constitutes a crime under the Netherlands criminal law, and is at the same time punishable under the laws of the country in which it has been committed.

As regards Article 9, which deals with extradition, the Netherlands Government desires to reiterate what was said in the note of September 5th, 1935. The Netherlands is not prepared to consider all the offences referred to in the present Articles 2 and 3 as being deemed to be included as extradition crimes in any extradition treaty which has been or may hereafter be concluded between the Netherlands and all the other contracting States. Moreover, the extradition treaties hitherto concluded by the Netherlands Government are based, in general, on the principle that extradition cannot be granted for political offences. In view of the wide differences of political opinion which at present exist in different countries on fundamental questions, the time does not seem favourable for completely abrogating this rule. The present circumstances as regards the national policies of different States are not such as to induce the Netherlands to depart from their historic tradition as regards the hospitality offered to political refugees.

The service referred to in Article 14, as at present drafted, would merely deal with the offences referred to in Articles 2 and 3. Would it not be desirable to make the same service responsible for the investigations in regard to offences under Article 12.

The Netherlands Government has been glad to note that rules have been inserted in Article 19 with regard to the settlement of disputes which might arise in respect of the interpretation or application of the Convention. At the same time, the Netherlands Government regrets that the present text does nothing to remove the possibility that, in the event of two contracting parties failing to agree upon the jurisdiction, the dispute will remain unsettled. In this connection, the Netherlands Government ventures to suggest that a rule be inserted making good this omission; it would, for example, be possible to reproduce the provisions of Article 21 of the 1930 Convention on Certain Questions relating to the Conflict of Nationality Laws, which are more satisfactory in this respect.

As Her Majesty's Government has already stated in its previous note, it considers that the establishment of an international jurisdiction would no doubt offer advantages, particularly in cases in which the State on whose territory an accused person has taken refuge prefers sending him for trial before the international jurisdiction to extraditing him to the injured State.

In this connection, the Netherlands Government ventures to suggest that, in Article 22 of the first draft Convention, States prepared to ratify the Convention should be given the possibility of entering a special reservation to the effect that the reciprocal obligations ensuing from that instrument are only accepted in regard to the States which are also parties to the Convention on the Court. It might, indeed, happen that a State unwilling to accept the very general rule as to extradition embodied in Article 9 would nevertheless be prepared to accept the Convention on terrorism in regard to other contracting parties if it were entitled, under certain circumstances, to send the person charged before the International Court for trial instead of granting his extradition.

As regards the second draft Convention, the Netherlands Government has been gratified to note that The Hague has been suggested as the seat of the new Court. The Government has observed with satisfaction that the Committee has taken into account several observations regarding the details of the Court's composition and the procedure to be followed which were put forward by the Netherlands Government in its previous note. The Government persists in its belief that it would be wiser to modify Article 6 by the introduction of the rule contained in the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, which lays down that the Assembly and the Council shall proceed to the election of judges independently of one another.

The Netherlands Government ventures to suggest that the draft Convention be modified in the following way:

From the present text of Articles 17 and 36, it ensues that, unless otherwise decided by the Court, sentences involving loss of liberty shall be executed by the State in whose territory the offence was committed. It might nevertheless happen that a State sending an offender for trial before the Court had adopted this procedure in preference to extradition to the State in whose territory the offence was committed, for the very reason that it was anxious to avoid leaving jurisdiction and execution of the sentence to the State in question. It would therefore appear to be desirable that a clause be inserted in Article 36 to the effect that the Court will be required to " decide otherwise " within the meaning of Article 36 if the State by which the offender has been sent for trial before the Court has itself requested to be entrusted with the execution of any sentence of imprisonment which is imposed.

The observation regarding the settlement of disputes made in regard to Article 19 of the first Convention naturally applies also to Article 44 of the second draft.

Siam.

July 1st, 1936.

The Siamese Government has the honour to state that, whereas many of the acts enumerated in the draft are already punishable under the Siamese Penal Code, the draft Convention in its present form would entail certain difficulties in respect of the existing judicial system, and in some other matters is not particularly appropriate to conditions in Siam. Under the circumstances, His Majesty's Government is inclined to refrain from offering detailed comment at the present time.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

[Translation.] April 16th, 1936.

The People's Commissar for Foreign Affairs has the honour to acknowledge receipt of the copies of document A.7.1936.V,transmitted by the Secretary-General's letter dated February 25th, 1936 (Circular Letter 26.1936.V), and containing the draft Conventions for the Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism and for the Creation of an International Criminal Court, together with the report adopted by the Council on January 23rd, 1936.

Examination of these drafts suggests a general observation concerning the actual object of the international agreement in question as contemplated by the Council resolution of December 10th, 1934. Considered in the light of the circumstances which prompted this resolution and of the exchange of views following which the resolution was drawn up, the agreement provided for was to have as its sole object the organising of joint action by the contracting parties for combating terrorist conspiracies which endanger international peace and security. This aspect of the question does not seem to have been sufficiently taken into account in the drafts drawn up by the Committee, although it is the aspect which should be the one and only object of the agreement to be concluded under the terms of the resolution of December 10th, 1934.

Bearing this in mind, the drafts in question should be examined with a view to a more exact definition of their scope, while providing at the same time for a more complete and efficacious solution of the problem in its international aspect.

Venezuela

[Translation.] August 7th, 1936.

I have the honour to inform you that the Department concerned, after studying the draft Conventions for the Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism and for the Creation of an International Criminal Court, finds that the acts in respect of which proceedings are to be instituted, as indicated in Section A and enumerated in Bases (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e) for the conclusion of the former agreement, are included in the provisions of our Criminal Code (Articles 158, 160, 174, 175, 273, 284, 286, 287, 344 and 385), so that, so far as our country is concerned, it is unnecessary to add other acts to the list in question.

As regards paragraph (a), it should be noted that criminal acts committed in the territory of the Republic against the head or President of a foreign nation, or against the diplomatic representatives accredited to the Venezuelan Government, on account of their functions, and also attempts to commit such acts and complicity in the commission of such acts, are severely punished under the above-mentioned Articles 158 and 160 of the present Criminal Code.

With reference to paragraph (d), which relates to the possession of arms, ammunition, explosives, etc., by private persons, this question is dealt with in Venezuela by a special Law dated July 19th, 1928, prohibiting the " importation, manufacture, sale, purchase, possession, and carrying of arms " whether these are side-arms or fire-arms; this Law provides for the imposition of effective penalties in the case of the said acts, which are also offences under our Criminal Code.

In accordance with the spirit of our penal legislation, the punishment of the acts enumerated in the Bases mentioned above would come wholly within the jurisdiction of the Venezuelan criminal courts, since the administration of justice in the States which form the Union is automatic, in virtue of the federal regime in force. Consequently, the proposal to create an International Criminal Court for the trial of persons accused of the criminal acts mentioned above, under the conditions set forth in Section B of the draft Convention, would necessitate a previous reform of our positive criminal law, which is a delicate matter, owing to the autonomy of the federal organisations in question.

In conclusion, the opinion of the Department for Foreign Affairs of Venezuela, after examining the draft Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism and the draft Convention for the Creation of an International Criminal Court, is favourable in the former and unfavourable in the latter case.

INTERNATIONAL REPRESSION OF TERRORISM

DRAFT CONVENTION FOR THE PREVENTION AND PUNISHMENT OF TERRORISM

DRAFT CONVENTION FOR THE CREATION OF AN INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT

OBSERVATIONS BY GOVERNMENTS

Series II

NOTE BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL.

Since the publication of document A.24.1936.V, on September 7th, 1936, the following Governments have submitted observations:

	Page		Page
Poland.	1	Roumania.	3

Poland.

September 3th, 1936.

[Translation.]

The Polish Government considers that the purpose of the Convention for the International Repression of Terrorism, as drafted by a special Committee, should be to ensure the prevention and punishment of offences recognised as of a terrorist nature when aimed at the interests of any signatory and even when committed on foreign territory. For this purpose, the offences defined by the Convention should be regarded as delicta juris gentium.

To this end, there is no need to ask the signatory States to accept identical definitions and penalties of the offences covered by the Convention. This would be virtually impracticable, since such a Convention would require States to introduce into their respective bodies of law very profound changes, which would sometimes be incompatible with their penal law system as a whole, and in its scope and consequences would go beyond the purpose aimed at—viz., to make so-called terrorist offences punishable and not to unify certain questions of penal law.

This general observation gives a sufficiently clear idea of the attitude of the Polish Government on the question of principle. The following observations on the various draft articles are submitted by the Government:

Sub-paragraph (3) of Article 2 might be reworded as follows: " Any wilful act calculated to endanger the community by imperilling human life or by causing the destruction of property on a large scale, and in particular, interference with the working of means of communication . . . " (continue with the existing text).

Series of League of Nations Publications

V. LEGAL

1936. V. 7.

S.d.N. 1200 (F.) 970 (A.). 9/36. Imp. Kundig.

This form of words would cover the large-scale destruction of private property not imperilling human life but designed to create a state of terror as defined in Article 2, paragraph 1. Experience shows that the action of terrorists is sometimes directed against private property of great economic, cultural or other value without human lives being endangered. Such action, however, is intended to create a state of terror and by its violent character to disturb the working of the public services.

The expression " en particulier " in the French text is substituted for " notamment " because the restrictive enumeration does not cover other forms of action which may occur in practice and constitute a danger to the community—e.g., the destruction of a dyke may cause floods.

The wording of sub-paragraph (4) of Article 2 should be made more restrictive. The substitution for " any material or object " of the words " arms, ammunition or explosives " would be more in keeping with the provisions of various criminal codes.

The Polish Government considers that sub-paragraph (5) of Article 2 is superfluous, since the question of assistance is adequately dealt with in Article 3. If the reference is to forms of assistance not covered by Article 3, these would not exist in the criminal codes, and the codes could probably not be amended in this respect. It is, moreover, difficult to conceive of complicity in an offence taking any other form than help or incitement. As Article 3 covers the entire ground, sub-paragraph (5) of Article 2 should be deleted.

Ad Article 3. — The Polish Government considers that it would be better to substitute the word " association " for " conspiracy ". Such a wide conception as " conspiracy " could only apply to the most serious crimes, such as attempts against the safety of the State. Conspiracy in the sense of the unorganised maintenance of connections would go beyond the scope of the Convention, which should cover association only—i.e., the organised preparation of crimes or offences.

As regards incitement, it would probably be advisable to avoid the unequal commitments which the present wording of paragraph 1, sub-paragraph (2), and paragraph 3 of Article 3 would impose on the contracting parties. Instead of leaving it to domestic law to define the exact scope of these undertakings in the case of incitement which has not taken place in public and has not been successful, it would be better to make no reference in the Convention to such incitement. In this vay, paragraph 3 would be deleted and paragraph 1, sub-paragraph (2), would read as follows: " . . . direct public incitement, whether successful or not, and also direct incitement which has not taken place in public and has been successful . . . ".

Ad Article 4. — The Polish Government thinks that the reservation regarding characterisation of offences and other special provisions of national law should also be extended to the property covered by sub-paragraph (2) of Article 2. The signatories to the Convention could not, of course, undertake to apply the same definitions and penalties to the crimes and offences referred to in Article 2, sub-paragraph (2), when directed against their own interests as when directed against the interests of another contracting party. Such complete assimilation would go beyond the purpose of the Convention, which is to recognise acts of terrorism as international offences and thus ensure their punishment, and it would entail far-reaching reform of those penal codes which admit the principle of qualified protection for the public property of their respective States.

In these circumstances, the Polish Government proposes that Article 4 be deleted and the question dealt with in Article 18, which should apply not only to the general rules but also to the special provisions of domestic law.

Ad Article 5. — To ensure equality of obligations among signatories to the Convention, the Polish Government would like to see one of two solutions adopted: either, and preferably, all signatories should be deemed bound to recognise foreign convictions for the offences mentioned in Articles 2 and 3 as establishing habitual criminality in the international sense, or Article 5 should be deleted and the problem left to be dealt with by domestic law.

Ad Article 6. — This article seems superfluous, as it leaves the question of parties civiles to national law, but, at the same time, imposes on States where parties civiles are admitted under the domestic law certain obligations which would have no equivalent in the case of other signatories.

Ad Articles 7, 8 and 9. — The structure of these three articles seems to be extremely complicated and leaves several loop-holes which would make it possible for acts of terrorism to go unpunished, contrary to the intention of the Convention. For instance, if a national of country X, a signatory to the Convention, commits an outrage against a Minister of country Y, which is also a signatory to the Convention, in that country's territory, and then escapes to his own country, country X would not under Article 7, paragraph 2, be obliged to punish its offending national, because, the offence being political, the extradition of a foreigner in similar circumstances could not be granted.

As the text at present stands, the number of cases in which extradition would not be granted or punishment imposed would be still further increased by the provisions of sub-paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) of Article 8, which make the punishment subject to various conditions. If any one of these conditions were not fulfilled, the criminal would escape justice. In the case of sub-paragraph (b) it may, inter alia, be pointed out that domestic law does not, as a general rule, consider prosecution for offences committed abroad admissible, and stipulates for prosecution only in special provisions. The consequence would be that international punishment of acts of terrorism would, contrary to the essential purpose of the Convention, become the exception.

In the Polish Government's view, Articles 7 to 9 should lay down the clear and simple rule: aut dedere aut judicare. Signatories should undertake in the first place to extradite the offender, even where there is no extradition treaty between the countries concerned. Where extradition cannot be granted (e.g., where the offender is a national of the country on whose territory he has taken refuge), the offender should necessarily and in every case be brought before the national courts.

Ad Article 10. — This clause seems entirely superfluous since, clearly, the law of the country concerned determines which court shall have jurisdiction.

Ad Article 12. — The Polish Government thinks the following a more suitable wording: " . . . and intended for use as genuine, and without regard to the purpose with which the act was performed ".

Ad Article 18. — The Polish Government thinks that a second paragraph should be added, reading as follows:

> " The High Contracting Parties may, in each particular case, make criminal prosecution or extradition subject to reciprocity on the part of the High Contracting Party concerned."

Ad Article 19. — The Polish Government considers that disputes relating to the application and interpretation of the Convention might usefully be referred to the international political authority—i.e., the Council of the League of Nations—since the disputes would usually be on rather delicate political questions demanding special tact on the part of the body which has to give a decision. The matter could be referred to the Council under Article 15 of the Covenant and the Council could, if necessary, ask the Permanent Court of International Justice for an advisory opinion on difficulties of a purely juridical character.

Ad Appendix II. — The Polish Government sees no need for the creation of an International Criminal Court. Though it does not wish to prevent in any way other countries from setting up such a Court, it thinks that the existence of the Criminal Court would have no effect, de facto or de jure, on those signatories to the Convention for the Repression of Terrorism who did not recognise the Criminal Court. The signatories to the said Convention who recognise the Court could never cite the existence of the latter in reply to requests from the other signatories which were warranted by the actual terms of the Convention.

The Royal Roumanian Government accepts the principles set forth in the draft Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism and in the draft Convention for the Creation of an International Criminal Court.

The Roumanian Government reserves the right, however, to submit any observations it may have to make regarding certain points of detail during the discussion of the above-mentioned drafts at the seventeenth Assembly of the League of Nations.

NOTE BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL.

The text of the resolution adopted by the Assembly on September 27th, 1935, on the subject of the status of women is reproduced below.

A small number of Governments have already found it possible to send their observations and statements to the Secretary-General (see paragraphs 1 and 3 of the above-mentioned resolution). Although the subject has not been placed on the agenda of this year's ordinary session of the Assembly, the Secretary-General has felt that the publication of this information in the present document would be of value to Governments and the international organisations concerned.

The Secretary-General understands that the women's international organisations will not be in a position to present, during the present year, the statements which they are preparing.[1]

A communication regarding the scope which should be given to an enquiry into the status of women has been received from the Pan-Pacific Women's Association and is reproduced in Part II of the present document.

If the information received justifies this course, the Secretary-General proposes to publish, shortly before the Assembly's ordinary session of next year, a second series of the statements received in response to the Assembly's resolution.

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE ASSEMBLY ON SEPTEMBER 27TH, 1935.

The Assembly,

Noting that the question of the status of women was placed on the agenda of the present session for examination, at the instance of a number of delegations, with particular reference to the Equal Rights Treaty signed at Montevideo on December 26th, 1933, by representatives of the Governments of Cuba, Ecuador, Paraguay and Uruguay;

Considering that the terms of the Equal Rights Treaty should be examined in relation to the existing political, civil and economic status of women under the laws of the countries of the world;

Recognising that the question of conditions of employment, whether of men or women, is a matter which properly falls within the sphere of the International Labour Organisation:

(1) Decides that the question of the political and civil status of women shall be referred by the Secretary-General to the Governments for their observations, including observations as to the action which, in their view, the League might take in this matter, and that the Governments shall be requested to supply to the Secretary-General, together with their observations, information as to the existing political and civil status of women under their respective national laws;

(2) Recommends that the women's international organisations should continue their study of the whole question of the political and civil status of women;

(3) Requests that the observations and information communicated by the Governments and the statements of the said international organisations shall be sent to the Secretary-General for consideration by the Assembly of the League of Nations at a subsequent session;

(4) Expresses the hope that the International Labour Organisation will, in accordance with its normal procedure, undertake an examination of those aspects of the problem within its competence — namely, the question of equality under labour legislation — and that it will, in the first place, examine the question of legislation which effects discriminations, some of which may be detrimental to women's right to work.

PART I. — COMMUNICATIONS FROM GOVERNMENTS.

Observations and statements as to the political and civil status of women have been received from the following Governments :

1. NATIONALITY OF WOMEN.

Reference is invited to my letter No. L.N. 14/3/1 of June 1st, 1932.[2] The Union Government are not prepared to go beyond the acceptance of Articles 8 to 10 of the Hague

[1] A letter has been received from the International Alliance of Women for Suffrage and Equal Citizenship asking that it may be mentioned in the present document that that organisation, while unable to submit a memorandum at present, is giving the subject the most careful consideration with a view to presenting its considered opinion at a later date.

[2] See document A.15.1932.V.

Convention of 1930. In this connection, I may add that it has been decided that it is not necessary to introduce legislation at the present parliamentary session to give effect to those articles.

As regards the ratification of the Convention, as such, reference is invited to my letter No. L.N. 10/4 of June 12th, 1935, paragraph (a).[1]

A further point on the question as it affects naturalisation is that no person under disability may become naturalised in the Union. The category of persons under disability includes married women.

2. Franchise.

So far as concerns the franchise, all white women of the age of 21 or over have the right to vote, provided they are Union nationals and have resided in any electoral division for at least three months. Conviction for certain criminal offences is a disqualification.

The Mandated Territory of South West Africa.

Europeans.

The social status of women in South West Africa is the same as in the Union. In the political arena, however, there is this difference : that the women have no franchise for parliamentary purposes. In municipalities, where the franchise is based on property qualification, the position of the woman is identical with that of the man.

Although the question of parliamentary franchise for women has been raised on a previous occasion in the Legislative Assembly, it does not appear to be an urgent matter in South West Africa. One hears so seldom that it is even mentioned in public discussions that it can safely be assumed that the women here do not desire it.

Natives.

In regard to natives, there can of course be no question of franchise either for Parliament or for municipalities, as the native population has no such institutions. But, beyond that, the social status of the woman is practically equal to that of the man.

It is noteworthy that succession to the chieftainship in a number of tribes in the territory is through the mother, and that the " lobola " system is not practised.

Belgium.

February 20th, 1936.

[Translation.]

I have the honour to transmit to you herewith a memorandum containing information relating (1) to the civil status of women in Belgium, (2) to the political status of women in Belgium.

As regards possible action by the League of Nations in the matter of the status of women, the Belgian Government feels bound to point out that to its mind the problem is one of an essentially internal character; questions relating to the civil status of women are closely bound up with the conception of marriage now current in each separate State.

On the other hand, questions relating to the political status of women are governed by the constitutional law of each State and must of necessity be examined in the light of the internal policy pursued by each State.

I. Civil Status of Women.

In principle, a woman of full age not subject to the obligations resulting from matrimony is, for civil purposes, on a footing of equality with men of full age ; like them, she has the free disposal of her person and property, may leave her family, contract marriage, buy, sell, alienate, mortgage and institute legal proceedings.

Recent legislation has removed from the Belgian Civil Code certain provisions which conflicted with this principle, though without completely destroying it.

For example, the Law of January 7th, 1908, permits women to act as witnesses in acts before the civil authorities ; the Law of August 10th, 1909, permits them to act as guardians ; the Law of December 16th, 1922, permits them to witness notarial documents.

Under the Civil Code, a married woman was placed, as a consequence of the marital authority (the special rights vested in husbands) in a position of complete legal incapacity.

This position was completely changed by the Law of July 20th, 1932, as a result of which the legal capacity of married women is, in a great many cases, general and complete. This applies to women who are judicially separated from their husbands (Article 1449) ; or to cases in which the husband is, in law or in fact, incapable of exercising the prerogatives deriving from the marital authority (Article 222 (1) and (2)) ; or again in cases in which the husband has given his wife a general authority to perform the acts enumerated in Articles 215 and 217 of the Civil Code (Article 221). The legal capacity of women married under a contract of dowry or under a contract of separate estates is general, though limited to certain stated acts or property (Articles 1449-1576).

On the other hand, every married woman, irrespective of the matrimonial regime to which she is subject, enjoys full legal capacity in respect of the administration of her reserved property. She is free to perform acts of disposal under the same conditions, though only if she enters into a contract or commitment in the joint interests of herself and her husband, or of the children of their union (Article 224(b)).

In the last place, a woman duly authorised to follow a profession or calling distinct from that of her husband enjoys general legal capacity in civil matters, though only in respect of acts connected with her own profession or calling (Articles 216 (3) and 220).

In all other cases, the principle of the legal incapacity of married women remains ; though, even then, numerous exceptions are made to the traditional rule.

For example, a woman can, without requiring to be authorised thereto either by her husband or by the courts, make a will, recognise a natural child, perform conservatory acts, cancel a donation to her husband made since the marriage or withdraw sums, including pensions, from the General Savings Bank to an amount not exceeding 500 francs monthly, etc.

In conclusion, it may be said that the constant evolution of Belgian law on this subject tends to give to women a generous measure of liberty calculated to satisfy their legitimate aspirations, subject only to the maintenance of the family as a social entity.

II. Political Status of Women.

Under Belgian law, women are eligible for membership of the political assemblies on an equality with men.

They are also qualified to hold public office — for example, as ministers, members of permanent councils, burgomasters and aldermen.

As regards the franchise, the law makes no distinction between the sexes for the purpose of communal elections ; for parliamentary elections, on the other hand, Article 2 of the Electoral Code restricts the franchise to women falling within the following categories :

(1) Widows, not having remarried, of soldiers who lost their lives during the war, up to January 1st, 1919, or, alternatively, their mothers, if widows, together with the widowed mothers of unmarried soldiers ;

(2) Widows, not having remarried, of Belgian citizens shot or killed by the enemy during the war, or, alternatively, their mothers, if widows, together with the widowed mothers of such citizens who had remained single ;

(3) Women condemned to imprisonment or preventive detention for patriotic reasons during the period of enemy occupation.

The elections to the provincial assemblies are not governed by any fixed rules. Before each election, Parliament decides whether the elections for the provincial councils shall be based on the communal or the general franchise ; hitherto, it is always the general franchise which has been adopted.

Brazil.

January 28th, 1936.

[Translation.]

I have the honour to inform you that Brazil supported the adoption of the nineteenth resolution of the Seventh International Conference of American States of Montevideo in favour of civil and political equality for women ; it also followed with keen interest the proposal made by certain American countries to extend to the whole world a resolution confined to America — a proposal which is meeting with a wide measure of approval in the League of Nations.

I would likewise inform you that paragraph 1 of Article 113 of the Brazilian Constitution reads as follows :

> " All citizens are equal before the law. No privileges shall be granted and no discrimination made on the ground of birth, sex, race, occupation of the person concerned or his parents, social class, wealth, religious belief or political ideas."

June 18th, 1936.

[Translation.]

Additionally to my note, of January 28th, 1936, I have the honour to transmit to you herewith a more detailed reply to Circular Letter 160.1935.V, of October 24th, 1935, concerning the political and civil status of women.

2. You will find enclosed various memoranda on the different aspects of the problem — namely :

(a) Legal status of women under existing Brazilian constitutional, civil and criminal law ;

(b) Women's political rights ;

(c) Conditions of female labour in Brazil;

(d) Education, schools, universities, vocational training, etc.;

(e) Public offices and posts held by women in Brazil.

3. As regards the Convention on nationality, signed by Brazil at Montevideo on December 26th, 1933, I have to inform you that it has not yet been ratified, but that the Brazilian Government intends to submit it to the Legislature for approval in the near future.

(Signed) José Carlos DE MACEDO SOARES.

LEGAL STATUS OF WOMEN UNDER EXISTING BRAZILIAN CONSTITUTIONAL, CIVIL AND CRIMINAL LAW.

The movement in favour of civil law equality of the sexes originated in the Civil Code, although that code did not go quite so far as the preliminary draft on the subject of married women. Article 6, II, of the Civil Code places a married woman under certain disabilities during the continuance of the state of marriage. But as the husband cannot do certain things without the consent of the woman who, by marriage, has become his consort and his associate and aid in the performance of his family duties (Article 240), this provision of Article 6, II, is really more of a survival from the past than an actual expression of the principles embodied in the code, as the following statement will show.

Under the 1891 Constitution, women were not excluded from public office nor from the exercise of political rights. The juridical and political rights of women were not, however, precisely and clearly defined until the promulgation of the Electoral Code and, later, the Constitution of 1934.

We can situate the exact juridical position of women by examining the principles of the Constitution concurrently with those of the Civil Code — i.e., constitutional law concurrently with the ordinary law of Brazil.

Constitutional Law.

1. Any woman born in Brazil, even though she be the daughter of a foreigner, is deemed to possess Brazilian nationality, unless her father was resident in Brazil in the service of his country (Constitution, Article 106 a).

§ 1. — The daughter of a Brazilian father or mother, if born abroad while her parents were on public service, or if, on attaining her majority, she has opted for Brazilian nationality, is also deemed to possess Brazilian nationality (Constitution, Article cit., b).

§ 2. — A foreign woman who has obtained naturalisation in accordance with the law.

2. A Brazilian woman who marries a foreigner does not thereby lose her Brazilian nationality, nor does a foreign woman acquire Brazilian nationality on marrying a Brazilian (Commentary on Article 107).

3. Any Brazilian woman, whether married, spinster or widow, may occupy public office, under the conditions defined by law (Constitution, Article 168).

4. As an official, she is entitled to the safeguards accorded by the Constitution and by law to public officials (Constitution, Articles 169 and 170).

A woman occupying a public position, married to a military officer or civil official who is liable to be transferred from one place to another, may at her request be granted leave of absence without pay when her husband has been transferred, otherwise than at his own request, to another place in the national territory or abroad.

Such leave of absence continues for the duration of the husband's mission or new duties, up to a maximum of three years.

5. As soon as she attains the age of 18 years, a woman may cause her name to be placed on the electoral roll in accordance with the law.

Women who occupy a paid official post must cause their names to be so entered, and voting is for them compulsory (Constitution, Articles 108 and 109).

Civil Law.

6. The Federal Constitution and the Brazilian Civil Code do not allow divorce — i.e., the dissolution of marriage inter vivos — but they do allow separation a mensâ et thoro.

Separation may take place by mutual arrangement or by operation of law.

In the case of separation by mutual arrangement, the spouses decide, according to the terms of their marriage contract, what allowances each shall make to the other and what allowances they are to make to the children.

Proceedings for judicial separation are begun by an ordinary action, which may only be brought by one of the spouses.

Judicial separation may be granted on the following grounds (Civil Code, Article 317) :

(i) Adultery;

(ii) Attempted murder;

(iii) Bodily injury or serious moral hurt;

(iv) Wilful desertion lasting two consecutive years.

7. When judicial separation is granted at the instance of the wife, and the wife is indigent, the husband is bound to pay her alimony as fixed by the judge (Civil Code, Article 326).

8. When judicial separation has been granted, children under age are entrusted to the care of the innocent party. If both husband and wife have been guilty, the mother is entitled to keep with her the girls under age and the boys up to the age of 6 (Civil Code, Article 326, paragraphs 1 and 2).

For serious reasons, the judge may in all cases make other arrangements in the interest of the children (Civil Code, Article 327).

9. Spinsters, women separated from their husbands, and widows possess exactly the same civil rights as men (general principle of the Civil Code).

10. A woman of over fifty may only marry on the understanding that her property and her husband's property shall be separate (Civil Code, Article 258, § 1, pr. and n. II).

11. The husband is the head of the family and is, as such, its representative; he administers the joint estate; his domicile determines the domicile of the family; he must provide for the maintenance of the family and may, if necessary, authorise his wife to engage in an occupation (Civil Code, Article 233).

Sole Subsection. — If the husband is in distant parts or his whereabouts is unknown, if he is serving a term of imprisonment of more than two years or has been placed under a disability by the courts, the wife may :

(a) Administer the joint estate;

(b) Dispose freely of her own property and alienate joint movables and the movables of her husband;

(c) Administer the movables of her husband;

(d) Alienate joint immovables and the immovables of the husband with the judge's special permission (Civil Code, Article 251).

12. Except in the cases provided for in the sole subsection set out in the previous section, the wife must obtain her husband's permission to :

(a) Alienate, hypothecate or burden with charges in rem the immovables or rights in rem on immovables belonging to third parties;

(b) Be a party to legal proceedings, as plaintiff or defendant, in connection with these same rights;

(c) Provide surety;

(d) Make a gift or any considerable grant out of the joint estate or income.

Observation. — These restrictions are also binding on the husband, who cannot perform these acts without his wife's consent (Civil Code, Articles 235 and 241).

13. Nor can a wife, without her husband's consent :

(a) Accept or refuse an inheritance or legacy;

(b) Accept appointment as guardian or as curator, or other public charge;

(c) Take proceedings at law in civil or commercial matters, except in the cases specified in the sole subsection of Section 11 above, and in Sections 14, 16 and 17 hereinafter;

(d) Exercise any of the liberal professions;

(e) Contract an obligation that may involve alienation of property made joint by marriage;

(f) Accept a trusteeship (Civil Code, Article 242).[1]

Sole Paragraph. — Permission granted by a judge may take the place of the husband's (or wife's) consent (Civil Code, Articles 237 and 245).

14. A woman engaged in a lucrative occupation is entitled to perform all acts inherent in the exercise of, or necessary to safeguard, the said occupation, and to dispose freely of the product of her labour (Civil Code, Article 246).

15. Unless he raise formal objection, the husband's consent is not necessary :

(a) For the purchase, even on credit, of household necessaries;

(b) For borrowing the sums required for the purchase of such necessaries;

(c) For contracting obligations in connection with the wife's business or occupation.

A married woman may be a party to legal proceedings in matters connected with her work, without the assistance of her husband (Article 11 of Decree No. 22132, of November 25th, 1932).

16. A woman who holds a public appointment or has for more than six months been carrying on an occupation outside her home is deemed in every case to have received her husband's permission (Civil Code, Article 247).

17. A married woman may without permission :

(a) Exercise her proper rights in respect of children born of a previous marriage;

[1] Sections 13 and 15 are not concordant with the spirit of the Constitution in the matter of women's status, but the Legislature has not yet taken any decision on this subject.

(b) Free from encumbrance or claim immovables forming part of the joint estate which the husband has encumbered or alienated without her consent or without the express permission of a judge;

(c) Avoid sureties given or gifts made by the husband in violation of those provisions of the law which oblige him to obtain his wife's consent, or the judge's permission if the wife's refusal is unreasonable;

(d) Claim joint estate, whether movables or immovables, given or transferred by the husband to a concubine; the wife possesses this right whether she be cohabiting with her husband or not, and even if the gift is disguised as a sale or otherwise (Civil Code, Article 248).

Sole Subsection. — The concubine of a married testator may not benefit under his will or appointment or be his legatee (Civil Code, Article 1719, III).

(e) Dispose of property acquired in accordance with the previous paragraph, and of all other property possessed by her in her own right, except immovables;

(f) Request action for the maintenance of the statu quo and take such proceedings as, on account of her dowry or other property subject to her husband's administration, it may be competent to her to take against the latter;

(g) Bring an action for the annulment of marriage;

(h) Bring an action for separation;

(i) Petition for alimony;

(j) Make a will or statement of her last wishes (Civil Code, Article 248).

18. If the marriage contract provides that the estate of husband and wife shall be separate, the wife may stipulate that her estate shall remain under her sole control (Civil Code, Article 276).

If separation of estate has been brought about by operation of law (see Section 10 above), the wife also has sole control of her own estate.

19. When the estate of husband and wife is separate, the wife is bound to contribute to the household expenses from the income of her own estate, in proportion to its value as compared with the husband's estate, unless there be some contrary provision in the marriage contract (Civil Code, Article 277).

20. If the husband received a dowry from his wife on marriage, the wife may petition at law for the dowry to be constituted a separate estate when the husband's affairs are so disordered that there is reason to fear that his estate will not be sufficient to guarantee the estate of the wife.

In such case, the dowry is administered by the wife (Civil Code, Article 408 and 309).

21. The wife may own, administer, enjoy and freely dispose of her own estate outside the dowry, but she may not alienate immovables without her husband's consent (Article 310).

22. A mother who contracts a new marriage does not lose the right to keep with her the children born of a previous marriage (Civil Code, Article 329).

23. If the husband does not or cannot exercise the paternal power, such power reverts to the wife (Civil Code, Article 380).

24. A mother who contracts a new marriage forfeits, in respect of the children born of a previous marriage, the exercise of the rights of paternal power, but she recovers those rights if she becomes a widow (Civil Code, Article 303).

25. Affiliation proceedings may be voluntary or compulsory — i.e., by operation of law.

26. Proceedings to determine the identity of the mother are only precluded when their object is to attribute an illegitimate child to a married woman or a child born of incest to a spinster.

27. The mother exercises the paternal power over her illegitimate children (Civil Code, Article 360). A child who has been lawfully acknowledged, if a minor, is placed under the power of that parent which has acknowledged him; if both have acknowledged him, he is placed under his father's power.

28. Rights of succession are the same for men and women.

Nevertheless, a daughter who loses her honour while living in her father's house may be disinherited (Civil Code, Article 1744, III).

29. When the system adopted under the marriage contract is that of joint estate, the surviving spouse, as head of the family, remains in possession of the inheritance until partition has been effected (Civil Code, Article 1579).

If, however, the survivor is the wife, she does not possess this right unless she was living with her husband at the time of his decease (same Article, § 1).

Military Service.

30. Women are exempt from military service, which is compulsory by law for all male razilians (Constitution, Article 163).

Mothers' Welfare.

31. The staffs of maternity and child welfare services and services concerned with the home and women's work are as far as possible composed of properly qualified women and their supervision and direction is also, whenever possible, entrusted to women (Constitution, Article 121, § 3).

32. Any woman official who is an expectant mother is entitled to three months' leave of absence with full pay (Constitution, Article 170, 10).

33. A workwoman who is an expectant mother is entitled to a period of rest before and after confinement, without loss of wages or situation.

Generally speaking, the law protects working women in cases of invalidity, maternity and sickness (Constitution, Article 121, § 1 (h)).

34. The International Conventions on Female Labour are in force in Brazil.

The Constitution (Article 121, § 1 (d)) prohibits the employment of women and children in unhealthy industries.

Criminal Law.

35. The fact that any crime has been committed against a woman may be deemed to be an aggravating circumstance on the ground that the victim was of the weaker sex (Codification of the Criminal Laws, Article 39, § 5).

36. The fact that a crime is committed by husband against wife, or wife against husband, is also deemed to be an aggravating circumstance (Codification, Article 39, § 9).

37. The fact that a woman has committed a crime in order to defend the rights of her family or to avenge her husband's honour is deemed to be an extenuating circumstance (Codification, Article 42, §§ 2 and 3).

38. Any dishonouring or sexual offence committed by a civilised person against a native woman is regarded as an aggravating circumstance, even if the act was committed at the suggestion or with the consent of the victim, her father, her husband, her brother, or the chief of her tribe (Codification, Article 205, § 1).

39. Any person who, by force or threats, commits an indecent assault upon another person of either sex, shall be liable to a term of rigorous imprisonment varying from one to three years.

Any person who may have procured, encouraged or facilitated the corruption of another person of either sex under the age of 21 by inciting that person to commit acts of indecency, by corrupting his or her innocence, or by perverting his or her morals in any way, shall be liable to a term of rigorous imprisonment varying from six months to two years.

Any person who corrupts another person under 21 years of age, of either sex, by committing with or against that person any acts of indecency, shall be liable to a term of rigorous imprisonment varying from two to four years (Codification, Article 266).

40. Any person guilty of deflowering a female minor by persuasion, guile or fraud, shall be liable to a term of rigorous imprisonment varying from one to four years (Codification, Article 267).

41. The rape of any woman of honourable character, whether virgo intacta or not, shall be punishable with a term of rigorous imprisonment varying from one to six years.

If the victim is a woman of easy virtue or a prostitute, the offender shall be sentenced to a term of rigorous imprisonment varying from six months to two years.

If the crime has been committed with the connivance of two or more persons, the penalty shall be increased by one-fourth (Codification, Article 268).

42. Any person who, by persuasion or trickery or by violence, has enticed or abducted from her home, for immoral purposes, a woman of honourable character, whether of full age or under age, whether a spinster, married woman or widow, without, however, having committed any sexual offence against her, shall be liable to a term of rigorous imprisonment varying from one to four years.

If the abducted person is over 16 but under 21 years of age, and if she went with the offender of her own free will, the penalty shall be a term of rigorous imprisonment varying from one to three years.

If the abduction was followed by deflowerment or rape, the offender shall be liable to a penalty corresponding to the crimes he has committed, increased by one-sixth (Codification, Article 270).

43. If the abductor releases his victim without having committed any sexual offence against her or dishonoured her in any way, the penalty shall be a term varying from six months to one year.

If he does not release her, or refuses to divulge her whereabouts, the penalty shall be a term of rigorous imprisonment varying from two to twelve years (Codification, Article 271).

44. Abduction is presumed to have been committed with violence whenever the victim is under 16 years of age.

45. The ordinary sentences are increased by one-sixth :

(1) If the criminal is a minister of any religious denomination ;

(2) If he is married ;

(3) If he is the attendant or servant of the victim or of any member of the victim's family.

Sentences are increased by one-fourth :

(4) If the criminal is a relative in the ascending line, a brother, or brother-in-law, of the victim ;

(5) If he is the victim's guardian or curator, is responsible for her education, or has her in his custody, or exercises any other form of authority over her.

Sole Subsection. — In addition to the penalty and loss of civil rights, the relative in the ascending line loses all rights conferred on him by law over the person and property of the victim (Codification, Article 273).

46. Any person who by trickery, violence, threats, abuse of power, or any other means of coercion, induces another to satisfy the immoral desires or lascivious passions of a third person, or who procures, encourages or facilitates the prostitution of another for the satisfaction of the said desires and passions of a third person, shall be sentenced to a term of rigorous imprisonment varying from two to three years.

If the crime is committed by an ascendant in respect of a descendant, by a guardian, curator or any person responsible for the education of a minor, in respect of that minor, or by a husband in respect of his wife, the offender shall be sentenced to a term of rigorous imprisonment varying from two to four years.

In addition to this sentence and the loss of civil rights, the following penalties are imposed :

Upon the father and mother : Loss of all rights that the law confers on them over the person and property of the child whom they have delivered over to prostitution ;

Upon the guardian or curator : Instant deprivation of his charge ;

Upon the person responsible for the education of the minor : Deprivation of the right to teach in any educational or training establishment or to direct any such establishment or to be a member of its staff ;

Upon the husband : Loss of his rank as head of the family. A criminal prosecution may only be undertaken against the husband on the complaint of the wife (Codification, Article 277).

47. Any person who suborns, entices or corrupts a female minor, whether she be virgo intacta or not, even if she be a consenting party, to satisfy the immoral desires of another ; any person who suborns, entices or corrupts a woman of full age, whether virgo intacta or not, by means of threats, violence, fraud, trickery, abuse of power, or any other means of coercion, to satisfy the immoral desires of another ; any person who, by any of the above means, even on account of debts, compels a woman of full age or a female minor, whether virgo intacta or not, to remain in a brothel, therein obliging her to engage in prostitution ; any person who manages or operates a tolerated brothel, or receives in the house in which he resides persons of different sexes or of the same sex coming together there for the purpose of committing immoral acts ; any person who induces women, whether by playing on their weakness or distress or by constraining them by intimidation or threats, to engage in prostitution ; any person who, for himself or for another, on his own responsibility or on the responsibility of another, in any way aids or abets the traffic of prostitution, shall be sentenced to a term varying from one to three years' rigorous imprisonment and to a fine varying from one to two contos of reis.

The crimes referred to in this section shall be punishable in Brazil even if one or several of the constitutive acts were committed abroad (Codification, Article 278).

48. Simple adultery on the part of a married women is punishable with a term of rigorous imprisonment varying from one to three years.

The husband shall be subject to the same penalty if he keeps a concubine, and the concubine shall also be subject to the same penalty (Codification, Article 279).

49. " Polygamy " is punishable with a term of imprisonment varying from one to six years.

For the purposes of criminal law, " polygamy " means marriage contracted more than once, the previous marriage not having been dissolved by a decree of nullity or by the decease of the other consort (Codification, Article 283).

50. Any woman who feigns to be pregnant or passes off another's child as her own, or who, having in fact given birth to a child, living or stillborn, dissembles the fact or substitutes another child for her own, shall be sentenced to a term of rigorous imprisonment varying from six months to two years (Codification, Article 285).

51. Infanticide committed by a mother in order to hide her shame shall be punishable with a term of rigorous imprisonment varying from three to nine years.

If the above-mentioned motive be absent, the punishment shall be a term varying from six to twenty-four years.

52. Deliberate abortion is a crime punishable according to the circumstances.

If abortion took place with the consent of the pregnant woman, the person who caused the abortion shall be liable to a term of imprisonment varying from one to five years. A pregnant woman who has deliberately caused a miscarriage by employing the means requisite for that purpose shall be liable to the same punishment. Such punishment shall be reduced to two-thirds if the offender committed her crime in order to hide her shame (Codification, Articles 300 and 301).

53. The profanation of a dead body shall be punishable with a term of rigorous imprisonment varying from two months to one year (Codification, Article 355).

54. Any person who disguises his or her sex by wearing in public, with intent to deceive, clothing appropriate to the other sex, shall be sentenced to a term of rigorous imprisonment varying from fifteen to sixty days (Codification, Article 379).

Women's Political Rights.

The Federal Constitution, promulgated in 1934, established equality of political rights between men and women.

The previous Constitution, although it did not expressly recognise this equality, was not opposed to it in principle, since, while it was in force, the State of Rio Grande do Norte granted women the vote. In that part of the Brazilian Federation, however, they were only allowed to vote at the municipal and State elections.

When the Commission met to draw up the preliminary draft of the present Constitution, the head of the Provisional Government, in response to an appeal signed by some ten thousand Brazilian citizens, allowed women to be represented on it.

The President of the Federation for Women's Progress submitted her suggestions in writing to the Commission responsible for drawing up the preliminary draft, and these were in the main accepted and incorporated in the text which was subsequently submitted to the Constituent Assembly.

In the Constituent Assembly, legislation in favour of women was supported by a group of sympathetic members including Dr. José Carlos de Macedo Soares, the present Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Under the articles inserted in the Federal Constitution, women enjoy the same political rights as male citizens.

As regards nationality, equality is secured to them under Article 106, paragraphs (a) and (b). Brazilian women retain their nationality when they marry foreigners. They are electors, and may occupy any post filled by election (Articles 108 and 109). In accordance with the law, they may hold any public office (Article 168) except those connected with military service (Article 163). As regards individual rights and guarantees, the Constitution not only grants women complete equality with men (Article 113, § 1), but also accords them the benefit of various measures for the protection of mothers and pregnant women (Article 121, § 1, paragraphs (a), (d) and (h); Article 138, paragraphs (c), (e) and (f); Article 141; and Article 170, No. 10).

Article 121, § 3, of the Constitution provides that, in making appointments to the maternity and infant welfare services and the services connected with the home and women's work, preference shall be given to women. This also applies to the supervision and direction of those services.

The text of the articles of the Federal Constitution referred to is given below :

Article 106. — The following are Brazilian citizens :

(a) Persons born in Brazil even if their father is a foreigner, provided he has not been sent to Brazil in the service of the Government of his country;

(b) Children of a Brazilian father or mother, if their parents are public officials, and, apart from such cases, those who, on attaining their majority, opt for Brazilian nationality.

. . . . . .

Article 108. — Brazilians of either sex over 18 years of age who have their names entered on the register in accordance with the law shall have the right to vote.

Article 109. — Subject to the exceptions provided for by law, men and women holding paid public offices, shall be required to have their names entered on the register and to vote. Those who fail to do so shall be liable to the penalties laid down by law.

. . . . . .

Individual Rights and Guarantees.

Article 113. — The Constitution ensures to Brazilians and foreigners residing in the country the inviolability of rights concerning freedom, the necessities of life, individual safety and property in the following terms :

(1) All persons shall be equal before the law. No privileges shall be granted and no distinction made on the ground of birth, sex, race, the occupation followed by the person concerned or his parents, social class, wealth, religious beliefs or political ideas.

. . . . . .

Organisation of Labour.

Article 121. — The law shall encourage the protection of production, and shall establish conditions of labour in town and country with a view to the social protection of the worker and the economic interests of the country.

§ 1. — Labour legislation shall take account of the following principles among others, the aim of which is to improve conditions of labour :

(a) Equal pay for equal work, irrespective of age, sex, nationality or civil status . . .

(d) Children under 14 not to be employed; young persons under 16 not to be employed on night-work, and young persons under 18 and women not to be employed in unhealthy industries. . . .

(h) Medical and sanitary assistance to be given to workers, including pregnant women workers; the latter to be granted leave before and after confinement without being required to forfeit their wages or employment on that account; a provident fund to be established, equal contributions being made by the Union, the employer and the employee, to cover old age, invalidity, maternity, industrial accidents and death. . . .

§ 3. — In making appointments to the maternity and infant welfare services, and in the services connected with the home and women's work, preference shall be given to competent women. This shall also apply to the supervision and direction of those services.

. . . . . .

Article 138. — In accordance with the respective laws, the Union, the States and the municipalities shall be responsible for : . . .

(c) The protection of mothers and infants. . . .

(e) The protection of young persons from exploitation of every kind, and from physical, moral or intellectual neglect.

(f) The introduction of legislation to reduce infant mortality and morbidity, and of measures of social hygiene to prevent the spread of infectious diseases.

. . . . . .

Article 141. — The protection of mothers and infants shall be compulsory throughout the whole of the national territory, and the Union, the States and the municipalities shall allocate 1 % of their revenue from taxation to that purpose.

. . . . . .

Article 163. — All Brazilian citizens shall be liable, in such form as may be provided by law, for military service and other duties necessary for national defence. In the event of mobilisation, they shall be employed, according to their qualifications, either in the armed forces or in the internal services. Women shall be exempt from military service.

. . . . . .

Public Officials.

Article 168. — Public offices shall be open to all Brazilians, irrespective of sex or civil status, subject to the conditions laid down by law.

. . . . . .

Article 170. — The Legislature shall vote the Statute of Public Officials in accordance with the following rules, which are already in force : . . .

(10) Officials shall be entitled to annual holidays with full pay ; a woman official who is pregnant shall be entitled to three months' leave with full pay.

Conditions of Labour for Women in Brazil.

Under the Brazilian Constitution, women have the same rights in the social sphere as men. For instance, Article 121, § 1, paragraph (a), prohibits the payment of a different wage for the same work on the ground of age, sex, nationality or civil status. .

Certain restrictions on female labour are provided for under the national legislation with a view to the protection of the race.

In order to protect women's health, the Brazilian law prohibits their employment on night-work or in unhealthy industries or underground.

Article 121 of the Constitution, referred to above, provides for the establishment of better conditions of employment for women, with a view to their social protection.

A workwoman who is a mother is entitled to two special daily rest-periods of half an hour each during the first six months after confinement.

Establishments employing at least thirty women over 16 years of age must provide suitable premises where nursing mothers can leave their babies and where they will be properly looked after.

Medical assistance is provided for mothers before and after confinement, without deduction from their wages.

A female public official is entitled to three months' leave — i.e., six weeks before and six weeks after confinement, with full pay.

Under Decree No. 21417-A, of May 17th, 1932, concerning the protection of female labour, which was promulgated before the new Constitution came into force, women were granted only two months' leave during pregnancy, or three months in cases of absolute necessity, on production of a medical certificate.

Women in all occupations can belong to a provident fund, to which an equal contribution is made by the Union, the employer and the employee, covering old age, invalidity, maternity, industrial accidents and death.

Superannuation and pension funds are now working satisfactorily for railway, harbour, aviation, shipping, bank, commercial and mining employees, women being admitted to all these occupations except mining, where they are not allowed to work underground. The Ministry of Labour is considering drawing up a scheme for a superannuation and pension fund for industrial workers.

Under Article 139 of the Brazilian Constitution, the Union, the States and the municipalities are alike responsible, in accordance with the respective laws, for protecting mothers, and are required to allocate 1 % of their revenue from taxation to the institutions established for that purpose.

All women, whatever their occupation, are given fifteen days' holiday with full pay.

Married women may use their wages in whatever way they think fit, but, under the Brazilian Civil Code, paternal authority rests with the husband as head of the family, or, failing him, with the wife.

The social laws for the protection of women cover all occupations, except as regards the special regulations relating to rural workers and the application of those laws to certain occupations which need to be specially regulated.

The liberal professions, the public service, agriculture, industry and trade are all open to women, and in those occupations they enjoy the same rights and advantages as men.

Women also have the right to belong to their trade unions and to fill the highest posts therein.

Women likewise have the right to vote, and hence to represent the people in the Legislative Chambers, and to fill posts under the public administration.

Suggestions for that Part of the Preliminary Draft relating to the Status of Women which deals with Women's Claims.

To sum up, we consider that the preliminary draft relating to the status of women should contain the following principles :

(a) Equal pay for equal work, irrespective of sex, age or nationality ;

(b) Medical assistance and compulsory rest for mothers, six weeks before and six weeks after confinement, without deduction of pay, in all occupations ;

(c) The granting of fifteen working-days' holiday each year with full pay ;

(d) The establishment in all occupations of compulsory social insurance covering invalidity, old age, industrial accidents and death ;

(e) Compulsory protection for mothers ;

(f) The woman's right to make use of her salary in whatever way she thinks fit ;

(g) Prohibition to employ women underground or in unhealthy work, so as to protect their health in the interests of the race and the nation ;

(h) Women's right to hold public offices which are filled by election, and to represent the people ;

(i) Preference to be given to women in the maternity and infant welfare services and the inspectorate of female labour.

Education.

1. Schools, Universities, Vocational Training, etc.

In Brazil, girls have the same educational opportunities as boys.

Article 149 of the Constitution of July 14th, 1934, stipulates that "every child has the right to education. This must be provided by the family and by the public authorities. The latter must provide education for Brazilians and foreigners domiciled in Brazil, so that they may be able to play a useful part in the moral and economic life of the nation and implant the consciousness of human solidarity in the Brazilian mind."

(a) Elementary Education. — There is no uniform legislation governing elementary education in Brazil ; each State has its own autonomous system.

In the majority of States, elementary education is given in mixed classes of boys and girls. In 1932, out of a total of 2,071,399 pupils on the register, 983,522 were girls (approximately 47 %).

In the same year, the number attending elementary schools was 1,422,841, of whom 677,151 were girls — i.e., approximately 48 %.

It is interesting to note that, although the number of boys on the register and the number of boys attending school is greater than the number of girls, more girls than boys complete the course. In 1932, of the 124,025 pupils who completed the course, 63,210 were girls — i.e., over 50 %. The reason is that, especially in rural districts, boys are employed for ordinary everyday jobs and leave school earlier.

An examination of the statistics of the various States or political areas reveals the existence, in some cases, of slight variations which are worthy of note. For instance, in the State of Rio Grande do Norte, the number of girls who completed the elementary course in 1932 was 1,711, as against 1,382 boys — i.e., 57 %. In the State of Rio Grande do Sul, on the other hand, the number of girls who completed the elementary course amounted to barely 45 %.

(b) Secondary Education. — Secondary education, which is regulated by national legislation, is given by public institutions run by the Union, the States and the municipalities, and also by private institutions, associations and religious communities. The former — that is to say, the public schools — are co-educational ; the latter are usually for boys or girls only.

In 1932, the total number of pupils on the secondary education register, which covers both courses held under the Federal Law and independent courses in science and art, was 56,208. Of this number, only 10,121 were girls — i.e., 18 %.

It would be wrong to conclude from these figures that women's education in Brazil begins and ends with the elementary stage, since girls who continue their studies usually attend normal schools or teachers' training establishments.

In many of these institutions, the courses are divided into two parts, one of which closely follows the secondary school curriculum.

(c) Universities. — In university education, which is governed by Decree No. 19,851, of April 11th, 1931, no distinction is made between the sexes. During the last twenty years, the number of women students in the higher educational establishments has steadily increased. In 1932, out of a total of 23,569 students, 2,202 were women, representing approximately 9 %.

The branches of university education usually taken up by girls are the teaching of music, particularly the piano (1,236), pharmacy (254), odontology (162), medicine (144), law (121). Women are also represented in other branches, such as engineering, in which the number of women students on the register in 1932 was 14.

(d) Vocational Training. — Women's vocational training, which is given in the form of courses or at schools, is still very limited. The only specialised profession proper to women is teaching, particularly elementary teaching.

Nevertheless, there is an increasing number of institutions which give girls specialised training in the industrial and domestic arts, nursing and obstetrics, and in various commercial occupations (typewriting, secretarial work, accountancy and bookkeeping).

In the various schools, excluding teachers' training colleges, particulars of which are given below in a separate paragraph, the number of women on the register in 1932 amounted to 27,118 out of a total of 42,975.

The branches of technical training most commonly taken up by girls were domestic arts (elementary and middle grade), 15,684 (there were no men on the register for these courses); commercial training, 6,949 out of a total of 21,606; artistic training (singing and music, middle grade, and various industrial arts, such as drawing, painting, sculpture, etc.), 4,083 out of a total of 5,071.

The courses in general nursing, obstetrics and social work were attended by 279 girls out of a total of 298 students.

2. Elementary Teaching.

In 1932, the total number of elementary-school teachers in Brazil was 58,989, of whom 45,960, or 81 %, were women. Elementary teaching may therefore be regarded in Brazil as a typically feminine profession.

Taking all branches and grades of teaching together, the number of teachers was 76,009, of whom 51,142 were women.

Elementary-school teachers are trained in official or recognised colleges and in educational establishments belonging to universities (São Paulo and Federal District).

In 1932, the total number of teachers' training colleges was 216; there were 25,036 students on the register, of whom 21,951 were women (87 %).

3. Administration.

As regards school administration, women are obtaining more and better posts each year.

Until quite recently, in some States, even the most advanced (such as São Paulo), school management was not entrusted to women. It was understood that administrative posts should be reserved for men.

To-day, however, all school administrative posts (heads, inspectors, technical assistants) are open to women.

In certain States, courses in school administration are being organised which are open to both men and women.

In one State, Rio de Janeiro, there is now a woman Director of Education.

Public Offices filled by Women in Brazil.

1. Federal Government.

(a) There is at present one woman member of the Chamber of Deputies, representing the State of São Paulo.

(b) Commissions. — A delegate of the women's associations served on the Commission which drew up the preliminary draft of the Constitution (1932/33).

Federal (Administrative) Posts. — There is a woman director of the Certificated Trained Nurses' Branch of the National Department of Public Health.

There are seven women consuls de carrière, six of whom are at present working in the Department for Foreign Affairs, while the seventh is in charge of the Brazilian Consulate at Liverpool.

Brazil was represented by women delegates at the following women's international congresses : Rome, 1923 ; Berlin, 1929 ; Istanbul, 1935 ; Pan-American Congress at Baltimore, 1922 ; Pan-American Congress at Washington, 1925.

Women technical advisers were sent to the following official conferences : League of Nations ; seventh American International Conference, 1932 ; second Women's International Congress, Rio de Janeiro, 1931 ; second National Convention for Women's Progress, Bahia, 1934 ; International Labour Conference (a woman member of the Government delegation).

2. States.

There are ten women deputies in the following States : Amazonas, Maranhão, Rio Grande do Norte, Alagôas, Sergipe, Bahia, Santa Catharina, São Paulo (three deputies, one of whom has now resigned).

There are three Directors-General or Secretaries in the State Government service : one Secretary for Education in the State of Pará (1934-35) ; one in the State of Rio (1936) ; and a Secretary for Labour in the State of Rio (1935-36).

The following members of State General Councils are women : Assistance : State of Bahia (1936) — a representative of the Federation for Women's Progress and Director of the Association for Economic and Social Action ; Education : State of Bahia (1936) — the President of the Bahia Federation for Women's Progress.

3. Municipalities.

Since 1928, when, for the first time, a woman was elected Mayor at Lages, a large number of women have obtained control of municipal affairs in the communes of various States. In other communes, women are acting as municipal superintendents.

4. There are no women judges.

There are two women public prosecutors, one in the State of Sergipe and the other in the State of Minas Gerães.

Status of Women in English Law.

His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, in submitting the following statement as to the existing political and non-political status of women under the law of England, desires to point out that its study of the subject is not yet complete and that it may be necessary to supplement the information given by a further memorandum in due course. It should also be pointed out that no observations such as are contemplated in paragraph 1 of the Assembly's resolution of September 27th, 1935, have yet been prepared.

In English law, the principle of the equality of the sexes has received wide recognition and effect has been given to that principle in various branches of the law affecting the political and civil (or legal) status of women, married and unmarried. The following is a summary of the more important legislative provisions.

I. General Provisions.

Eligibility of Women for the Exercise of Public Functions, Appointment to Civil and Judicial Offices and for any Profession.

The Sex Disqualification (Removal) Act, 1919, declared the general principle that a person shall not be disqualified by sex or marriage from the exercise of any public function, the holding of civil or judicial office or the carrying-on of any civil profession or from membership of any incorporated society, and shall not be exempted by sex or marriage from liability to serve as a juror.

This general principle is qualified, however, by provisions which give power (a) to regulate the mode of admission of women to the Civil Service and the conditions of their service, and to reserve to men posts in the colonial, diplomatic and consular services, and (b) to dispense with the presence of men or women on juries in certain circumstances. Further particulars of the effect of these qualifying provisions will be given under appropriate headings below.

II. Status of Women in Political Matters.

1. Parliamentary and Local Government Franchise.

Women were first admitted to the parliamentary and local government franchise in 1918, though not on the basis of complete equality with men. In 1928, provision was made by the Representation of the People (Equal Franchise) Act, 1928, for the complete assimilation of the franchises of men and women. Persons of either sex who are of full age

(i.e., 21) can accordingly vote at parliamentary and local government elections if, having fulfilled the necessary qualifications as to residence, etc., they are registered as electors.

2. Eligibility for Membership of Legislature.

(a) House of Lords. — The right to sit in the House of Lords of peers so entitled is recognised by the issue of a writ of summons to such peers on the commencement of each new Parliament. Under the common law, a woman is unable to sit in the House of Lords, since she is disqualified from receiving the writ; and the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Act has been held not to remove this disqualification.

(b) House of Commons. — The Parliament (Qualification of Women) Act, 1918, enacted that a woman shall not be disqualified by sex or marriage from being elected to, or sitting, or voting as a member of the House of Commons.

3. Eligibility for Membership of Councils of Local Authorities.

Women are eligible for membership of councils of local authorities by reason of the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Act, 1919. Disqualification by sex or marriage for the office of (a) county or borough councillor or alderman, (b) urban district councillor and (c) parish councillor had previously been removed by the Qualification of Women (County and Borough Councils) Act, 1907, and Section 23(2) and Section 3(2) respectively of the Local Government Act, 1894.

III. Status in Non-political Matters.

1. Unmarried Women.

Generally speaking, the legal position of an unmarried woman is the same as that of a man.

2. Married Women.

(a) Acquisition and Disposal of Property: Liability in respect of Torts, Contracts, Debts and Obligations. — A married woman is capable of acquiring, holding and disposing of property and of rendering herself liable in respect of torts, contracts, debts and obligations and is subject to the law relating to bankruptcy and to the enforcement of judgments and orders in all respects as if she were a single woman. Certain limitations which until recently have existed in these matters were removed by the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935. Section 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, which was repealed by the Act of 1935, had previously made a married woman carrying on trade or business subject to the bankruptcy laws as if she were a single woman and had made judgments and orders for sums of money obtained against her available for bankruptcy proceedings as though she were personally bound to pay the judgment debt or sum.

(b) Domicil. — The legal domicil of a married woman follows that of her husband.

(c) Divorce. — Since 1923, a wife has been able to petition for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of her husband's adultery (Matrimonial Causes Act, 1923, repealed and re-enacted in Section 176 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1925).

Before the Act of 1923, while adultery of the wife was a sufficient ground for divorce by the husband, the adultery of the husband was not in itself a sufficient ground for the wife, since she had to prove in addition either desertion or cruelty by her husband before she could obtain the relief of a divorce.

(d) Judicial Separation, Desertion and Maintenance. — Under Section 185 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1925, a petition for judicial separation may be presented to the High Court either by a husband or wife on the ground of adultery, cruelty, desertion without cause for not less than two years or failure to comply with a decree of restitution of conjugal rights.

A court of summary jurisdiction may also make a separation order (1) on the application of a wife whose husband has been guilty of aggravated assault, desertion, persistent cruelty to her or her children, or wilful neglect to maintain her or her children, is an habitual drunkard or drug addict, has insisted on sexual intercourse whilst he is suffering to his knowledge from a venereal disease or has compelled her to submit to prostitution; (2) on the application of a husband whose wife is an habitual drunkard or has been guilty of persistent cruelty to his children.

3. Generally.

(a) Position of Wife and Unmarried Mother in relation to Children: Guardianship. — The Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925, extends to the guardianship of infants the principle of equality in law between the sexes declared by the Sex Disqualification (Removal) Act, 1919. The Act provides that a court in determining questions relating to the custody, upbringing or the administration of property belonging to an infant shall regard the welfare of the infant as the paramount consideration and shall not take into account whether any claim of either parent in the matter is superior to that of the other. The mother of an infant is also given the same powers to apply to the court in respect of any matter affecting the infant as are possessed by the father.

(b) Liability for Maintenance. — Sub-sections (2) and (4) of Section 14 of the Poor Law Act, 1930, as amended by the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, place on the mother of an illegitimate child an obligation whilst unmarried or a widow to maintain the child until the age of 16 and render a married woman with property subject to the same liability as her husband for the maintenance of her children.

(c) Marriage. — At civil law, any woman is capable of marrying in the same circumstances as a man.

The Age of Marriage Act, 1929, renders void any marriage between persons either of whom is under the age of 16.

China.

September 2nd, 1936.

[Translation.]

I have the honour to convey to you the following information which I have received from my Government.

In the first place, the principle of equality between men and women in the legal sphere and also in the economic, social and educational spheres is laid down in the Declaration (§ 12 of Internal Policy) made by the first national meeting of Kuomintang delegates. It is also stated that the progress and development of women's rights should be promoted.

Moreover, in its decisions on the subject of the feminist movement, the second national assembly of Kuomintang delegates, in view of the foregoing principle, requested the Government to expedite measures for the protection of women's rights.

Lastly, Article 6 of the Constitution of the Chinese Republic for the period of tutelage of the Kuomintang lays down that : "All citizens of the Chinese Republic, irrespective of sex, race, religion or class, are equal before the law ". Consequently, all rights provided by law are granted to Chinese women without distinction, and, whether at public or private law, in the same way as to men.

As regards labour legislation, women are protected in numerous ways. Article 7 of Chapter 2 of the Factory Act (promulgated on December 30th, 1932) prohibits the employment of women for the following work :

(1) Work involving the handling of explosive, inflammable or poisonous substances ;

(2) Work carried out on premises where the atmosphere is polluted by harmful dust, smoke or vapours ;

(3) Cleaning, greasing and inspection of machinery in motion or dangerous driving-gear ; repair, fixing and removal of belts or ropes ;

(4) Work on high-tension electric conduits ;

(5) Handling of molten metals or ore residues ;

(6) Heating of boilers ;

(7) Other dangerous or morally harmful work.

Article 13 of the same Act prohibits the employment of women on night-work between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m.

Article 24 provides that equal wages shall be paid to men and women workers in cases where they perform the same work and produce the same output.

Under Article 37 of the same Act, workwomen are allowed eight weeks' leave before and after confinement. During this period, they are paid full wages if they have been employed in the factory for more than six months, and half wages if they have been employed for less than six months.

Moreover, the regulations issued under the Act contain the following provisions :

Workwomen must be medically examined before they are engaged ; the work allotted to them must depend on their state of health (Article 18).

The employer who engages workwomen must provide a room in which they can nurse their babies and, where possible, a nursery with attendants or nurses to look after the children (Article 20).

Colombia.

April 28th, 1936.

[Translation.]

I. In Colombia, as far as labour problems are concerned, women enjoy the same guarantees as are granted to men, since the legal regime of the country makes no difference as regards sex. Women are entitled to maximum working hours, compensation for labour accidents, compulsory collective insurance, Sunday rest, the use of day nurseries for their children, and, in short, all the protection afforded by the social laws.

Accordingly, the Government of Colombia considers that at the present time women are safeguarded by the national legislation from the point of view of their conditions of labour, and will be still further safeguarded in future when some of the Conventions adopted by this country as a Member of the International Labour Organisation at Geneva are put into force.

May 6th, 1936.

II. As regards civil rights, women of full age, whether married or single, enjoy the same rights in Colombia as men and are therefore fully qualified to carry out all the acts of civil life.

As regards political rights — i.e., rights of taking part in public affairs — women do not possess them in Colombia, since in virtue of the Constitution they cannot exercise electoral functions either as electors or as candidates, nor can they occupy public posts involving the exercise of authority or jurisdiction. Nevertheless, in the draft Legislative Act reforming the existing Constitution, which has already been approved at three readings in each of the Legislative Chambers at the extraordinary sessions during the early months of the present year, the principle is laid down that women may exercise employments involving jurisdiction and authority. This draft needs to be considered and approved in the same manner by both Houses in the next Legislature at second and third readings before the principle in question can be embodied in the fundamental Charter of the Republic.

In view of the character of the Colombian woman, it may be asserted that the great majority of them do not wish to take an active part in politics, being convinced that if they intervene in the ardent party struggle they will lose social prerogatives which give them greater satisfaction than they could derive from the triumph of their political ideals. In Colombia, where the home is the most sacred of institutions, it has not been thought necessary to confer equality of political rights on women, because they themselves consider these rights as useless, if not as positive drawbacks, for either they would not wish to exercise them against the political creeds of their husbands or their exercise might be a constant source of conflict in the home.

In the world feminist movement, the Colombian woman has displayed her activities in fields very far removed from the militant politics of parties. Her feminism is displayed in the sphere of co-operation with man, who to-day finds in her a true collaborator in his intellectual and scientific activities. The old interpretation of the biblical judgment which condemns man alone to work has changed, for the Colombian woman to-day prefers to give it a broader significance and one more in keeping with her true mission as man's companion, an interpretation which dignifies her and raises her to the position which is her due.

The Colombian woman is to-day beginning to enjoy an education which is in accordance with modern progress and which will qualify her to render effective service in nearly all the fields of science.

The foundation of institutions at which women may prepare for the baccalaureate with the same curriculum as men is an important step forward, opening up new horizons for women of ability anxious to take up a career, as they can now, after due preparation, enter the university, which has opened its doors to them — a measure that constitutes a very significant conquest.

This revolutionary change has aroused unwonted enthusiasm, and the women of to-day are taking energetic steps to cultivate their minds and acquire knowledge which will free them from the melancholy idleness in which they lived in former times.

A proof that the Colombian woman is non-politically minded is the little inclination that she shows for the study of law — a profession which is more bound up with politics than any other. She is convinced that her beneficial influence over the destinies of her country is decisive and effective, but believes that it can better be exercised by placing her influence and her heart at the service of loftier and nobler ideals than those which characterise party strife.

It is well known that our women show a preference for the study of medicine and kindred studies — nursing, pharmacy, laboratory studies, infant and social welfare, dentistry, etc. — branches in which they have shown that they possess the necessary ability and zeal to crown their efforts with success.

The School of Engineering is attended by numerous girls anxious to specialise in the arts of decoration and draughtsmanship.

It is to be hoped that, as our women are now entering the university after a proper preparation in the matriculation institutions, the first Colombian women doctors will soon graduate.

Feminism in Colombia attaches special importance to the preparation of women to be mothers, for it is profoundly convinced that on this depends the greatness of a people. In this important sphere, it has done all in its power to convince women about to become mothers that it is a privilege and not a burden which nature has imposed on them in the lofty mission of maternity.

The diffusion of a knowledge of ante-natal hygiene, the cares and duties of nursing mothers, the establishment of day nurseries for the children of women obliged to work, the compulsory course of puericulture which is given in women's colleges, the adequate preparation of girls about to marry in order that they may be the best teachers of their children — all these are ambitions which Colombian feminism is widely carrying into practice.

It is a very legitimate aspiration to secure for female labour equal remuneration with that of men when this labour is carried out in identical conditions. A no less important task is to give women self-confidence and the certainty that, owing to their ability and qualifications, they can compete with men in all the fruitful fields of human endeavour.

Estonia.

July 8th, 1936.

[Translation.]

The Ministry for Foreign Affairs has the honour to forward herewith certain extracts from Estonian law, representing the provisions which at present govern the political and civil status of women in Estonia.

From the very first days of the foundation of the Estonian Republic, it was found that the system set forth in these extracts no longer corresponded to existing circumstances, and was in contradiction with the constitutional system, which is based on the principles of equality between the citizens and of individual liberty, together with the right to take part in political activities. In order to reform the civil law, the Government appointed a special commission, which drew up a preliminary draft civil code which is to be put into force as from next year.

This draft is intended to establish equality between men and women before the law, not only as regards family law, but also as regards the law of inheritance. Although, in family law, the privileged position of the husband has been retained, the wife is nevertheless an independent person and enjoys full rights as such. In decisions affecting family affairs, in the event of disagreement, the husband's opinion prevails, but the wife is entitled to appeal against the husband's decision to the court of guardians.

For regulating the material relations between husband and wife, the Hungarian law was taken as a model. Husband and wife themselves control and manage the property they brought in on contracting marriage, and the wife is bound to bear an equal share with her husband of the expenses resulting from their conjugal life.

In the law of inheritance, there is complete equality between the two sexes.

Legal Status of Women in Estonia.

I. In Public Law.

The status of women in public law is governed by paragraph 6 of the Constitution of the Estonian Republic : " All the citizens of the Republic are equal before the law. Privileges or prejudices arising from birth, denomination, sex, social situation or ethnic origin no longer exist. The division into ' classes ', and titles, are abolished."

Accordingly, in the exercise of electoral rights, both in elections to Parliament and in communal elections, the principle of equal rights between the sexes is paramount. Women have the right both to elect and to be elected.

Also under paragraph 6 of the Constitution of the Republic, women have full liberty in public life and in the choice of a profession.

II. In Private Law.

The status of women in private law is governed (a) by rules relating to civil rights dating from different periods, which were codified in the middle of the nineteenth century in four codes, the most important of which is the code of Baltic civil law of November 12th, 1864, and (b) by the Law relating to the Contracting of Marriage, of October 27th, 1922.

Under the above-mentioned laws, unmarried women enjoy the same rights as men, if, with the consent of their parents, they have been removed from the latter's power. They have not, however, the right to become guardians (Code of Baltic Civil Law, 317), nor, under certain rural local laws (codex cil. 2065), may they appear as witnesses to the signature of wills.

On the contracting of marriage, the husband becomes his wife's guardian (codex cil. 11). He has the right to insist upon his wife's obedience and submission to his will, to determine the place of domicile and to insist that his wife accompany him (codex cil. 8).

Grounds of divorce are the same for the husband and for the wife (Marriage Act of 1922).

If, on divorce, the husband is declared guilty, he is obliged to provide for his wife's needs. This obligation becomes void on the conclusion of a fresh marriage on the part of the wife (codex cil. 124).

Husband and wife are subject to the same legal provisions in the matter of adoption (codex cil. 175).

Property brought in by the wife on contracting marriage, as well as property acquired by husband and wife together or separately, or accruing to them in any other manner, is managed by the husband, who has the right of use thereof, save in so far as otherwise provided by law or by marriage contract (codex cil. 12).

The " reserved " estate (bona receptitia) of the wife does not come under the husband's management, nor has he the right of use thereof (codex cil. 27). Before alienating immovable property belonging to her, the wife must nevertheless ask her husband's consent (codex cil. 29).

The husband is not obliged to provide security as regards the movable property belonging to his wife which comes under his management and of which he has the right of use, whereas in order to alienate or pledge immovable property entered in the wife's name, the latter's consent is necessary.

The fact that husband and wife lead a separate existence in no way affects their respective rights to the property ; likewise, the obligation on the part of the husband to provide for his wife's needs is not rendered void by this fact (codex cil. 9, 128).

The matrimonial situation of the wife in regard to the property may be modified by marriage contract, whereas any contract regulating the reciprocal personal relations between husband and wife is deemed null and void (codex cil. 7, 37, 38).

The wife may not enter into service under legal contract without her husband's consent (codex cil. 4194). The wife has the right to dispose freely of income accruing from such service, which forms an integral part of her " reserved " estate.

The husband is entitled to insist that his wife shall take an active part in the household duties and, if need be, that she shall contribute to the upkeep of the house (codex cil. 8).

As regards the exercise of the paternal power over the legitimate children, in the case of a difference of opinion between the parents, the father's will prevails (codex cil. 197). " Reserved " estate belonging to the children is, until they attain majority, managed by the father, and he has the right of use thereof. At this death, or in case of other impediment, the management devolves, on the same basis, upon the mother (codex cil. 215, 277, 278).

The principles governing the rights of inheritance, in case of the death of the husband or wife, show wide divergencies. Generally speaking, they are different for the husband and for the wife. Under the rural local laws, the husband receives the larger part of the inheritance, whereas under the urban laws, the proportion of the inheritance which the surviving spouse receives does not depend on the latter's sex.

Where there are children born of the marriage, the widow disposes, as a general rule, of the whole of her husband's property until her death. This right lapses on the conclusion of a second marriage ; in that case, the inheritance is divided, and the widow receives a part equal to that of the child.

Where there are no children born of the marriage, the widow receives a part of the inheritance, but she has not the right to dispose of the entire inheritance until her death.

India.

April 6th, 1936.

I am directed by the Secretary of State for India to forward a memorandum on the political and civil status of women in British India. In view of the magnitude of this question in relation to the laws of India, it has been found impossible to compile an exhaustive description within moderate limits.

2. As regards the action which the League of Nations might take in these matters, I am to observe that this is a domestic concern of peculiar complexity in view of (1) the close connection between religious and social custom in India, and (2) the variety of religions and races in the country.

The Secretary of State, who has consulted the Government of India on the subject, is therefore unable to suggest any action whereby the League could assist the peoples of India to solve their difficulties and to remove such inequalities as exist. The leaders of public opinion in the country are alive to the problems, and there is no reason to suppose that any intervention from outside would assist in the gradual but sure process of solving them.

Memorandum on the Political and Civil Status of Women in British India.

So far as British India is concerned, the political and civil status of women may be considered under three main heads :

(1) Their position under the law of the country ;
(2) Their right to vote and stand for election to Legislatures ;
(3) Their right to enter Government service and other professions.

1. Position of Women under the Law of the Country.

Category (1) above may again be subdivided as follows :

(i) Right to inherit ;
(ii) Status under marriage laws ;
(iii) Right to practise as legal practitioners ;
(iv) Eligibility to serve as jurors and assessors.

(i) Right to inherit.

The consolidated law applicable to intestate and testamentary succession in British India is contained in the Indian Succession Act, 1925. The important provisions relating to succession to intestate property are contained in Sections 32 to 49 of the Act. These provide for the succession of a daughter and a widow to a male deceased's property. The Parsees are governed in the matter of intestate succession by Sections 50 to 56 of the Act, which provide that females, including a daughter, a widow and a mother, get a share in the property with the male heirs. This Act, however, governs succession, etc., in the case of communities other than Hindu, Mohammedan, Buddhist, Sikh and Jaina. The great bulk of the Indian population consists of Hindus and Mohammedans. The Mohammedan and Hindu laws, although the latter varies widely in different parts of India, are personal and not territorial laws.

Under the Mohammedan Law of Succession, the husband or wife, and females as well as cognates, are recognised as competent to inherit. Parents and ascendants are given a right to inherit even when there are male descendants. Under the Hindu law there is a close connection between religion and succession to property, the preferable right to perform the obsequies and subsequent rites being regarded as governing the question of the preferable right to succession of property or inheritance. Consequently, agnates generally exclude females from inheritance. It has, however, been enacted (Act II, of 1929) in respect of the property of males not held in coparcenary and not disposed of by will, that a son's daughter, daughter's daughter, sister and sister's son shall in this order be entitled to rank in the order of succession next after a father's father and before a father's brother provided that a sister's son shall not include a son adopted after the sister's death.

A Hindu widow takes only a restricted estate in the property of her husband, and on her death such property passes to the heirs of her husband except such portion as may have been alienated by her for legal necessity. Alienations of her husband's estate or portions thereof for legal necessity, which includes the payment of her husband's debts and other charges on the estate, such as the payment of maintenance to female members of the family, debts incurred by the widow for her own maintenance, debts incurred for the funeral obsequies of her husband and for other primary religious purposes, are valid and bind the actual reversioner succeeding to the estate on the death of the widow. A widow of a Hindu coparcener cannot claim partition under the joint Hindu family system. In Bombay, however, a sister or a daughter inherits properties. In Malabar, widows and children (including female children) also inherit under Sections 23 and 24 of the Malabar Marriages Act, 1896.

On the whole, Hindu women suffer under certain disabilities in the matter of inheritance. Orthodox Hindu opinion has generally been opposed to removal of them on religious grounds. A number of resolutions and Bills designed to ameliorate the position of women in this and other social matters has from time to time been brought forward in the Legislature by non-official members. There is a marked tendency among the more advanced sections of Indian political opinion towards improving the civil status of women, especially in regard to inheritance and their position under the marriage laws.

The following private Bills relating to inheritance are now pending before the Central Legislature :

(1) The Hindu Women's Rights to Properly Bill. — It aims at securing the following results :

(a) No woman because of her sex shall be excluded from the right of owning property gained by inheritance, on partition, settlement, gift or present, or be deemed to be disqualified from having a right in property.

(b) The property of a Hindu dying intestate shall first devolve upon his wife, mother, daughters and wife of a predeceased son along with his sons, and all of them shall have equal shares in the property. The widow and daughters of a coparcener having no sons shall succeed to his share after his death and it shall not lapse to the surviving coparceners of the family. The widow and the daughters of a coparcener having sons shall succeed to his share. The widow and the daughters of a coparcener shall have a share equal to that of his son if he has any, but shall not claim partition during his life-time.

(c) The interest in property going to the shares of a Hindu woman as a widow, daughter, mother or otherwise of a coparcener under this Act shall be absolute and not limited.

(2) The Hindu Widows' Maintenance Bill. — According to this, a widow of a deceased coparcener in a joint Hindu family not having any son shall be entitled to get as maintenance a life estate in the share which her husband, if alive, would have got on partition in the joint family property, such widow being further entitled to demand for her maintenance a partition in the same manner in which her husband, if alive, would have been entitled to.

(3) The Hindu Widows' Right of Inheritance Bill. — The objects of this measure are as follows :

(a) Where the husband was at the time of his death a member of a joint Hindu family, she shall be entitled to such share of the joint family property as her husband would have been entitled to, had a partition taken place in his life time, and may also sue for partition. This share shall become her absolute property.

(b) Where the husband of a widow was at the time of his death a member of a joint Hindu family, she shall, subject to the right of another widow, take his property absolutely and not merely as a life interest.

(4) The Adoption Validating Bill. — No adoption by a Hindu shall be invalid by reason only that the adoptive father could not have legally married in her maiden state the genitive mother of the adopted son.

(5) The Moslem Personal Law (Shariat) Application Bill. — It provides that notwithstanding any custom, usage or law to the contrary, in all questions regarding succession, special property of females, betrothal, marriage, divorce, maintenance, dower, adoption, guardianship, minority, bastardy, family relations, wills, legacies, gifts, partitions, any religious usage or institution including Wakf (trust and trust property), the rule of decision in cases where the parties are Moslems shall be the Moslem Personal Law (Shariat).

(ii) Status under Marriage Laws.

In regard to inheritance, the status of married women in India under the Indian Succession Act, and Hindu and Mohammedan laws has been stated above. Among Christians, the rights and remedies of a deserted wife are governed by Part VI of the Indian Divorce Act, 1869. Under this Act, she can claim divorce, judicial separation and maintenance in certain circumstances. The parties are at liberty to marry again after divorce has been obtained. Parsees, are governed in matters relating to marital rights by the Parsee Marriage and Divorce Act, 1865. This Act prohibits remarriages save after divorce during the lifetime of a first wife or husband, provides punishment for bigamy and permits judicial separation, divorce, maintenance and remarriage in certain circumstances. A Mohammedan wife who is deserted by her husband is entitled to sue him for maintenance in a civil court. She cannot however get a decree for past maintenance unless such claim is based on specific agreement. If a Mohammedan marries a second wife during the lifetime of the first wife, as he is entitled to do, the rights of the first wife are not in any way affected except that she, with her co-wife, succeeds jointly to the share in her husband's property allowable to a wife under the Mohammedan law. A Mohammedan marriage may be dissolved, in the lifetime of the parties thereto, either by act of the husband or wife or by mutual agreement, or by a judicial order of separation, or it may be annulled.

A Hindu wife deserted by her husband can claim restitution of conjugal rights or maintenance. The mere fact that the husband has married a second wife does not entitle her to refuse conjugal rights to the husband or to claim separate maintenance. Otherwise, a Hindu marriage is indissoluble and no divorce is allowed except in the case of marriages under the Special Marriage Act, 1872. Section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, also prescribes a summary remedy for married women of all religions or communities to claim maintenance from their husbands.

A majority of Hindu widows are not allowed by social custom to remarry, but such remarriages are valid in law according to the Re-marriage of Hindu Widows Act, (XV, of 1856). Marriage of children at a tender age was formerly a common practice in India, but such marriages are not so common now. Child marriages are not invalid, although the Child Marriage Restraint Act, 1929, makes marriages of males below 18 years and of girls below 14 years punishable offences.

The Special Marriage Act, 1872, which provides a form of marriage for persons who do not profess the Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Mohammedan, Parsee, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion and a form of optional marriage for persons who profess the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion, penalises married persons marrying again under the Act and also bigamy. The Indian Divorce Act also applies to marriages performed under the Special Marriage Act. Succession to the property of any Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina who marries under this Act is regulated by the provisions of the Indian Succession Act 1925.

The Married Women's Property Act, 1874, provides that the wages and earnings of any married woman, who did not profess the Hindu, Mohammedan, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion, or whose husband at the time of such marriage did not profess any of these religions, acquired or gained by her after the passing of the Act in any employment, occupation or trade carried on by her and not by her husband, and also any money or other property so acquired by her through the exercise of any literary, artistic or scientific skill, and all savings from and investments of such wages, earnings and property, shall be deemed to be her separate property.

Hindu women labour under disabilities in this matter similar to those stated in the last paragraph 1 (i) above, and any move in the direction of removing these is apt to be opposed by orthodox Hindu opinion.

There is a marked tendency among the more advanced sections of Indian political opinion towards improving the position of women under the marriage law. The following non-official Bills to remove certain disabilities in this matter are now pending before the central Legislature :

(1) The Hindu Marriage Validity Bill. — It is intended to secure that no marriage among Hindus shall be invalid by reason that the parties thereto do not belong to the same caste, any custom or any interpretation of Hindu law to the contrary notwithstanding.

(2) The Arya Marriage Validation Bill. — The Bill is intended to place beyond doubt the validity of inter-caste marriages among Arya Samajists who form an appreciable number of the Hindu population of India.

The object underlying this Bill and the Hindu Marriage Validity Bill mentioned above is to promote solidarity of Hindus by making inter-caste marriages among the various castes of Hindus permissible and also to legalise such marriages in the interests of parties to such marriages and their issue.

(3) The Moslem Dissolution of Marriage Bill. — The Bill enumerates the grounds on which a married Moslem woman may bring a suit against her husband for the dissolution of her marriage, and provides that the conversion of a married Moslem woman to a faith other than Islam shall not by itself operate to dissolve her marriage.

(4) The Parsee Marriage and Divorce Bill. — The Parsee Marriage and Divorce Act at present in force was passed in 1865. The present Bill, which is intended to replace that Act, purports to bring its provisions up to date so as to conform to the change that has taken place in the sentiments and views of the Parsee community.

(iii) Right to practise as Legal Practitioners.

Under the Legal Practitioners (Women) Act (XXIII, of 1923) women are entitled to be enrolled and to practise as legal practitioners.

(iv) Service as Jurors and Assessors.

Under Section 319 of the Criminal Procedure Code, women are exempted from the liability to serve as jurors and assessors in criminal courts.

2. Women's Right to vote and stand for Election to Legislatures.

Women have been enfranchised under the existing constitution in all provinces having legislative councils, except the North-West Frontier Province. They are eligible for election or nomination to all provincial legislative councils (except Bengal, North-West Frontier Province and Assam) and to the Central Legislative Assembly from these provinces if they are otherwise qualified. As regards the Council of State, women have been enfranchised but they cannot stand for election or be nominated. Under the new Constitution, women will be entitled in all provinces to vote on the same qualifications as men, and will further be entitled to claim differential qualifications peculiar to themselves. Any qualified woman voter will be entitled to stand as a candidate for any seat on the same terms as men, and women will moreover in most provinces have special seats set apart for them. The same will in general be the case with the new Federal Legislature, when it comes into being.

3. Women's Right to enter Government Service and Other Professions.

Governments in India have at present full discretion in making women eligible or ineligible for appointment to posts under their control. The position under the new Constitution will, however, be different. Section 275 of the Government of India Act, 1935, provides that a person shall not be disqualified by sex for being appointed to any civil service of, or civil post under, the Crown in India, other than such a service or post as may be specified by any general or special order made (a) by the Governor-General in the case of services and posts in connection with the affairs of the Federation; (b) by the Governor of a province in the case of services and posts in connection with the affairs of the province; (c) by the Secretary of State in relation to appointments made by him.

This is a matter in which both the Governor-General and the Governors will, under the new Constitution, act on the advice of their Ministers, and the provisions of Section 275 of the Act quoted above are sufficient to safeguard the legitimate interests of women in the sphere of public services. As regards professions other than Government service, the legal profession has been dealt with in paragraph 1 (iii) above. There is no legal bar to women entering any profession.

Latvia.

March 3rd, 1936.

[Translation.]

I. Status of Women under the Current Latvian Civil Code.

Under existing Latvian law, a married woman is under the mundium (marital authority) of her husband. The husband has for example the right under Article 8 of the Civil Code (1) to insist on his wife's obedience and submission to his will, and (2) to determine the place of conjugal domicile and to insist that his wife accompany him. Under Article 11 of the Civil Code, "by the fact of marriage, the husband becomes the marital guardian (adviser or assistant) of his wife", and Article 12 provides that "in virtue of the marital tutela, the husband has power to control and manage the whole joint estate, both estate brought in by him on contracting marriage and estate brought in by his wife, as well as property acquired by them together or separately in the course of their married life or property accruing to them in any other manner, save in so far as otherwise exceptionally provided by law or by contract". Article 13 of the Civil Code provides that, in the event of a dispute, all property subject to the jus mariti must, prima facie, be recognised as belonging to him. If, however, the wife lays claim to a part of such property, she must prove that she has brought in such part on contracting marriage or has acquired them separately for herself, or that they have accrued to her personally in some other manner.

Under Article 27, the " reserved " estate (bona receptitia) of the wife, which may be exempted from the jus mariti under Article 12, includes (1) all property brought in by the wife on contracting marriage of which she has expressly retained the management and use, (2) property which has accrued to her subject to such a reservation, (3) property she has acquired by her own labour with her husband's knowledge and consent, (4) property she has received from her husband as pocket money, and (5) savings made by her out of the income from her " reserved " estate. Article 29 provides as follows : " Before alienating immovable property constituting a ' reserved ' estate, the wife must take her husband's opinion. The acts by which she has contracted undertakings of any kind in relation to such estate must be signed by the husband in his capacity as adviser. In default of such signature, the wife may refuse to fulfil the undertaking she has assumed unless it is subsequently confirmed by the husband's consent." Article 31 provides that " if the husband is prevented from managing the joint estate by absence, sickness or any other reason, the wife may only assume the management of such estate in conformity with the general law concerning the management of the affairs of another person as negotiorum gestor. In certain cases, a tutela must be instituted for the purpose.".

The wife's rights in relation to her husband are defined in Article 9 as follows : " The wife is entitled to require of her husband (1) maintenance in accordance with the position and financial standing of her husband, whether she has brought in property at the time of contracting marriage or not, and (2) protection and assistance for all purposes of life, in particular in connection with legal issues ".

The proprietary rights of husband and wife are governed by provisions which vary in different parts of the country and in different towns.[1] The relation between husband and wife may also be determined by contract (Article 32). According to the provincial law of Vidzeme and Kurzeme, for example, as also in accordance with the law in force in the towns of Kurzeme, the reciprocal material rights legally appertaining to husband and wife are regulated as follows :

Article 41. — During the continuance of the marriage, the husband is entitled, not only to manage, but also to have the use of his wife's movable or immovable property, her capital and her rights of user over the property of others. The husband's right covers both property the wife has brought in at the time of contracting marriage, and property acquired by her, or accruing to her during the continuance of the marriage, other than her " reserved " estate, which is not subject to the husband's management or use.

Article 43. — Without the wife's assent, the husband is not entitled to alienate, pledge or encumber with debts, servitudes or hypothecary obligations, immovable property (or rights in respect of immovable property) subject to his management. Any action at variance with this provision is invalid.

Article 44. — In Vidzeme, the husband cannot assign or pledge obligations contracted in his wife's behalf or in behalf of persons who have left property to his wife, or receive payments in respect of such obligations, without his wife's explicit consent. Any action at variance with this provision is invalid. The husband has, however, the right at all times to exact payment in respect of obligations of this kind if he anticipates that they will prove difficult to collect, or if his wife's interests so require for any reason. On the other hand, the husband has the right in Vidzeme to exact payment in respect of such obligations, and to assign them or receive money without the issue of any special power of attorney by the wife.

Article 45. — In virtue of the husband's usufructuary right (Article 41) he receives all interest or income from land or other immovable property belonging to his wife, as also all interest due in respect of obligations contracted in his wife's favour, or income due in respect of his wife's rights in regard to immovable properties ; and he is his wife's representative in respect of her usufructuary rights.

Article 49. — The husband is not bound to submit accounts for the management of property belonging to the wife, but is required to take care of such property and exercise the same vigilance in respect of it as he exercises in respect of his own property.

Article 52. — Action taken by the husband within the limits of the administrative powers entrusted to him cannot, even if it proves to be inopportune, be contested by the wife in relation to third parties who have acquired rights of any kind as a result of such action. The wife is, however, entitled to protest against action involving danger to her property, and to appeal to the courts to restrain her husband's rights in this connection by transferring the management of the property to herself. The income from such property must, however, be used in such case to meet the expenses of their conjugal life.

The question of debts contracted by married women is governed by Articles 54, 55 and 56 :

Article 54. — Debts contracted by the wife before marriage shall be covered first by her " reserved " estate, and then, if that estate be inadequate, by the estate brought in on the contraction of the marriage and managed by the husband, and lastly by estate she has acquired during the continuance of the marriage by inheritance or in some other manner.

Article 55. — The husband shall not be bound to recognise debts contracted by his wife during the continuance of the marriage. He cannot therefore be obliged to pay such debts out of the wife's estate managed by him. Creditors may, however, file their claims against the " reserved " estate of the wife or, after dissolution of marriage, against the whole of her estate of which the husband has then no longer the usufruct and which he no longer has the right to manage.

[1] On the matter of Latvian civil law, a distinction must be drawn between the general law and the provincial or special law which is in force only in particular towns or districts of Latvia.

Article 56. — As an exception, the husband is not only bound to recognise the following acts of his wife, but is also responsible for them out of his own estate :

(1) Acts connected with the requirements of conjugal existence or her own requirements and the requirements of members of her family, including such contracts as the wife may have concluded within these limits — for instance, in respect of the engagement of female domestic servants ;

(2) If the acts were done at the husband's behest whether general or particular, explicit or implied ;

(3) All debts contracted in cases of urgent necessity ;

(4) All debts through which and in so far as the husband has derived advantage.

In the towns of Vidzeme, husband and wife possess joint estate as defined in Articles 79, 80 and 81, the contents of which are as follows :

Article 79. — When husband and wife are subject to the law in force in the towns, their several properties shall become joint estate on marriage, irrespective of the status of each property concerned.

Article 80. — Under the concept of the joint nature of the estate, the whole of the estates of both husband and wife, including the estates they have brought in on contracting marriage and any estates which have lawfully come into the possession of one or the other, or of both, or which they have acquired, constitute their joint property during the continuance of the marriage, no part thereof belonging separately either to husband or wife.

Article 81. — The joint estate of husband and wife may not include :

(1) Rural demesnes and, in general, immovable property situate outside the towns, in so far as the status of such property is governed by provincial law ;

(2) Such " reserved " estate of either husband or wife as may not, in virtue of a contract or in the cases specified in Article 27, become joint estate.

As a matter of fact, however, subsequent to the agrarian reform, there no longer exist any of the rural demesnes mentioned in paragraph 1.

The special provincial law still in force in Latvia also includes provisions governing the material relations between husband and wife. For instance, Article 945 of the Provincial Code of Vidzeme contains the following provisions : " If husband and wife belong to the peasant class of Vidzeme, their estate shall be joint during the continuance of marriage, if no other arrangement has been made by contract in court before the solemnisation of marriage."

Article 946 also refers to this point : " A husband and wife belonging to the peasant class of Vidzeme shall, provided no other arrangement has been made under contract concluded between them prior to their marriage, have a right of joint ownership over their combined estate." Consequently, after her husband's death, the wife is responsible out of her dowry for debts left unsettled by the husband. To meet such debts, the whole of the movable property of the wife and monies and capital that have come into possession of the husband must be utilised, in addition to the " reserved " estate of the husband. If all the debts are not thus met, one-third of the recoverable claims must be met as far as necessary out of the immovable property of the wife. These provisions, however, apply solely to such debts as the husband may have contracted during the continuance of marriage or in connection with the contracting of marriage. The wife is not liable to meet her husband's debts out of other monies and capital belonging to her. Similarly, she cannot be made liable for debts incurred as a result of a crime committed by her husband or as a result of his prodigality.

Under Article 70 of the Peasant Code of Kurzeme, the law does not admit joint estate of husband and wife belonging to the peasant class of Kurzeme unless they have concluded at court a contract stipulating that such joint estate shall exist.

In the matter of political status, women enjoy in Latvia the same rights as men. As regards the right to vote and be voted for at elections to Parliament — at present dissolved by the authoritarian Government — both sexes possessed complete equality (Law concerning Elections to the Saeima, Articles 1 and 21). Similarly, women are not precluded from occupying responsible posts in Government or municipal services or from exercising the liberal professions.

On marriage, the wife acquires the name and nationality of her husband (Article 5 of the Civil Code, Article 7 of the Nationality Law). A divorced woman retains her husband's surname, but the court may at her request allow her to reassume her maiden name. If marriage is dissolved owing to the misconduct of the wife, the court may at the husband's request forbid the wife to use her husband's surname (Article 61 of the Marriage Law). A divorced woman, if indigent, may claim alimony : so may the husband, if he is indigent and if the woman possesses sufficient means. The guilty party forfeits the right to claim alimony (Article 60 of the Marriage Law and Articles 62 and 63 of the new draft Civil Code).

II. Status of Women under the New Draft Civil Code now being prepared.

Under the new Latvian draft Civil Code, the civil status of women will be radically altered ; they will no longer be subject to marital authority (mundium), and husband and wife will enjoy equal personal and proprietary status. These relations are defined in Articles 66 to 86 and 197 to 199 of the new draft :

Article 66. — The marriage tie imposes on the husband and wife the duty to be faithful to one another, live together, take care of each other, and take due thought for the well-being of the family.

The fact of living separately shall not, however, be deemed a fault on the part of the spouse who has left the home if the reason was that the other spouse abused his or her rights, or if the fact of continuing to live together would have constituted a danger to life or health, or might have caused the breakdown of family life, or if one of the spouses can invoke a legitimate reason in favour of the dissolution of marriage.

Article 67. — In their conjugal life, husband and wife shall enjoy equal rights. Failing an agreement between them, the husband's wishes shall prevail ; among other matters, it is for him to decide the place of conjugal domicile.

The wife is not bound to obey her husband's orders if the latter abuses his rights.

Article 68. — The wife shall be responsible for the household duties. She shall at the same time, as far as possible, assist her husband in his work.

Article 69. — The wife shall assume the name and nationality of her husband.

Article 70. — Independently of the proprietary relations between husband and wife, the wife shall be entitled to represent her husband within the limits of the household. Unless otherwise proved by circumstances, business concluded by her within these limits shall be recognised as having been concluded on behalf of her husband.

When sufficiently serious reasons exist, the husband may restrict or annul these rights of his wife ; such restriction or annulment shall, however, only have effect as against third parties if the latter have been notified of the fact, or if an entry on the subject has been made in the register of the proprietary relations between husband and wife (Article 139).

Article 71. — A wife shall have the right to appear in court personally, either as appellant or defendant. In disputes with third parties, the husband acts as administrator of the property forming part of the joint estate (Article 77).

In disputes with third parties concerning the property of the wife in respect of which a right of management and usufruct has been conferred on the husband under the marriage contract (Article 107), the husband shall be the lawful representative of his wife.

If a joint estate has been instituted under the marriage contract (Article 98), the husband shall act in matters connected with such estate.

If the husband fails to defend his wife's interests, or disposes of his wife's estate or of the joint estate without his wife's consent, the latter may herself undertake the defence of her rights at law.

Article 72. — Independently of the nature of their proprietary relationship, either spouse shall be entitled to make testamentary provision for the disposal of his or her property in accordance with the general provisions governing such acts.

Article 73. — Each of the spouses shall be entitled to dispose of the property belonging to him or her before marriage. As regards property acquired during the continuance of marriage, each spouse shall possess separately :

(1) The property he or she has acquired by work or other personal effort ;

(2) The property he or she has acquired without payment therefor ;

(3) The income from his or her " reserved " estate ;

(4) The estate which, in view of the legal material relationship, is defined as " reserved " estate under a duly registered marriage contract (Article 139) ;

(5) Property which has been substituted for the property mentioned in the previous paragraphs (1 to 4).

Article 74. — Neither spouse shall have the right to manage the property of the other (Article 73), to make use of it or to dispose of it in any other way without a power of attorney or the assent of the other. In the absence of explicit prohibition to manage or enjoy the usufruct of the above-mentioned property, it shall be presumed that such consent has been given.

Article 75. — Either spouse whose property is managed by the other spouse shall be entitled to ask for accounts thereof. Previous renunciation of the right to withdraw the power of management or to ask for accounts shall be deemed invalid.

Article 76. — The spouse who manages the property of the other shall be responsible for losses occasioned by serious negligence on his or her part.

As from the date on which one of the spouses has withdrawn from the other the right to manage his or her property or, in general, when one of the spouses is under the obligation to restore the said property, that spouse shall be responsible under the general rules of law.

Article 77. — Except the property specified in the second part of Article 73, all that husband and wife may have acquired during the continuance of marriage, either jointly or severally, but with the help of their joint resources or active assistance by the other spouse, shall be regarded as their joint property during the continuance of marriage.

In case of doubt, it shall be presumed that property acquired during the continuance of marriage has been acquired by both spouses acting together. In the interests of third parties, it shall be presumed, failing proof to the contrary, that all articles situate in the joint premises of the husband and wife are their joint property.

Article 78. — The joint property of husband and wife shall be managed by the husband, who shall be bound to render due account of his management to his wife at her request.

Only with the wife's consent may the husband alienate, pledge or encumber immovable property forming part of the joint estate.

Property forming part of the joint estate may be managed by the wife at her request :

(1) If, by leaving the property to be managed by the husband, such property is likely to be lost or injured, and if the husband is unable to provide sufficient surety for the property managed by him ;

(2) If the husband does not fulfil his duties in the matter of the maintenance of his wife and children.

Article 79. — The expenses of the family and of the joint household shall be covered, in the first instance, by the property forming part of the joint estate. If the property forming part of the joint estate is not sufficient, husband and wife are bound to provide resources out of their " reserved " estate (Article 73) in proportion to the financial situation of each.

Article 80. — Immovable property or rights in rem forming part of the joint estate of husband and wife must be entered in the Land Register in their joint names.

Each spouse shall have the right to demand from the other the entry in the Land Register, in their joint names, of the immovable property, or right thereover, forming part of their joint estate (Article 77).

Article 81. — Each spouse is responsible for his or her own debts to the extent of the whole of his or her " reserved " estate and to the extent of his or her property forming part of the joint estate.

Article 82. — If one of the spouses has alienated or pledged an object belonging to husband and wife jointly, the person who has received this article must be regarded as its lawful possessor if he was unaware, or if it was not his duty to ascertain, that the article belonged to the other spouse or to both jointly, or that it was alienated or pledged against the will of that other spouse.

Article 83. — Transactions between husband and wife and testamentary dispositions of one in favour of the other shall be admissible if concluded or made in accordance with the general provisions of the law. If, however, the wife has alienated part of her dowry and the person who gave her this dowry is still alive, the consent of that person is necessary during the five years following the marriage. Without such consent, the wife may dispute the validity of the transactions thus concluded.

Article 85. — Apart from the cases of revocation of a gift which are provided for in the provisions concerning gifts, a donor may revoke a gift made after betrothal or during the continuance of marriage :

(1) If the spouse who received the gift dies without issue ;

(2) If the marriage was dissolved owing to the misconduct of the spouse who received the gift ;

(3) If the marriage has been declared null and void and the donor, at the time of his making the gift, was under an excusable error concerning the supposed married state.

Paternal Power in Personal Relations.

Article 197. — Children are subject to the paternal power until they attain their majority (age of 21). So long as the marriage tie exists, paternal power is exercised jointly by father and mother. In the case of differences of opinion between husband and wife, the directions of the father shall prevail.

Article 198. — If the mother observes that the father's wishes or acts are harmful to the children, she may ask the Court for the Protection of Orphans to call upon him to amend his directions or acts. The Court for the Protection of Orphans may even, if it thinks it necessary, entrust the upbringing of the children to the mother alone.

Article 199. — Parents shall be bound, according to their financial and social standing, to protect the life and assure the well-being of the children subject to their power and to provide these children with food, clothing and necessary care, and to see to their upbringing and education.

The father shall be primarily responsible for the maintenance of the children until such time as they can support themselves, though the mother must share this obligation to the extent that her financial resources allow.

If the children possess " reserved " estate, whereas the parents have not sufficient means at their disposal to support the cost of their children's maintenance and upbringing, these costs may be met out of the income derived from the " reserved " estate of the children ; if this income is not sufficient, part of the " reserved " estate of the children may be used for this purpose after the permission of the Court for the Protection of Orphans has been obtained.

Monaco.

October 29th, 1935.

[Translation.]

1. Public Law.

In Monaco, women are not entitled to vote nor are they eligible for membership of any public body.

As regards the protection of women, prostitution is prohibited in Monaco and professional souteneurs are punished under the Criminal Code.

2. Private Law.

From the standpoint of private law, the present legal status of women is governed by the Monaco Civil Code, which was promulgated by Sovereign Ordinance of November 6th, 1913.

The provisions contained therein are identical with the rules of the French Civil Code.

3. Nationality.

Article 5 of the Constitutional Law of 1911, Article 6 of the Treaty of 1918 with France and the Convention of October 7th, 1919, between France and Monaco make it impossible, in the absence of previous agreement with the French Government, to introduce into the laws of the Principality the principle of the equality of the sexes in the matter of nationality.

Norway.

January 28th, 1936.

[Translation.]

The information given below is in reply to Circular Letter 160.1935.V, of the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, dated October 24th, 1935.

By a series of reforms going back almost a hundred years, the Norwegian Legislature has introduced a constantly increasing degree of equality between the sexes. Special rules nevertheless remain in force in certain respects, more particularly those referred to below.

Under the Law of February 9th, 1912, a certain number of public posts are not open to women. These are : Membership of the Council of State and of the diplomatic and consular services, ecclesiastical office in the National Church, military posts and civilian posts in the army administration. In 1930 and 1934, the Government introduced a Bill to amend this rule in such a way that the only exceptions to the rule of equality would be those made in regard to ecclesiastical and military posts and civilian posts in the army administration. No decision was taken by Parliament on these proposals, however. In 1936, the Government will submit to Parliament a new Bill to make women eligible for all posts except those of a military character.

Women are exempt from the obligation to perform military service (Law No. 6, of June 21st, 1929, § 6).

Any man acquiring the nationality of a foreign State loses his right to vote in public affairs while at the same time retaining his Norwegian nationality. By a decision of June 25th, 1935, amending the Constitution, an exception to this rule was made in favour of women resident in Norway who acquire foreign nationality by marriage ; in such cases, they do not forfeit their right to vote unless they leave the country.

The Law of July 25th, 1913, on Trades and Handicrafts (§ 11, paragraph 2 ; § 13, part 1) contains certain provisions of minor importance, the effect of which is that man and wife are not placed on the same footing as regards the right to exercise a manual trade.

Under the Guardianship Law it is, as a rule, the father who is the guardian of young children born in wedlock and the mother who is the guardian of those born out of wedlock.

A woman — but not a man — is entitled to ask that a " legal guardian " (Lagvergé) be appointed to assist her with advice and guidance in property matters (cf. N.L. 3-19-41 : Law of October 12th, 1857, § 3 ; Law of March 27th, 1869, § 3, and Guardianship Law, § 105).

The Married Persons' Property Law of May 20th, 1927 (§ 7, second paragraph, and § 31), places women in a legal position which, in certain respects, is more favourable than that of their husbands.

As regards allodial rights and rights of primogeniture, men take precedence over women.

The Norwegian Government intends to pursue its efforts to bring about the greatest possible degree of equality between the sexes, and will support any proposals for international action likely to promote such equality in as many countries as possible.

New Zealand.

April 17th, 1936.

I desire to advise you that the existing national law of this Dominion governing the political and civil status of women is contained in the British Nationality and Status of Aliens (in New Zealand) Amendment Act, 1934-35. This Act has brought the legislation into conformity with the provisions of the Hague Convention dealing with the nationality of women, and adopted the law of the United Kingdom on the point. The New Zealand Act, however, went further than the United Kingdom Act, and it provides that any woman who was a British subject prior to marrying an alien, and who has acquired the nationality of the husband by reason of the marriage, may make a declaration, under Section 3 of the Act, that she desires to retain, while in New Zealand, the rights of a British subject. Such declaration, when duly made and registered, confers the rights, but not the status, of a British subject, and is strictly limited in its operation to New Zealand only.

Netherlands.

February 27th, 1936.

[Translation.]

In accordance with the views expressed by the Netherlands delegation in the First Committee of the sixteenth Assembly, the Netherlands Government is of opinion that, generally speaking, the problem of the political and civil status of women can only be dealt with on a national basis. The social and political position both of men and women must be determined in accordance with the requirements of the public interest, which may vary according to time, place and circumstances.

Her Majesty's Government would not refuse, in the proper circumstances, to become a party to international agreements dealing with special problems connected with the status of women. The question of the nationality of women having been settled in the Treaty drawn up by the Conference at The Hague in 1930, the Netherlands Government cannot, for the time being, conceive of anyother points on which international regulation would at present be desirable. For these reasons, the Netherlands Government hopes that the League of Nations will refrain from taking up the problem of the status of women.

As the Secretary-General also asks the Netherlands Government for information regarding the political and civil status of women under Netherlands law, I may add the following particulars :

In the Netherlands, the political status of women is identical with that of men. As regards the franchise and eligibility to membership of the States-General and other representative bodies, there is no discrimination between men and women. Under Article 5, paragraph 1, of the Constitution, every Netherlands subject may be appointed to any Government post. Nevertheless, this general rule does not preclude the possibility of special conditions being attached to appointment to a specific post. There are, moreover, certain functions (those of judge and notary public) which are not open to women.

As regards civil status, men and women are, in principle, equal, the only exception being that a woman cannot be appointed as an arbitrator (Article 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure).

As regards matrimonial law, there are several matters in which the legal position of married women differs from that of their husbands. In the first place, the married woman generally requires the assistance of her husband in the performance of judicial acts. In the second place, the husband is the head of the matrimonial partnership ; it is he who administers the property of the union and that of the wife. Nevertheless, a woman can, on marriage, reserve to herself the administration of her own property, together with the right to dispose freely of the income from such property. During marriage, the children are under the authority of both parents, though, generally speaking, this authority is exercised by the father alone. Guardianship over natural children simultaneously recognised by both parents belongs, in principle, to the father.

June 4th, 1936.

Further to my letter of February 27th last, the Netherlands Minister for Foreign Affairs has the honour to transmit to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations the following information relating to the Netherlands overseas territories.

Regarding the policy to be followed in this matter, as set out in the above-mentioned letter, there is nothing to add in respect of the overseas territories.

As regards the political and civil status of women in those territories, it should be noted that, in the case of women subject to European law, it does not, generally speaking, differ greatly from that of women in the home country. In these territories, nevertheless, women do not enjoy the franchise ; they are, however, entitled to be nominated or elected to the Volksraad of the Netherlands Indies. A similar rule as regards eligibility for membership of the Staten was recently introduced into the laws of Surinam and Curaçao, but it has not yet come into force.

In view of the great diversity of conditions in this respect, an account of the status of women not subject to European law in the Netherlands overseas territories would not appear to serve any useful purpose.

Poland.

March 21st, 1936.

[Translation.]

The Ministry of Justice has the honour to transmit the following information relating to the legal status of women in Poland :

I. Political and Public Rights.

In Poland, women enjoy full political rights (Article 7 of the Constitution of April 23rd, 1935 ; Legal Gazette of the Polish Republic, No. 30, item 227) ; they have the right to elect and to be elected to the Legislative Chambers (Articles 33 and 47 of the Constitution ; Articles 2 and 4 of the Regulations regarding Elections to the Diet, Law of July 8th, 1935 ; Legal Gazette,

No. 47, item 319; Articles 3 and 4 of the Regulations for Election to the Senate, Law of July 8th, 1935; Legal Gazette, No. 47, item 320); women are therefore entitled on the same footing as men to take part in legislative work and thus to exercise their influence on the administration of public affairs.

Women are admitted to positions in the civil administration of the State (Article 6 of the Law of February 17th, 1922, on the Civil Administration of the State; Legal Gazette, No. 21, item 164), not excepting the functions of judges (Articles 82, 191), magistrates (210), judges of commercial courts (Decree of the President of the Republic of February 6th, 1928, relating to the Organisation of Public Courts; Legal Gazette, 1932, No. 102, item 863); on the other hand, women cannot exercise the functions of jurymen (Article 214 of the Decree relating to the Organisation of Public Courts), notaries (Article 7 of the Statute of Notaries Public, Decree of the President of the Republic of October 27th, 1933; Legal Gazette, No. 84, item 609), municipal magistrates in labour courts (Article 8 of the Decree of the President of the Republic of October 24th, 1934, regulating the Status of Labour Courts; Legal Gazette, No. 95, item 854). Women are also admitted to the Bar and may freely exercise the profession of advocate (Article 9 of the Decree of the President of the Republic of October 7th, 1932, regulating the Bar; Legal Gazette, 1932, No. 86, item 733).

Women of Polish nationality lose all the rights which they enjoy in political and public life when they acquire a foreign nationality by marriage (Articles 1, 10 and 13 of the Law of January 20th, 1920, on Polish Nationality; Legal Gazette, No. 7, item 44).

II. Private Rights.

With few exceptions, women enjoy unrestricted civil rights. For instance, they possess full legal capacity in civil matters (Articles 7 and 8 of the P.C.C. (Civil Code of the Kingdom of Poland of 1825); § 17 and § 18 of the A.C.C. (General Austrian Civil Code of 1811); § 1 and § 104 of the G.C.C. (German Civil Code of 1900) and in commercial matters (Article 12 of the Commercial Code of 1934; Legal Gazette, No. 57, item 502). Women may contract obligations in respect of bills of exchange (Article 76 of the Decree of the President of the Republic of November 14th, 1924, regulating Questions relating to Letters of Exchange; Legal Gazette, No. 100, item 926) and cheques (Article 27 of the Decree of the President of the Republic of November 14th, 1924, concerning Cheques; Legal Gazette, No. 100, item 927).

Women's rights are at present subject in Poland to certain very slight restrictions (1) as regards family rights and (2) the right to administer joint property.

Ad 1.

(a) In the Former Congress Kingdom. — Both parents exercise parental power; in case of difference of opinion, however, the opinion and desires of the father prevail (Article 337 of the P.C.C.); the father may place a child under guardianship against the desire of the mother and may even give his consent to adoption (Article 326 and 311 of the P.C.C.). The grandfather or great-grandfather has a right of guardianship over the children to the exclusion of the wife (Articles 369 and 371 of the P.C.C.); if a mother exercising guardianship remarries, she must call a family council to decide whether she should retain guardianship (Article 361 of the P.C.C.). For the duration of the marriage, the administration and usufruct of the property of the children appertain to the father, who represents the children in all civil acts (Article 341 of the P.C.C.). The father has the right to appoint a guardian for his children, in case, after his decease, the mother does not desire to assume guardianship; on the other hand, the mother does not enjoy this right (Article 364 of the P.C.C.). In case of annulation of marriage, divorce or separation, if both spouses are of good faith or innocent, the father has the right of guardianship of the children (Articles 354 and 356 of the P.C.C.). Similarly, the guardianship of children legitimated by a decree of the Sovereign belongs to the father when both parents have applied for legitimation (Article 358 of the P.C.C.). The father has the right to emancipate the children; the mother only enjoys this right if the father is no longer living or if he has been deprived of parental power (Article 468 of the P.C.C.). If a mother exercising trusteeship remarries, she must call a family council to decide whether she should retain the trusteeship (Article 471 of the P.C.C.).

(b) In the Territories formerly annexed by Austria. — Parental power belongs exclusively to the father (§ 147 of the A.C.C.), who represents his minor children in all civil acts and administers their property (§ 149 and § 151 of the A.C.C.). The father has the right to emancipate the children (§ 174 of the A.C.C.). A married woman requires the consent of her husband in order to assume guardianship (§ 193 and § 255 of the A.C.C.), and a woman guardian must be assisted by a man deputy guardian in the cases provided for in § 211 of the A.C.C.

(c) In the Territories formerly annexed by Germany. — Parental power belongs primarily to the father (§ 1627 of the G.C.C.); the mother cannot exclude from guardianship a person appointed as guardian by the father (§ 1782 of the G.C.C.). The Chamber of Guardians must provide the mother with an adviser in the cases provided for in § 1687 of the G.C.C. The mother loses parental power if she contracts a new marriage (§ 1697 of the G.C.C.). A woman married to another person than the father of the ward can only become a guardian with the consent of her husband.

Ad 2.

As regards the right to administer joint property in the districts of the Polish Republic which remain subject to the Polish Civil Code and the German Civil Code, the administration and usufruct of the property of the wife belong to the husband for the duration of the marriage (Articles 192 and 193 of the P.C.C. and § 1363 of the G.C.C.); the wife can only withdraw the administration and usufruct of the property from the husband by judicial means and in the cases provided for by law (Articles 199 and 203 of the P.C.C. and § 1418 of the G.C.C.).

In this connection, it should be pointed out that, in the former Congress Kingdom, a married woman can, in principle, bring an action in court without her husband's authorisation, but must, with certain exceptions, obtain his authorisation or summon him conjointly in cases relating to property of which the husband possessed the right of administration and usufruct in accordance with law or agreements concluded between the husband and wife (Article 182 of the P.C.C. within the meaning of Article XII of the Provisions promulgating the Commercial Code of June 27th, 1934; Legal Gazette, No. 57, item 503). A married woman requires her husband's authorisation to conclude contracts or to carry out acts relating to property the administration and enjoyment of which is in the hands of the husband (Article 184 of the P.C.C. of 1825). If the husband refuses the wife permission to bring an action in court, or to carry out an act, the wife may request such permission from the court (Articles 1653 to 1658 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1864). The restrictions imposed on the wife's right to dispose of property the administration of which is entrusted to the husband only apply in respect of acts inter vivos. The wife may by testament dispose of such property without the husband's authorisation (Articles 189 of the Polish Civil Code and 905 of the Nap. Civil Code). In case of a declaration of bankruptcy, the right granted to the husband to administer and enjoy the property of the wife reverts to the latter for the duration of the bankruptcy (Article IX of the Provisions promulgating the Law on Bankruptcy, Decree by the President of the Republic of October 24th, 1934; Legal Gazette, No. 93, 1934, item 835).

In the territories formerly annexed by Germany, the wife requires her husband's authorisation to dispose of property the administration of which is entrusted to him (§ 1395 of the G.C.C.). She cannot bring an action in court in respect of such property without her husband's authorisation; but, if the husband refuses his authorisation, the court may grant it at the request of the wife (§ 1395 and § 1402 of the G.C.C.).

In the districts formerly annexed by Austria, there is a legal presumption, so long as the wife does not contest it, that she has entrusted to her husband the administration of her property (§ 1328 of the A.C.C.); consequently, the wife may at any time withdraw the administration of her property from her husband without having recourse to the courts.

All the civil codes in force in the territory of the Polish Republic provide that the wife has the legal domicile of her husband (Article 32 of the P.C.C.), that she bears his name (Article 212 of the Law on Marriage of 1836, § 92 of the A.C.C., § 1355 of the G.C.C., Article 101, Vol. X, Part I, of the Collection of Russian Laws). At the present time, in accordance with the opinion given on April 18th and May 2nd, 1935, by the United Civil Chambers of the Supreme Court, and the judgment of the Supreme Court, No. 298/1934, a woman may resume her own family name in case of annulation of marriage or divorce (see also § 1577 of the G.C.C.).

It should be pointed out that in the eastern voivodeships which are subject to the system of Vol. X, Part I, of the Collection of Russian Laws, women's rights in civil matters are not restricted either from the point of view of family law or of the right of administering the joint property of the spouses (Vol. X, Part I, Articles 109, 110, 114, 115 and 116 of the Collection of Russian Laws).

The above particulars show that, with the exception of the restrictions mentioned, women in Poland are entitled to carry out the various legal acts, and to contract obligations on the same footing as men.

Danzig.

December 14th, 1935.

[Translation.]

In reply to the enquiry by the League of Nations regarding the legal position of women in the Free City of Danzig, I have the honour to state that women are placed in a position of complete equality with men in political and civil matters. According to Article 73, paragraph 2, of the Constitution, men and women shall have the same civil rights and duties. Article 80 of the Constitution provides that marriage shall rest upon the equality of rights of both sexes. According to Article 91, paragraph 1, of the Constitution, all nationals of either sex are admitted to official positions in accordance with their qualification and capacity.

We cannot make any proposals.

Czechoslovakia.

September 5th, 1936.

[Translation.]

In reply to your Circular Letter 160.1935.V, of October 24th, 1935, I am instructed by the Ministry for Foreign Affairs to communicate to you the following information regarding the political and civil status of women in Czechoslovakia :

Under Article 106 of the Constitutional Charter of the Czechoslovak Republic, dated February 29th, 1920, no privileges of sex, birth or profession are recognised. The purpose aimed at by the Treaty on Equality of Rights, signed at Montevideo on December 26th, 1933 — i.e., that women should be treated on a footing of equality with men in public and civil life — is thus attained in practice in Czechoslovakia, since it forms an integral part of her Constitution.

In this connection, women enjoy all political rights in Czechoslovakia (active and passive right of suffrage) ; they are admitted to the exercise of all the liberal professions (the Bar, for example) ; their right to occupy a post in the public administrations (for example, in the magistrature) is in no way restricted, nor that of engaging in commerce or exercising a calling. All forms of education (studies) are open to them.

In principle, there is no difference between men and women, even under civil law. Certain provisions of family law concerning the relations between husband and wife and those between parents and children alone show certain differences.

Article I of the Treaty of Montevideo (" that men and women shall have equal rights ") aims at absolute equality between men and women, even in all branches of family law. In this respect, Czechoslovak legislation is not in full accordance with it. It is, however, impossible at present to consider in Czechoslovakia any reform of family law making women absolutely equal with men.

As long as an authoritative interpretation of Article I on the lines mentioned above has not been given, the Czechoslovak Government will be unable to consider acceding to the Treaty of Montevideo.

Turkey.

February 28th, 1936.

[Translation.]

The Turkish Civil Code makes, in principle, no distinction between men and women as regards their legal position, and grants them equal rights.

Certain social considerations, however, such as the necessity for protecting the interests of the conjugal union, have led to a few exceptions being made in respect of married women. Of these exceptions, the following may be mentioned as examples. The right to represent the conjugal union is given to the husband ; in the absence of agreement between the father and the mother in regard to the joint exercise of paternal power, the father's decision is effective ; the domicile of a married woman is deemed to be the same as that of her husband ; whatever the terms of the marriage contract, a married woman cannot carry on any trade or profession without the consent, either express or implied, of her husband. All this, however, does not confer on the husband any kind of marital guardianship. Even in the event of disagreement, although the husband, as head of the conjugal union, is entitled to take a decision in cases where the wife's individual rights are not formally laid down, this decision is not absolute ; should there be abuse of this right by the husband, the wife is entitled to appeal to the judge, who may authorise her to carry on a trade or profession if the interests of the conjugal union make it necessary for her to do so.

A married woman may appear in court as plaintiff or defendant.

She retains the ownership, administration and free enjoyment of her property. The husband may, however, require his wife to contribute to the support of the union.

The law provides, in a general way, for the separate ownership of property as between the parties to a marriage. The latter are, however, free to adopt, according to their marriage contract, the system of joint or common property. In this case, the wife retains the ownership of the property she brought with her at the time of the marriage and also of such property as she has subsequently acquired. It is, however, the husband alone who has the right to administer this property.

In the matter of succession, the principle of equality of rights as between the parties to a marriage is recognised. Article 439 and the following articles of the Turkish Civil Code, which determine the legal heirs, are based on this principle.

Children of both sexes have equal rights of succession, and the deceased's estate is divided into equal portions (Article 439). The same is true as regards the father and mother, grandparents and great-grandparents of the deceased party to a marriage. The law, moreover, makes no distinction on the ground of sex as regards the descendants of grandparents. When an estate is divided, however, the rural property is allotted to those of the male children who seems to be capable of looking after it ; in the event of abstention on their part, the daughters may claim the property, provided that either they personally or their husbands are capable of managing it.

Women have votes and are eligible for election. They may take part in both parliamentary and municipal elections (Law No. 2599, of December 11th, 1934, amending Articles 10 and 11 of the Constitutional Law ; Municipal Law No. 1580, of April 14th, 1930).

PART II. — COMMUNICATIONS FROM WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL ORGANISATIONS.

The following communication has been received from the Pan-Pacific Women's Association :

June 13th, 1936.

Re Enquiry into Status of Women, Civil and Political, under the Law.

This Association would respectfully submit to your consideration the necessity of not losing sight of the fact that there are many problems and many matters of fact relating to such status of women, which are regulated customs, which have the force of law in less forward areas, and even in areas where some measure of progress towards modern conditions has been made. At best, such customs may amount to severe restrictions on liberty ; at worst, to customary law akin to slavery.

We should esteem it of great value to this enquiry if you could draw the attention of Governments to the desirability of including in their replies a summary of the laws affecting women in the colonies, protectorates and mandated areas under their jurisdiction, and also information on all native marriage customs, sanctions, sales, purchase and/or arbitrary disposal of the persons of women or their property.

The women of the Pan-Pacific Women's Association attach great importance to these problems as affecting the well-being and peace of the Pacific countries. They are within the competence of the League of Nations Council directly as far as the mandated territories are concerned, while some of their aspects may be treated by the Slavery Commission.

But still, it seems, a number of these problems are outside the competence of these bodies though well within the framework of Article 23 of the Covenant. These customary restrictions and/or abuses may not come within a survey of strictly national law, but still ought, having the effect of law, to be included in any real survey of the position.

The Association therefore respectfully submits to the League of Nations that a survey should be made of these questions for the common advancement, both material and spiritual, of the peoples and races of the Pacific area.

Note by the Secretary-General.

In a communication dated June 15th, 1938, the Netherlands Government amplified the information on page 28 of document A.33.1936.V as follows:

> "In the Netherlands Indies, an Ordinance of February 28th, 1938, lays down that women may be nominated and elected to the municipal councils. As to franchise, the 'Volksraad' has expressed the hope that the Government of the Netherlands Indies will as soon as possible introduce women's franchise for elections to the various representative bodies in the Netherlands Indies, in the case both of Netherlands women and of native women and women belonging to other categories. In response to this recommendation, the Government of the Indies has under consideration the question whether it would be expedient to introduce the proposed reform.

Memorandum by the International Labour Office	15
Annex: Report presented by the Representative of Italy and adopted by the Council on January 23rd, 1936	17

NOTE BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL.

In pursuance of the report adopted by the Council on January 23rd, 1936 (see Annex), the Secretary-General requested the Members of the League to communicate to him by November 1st any observations they might wish to make on the question " in what circumstances and subject to what conditions an advisory opinion may be requested under Article 14 of the Covenant " (i.e., an advisory opinion of the Permanent Court).

The replies which have been received are reproduced in the present document, which the Secretary-General has the honour to submit to the Council and circulate to the Members of the League.

The Director of the International Labour Office has requested the Secretary-General to communicate to the Council the memorandum reproduced below. The subject there discussed was in 1929 brought to the attention of the Committee of Jurists on the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice in a memorandum which that Committee decided to communicate to the Council, but it was not discussed by the Council.[1]

[1] The document distributed to the Council (document C.146.1929.V), now out of print, consisted of the memorandum of the International Labour Office and a letter from the Chairman of the Committee of Jurists to the Director of the International Labour Office (for these documents and for the discussion in the Committee of Jurists, which considered itself incompetent, see Minutes of the Committee of Jurists, pages 75 and 76 and Annexes 5 and 13).

GOVERNMENT OBSERVATIONS.

Australia.

Telegram of November 3rd, 1936.

Commonwealth Government of Australia is in favour of necessity for unanimity by Council or Assembly under Article 14 of Covenant pertaining to requests for advisory opinions in all cases where the question relates to a substantive dispute or to the validity of material legal contentions. If the question is definitely one of procedure then the Commonwealth Government feels that a simple majority should be sufficient.

Belgium.

[Translation.] November 3rd, 1936.

The Government considers that the adverse vote of a minority of its members cannot prevent the Council's asking the Court for an advisory opinion.

In the light of a most valuable principle, to which the Secretariat has drawn the attention of Member States, it can, in the first place, be allowed that the opposition of one or both the parties need not prevent the Council from validly deciding to seek the opinion of the Court. Nor is there any reason why the opposition of any other Member of the Council should be allowed to prevent the Council's proceeding with its request.

It has been suggested that the procedure might be varied according as to whether the opinion would, or would not, deal directly with the substance of the dispute, whether it would, or would not, prejudge the substance of the dispute or, lastly, whether it would, or would not, be dealing with a specific case. These distinctions are certainly worthy of consideration; but apart from the fact that they would frequently be difficult to apply in practice, their adoption would necessitate the amendment of the Covenant, whereas the solution advocated above would only require agreement on a certain — logical and reasonable — interpretation of the present provisions of the Covenant. A request for an advisory opinion may, indeed, be regarded as a question of procedure, not requiring unanimity but merely a majority, irrespective of whether the opinion deals with a question of form or a question of substance. This view would appear to be all the more justified as the request for an advisory opinion is merely one of the Council's means of having light thrown on problems referred to it, and such opinions are not in themselves binding.

United Kingdom.

October 23rd, 1936.

In the resolution adopted by the Assembly in 1928, the question at issue was put as follows: " Whether the Council or the Assembly may, by a simple majority, ask for an advisory opinion within the meaning of Article 14 of the Covenant ". A study of the discussions which have taken place on this point in various organs of the League and of the opinions expressed by text-book writers seems to show that if the question is put in this way, so that the answer must be a simple " Yes " or " No ", applicable to all cases, there is a wide divergence of views both between Members of the League and between the jurists who have written on the subject, and it does not seem likely that further study of the question would result in unanimity.

In these circumstances, His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom are disposed to think that the question is not really one to which a simple affirmative or negative answer, applicable in all circumstances, can be given, and they note that in the resolution adopted by the Assembly of 1935 the question is put in a different form: " In what circumstances and subject to what conditions an advisory opinion may be requested under Article 14 of the Covenant ".

The view which His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom are at present disposed to adopt is that the question whether unanimity is necessary for a decision to ask for an advisory opinion, or whether it is to be regarded as a matter of procedure for which a simple majority suffices, depends upon the circumstances of the case and the nature of the question which it is proposed to put to the Court. It is not difficult to imagine circumstances (particularly when the Council or the Assembly is not dealing with a dispute) where a decision to ask for an advisory opinion may properly be regarded as a matter of procedure within the meaning of Article 5 (2) of the Covenant. On the other hand, where the Council or the Assembly is dealing with a dispute, and the question which it is proposed to put to the Court relates to the substance of the dispute (or to the validity of material legal contentions advanced by one party or the other), so that the effect of the opinion would be substantially equivalent to deciding the dispute between the parties, His Majesty's Government consider that the absolute unanimity prescribed in Article 5 (1) is necessary. The Covenant imposes on the Members of the League no obligation to submit any particular dispute to judicial settlement (except in so far as such an obligation may result from Article 12 in the case of a dispute likely to lead to a rupture), and such an obligation can only result from commitments which a State has voluntarily accepted, either by signing the Optional Clause or in some other manner. In the case of a dispute to which no such commitment is applicable, it appears to His Majesty's Government impossible to interpret the last sentence of Article 14 of the Covenant in such a way as to enable a Member of the League to be forced against its will to submit the dispute to the Permanent Court. His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom are not impressed by the argument which in this connection is based upon the distinction between a decision of the Permanent Court and an advisory opinion. There has never been a case yet in which the Council has not acted upon an advisory opinion which it has requested, and if the opinion is not to be acted upon, to obtain it would serve no useful purpose, while a failure by the Council to act upon it might well be regarded as lacking in respect to the Court. Moreover, the practice and procedure of the Court in dealing with advisory opinions have now been largely assimilated to that applicable in contentious cases. For these reasons, and in view of the authority which attaches to an opinion by the Permanent Court, His Majesty's Government find it impossible in the present connection to draw any practical distinction between the effect of a judgment and that of an advisory opinion. In these circumstances, His Majesty's Government consider that, where the matter which it is proposed to refer to the Court relates to the substance of a dispute, it is impossible to regard the matter as one of procedure, and that to hold that in such a case an advisory opinion can be asked for by a simple majority would be inconsistent with the principles adopted by the League in dealing with the judicial settlement of disputes.

His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom do not propose in this memorandum to discuss the question whether, in certain circumstances, " limited unanimity " — i.e., excluding the representatives of the interested parties — may suffice. They are, however, not at present convinced that cases exist where a rule other than absolute unanimity or a simple majority is applicable, at any rate in the absence of a definite treaty provision to that effect.

His Majesty's Government are therefore disposed to think that the question under discussion is not one to which an answer of universal application can be given, but must be determined according to the circumstances of each particular case, the general principle being that a simple majority suffices where the question is really one of procedure, but that unanimity is required where something more than procedure is involved, particularly where the question which it is proposed to put to the Court relates to the substance of a dispute. If this be the correct principle, it would obviously be impossible to lay down any hard and fast criterion for deciding into which category a particular case falls, and there would no doubt be border-line cases, but on the basis of this principle a jurisprudence could probably be developed which should enable most cases, at any rate, to be decided without serious difficulty.

China.

[Translation.] November 26th, 1936.

The Chinese Government, having studied this question, pronounces definitely in favour of a majority vote in the Assembly or the Council for requests for advisory opinions from the Permanent Court of International Justice.

The Chinese Government does not think it necessary to recapitulate all the arguments that have already been advanced in support of this view. It would merely point out that its attitude, dictated by the desire to found international relations on a basis of law, is in strict conformity with the attitude adopted by China in her relations with other States. A faithful supporter of the Covenant, the Chinese Government is prepared to agree to anything that may facilitate the development of the law, the prescriptions of which all the Members of the League have undertaken to observe " as the actual rule of conduct among Governments".

Furthermore, in the Chinese Government's view, a request for an advisory opinion from the Court is a matter of procedure, and should therefore be decided by a majority vote in the Assembly or the Council, as provided in Article 5, paragraph 2, of the Covenant.

Denmark.

[Translation.] August 20th, 1936.

The Danish Government considers that there can be no legitimate doubt that an advisory opinion may be asked from the Court by the Council or the Assembly by a resolution adopted by a simple majority. The Danish Government cannot recognise the justice of the chief argument put forward in support of the necessity of a unanimous resolution — namely, that in practice such an opinion is considered to possess an authority equal to that of a judgment strictly so-called, and that a simple majority of the Council or the Assembly can thus produce a final decision in a dispute involving a State which has not consented to a legal decision by the Court. The question of the authority to be attached in practice to the Court's advisory opinions must depend in each particular case on the contents of those opinions, and has nothing to do with the question of the necessity of unanimity or a majority in bringing the dispute before the Court.

The Danish Government considers that this is a case falling under Article 5, paragraph 2, of the Covenant.

Ecuador.

[Translation.] September 24th, 1936.

Article 14 of the Covenant of the League of Nations mentions as a function (compulsory and not optional) of the Permanent Court of International Justice that of giving an advisory opinion on any dispute or question referred to it by the Council or by the Assembly.

According to the system laid down in the Covenant (Article 5, paragraph 1), however, decisions at any meeting of the Assembly or of the Council require the agreement of all the Members of the League represented at the meeting. But this unanimity can only be necessary for questions of substance discussed and settled either by the Assembly or the Council in pursuit of the essential aims assigned to the organs of the League of Nations in the preamble to the Covenant.

A mere request for an opinion to the Permanent Court of International Justice may be a preliminary to the institution of proceedings before the same Court, the Assembly or the Council ; and in this sense it is not a question of substance requiring unanimity for decisions. We therefore consider paragraph 2 of the same Article 5 to be applicable to these cases, this paragraph laying down that all matters of procedure at meetings of the Assembly or of the Council shall be regulated by those bodies and may be decided by a majority of the Members of the League represented at the meeting.

Questions of procedure may, however, arise in connection with matters already under consideration by the Assembly or the Council which may require an opinion from the Permanent Court to clear up certain points. In such a case, a simple majority of votes is sufficient for submitting a request for an advisory opinion to the Court. But it is also possible that any Government Member of the League, which is represented on the Assembly or the Council, may desire, with a view to clearing up any point of international law or of the interpretation of treaties, or other similar matters, to propose to the Council or the Assembly the desirability of consulting the Court ; in such a case, those bodies may accept the proposal by a simple majority of votes and ask the Court for an opinion, this possibility being also provided for in Article 17, paragraph 1, of the Covenant.

Accordingly, in the Government of Ecuador's view, the system laid down in the Covenant and the provisions of Article 14, Article 5, paragraphs 1 and 2, and Article 17, paragraph 1, taken in conjunction with the fundamental aims mentioned in the preamble of the Covenant, are such as to make it quite clear that the Assembly and the Council are fully entitled to address requests for an advisory opinion to the Permanent Court of International Justice by a simple majority of votes.

Estonia.

[Translation.] September 7th, 1936.

The Ministry for Foreign Affairs has the honour to communicate the following observations concerning advisory opinions.

Advisory opinions are a means by which the Council or Assembly can consult the Court on any dispute or point of law.

So long as it is a question of obtaining advisory opinions to clear up points of law on matters arising in the conduct of ordinary League business which are not directly prejudicial to the interest of any Member, the Estonian Government can see no objection to such opinions being regarded as mere matters of procedure ; it is therefore in favour of enabling the Council and Assembly to request such opinions by a mere majority vote. Insistence on unanimity in such cases would make procedure unduly rigid and thus might hamper the organs of the League in their work.

The question takes on a different aspect when an advisory opinion is designed to assist the Council in settling a dispute submitted to it by the parties, or one of the parties, under a provision of the Covenant. An advisory opinion, in regard to which the Court deliberately follows the contentious procedure, is more or less equivalent to a judgment and places the Council in possession of the legal bases of any settlement of the dispute. Having regard to the very high authority which the Court enjoys, it must be recognised that, in practice, if not in law, its opinion is binding upon the Council. In this way, a request for an advisory opinion has the effect of substituting legal proceedings before the Court for conciliation proceedings before the Council. Being firmly attached to the principle of compulsory arbitration, the Estonian Government would not object to this, but would prefer that the Court's competence in such cases should be explicitly defined and that States should be asked to consent beforehand to the reference of their disputes, pending before the Council, to the Court for an advisory opinion. The Estonian Government considers, moreover, that such consent might be given by means of a special protocol similar to that embodying the valuable optional clause providing for the Court's compulsory jurisdiction.

This method would also have the advantage of avoiding discussion on the thorny question whether the relevant decisions require unanimity or merely a majority. As the consent of the parties would have been given in advance, the Council can take its decision without concerning itself with the opposition of either of the parties, which hitherto has constituted the most serious impediment to the Council's action in such matters. As the votes of the parties would no longer be taken into account, the unanimity rule could be applied without any question arising.

Finland.

[Translation.] October 29th, 1936.

In connection with the proposals for the reform of the Covenant, the Finnish Government, in agreement with the Governments of the other northern countries, has already expressed the opinion that it would be eminently desirable that requests for advisory opinions of the Permanent Court of International Justice should be facilitated and that it should therefore be agreed, at least as a general rule, that such requests may be conveyed to the Court as the result of mere majority decisions. Such is still the Finnish Government's view. If, however, the other Member States of the League of Nations are not all prepared to accept such a rule outright, the Finnish Government ventures to suggest a compromise solution based upon a classification of the cases in regard to which advisory opinions might be requested. The Finnish Government has no desire to deal exhaustively with this aspect of the problem in the present memorandum and confines itself to pointing out that certain advisory opinions may not involve more than the elucidation of a legal point incidental to a much bigger problem. In such a case, the advisory opinion would not prejudge that problem in its entirety, so that here at least a simple majority decision in favour of the request should be all that is required. It is, however, conceivable that, even in cases in which the advisory opinion merely deals with one detail of a comprehensive problem, the Court cannot settle that detail without so far prejudging the main issue that, by implication, its opinion settles the latter also. In such cases, a stricter procedure in respect of votes on requests for advisory opinions would perhaps be justified. This applies a fortiori to cases in which the subject of the advisory opinion is not merely one detail of a comprehensive problem but the whole matter at issue.

If such a classification of the cases in regard to which advisory opinions might be requested is accepted as a basis for the rules governing votes, it will still be necessary to face the fact that, generally speaking, their application will require to be studied separately in regard to each case as it arises.

Latvia.

[Translation.] December 22nd, 1936.

While it does not feel able to express any definite opinion for or against the necessity of a unanimous vote by the Council or the Assembly on requests for advisory opinions, the Latvian Government would stress the fact that the chief difficulty does not appear to lie in the question frequently raised during the discussions on the conditions of voting requests for advisory opinions, and particularly in the First Committee in 1928, as to whether such a vote must be unanimous, or whether a simple majority may suffice, but rather in the question what weight and what authority should be attached to advisory opinions given by the Permanent Court of International Justice.

This points to a distinction between requests for advisory opinions relating to disputes and those dealing with points of law, and it would be more practical to turn this distinction into one between requests for advisory opinions entailing political consequences and requests for opinions which do not entail such consequences.

While it realises the existing difficulties, which would also have to be overcome in order to decide in which of these two classes a request for an advisory opinion should be placed, the Latvian Government is inclined to think that the best solution would be to decide that a simple majority will suffice in the case of the second class of requests, while a unanimous vote would remain the rule in the case of the first class.

Netherlands.

[Translation.] October 29th, 1936.

At the sixteenth Assembly, in the course of the discussion in the First Committee, it was suggested that the decline in the business of the Court might be due to the conditions which hitherto have governed the obtaining of advisory opinions from it. Assuming this to be correct, such consultation might become more frequent were it laid down that henceforward decisions to request an opinion might be taken by a majority vote of the Council. Though it would have been happy to contribute, through its reply, to a solution likely to increase the Court's activities, the Netherlands Government cannot support an interpretation of the Covenant under which decisions to request an advisory opinion might, as a general rule, be taken by a majority of the Council. In the minds of the authors of the Covenant, the unanimity rule, as laid down in Article 5, was one of the essential principles of the League's constitution, so that it may only be disregarded in cases in which an exception has expressly been made. To regard the consultation of the Court as a matter of procedure within the meaning of paragraph 2 of Article 5 of the Covenant would, however, appear to be inadmissible. Even though the Court's opinions are binding neither upon the Council nor upon the parties, it must nevertheless be recognised that the distinction between consultation of the Court and the appointment of a committee of experts is enhanced by the Court's unique position as the juridical organ of the community of nations. It is scarcely likely that, having refrained from making the Court's jurisdiction compulsory, the authors of the Covenant would have attempted, by this indirect means, to compel States to agree to all disputes being taken before the Court, irrespective of their wishes. The fact that the Court itself has more and more closely assimilated its advisory procedure to its contentious procedure is a further reason for ceasing to regard consultation of the Court as a matter of procedure.

In the opinion of the Netherlands Government, the only cases in which the principle of unanimity may really be departed from are those in which unanimity in the Council is, under special provisions, not required for decisions on the merits. Such a case might arise if the Council were empowered, under a special Convention, to take decisions on the merits of a case by a majority vote. Similarly, in the event of a dispute between two Members of the League which is likely to lead to a rupture and is brought before the Council under Article 15 of the Covenant, the Council would be entitled to ask the Court for an advisory opinion even if the parties did not consent. For it would appear to be illogical that, while competent to decide upon the merits of a dispute without the parties' consent, the Council should require to obtain such consent in order to ask the Court for an opinion on points of law arising in the course of its examination of the dispute. The attitude taken up by the Permanent Court in the case of Eastern Carelia in 1923, when it declared itself unable to give an opinion because the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics refused to take part in the proceedings, is not in contradiction with the rule set forth above, as the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics was not then a Member of the League.

Poland.

[Translation.] September 22nd, 1936.

On September 28th, 1935, the Assembly expressed the desire that the Council "should examine in what circumstances and subject to what conditions an advisory opinion might be requested under Article 14 of the Covenant".

The Council having asked, by its resolution of January 23rd, 1936, to be informed of the views of Members of the League on this subject, the Polish Government now has the honour, in reply to the Secretariat's invitation, to communicate the following observations :

The real crux of the problem which the Council is called upon to consider is whether the decision to apply to the Permanent Court of International Justice for an advisory opinion under Article 14 of the Covenant must necessarily be unanimous, or whether a majority vote may suffice.

This being a legal question, its solution should be attempted by legal methods. Such a solution cannot, moreover, be sought elsewhere than in the Covenant itself, more particularly in Article 5, which governs the matter and which reads as follows :

> " 1. Except where otherwise expressly provided in this Covenant or by the terms of the present Treaty, decisions at any meeting of the Assembly or of the Council shall require the agreement of all the Members of the League represented at the meeting.
> " 2. All matters of procedure at meetings of the Assembly or of the Council, including the appointment of committees to investigate particular matters, shall be regulated by the Assembly or by the Council and may be decided by a majority of the Members of the League represented at the meeting."

This text suggests two observations. In the first place, paragraph 1 does not merely say " except where otherwise provided " but " except where otherwise expressly provided ", to emphasise the strictness of the rule laid down. In the second place, paragraph 2 enumerates the exceptions to the rule in paragraph 1, so that its terms are in no wise amenable to extensive interpretation.

Apart from a few occasions on which it was merely raised incidentally, the problem of the conditions of voting requests for advisory opinions was first brought up in general in 1926 at the Conference of States Signatories of the Protocol of Signature of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, which had been called together to examine the reservations attached by the American Senate to the accession of the United States. The fifth of these reservations was obviously prompted by the conviction that requests for advisory opinions are governed by the unanimity rule. This is very clearly confirmed by the following passage from a speech by Senator Walsh :

> " Under the Covenant of the League of Nations, each of the great nations had a representative on the Council of the League ; and any one of them, therefore, because the Council proceeds by unanimity, can prevent submission to the Court of any request for an advisory opinion which it does not want to have submitted. This reserve gives to the United States exactly the same power. . . . "

The fifth American reservation gave rise to protracted discussions in which, however, no real attempt was made to come to grips with the problem. For the most part, speakers merely pointed out the difficulties of the question, while recognising that the Conference was not competent to settle it. In the end, the Conference confined itself to expressing the view that, in any case, the United States should be assured of a position of equality with Members of the League.

Consideration of the American reservations was resumed in 1929 concurrently with the proceedings for the revision of the Statute of the Court. A Committee of Jurists framed a draft protocol which was adopted by the Conference of States and subsequently signed by almost all the Members of the League. Although that protocol laid down no specific rule regarding the voting of requests for advisory opinions, paragraph 5 was so drafted as to appear indirectly to recognise the need for unanimity.

The problem was formally brought before the First Committee of the Assembly in 1928 through a motion of the Swiss delegation recommending the Council " to consider whether it would not be desirable to submit to the Permanent Court of International Justice, for an advisory opinion, the question whether the Council or the Assembly can, by a simple majority, request an advisory opinion under Article 14 of the Covenant of the League of Nations ".

The Swiss proposal led to a comprehensive discussion in which clear-cut opinions were for the first time expressed. On the substance of the question, opinion was divided; nevertheless, the predominant view was that recourse to the Court would be premature and inadvisable and that it would be wiser to leave the question open and not attempt to force an immediate solution. The report of the Committee merely expressed the hope " that the Council would have a study made of the question when circumstances permitted."

The Swiss proposal was revived in 1935 by five States: Belgium, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland. After keen discussion, in which the views of 1928 were repeated even more categorically, the First Committee submitted its report to the Assembly. The latter adopted the resolution referred to at the beginning of this statement.

To leave no doubt as to its attitude to this problem, the Polish Government must state that, in its view, decisions of the Council or the Assembly to request advisory opinions must always be absolutely unanimous.

This opinion, which the Polish Government has already maintained on several occasions, has a secure and firm foundation both in the provisions of the Covenant and in the real character of advisory opinions.

It is clear from the various discussions of this problem that the chief legal argument — and in the present instance, legal considerations are paramount — advanced in favour of the theory that a majority vote is enough, is that advisory opinions have not the same binding force as judgments. As its name implies — it is argued — an advisory opinion is one which does not bind the authority by which it is requested. The Council is always free to adopt or reject it. The Council, it is true, has generally tended to fall in with the views expressed in advisory opinions, but that is merely due to the Court's prestige. A request for an advisory opinion is, therefore, nothing more than a form of investigation. Intrinsically, it does not differ from the appointment of a committee of enquiry or a committee of experts — in other words, it is a mere matter of procedure which, in accordance with Article 5, paragraph 2, of the Covenant, the Council or Assembly can decide by a simple majority vote.

The weaknesses of such reasoning are sufficiently obvious. In the first place, it should be observed that, even if it were true that the Council remains entirely free to adopt the Court's opinions or not, as it thinks fit, it would by no means follow that such opinions are to be assimilated to the reports of a committee of enquiry. Even if advisory opinions were distinguished by no other features than their particularly authoritative character and the practical consequences that that entails, this would in itself prevent their being ranked with mere methods of investigation. In law, no doubt, advisory opinions have no binding force. The Council will nevertheless always tend to follow them, to avoid finding itself at variance with the Court.

The Council might, perhaps, have been able to retain a certain independence and freedom of action in regard to advisory opinions if the procedure had always been that of a consultation of the Court, in the strict sense of the term — that is to say, if the opinions were given confidentially and intended solely for the use of the Council, and if no contact were established with the parties. Such was, perhaps, the original idea of those by whom Article 14 of the Covenant was drafted, but in any case the Court departed from this conception from the very outset. It applied, in respect of opinions, the full contentious procedure with the same opportunities for argument on both sides and the same publicity; it has even provided in the Rules of the Court for the appointment of national judges. In this connection, it is of interest to quote a passage from the report of a Committee of Three appointed by the Court in 1927 :[1]

> " The Court, in the exercise of this power, deliberately and advisedly assimilated its advisory procedure to its contentious procedure; and the results have abundantly justified its action. Such prestige as the Court to-day enjoys as a judicial tribunal is largely due to the amount of its advisory business and the judicial way in which it has dealt with such business. In reality, where there are, in fact, contending parties, the difference between contentious cases and advisory cases is only nominal. The main difference is the way in which the case comes before the Court . . . So the view that advisory opinions are not binding is more theoretical than real."

It should be noted that, until very recently, the Statute of the Court made no reference to the advisory procedure; the assimilation of the procedure in these two classes of cases was brought about by the Rules of the Court. The new Statute which came into force on February 1st, 1936, gave formal sanction to the previous practice and the provisions of the Rules of the Court by expressly providing in Article 68 as follows : " In the exercise of its advisory functions, the Court shall further be guided by the provisions of the Statute which apply in contentious cases to the extent to which it recognises them to be applicable ".

[1] See the fourth annual report of the Court, page 72.

The Court certainly cannot be blamed for attaching to its opinions the same procedural guarantees as to its judgments or for endowing them with increased value and authority. On the other hand, it is impossible to close one's eyes to this state of affairs and to its natural consequences.

The Court's attitude in the case of the status of Eastern Carelia gives an idea of its own conception of the task conferred upon it by Article 14 of the Covenant. In its Opinion of July 23rd, 1923, it expressed the following views :

> " The Court is aware of the fact that it is not requested to decide the dispute, but to give an advisory opinion. This circumstance, however, does not essentially modify the above considerations. The question put to the Court is not one of abstract law, but concerns directly the main point of the controversy between Finland and Russia, and can only be decided by an investigation into the facts underlying the case. Answering the question would be substantially equivalent to deciding the dispute between the parties. The Court, being a Court of Justice, cannot, even in giving advisory opinions, depart from the essential rules guiding their activity as a Court."

The foregoing observations on the Court's advisory functions are all the more valuable as they come from the most authoritative source. If the words " advisory opinions " could be given their ordinary and usual meaning — that on which the advocates of the majority rule attempt to base their argument — the absence of Russia could in no way have prevented the Court from expressing its opinion on the questions submitted to it in the light of the documentary material alone, though naturally — such information being incomplete — with the necessary reservations. The Court, however, refused to do this and gave the absence of Russia as its reason — a line of argument which can only be justified on the assumption that the consultation of the Court initiated a suit in the proper sense of the term. Similarly, the fact that Russia was not a member of the League could only affect the Council's competence in the matter; it could not constitute an obstacle preventing the Court from advising the Council on certain legal aspects of the case.

The close assimilation of the Court's advisory functions to those of a tribunal which declares the law — an assimilation, be it repeated, which was brought about at the very outset — is an established fact, which must be duly taken into account. It follows that, between the matters of procedure referred to in Article 5, paragraph 2, and a request for an advisory opinion, there is a difference which precludes any analogy between the two. The conclusions of the report of a committee of enquiry drawn up in private and in accordance with the procedure laid down by the Council and the pronouncements on points of law of an opinion are two totally different things ; the distinction between the two cannot, moreover, be reduced to the difference in the degree of authority enjoyed by the bodies from which they respectively emanate.

Advisory opinions, indeed, have come to resemble judgments of the Court ; they contribute to the same extent to the precedents of the Court and play the same part in its work of developing international law and deducing its rules.

The logical consequences of this position in fact and in law are easily perceptible. It has frequently been pointed out, with justice, that, in contentious cases, the recognition of the majority rule with regard to requests for advisory opinions is almost tantamount to imposing, by roundabout methods, compulsory arbitration on the parties contrary to Article 12 of the Covenant, which expressly leaves the parties free to choose between arbitration or judicial settlement and enquiry by the Council. It is clear that a party having recourse to the Council expects a political settlement of its case untrammelled by legal considerations. In such a case, a majority decision to consult the Court is equivalent to the substitution of a judicial for a political settlement without the consent of those concerned, with the additional risk that, once the case has been settled legally, the Council's proper task of mediation will become more difficult.

Even in matters where a clear-cut dispute has not developed, the importance of advisory opinions is no less great and their true character remains the same. Mention has already been made above of the importance of advisory opinions in the Court's body of precedents and of their importance in the development of the international law which governs relations between States. An advisory opinion involves findings on points of law which may affect the interests of States. At the same time, it must not be forgotten that the effects of such opinions are not confined to the case in which they are rendered, but that, as is well known, their findings on points of law also influence the decisions of other jurisdictions.

The champions of the majority rule lay great emphasis upon the difference between the Council, as the political authority, and the Court, as the legal authority. When, they argue, the Council has recourse to the Court, it is solely to obtain information on certain points of law; the Court's legal findings are merely intended to guide the Council in reaching the final decision which it alone is competent to render.

Closer scrutiny of this argument soon reveals its fallacies.

If the Council requires enlightenment on certain questions of law, clearly that can only mean that such questions have actually been raised and that the States at issue are relying in their contentions on what they claim to be their rights. The Court, it is true, only pronounces upon the legal aspect of the case; but the Council could scarcely declare it to have been mistaken ; for the Council, the Court's opinion is bound to carry great weight, and its political task may well be complicated by such an opinion, with which it would be very difficult for it not to comply.

All these considerations directly raise the question whether, in the circumstances, such a serious step as a consultation of the Court can be regarded as equivalent to the appointment of a mere committee of enquiry. Surely the answer can only be in the negative, and that would in itself be enough to settle the matter.

Opponents of the unanimity rule have professed to find an argument in Article 14 of the Covenant on the ground that, having signed the Covenant, Members of the League who bring a dispute before the Council know to what they are laying themselves open, as Article 14 provides that the Council may request an advisory opinion in all disputes.

This argument clearly is the result of confused thinking. No one would deny that the Council has power to consult the Court; the difficulty is how the decision to request such an opinion is to be taken. The two questions are distinct and are separately dealt with in the Covenant.

Consideration must also be given to another contention, according to which the unanimity theory would be contrary to the provisions of the Covenant or of special conventions empowering the Council to take decisions either by an ordinary majority vote, or by a special majority vote, or by a qualified unanimous vote — that is to say, unanimously, the votes of the parties to the dispute being left out of account, as provided, for example, in Article 15. It would, it is argued, be paradoxical to require unanimity for a request for an opinion when such unanimity is not necessary for a decision on the merits.

The force of this argument is seen to be only apparent when it is considered that, in the above-mentioned case, it is the provisions which establish special conditions in regard to voting which themselves invest the Council with power to pronounce upon the issues before it. By proceding in this way, the signatories of parties to the clauses in question gave the competence conferred by those clauses to the Council and only to the Council. To attempt, by the roundabout method of an advisory opinion and, without their consent, to have such matters decided by another authority would be the exact opposite of what they intended. In so far, therefore, as advisory opinions are concerned, unanimity is required in all the cases cited and for the same reason that applies to the cases dealt with in Article 15 of the Covenant.

The exact terms of Article 5 of the Covenant may now be usefully re-examined.

It is clear that, while enumerating certain exceptions to the unanimity rule, paragraph 2 is completely silent with regard to requests for advisory opinions. The fact becomes particularly significant when it is considered that, at the same time, Article 14 of the Covenant invested the Court, for the exclusive use of the Council and the Assembly, with advisory functions quite foreign to a court of justice. Had the authors of the Covenant intended that requests for advisory opinions were to be treated as " the matters of procedure " mentioned in paragraph 2, it is inconceivable that, while expressly mentioning the appointment of committees of enquiry whose character could scarcely be in doubt, they should have omitted to mention the very special powers of the Council and Assembly to consult the Court. The omission from the text of any reference to requests for advisory opinions supplies a decisive argument against any attempt to assimilate them to matters of procedure within the meaning of paragraph 2.

This study of the problem would be incomplete without consideration of the intermediate theories which were also put forward in the course of the discussions and which can be briefly summarised as follows :

(a) Advisory opinions may be requested by a majority decision, but if such opinions are of a nature to decide issues of substance, the majority must include the votes of the States parties to the dispute, unless they have accepted the Court's compulsory jurisdiction.

(b) The question of the conditions of voting requests for advisory opinions assumes a different complexion in each case, and the reply must vary according to circumstances. If the opinion requested would decide the substance of the dispute before the Council or the Assembly, the procedure in regard to the vote would be the same as that required in respect of the question actually at issue; as a rule, that is to say, a unanimous decision would be necessary. When the opinion would not have any bearing upon the substance of the dispute, a majority vote may suffice.

It will be seen that the first theory differs essentially from the second in that the only rule which it recognises is the majority rule, though at the same time it concedes that, in cases in which the opinion would decide issues of substance, the majority must include the parties. Both theories, however, have this in common; that they are prompted by considerations of practical expediency. Another and more important feature which they have in common and which perhaps derives from the first is that they both are entirely without any foundation in the provisions of the Covenant.

It need not be pointed out that the theory outlined under (a) above would introduce a new voting procedure unknown to the Covenant, in the text of which it would require to be inserted if it is to be generally binding. Such a procedure would be not so much a rule already embodied, even if only implicitly, in the provisions in force as an actual addition to the Covenant. Furthermore, is not the concession in regard to the parties to the dispute — obviously made to escape the criticism that they are being forced to accept compulsory arbitration — really a disavowal of the whole theory that a majority vote is sufficient on the ground that an advisory opinion is nothing more than a means of investigation ? If this is not the case, what logical reason can there be for the rule that the majority must include the votes of the parties to the dispute ?

Both theories would make procedure differ according to the questions put to the Court. There is no justification for making such a distinction in regards to the conditions for voting a request for an opinion or for treating the request sometimes as a mere act of procedure and sometimes as a matter calling for unanimity. The questions brought before the Court may indeed vary, but the intrinsic character of the opinion does not change any more than the character of a judgment changes according, for example, as it deals with a plea to the jurisdiction, or is declaratory, or it orders a payment to be made. Whenever the Court gives an opinion, it rules upon a question of law, and thus each time adds to its body of precedents.

But even if for the moment we accepted the theory that on questions not affecting the substance of the dispute an opinion might be requested by a majority decision, the difficulty would then be to decide which questions came within this category.

It would be very difficult to lay down any hard and fast definition, and opinions on the matter might easily differ. Who then would decide between them ? Who is competent to decide ? In this connection, it is sufficient to recall the discussion which took place in the Council in 1931 in the course of the Sino-Japanese dispute, when it was proposed to send an invitation to the United States. We have here a new and no less complicated problem which creates a new difficulty and thereby makes both the above theories unworkable.

Similar practical considerations should be borne in mind when considering the all too frequent objection that the application of the unanimity rule to requests for advisory opinions paralyses the action of the Council. This argument should be used with some caution, especially when interpreting the Covenant. In the Covenant, there are many cases of the highest importance in which the Council might find itself greatly hampered by the need for unanimity. If the above argument is to be used, it will be necessary in all such cases to reduce this rule, which constitutes the fundamental principle of the League's constitutional charter, to a dead letter. No attenuation or modification of the unanimity rule can be introduced otherwise than through an amendment to the Covenant. In the form in which it is at present embodied in the Covenant, it is obligatory and must be strictly observed. To return once more to the above-mentioned argument, it is necessary to enquire whether there is any real justification for the assertion that the application of the unanimity rule to requests for advisory opinions hampers the Council in its work. If it requires enlightenment on a point of law, the Council can at any time apply to the Legal Section of the Secretariat or consult a committee of legal experts which it can set up by a mere majority vote. The argument is therefore without foundation.

After the foregoing legal considerations, attention may also be turned to the practical aspects of the problem.

It may be asserted with some confidence that the acceptance of the majority rule in respect of requests for opinions might be highly detrimental to the Court's prestige. Its opinions ought to be adopted by the Council and it must never be forgotten that such adoption must be unanimous. It cannot, however, be denied that, while unanimous agreement on the part of Members of the Council to approach the Court affords some guarantee that the latter's opinion will also be unanimously accepted, a procedure under which decisions to request opinions can be forced through by a majority vote would inevitably incline members of the minority to oppose the adoption of the Court's opinions ; and, obviously, it is not the theory that the advisory opinion binds no one and that the Council is free to reject it which would deter the dissentients from using their right of veto. As a result, cases in which the Court's opinions failed to secure adoption through lack of unanimity would become frequent. It is unnecessary to dwell upon the mischievous and harmful consequences which this would have for the prestige and authority of the highest international jurisdiction. In this connection, attention may very usefully be directed to the prudent warning of that eminent lawyer, now President of the Permanent Court of International Justice, Sir Cecil Hurst, who in 1928 was the United Kingdom delegation's representative on the Committee :

> " If it were now to be definitely laid down that a majority of the Council could seek the Court's opinion, it was necessary to consider what the effect of such a rule would be. Was it likely that the minority — against whose desires the question had been formulated — would accept that solution ? The almost inevitable result of the crystallisation of the doctrine that opinions might be asked for by a majority vote would be to divide the Council itself with respect to its practice of adopting without question the opinions rendered. Could that be a good result from the point of view of the Court's prestige ? It would reduce the Court to the level of a mere committee of enquiry."

In order to exhaust the problem, consideration must also be given to the suggestion that the question of the conditions of voting requests for opinions should be submitted to the Court for an advisory opinion. This was put forward in the first place at the Conference of States in 1926. The suggestion was revived in the Swiss proposal of 1928, and again by the five States in 1935.

The Polish Government does not think it useful or wise to have recourse to this procedure, the results of which, in its opinion, could not, in any case, prove entirely satisfactory.

There is little prospect of a request in that form being unanimously supported in the Council, though even the advocates of the majority rule could not in this case question the need for unanimity, as the matter would be no longer one of procedure in a specific case, but a question of the general interpretation of the Covenant. But even assuming that such unanimity is secured, the question would then arise of who is competent to interpret the Covenant. Is the Court itself competent to do so ? Undoubtedly it can interpret the Covenant, like any other international Convention — but solely for the purposes of a specific case. Under Article 36 of its Statute, it can also settle disputes regarding the interpretation of a treaty, but only within the limits laid down in Article 59 of the Statute, which provides that the decision of the Court has no binding force except between the parties and in respect of the particular case. It is a generally recognised principle that the only authority competent to interpret a law is that by which the law was made. There can be no doubt that the Court is not competent to give an abstract interpretation of the Covenant which would be binding upon Members of the League and, finally, dispose of any difference of opinion in this respect. It may appositely be pointed out that, by a strange coincidence, the suggestion that the Court be asked finally to settle this matter by an advisory opinion was supported by the advocates of the majority rule, who emphasise the non-binding character of advisory opinions.

Nor can the Polish Government agree to the view that to settle this problem is a matter of any urgency. In this connection, it prefers to be guided by the wise and prudent practice of the Council, which has always attempted to obtain the unanimous consent of its Members before requesting an advisory opinion. The twenty-eight advisory opinions hitherto given by the Court, indeed, do not include a single precedent for a request decided upon by a mere majority vote. An attempt is sometimes made to use the case of Turkey in the matter of the frontiers of Iraq as an example of such a decision. But though the statements made by the Turkish delegate when the Court's opinion was adopted seem to show that Turkey had been opposed to the Court being consulted, the Minutes contain no evidence whatever of any formal opposition to the adoption of the report regarding the request for an advisory opinion; the case is not, therefore, conclusive.

The practice followed by the Council has had no unfortunate results on the cases considered. On the contrary, it has frequently been instrumental in avoiding painful conflicts, and also in safeguarding the Court's prestige. The Polish Government therefore considers that the proper course is to continue this practice, the results of which have not been bad, and which is in conformity with the Covenant.

Portugal.

[Translation.] November 1st, 1936.

The Council of the League of Nations has asked Member States to express their views on the question in what circumstances and subject to what conditions an advisory opinion may be requested under Article 14 of the Covenant.

It should, at the outset, be emphasised that what is at present required of Member States is not that they should make proposals de jure constituendo — that is to say, indicate the system which they regard as most appropriate and most expedient in regard to advisory opinions — but that they should resolve questions de jure constituto — that is, interpret the Covenant in the light of the cases and circumstances in which the Council or Assembly may, according to positive international law, request an advisory opinion of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

The question of whether the present system is good or bad or whether it should be maintained or abrogated is not at present at issue.

What is required is that the system should be defined and that an end should be put to the present diversity of interpretations and the uncertainties to which they give rise.

Legal Character and Binding Force of Advisory Opinions.

According to Article 14 of the Covenant, " the Council shall formulate and submit to the Members of the League for adoption plans for the establishment of a Permanent Court of International Justice. The Court shall be competent to hear and determine any dispute of an international character which the parties thereto submit to it. The Court may also give an advisory opinion upon any dispute or question referred to it by the Council or by the Assembly."

The Court thus discharges a two-fold function, at once judicial and advisory, as it delivers judgments at the suit of the parties to disputes and opinions, at the request of the Council or Assembly, either upon actual disputes or upon hypothetical questions — that is to say, upon questions which are not the subject of an actual dispute or, in the words of the Court itself " d'une opposition de thèses juridiques ou d'intérêts entre deux personnes " (a conflict of legal claims or interests between two parties).

In the first case, the decisions taken are applicable as they stand; they have the force of res judicata, are legally binding upon the parties and have the character of authoritative awards — that is, of judgments in the strict sense of the term. In the second case, they are not applicable as they stand, do not possess the force of res judicata and are not binding upon the parties, where the subject is an actual dispute, or even upon the Council or Assembly, which can always depart from the Court's findings without infringing the Covenant; they are merely the opinions of an advisory body.

In a majority of cases, no doubt the Council or Assembly will, in actual fact, be bound by advisory opinions, as these issue from the authority officially recognised as most competent to settle questions of international law and to deal impartially with disputes between States.

Even after a question has been elucidated by the Permanent Court of International Justice, however, the Council or Assembly remain free, legally, to take such decisions as they may think fit, particularly — and this is a point of essential importance — as the Council issues its recommendation or recommendations as a mediator; they are therefore political rather than legal in character, " the recommendations which are deemed just and proper in regard " to the dispute (Covenant, Article 15, paragraph 4).

Even when the advisory opinion has been delivered, there is, therefore, nothing to prevent the Council from drawing up a report at variance with its findings and from recommending a settlement which, though less strictly legal, is more appropriate to the circumstances, more likely to be freely accepted by both parties and more in keeping with the requirements of international peace and the common interests of the nations.

It may, however, be objected that though in any given dispute the Council may depart from the legal findings of the Court's opinion and recommend such political settlement as it deems proper, or even more equitable and, de jure constituendo, juster, the fact remains that it can no longer represent it as the settlement demanded by positive law, just as consultation of the Court on a given point of law would prevent the Council's taking decisions contrary to the Court's opinion on that point.

That means that though the Court's opinions are not absolutely binding upon the Council, which in any given dispute may always draw up a report containing recommendations which differ from the settlement suggested in the advisory opinion, they are nevertheless binding on the Council in that the latter cannot represent recommendations not in keeping with the advisory opinion as inevitable under international law, as this would mean dissenting from the Court's interpretation and application of that law.

Is this contention justified ?

We think not.

When a public authority is required by law to give opinions at the request of another authority, such opinions have no binding force unless the law explicitly provides to the contrary ; this is especially the case when the decisions of the consulting authority are not legally subordinated to prior consultation of the advisory authority.

Now, prior consultation of the Court is not provided for in Article 14 of the Covenant, which, moreover, does not make its advisory opinions binding.

Such being the case, the authority of such opinions, their binding force, if any, will be, not legal, but political or moral ; they will have no authority de jure, but merely de facto, and, in our opinion, the latter need not be taken into account in determining their legal character.

Neither is it possible to maintain that the judicial character of the Permanent Court prevents its acting in certain cases as a mere advisory body ; for though the desirability of investing the same tribunal with judicial and advisory duties is indeed open to discussion, there is no legal impediment to such a combination of functions, which is common in municipal law, particularly in the case of administrative tribunals.

Unanimity or Majority.

The question is asked whether Council or Assembly decisions to request an advisory opinion must always be unanimous, or whether a majority will suffice.

This question has been answered in various ways : some insist upon absolute unanimity, others are content with unanimity apart from the representatives of the parties to the dispute, while still others favour a mere majority decision — not to mention those who demand unanimity in some cases while contenting themselves with a mere majority in others.

What is the cause of these differences of opinion ?

Apart from certain exceptions expressly indicated in the Covenant, decisions both of the Council and Assembly always require the agreement of all members represented at the meeting (Article 5).

The whole problem is thus reduced to the question of whether there is or is not any special rule under which the decisions in question can be taken by a majority vote.

In certain quarters it is argued — to our opinion rightly — that such a rule is to be found in paragraph 2 of Article 5, which reads as follows :

> " All questions of procedure at meetings of the Assembly or of the Council, including the appointing of committees to investigate particular matters, shall be regulated by the Assembly and by the Council and may be decided by a majority of the Members of the League represented at the meeting."

The point to be settled, therefore, is whether advisory opinions are or are not to be classed as matters of procedure.

Views differ, because while certain authorities on international law regard advisory opinions as mere opinions without binding force, others take the view that a request for an advisory opinion means leaving the dispute to be settled by the Court instead of the Council, or, in other words, that, in fact, a request for an advisory opinion is tantamount to a surrender of jurisdiction on the part of the authority to which the opinion is to be given.

Now, if the advisory opinion is binding upon the Council, if it is virtually to settle the dispute and if, therefore, what takes place is really a kind of delegation of powers to the Court, the request cannot, it is argued, be classed with mere matters of procedure.

Is this really the case ?

We have already seen that, legally speaking, advisory opinions are not binding upon the Council or Assembly, as their force is that not of arbitral or judicial decisions but of mere opinions ; this is true, irrespective of their de facto authority or their moral or political force, and irrespective of the rules followed by the Court in framing them.

The Court's advisory procedure may be and, indeed, is attended by the same guarantees as those which ensure the legal value of its judicial decisions and justify the presumption juris et de jure that they are in accordance with the law ; the truth is, however, that such guarantees are not sufficient to alter the legal character of the Court's findings, which always take the form of a mere opinion and not of a judgment in the strict sense of the term.

There can be no doubt that an advisory opinion concerning any given dispute will be based upon a consideration of all the aspects of the case, so that the Court's findings will be in every way identical with the decision it would have taken had the parties asked it to determine the dispute judicially.

We repeat, however, that this identity of content is not enough to divest the advisory opinion of its peculiar legal character and justify its being considered, not as a mere opinion, but as a judgment.

It is indeed argued that, though the above statement is true in abstract law, in theoretical law, it is not in accordance with real law — that is, the law of actual realities — since the latter show that, save in quite exceptional cases, requests for advisory opinions are, in fact, equivalent to a complete change of jurisdiction, whereby the settlement of disputes is transferred from the Council or Assembly to the Permanent Court of International Justice.

That is true.

But as we have already shown, the legal possibility of the Court's opinion not being followed — a possibility which is in no way nullified by any absolutely insurmountable obstacle in actual practice — justifies the view that consultation of the Permanent Court is a mere matter of procedure, such as can be settled by a majority decision.

However great the moral and de facto authority of an advisory body, either in municipal or international law, it does not make that body's opinions binding unless such binding force is specifically conferred upon them by the rules defining the advisory body's jurisdiction.

If the law requires any administrative or deliberative body to consult a given advisory body without, however, specifically investing that body's opinions with legal binding force, failure to consult the advisory body would be universally regarded as a mere procedural irregularity, and consultation as a mere matter of procedure, unless at any given time it could be established that a rule of law had grown up through usage ; this is clearly not the case with regard to requests for advisory opinions, which, even if rarely, have nevertheless on occasion — at least twice — been decided on by a majority vote.

To sum up : the Permanent Court of International Justice may be consulted on actual disputes or differences or on points of law — that is to say, on questions not forming the subject of an actual dispute ; but in all these cases, the advisory opinions will always, legally speaking, be of a non-binding character and may therefore be requested either by the Council or by the Assembly in virtue of a majority decision.

Sweden.

[Translation.] October 30th, 1936.

The advisory jurisdiction of the Permanent Court of International Justice is based upon Article 14 of the Covenant of the League of Nations, which provides that " The Court may also give an advisory opinion upon any dispute or question referred to it by the Council or by the Assembly ". The question on which the Circular Letter invites the Swedish Government to express an opinion is that of the rules which should govern Council or Assembly decisions regarding the consultation of the Court. The essential provisions in this matter are those of paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article 5 of the Covenant, which read as follows :

> " 1. Except where otherwise expressly provided in this Covenant or by the terms of the present Treaty, decisions at any meeting of the Assembly or of the Council shall require the agreement of all the Members of the League represented at the meeting.
> " 2. All matters of procedure at meetings of the Assembly or of the Council, including the appointment of Committees to investigate particular matters, shall be regulated by the Assembly or by the Council and may be decided by a majority of the Members of the League represented at the meeting."

The Swedish Government has on several occasions expressed the view that decisions relating to the consultation of the Court should be regarded as matters of procedure within the meaning of paragraph 2. That paragraph expressly provides that decisions to appoint committees to investigate particular matters, including therefore decisions to appoint a committee of jurists to examine a point of law, are to be regarded as matters of procedure. Now it is clear that the examination of a question of law by the Court affords the League in general, as well as the interested parties, fuller guarantees of reliability than its examination by a committee of jurists appointed ad hoc. If the majority rules are to be different in the two cases, it would appear that those governing decisions to consult the Court need not be as strict as the rules applicable to decisions to obtain the opinion of a committee of jurists, since the risk that the Council or Assembly will be led to base its recommendations on an incomplete or unreliable consideration of the matter would be greater in the latter case than in the former.

To this argument it has been objected, more particularly, that, in practice, an advisory opinion of the Permanent Court of International Justice is binding upon the parties whose interests may be concerned. To admit that the Court may be consulted under a majority decision would therefore be tantamount — whenever the advisory opinion related to a current dispute — to obliging the parties by roundabout means to accept compulsory arbitration in disputes which they may have expressly excepted from the arbitration treaties to which they are parties or which they may be unwilling to submit to arbitration for some other reason.

To this objection the Swedish Government replies that it is, indeed, to be assumed that the Council or Assembly will fall in with the Court's findings on points of law, but that this does not in the least mean that its final recommendation will be confined to reproducing those findings.

In the case of a dispute brought before it under Article 15 of the Covenant, the Council is required to make known " the recommendations which are deemed just and proper in regard thereto ". It may therefore, even while recognising that the contentions of one of the parties are justified in law, recommend a solution based on equity. Even though the Court may, for example, have stated that a claim for damages brought by either of the parties is legally justified, the Council is not thereby precluded from taking the view that the circumstances of the case call for a recommendation that the claim be reduced or even withdrawn. In such a case, the Court's opinion would have cleared up the legal position, without, however, having the character or the scope of an arbitral award. It should, moreover, be pointed out that even a unanimous recommendation adopted by the Council under Article 15 has not the same binding force as a legal judgment or an arbitral award, its effects being limited.

Or it might be that the question of law submitted to the Court merely represents one aspect of the dispute and that, for this reason alone, the Council cannot confine itself in its recommendation to a mere reproduction of the findings of the Court.

It should furthermore be pointed out that the fact that a majority decision was enough would not mean that every proposal to request the opinion of the Court would always obtain the support of a majority. If it was clear at the outset that a legal opinion could not contribute to the settlement of the dispute, there is, indeed, every reason to suppose that it would be impossible to find a majority to support recourse to the Court. In cases of this kind, so far as is known, the majority has never hitherto appointed a committee of jurists, even when it could unquestionably have done so.

The view that unanimity, including the votes of the parties, is always necessary before the Court can be asked for an advisory opinion would appear to lead to inadmissible results.

Under provisions of the Peace Treaties and certain special treaties, the Council is empowered to decide questions of substance by a mere majority vote. The contention that, when such a question is under examination, the Court cannot be consulted save by virtue of a unanimous decision would clearly be illogical.

The Council might also desire to consult the Court on a question held by a majority of its Members to be a question of procedure, but regarded by one of them as a question of substance requiring unanimity — e.g., whether a State not represented on the Council should be invited to take part in its proceedings. In such a case, it would be equally inadmissible that the veto of a single Member should prevent the Council from asking the Court for an advisory opinion.

If, in connection with a dispute brought before the Council under Article 15 of the Covenant, one of the parties contends that the matter lies solely within its domestic jurisdiction, within the meaning of paragraph 8, the Council might desire to consult the Court and it would clearly be inadmissible to insist that it could not proceed to do so unless all its Members, including the parties, were agreeable.

These examples would appear to establish clearly that in any case the unanimity rule could not be accepted as generally applicable to the decisions here considered.

If in the view of any Member State it did not, by the mere fact of entering the League, agree that the Council or Assembly should be free to apply to the Court for an advisory opinion, even if certain of their members dissented, it is fully entitled to urge its own interpretation of the Covenant before the Court. If the Court were asked, against the wishes of any State, for an advisory opinion affecting its interests, that State could in the course of the proceedings defend its view and see that it was duly considered. The Court has, indeed, shown in practice that it believes that it should itself consider whether it can give an advisory opinion that has been requested by the Council without the agreement of one of the parties to the dispute.

Turkey.

[Translation.] November 2nd, 1936.

The Ministry for Foreign Affairs considers it to be preferable that requests for advisory opinions should be made by unanimous vote.

MEMORANDUM BY THE INTERNATIONAL LABOUR OFFICE.

1. On September 28th, 1935, the Assembly of the League of Nations adopted a resolution calling upon the Council to examine in what circumstances and subject to what conditions the Permanent Court of International Justice may be asked for advisory opinions under Article 14 of the Covenant. In pursuance of this resolution, the Council decided on January 23rd, 1936, to invite Members of the League to state their views on the subject.

The purpose of the present memorandum is to explain the attitude of the International Labour Office to the above-mentioned resolution of the Assembly.

2. The question whether decisions of the Council or Assembly to ask the Permanent Court of International Justice for advisory opinions must be unanimous or whether a majority vote is sufficient has long been a subject of debate. The various discussions on this subject have seemed to reveal a tendency to consider the question more or less in the abstract. The Labour Office prefers to adopt a different approach to the problem, its interest in the exercise of the Court's advisory jurisdiction being practical and specific. For the Labour Organisation, indeed, this is an organic question of fundamental importance.

3. Article 37 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation (Article 423 of the Treaty of Versailles and the corresponding articles of the other Treaties of Peace) reads as follows :

> " Any question or dispute relating to the interpretation of this Part of the present Treaty or of any subsequent convention concluded by the Members in pursuance of the provisions of this Part of the present Treaty shall be referred for decision to the Permanent Court of International Justice."[1]

The effect of this article is to give the Permanent Court of International Justice a general jurisdiction over the activities of the International Labour Organisation.

4. Generally speaking, the Court's jurisdiction is of two kinds : the contentious jurisdiction, in which the Court's findings take the form of judgments, and the advisory jurisdiction, in which they take the form of opinions. Article 14 of the League Covenant provides, in the first place, that the Court " shall be competent to hear and determine any dispute of an international character which the parties thereto submit to it " ; and, in the second place, that it " may also give an advisory opinion upon any dispute or question referred to it by the Council or by the Assembly ".

5. In the exercise of its contentious jurisdiction, the Court delivers judgments deciding between the parties. But according to Article 34 of its Statute, " only States or Members of the League of Nations may be parties in cases before the Court ". It follows that the contentious jurisdiction can only be exercised in the case of a dispute between States. Otherwise recourse can only be had to the Court under the advisory procedure. Not being States, the International Labour Organisation's own organs — that is, the Governing Body of the International Labour Office or the International Labour Conference — have no direct access to the Court ; so that their only means of bringing matters before it is recourse to the advisory procedure through the Council or Assembly, in accordance with Article 14 of the Covenant.

6. Experience has shown that, in practice, the Court's jurisdiction under Article 37 of the Constitution of the Labour Organisation normally takes the advisory form. On six different occasions, indeed, the Court has already passed upon questions directly concerning the Labour Organisation, and on each of these it was the advisory procedure that was followed. This fact alone suffices to show that, to the Labour Organisation, the conditions governing votes upon requests for an advisory opinion of the Court are a matter of vital importance. The manner in which this question is settled will, indeed, largely determine the Organisation's possibility of access to its proper judge.

7. During the discussions preceding the adoption by the Assembly of the resolution of September 28th, 1935, the general issue does not appear to have been regarded as entailing a choice between two mutually exclusive courses. It was maintained that the majority principle and the unanimity principle were not absolutely irreconcilable, and that the procedure to be adopted might vary according to the circumstances of each case. This view would appear to have prevailed, as the resolution adopted by the Assembly recommends the examination of " the question in what circumstances and subject to what conditions an advisory opinion may be requested ".

However that may be, the Labour Office has no desire to express an opinion on the problem in general. It prefers to limit its remarks to the question of the exercise of the jurisdiction provided for in Article 37 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation. It proposes to show that, whatever the procedure thought to be expedient or necessary in other cases, there is no need for unanimity in the Council or Assembly in order to request the Court's opinion on the interpretation of the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation, or of the Conventions adopted thereunder.

[1] The French text of this provision reads as follows :

" Toutes questions ou difficultés relatives à l'interprétation de la présente Partie du présent Traité et des conventions ultérieurement conclues par les Membres, en vertu de ladite Partie, seront soumises à l'appréciation de la Cour permanente de Justice internationale."

8. In this connection, the most obvious argument is that, having been duly provided for, the jurisdiction defined in Article 37 of the Labour Organisation's Constitution must be allowed to function. Now under the various instruments by which these matters are at present governed, the power to consult the Court is vested exclusively in the Council and Assembly of the League. It therefore follows of necessity that, in order to obtain a decision of the Court in the form of an advisory opinion, the Labour Organisation is obliged to make application to the Council or Assembly.

On such occasions, the Council or Assembly doubtless may, of their own motion, add to the initial question any question they may choose, as their own right to consult the Court is unrestricted. But, in such cases, they could not entirely hold up such requests for an opinion, as this would be equivalent to preventing the exercise of the jurisdiction provided for in Article 37 of the Labour Organisation's Constitution. Under that article, the Council and Assembly have an organic function to perform, and it is inconceivable that they should be able, whenever they think fit, to evade the performance of a duty arising out of the very treaties by which they themselves were created.

9. The view that, in certain cases, the Court can only be asked for an advisory opinion if the Council or Assembly are unanimously in favour of such a request is to be explained by the fact that the Court's opinion is regarded as equivalent to a decision by the Council or Assembly themselves. Such is, indeed, usually the case, but it would appear to be obvious that insistence on unanimity would be quite unjustifiable when the Court's opinion is to be sought under a clause previously accepted by all members of the Council or Assembly. Now such precisely is the position in regard to a request for an opinion under Article 37 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation.

Members of the League are Members of the Labour Organisation also and, as such, are bound by Article 37 of the Organisation's Constitution. It is clear that the States Members of the Council or Assembly could not oppose the application of a provision previously accepted by and binding upon them all. It is scarcely conceivable that any State could refuse, as a Member of the Council or Assembly, to allow the exercise of a jurisdiction which it had formally accepted as a Member of the Labour Organisation. Even if, generally speaking, the unanimity principle be inherently reasonable, its application in such a case would clearly be contrary to all the canons of law.

10. It should further be pointed out that the procedure of the International Labour Organisation is not based upon the principle of unanimity. On the contrary, the Organisation's Constitution expressly provides that the decisions of the Organisation's competent organs require, according to circumstances, either a plain majority or a stated special majority. In no case does the Constitution require unanimity. The purpose of these rules would therefore be defeated if it were laid down that a unanimous decision of the Council or Assembly of the League is required to give effect to a request for an opinion formulated by a body whose decisions, as provided in the treaties, only require a majority.

11. In actual fact, the question of the conditions that should govern votes on requests for opinions to the Permanent Court of International Justice has, to some extent been linked up with the question of the accession of the United States of America to the Protocol of Signature of the Statute of the Court. In this connection, it is important to note that, since August 20th, 1934, the United States has been a member of the International Labour Organisation. It therefore takes part in the sessions of the International Labour Conference and, on account of its industrial importance, is entitled, of right, to a seat upon the Governing Body of the International Labour Office. In this way, it is enabled to discuss, on a footing of perfect equality with all other States, any request for an advisory opinion arising within the Labour Organisation.

Generally speaking, moreover, it may be observed that, by becoming a Member of the International Labour Organisation, the United States accepted the provisions of Article 37, as of all the other articles of the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation.

12. By inviting the Council to examine in what circumstances and subject to what conditions the Court may be asked for an advisory opinion, the Assembly would appear to have recognised, as stated above, that unanimity in the Council or Assembly is not, generally speaking, an indispensable condition which must be fulfilled before the advisory procedure can be set in motion.

The International Labour Office has deliberately confined itself in the present memorandum to considering the special case of requests for opinions addressed to the Court under Article 37 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation and initiated by its organs. It finds that, in this case, the Court's jurisdiction has been formally pre-established by an unambiguous text binding upon all Members of the League of Nations. Such being the case, it considers that the Council or Assembly is obliged to transmit to the Court any request for an advisory opinion under Article 37 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation, and that, in such cases, the Council's or Assembly's decisions do not require to be unanimous.

ANNEX.

REPORT PRESENTED BY THE REPRESENTATIVE OF ITALY AND ADOPTED BY THE COUNCIL ON JANUARY 23RD, 1936.

The resolution adopted by the Assembly on this subject on September 28th, 1935, was as follows :

" The Assembly,

" Whereas by its resolution of September 24th, 1928, it expressed the desire that the Council, when circumstances permitted, would have a study made of the question whether the Council or the Assembly may, by a simple majority, ask for an advisory opinion within the meaning of Article 14 of the Covenant of the League of Nations ;

" Observing that such a study has not yet been made and that uncertainty on the matter still persists and may have contributed to diminish the activity of the Permanent Court of International Justice ;

" Considering that it is desirable for the security of the legal rights of Members of the League of Nations that, in cases where it appears indispensable for the accomplishment of the task of the Council or the Assembly that advice should be obtained on some point of law, such advice should, as a general rule, be requested from the Permanent Court of International Justice :

" Expresses the desire that the Council will examine the question in what circumstances and subject to what conditions an advisory opinion may be requested under Article 14 of the Covenant."

The Assembly wishes the Council to examine the circumstances and conditions in which, in application of Article 14 of the Covenant, an advisory opinion can be asked.

The mere statement of the question shows its complexity. It is, moreover, a question which has given rise to many discussions in which very different opinions have been put forward.

It seems, then, that it would be well that the Members of the League should have the opportunity of expressing their views.

Accordingly, subject to my colleagues' observations, I feel I may propose that the Council instruct the Secretary-General to invite the Members of the League to express their views, if they so desire, by a fixed date. This date should be chosen in such a way as to permit of a serious study of the problem. To facilitate this study, the Secretary-General might draw up for the use of the Members of the League a memorandum calling their attention to the occasions on which the problem has been discussed in various organs of the League and giving references to the principal authors who have examined it.

The Norwegian Government being one of the signatories of the draft presented to the Assembly in 1935, does not feel that it is necessary to submit observations on the subject of the above-mentioned circular letter (C.L.63.1936.V.).

The Norwegian Government begs however to draw attention to the declarations made by the Norwegian delegate in the course of the discussion of this question in the First Committee of the Assembly.

(Translation) January 20th, 1937.

The Federal Council does not feel that it is necessary to present further observations on the subject of advisory opinions. As you are aware, the question was raised by Switzerland in 1928, and we had the occasion at the Assembly of 1928 and that of 1935 to express our views. We have nothing particular to add to the observations already made; perhaps only we might renew the expression of our desire that a study of this question should be undertaken by the Council of the League of Nations.

REPORT ADOPTED BY THE COMMITTEE ON APRIL 26TH, 1937.

The Committee for the International Repression of Terrorism, set up under the resolution adopted by the Council on December 10th, 1934, held its third session at Geneva from April 20th to 26th, 1937.

The following were present at this session of the Committee: [1]

accompanied by M. Simon SASSERATH, Advocate in the Brussels Court of Appeal, Professor in the Belgian Institute of Graduate Studies.

Sir John Fischer WILLIAMS, C.B.E., K.C. (United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland);
Substitute: Mr. L. S. BRASS, Assistant Legal Adviser, Home Office.

Mme. Matilde HUICI (Spain), Advocate;
Substitute: M. Cipriano RIVAS CHERIF, Consul-General of Spain at Geneva.

M. Jules BASDEVANT (France), Professor in the Faculty of Law of Paris, Legal Adviser to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the French Republic.

M. Paul SEBESTYÉN (Hungary), Ministerial Counsellor of Section in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; accompanied by M. Eugene ASZTALOS, Chief of Section in the Ministry of Justice.

M. Lucien BEKERMAN (Poland), Public Prosecutor in the Court of Cassation, Chief of Section in the Ministry of Justice.

His Excellency M. V. V. PELLA (Roumania), Roumanian Minister at The Hague, Professor in the Faculty of Law of the University of Bucharest;
Substitute: M. Slavko STOYKOVITCH, Chief Representative of the Yugoslav Government in the Mixed Arbitral Tribunals.

M. E. DELAQUIS (Switzerland), Professor in the University of Geneva.

M. Victor BROWN (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics), Secretary of Embassy.

The Committee considered the report and resolution on the international repression of terrorism (document A.72.1936.V [2]) which were adopted by the Assembly of the League on October 10th, 1936, together with the observations contained in the replies received from Governments or formulated during the discussions in the First Committee of the Assembly.[3]

In the light of the new material afforded by a study of the above-mentioned documents, the Committee proceeded to hold a general discussion on the problem of the international prevention and punishment of terrorism, and this was followed by a final review of the two draft Conventions drawn up by the Committee at its second session (January 1936).

When revising the first draft, which deals with the prevention and punishment of terrorism (Appendix I), the Committee thought it proper to define the situations in which acts of terrorism assume an international character, and which are the primary justification for international co-operation to prevent and punish such acts.

Furthermore, to meet a trend of opinion which received definite expression in the First Committee of the 1936 Assembly, the Committee embodied in the draft Convention a clause emphasising that States are under an obligation—imposed, indeed, by international law—themselves to refrain from any act designed to encourage terrorist activities directed against the safety and public order of any other State.

With the object of avoiding difficulties in the interpretation of the Convention and defining the exact sense and scope of some of its clauses, the Committee found it necessary to lay down in a general provision what is to be understood by " acts of terrorism " within the meaning of the proposed Convention.

With regard to the clauses providing for various forms of co-operation between States in the prevention and punishment of terrorism, the Committee came to the conclusion that certain amendments were necessary in order to make it clearer that the legal rules held by the different contracting parties as to political offences are not affected.

The Committee's attention was also drawn to the question of civil war. The Committee took the view that this is a question which is clearly outside the scope of the Convention.

The other amendments to the original draft Convention are due to the Committee's desire either to make the text clearer or to limit the scope of the Convention to those situations of which it is absolutely to take account if acts of terrorism of an international character are to be effectually prevented and punished.

In revising the second draft Convention—that for the creation of an International Criminal Court (Appendix II)—the Committee was chiefly influenced by the desire expressed by the First Committee of the 1936 Assembly. It is plain from the new amendments that States which become parties to this Convention cannot rely upon the International Criminal Court in their relations with States which are parties only to the first Convention (that for the prevention and punishment of terrorism).

The other amendments to the second Convention are mainly due to the observations made by various Governments on the organisation and working of such a Court.

In submitting the present report and the two draft Conventions appended embodying the results of its work, the Committee expresses the hope that it may have provided a useful basis for the deliberations of the Diplomatic Conference which, in accordance with the resolution adopted by the Assembly of the League on October 10th, 1936, is to meet in 1937.

Chairman.

Appendix I.

DRAFT CONVENTION FOR THE PREVENTION AND PUNISHMENT OF TERRORISM.

[Translation.]

Article 1.

1. Acts of terrorism within the meaning of the present Convention are criminal acts which are directed against a State and which are intended or calculated to create a state of terror among individuals, groups of persons or the general public.

2. The object of the present Convention is to ensure co-operation between the High Contracting Parties for the prevention and punishment of such acts when they are of an international character, it being the duty of States to refrain from any act designed to encourage terrorist activities directed against the safety and public order of another State.

Article 2.

Each of the High Contracting Parties should make the following acts committed on its own territory criminal offences if they are directed against another High Contracting Party and if they constitute acts of terrorism within the meaning of Article 1:

(1) Any act intended to cause death or grievous bodily harm or loss of liberty to:

(a) Heads of States, persons exercising the prerogatives of the head of the State, their hereditary or designated successors;

(b) The wives or husbands of the above-mentioned persons;

(c) Persons charged with public functions or holding public positions when the act is directed against them in their public capacity.

(2) Wilful destruction of or damage to public property or property devoted to a public purpose belonging to or subject to the authority of another High Contracting Party.

(3) Any wilful act calculated to endanger the lives of members of the public.

(4) The manufacture, obtaining, or supplying of arms, ammunition, explosives or harmful substances with a view to the commission in any country whatsoever of an offence falling within the present Article.

(5) Any attempt to commit any of the acts falling within the present Article.

Article 3.

1. Each of the High Contracting Parties should also make the following actions criminal offences when they are committed on his own territory with a view to acts of terrorism directed against another High Contracting Party, whatever the country in which the acts of terrorism are to be carried into execution:

(a) Any agreement to commit any of the acts mentioned in Article 2 (Nos. (1) to (4));

(b) Any direct public incitement, whether successful or not;

(c) Any successful private incitement;

(d) Any wilful complicity;

(e) Any help given towards the commission of such an act.

2. Acts of participation in the offences falling within the present Convention shall be treated as separate offences when the persons committing them can only be brought to trial in different countries.

Article 4.

Without prejudice to the characterisation of offences and to other special provisions of national law relating to the persons and property mentioned in Article 2, no High Contracting Party shall make any distinction as regards the protection afforded by criminal law between acts, falling under Articles 2 and 3, directed against the Party itself and similar acts directed against another High Contracting Party.

Article 5.

1. In countries where the principle of the international recognition of previous convictions is accepted, foreign convictions for any of the acts mentioned in Articles 2 and 3 will, within the conditions prescribed by the domestic law, be taken into account for the purpose of establishing habitual criminality.

2. Such convictions will, further, in the case of High Contracting Parties whose law recognises foreign convictions, be taken into account, with or without special proceedings, for the purpose of imposing, in the manner provided by that legislation, incapacities, disqualifications or interdictions whether in the sphere of public or of private law.

Article 6.

In so far as parties civiles are admitted under the domestic law, foreign parties civiles, including, in proper cases, a High Contracting Party, should be entitled to all rights allowed to nationals by the law of the country in which the case is tried.

Article 7.

1. Without prejudice to the provisions of paragraph 4 below, the acts set out in Articles 2 and 3 shall be deemed to be included as extradition crimes in any extradition treaty which has been, or may hereafter be, concluded between any of the High Contracting Parties.

2. The High Contracting Parties who do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall henceforward, without prejudice to the provisions of paragraph 4 below and subject to reciprocity, recognise the acts set out in Articles 2 and 3 as extradition crimes as between themselves.

3. For the purposes of the present Article, any act specified in Articles 2 and 3, if committed in the territory of the High Contracting Party against whom it is directed, shall also be deemed to be an extradition crime.

4. The obligation to grant extradition under the present Article shall be subject to any limitations recognised by the law of the country to which application is made.

Article 8.

1. When the principle of the extradition of nationals is not recognised by a High Contracting Party, nationals who have returned to the territory of their own country after the commission abroad of an offence mentioned in Articles 2 or 3 should be prosecuted and punished in the same manner as if the offence had been committed in their own country, even in a case where the offender has acquired his nationality after the commission of the offence.

2. The provisions of the present Article shall not apply if, in similar circumstances, the extradition of a foreigner cannot be granted.

Article 9.

Foreigners who are on the territory of a High Contracting Party and who have committed abroad any of the acts set out in Articles 2 and 3 should be prosecuted and punished as though the act had been committed in the territory of that High Contracting Party, if the following conditions are fulfilled—namely, that:

(a) Extradition has been demanded and could not be granted for a reason not connected with the act itself;

(b) The law of the country of refuge recognises the jurisdiction of its own courts in respect of offences committed abroad by foreigners;

(c) The foreigner is a national of a country which recognises the jurisdiction of its own courts in respect of offences committed abroad by foreigners.

Article 10.

The provisions of Articles 8 and 9 shall also apply to acts referred to in Articles 2 and 3 which have been committed in the territory of the High Contracting Party against which they were directed.

As regards the application of Articles 8 and 9, the High Contracting Parties do not undertake to pass a sentence exceeding the maximum sentence prescribed by the law of the country where the offence was committed.

Article 11.

Each High Contracting Party should take on his own territory appropriate measures to prevent any activity contrary to the purpose of the present Convention.

Article 12

1. The carrying, possession and distribution of firearms, other than smooth-bore sporting-guns, and of ammunition and explosives should be subjected to regulation, and it should be a punishable offence to transfer, sell or distribute them to any person who does not hold such licence or make such declaration as may be required by the domestic legislation concerning the possession and carrying of such articles.

2. Manufacturers of firearms, other than smooth-bore sporting-guns, should be required to mark each arm with a serial number and factory mark permitting it to be identified, and to keep a register of the names and addresses of purchasers.

Article 13.

1. The following acts should be punishable:

(a) Any fraudulent manufacture or alteration of passports or other equivalent documents;

(b) Bringing into the country, obtaining or being in possession of such forged or falsified documents knowing them to be forged or falsified;

(c) Obtaining such documents by means of false declarations or documents;

(d) Using any such documents which are forged or falsified or were made out for a person other than the bearer.

2. The wilful issue of passports, other equivalent documents, or visas by competent officials to persons known not to have the right thereto under the laws or regulations applicable, with the object of assisting any activity contrary to the purpose of the present Convention, should also be punishable.

3. The provisions of the present Article shall apply irrespective of the national or foreign character of the document.

Article 14.

1. The results of the investigation of offences provided for in Articles 2, 3 and 13 should in each country and within the framework of the law of that country be centralised in an appropriate service.

2. Such service should be in close contact:

(a) With the police authorities of the country;
(b) With the corresponding services in other countries.

3. It should furthermore bring together all information calculated to facilitate the prevention and punishment of the acts mentioned in Articles 2, 3 and 13 and should, as far as possible, keep in close contact with the judicial authorities of the country.

Article 15.

Each service, so far as it considers it desirable to do so, should notify to the services of the other countries, giving all necessary particulars:

(a) Any act mentioned in Articles 2 and 3, even if it has not been carried into effect, such notification to be accompanied by descriptions, copies and photographs;

(b) Any search for, any prosecution, arrest, conviction or expulsion of persons guilty of acts dealt with in the present Convention, the movements of such persons and any pertinent information with regard to them, as well as their description, finger-prints and photographs;

(c) Discovery of documents, arms, appliances or other objects connected with acts mentioned in Articles 2, 3, 12 and 13.

Article 16.

1. The High Contracting Parties shall be bound to execute letters of request in accordance with their domestic law and practice.

2. The transmission of letters of request relating to offences referred to in the present Convention should be effected:

(a) By direct communication between the judicial authorities; or

(b) By direct correspondence between the Ministers of Justice of the two countries, or by direct communication from the authority of the country making the request to the Minister of Justice of the country to which the request is made; or

(c) Through the diplomatic or consular representative of the country making the request in the country to which the request is made; this representative shall send the letters of request direct to the competent judicial authority, or to the authority indicated by the Government of the country to which the request is made, and shall receive direct from such authority the papers constituting the execution of the letters of request.

3. In cases (a) and (c), a copy of the letters of request shall always be sent simultaneously to the superior authority of the country to which application is made.

4. Unless otherwise agreed, the letters of request shall be drawn up in the language of the authority making the request, provided always that the country to which the request is made may require a translation in its own language, certified correct by the authority making the request.

5. Each High Contracting Party shall notify to each of the other High Contracting Parties the method or methods of transmission mentioned above which he will recognise for the letters of request of the latter High Contracting Party.

6. Until such notification is made by a High Contracting Party, his existing procedure in regard to letters of request shall remain in force.

7. Execution of letters of request shall not give rise to a claim for reimbursement of charges or expenses of any nature whatever other than expenses of experts.

8. Nothing in the present Article shall be construed as an undertaking on the part of the High Contracting Parties to adopt in criminal matters any form or methods of proof contrary to their laws.

Article 17.

The participation of a High Contracting Party in the present Convention shall not be interpreted as affecting that Party's attitude on the general question of the limits of criminal jurisdiction as a question of international law.

Article 18.

The present Convention does not affect the principle that, subject to the acts in question not being allowed to escape punishment, the characterisation of the various acts dealt with in the present Convention and the determination of the applicable penalties and of the methods of prosecution and trial depend in each country upon the general rules of the domestic law. It, further, does not impair the right of the High Contracting Parties to make such rules as they consider proper regarding the effect of mitigating circumstances, the right of pardon and the right of amnesty.

Article 19.

If any dispute should arise between the High Contracting Parties relating to the interpretation or application of the present Convention, and if such dispute has not been satisfactorily solved by diplomatic means, it shall be settled in conformity with the provisions in force between the parties concerning the settlement of international disputes.

If such provisions should not exist between the parties to the dispute, the parties shall refer the dispute to an arbitral or judicial procedure. If no agreement is reached on the choice of another court, the parties shall refer the dispute to the Permanent Court of International Justice, if they are all parties to the Protocol of December 16th, 1920, relating to the Statute of that Court; and if they are not all parties to that Protocol, they shall refer the dispute to a court of arbitration constituted in accordance with the Convention of The Hague of October 18th, 1907, for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes.

Article 20.

1. The present Convention, of which the French and English texts shall be both authentic, shall bear to-day's date. Until . . . it shall be open for signature on behalf of any Member of the League of Nations and on behalf of any non-member State represented at the Conference which drew up the present Convention or to which a copy thereof is communicated for this purpose by the Council of the League of Nations.

2. The present Convention shall be ratified. The instruments of ratification shall be transmitted to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations to be deposited in the archives of the League; the Secretary-General shall notify their deposit to all the Members of the League and to the non-member States mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

Article 21.

1. After the . . . ., the present Convention shall be open to accession by any Member of the League of Nations and any of the non-member States referred to in Article 20 on whose behalf the Convention has not been signed.

2. The instruments of accession shall be transmitted to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations to be deposited in the archives of the League; the Secretary-General shall notify their receipt to all the Members of the League and to the non-member States referred to in Article 20.

Article 22.

Any Member of the League of Nations or non-member State which is prepared to ratify the Convention under the second paragraph of Article 20, or to accede to the Convention under Article 21, but desires to be allowed to make reservations with regard to the application of the Convention, may so inform the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who shall forthwith communicate such reservations to all the Members of the League and non-member States on whose behalf ratifications or accessions have been deposited and enquire whether they have any objection thereto. Should the reservation be formulated within two years from the entry into force of the Convention, the same enquiry shall be addressed to Members of the League and non-member States whose signature of the Convention has not yet been followed by ratification. If, within six months from the date of the Secretary-General's communication, no objection to the reservation has been made, it shall be treated as accepted by the High Contracting Parties.

Article 23.

Ratification of or accession to the present Convention by any High Contracting Party implies an assurance by him that his legislation and his administrative organisation are in conformity with the rules contained in the Convention.

Article 24.

1. Any High Contracting Party may declare, at the time of signature, ratification or accession, that, in accepting the present Convention, he is not assuming any obligation in respect of all or any of his colonies, protectorates, oversea territories, territories under his suzerainty or territories in respect of which a mandate has been entrusted to him; the present Convention shall, in that case, not be applicable to the territories named in such declaration.

2. Any High Contracting Party may subsequently notify the Secretary-General of the League of Nations that he desires the present Convention to apply to all or any of the territories in respect of which the declaration provided for in the preceding paragraph has been made. The Convention shall, in that case, apply to all the territories named in such notification ninety days after the receipt thereof by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

3. Any High Contracting Party may at any time declare that he desires the present Convention to cease to apply to all or any of his colonies, protectorates, oversea territories, territories under his suzerainty or territories in respect of which a mandate has been entrusted to him. The Convention shall, in that case, cease to apply to the territories named in such declaration one year after the receipt of this declaration by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

4. The Secretary-General of the League of Nations shall communicate to all the Members of the League of Nations and to the non-member States referred to in Article 20 the declarations and notifications received in virtue of the present Article.

Article 25.

The present Convention shall, in accordance with the provisions of Article 18 of the Covenant, be registered by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations on the ninetieth day after the receipt by the Secretary-General of the . . . ratification or accession.

The Convention shall come into force on the date of such registration.

Article 26.

Each ratification or accession taking place after the deposit of the . . . instrument of ratification or accession shall take effect on the ninetieth day following the date on which the instrument of ratification or accession is received by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

Article 27.

A request for the revision of the present Convention may be made at any time by any High Contracting Party by means of a notification to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

Such notification shall be communicated by the Secretary-General to all the other High Contracting Parties and, if it is supported by at least a third of those Parties, the High Contracting Parties undertake to hold a conference for the revision of the Convention.

Article 28.

The present Convention may be denounced on behalf of any High Contracting Party by a notification in writing addressed to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who shall inform all the Members of the League and the non-member States referred to in Article 20. Such denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of its receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, and shall be operative only in respect of the High Contracting Party on whose behalf it was made.

IN FAITH WHEREOF the Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention.

DONE at Geneva, ... in a single copy, which will be deposited in the archives of the Secretariat of the League of Nations; a certified true copy thereof shall be transmitted to all the Members of the League of Nations and all the non-member States referred to in Article 20.

Appendix II.

DRAFT CONVENTION FOR THE CREATION OF AN INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT.

[Translation]

Article 1.

An International Criminal Court for the trial, as hereinafter provided, of persons accused of an offence dealt with in the Convention for Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism is hereby established.

Article 2.

The Court shall be a permanent body, but shall sit only when it is seized of proceedings for an offence within its jurisdiction.

Article 3.

1. In the cases referred to in Articles 2, 3, 8 and 9 of the Convention for Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism, each High Contracting Party to the present Convention shall be entitled, instead of prosecuting before his own tribunal, to send the accused for trial before the Court.

2. A High Contracting Party shall further be entitled in the cases mentioned in Article 7 of the said Convention, instead of extraditing, to send the accused for trial before the Court if the State demanding extradition is also a Party to the present Convention.

3. The provisions of the present Article shall be applicable only if the accused is a national of a State which is a Party to the present Convention and if the offence is directed against the interests of a High Contracting Party to the present Convention.

Article 4.

The Court shall be composed of judges chosen from among jurists who are acknowledged authorities on criminal law and who are or have been members of courts of criminal jurisdiction or possess the qualifications required for such appointments in their own countries.

Article 5.

The Court shall consist of five regular judges and five deputy judges, each belonging to a different nationality, but so that the regular judges and deputy judges shall be nationals of the High Contracting Parties.

Article 6.

1. Any Member of the League of Nations and any non-member State in respect of which the present Convention is in force may nominate not more than two candidates for appointment as judges of the Court.

2. The Council of the League of Nations shall be requested to choose the regular and deputy judges from the persons so nominated.

Article 7.

1. Judges shall hold office for ten years.

2. Every two years, one regular and one deputy judge shall retire.

3. For the first period of ten years, the order of retirement shall be determined under the authority of the Council of the League of Nations by drawing lots.

4. Judges may be re-appointed.

5. Judges shall continue to discharge their duties until their places have been filled.

6. Nevertheless, judges, though replaced, shall finish any cases which they have begun.

Article 8.

A judge appointed in place of a judge whose period of appointment has not expired shall hold the appointment for the remainder of his predecessor's term.

Article 9.

1. Deputy judges shall be called upon to sit in the order laid down in a list.

2. The list shall be prepared by the Court and shall have regard, first, to priority of appointment and, secondly, to age.

Article 10.

1. Members of the Court may not participate in the settlement of any case on which they have previously been engaged in any capacity whatsoever. In case of doubt, the Court shall decide.

2. Every member of the Court shall, before taking up his duties, give a solemn undertaking in open Court that he will exercise his powers impartially and conscientiously.

Article 11.

1. Any vacancy, whether occurring through the expiration of a judge's term of office or for any other cause, shall be filled as provided in Article 6.

2. In the event of the resignation of a member of the Court, the resignation shall take effect on notification being received by the Registrar.

Article 12.

A member of the Court cannot be dismissed unless in the unanimous opinion of the other members he has ceased to fulfil the required conditions.

Article 13.

The High Contracting Parties shall grant the members of the Court diplomatic privileges and immunities when engaged on the business of the Court.

Article 14.

1. The Court shall elect its President and Vice-President for two years; they may be re-elected.

2. The work of the Registry of the Court shall be performed by the Registry of the Permanent Court of International Justice, if that Court consents.

Article 15.

The seat of the Court shall be established at The Hague. For any particular case, the President may take the opinion of the Court and the Court may decide to meet elsewhere.

Article 16.

A High Contracting Party who avails himself of the right to send a person for trial before the Court shall notify the President through the Registry.

Article 17.

The Court shall apply the substantive criminal law of the State on the territory of which the offence was committed. Any dispute as to what substantive criminal law is applicable shall be decided by the Court.

Article 18.

If, for some special reason, a member of the Court considers that he should not sit to hear a particular case, he shall so notify the President as soon as he has been informed that the Court is seized of that case.

Article 19.

1. The presence of five members shall be necessary to enable the Court to sit.

2. If the presence of five regular judges is not secured, the necessary number shall be made up by calling upon the deputy judges in their order on the list.

Article 20.

If the Court has to apply, in accordance with Article 17, the law of a State of which no sitting judge is a national, the Court may invite a jurist who is an acknowledged authority on such law to sit with it in a consultative capacity as a legal assessor.

Article 21.

As soon as the Court is seized of a case, the President of the Court shall notify the State against which the offence was directed, and the State on the territory of which the offence was committed. These States, and any other States, may put before the Court the results of their investigations and any evidence and objects connected with the crime which they have in their possession; these shall be included in the file of the case.

Article 22.

1. The Court shall be seized of a case by an indictment issuing from a High Contracting Party.

2. The right to conduct the prosecution shall rest with the State against which the offence was committed. Failing that State, it shall belong to the State on the territory of which the offence was committed, and failing also that latter State, then to the State by which the Court was seized.

3. The State which seizes the Court shall at the same time name the agent by whom it will be represented.

4. The Court must not proceed further with the case if the charge is withdrawn.

Article 23.

Any State or person injured by an offence may constitute itself or himself partie civile before the Court, inspect the file, submit a statement of its or his case to the Court, and take part in the debates.

Article 24.

The file of the case and the statement of the partie civile shall be communicated to the person who is before the Court for trial.

Article 25.

The parties may propose the hearing of witnesses and experts by the Court, which shall be free to decide whether they shall be summoned and heard. The Court may always, even of its own motion, hear other witnesses and experts.

Article 26.

1. The Court shall decide whether a person who has been sent before it for trial shall be placed or remain under arrest. Where necessary, it shall determine on what conditions he may be provisionally set at liberty.

2. The State on the territory of which the Court is sitting shall place at the Court's disposal a suitable place of internment and the necessary staff of warders for the custody of the accused.

Article 27.

Any letters of request which the Court considers it necessary to have despatched shall at its demand be addressed by the High Contracting Party on the territory of which the Court is sitting to the State competent to give effect to such letters of request.

Article 28.

No examination of the person sent to the Court for trial, no hearing of witnesses or experts and no confrontation may take place before the Court except in the presence of the counsel for that person, the representatives of the State against which the offence was directed or on the territory of which the offence was committed or which laid the case before the Court and the representatives of the parties civiles, or after due summons to such persons to be present.

Article 29.

1. Accused persons may be defended by advocates belonging to a Bar.

2. If provision is not made for the conduct of the defence by a barrister chosen by the accused, the Court shall assign to each accused person a counsel selected from advocates belonging to a Bar.

Article 30.

1. The hearings before the Court shall be public.

2. Nevertheless, the Court may, by a reasoned and unanimous judgment, decide that the hearing shall take place in camera. Judgment shall always be pronounced at a public hearing.

Article 31.

The Court shall sit in private to consider its judgment.

Article 32.

The decisions of the Court shall be by majority of the judges.

Article 33.

Every judgment or order of the Court shall state the reasons therefor and be read at a public hearing by the President.

Article 34.

The Court may not entertain charges against any person except the person sent before it for trial, or try any accused person for any offences other than those for which he has been sent for trial.

Article 35.

1. The Court may sentence the persons sent before it to restore property or to pay damages.

2. The Court shall decide whether any restitution or confiscation of any object is to be made.

3. High Contracting Parties in whose territory objects to be restored or property belonging to convicted persons is situated shall be bound to take all the measures provided by their own laws to ensure the execution of the sentences.

4. The provisions of the preceding paragraph shall also apply to cases in which pecuniary penalties imposed by the Court or costs of proceedings have to be recovered.

Article 36.

1. Sentences involving loss of liberty shall be executed by the High Contracting Party which shall be designated by the Court.

2. The Court shall determine the way in which any fines shall be dealt with.

Article 37.

If sentence of death has been pronounced, the State designated by the Court to execute the sentence shall be entitled to substitute therefor the most severe penalty in its national legislation involving loss of liberty.

Article 38.

The right of pardon shall be exercised by the State which has to enforce the penalty. It shall first consult the President of the Court.

Article 39.

1. Against convictions pronounced by the Court, no proceedings other than an application for revision shall be allowable.

2. The Court shall determine in its rules the cases in which an application for revision may be made.

3. The States mentioned in Article 22, and the persons mentioned in Article 29, shall have the right to ask for a revision.

Article 40.

1. The salaries of the judges shall be payable by the States of which they are nationals on a scale fixed by the High Contracting Parties.

2. There shall be created by contributions from the High Contracting Parties a common fund from which the costs of the proceedings and other expenses involved in the trial of cases shall be defrayed, subject to recovery from the accused if he is convicted. The special allowance to the Registrar and the expenses of the Registry shall be met out of this fund.

Article 41.

The Court's archives shall be in the charge of the Registrar.

Article 42.

The Court shall establish regulations to govern its practice and procedure.

Article 43.

1. The Court shall decide any questions as to its own jurisdiction arising during the hearing of a case; it shall for this purpose apply the provisions of the present Convention and of the Convention for Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism and the general principles of law.

2. Should a High Contracting Party, not being the Party who sent the case in question for trial to the Court, dispute the extent of the Court's jurisdiction in relation to the jurisdiction of his own national courts, this issue shall be treated as arising between such High Contracting Party and the High Contracting Party who sent the case for trial to the Court, and shall be settled as provided in Article 45.

Article 44.

1. The representatives of the High Contracting Parties shall meet with a view to taking all necessary decisions concerning:

(a) The election of judges;

(b) The organisation of the Registry;

(c) The constitution and administration of the common fund, the division among the High Contracting Parties of the sums considered necessary to create and maintain such fund and, in general, all financial and administrative questions bearing on the establishment and the working of the Court;

(d) The organisation of the meetings referred to below in paragraph 3.

2. The Government of the Netherlands shall be requested to convene this meeting as soon as possible after the present Convention enters into force.

3. The Registrar of the Court shall convene subsequent meetings in conformity with the rules established to that effect.

4. On all questions of procedure that may arise at the meetings referred to in paragraphs 2 and 3, decisions shall be taken by a majority of the High Contracting Parties represented at the meeting.

Article 45.

If any dispute should arise between the High Contracting Parties relating to the interpretation or application of the present Convention, and if such dispute has not been satisfactorily solved by diplomatic means, it shall be settled in conformity with the provisions in force between the Parties concerning the settlement of international disputes.

If such provisions should not exist between the parties to the dispute, the parties shall refer the dispute to an arbitral or judicial procedure. If no agreement is reached on the choice of another court, the parties shall refer the dispute to the Permanent Court of International Justice, if they are all parties to the Protocol of December 16th, 1920, relating to the Statute of that Court; and if they are not all parties to that Protocol, they shall refer the dispute to a court of arbitration constituted in accordance with the Convention of The Hague of October 18th, 1907, for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes.

Article 46.

1. The present Convention, of which the French and English texts shall both be authentic, shall bear to-day's date. Until . . . it shall be open for signature on behalf of any Member of the League of Nations or any non-member State on whose behalf the Convention for Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism has been signed.

2. The present Convention shall be ratified. The instruments of ratification shall be transmitted to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations to be deposited in the archives of the League. The Secretary-General shall notify their deposit to all the Members of the League and to the non-member States mentioned in the preceding paragraph. The deposit of an instrument of ratification of the present Convention shall be conditional on the deposit by the same High Contracting Party of an instrument of ratification of or accession to the Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism.

Article 47.

1. After . . ., the present Convention shall be open to accession by any Member of the League of Nations and any non-member State which has not signed this Convention. Nevertheless, the deposit of an instrument of accession shall be conditional on the deposit by the same High Contracting Party of an instrument of ratification of or accession to the Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism.

2. The instruments of accession shall be transmitted to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations to be deposited in the archives of the League; the Secretary-General shall notify their deposit to all the Members of the League and to the non-member States referred to in Article 46 and the first paragraph of the present Article.

Article 48.

1. Any High Contracting Party may declare, at the time of signature, ratification or accession, that, in accepting the present Convention, he is not assuming any obligation in respect of all or any of his colonies, protectorates or oversea territories, territories under his suzerainty or territories in respect of which a mandate has been entrusted to him; the present Convention shall, in that case, not be applicable to the territories named in such declaration.

2. Any High Contracting Party may subsequently notify the Secretary-General of the League of Nations that he desires the present Convention to apply to all or any of the territories in respect of which the declaration provided for in the preceding paragraph has been made. The Convention shall, in that case, apply to all the territories named in such notification ninety days after the receipt thereof by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

3. Any High Contracting Party may, at any time, declare that he desires the present Convention to cease to apply to all or any of his colonies, protectorates, oversea territories, territories under his suzerainty or territories in respect of which a mandate has been entrusted to him. The Convention shall, in that case, cease to apply to the territories named in such declaration one year after the receipt of this declaration by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

4. The Secretary-General of the League of Nations shall communicate to all the Members of the League of Nations and to the non-member States mentioned in Articles 46 and 47 the declarations and notifications received in virtue of the present Article.

Article 49.

The present Convention shall, in accordance with the provisions of Article 18 of the Covenant, be registered by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations on the ninetieth day following the receipt by the Secretary-General of the ... instrument of ratification or accession.

The Convention shall come into force on the date of such registration. Nevertheless, its entry into force shall be subject to the entry into force of the Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism.

Article 50.

Each ratification or accession taking place after the deposit of the ... instrument of ratification or accession shall take effect on the ninetieth day following the date on which the instrument of ratification or accession is received by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations.

Article 51.

A request for the revision of the present Convention may be made at any time by any High Contracting Party by a notification to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations. Such notification shall be communicated by the Secretary-General to all the other High Contracting Parties and, if it is supported by at least a third of those Parties, the High Contracting Parties undertake to hold a conference for the revision of the Convention.

Article 52.

1. The present Convention may be denounced on behalf of any High Contracting Party by a notification in writing addressed to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, who shall inform all the Members of the League and the non-member States referred to in Articles 46 and 47. Such denunciation shall take effect one year after the date of its receipt by the Secretary-General of the League of Nations, and shall be operative only in respect of the High Contracting Party on whose behalf it was made.

2. Denunciation of the Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of Terrorism shall ipso facto involve denunciation of the present Convention.

Article 53.

A case brought before the Court before the denunciation of the present Convention, or the making of a declaration as provided in Article 48, paragraph 3, shall nevertheless continue to be heard and judgment be given by the Court.

IN FAITH WHEREOF the Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention.

DONE at Geneva, ..., in a single copy, which shall be deposited in the archives of the Secretariat of the League of Nations; a certified true copy thereof shall be transmitted to all the Members of the League of Nations and all the non-member States represented at the Conference.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

CONDITIONS OF VOTING REQUESTS FOR ADVISORY OPINIONS FROM THE PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE

OBSERVATIONS SUBMITTED BY THE GOVERNMENT OF CHILE

June 2nd, 1937.

In your communication C.L.63.1936.V, you ask to be informed of my Government's views regarding the question in what circumstances and subject to what conditions, the Permanent Court of International Justice may be asked for an advisory opinion under Article 14 of the Covenant of the League of Nations. That Article provides that the Court may give an advisory opinion upon any dispute or question referred to it by the Council or by the Assembly.

My Government believes that, according to the terms of your enquiry, the possibility of a reform of Article 14 is not contemplated. According to the text at present in force, advisory opinions may only be requested by the Council or the Assembly and the question is whether such requests require a unanimous decision or whether a mere majority decision will suffice. That means that the problem to be settled is whether a request for an advisory opinion is a matter of procedure or a matter of substance. Plausible arguments have been advanced in support of both these views.

In 1920, during the discussion of the reform proposals put forward by the delegation of the Argentine Republic, under which the Court would have been empowered to deliver advisory opinions at the request of the Governments of States Members of the League of Nations, the distinguished British jurist Sir Cecil Hurst argued that the adoption of the Argentine amendment would have the effect of introducing, indirectly, compulsory jurisdiction in virtue of unilateral action. It was this objection that led to the rejection of the Argentine amendment. My Government nevertheless considers that this objection, like others which were raised, is unfounded. It considers that, in the very nature of things, an advisory opinion has no binding force but is merely one among a number of means of throwing light upon a given question, and thus making it easier to form an opinion on that question. An advisory opinion delivered at the request of one or several Governments would not therefore be binding.

My Government's views on the subject of conciliation have been set out in a Memorandum of May 18th, 1936, which has been published and communicated to the Governments of friendly countries. The Memorandum confirms and corroborates, in the matter of conciliation, the opinion set out above-namely, that an advisory opinion delivered by the Permanent Court of International Justice at the request of one or several Governments can have no binding force.

In the Memorandum, indeed, my Government maintains that if a State claims, and a Commission of Investigation and Conciliation agrees, that a dispute relates to a question which, under international law, is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of the State concerned, the Commission will record this fact and make no recommendation as to the settlement of the dispute. The Memorandum adds, however, that, either at the request of the State concerned or motu propio, the Commission may apply to the Permanent Court of International Justice for an advisory opinion on the matter, and that to permit of such a course the States should propose the amendment of the instruments in force as regards the competence of the Court to deliver such opinions.

As my Government considers they have no binding force but are nevertheless of very great value as a means of elucidating international difficulties, and may be of great assistance in defining such difficulties and even in facilitating their settlement, it inclines to the view that advisory opinions may be requested in virtue of a mere majority decision.

SOCIÉTÉ DES NATIONS

CONDITIONS DE VOTE DES DEMANDES D'AVIS CONSULTATIF ADRESSÉES A LA COUR PERMANENTE DE JUSTICE INTERNATIONALE

OBSERVATIONS DU GOUVERNEMENT DU CHILI[1]

Le 2 juin 1937.

Dans votre communication C.L.63.1936.V, vous exprimez le désir de connaître l'opinion de mon Gouvernement sur les hypothèses et conditions nécessaires pour demander un avis consultatif à la Cour permanente de Justice internationale quand il s'agit d'appliquer les dispositions de l'article 14 du Pacte de la Société des Nations. Selon cet article, la Cour permanente donnera des avis consultatifs sur tout différend ou tout point dont la saisira le Conseil ou l'Assemblée.

Mon Gouvernement croit que les termes de la consultation excluent la possibilité de réformer l'article 14 du Pacte. D'après le texte en vigueur à présent, ces avis consultatifs peuvent être demandés seulement par le Conseil ou l'Assemblée et il s'agit de savoir si, pour les demander, l'unanimité est nécessaire ou si une simple majorité suffit. En somme, le problème qui se pose est d'établir si la demande d'un avis consultatif est une question de procédure ou une question de fond. Les deux thèses ont été soutenues avec des arguments plausibles.

En 1920, lors de la discussion du projet de réforme présenté par la délégation de la République Argentine qui accordait à la Cour le droit d'émettre des avis consultatifs à la requête des gouvernements des Etats membres de la Société des Nations, l'éminent juriste britannique sir Cecil Hurst a dit que l'adoption de l'amendement argentin aurait pour effet d'introduire, par voie indirecte, la juridiction obligatoire d'une action unilatérale. C'est en vertu de cette objection que l'amendement argentin a été rejeté. Mon Gouvernement croit, néanmoins, que cette objection ainsi que d'autres qui ont été formulées ne sont pas justifiées. Il croit qu'un avis consultatif, par sa nature même, n'est pas obligatoire, mais constitue un élément illustratif, comme un autre quelconque, ayant pour objet de contribuer à former une opinion sur une question déterminée. Un avis consultatif donné à la requête d'un ou de plusieurs gouvernements ne serait donc pas obligatoire.

La doctrine de mon Gouvernement en ce qui concerne la conciliation a été exposée dans un mémorandum du 18 mai 1936, qui a été publié et communiqué aux gouvernements des pays amis. Le point de vue de mon Gouvernement, tel qu'il apparaît dans ce mémorandum, confirme et corrobore, dans le domaine de la conciliation, la thèse que je viens d'énoncer, à savoir, qu'un avis consultatif donné par la Cour permanente de Justice internationale à la requête d'un ou de plusieurs gouvernements ne saurait avoir de force obligatoire.

En effet, dans le mémorandum en question, mon Gouvernement déclare que, si un Etat prétend, avec l'assentiment d'une commission d'investigation et de conciliation, que le désaccord porte sur une question que le droit international laisse à la compétence exclusive de cet Etat, la commission de conciliation et d'investigation en prendra acte et ne recommandera aucune solution. Néanmoins — ajoute le mémorandum — la commission, à la requête de l'Etat intéressé ou motu proprio, pourra demander, à cet égard, un avis consultatif de la Cour permanente de Justice internationale, et pour que cela soit possible les Etats devraient proposer l'amendement des pactes en vigueur en ce qui concerne la compétence de la Cour permanente de Justice internationale pour donner ces avis consultatifs.

Etant donné que mon Gouvernement considère qu'ils n'ont pas de force obligatoire, mais sont toutefois d'une très grande utilité pour éclaircir les difficultés internationales et peuvent fournir des éléments précieux pour les préciser et même pour leur trouver une solution, il serait disposé à appuyer la thèse de la majorité, pure et simple, pour les demander.

1937. V. 3.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

The present document is a continuation of the document which was published on September 29th, 1936, under the number A.33.1936.V (Legal.1936.V.8), and which contained the communications received down to that date from Governments and women's international organisations in accordance with the Assembly's resolution of September 27th, 1935, regarding the Status of Women.[1]

In the Assembly's resolution, a distinction was drawn between :

(a) " The question of conditions of employment " which the Assembly declared to be " a matter which properly falls within the sphere of the International Labour Organisation ", and

(b) " The question of the political and civil status of women ".

It was the second question only which the Assembly resolved to refer to the Governments with a request for their observations and for information as to the status of women under their respective national laws, and which, at the same time, it invited the women's international organisations to continue to study with a view to drawing up statements for its consideration.

The communications received from Governments and organisations have been filed in their entirety and can be consulted at the Secretariat. In editing them for publication in the present document the following principles have been applied :

(i) Wherever it could conveniently be separated from the main body of the communication, detailed information regarding the " conditions of employment " of women has been omitted from the present document and placed at the disposal of the International Labour Organisation. This rule, which appeared to be the necessary result of the Assembly's decision,[2] has led to the exclusion of a certain amount of material dealing with laws and regulations which exclude women from dangerous or unhealthy occupations or prescribe conditions for their employment in commerce, industry and agriculture, or dealing with women's wages, with the comparative succcess of men and women in obtaining particular forms of employment, and so forth.

(ii) On the other hand, in order to avoid any danger of too restrictive an interpretation of the Assembly's decision, information as to whether women have the legal right to enter public services or engage in particular professions or kinds of occupation, and information as to the position of women in regard to social legislation, have been reproduced in the present document.

(iii) The Assembly's invitation was addressed to women's international organisations. The Secretary-General has, therefore, felt unable to transmit to it the views of national organisations. One such statement, presenting the joint views of ten Danish women's organisations, was received through the intermediary of the Danish Government and that of two international organisations. Another, drawn up by the Australian Federation of Women Voters and accompanied by observations from the New South Wales Committee of the Federation, was forwarded to the Secretariat by the Commonwealth Government at the request of the Federation. A third statement giving the views of the British branch of the Open Door International (The Open Door Council), was forwarded by the international organisation in question.

[1] The document of 1936 contains statements from the Governments of the Union of South Africa, Belgium, Brazil, United Kingdom, China, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, Danzig, Estonia, India, Latvia, Monaco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland and Turkey; and from the Pan-Pacific Women's Association.

[2] In communicating the Assembly's decision to the organisations, the Secretary-General pointed out that their statements should " deal with the political and civil status of women and not with questions regarding the conditions of employment of women, which the Assembly has considered to fall within the sphere of the International Labour Office."

PART I. — COMMUNICATIONS FROM GOVERNMENTS.

Observations and statements as to the political and civil status of women have been received from the following Governments :

Commonwealth of Australia.

LAW OF THE COMMONWEALTH.

April 22nd, 1937.

I have the honour to inform you that under the law of the Commonwealth and the States of Australia, apart from the nationality and domicile of married women, which are governed by those of the husband, and the restrictions on the employment of married women in the public service, the political and civil status of women is substantially the same as that of men. There are, however, certain minor restrictions for the protection of women, and the rates fixed for the basic wage of women are lower than those awarded for men.

Recently, an Act was passed by the Parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia to give effect to the provisions of the Hague Nationality Convention in connection with the nationality of married women, which mainly provides for the elimination of statelessness. This Act goes further than the Convention by providing that in the case of a woman who has acquired a foreign nationality by marriage she may still enjoy within Australia and its territories all the privileges of British citizenship. This provision, however, does not apply outside Australia.

As regards the principle that a woman on marriage shall not lose her nationality or acquire a new nationality without her consent, the Commonwealth Government is prepared to adopt this principle and to amend the Australian Nationality Law accordingly, provided the Governments in the United Kingdom and in the other self-governing Dominions do likewise, so that uniformity of nationality laws throughout the British Commonwealth of Nations may be preserved. Such uniformity is regarded as being of prime importance and essential in the interests of the system of Imperial naturalisation now in force.

In the Commonwealth and the States, women are eligible for appointment to the Public Service, and to civil and judicial offices, and for admission to the practice of any of the professions. They enjoy parliamentary franchise and may be elected as members of the Commonwealth or State Parliaments and local governing bodies.

In regard to bankruptcy, which comes within the jurisdiction of the Commonwealth, there is no discrimination in respect of women except that the separate property of a married woman, the income of which is subject to restraint on anticipation, is not divisible amongst creditors, but the Court has power on the application of the trustees to order that the whole, or some part of that income shall be paid to the trustee for distribution amongst the creditors, and in the exercise of that power the Court shall have regard to the means of subsistence available for the woman and her children.

A woman enjoys the same rights as a man under the Commonwealth Old Age and Invalid Pensions, and is entitled to draw the old-age pension at the age of 60, whereas in the case of a man the age is 65.

The only disability on entrance to and employment in the Commonwealth Public Service applies to married women. Under Section 49 of the Public Service Act, no married woman is eligible for employment, either permanently or temporarily in the Commonwealth Service, and every female officer is deemed to have retired from the Service upon her marriage, unless in either case the Public Service Board certifies that there are special circumstances which make such employment desirable.

Attached hereto are detailed statements which have been compiled by the State Governments setting out the political and civil status of women in New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, Western Australia, South Australia and Tasmania.

STATUS OF WOMEN IN NEW SOUTH WALES.

Political.

Under the laws of New South Wales, women enjoy equal political rights with men. The Parliamentary franchise was extended to them by the Women's Franchise Act, No. 54, 1902.

The Women's Legal Status Act, No. 50, 1918 removed all legal impediments to the election of women to the Legislative Assembly, and the Constitution (Amendment) Act, 1925, No. 1 of 1926, authorised the appointment of women as members of the Legislative Council while the Legislative Council was a nominee Chamber. Since the reconstitution of the Legislative Council by the Constitution Amendment (Legislative Council) Act, 1932, No. 2, 1933, any person, male or female, with the specified qualifications is eligible for election as a member of the Legislative Council.

So far as the civic field in this State is concerned it may be stated that, generally speaking, women have equal rights with men.

Under the provisions of the Local Government Act, 1919, which applies to Municipal and Shire Councils in this State, and the Sydney Corporation Act, 1932-1934, which applies to the City of Sydney, there is no differentiation between sexes as to the qualifications necessary to be enrolled as an elector for the purpose of electing the Municipal or Shire or Sydney City Council, as the case may be. Every person whose name is on the roll of electors is qualified to hold civic office and subsequently to be elected as Mayor or President of a Shire Council.

In respect of the servants of Councils it is provided by Statute that Councils shall appoint only qualified persons as Town or Shire Clerks, auditors, engineers and Health inspectors. Persons of either sex may secure the necessary qualifications to act in the respective capacities, and several women have passed the examination and are certified to act as Town or Shire Clerks.

Public Service.

Section 41 of the Public Service Act, 1902, provides that :

> " The Board may make regulations for facilitating the employment of women in those departments or branches of the Public Service in which it may seem desirable to employ them ; and such regulations may determine the salary or wages to be paid to women employed on any particular work or class of work, and may provide generally for all matters relating to the examination of female candidates for employment, which may require special provision."

Provision is made for the employment of females as medical officers, office assistants, shorthandwriters and typists, machine operators, library assistants, ticketwriters, folders, sewers, nurses, attendants, domestic workers, and in other capacities. The number of females employed in such positions under the provisions of the Public Service Act is approximately four thousand.

Female employees do not receive the remuneration paid to males performing similar duties. In the Department of Public Instruction female teachers are paid four-fifths of the male salaries, while in other branches of the Service the difference between the remuneration of males and females performing the same duties is regulated by the difference in the living wages prescribed by the Industrial Tribunals for males and females — see under " Industry ".
Section 42 of the Public Service Act, 1902, provides :

> " Except in the Department of Public Instruction no married woman shall be eligible for appointment to any office in the Public Service if her husband is already in the employment of the State, unless the Board certifies in each case that there are special circumstances which make such appointment desirable."

Teachers.

In October, 1932, the Married Women (Lecturers and Teachers) Act of that year was promulgated. This Act restricts the employment of married women as lecturers and teachers in the Department of Education in order to provide employment for ex-students of the Teachers' Colleges who were awaiting appointment as teachers. Section 3 provides for the cessation of the services of a woman teacher upon her marriage unless she was under Bond to serve the Department for a specified period, in which case the retention of her services until the expiration of that period rested with the Minister, or unless the Public Service Board had, prior to her marriage, certified that it was in the public interest that her services should be retained.

The Act also provides that the services of all married women teachers, or lecturers, employed in the service of the Department at the inception of the Act, namely, November 30th, 1932, should cease to hold office (Section 2) unless the Public Service Board certified (1) that it was in the public interest that their services should be retained ; (2) that the teacher was living apart from her husband and was not receiving adequate support from him ; and (3) that the income of the teacher and her husband, apart from her salary as a teacher, was insufficient for the maintenance of themselves and their dependents, having regard to their financial commitments.

Section 2 further provides that no married woman should be appointed to the Service after November 30th, 1932, unless the Board had certified to the Minister that there were special circumstances which made her employment desirable in the public interest. The renewal of these certificates of retention is subject to annual review of each case.

The re-employment of married women who were married prior to the passing of the Act, was also provided for on a temporary basis.

The above-mentioned Act was amended in 1935, to the effect that those women teachers who were employed by the Department and married prior to November 30th, 1932, and who were still employed at the passing of the amending Act, shall continue to be employed as teachers. In the case of those women for whom the Public Service Board had not issued certificates of retention beyond December 31st, 1935, the amending Act provided that they should have the right of election as to whether they should remain in the service as above, or whether they should be retrenched under the old Act.

The amending Act provides, further, for the employment of married women and for the re-employment of those dispossessed of office under the provisions of Section 2 of the old Act. No married woman shall be appointed unless the Public Service Board has previously certified that there are special circumstances which make her employment desirable in the public interest. Provision is also made for the renewal of a certificate issued in these circumstances. For those dispossessed of office under Section 2 of the old Act, provision is made for their re-employment, provided that the Board certifies beforehand that the combined income of her husband and herself from all sources, other than income derived from her personal exertions, is inadequate for the support of herself, her husband, and dependents. Such employment is to be on a temporary basis.

Police Force.

Women can be appointed to Public Office in the capacity of women police (special constables) or as matrons to attend to female prisoners. Suitable women are appointed from time to time in such capacities, though at present there are no vacancies. Experience shows that as a general rule widows of deceased members of the Police Force are better fitted for these positions than other women. The senior of the Women Special Constables holds the rank of sergeant, and the total number of women special constables in the employ of the Department is eight and that number is found adequate for requirements. The number of matrons in the Police Service is six (four permanent and two relieving).

Professions.

There is no discrimination against women in New South Wales in respect to their entrance into the professions of medicine, dentistry, pharmacy and optometry.

So far as the legal profession is concerned, Section 2 of the Women's Legal Status Act, 1918, provides that " a person shall not by reason of sex be deemed to be under any disability or subject to any disqualification to be appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of New South Wales, or of a district Court of New South Wales, or Chairman of Quarter Sessions, or a Stipendiary or Police Magistrate, or a Justice of the Peace, or to be admitted and to practise as a barrister or solicitor of the Supreme Court of New South Wales, or to practise as a conveyancer; any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding".

Industry. (Omitted. See Introduction to the present document.)

Income Tax.

In the Income Tax Law of this State, comprised in the Income Tax (Management) Act, 1936, and the Special Income and Wages Tax (Management) Act, 1933/34, there is no differentiation as to the manner in which male and female taxpayers shall be assessed.

Legal.

Domicile.

The law in New South Wales is the same as the English Common Law.

Married Women's Property.

The Married Women's Property Act, 1901, as amended, consolidates enactments relating to rights and liabilities of married women. Provision is made in that Act (inter alia) that a married woman is capable of holding property and of contracting (Section 3 (1)), that property of a married woman married after April 17th, 1893, shall be held by her as her separate property (Section 5) and that property of a married woman acquired on or after that date by a woman married before that date shall be held by her as her separate property (Section 8).

Divorce.

The law of New South Wales as to this is contained in the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1899, as amended.

Guardianship of Infants.

Reference should be made as to this to the Infants' Custody and Settlements Act of 1899, as amended by subsequent Acts, and the Testator's Family Maintenance and Guardianship of Infants Act, 1916, as amended by subsequent Acts.

Bankruptcy.

The present law as to this is contained in Commonwealth Statutes.

Maintenance.

This is awarded under the above Testator's Family Maintenance, etc., Act, as amended by subsequent Acts, and the Deserted Wives and Children Act, 1901, as amended by subsequent Acts, and in the case of illegitimacy, the Child Welfare Act, 1923, as amended.

Nationality.

The present law as to this is contained in Commonwealth Statutes.

Prostitution.

The offences connected with prostitution are set out in the Vagrancy Act, 1902, as amended by subsequent Acts, and Sections 91C and 91D of the Crimes Act, 1900, as amended.

Bastardy.

Attention is invited to the Acts referred to under " Maintenance ".

Criminal Law and Sexual Offences.

The Crimes Act, 1900, as amended by subsequent Acts, contains the general criminal law.

General: Jury Service.

Women cannot sit on juries in New South Wales.

Status of Women in Victoria.

Public Office, etc.

Sex or marriage does not debar any woman from exercising any public function or holding any civil or judicial office or post or from practising any profession or admission to any incorporated society, unless specifically debarred therefrom by any special Act, but women have no liability to serve as jurors. See Women's Qualification Act, 1928.

Under Section 46 of the Public Service Act, 1928, the Public Service Commissioner (who is the authority regulating, subject to that Act, employment, classification, etc., in the public service) may make regulations for facilitating the employment of women in those branches of the public service in which it seems desirable to employ them and such regulations may determine their salary or wages, etc. Under Section 47 of the same Act, married women are debarred (subject to a possible exemption in the case of sewing-mistresses in State schools and matrons, warders and attendants in gaols, hospitals, asylums, etc.) from employment in the Public Service; and women who marry whilst in the Service immediately retire. (In fact, women are not generally employed in the Public Service doing the same class of work as men except in the teaching profession, and as typists, stenographers, etc., and in those capacities the standard of salary or remuneration of women is generally lower than the corresponding standard for men.)

Domicile.

The law governing the domicile of women, so far as it affects their status in Victoria, is the common law of England. The principal rules are :

(1) The domicile of a married women is, during coverture, the same as, and changes with, the domicile of her husband.

(2) The domicile of a legitimate or legitimated minor is, during the lifetime of the father, the same as, and changes with, the domicile of the father.

(3) The domicile of an illegitimate minor or of a minor whose father is dead is, whilst the minor lives with the mother, the same as, and changes with, the domicile of the mother.

Married Women's Property.

The provisions of the English Married Women's Property Acts (45 and 46 Vict. C.75 and 56 and 57 Vict. C. 63) have been reproduced in Victorian law, with very little modification, in the Married Women's Property Act, 1928. The effect is to place a woman in very much the same position as a man with respect to her separate property. It should be noticed in this context that bankruptcy is the subject of Commonwealth legislation.

Divorce and Judicial Separation.

These matters are governed in Victoria by the Marriage Act, 1928, and minor amendments thereof.

The grounds of judicial separation are adultery, cruelty and desertion. No distinction is made between husband and wife upon these grounds.

The grounds of divorce vary to some extent according to whether the respondent is husband or wife. Habitual drunkenness in a man is a ground of divorce if associated with cruelty or failure to support his wife; in a woman if associated with neglect of domestic duties or unfitness to carry them out. A single act of adultery is a ground of divorce if the guilty party is the wife; where the guilty party is the husband there must be repeated adultery or adultery in the conjugal residence or adultery combined with bigamy or cruelty or in certain other circumstances of aggravation.

Guardianship and Custody of Infants.

This matter is governed by Part VII of the Marriage Act, 1928. The paramount consideration is the welfare of the infant. No material distinction is drawn between mother and father in their rights to custody, or to appoint guardians, etc. The provisions are taken from the English Act 15 and 16 Sec. V. C.45. The rights of the mother of an illegitimate child are the same as those of a mother of a legitimate child whose father is dead.

Bankruptcy.

This is a matter upon which the Commonwealth Parliament now legislates and the Victorian State law on the subject is now almost, if not quite, defunct.

Maintenance.

The Maintenance Act, 1928, Part I, deals with the maintenance by husbands, fathers, etc., of destitute or deserted wives or children and the circumstances in which such maintenance will be enforced. No burden is placed on a wife of supporting her husband in any circumstances, but the mother of an illegitimate child may be directed to contribute to the support of her child either in conjunction with the father or, if she alone is able to do so, solely. It should also be noticed that under the Marriage Act, 1928, alimony in cases of divorce or judicial separation is payable ordinarily only by the husband, except in the case of an order by the court upon a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage securing the settlement of such gross or annual sum upon the other party (whether husband or wife) as seems reasonable having regard to his or her fortune — a provision only resorted to in cases where the wife had a considerable fortune. See Marriage Act, 1928, Section 95, as amended by Marriage (Divorce) Act, 1933, S.4.

Nationality.

Questions of naturalisation, immigration, etc., are dealt with by the Commonwealth Parliament.

Franchise.

No distinction is made on the ground of sex in the franchise in Victoria whether with respect to qualification as a member of, or an elector of, either of the Houses of the Legislature, or (in the sphere of local government) of any municipal council.

Poor Law and Unemployment Insurance.

There is no law in Victoria corresponding to the laws of England known by those names. Various pension schemes — old age and invalid pensions, etc. — are governed by Commonwealth legislation, and there is in Victoria the series of Acts known as the Unemployment Relief Acts (No. 4079 of 1932, etc.). Under these Acts, the Unemployment Relief Fund is raised by taxation upon very much the same basis as income tax, and is available for the sustenance of persons both male and female who are in need owing to unemployment. There is legally no distinction between men and women as to the right to receive sustenance, but male workers only may be required to work upon certain works for municipalities, etc., in return for their sustenance. In fact, however, almost all sustenance is paid to males, because there is at present a shortage in this State of female labour so that women are not as a rule able successfully to apply for sustenance upon the ground that they cannot obtain employment.

Lead Protection (Omitted. See Introduction to the present document.)

Work in Mines (Omitted. See Introduction to the present document.)

Income Tax.

Victorian law on this subject is now covered by the Income Tax (Assessment) Act, 1936. There is no discrimination thereunder between women and men. This Act introduced for the first time an allowable deduction in respect of her husband from the income of a wife who is supporting her husband, and thus removed the last distinction on this matter. Income tax is also the subject of Commonwealth legislation.

Bastardy.

The provisions of Part I of the Maintenance Act, 1928, already referred to, relating to the maintenance of children by their father, apply whether the children are illegitimate or born in wedlock. Part II of the same Act provides for orders for the payment of confinement expenses. With regard to the ordinary rule (viz., that the evidence of a woman alleging for the purpose of claiming maintenance or confinement expenses, that a man is the father of her child, must be corroborated in some material particular) it should be noted that in Victorian law under Sections 20 and 31 of the Maintenance Act (dealing with maintenance and confinement expenses respectively) the need for corroboration does not arise unless and until the putative father has denied the allegation on oath.

The legitimation of children born out of wedlock is dealt with by Part II of the Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages Act, 1928. Where the parents of an illegitimate child later marry one another (provided there was no legal impediment to the marriage at the time of the birth), (a) the father may at any time effect the legitimation of the child as from the date of birth; but (b) the mother is only able to effect such a legitimation if the father is dead or unable to himself apply by reason of wounds, shock, or disorder the result of war service. The mother has also to obtain the certificate of a law officer to the effect that the proof of fatherhood is conclusive before she can successfully apply.

The effect of legitimation is for all practical purposes to place the legitimated child on the same footing as if born in wedlock.

Criminal Law.

There is no discrimination in the substantive criminal law of Victoria as between women and men except in those cases (viz., sexual cases) where the distinction arises from the nature of the offence itself. The crime of infanticide has not been the subject of legislation in Victoria — all criminal killings remain either murder or manslaughter; the offence of concealment of birth of a child is a misdemeanour capable of being committed by any person either man or woman.

With respect to punishment women may not be put to hard labour (§ 508, Crimes Act, 1928) or be whipped or put in irons (Ibid., §§ 509-511).

With respect to evidence and procedure, the same rules apply to men and women and the same immunities with respect to giving evidence apply to the wife or husband (as the case may be) of the person charged.

Sexual Offences, Prostitution, etc.

The basis of the criminal law in these matters is the common law of England as modified by various statutory enactments of this State.

Special attention is drawn to the following enactments:

Crimes Act, 1928, §§ 40-67 (sexual offences, etc., generally);
Crimes Act, 1928, §§ 456-457 (verdicts);
Crimes Act, 1928, §§ 501-502 (search warrants for girls, etc.);
Police Offences Act, 1928, § 6 (soliciting prostitution);
Police Offences Act, 1928, § 29 (reformatory for women or girls);
Police Offences Act, 1928, § 69 (idle and disorderly persons, etc.);
Police Offences Act, 1928, § 72 (rogues and vagabonds, etc.);
Police Offences Act, 1928, § 73 (incorrigible rogues);
Police Offences Act, 1928, §§ 79-81 (prostitution, brothels, etc.).

Status of Women in Queensland.

The trend in Queensland, especially in recent years, is in the direction of recognising the equality of the sexes.

Industry and Employment. (Omitted. See Introduction to the present document.)

Professions.

(a) The Legal Practitioners Act of 1905 confers on women the right of practising as barristers, solicitors or conveyancers. Some women have already qualified in those professions and are duly practising therein.

(b) In regard to such professions as the medical, optical and pharmaceutical professions, there is no direct statutory recognition of permitting women to qualify but there is no statutory objection, and hence women have qualified and entered upon these professions.

The Dental Act, 1902, specifically includes women.

Certain occupations however are precluded from women, i.e., those involving risk or which would properly be carried on by men. For instance, under the Mines Regulation Act, no female shall be employed below ground in any mine. And under the Inspection of Machinery Acts, no female is allowed to operate a lift, or take charge of or control any engine, or clean machinery while some part is in motion. (See Section 14 of the Inspection of Machinery Act, 1915.)

Political and Civil Status.

Women in Queensland have full voting rights under the Elections Acts for the election of representatives to Parliament.

Moreover, the Elections Acts give statutory recognition to the right of a woman to be qualified for nomination as a candidate for election to Parliament. In Queensland, one woman has served a term as member of the Legislative Assembly.

Women are also competent to be appointed as Justices of the Peace, and several women have been so appointed.

Properly Rights.

Queensland has adopted the English law in relation to the rights of property and of the power of making contracts in respect of married women. Married women may acquire and dispose of property, may contract debts, and sue and be sued and can make a will (see generally the Married Women's Property Acts, 1890 to 1897).

Guardianship.

The Guardianship and Custody of Infants and Marriages of Minors Amendment Act of 1928 gave equal rights to the mother of the infant to apply to the Court in respect of any matter affecting the infant as are possessed by the father.

In fact, where, in any proceeding before a Court, the custody or upbringing of an infant or the administration of any property belonging to or held in trust for an infant or the application of the income thereof is in question, the Court, in deciding the question, shall regard the welfare of the infant as the first and paramount consideration and shall not take into consideration whether from any other point of view the claim of the father, or any right at common law possessed by the father in respect of such custody, upbringing, administration or application is superior to that of the mother or the claim of the mother is superior to that of the father.

Service on Juries.

Women, if they so desire, can submit their names for enrolment on the jury panel. Jury service with women is not compulsory but voluntary (see Jury Act, 1929).

Land Laws.

Section 61 of the Land Acts provides that an unmarried female under the age of 21 years or a married woman, unless she has obtained an order for judicial separation or an order protecting her separate property shall not be competent to apply for a selection subject to the condition of personal residence.

Divorce.

Divorce is founded originally on the old English law, but the grounds were recently added to by the Matrimonial Causes Acts Amendment Act of 1923. The law as to alimony in case of divorce is practically the same as in England.

Unemployment Insurance.

Women have the same rights as men in relation to unemployment insurance, provided they conform to the prescribed conditions.

Income Tax.

Women are on the same footing as men if they have incomes.

Criminal Law.

Same as males except that a woman committing an offence under coercion of her husband is not to be held guilty of the offence. Sexual offences are dealt with in Part XXII of the Criminal Code (Sections 208 to 229) and Section 701.

Status of Women in South Australia.

(Part I.)

In South Australia, women have the same political status as men, and may be elected to and vote for either House of Parliament.

The professions of law, medicine, etc., are open to women who are required to qualify in the same manner as the men.

Under the Sex Disqualification Removal Act, 1921, women are eligible for appointment as Justices of the Peace and notaries public. A number of women have been appointed as Justices. Further, as two Justices of the Peace sitting together may form a Court of Summary Jurisdiction (Police Court) or Local Court of Limited Jurisdiction (Civil Court having jurisdiction to hear claims up to £30) with practically the same powers as a Special Magistrate, it follows that women may sit as members of these courts. Sometimes, particularly in matrimonial and maintenance cases in the Courts of Summary Jurisdiction, one of the two presiding Justices is a woman. The Children's Court is presided over by a Special Magistrate, but he is often accompanied by women Justices.

Under the Juries Act, 1927, however, women are not eligible to sit on juries in civil or criminal cases.

In the Licensing Act, 1932, provisions have been made which will eventually eliminate the employment of barmaids. Under this Act, in a few years' time no woman except the publican's wife, daughter, or sister, step-daughter, or mother may serve intoxicating liquor in any bar-room. If the publican is a woman then she, her daughter, sister, stepdaughter, or mother may serve drinks.

Women employed in the Public Service are in the same position as men, except that their salaries are generally on a lower scale and they must resign on marriage.

Married Women.

The domicile of a married woman follows that of her husband, except that under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1929, for the purpose of divorce, judicial separation and other similar relief under the said Act, a deserted wife who was domiciled in this State at the time of desertion is deemed to have retained her South Australian domicile although since the desertion her husband may have acquired a new domicile.

By virtue of the Married Women's Property Acts a married woman is capable of acquiring, holding and disposing by will or otherwise of any real or personal property as her separate property in the same manner as if she were a feme-sole. Every married woman has in her own name, against all persons whomsoever, including her husband, the same civil remedies and also (subject to certain exceptions with respect to her husband) the same remedies and redress by way of criminal proceedings for the protection and security of her own separate property as if such property belonged to her as a feme-sole.

Every married woman is in her own right entitled, and is deemed so to do where she contracts otherwise than as agent, to contract with regard to her separate property, and the contract then binds her separate property and is enforceable at law. The provisions of this paragraph do not, of course, apply where the property is subject to restraint on anticipation.

Further, every married woman having separate property is liable to maintain her destitute husband and certain destitute near relatives in the same manner as her husband is liable to maintain her near relatives.

Other than the few exceptions set out above the political and civil status of women in South Australia corresponds with that of the men.

Industrial Legislation. (Omitted. See Introduction to the present document.)

Status of Women in South Australia.

(Part II.)

Domicile.

The common law applies as in England except as altered by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1929, as amended by Section 5 of Act No. 2259. The effect of the alteration is that a deserted wife who is domiciled in the State at the time of desertion is deemed to have retained her South Australian domicile although since the desertion her husband may have acquired another domicile. And where pursuant to an order of any Court or any instrument a woman and her husband live separate from each other and at the time when such separation commences the husband is domiciled in South Australia such woman is deemed to retain her South Australian domicile.

Property.

At common law and in equity, the law as to married women's property is similar to English law prior to the passing of the Married Women's Property Acts. Married Women's Property Acts are in force in South Australia and are similar in their effects to those of the English Acts.

Torts. Contracts.

South Australian law is similar to English law on these subjects, except that in South Australia a husband is not liable for his wife's torts. See Act No. 1084 of 1912, Section 2.

Bankruptcy.

This matter is subject to Commonwealth legislation and the law thereon is contained in the Commonwealth Bankruptcy Acts, 1924 to 1933. Section 8 provides that the Act shall apply to all debtors, including married women.

Guardianship.

The law on this subject is similar to the law in force in England prior to the passing of the English Guardianship of Infants Act, 1925. The South Australian Guardianship of Infants Act, 1887, is in most respects similar to the English Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886.

Maintenance, Poor Law and Bastardy.

Maintenance. — A woman can obtain a separation from her husband in a summary Court upon proving certain facts. She is entitled then to custody of children, protection and maintenance for herself and children.

Both the husband and the wife can seek separation or divorce under the Matrimonial Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

The wife can claim maintenance if left without support; and husband can sue wife f maintenance if he is in need and entitled. These actions are under summary procedur

Both men and women are liable to support their children, grand children, parents ar grandparents.

Poor Law. — Relatives liable to support destitute persons are husbands and wive children and grandchildren, parents and grandparents of such person.

Ration relief (outdoor) and indoor home is provided. No difference is based on sex.

N.B. — Payment of old-age and invalid pensions are provided for pursuant to Commo wealth law.

Bastardy. — Mother is liable to support child. She can claim a maintenance order an judgment of paternity if able to prove case.

No corroboration needed unless and until defendant denies paternity.

Father is liable to pay up to 20/– per week maintenance. Child takes mother's nam Upon marriage, mother and her husband may adopt. Husband becomes liable to keep chil after marrying the mother, but the father's liability continues.

Divorce.

Grounds for divorce and judicial separation are the same for a wife as for a husband, an in any action for divorce the Court may make any order which it thinks proper for maintenanc of one party to the marriage by the other party. The law is contained in the Matrimonia Causes Act, 1929, as amended by Acts Nos. 2259 of 1935 and 2293 of 1936.

Unemployment Insurance.

There is no provision for unemployment insurance in South Australia for men and women There is provision, however, for unemployment relief which is applicable equally to both mer and women. See Unemployment Relief Council Act, 1930.

Prostitution.

Special laws exist in South Australia to restrict the rights of common prostitutes as in England. See Police Act, 1936, sections 63, 83, 85 and 117.

Lead Protection. (Omitted. See Introduction to the present document.)

Income Tax.

Income Tax laws apply equally to both males and females.

Criminal Law.

The Criminal Law Consolidation Act No. 2252 of 1935 applies generally to both males and females.

Juries.

Women are not required to serve as jurors in South Australia. See Juries Act, 1927.

Status of Women in Western Australia.

General.

Under the laws of Western Australia, females already have for all purposes, with a few minor exceptions, the same status as males. That is to say, subject to certain conditions and disqualifications general to both sexes, females equally with males can be elected to either House of Parliament, and have the same voting rights as males as electors.

This applies also in relation to membership of municipal, road board and other local Government bodies, and voting at the election of such members.

Also females, whether married or unmarried, can hold and deal with real and personal property as their separate estate to the same extent as males, and carry on any class of business in their own name and for their own benefit.

Females can be admitted to the practice of professions, e.g., law, medicine, chemistry, etc.

Females are not competent to sit as jurors on either criminal or civil juries; and under the Licensing Act, 1911, a female cannot hold a publican's general licence or wayside-house licence if she is under thirty years of age, or is a married woman residing with her husband.

Apart from the two latter exceptions, there is no disability in the matter of political and civil status suffered by females which is not also suffered by males.

Domicile.

The domicile of a feme-sole can be altered by her in the same way as if she were a man. Upon marriage, a woman becomes a dependent person as far as domicile is concerned, an duntil death, divorce or nullity of marriage her domicile is that of her husband. There is an exception to this rule in one particular case and that is the following : For the purposes of divorce, a deserted wife who was domiciled in Western Australia at the time of desertion is deemed to have retained her Western Australia domicile notwithstanding that her husband may have since the desertion acquired a foreign domicile (Supreme Court Act No. 36 of 1935, Sec. 71).

Married Woman's Property.

A married woman has all the rights and liabilities of a man with regard to her separate estate, but the liabilities are limited to the separate estate and are not personal.

Divorce.

The following grounds for divorce are virtually the same for both men and women :

(1) Adultery.
(2) Desertion.
(3) Drunkenness, combined with cruelty or failure to maintain in the case of a man, and combined with failure to perform her domestic duties in the case of a woman.
(4) Imprisonment, with an additional ground for a wife shortening the period and lessening the type of offence if coupled with failure to maintain.
(5) Attempt to murder or to inflict grievous bodily harm on the petitioner.
(6) Lunacy.
(7) Ante-nuptial incontinence.

In addition, a wife may petition for divorce if she has been separated from her husband under an order of a competent court or by virtue of a deed of separation for a period of three years, and her husband has been liable during that period to make periodical payments by way of maintenance and has failed to do so either entirely or repeatedly and habitually (Supreme Court Act No. 36 of 1935, Sec. 69).

Where a wife has appeared as the respondent in a suit for divorce, she has the right to call upon her husband to secure the costs of the action and in the event of his failing to do so, he cannot proceed with his petition (Rule 72).

A husband who petitions for divorce successfully on the ground of his wife's adultery may be awarded damages and costs against the co-respondent. No such right belongs to a wife who petitions successfully on the ground of her husband's adultery.

Guardianship of Infants.

The father is the guardian by nature and nurture of his legitimate children and entitled to their custody and control until they attain the age of 21 years. If the children are illegitimate, the mother is prima facie entitled to their custody up to the age of 14 years.

By the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1920-1926, on the death of the father, the mother is constituted guardian of the children either solely or jointly with a guardian appointed by the father. On the death of the mother, the father is the guardian either solely or jointly with any person appointed by the mother to act with him in that capacity. A very strong case must be made out before the Court will deprive a father of the guardianship of his children.

Section 2 of the Guardianship of Infants Act 1926 (W. A.) provides that:

"Where in any proceeding before any court . . . the custody or upbringing of an infant . . . is in question, the court, in deciding that question shall regard the welfare of the infant as the first and paramount consideration, and shall not take into consideration whether from any other point of view the claim by the father, or any right at common law possessed by the father, in respect of such custody, upbringing, administration or application is superior to that of the mother, or the claim of the mother is superior to that of the father".

By Section 3 of the same Act, it is provided that :

"The mother of an infant shall have the like powers to apply to the court in respect of any matter affecting the infant as are possessed by the father".

Right of Appointment to Public Office.

Women have equal rights with men to appointment to public office, but in fact rarely avail themselves of that right.

Bankruptcy.

There is no limitation under our Bankruptcy law to the effect that a married woman may only be made bankrupt in respect of her separate estate, nor is a married woman made subject to the Act solely by reason of her having carried on trade or business. If a married woman is made bankrupt and if she owns property the income of which is subject to a restraint on anticipation, the Court may order the income to be paid to the trustee for distribution among the creditors, subject to the claim of the married woman and her children for their maintenance. But, subject to that power of the Court, separate property of a married woman, subject to restraint, is not property divisible amongst her creditors.

Maintenance.

On any decree for dissolution or nullity of marriage, the Court may, if it thinks fit, order that the husband shall secure to the wife such gross sum of money or annual or monthly or weekly sum of money as having regard to her fortune, if any, to the ability of her husband and to the conduct of the parties, the Court may deem reasonable. On the application of either party the amount of the payments may be increased or decreased or the order discharged altogether, if the Court is satisfied that the circumstances of the parties warrant such a change or discharge. Under the Married Women's Protection Act, 1922, a married woman whose husband during the preceding six months has been guilty of :

(1) Cruelty to her or any of her children.

(2) Adultery.

(3) Desertion.

(4) Failure to maintain her or any of her children, may apply for protection under the Act. An order made upon proof of any of these offences may relieve the applicant from the obligation to cohabit with her husband, grant her custody of the children and order the payment of maintenance for her or any of her children. It will be noticed that the offences (1) and (4) may be committed against any child of the wife (e.g., an illegitimate child or child by a former marriage) and also that payment of maintenance for any such child may be ordered by the Court. The proceedings under this Act are summary and comparatively free from publicity, and the protection afforded by the Act is very frequently sought. The Children's Court has power to order the payment of maintenance for children both legitimate and illegitimate, and has wide powers for enforcing such orders. Liability for maintenance of a legitimate child lies firstly on the father, then on the mother, then step father, then step mother, then brothers and sisters, and lastly on grand parents. Liability for maintenance of an illegitimate child lies firstly on the father, then on the mother's husband, then the mother.

Nationality.

The nationality of a married woman is that of her husband. A successful application for naturalisation automatically naturalises the wife and infant children of the applicant.

Franchise.

Women have the same voting rights and obligations as men. They are eligible to become members of Parliament and/or of local governing bodies. There are two female members of the Western Australian Parliament, as at present constituted.

Prostitution.

In Western Australia, it is an offence to keep a house to which persons may resort for the purposes of prostitution, or to procure a woman (of any age) to become a prostitute. It is also an offence for a prostitute to solicit for the purpose of prostitution, though in this case the soliciting must constitute something more than mere accosting for that purpose. The offence is coupled with that of riotous behaviour by a prostitute in a public place and is apparently regarded as an offence because it is likely to bring about a breach of the peace. It is an offence for a male person to live wholly or in part on the proceeds of prostitution. Despite the fact that the keeping of a brothel constitutes an offence, they exist more or less openly. Their proprietors are periodically prosecuted and fined for their activities, but no attempt is made by the police to remove them. Their inmates, if they become infected with venereal disease, are obliged to report periodically to the health authorities for inspection.

Lead Protection. (Omitted. See Introduction to the present document.)

The Poor Law.

Commonwealth legislation provides for old-age pensions for (broadly speaking) all persons, other than aliens, Asiatics and Aboriginal natives, who have property or money equalling in value not more than a certain sum. Women who qualify for this pension in all other respects become eligible to receive it at the age of 60 years. Men are not eligible until they reach 65 years of age. A woman is not disqualified from receiving the old-age pension by reason only of the fact that she is married to an alien, an Asiatic or an Aboriginal native.

State legislation provides for the establishment of poor houses.

There is also provision for deserted wives and children or near relatives to apply to the Courts for attachment of the property of the person liable for their support (9 Victoria, cap. 2). As a matter of Government policy, relief to destitute women and children is provided also through the Child Welfare Department upon proof that there is no person liable for their support or that if there is a person so liable every effort has been made to enforce his obligations, and in addition that the applicant cannot find employment. Such relief is at the rate of nine shillings per head with a maximum of £3.3.0 per week per family. The mother of a family would not be expected to obtain employment, and an unmarried mother is not expected to find employment while she is nursing a child. Unemployment relief has been a large item in Government expenditure over the past years of depression, but is gradually decreasing.

Unemployment Insurance.

There is no form of unemployment insurance in Western Australia.

Bastardy.

Bastardy and affiliation proceedings are governed by the Child Welfare Act, 1907-1927, and jurisdiction in these matters is now vested solely in the Children's courts.

Upon the hearing of a complaint against any person in respect of the maintenance of an illegitimate child of which the defendant is alleged to be the father, no order can be made upon the evidence of the mother unless her evidence is corroborated in some material particular or if the Court is satisfied that at the time the child was begotten the mother was a common prostitute. Slight evidence of corroboration is sufficient, its sufficiency being purely a matter for the discretion of the Bench, but there must be some corroboration. Proceedings may be laid against the father for maintenance or for confinement expenses either before or after the birth of the child.

Income Tax.

A recent provision allows a married man to deduct from the taxable amount of his income a sum not exceeding £50 per annum payable to his wife by way of an allowance. This provision apparently does not operate in the case of a married woman who makes to her husband such an allowance, but apart from that men and women are on an equal footing with respect to income tax.

Criminal Law.

A married woman is not free from criminal responsibility for doing or omitting to do an act merely because the act or omission takes place in the presence of her husband. A married woman is not criminally responsible for doing or omitting to do an act which she is actually compelled by her husband to do or omit to do, and which is done or omitted to be done in his presence, except in the case of an act or omission which would constitute an offence punishable with death, or an offence of which grievous bodily harm to the person of another, or an intention to cause such harm is an element, in which case the presence of her husband is immaterial.

A husband and wife are not criminally responsible for conspiracy between themselves alone.

When a husband and wife are living together, neither of them incurs any criminal responsibility for doing or omitting to do any act with respect to the property of the other except in the case of an act or omission of which an intention to injure or defraud some other person is an element and except in the case of an act done by either of them when leaving or deserting or when about to leave or desert the other. Subject to that provision, a husband and wife are each of them criminally responsible for any act done by him or her with respect to the property of the other which would be an offence if they were not husband and wife. But neither of them can institute criminal proceedings against the other while they are living together. Upon the prosecution of a husband on the complaint of his wife for an offence committed with respect to her property and upon the prosecution of a wife on the complaint of her husband for an offence committed with respect to his property, the wife or husband, as the case may be, is a competent and compellable witness. The wife or husband of a person charged with a number of offences, all in the nature of sexual offences, is a competent and compellable witness either for the prosecution or defence at every stage of the proceedings and without the consent of the person charged. Subject to that provision a husband is not compellable in any proceedings to disclose any communication made to him by his wife during marriage, and a wife is not compellable in any proceedings to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during the marriage (Criminal Code, 1914). The punishment of whipping cannot be inflicted upon a female. In the event of a woman being pregnant while she is under sentence of death, execution may be delayed until the birth of her child.

Sexual Offences.

The offence of rape is not a capital offence in Western Australia, but is punishable with imprisonment with hard labour for life with or without whipping.

The consent of a girl under the age of 16 years to be carnally known or indecently assaulted by any man (the age is 17 when the man is her teacher, employer or guardian) is not recognised by law.

It is a defence to a charge of having or attempting to have unlawful carnal knowledge of a girl under 16 years of age to prove that the accused person believed on reasonable grounds that the girl was of or above the age of 16. A person cannot be convicted of such an offence upon the uncorroborated testimony of one witness.

Jury Service, Trades, Professions, etc.

Women are not eligible or liable for jury service. Every profession is open to women. Most trades are governed by the provisions of industrial awards delivered under the provisions of the Industrial Arbitration Act, and numbers of the awards make no provision for females employed in the industry concerned. At the same time there is no actual prohibition against their being so employed. Married women find it very difficult to obtain employment, although some who practised a profession before marriage have continued to do so after it with varying degrees of success. The basic wage for men, as provided by the Arbitration Court is £3.12.0 per week, while that for women is £1.18.11 per week, though it must be remembered that the wage for men is regulated on the assumption that he has himself, a wife and two children to support, while that for women assumes that the woman has only herself to support. The various industrial awards allow a margin above the basic wage for the skill of the worker.

Work in Mines. (Omitted. See Introduction to the present document.)

Status of Women in Tasmania.

Except as is otherwise set out below, the status of unmarried women and widows of adult age in Tasmania is in no way to be differentiated from that of the adult man.

Married Women.

Section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1935, confers upon married women the amplest powers of holding real and personal property and of contracting. The position of the married woman is assimilated to that of the feme-sole.

Women generally.

Scattered throughout Tasmanian Statute Law will be found numerous disabilities of women, sometimes of the whole sex and sometimes merely of married women. These may take the form of either a capacity conferred upon the male sex eo nomine with an implied exclusion of the female sex, or an actual expressed incapacity of the female sex. In the absence of any index of Tasmanian Statute Law it would be hopeless to attempt to enumerate the cases in which such disabilities are suffered under Tasmanian Law. The following are cited as examples only :

(i) Section 52 of the Public Service Act, 1923 (inserted by the Amending Act, 18, Geo. V. No. 18), debars married women from employment in the Public Service of the State.

(ii) Women are not eligible for service on juries in Tasmania (The Jury Act, 1899, Section 4).

(iii) Section 29 of the Mines and Works Regulation Act, 1915, prohibits the employment for hire in or about a mine of any female excepting in the case of clerical employment.

On the other hand, the law of Tasmania occasionally invests women with an ability not possessed by a man. For instance, a wife who is deserted by her husband at a time when the husband (and consequently the wife) is domiciled in Tasmania may, upon the continuance of the desertion for the statutory period, institute divorce proceedings against her husband based on his desertion of her notwithstanding the fact that the husband's domicile (and, therefore, the wife's) is no longer Tasmania. This will be found in the Matrimonial Causes Amendment Act, 1919, Section 3 inserting in the Principal Act a new Section 14*b* (see last paragraph thereof). Furthermore the statutory period of desertion is only two years for the deserted wife while it is three years for the deserted husband.

In general terms, it is provided by the Acts Interpretation Act, 1931, Section 24, that in the construction of any Tasmanian Statute " words importing the masculine gender shall include females ".

The relevant extracts from the Statutory Provisions are as follows :

Section 3. — Married Women's Property Act.

(1) A married woman shall be capable of acquiring, holding, and disposing of any real or personal property in the same manner in every respect as if she were a feme-sole.

(2) A married woman shall be capable of entering into and rendering herself liable in respect of any contract, and of suing and being sued, either in contract or in tort, or otherwise, in all respects as if she were a feme-sole; and any damages or costs recovered by her in any such action or proceeding shall be her property; and any damages or costs awarded against her in any such action or proceeding shall be recoverable from and payable by her in the same manner in every respect as if she were a feme-sole.

(3) The marriage of a woman shall not affect any contract or liability entered into, or incurred, by her before marriage.

Section 52. — Public Service Act.

(1) No married woman shall be employed either permanently or temporarily in the Service unless the Commissioner certifies in any special case that there are special circumstances rendering her employment desirable.

(2) Every female employee who marries after appointment to any position shall be deemed thereupon to have retired unless the Commissioner certifies as provided by Sub-section (1) hereof, that the retention of her services is desirable.

Section 29. — Mines and Works Regulation Act. (Omitted. See Introduction to the present document.)

Section 14b. — Matrimonial Causes Amendment Act.

Any wife who at the time of the institution of the suit has been domiciled in Tasmania for two years and upwards may present a petition to the Court praying that her marriage may be dissolved on one or more of the grounds following :

I. That her husband has without just cause or excuse deserted the petitioner and without any such cause or excuse left her continuously deserted during two years and upwards.

II. That her husband has during three years and upwards been an habitual drunkard, and either habitually left the petitioner without the means of support, or habitually been guilty of cruelty towards her.

III. That at the time of the presentation of the petition her husband has been imprisoned for a period of not less than three years, and is still in prison under a commuted sentence for a capital crime, or under sentence to penal servitude for seven years or upwards, or has within five years undergone frequent terms of imprisonment, and has been sentenced in the aggregate to imprisonment for three years or upwards.

IV. That within one year previously her husband has been convicted of having attempted to murder the petitioner, or on the ground that her husband has repeatedly during that period assaulted and cruelly beaten the petitioner.

V. That her husband has since the celebration of his marriage and after the First day of January, One thousand nine hundred and twenty, been guilty of adultery.

VI. That her husband has for a period or periods of not less in the aggregate than seven years, within ten years immediately preceding the filing of the petition, been a lunatic or person of unsound mind and is unlikely to recover from such lunacy or unsoundness of mind, or has been confined as such in any hospital or other institution in accordance with the provisions of ' The Mental Diseases Hospitals Act ' for a period of or periods not less in the aggregate than seven years, within ten years immediately preceding the filing of the petition, and is unlikely to recover from such lunacy or unsoundness of mind.

If in the opinion of the Court the petitioner's own habits or conduct induced or contributed to the wrong complained of under this section, such petition may be dismissed. Provided always that the Court may, if it thinks fit, notwithstanding that the petitioner has been guilty of conduct which would disentitle such petitioner to relief as provided in Section 20 of the Principal Act, if satisfied that it is in the interest of all parties that the marriage should be dissolved, pronounce a decree declaring that such marriage be dissolved.

A deserted wife who was domiciled in Tasmania at the time of desertion shall be deemed for the purposes of this Act to have retained her Tasmanian domicile notwithstanding that her husband may have since the desertion acquired any foreign domicile.

I. Situation of Women as regards Private Law.

Unmarried Women.

As regards private law, the legal situation of unmarried women is absolutely the same as that of men, with the three following exceptions, which also apply to married women :

(a) Women cannot witness certificates of births, marriages and deaths (Article 120 of the Law on Persons) ;

(b) A woman cannot be a guardian nor a member of a family council, unless she is mother or grandmother (Article 51 of the Law on Persons) ;

(c) In the inheritance of immovable property regarded as fixtures, the female descendant heirs receive a share half as great as that of the male descendants.

Married Women.

A married woman retains her full legal capacity. Financial relations between married people are regulated on the basis of a complete separation of property between husband and wife ; as regards private law, complete equality exists between husband and wife. Causes of divorce are the same for both husband and wife. However, the closeness of the marriage tie results in certain restrictions in the legal situation of women.

A. Restrictions in the Interest of the Unity of the Family.

I. A wife has the same domicile as her husband ; a widow keeps that domicile until she acquires another (Article 9 of the Law on Persons).

II. While the marriage lasts the paternal power is exercised by the father. The mother only exercises this power if the father is dead, has been deprived of his paternal power, or is absent (Article 62 of the Law on Persons). The father has the right to impose on the surviving mother, by provisions in his will or by authentic deed, definite conditions concerning the education of the children or the administration of their property. The mother may, nevertheless, ask for the abolition of these conditions from the family council, which makes a decision on her request (Article 77 of the Law on Persons).

III. An unmarried male under disabilities has the father as his legal guardian or, if the father is dead, the mother. When an illegitimate child is acknowledged by both parents, the father is legal guardian.

IV. A married woman cannot enter into business without the express or tacit authorisation of her husband. This authorisation is taken for granted if the woman is publicly known to be trading, unless the husband explicitly expresses his opposition. If the husband is absent or under guardianship, having been deprived of his legal rights, the regional court grants the necessary authorisation. Even if a woman is engaged in business, she cannot be a member of a commercial company which entails unlimited responsibility without express authorisation from her husband, or from the court in the case of the absence or illness of her husband (Article 9 of the Law on Trade). A husband may withdraw the permission to trade granted to his wife, but the withdrawal must be approved by the Court, which will have previously heard the woman (Article 12 of the Law on Trade).

V. The husband may ask for the annulling of the contract of service concluded by his wife by sending a request to that effect to the conciliation court. The court may accede to that request only if the maintenance of the contract of service seems harmful to the relations between husband and wife and if the husband brings proof that he has the means of meeting the household expenses.

B. Limitations in the Interest of Third Parties.

Articles 741 and 742 of the Law on Trade set forth the legal but not incontestable presumption that property acquired by the wife of a bankrupt belongs to the husband and that it has been acquired with his money. This property is included in the bankrupt's total estate.

C. Restrictions in the Interest of the National Economy.

Male descendants have the right to keep to themselves the shares of their female co-heirs in unbuilt property if the latter are already married, on paying them the price of those shares on evaluation (Article 420, paragraph 2, of the Law on Inheritance). The restriction in the rights of succession of women mentioned above (loc. cit.) has also as its basis the safeguarding of the interests of the national economy.

II. Situation of Women as regards Public Law and Political Situation.

Women may fill any State office if they satisfy the required conditions. They are excluded only from a military career and, in conformity with the canons of the Orthodox Church, from all ecclesiastical offices.

No restrictions exist concerning the education of Bulgarian women. They have access to all schools and universities except military schools and religious academies and seminaries.

Women may exercise all professions and all trades, with a few exceptions as a result of industrial legislation for protecting female labour.

As a general rule, Bulgarian women have no political rights. They have no vote at the legislative elections and cannot stand as candidates. However, a recent law has given the vote in municipal elections to married women of full age who are or have been mothers of legitimate children (Article 5, Decree Law for the Election of Members of Municipal Councils). This law is the first step towards political equality for Bulgarian women.

China.

[Translation.] June 22nd, 1937.

I have the honour to convey to you certain information supplementing that communicated to you by the Permanent Bureau of the Chinese Delegation in a letter dated September 2nd, 1936.[1]

The principle of the equality of the sexes set out in Article 6 of the Provisional Constitution of the Chinese Republic at present in force, is reproduced in Article 8 of the Draft Constitution made public on May 5th, 1936, which will become final after adoption by the People's Congress at the end of this year.

The new text, however, is simplified. The words " All citizens of the Chinese Republic without distinction of sex, race, religion or class, are equal before the law " have been replaced by " The citizens of the Chinese Republic are all equal before the law ", all persons of Chinese nationality being citizens of the Chinese Republic according to Article 3 of the Draft Constitution.

The principle of the equality of the sexes is embodied in the Civil Code, chiefly as regards the family and succession and criminal law; in particular, Chapter 17 of the Criminal Code relating to offences against marriage and the family.

With regard to the steps that might be taken by the League of Nations in the matter of the status of women, my Government has, for the moment, no suggestions to put forward.

Denmark.

[Translation.] June 14th, 1937.

I. For elections to the Rigsdag, Municipal Councils and other similar assemblies, the conditions governing the franchise and eligibility are the same for men and women.

II. Under the Law of March 4th, 1921, all posts and offices under the State and Communes prescribed by law are open to men and women on equal conditions, with the exception of military posts and posts for which ecclesiastical ordination is required. Similarly, men and women are equally bound to discharge the duties incumbent upon them.

III. From the point of view of civil law, men and women are equal in principle, so that there is no special situation applicable to women, unless this is provided for by way of exception, for example, in the following cases :

(1) The provision laid down in Article 6 of the Law of June 30th, 1922, on the conclusion and dissolution of marriage, which prescribes that the minimum age for the conclusion of marriage shall be 21 years for a man and only 18 years for a woman, and the provision laid down in Article 16 of the same law which prescribes that a woman who has already been married may not contract a new marriage before the expiry of a period of ten months after the termination of the previous marriage, unless she has been with child since a period previous to the termination of the said marriage or ten months have elapsed since the termination of her cohabitation with her first husband.

(2) The provision of Article 6 of the Law of June 30th, 1922, on minority and guardianship, which declares that the father is the natural guardian of his legitimate minor child, whereas the mother becomes so only by the death of the father, or if the latter cannot exercise guardianship because he is himself a minor, or because he has been deprived of the right of guardianship.

(3) The provision of Article 11 of the Law of March 18th, 1925, on the legal effects of marriage, whereby a woman, dealing with a third party, is authorised, on the responsibility of the husband and wife jointly, to perform such ordinary legal acts as may be necessary to ensure her individual requirements.

(4) The provision of Article 2, point 2, of the Law of April 20th, 1926, on the right of inheritance between husband and wife and the non-divisibility of estates, whereby the husband may decide by will that his wife, as long as she remains a party to the non-divisibility, shall not have access to the property included in the estate, except with the consent of a curator, and may appoint the person responsible for exercising such functions.

IV. From the point of view of public law, the following rules are in force :

Under Article 3 of the Law of April 18th, 1925, on the acquisition and loss of nationality, a foreign woman acquires Danish nationality by her marriage with a Dane, whereas the marriage of a Danish woman and a foreigner does not confer Danish nationality on the latter.

As regards Articles 2 and 6 of the same law, which deal with the acquisition of Danish nationality by foreign nationals by reason of their birth in Denmark or of a prolonged sojourn in the country and the loss of Danish nationality by reason of birth or sojourn abroad, the rule is that married women cannot personally acquire or lose nationality in virtue of the above-mentioned reasons, whereas a woman who has married a man affected by these provisions always follows the status of her husband, irrespective of whether she herself fulfils the conditions laid down in the rules in question.

Apart from these measures, the two sexes are in principle assimilated from the point of view of public law. The provision of Article 4 of the aforesaid law, whereby the naturalisation of a married man applies also to his wife, does not in point of fact constitute inequality between the sexes, since in practice a woman is required to join in her husband's application for naturalisation, and, in the contrary event, she is as a rule explicitly excluded from the effects of naturalisation in virtue of a special provision of the naturalisation law in question.

As regards the provision laid down in Article 5 of the above-mentioned law concerning the loss of Danish nationality by a person who becomes a national of another country, the two sexes have in principle been assimilated. Since, however, in the application of the said provision, this interpretation applies only to the methods of acquiring nationality which are recognised by the general public law of the European countries without requiring that a similar rule shall exist under Danish legislation, a Danish woman loses her nationality by marriage with a foreigner, if she thereby acquires the latter's nationality, whereas it is hardly admissible that a Dane should lose his nationality by marriage with a foreign woman, even if the effect of such marriage were to confer on him his wife's nationality.

The provision of Article 5, point 2, of the same law, whereby the loss of Danish nationality in the case of a person who is a Dane by birth ensues only after such person has become established abroad, is of importance chiefly to women who marry foreigners and to illegitimate children born of a Danish mother who acquire foreign nationality by reason of the subsequent marriage of their parents.

Article 8, point 1, of the said law contains the following special provision relating to women : " Women who, on the date of the entry into force of the present law, have lost Danish nationality by contracting marriage with a man who does not possess Danish nationality may recover it by applying to the Ministry of the Interior, if they have originally acquired the said nationality by their birth and have not ceased to live in the Kingdom since the conclusion of the marriage. If they establish themselves abroad, they lose Danish nationality."

V. Compulsory military service applies only to men, under the provisions of Article 88 of the Constitutional Law (Cf. Law of June 8th, 1912).

VI. In the exercise of medical professions, midwives' posts have been reserved for women, but doctors are authorised to fulfil the duties generally undertaken by midwives in confinements.

Egypt.

[Translation.]

Note on the Political, Legal and Economic Status of Egyptian Moslem Women.

The modern Western legislative systems make no distinction between questions relating to personal status and those relating to the daily life of the citizen within the frontiers of his country.

Thus the Civil Code of each State contains provisions governing the various stages in the life of the citizen from his birth to his death. The same applies to the Courts to whose jurisdiction he is amenable and which have cognisance of these questions.

Nevertheless, the competence of the Courts in Egypt is governed by laws modelled principally on those which were in force in the Ottoman Empire, by reason of the relations of suzerainty which formerly bound Turkey to Egypt. These laws make a distinction, as regards judicial organisation, between the different Egyptian communities. The differentiation is based sometimes on religion, sometimes on race, and leaves each Court to settle disputes in conformity with the laws governing the parties who come within its jurisdiction.

The application of the laws relating to civil matters comes within the competence of the Civil Tribunals (National and Mixed). Most of the provisions governing such questions are taken from the modern European legislative systems, more particularly French legislation.

The application of laws concerning the personal status of Moslems comes within the competence of the Personal Status Courts known as Mehkemeh Sharia. These courts apply Moslem Law according to the Hanafite rite.

The said provisions of Moslem Law have been collected and published by Kadry Pasha. They were recently partially amended by reference to other Moslem rites (See Laws No. 25 of 1920, No. 25 of 1929 and No. 78 of 1931).

Having regard to the foregoing considerations, it is a simple matter to examine the status of Egyptian Moslem women under the laws of the country.

Political Rights of Egyptian Moslem Women.

The political status of Moslem or non-Moslem women is the same as that of men (Article 3 of the Constitution).

Nevertheless, the electoral law has explicitly restricted the rights of voting and election to men, to the exclusion of women (Article 1 of Law No. 11 of 1923). It may be noted that Moslem law makes no distinction between men and women from this point of view.

Under Moslem Law, a woman may not reign, and so far the various Moslem countries have always followed this tradition, which is, moreover, in the case of Egypt embodied in an explicit text (Article 5 of the Royal Rescript dated April 13th, 1923).

Women possess the same rights as men as regards eligibility for public office and participation in societies and associations.

The law on civil pensions, which grants only to a few officials of the male sex the privilege of enjoying their right to a pension or indemnity in case of resignation, grants this right to women officials if they resign on account of marriage. Further, the Egyptian legislator has enacted several provisions determining the status of women from the point of view of nationality (See Articles 14, 15 and 17 of Law No. 19 of 1929 and of February 27th, 1929, as amended by Law No. 92 of 1931).

Personal Status of Women.

On this point, reference need simply be made to the provisions of the law published in Kadry Pasha's Code of Personal Status and to the laws amending it.

It is of interest to note a special advantage accorded to women under the terms of Article 24 of Law No. 78 of 1931. The rule of ordinary law, which provides that every case must be brought before the defendant's court, grants women the right, in questions of personal status, to have the case brought before whatever court they may designate.

As regards the right to alimony women possess the following two privileges : (1) although the salaries of State officials are not transferable and not distrainable, a woman may apply for distraint up to the amount of one quarter of such salaries ; (2) the alimony in question may not be the object of distraint except by reason of another claim for alimony.

Article 209 of Kadry Pasha's Code provides, in Chapter 3, under the head of " Marital Power ", that a husband may take only moderate disciplinary measures against his wife when she commits a fault or blameworthy act concerning the punishment of which the law remains silent. Nevertheless, a husband is never permitted to employ violence against his wife even for a plausible reason. The right of discipline is granted to the man only in his capacity as father and head of the family, responsible for the expenses of the household and for keeping order within it. This right of discipline is designed to correct the woman if her conduct is unseemly. Consequently, it cannot be employed by the man for purposes of vengeance or in an arbitrary fashion. If circumstances demand resort to correction, this must not exceed the bounds strictly necessary to achieve its purpose. The disciplinary sanctions laid down in the Koran are accordingly admonition, conjugal abandonment and corporal punishment. These various sanctions are specified in order, so that no one punishment may be resorted to until a lesser punishment has been tried in vain. If one punishment has produced its effect, the more serious punishment must not be employed.

Status of Women under Civil Law.

A woman enjoys the same rights as a man on reaching her legal majority (21 years). She then becomes free as regards her acts and no longer depends upon anyone ; it is immaterial whether she is married or not.

Article 4 of Kadry Pasha's Code of Personal Status stipulates that a promise of marriage and betrothal shall not be binding upon the parties, who retain the right to break off the marriage.

Article 217 of the same Code grants to the husband alone, to the exclusion of the wife, the right of divorce.

The civil tribunals, both native and mixed, have generally adopted this view.

Status of Women under Commercial Law.

The law makes no distinction between men and women as regards their rights and obligations in commercial matters. Nevertheless, certain measures have been taken under the Mixed and Native Codes to protect the wife of a merchant who has been declared bankrupt.

Status of Women under Penal Law.

The law makes no distinction between men and women as regards procedure or penalties except in the matter of adultery, when the penalty is heavier for the woman than for the man.

Similarly, in the matter of abduction, the penalty is heavier when the victim is of the female sex (Articles 250, 251 and 252 of the Penal Code).

Nevertheless, the application of the Penal Code varies in certain respects as regards the procedure of execution. Thus women are never sentenced to hard labour or to be handcuffed or chained (Article 15 of the Code of Criminal Procedure). When a woman with child is sentenced to death, the penalty cannot be carried out until after her confinement (Article 263 of the Code of Criminal Procedure).

If a woman and her accomplice are caught in the act of adultery, the husband alone has the right of legal excuse if he commits murder.

Social Status of Women.

The legislator has quite recently taken measures for the protection of women. With this object, Law No. 80 of 1933 was promulgated, concerning conditions for the employment of women in industry and commerce. Furthermore, a department has been created at the Ministry of Commerce and Industry known as the Labour Department, one of whose duties it is to supervise the strict application of the aforesaid law and the achievement of its objects.

Before concluding this study, it may be useful to allude briefly to polygamy and the legal value of women's testimony.

Polygamy.

Under Moslem law, a man may have four wives at once, but he must treat them all on a footing of equality ; if, for reasons of preference or any other reason, he cannot do so, he is recommended to have only one. The Koran contains the following text on the subject : " If you fear to be unjust, wed only one ", and further on :

" You can never treat all your wives alike, however earnestly you may wish it."

Testimony.

The value of a woman's testimony varies according to the case. It may sometimes be equal to that of a man, as in the case of criminal actions. In certain suits it is not customary for the Court to admit a man's testimony, for example, in the case of a woman's confinement, or as regards a woman's hidden vices, which may be alleged by the husband in an action for the dissolution of marriage. There are other cases in which the testimony of men alone is admitted, such as actions which would offend the susceptibility of a woman or which she cannot endure, either for humanitarian reasons or reasons of modesty.

Nevertheless, it has been agreed to accept the testimony of a woman in a case of murder if this is the only available means of ascertaining the truth, including the particular case in which the crime has been committed in a place where there were only women.

Finally, in other cases, women and men are allowed to give evidence equally, although a man's testimony is regarded as twice as valuable as that of a woman.

RULINGS OF THE COURTS.

Right of Discipline.

If a husband, in administering punishment to his wife, has exceeded the limits authorised and caused her injury he shall be punished.

Court of Cassation, March 3rd, 1934, Review Al Mouhama, fifth year, page 107, No. 99.
Court of Cassation, December 18th, 1923, Official Bulletin, year 1935, page 134.

Right of Divorce.

This right is reserved exclusively to the Moslem husband, who may exercise it at will. Thus a woman is never authorised to claim damages in case of divorce. The only compensation to which she is entitled is the arrears of her dowry.

Mixed Court of Appeal, June 20th, 1933, Gazette 1913, Page 55, No. 99.
Cairo Court of Appeal, December 18th, 1928, Review Al Mouhama, eighth year, pages 497 and 325.

Contrary Opinion.

Divorce is in principle prohibited and is permitted only in case of necessity. Accordingly, it does not depend on the husband's caprice ; it is a limited right, of which only reasonable use can be made. If the husband divorces his wife without cause, he is guilty of an abuse of his right and owes reparation for the damage caused, whether material or moral.

Cairo Court of First Instance, December 10th, 1932, Review Al Mouhama, thirteenth year, page 1133, No. 564.

Breaking-off of Betrothal.

Betrothal or promise of marriage does not constitute a contract carrying with it an obligation ; hence, if one of the parties fails in his undertakings, that party does not incur any responsibility. Further, the man has the right to take back whatever he may have advanced as dowry or given as a present, provided always that such dowry or presents are still available. The man may not therefore in any case be prosecuted for damages, nor may any attempt be made to determine the reason for which he has broken off the marriage.

Native Court of Appeal, December 17th, 1931, Review Al Mouhama, twelfth year, page 855, No. 422.
Alexandria Court of First Instance, November 14th, 1930, Official Bulletin, thirty-second year, page 76, No. 30.
Native Court of Appeal, May 23rd, 1926, Official Bulletin, twenty-seventh year, page 68, No. 45.

In cases concerning the breaking-off of a marriage, the Mixed Tribunal generally adopts this view, although in certain cases it may order the payment of damages. The Mixed Tribunal lays down as a condition that, if the man is to be regarded as responsible, he must have committed some fault independent of the actual breaking-off of the marriage, and that such fault must have caused injury to the other party. The responsibility in that case ensues from a quasi civil offence and not from the breaking of a contract. Most of the cases of this kind brought before the courts refer to sexual relations alleged to have taken place between the betrothed parties.

The Mixed Tribunal, when ordering payment of damages, argues that the promise of marriage was employed by the man as a means of seduction whereby the woman had been induced to yield. The Court convicts by reason of the sexual relations which have taken place and not by reason of the non-execution of the undertaking. The promise of marriage must, however, have been given previous to such sexual relations and must have been the determining cause in inducing the woman to yield. If the woman's misconduct is due to strong reciprocal feelings of sympathy, there are no grounds for reparation, either material or moral, even if a promise has been given in the meantime.

Finland.

[Translation.] June 11th, 1937.

Finland has nothing essential to add to previous information in regard to the status of women in Finland. As has been made plain in the information referred to, women are the legal equals of men in Finland for all essential purposes. There is not therefore at present any feminist issue to speak of in Finland; but feminist organisations aim at securing amendment in minor matters of such restrictions as are still imposed by law on women and slight improvements in their general position.

There are still restrictions on the appointment of women to certain posts; and the women's organisations have done everything in their power to do away with these restrictions. One of them is that no woman has hitherto been ordained priest. The Government has not failed to give attention to the aspirations of feminist circles in these matters.

The establishment of the nationality of the wife independently of that of her husband has also aroused interest in feminine circles; but the current Finnish law already makes provision to enable women to have a nationality other than that of their husband in certain cases. Accordingly, what interests the women workers' organisations is not so much the introduction of independent nationality during marriage as the establishment of the principle that any change of nationality during marriage requires the consent of both the married persons, and the creation of facilities to enable women to acquire their former nationality in the event of dissolution of their marriage. The Finnish Government for its part has always maintained the conception of the unity of the family; but, within the limits of this principle, it is prepared to consider the elimination of difficulties arising for women as a result of their husbands having a different nationality, and to take into consideration in this connection the above-mentioned views of the women's organisations.

As regards social legislation for the protection of women, opinions on the subject differ in Finland, as in a number of other countries, even in feminine circles. One section of the feminine organisations is in favour of doing away with special legislation in this matter. The women workers' organisations on the other hand take the view that the special legislation in question does not discriminate against them, but is to their advantage, and is moreover necessary to safeguard the welfare of future generations. The Finnish Government itself has always maintained (as may be gathered from Finnish internal legislation as well as from Finnish activities in connection with the International Labour Organisation) that there is nothing in this protective social legislation which conflicts with the principle of legal equality; and it proposes to adhere to this view.

All the women's organisations further attach importance to the principle of the same wage being paid for the same work to men and women. The Finnish Government does not, however, believe there is any appreciable inequality in this matter in Finland. In so far as there is inequality, it is the result rather of social conceptions, economic conditions and other circumstances which it is often difficult to modify directly by legislative action. So far as the Finnish Government is concerned, it will endeavour, within the limits of practical politics, to aim at the fullest possible equality in this connection also.

It will be clear from what has been said that, in the Finnish Government's opinion, there is no pressing feminist question at the present time in Finland and that (so far, at any rate, as Finland is concerned) international conventions on the subject are unnecessary, except perhaps in the case of regulation of the nationality of married women in certain cases. But in this matter, as in other questions relating to the equality of women, the Finnish Government is ready to negotiate with a view to international co-operation for improvement of the status of women, even where the position in Finland would not be affected.

India.[1]

June 17th, 1937.

So far as British India is concerned, the political and civil status of women may be considered under three main heads :

(1). Their position under the law of the country ;
(2). Their right to vote and stand for election to Legislatures and Local Bodies ;
(3). Their right to enter Government service and other professions.

Category 1 above may again be subdivided as follows :

(i) Right to inherit ;
(ii) Status under marriage laws ;
(iii) Guardianship of children ;
(iv) Appointment as honorary magistrates ;
(v) Right to practise as legal practitioners ;
(vi) Eligibility to serve as jurors and assessors ;
(vii) Differences of punishment ;
(viii) Appearance in Civil Courts ;
(ix) Offences against women.

1. Position of women under the law of the Country.

(i) Right to inherit.

The consolidated law applicable to intestate and testamentary succession in British India is contained in the Indian Succession Act, 1925. The important provisions relating to succession to intestate property are contained in Sections 32 to 49 of the Act. These provide for the succession of a daughter and a widow to a male deceased's property. The Parsees are governed in the matter of intestate succession by Sections 50 to 56 of the Act which provide that females including a daughter, a widow and a mother get a share in the property with the male heirs. This Act however governs succession, etc., in the case of communities other than Hindu, Muhammadan, Buddhist, Sikh and Jaina. The great bulk of the Indian population consists of Hindus and Muhammadans. The Muhammadan and Hindu Laws, although the latter varies widely in different parts of India, are personal and not territorial laws.

Under the Muhammadan Law of Succession, the husband or wife, and females as well as cognates, are recognised as competent to inherit. Parents and ascendants are given a right to inherit even when there are male descendants. Under the Hindu Law there is a close connection between religion and succession to property, the preferable right to perform the obsequies and subsequent rites being regarded as governing the question of the preferable right to succession of property or inheritance. Consequently, agnates generally exclude females from inheritance. It has, however, been enacted (Act II of 1929) in respect of the property of males not held in coparcenary and not disposed of by will, that a son's daughter, daughter's daughter, sister and sister's son shall in this order be entitled to rank in the order of succession next after a father's father and before a father's brother provided that a sister's son shall not include a son adopted after the sister's death.

A Hindu widow takes only a restricted estate in the property of her husband, and on her death such property passes to the heirs of her husband except such portion as may have been alienated by her for legal necessity. Alienations of her husband's estate or portions thereof for legal necessity, which includes the payment of her husband's debts and other charges on the estate, such as the payment of maintenance to female members of the family, debts incurred by the widow for her own maintenance, debts incurred for the funeral obsequies of her husband and for other primarily religious purposes, are valid and bind the actual reversioner succeeding to the estate on the death of the widow. In Bombay, however, a sister or a daughter inherits properties. In Malabar, widows and children (including female children) also inherit under Sections 23 and 24 of the Malabar Marriages Act, 1896.

On the whole, Hindu women suffer under certain disabilities in the matter of inheritance. Orthodox Hindu opinion has generally been opposed to removal of them on religious grounds. A number of Resolutions and Bills designed to ameliorate the position of women in this and other social matters has from time to time been brought forward in the Legislature by non-official members. There is a marked tendency among the more advanced sections of Indian political opinion towards improving the civil status of women, especially in regard to inheritance and their position under the marriage laws. In 1937, the Central Legislature passed the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Bill promoted by a non-official member of the Legislative Assembly. Under this measure, the property of a Hindu governed by the Dayabhag school of Hindu Law and the separate property, if any, of a Hindu governed by any other school of Hindu Law or by customary law dying intestate shall devolve upon his widow along with his lineal descendants, if any, in like manner as it devolves upon a son : provided that the widow of a predeceased son shall inherit in like manner as a son if there is no son surviving of such predeceased son, or as a son's son if there is surviving a son or a son's son of such predeceased son. This applies also to the widow of a predeceased son of a predeceased son. In the case of a Hindu governed by any school of Hindu Law other than Dayabhag or by customary law, dying intestate and having at the time of his death an interest in a Hindu joint family property his widow shall have in the property the same interest as he himself had. Any interest thus devolving on a Hindu widow shall be the limited interest known as a Hindu woman's estate, provided, however, that she shall have the same right of claiming partition as a male owner.

The following private Bills relating to inheritance are now pending before the Central Legislature :

(1) The Hindu Widow's Maintenance Bill. — According to this, a widow of a deceased coparcener in a joint Hindu family not having any son shall be entitled to get as maintenance a life estate in the share which her husband, if alive, would have got on partition in the joint family property, such widow being further entitled to demand for her maintenance a partition in the same manner in which her husband, if alive, would have been entitled to.

(2) The Hindu Widow's Right of Inheritance Bill. — The objects of this measure are as follows :

(i) Where the husband was at the time of his death a member of a joint Hindu family, she shall be entitled to such share of the joint family property as her husband would have been entitled to, had a partition taken place in his lifetime, and may also sue for partition. This share shall become her absolute property.

(ii) Where the husband of a widow was at the time of his death a member of a joint Hindu family, she shall, subject to the right of another widow, take his property absolutely and not merely as a life interest.

(3) The Adoption Validating Bill. — No adoption by a Hindu shall be invalid by reason only that the adoptive father could not have legally married in her maiden state the genitive mother of the adopted son.

(4) The Moslem Personal Law (Shariat) Application Bill. — It provides that notwithstanding any custom, usage or law to the contrary, in all questions regarding succession, special property of females, betrothal, marriage, divorce, maintenance, dower, adoption, guardianship, minority, bastardy, family relations, wills, legacies, gifts, partitions, any religious usage or institution including Wakf (trust and trust property), the rule of decision in cases where the parties are Moslems shall be the Moslem Personal Law (Shariat).

(ii) Status under Marriage Laws, etc.

In regard to inheritance, the status of married women in India under the Indian Succession Act, and Hindu and Muhammadan Laws has been stated above. Among Christians, the rights and remedies of a deserted wife are governed by Part VI of the Indian Divorce Act, 1869. Under this Act she can claim divorce, judicial separation and maintenance in certain circumstances. The parties are at liberty to marry again after divorce has been obtained. Parsees are governed in matters relating to marital rights by the Parsee Marriage and Divorce Act, 1936. This Act prohibits remarriages save after divorce during the lifetime of a first wife or husband, provides punishment for bigamy, and permits judicial separation, divorce, maintenance and remarriage in certain circumstances. A Muhammadan wife who is deserted by her husband is entitled to sue him for maintenance in a civil court. She cannot, however, get a decree for past maintenance unless such claim is based on specific agreement. If a Muhammadan marries a second wife during the life-time of the first wife, as he is entiled to do, the rights of the first wife are not in any way affected except that she with her co-wife succeeds jointly to the share in her husband's property allowable to a wife under the Muhammadan Law. A Muhammadan marriage may be dissolved, in the lifetime of the parties thereto, either by act of the husband or wife or by mutual agreement, or by a judicial order of separation, or it may be annulled.

A Hindu wife deserted by her husband can claim restitution of conjugal rights or maintenance. The mere fact that the husband has married a second wife does not entitle her to refuse conjugal rights to the husband or to claim separate maintenance. Otherwise a Hindu marriage is indissoluble and no divorce is allowed except in the case of marriages under the Special Marriage Act, 1872. This rule, however, is not of universal application and in certain Hindu castes divorce is permitted, if a custom to that effect is established. Section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, also prescribes a summary remedy for married women of all religions or communities to claim maintenance from their husbands.

A majority of Hindu widows are not allowed by social custom to remarry, but such remarriages are valid in law according to the Re-marriage of Hindu Widows Act, 1856 (XV of 1856). Marriage of children at a tender age was formerly a common practice in India, but such marriages are not so common now. Child marriages are not invalid, although the Child Marriage Restraint Act, 1929, makes marriages of males below 18 years and of girls below 14 years punishable offences.

The Special Marriage Act, 1872, which provides a form of marriage for persons who do not profess the Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Muhammadan, Parsi, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion and a form of optional marriage for persons who profess the Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion, penalises married persons marrying again under the Act and also bigamy. The Indian Divorce Act also applies to marriages performed under the Special Marriage Act. Succession to the property of any Hindu, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina who marries under this Act is regulated by the provisions of the Indian Succession Act, 1925.

The Married Women's Property Act, 1874, provides that the wages and earnings of any married woman, who did not profess the Hindu, Muhammadan, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion, or whose husband at the time of such marriage did not profess any of these religions, acquired or gained by her after the passing of the Act in any employment, occupation or trade carried on by her and not by her husband, and also any money or other property so acquired by her through the exercise of any literary, artistic or scientific skill, and all savings from and investments of such wages, earnings and property, shall be deemed to be her separate property.

Hindu women labour under disabilities in this matter similar to those stated in the last sub-paragraph of paragraph 2 above, and any move in the direction of removing these is apt to be opposed by orthodox Hindu opinion.

There is a marked tendency among the more advanced sections of Indian political opinion towards improving the position of women under the marriage law. The Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, 1936, of which mention has been made above, was recently passed by the Indian Legislature. This Act replaces the Parsi Marriage and Divorce Act, 1865, and brings its provisions into conformity with the views now prevalent among enlightened members of the Parsi community. The Indian Legislature has also passed in its last session (1937) the Arya Marriage Validation Act. This Act is intended to place beyond doubt the validity of inter-caste marriages among Arya Samajists, who form an appreciable number of the Hindu population of India. The object underlying this Act is to promote solidarity of Hindus by making inter-caste marriages among the various castes of Hindus permissible to the extent provided in the Act and also to legalise such marriages in the interests of parties to such marriages and their issue.

The Muslim Dissolution of Marriage Bill, promoted by a non-official Member, is now pending before the Central Legislature. The Bill enumerates the grounds on which a married Muslim woman may bring a suit against her husband for the dissolution of her marriage, and provides that the conversion of a married Muslim woman to a faith other than Islam shall not itself operate to dissolve her marriage.

(iii) Guardianship of Children.

Under the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, females are eligible equally with males for appointment as guardians of their children.

Under Section 60 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925 (39 of 1925), a father may by will appoint a guardian of either sex for his child during minority. This section has however no application in the case of Hindus, Muhammadans, Buddhists, Sikhs and Jainas, who are governed in the matter by their personal law. Under the Hindu Law, the father has the first claim and after him comes the mother. The Muhammadan Law gives the custody of a young child — for a boy the limit is fixed at seven years and for a girl when she attains puberty — to the mother or a near female relative. After a boy has attained his seventh year or a girl has attained puberty, the right to his or her custody belongs to the father, subject to the consideration of the welfare of the child. A mother however loses her right if she has married a man who is not closely related to the minor or lives a life of open immorality or if her occupation is such as to make it difficult for her to look after the child properly or if she neglects to take proper care of the child. According to the Muhammadan Law the right of guardianship with respect to a minor's property belongs to the father.

As a rule, the mother is the guardian of her illegitimate children, and as such is entitled to their custody.

(iv) Appointment as Honorary Magistrates.

Women are eligible for appointment as honorary magistrates. There are no women honorary magistrates in the Punjab, Bihar, Assam, North-West Frontier Province, Coorg,

Delhi, Baluchistan and Ajmer-Merwara. The number of women honorary magistrates in the other Provinces of British India is as below :

Madras	79		Brought forward:	126
Bombay	23		Central Provinces . .	13	(Central Provinces 7; Berar 6)
Bengal	14	(All in Calcutta)	Orissa	1
United Provinces . .	10		Sind	4
Carried forward:	126		Total	144

(v) Right to practise as Legal Practitioners.

Under the Legal Practitioners (Women) Act, 1923 (XXIII of 1923) women are entitled to be enrolled and to practise as legal practitioners.

(vi) Liability to serve as Jurors and Assessors.

Under Section 319 of the Criminal Procedure Code women are exempted from the liability to serve as jurors and assessors in criminal courts.

(vii) Differences of Punishment.

Criminal Procedure Code, 1898. — Section 393 of the Code provides that a woman shall not be punished with whipping; and under Section 302 the execution of capital sentence passed on a pregnant woman is postponed, and the High Court may, if it thinks fit, commute the sentence to transportation for life.

(viii) Appearance in Civil Courts.

Under Section 132 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, women who according to the customs and manners of the country ought not to be compelled to appear in public are exempt from personal appearance in court. Under Section 56 of the same code, a woman is exempt from arrest or detention in civil prison in execution of a decree for payment of money.

(ix) Offences against Women.

The Indian Penal Code makes special provision for offences connected with women — e.g., causing miscarriage and kindred acts (Sections 312 to 318), assault with intent to outrage a woman's modesty and insult to a woman (Sections 354 and 509), kidnapping or abducting a woman for an immoral purpose (Section 366 : kidnapping from lawful guardianship is an offence if the female minor is under 16 ; the age in regard to males is 14), procuration of girls (Sections 366A and B, 372, 373), and rape (Section 376). Of offences relating to marriage, those punishable under Sections 493 (cohabitation caused by deceitfully inducing a belief of lawful marriage), and 497 (adultery), are punishable only when the offender is a man, and in the case of an offence under Section 498 (enticing or taking away a married woman), the woman herself is not liable even as an abettor.

Section 552 of the Code of Criminal Procedure empowers a Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate to make an order, on complaint on oath, for the immediate restoration of an abducted woman or of a female child under the age of 16 years.

2. Women's Right to vote and stand for Election to Legislatures and Local Bodies.

(i) Women have been enfranchised and are eligible for election or nomination on the same terms as men to the Legislative Assembly and to the Council of State. These arrangements will, however, be superseded on the setting up of the Indian Federation under the Government of India Act, 1935.

Under the new Constitution, women are entitled in all provinces to vote for the provincial legislatures on the same qualifications as men, and are further entitled to claim differential qualifications peculiar to themselves. Any qualified woman voter is entitled to stand as a candidate for any seat on the same terms as men, and women, moreover, in most provinces have special seats set apart for them. The same will in general be the case with the new Federal Legislature, when it comes into being.

(ii) Provincial Elections.

The result of the recent provincial elections showed :

(1)	Number of women elected to seats reserved for them	41
(2)	Number elected to seats not reserved	10

No women have been included in the new Ministries. The proportion of women voters who exercised the franchise is compared with the proportion of the total number of persons who exercised the franchise in the table below :

	Percentage of women votes polled	Percentage of votes (men and women) polled
Madras Assembly	31.5	51.6
Madras Council	55.1	80.8
Bombay Assembly	42.4	51.7
Bombay Council	56.4	77.4
Bengal Assembly	5.2	41.5
Bengal Council	20.5	46.6
United Provinces Assembly	19.3	58.3
United Provinces Council	35.5	70.2
Punjab Assembly	33.56	63.7
Bihar Assembly	7.9	59.22
Bihar Council	67.34	66.89
Central Provinces and Berar Assembly	24.5	74.2
Assam Assembly	29.23	71.35
Assam Council	91.57	94.04
North-West Frontier Province Assembly	71.4	72.8
Orissa Assembly	6.62	58.87
Sind Assembly	34.7	54.2

In most provinces women have the same rights as men to vote and stand for election to Local Bodies.

(iii) Nationality.

Effect has been given to the terms of the League of Nations Convention relating to the conflict in Nationality laws which bear on the nationality of married women. The Indian Naturalisation Act was amended in 1936 so as to :

(1) Provide that a married woman whose husband acquires British Indian Nationality during marriage shall only acquire such nationality if she makes a declaration of her desire to do so, and

(2) Protect such a woman from loss of British Indian Nationality as a consequence of the loss of such nationality by her husband unless by reason of the acquisition of a new nationality by her husband she also has acquired that nationality.

(iv) Literacy of Males and Females.

The following figures show the literacy of males and females in India according to the 1931 census :

Total population aged 5 years and over			Literate
Persons	Males	Females	Persons	Males	Females
296,301,570	153,778,322	142,523,248	28,138,856	23,969,751	4,169,105

3. Women's Right to enter Government Service and Other Professions

Governments in India had, under the old constitution, full discretion in making women eligible or ineligible for appointment to posts under their control. The position under the new constitution is, however, different. Section 275 of the Government of India Act, 1935, provides that a person shall not be disqualified by sex for being appointed to any civil service of, or civil post under, the Crown in India other than such a service or post as may be specified by any general or special order made :

(a) By the Governor-General in the case of services and posts in connection with the affairs of the Federation ;

(b) By the Governor of a Province in the case of services and posts in connection with the affairs of the Province ;

(c) By the Secretary of State in relation to appointments made by him.

This is a matter in which under the new constitution the Governors, and after the setting up of the Indian Federation the Governor-General, will act on the advice of their Ministers, and the provisions of Section 275 of the Act quoted above are sufficient to safeguard the legitimate interests of women in the sphere of public services. As regards professions other than Government service, the legal profession has been dealt with in paragraph 7 above. There is no legal bar to women entering any profession.

Iceland.

January 14th, 1937.

I. Introduction.

Since the colonisation of Iceland in the latter half of the ninth century and down to our own time, there has been under Icelandic law a great distinction between the legal status of men and women, although the conditions varied in different historical periods. The political and social position of women in Iceland has on the whole been similar to that in other Scandinavian countries. Throughout the ages women enjoyed no political rights and their civic rights were in many respects inferior to those of men, especially as regards property rights, right to succession and marriage. It is not until the middle of the nineteenth century that we observe in legislation a tendency to extend the civic rights of women and to create a greater equality between the sexes. This tendency may be traced to the ideal of equality which followed the French Revolution. In the latter half of the nineteenth century, women in Iceland united in the campaign for the extension of women's rights, on the model of foreign organisations. Owing to this struggle, together with the whole nation's growing sentiment for equality, women in Iceland now legally enjoy, in nearly all respects, the same social and political privileges as men, as may be seen from the following particulars :

II. The Political Status of Women.

1. Nationality (Act No. 34, of 1935).

The conditions for obtaining or losing the right of Icelandic citizenship are the same for men and unmarried women. On the other hand, a married woman acquires the nationality of her husband. A woman, who by birth is an Icelandic subject, but marries an alien, does not, however, lose her Icelandic nationality as long as she resides in Iceland.

2. Right of obtaining Public Poor Relief (Act No. 135, of 1935).

Formerly it was a principal rule that a married woman was entitled to poor law relief in the parish or union where her husband was chargeable. Under Act No. 135, of 1935, every person who becomes chargeable to the parish is entitled to poor relief in the parish where he or she is domiciled. This provision applies to men and women alike. Thus a husband and wife who do not cohabit may be chargeable to separate parishes.

3. Right to hold Public Office, etc. (Act No. 37, of 1911).

The said Act of 1911 granted to women the right to study and pass final examinations in all educational establishments on equal terms with men, the University of Iceland included. The same Act extended to women the right to hold any office under the Crown, temporal or spiritual, on equal terms with men.

4. Franchise and Eligibility to the Althing (the Icelandic Parliament) (Act No. 18, of 1934, cp. Section 28, of the Icelandic Constitution).

Women, married and single, now enjoy voting privileges and the right of election to and sitting in the Althing on equal terms with men. This right was first extended to women by an Act of Parliament in 1915.

5. Right to vote at Municipal Elections and to be elected a Councillor (Act No. 119, of 1933).

Women in Iceland are qualified to vote in all matters relating to local government, rural and urban, and are eligible to serve as members of municipal bodies on equal terms with men. This right was first granted to women under Act No. 49, of 1909.

From the foregoing may be seen that in Iceland women now fully enjoy political equality with men in all respects.

III. The Status of Women under Civil Law.

1. Personal Rights.

Women attain majority (the right to manage their own personal and pecuniary affairs) and lose such right in the same way as men (Act No. 60, of 1917). Thus women, married and single, attain majority when they have reached the lawful age, which is the same for men and women. Both sexes have the right to choose their own place of dwelling and their personal occupation when they have reached the age of 16, and right of property when they have reached the age of 21. There is, however, the difference between the status of men and women in this respect, that a widow and a woman who has obtained judicial separation or divorce has the right to manage her own property although she is younger than 21 years. On the other hand, a widower and a man who has divorced his wife does not attain majority until he is 21 years of age. A woman who has attained majority may be appointed guardian for infants on the same terms as men.

2. Family Rights.

Women have the right of consent to matrimony after the age of 21 years. Women under that age must obtain the consent of their parents or guardian to marry. The same rule applies to men (Act No. 39, of 1921). The conditions for the celebration of marriage are the same for men and women, with the exception that it is forbidden to marry men under 21 years, whereas a woman may be married when she has attained the age of 18 years. Prior to the celebration of marriage there is a betrothal or promise of marriage, which, however, may be broken by either party without special reasons. Provided that the party mainly responsible for the breach of promise of marriage shall make good to the other party any financial loss sustained in consequence of the intended marriage, e.g., loss of employment, purchase of articles intended for the future home, etc. If a girl engaged to be married gets with child by her fiancé during the time of engagement, and the fiancé subsequently breaks the promise of marriage, the woman may claim (immaterial) damages for disturbance of her conditions of life. The grounds on which a petition for the dissolution of marriage may be presented are the same for husband and wife.

After marriage the wife has the right to use her husband's surname (Act No. 54, of 1925). It is held that she does not lose the right to use her husband's surname after divorce has taken place. Husband and wife have equal right to decide where to make their mutual home.

Rules as to the right of husband and wife to hold and dispose of property are to be found in Act No. 20, of 1923. Husband and wife enjoy equal property rights. The general rule is that either party disposes of his or her separate property, if such property exists (property is usually made separate by means of a marriage settlement), moreover husband or wife dispose of any property held by him or her prior to marriage, and of property acquired by him or her after marriage. The right to dispose of property is, however, subject to some mutual restrictions, to the effect that the consent of both husband and wife may be required to make a disposition valid.

Husband and wife are liable for the maintenance of each other as long as the marriage contract is in force, and neither party can become chargeable to the parish as long as the other party has the means to maintain him or her. If a husband or wife shall neglect his or her liability for the maintenance of the other party, such party may claim that the other by order of a magistrate be made liable to maintain him or her, and is entitled to assistance from the proper authorities for recovering the alimony.

The relation of parents to their children is dealt with in Acts Nos. 46 and 57, of 1921. Husband and wife have joint care and custody of their legitimate children, there being no difference between the right of father and mother. On the other hand the mother of an illegitimate child alone has the right of care and custody of her child, in the same manner as husband and wife jointly have of their legitimate child. The father of a bastard child is liable to contribute towards the maintenance and education of his child. If he does not pay such contribution of his own free will, the mother may have an order made on him for payment, and she is entitled to assistance from the proper authorities for recovering such payment, free of charge to herself.

3. Right of Succession.

Under Icelandic law, down to 1850, women inherited only one half as compared with men, but in that year (1850) this difference was abolished. Under existing laws the status of men and women as regards right of succession is exactly the same.

4. Financial Rights and Freedom of Trade.

Under Icelandic laws there is no distinction between men and women in this respect. It may be mentioned in particular, that women have equal right with men to any occupation for which a licence is required, e.g., commerce, innkeeping, pharmacy, etc.

As may be seen from the above, women may be said to enjoy full political and civic equality with men under Icelandic law.

New Zealand.

April 27th, 1937.

I. Civil Rights.

(1) A woman is neither permitted nor required to serve on a jury, whether a common jury, grand jury or special jury, and whether in a criminal or civil action : Juries Act, 1908, Section 3, where the term " man " is used, as throughout the Act.

(2) Membership of the Legislative Council is limited to male persons : Legislature Act, 1908, Section 2 (1).

(3) In matters depending on domiciliary status, the domicile of a married woman is that of her husband. (For statutory modification in connection with divorce, see Section III below.)

(4) The nationality of a married woman is in general that of her husband : British Nationality and Status of Aliens (in New Zealand) Amendment Act, 1934/35, Schedule. Qualifications are noted below.

(5) A woman marrying an alien does not lose British nationality unless she acquires her husband's nationality : ibid.

(6) A woman married to a man who during the marriage loses British nationality does not lose British nationality unless she acquires her husband's new nationality, and even if she acquires that nationality she may nevertheless by declaration retain British nationality : ibid.

(7) The alien wife of an alien who has become naturalised does not acquire British nationality unless she makes a declaration of her desire to do so : ibid.

(8) Where parentage determines whether a person is a natural-born British subject it is the father's national status that is adverted to : British Nationality and Status of Aliens (in New Zealand) Act, 1928, Second Schedule, Clause I.

(9) A woman alien seeking naturalisation if she was a British subject prior to a marriage to an alien no longer in existence can be naturalised without the requirement of four years' residence or five years in the service of the Crown : ibid., First Schedule, clause 2 (5).

(10) Revocation of a husband's certificate of naturalisation may, if the Minister of Internal Affairs in certain circumstances so directs, or if she makes a declaration of alienage, operate as revocation of the naturalisation of his wife : ibid., First Schedule, clause 7A.

(11) The wife of an alien enemy if she was at birth a British subject has a right, subject to the Minister's discretion, to obtain a certificate of naturalisation : British Nationality and Status of Aliens (in New Zealand) Amendment Act, 1934/35, Schedule.

(12) A woman marrying an alien and thereby acquiring his nationality may by declaration retain in New Zealand the status of a natural-born British subject : ibid., Section 3.

II. Rights relating to Property, Contract and Tort.

(1) The only women who may hold a licence authorising the sale of alcoholic liquor are (a) a widow, (b) a divorcee, (c) a wife in whose favour a protection order made under the Married Women's Property Act, 1908, is current : Licensing Act, 1908, Section 72.

(2) A married woman living with her husband may not enter into a partnership with a person other than her husband without the consent of her husband given under seal : Married Women's Property Act, 1908, Section 29.

(3) A woman over 17 may with the sanction of the Court make a marriage settlement ; a man only if over 20 : Property Law Act, 1908, Section 99.

(4) A married woman can make a valid will, if not under 18 ; a married man, only if not under 19 ; Infants Act, 1908, Section 14.

(5) Upon the death intestate of a husband without surviving issue, the widow is entitled to £500 in addition to her share of residue : Administration Act, 1908, Section 47.

(6) Upon the death intestate of an unmarried person, the father, if surviving, takes to the exclusion of the mother ; and if the father is dead, the mother takes not exclusively like the father but equally with the intestate's brothers and sisters, or their children : Statute of Distribution, 1670 (G.B.).

(7) When a male illegitimate dies intestate without legitimate issue, his widow and mother succeed in equal shares, or if only one of them survives, she succeeds to the whole estate. But when a female illegitimate dies intestate without legitimate issue, her husband takes. When a male dies intestate, his illegitimate issue have no claim under any circumstances to his estate. But when a female dies intestate without a husband or legitimate issue, her illegitimate issue (if any) succeed ; and if there are none, and the deceased herself is illegitimate, then her mother or mother's next of kin succeed to the whole estate : ibid., Sections 50, 51, 52.

(8) Trustees of the estate of a person who leaves a widow and children, when the net estate does exceed £300, may apply portions thereof to the maintenance and support of the widow and children.

(9) Special protection is given to life insurance policies taken out for the benefit of the insured's wife, or wife and children : Life Insurance Act, 1908, section 77 ; and to annuities purchased on behalf of the wife of a bankrupt annuitant : Inalienable Life Annuities Act, 1910, Section 20.

(10) When a married man leaves an estate not exceeding £10,000, the value of any succession acquired by his wife up to £5,000 is exempt from estate duty : Death Duties Act, 1921, Section 13.

(11) Succession duty on the value of the succession is payable by a wife as successor on the scale following : up to £10,000, no succession duty ; not exceeding £20,000, 2 % ; over £20,000, 4 %. A husband successor pays on the scale following : up to £500 no duty ; not exceeding £1,500, 1 % ; not exceeding £2,500, 2 % ; over £2,500, 3 % ; ibid., Section 17.

(12) A wife has by common law certain powers to pledge her husband's credit for necessaries ; but not a husband his wife's credit.

(13) Words imputing unchastity to women are actionable without special damage : Judicature Act, 1908, Section 101.

III. Divorce and Family Rights and Liabilities.

(1) On a wife's suit, the husband's habitual drunkenness for four years coupled with cruelty or failure to support is a ground for divorce ; on a husband's suit the corresponding ground for four years' habitual drunkenness coupled with neglect and unfitness to discharge domestic duties : Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act, 1928, Section 10 (c).

(2) On a wife's suit, special grounds are that the husband since the celebration of the marriage has been guilty of certain crimes : ibid., Section 10 (k).

(3) An alleged adulterer must as a rule be joined as co-respondent ; an alleged adultress must be joined as respondent if the Court so directs : ibid., Section 11.

(4) A deserted or separated wife whose husband was domiciled in New Zealand at the time of desertion or separation retains her New Zealand domicile : ibid., Section 12.

(5) A wife three years resident in New Zealand and living three years apart from her husband is given a statutory domicile enabling her to obtain a divorce in the New Zealand Court : Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Amendment Act, 1930, Section 3.

(6) A wife whilst separated who is left without maintenance is deemed to have been deserted : Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act, 1928, Section 13.

(7) Damages for adultery can be given only in favour of a husband petitioner : ibid., Section 29.

(8) Alimony, permanent maintenance and security for costs may be ordered in favour of a wife (whether petitioner or respondent) : ibid., Section 33 and Divorce Rules.

(9) On a decree for divorce or judicial separation on the ground of the wife's adultery, the Court may order a settlement of the wife's property : ibid., Section 36.

(10) The rights of husband and wife to maintenance from the other upon a summary separation are conferred in slightly different terms : Destitute Persons Act, 1910, Sections 17, 23.

(11) Legitimation after marriage of a child born before marriage requires a statutory declaration by the father : Legitimation Act, 1908.

(12) If, however, a man having married the mother of a child born before marriage dies before the child has been legitimated the mother may make application for the child's legitimation : Legitimation Amendment Act, 1921/22, Section 3.

IV. Industrial Law.

Legislation dealing with factories, shops and offices contains special provision as to hours of labour and other matters as they affect females.

V. Criminal Law.

(1) A group of indictable offences against women is created by the Crimes Act, 1908, Sections 211 to 223, and 226 to 229. Corresponding acts committed against men are not made criminal.

(2) Corresponding provisions for minor offences summarily punishable appear in the Justices of the Peace Act, 1927, Sections 203, 208 to 214.

(3) There is no counterpart affecting the female sex to Sections 153 and 154 of the Crimes Act, 1908.

(4) The ages of the sexes vary for the purposes of the Children's Protection law ; generally boys are thereby protected to the age of 14, girls to the age of 16 ; Infants Act, 1908, Part IV.

NOTES AS TO TRANSITORY PROVISIONS.

The foregoing statement omits certain matters relating to rights of property which may continue at the present day having arisen under a previous law, but which could not now arise anew. Examples are :

(i) The estate during their joint lives that a husband acquired in his wife's land, if it accrued before January 1st, 1885.

(ii) A widower's tenancy by the curtesy if it arose before the Administration Act, 1879, came into force.

(iii) A widow's right to dower if it arose before the Real Estate Descent Act, 1874, came into force.

(iv) Restrictions against anticipation of income during any marriage that might at any time be subsisting, if imposed under the authority of the Married Women's Property Act, 1908, when property was settled on a woman, are still recognised, subject to the right of the Supreme Court to remove them for sufficient reasons ; but any such restriction if contained in an instrument executed on or after January 1st, 1937, is void : Law Reform Act, 1936, Section 13.

(v) A judgment against a married woman (whether on a contract or otherwise) for payment of a sum of money in respect of a contract entered into or debt or obligation incurred before September 18th, 1936, operates as a judgment against her property, but not as a personal judgment. Though it can be made the foundation of bankruptcy proceedings, it cannot support proceedings for committal to prison for non-payment of the judgment debt : Law Reform Act, 1936, Section 15 (c). But since September 18th, 1936, a married woman (except as above) is subject to the law relating to enforcement of judgments and orders as if she were a feme-sole : ibid., Section 12 (d).

Roumania.

[Translation.]

May 31st, 1937.

The Roumanian Civil Code, which places women, and more particularly married women, in a state of inferiority, is simply a slightly modified reproduction of the Code Napoléon.

The characteristic effect of marriage is the transition from civil capacity to incapacity, although the old Roumanian laws, particularly those of Moldavia, treated married women with great consideration.

The incapacity of married women, which has no justification in the history of Roumanian law, calls for the strongest criticism. Since the wife now plays no less important a part than the husband in production, her subordination is simply an anomaly.

Marriage should not be regarded as a union between one who is superior and one who is inferior, but as a partnership of equals.

This attitude and this obligation are embodied in Article 6 of the Roumanian Constitution of 1923 : " The civil rights of women shall be established on the basis of complete equality between the sexes ". Pending the amendment of the Roumanian Civil Code, of which the draft has already been completed, the Law of April 20th, 1932, concerning the abolition of the civil incapacity of married women (more particularly Articles 197 to 208 inclusive of the Civil Code, paragraph 1 of Article 687 of the Civil Code, paragraph 3 of Article 950 of the Civil Code, Article 1879 of the Civil Code, and Articles 15 and 16 of the Commercial Code) recognises their legal capacity.

But even apart from marriage, the legal situation of women is characterised by a series of disabilities.

There is the question of the situation of women in relation to the problem of children born out of wedlock.

Affiliation proceedings are prohibited (Article 307). Under the new Code they are permitted (Article 311).

Every child has the right to demand that those who have imposed existence upon it shall provide it with the wherewithal to live.

Nothing can be more unfair than to lay the whole burden of the fault upon the mother.

Affiliation proceedings are a feature of the most advanced type of modern legislation.

The draft Code adopts the principle that proof of paternal descent may be established by an action in the Courts (Article 312).

The present situation, under which the woman is solely responsible for her children, is particularly serious in Roumania, since what are known as " trial marriages " exist in the villages. The man takes the woman conditionally, that is to say, with the idea of having her for his wife for a limited time. As often as not she is repudiated and is obliged to look after her children alone.

The Civil Code still contains a series of provisions which are incompatible with the new situation created by Article 6 of the Constitution, and these provisions have accordingly been abolished or amended in the new draft Code :

(1) A woman must obey her husband (abolished).

(2) A woman is bound to live with her husband and to follow him wherever he may think fit to establish his domicile.

Under the new Code, husband and wife are bound to choose their domicile together. In case of disagreement, the husband's wishes must prevail. It is open to the wife not to acquiesce in the husband's decision when this constitutes an abuse of his right.

(3) During the marriage, the father alone may exercise authority (amended in the new Code, in conformity with Article 6 of the Constitution).

(4) A woman may not be the guardian of her child; she has no powers of administration or legal power over the property of her child (amended in the new Code).

(5) A marriage cannot be dissolved except for certain specific reasons (Articles 211 et seq. of the Civil Code).

Nowadays, when marriage is an association voluntarily entered into, it should also be continued on the same terms.

The new Code abolishes divorce " by mutual consent ", a procedure which was both difficult and complicated and which was accordingly rarely adopted.

The above-mentioned " specific reasons " are limited by the new Code, and divorce will in future be more difficult to obtain.

(6) When marriage is dissolved by death, the widow must be poor in order to inherit; even in such a case she can obtain only the usufruct of a lawful share of the inheritance (Article 684).

Under the new draft Code, the estate is inherited on terms of reciprocity.

As regards nationality, under the Civil Code " a Roumanian woman who marries a foreigner assumes the status of her husband " (Article 19). This conception was amended by the provisions of Article 38 of the Law of February 24th, 1924, on the acquisition and loss of Roumanian nationality.

According to the new text, a Roumanian woman becomes an alien unless she has retained her Roumanian nationality under the marriage contract or in virtue of an explicit declaration, made in authentic form, before or on the occasion of her marriage. A woman thus has the option of retaining her Roumanian nationality, although the principle is that she loses it.

Some amendment of the law is necessary here.

The political rights of Roumanian women are limited. Roumanian women may be elected to municipal councils and district councils, that is to say, they may hold office under the administration. They can also elect members to these bodies.

The women's organisations are still claiming full political rights, because only when these are secured will married and unmarried women be able to obtain complete equality with men in all matters relating to the exercise of civil and political rights — more particularly the right to exercise all electoral, legislative, legal, executive, or administrative functions, including also the right to be elected or to sit or vote as a member of any constituent body exercising such functions — in all matters relating to public offices and honorary offices, and in all matters relating to the exercise of professions, trades and occupations.

The League of Nations might transform the situation of women all over the world by means of an international Convention providing that men and women shall have the same rights throughout the territory subject to the jurisdiction of the contracting countries.

Roumania has adopted all the Conventions proposed by the International Labour Office which refer to the protection of women in industry :

(1) The Convention concerning the Employment of Women before and after Childbirth.

(2) The Convention concerning Employment of Women during the Night.

(3) The recommendation concerning the Protection of Women and Children against Lead-poisoning.

(4) The recommendation concerning the Protection of Emigrant Women and Girls on board Ship.

The laws for the protection of women in industry do not at present have the desired effect. The working woman herself protests, because the need for earning her living makes her forget her own interests. She usually works for her children, and often also for her husband when he is out of work. Seeing how necessary it is to protect her, some other remedy must be found. One thing that might be done for the working woman is to protect her child and relieve her of the burden of its upkeep by creating homes for the children of working women, that is to say, institutions which would be responsible for looking after, educating and training such children. These institutions should not be regarded as charitable organisations, and every woman would be asked to pay a small sum for the maintenance of her child.

When their children are safely provided for, women will be able to enjoy the benefit of the laws for their protection. As things are now, they are entitled to complain of the restrictions which conflict with the principle of freedom of labour.

Sweden.

[Translation.]

July 7th, 1937.

There is complete equality between the sexes in Sweden in the matter of political rights. In 1863, the law was amended so as to grant a wide measure of communal franchise to unmarried women. A reform extending this right in principle to married women was enacted in 1908. The following year, a provision was adopted laying down the general principle of the eligibility of women for communal " positions of trust ". Universal suffrage on equal terms for both sexes was introduced in 1919 for communal elections. The law provides that women shall always be represented on certain communal administrative bodies. The Constitution was amended in 1921 to provide for women's right to vote for and be elected to the Riksdag.

As regards women's eligibility for public office, there was an evolution of opinion in the second half of the nineteenth century and at the beginning of the twentieth century which resulted, in 1921 — in consequence of the amendment of the Constitution and subject to certain exceptions — in the recognition of the principle of sex equality.

As regards the acquisition and loss of nationality, the law provides that a foreign woman who marries a Swedish national acquires Swedish nationality by her marriage, but that in all other cases the woman's position in relation to the man is practically independent. In order that the naturalisation of an alien shall entail the acquisition of Swedish nationality by his wife, it is necessary, for example, that the wife should give her express consent, failing which she would be stateless. For a Swedish woman, marriage with an alien or the naturalisation of her husband abroad does not ipso facto involve the loss of Swedish nationality. It may be noted, however, that the Swedish law on nationality is based on the general principle that any person who has acquired the nationality of a foreign country or has established his domicile there after such acquisition loses the status of Swedish national and that this principle applies also to a woman who, by her marriage or the naturalisation of her husband, acquires a foreign nationality.

The principle of sex equality is to-day fully recognised in matters of civil law. An important step as regards the recognition of women's rights in this sphere was taken in 1863, when the rule was adopted fixing the civil majority of unmarried women at 25 years of age. Later, in 1884, the age of majority was fixed for both sexes at 21 years. At that date, a woman's right of disposal over her person and property was still restricted by the marital power (målsmanskap) representing the right of the husband to administer the joint affairs of both parties and to represent his wife in relation to third parties. The marriage law of 1920, which is still in force, abolished the right of the husband to represent his wife and put both parties on a footing of absolute equality as regards their reciprocal obligations and duties and as regards their children. There is an explicit provision to the effect that a woman's domestic activities are to be regarded as a contribution towards the maintenance of the family. The principle of the equality of husband and wife is mitigated only by usage, which generally gives the father guardianship over legitimate minor children. In case of dissolution of the marriage, the custody and guardianship of the children is entrusted by the court to whichever of the two parties it thinks most desirable from the point of view of the children's welfare. The right of guardianship over illegitimate children is generally vested in the mother.

It will be seen from the foregoing considerations that the Swedish law places women on a footing of equality with men in political matters, in questions of civil law and in all essential matters.

Czechoslovakia.

July 5th, 1937.

[Translation.]

The Czechoslovak Government has nothing to add to its communication of September 5th, 1936,[1] concerning the civil and political status of women in Czechoslovakia, and, in view of the conclusions arrived at in that communication, does not consider it possible at present to state its views as to the measures which might be taken by the League of Nations on the matter in question.

Turkey.

[Translation.]

April 6th, 1937.

Referring to my communication of February 28th, 1936,[1] I have the honour to remind you that Turkish law makes no distinction in principle between men and women as regards either political or civil status.

To supplement the information I conveyed to you in the above-mentioned letter, I have the honour to add that from the point of view of public law, Article 4 of the Law on Civil Servants makes no distinction between men and women as regards eligibility for public offices.

Turkish women take part in the legislative and municipal elections, and may be elected as Deputies, Town Councillors or Mayors. They may also stand for election to the general councils of the vilayets and the councils of village elders, in conformity with the pertinent laws.

Article 1 of Law No. 1111 exempting women from military service and Article 9 of Law No. 1525, which frees them from the statutory labour tax, should be mentioned in this connection.

PART II. — COMMUNICATIONS FROM WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL ORGANISATIONS.

The following communications have been received from women's international associations :

INTERNATIONAL ALLIANCE OF WOMEN FOR SUFFRAGE AND EQUAL CITIZENSHIP.

May 31st, 1937.

The International Alliance of Women for Suffrage and Equal Citizenship has endeavoured to collect information on ten points vitally affecting the position or status of women. The information has been collected in forty-five countries and a summary of the replies received is attached in tabular form.

Suffrage and Eligibility.

In most of the forty-five countries under review, women have full or partial political rights. In some of the countries where women have no such rights (or only very limited rights), the possibility of their obtaining full rights is not remote. For example :

In Colombia, the amendment to the Constitution only needs ratification ;

In Egypt, the Constitution does not forbid the granting of these rights ;

In Greece, the Constitution of 1927, Article 6, states that political rights may be granted by law ;

In Roumania, the Constitution, Article 6, says : " A special law, voted by a two-thirds majority, may determine the conditions under which women shall exercise their political rights " ;

In the Netherlands Indies, white women have eligibility rights.

Participation in Official Committees and in League of Nations Activities.

In a majority of the countries women serve on Government Commissions and other official committees, and in many they have been sent as delegates or experts to meetings of the League of Nations and to the Conferences of the International Labour Organisation.

Diplomatic Service.

The Diplomatic and Consular Services are so far open to women in only a few countries, among them being the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Brazil, Mexico and Cuba. In Brazil, for instance, there are seven women consuls.

Judges, etc.

In a number of countries women can be judges or magistrates, and can also serve on juries. Among these countries we may note the following in which women have actually been appointed to such positions or in which no bar to their appointment exists : Austria, the United Kingdom, Canada, Chile, Finland, Lithuania, Norway, Poland, Sweden, the United States of America, and notably Czechoslovakia, where there are seventy-one women serving as judges in different courts. In England there are 1,200 women Justices of the Peace, i.e., unpaid magistrates in the lowest courts in small towns and rural areas.

Civil Status.

Unmarried women and widows have generally the same status as men. As to married women, the question of domicile is almost uniformly settled in favour of the husband's domicile. As exceptions we may note Sweden and Iceland, where a woman has the same right as a man to choose her domicile.

Nationality.

For a variety of reasons it is becoming much more usual for a woman to be able to retain her nationality on marriage with an alien. We believe that it will soon be necessary to re-open this question internationally : anomalies are being produced as a result of the ratification of the Hague Nationality Convention by some States. In the United Kingdom, for instance, a woman marrying an alien within a dozen different nationalities,remains British ; but if she marries within half-a-dozen other nationalities she loses her British nationality.

Matrimonial Rights.

In many countries married women have a right to earn, but only with the husband's consent or authorisation. Moreover new laws have in recent years shown a tendency to interfere with this elementary human right, and such laws constitute a very serious menace to women.

Married women can hold property in many countries, though in many this property is administered by the husband. In the following countries, however, married women have control of their own property : South Africa, Argentine, Australia, Austria, Belgium (reserved property), United Kingdom, Ceylon, Denmark, Finland, Irish Free State, Lithuania, Norway, Roumania, Sweden, Switzerland (under the regime of " séparation de biens "), Syria (the woman controls her estates), Turkey, United States of America.

Divorce is allowed in most countries, but — especially in Eastern countries — the grounds for it weight the balance against women.

Alimony is often granted to women but, except in a few countries, women are also expected to contribute to their husbands' maintenance if necessary.

It is often stated that the guardianship of children is vested in both parents, but the paternal power prevails except in a few countries, viz., Australia, United Kingdom, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway, Sweden.

Criminal Law.

As a rule male and female offenders are treated equally, but details have not been supplied except in regard to

Prostitution.

In many countries prostitution is a crime for the woman only and many States retain the degrading system of State or Municipal licensed houses of prostitution. Progress has been made even on this point, and procuring and traffic in women are being seriously dealt with, largely as a result of the work done by the Social Questions Committee of the League of Nations.

Public Services, Professions and Industry, Education and Training.

In most countries State and Municipal services are open to women, but it is rare to find that they have in practice equal access to the higher posts, and in many cases marriage is a bar to employment.

Of recent years women are seldom definitely excluded from any profession or occupation, but it is rare to find them in the most important position. Generally speaking women do not obtain the same salaries when employed, nor enjoy the same opportunity as men to enlarge the scope of their professional work.

In most countries all educational facilities are open to women, but in some cases these are limited, as for instance in technical schools from which girls are sometimes excluded. Also where there are separate schools for boys and girls, the latter receive less financial support from the government. India is a case in point. It is also the case that the number of women students is limited (numerus clausus) and in a few cases some courses of study are closed to them. Scholarships are available for women and girls in greatly reduced numbers.

In the Memorandum on Status of Women submitted to the League of Nations by the Alliance in 1935, it was claimed that there should be no distinction based on sex in regard to nationality, and that women should have equal political rights with men, this to apply to all electoral rights and to eligibility to public offices.

We also claimed equality for the married woman to dispose of herself or her property as freely as a man. We laid great stress on the need for economic equality since the principal object of the Alliance is " a real equality of liberty, status and opportunities between men and women ".

After a fuller study of the question, we stand to-day in exactly the same position. From the analysis of the position of women in forty-five countries quoted above, we may say that approximately over 150,000,000 women have obtained political rights, and probably some 200 women sit in the various parliaments of the world. A few hold or have held office as Ministers of State, and a small number are in the diplomatic service.

This limited experiment in the collaboration of women in the service of the modern world cannot give an adequate opportunity of judging the real value of women's possible contribution to the solution of the problems confronting the world to-day: problems of childhood and motherhood, and of youth ; difficulties in the lives of working people ; unemployment and leisure ; nutrition ; and last but greatest of all, Peace.

These problems should be the concern of all — men and women alike, on a plane of equality in all spheres, political, civil or legal, and economic. Men and women must be equally represented everywhere. Parental authority must be the concern of both parents equally, together with all family interests. Can either sex fight vice, disease and poverty alone ? Is not the loss of women's full co-operation the reason for past failures ?

We aim frankly at seeing an equal number of men and women governing and administering the States of the world. We think the influence of women has not yet been felt, and our claim for equality is based on an ardent desire to help to solve the problems confronting the world in the interests of all. Does not peace often depend on the energy, skill and judgment of the few men in power in different countries ? We claim to have a share in this responsibility.

We desire to take up the work for civilisation on the basis of justice, of peace, of full and equal collaboration. We want to give our best to humanity.

We consider that the data we provide shows the steady advance of women towards an equal status with men, and we think the time is ripe for international action to secure that equal status. We therefore ask the Assembly of the League of Nations to affirm the principle of the political, civil or legal, and economic equality of the sexes and to draft and adopt a convention instituting for women, married or unmarried, a status in conformity with these principles.

In this we are in agreement with other international organisations of women who have declared their belief in an equality of rights and responsibilities for men and women.

If such a convention secured the agreement of many States, as we believe to be possible, it would constitute a valuable step towards the goal at which we aim : the collaboration of the sexes for the development of peace and justice throughout the world.

ANNEX.

Tabulated information relating to the following countries.

Union of South Africa	China	Hungary	Poland

Union of South Africa.

Political Status.

1. Full political rights ; two women in Parliament ; can hold ministerial office.

2. Can vote for and sit on Provincial, District, Municipal Councils. Women are mayors of several towns.

3. . . .

4. . . .

5. Judicature open to women. Women can act as jurors in special cases only.

Civil Status.

Unmarried women or widows have the same status as men.

6. Married women have the husband's domicile. On marriage a woman acquires her husband's nationality. If he changes during marriage, she can retain South African nationality.

7. Married women can hold property by contract. They can carry on business, sue or be sued provided the husband consents.

8. ...

9. ...

10. ...

Argentine.

Political Status.

1. No suffrage or eligibility. No participation in Government.

2. Only in the City of Rosario (Santa Fé), and in the Province of Entre Rios. In San Juan women have municipal suffrage and the legislative vote for renewal of Executive Power.

The 1934 Constitutions of Buenos Aires and Entre Rios admit the possibility of woman suffrage if established by special laws.

3. No.

4. No.

5. No.

Civil Status.

6. Equal Nationality rights.

7. Women, single, widowed or divorced can exercise all civil rights and functions recognised by the law for men of full age (National Law 11357).

Married women can administer and dispose of their own property.

8. Each spouse is responsible for the maintenance of the other.

On divorce a woman's civil status is reduced.

She cannot contract a new marriage.

Legal separation exists.

9. (a) .....

(b) Incitement to prostitution is punishable. There are special laws to punish and suppress traffic in prostitutes.

10 (a) Women may be employed but cannot occupy higher posts except in the Department of Education.

(b) Professions on equal terms with men; arts, commerce, agriculture and industry; but earn less than men.

(c) Women have same education and professional training in schools and universities as men.

Australia.

Political Status.

1. Suffrage and eligibility on the same terms as men both for Federal Parliament and for the Parliaments of the six Sovereign States. The two Territories (Northern and Federal) are administered by the Federal Parliament. There are two women in the Parliament of the State of Western Australia.

2. Equal rights.

3. Yes.

Women have been sent as delegates to the League of Nations and the International Labours Organisation.

4. Women are excluded from the growing Diplomatic Service.

5. Women are not appointed as judges.

Except in Queensland, where a woman can act as juror if she notifies the electoral authorities that she wishes to do so, women cannot sit on juries.

Civil Status.

6. Domicile of the husband.

A woman relinquishes her nationality on marrying a foreigner unless she does not acquire his nationality. While residing in Australia, she can make a declaration that she wishes to retain the rights of a British subject. She may, if her husband changes nationality during marriage, retain her own. If during marriage her husband becomes an enemy alien, she can remain a British subject. She can be renaturalised at her husband's death without the necessary statutory residence period.

7. Married Women's Property Act: women can hold separate property; they are liable for contracts and torts. But this liability is limited to their separate property — it is not a personal one.

8. Equal rights of guardianship.

Equal liability for alimony.

Equal divorce laws except in the State of Victoria where a woman may not apply for divorce on a single act of adultery, and a man may for such on the part of his wife.

9. (a) .....

(b) No State regulation of prostitution or licensed houses, but brothels are tolerated under certain conditions. No medical examination except in Queensland which provides medical examination of prostitutes. But women are described as "common prostitutes".

It is an offence to keep a house for prostitution purposes; an offence to procure a woman to become a prostitute or for a male to live wholly or in part on the proceeds of prostitution.

10. (a) Women are not usually employed on the same work as men. Married women are debarred from employment in the Government service. Women's salaries are less by £50 a year than men's.

(b) Professions are open to women on same terms as men but there are no women K.C.s or professors. In industry the wages board fix woman's rate at 50 % to 54 % of man's basic wage.

An equality clause exists in Queensland.

(c).....

Austria.

Political Status.

1. In principle men and women have equal political rights under the system of corporations. No voting has yet taken place. No hindrance to participation in Government but in practice it has never happened.

2. Equal rights.

3. Yes.

4. No.

5. Can be judges but none have been appointed.

Can sit on juries.

Civil Status.

6. A woman has her husband's domicile. She loses her nationality on marriage with an alien unless she does not acquire that of her husband or if he is stateless.

7. Women have equal property rights and equal right to make contracts.

8. .....

9. .....

10. (a) On principle, women can enter the State Service whether married or unmarried. There are many women in social services but under economic difficulties women have been excluded from many posts recently by law, and married women have been expelled from the public services.

(b) On principle all professions are open to women, married or unmarried.

(c) There are few women in higher schools and universities.

Belgium.

Political Status.

1. Eligibility for Senate (Article 56 of Constitution).

Eligibility for Chamber of Deputies (Law of November 16th, 1920, Article 50).

No suffrage except for a few women by war service qualification (Law of October 21st, 1921).

Three women in Senate, two in Chamber.

Can, but have not, participated in the Government. Same rule for Provincial Councils. Eight women sit on these councils.

2. Eligibility and suffrage, 185 women sit on communal councils. Women can be Mayors and Councillors with consent of their husbands. There are sixteen women Mayors, fifteen Councillors, seventeen Secretaries, and forty-four communal receivers.

3. Women have for some time sat on Ministerial Commissions.

There has been only one woman delegate to the League of Nations, to the Codification of International Law Conference at the Hague.

4. Nil.

5. Women cannot be judges.

Suffrage and eligibility for Commercial Tribunals and Conseils des Prud'hommes (Law, July 9th, 1926).

Can sit on juries (Law, December 21st, 1930, Article 2 (90)), but can get dispensation on request (Article 5 (100)).

Civil Status.

6. Different from men. An alien woman marrying a Belgian takes his nationality; a Belgian woman loses her nationality on marrying an alien if she acquires her husband's nationality on marriage (Laws, May 15th, 1922; August 4th, 1926; October 15th, 1932).

Civil Status.

6. Nationality laws are not yet clearly defined. Women take the nationality of their husbands and are governed by the laws of the community to which he belongs.

7. There are various systems of law.

Hindu : " Dyabhag " and " Mitakshara ". The joint family forms the nucleus of property rights. The recent " Gains and Science Act " has improved the position of women but has not satisfied their demands. Gifts and earnings before marriage belong absolutely to the wife, but if acquired after marriage she must have her husband's consent to dispose of them.

Islamic : A daugher gets a definite but not equal share of her father's property; a widow an absolute share of her husband's. A woman can possess property and has the absolute ownership of it.

Parsi : A woman owns the property which she inherits.

8. Hindu : Divorce is banned. A woman has no right of guardianship.
A woman has a right to maintenance.

Islamic : Divorce is recognised at the will of the husband only. A woman has a right to maintenance, and has the guardianship of children up to the age of 7.

Parsi : The laws are on modern lines of sex equality. A woman has the right to maintenance.
