LORD WESTERN'S
ANGLO MERINO SHEEP.

(From the "Farmer's Magazine," March 1st, 1839.)

Mr. EDITOR,—In consequence of the desire which you represent to have been expressed by a number of persons, to have some account of the sheep I exhibited at Smithfield at the last show, and the portraits of which you have given in your Magazine, I will endeavour through the medium of its pages to give some information to the public on the subject. It is generally known that they are cross bred sheep, between the Merino and English Long Wool sheep of different descriptions. Before I proceed further I will remind you of their weights and ages, and I will give you an extract from a letter addressed to me by Mr. Allen of South Audley Street, the butcher who purchased them.

“ With respect to the sheep I am happy to inform your Lordship, that they proved better than my best opinion led me to expect, in fact, I must candidly confess that I have never seen anything that could surpass them when slaughtered. I have pleasure in saying that the Duke of Bedford (whom I have not the honour to supply) sent for a haunch; the Duke of Somerset also had one, and another went into Derbyshire.”

I shall now lay before you a detailed account of a pure Merino fat wether, sold to and slaughtered by Mr. Barwell, of Witham in this county, and which I can best give you by the insertion of a letter from him to me.

“ MY LORD,—Having been the purchaser of the three-year-old pure Merino wether sheep, bred and fed by your Lordship on your estate at Kelvedon, which was exhibited at the last Christmas show at Chelmsford, and for which your Lordship won a bet of 5l. with Mr. Hicks, of Walton, I take the liberty of laying before you, for your Lordship's information, and the information of agriculturists and graziers generally, the opinion of the judges relative thereto, also my own statement as to the weight of the carcass, fat, &c. I am aware that the bet was made in consequence of a challenge thrown out by your Lordship to show a Merino wether at the Christmas show, against any of any other breed, on the condition only, that size should not pass for merit.

“ Mr. Hicks took it up and produced a fine South Down wether, supposed to weigh 20 stone, but the judges were of opinion that the Merino was a superior handling sheep, being exceedingly good in all points, remarkably thick on the loin and back, and square at the leg, and wide at the brisket,—that the constitution of the sheep must have been remarkably good to have carried a fleece of wool feighing 32lbs., twelve inches long in the staple, and of beautiful and fine quality.

“ Indeed, your Lordship, whilst you have so wonderfully improved the carcass, is considered not to have deteriorated the wool. The carcass of this sheep inside and out, was as good as I have ever had, and in point of colour the Merinos carry generally a brighter red and white than any other breed.

And the kidneys remarkably large.
“ I have the honour to subscribe myself,

My Lord.
Your Lordship's most obedient,
and very humble servant,

HENRY BARWELL.”

It is very important to notice, specially the wonderful proofs of constitution which this animal displayed. It is true he was high fed and housed, but to stand under such a weight of wool, and to turn out of his fleece quite fat, and at the Christmas following as fat in all his points as any sheep can well be made, is, under any circumstances very extraordinary, and well worthy of attention. I have had an opportunity of seeing and remarking these powers of constitution in the breed very often, and I did not pass them by unheeded, for I felt certain therefrom and other circumstances combined, that if the Merino sheep were cultivated as they ought to be, their value to the country would be very great—if they had been attended to as they ought to have been on their first introduction—if they had been cultivated as the Leicester and South Downs have been by persons of the same ability, they would have advanced very far in the estimation of the public before now; but they fell into the hands of some persons who knew nothing of sheep management, and others who were determined to prevent their further introduction or possible success.

I believe his Majesty George III, who was very fond of farming, and one of the warmest patrons of agriculture, first introduced them, Lord Somerville I think, followed, and a few individuals; for a short period there was a rage for them and they sold at great prices. Lord S. had a large flock, but he took the advantage of the tide in their favour to sell off everything, it soon after turned, and much money was lost; about this time the Spanish Cortes tendered a present to the King, of five hundred ewes to distribute among his subjects, this was done under the direction of Sir Joseph Banks, who offered me forty ewes, saying at the same time, that his Majesty had proved by experience of twenty years, that the wool does not deteriorate in this climate, and that it remained only to ascertain how far it would be possible to make them valuable in the meat market. I reluctantly undertook to try what I could do with them, for I had a valuable South Down flock, and the appearance of the sheep was discouraging in the highest degree; however the permission being granted to me to go down to Portsmouth forthwith, and select my number out of the whole flock, I proceeded there immediately and made the selection. When I got them home I had them carefully nursed and attended to, and soon discovered that there were, however wretched their appearance, traits of character about them, which well merited all the attention that could be bestowed upon them, though to improve them into a good mutton sheep, and preserve the fineness of the wool, would be a work of many years, and require a great degree of patience and firmness, to counteract the prejudices which I saw I should have to encounter. I have at length succeeded quite equal, if not superior, to my expectations; I have a ready market for them at the best price, and I have never yet sold a sheep to any butcher who has complained of the quality of the mutton. I do not say that they will fat quite so early, or come to the size of the improved South-down, still less to the weight of the Leicester, but they give a very handsome small carcass, and as I before observed, I have invariably a ready market for them. I have indeed now but few wethers for sale, and those are of the smallest, because I keep all the finest of the males as rams to supply the colonies.

It has appeared to me from the first, that the defects in the form as well as the diminutiveness in size of these sheep, was owing chiefly to poverty and hard travelling—the narrow chest and the pot belly are evidences of poverty in youth—and to raise them into vigour of form and constitution, required nursing through several generations, but in spite of all these discouraging appearances, I saw features which I relied upon. There was a character about them, of high breeding, and high blood, which has primary merit with me, in all descriptions of animals. Their head is small, and in many of them beautiful, the eyes bright and lively, and prominent, the face covered with a fine satin skin, at least so much of it as is left free from thick curling wool, and the nose a delicate flesh colour: they have a great deal of muscle in the shoulders and limbs generally, with a strong masculine neck, and are very active and courageous. All these properties are in my estimation, valuable; they encouraged me to go on, and besides suggesting the idea, which I am now following up, of making through their instrumentality a distinct and valuable breed; in fact planting the Merino wool on a Leicester carcass. If the Merino sheep had been so defective an animal as the public imagine, I should never have attempted or thought of such a task, but I have seen, as I have now explained, powers in the animal which warranted, as I thought, fully my undertaking, and I do not hesitate to say, as far as my experience goes, those sheep which are two parts Merino make the best carcass, the most firm and solid handlers. I decidedly think they are more hardy and will thrive on less food than any long wool sheep. It may be expected that I should give a detailed account of the principle upon which I proceed in combining the different breeds, so as to bring out the result I have in view; and I confess upon this point, it is not in my power to lay down any distinct rules by which I can advise others who are anxious to follow in my wake; the fact is I have myself to work out, and endeavour by degrees to determine the best course to pursue. I have introduced every species of long wool sheep into the medley, from which I hope to extract the fruit which I am aiming at.

I have taken care of course that every animal of every description which has been introduced into this collection of different breeds, has been of high quality in itself; so that from whatever parent they may take the stronger resemblance, the animal itself could not fail to be of value. It is rather curious that the offspring of these crosses which I now have, should exhibit so much of the various qualities of each of their several parents as I have found them to do. They are so much like each other, that the eye receives no offence, as it always does from any striking dissimilarity to each other in any flock. And in the sale of their wool I have never had any fleeces objected to. I am sorry to say I cannot give you distinctly the value of the wool, because I sell it in one lot with the pure Merino to Messrs. Legg, of Bermondsey-street. Desirous to have no secrets from the public, I do not hesitate to tell you, that the price of the wool collectively was two shillings the pound, except the pure Gloucester and wool in grease, last year sold in the early party of the season.

I give you still further proof of my desire to afford the public every information by shewing in detail an account of my growth of wool last year.

I have just told you that I can lay down no principle to proceed upon in pursuing this cross breeding enterprise. I expect to work out by degrees a standard sheep, and then work the rams and ewes of that standard together, and correct them if at any time they are getting wrong. In the other breeds such is the course the most intelligent breeders have followed, but by selection only, sometimes themselves leading them wrong; confessedly Mr. Ellman thus made his sheep at one time too fine and tender. The Leicester breeders did the same, they made the stock too fine and tender, too little bone and muscle, so that they were all fat and comparatively little lean, and that is a failing in them to a certain extent even now. Now, the Merino gives them more muscle, thickens the neck, and better joins it in with the shoulders. The standard I wish to attain is just that of my shearlings, exhibited at Smithfield; they were got by a half-bred ram, Kent and Marino, out of half-bred ewes. This ram I shall probably exhibit at Oxford in July. He actually carries a Merino fleece on a Leicester carcass; he is an old sheep now, I have used him three or four years,—being just the standard I am aiming at.

It does not occur to me, that I have anything further to state respecting these sheep, either the pure Merino, or the cross-bred; but I beg it to be understood, that all my cross-bred stock consists of only eighty breeding ewes, from the limited progeny of which, I had to select the wethers I exhibited at the last Smithfield Show, and with these consequently, had to contend against all the most experienced breeders, selecting from all the vast extensive flocks of South Downs in the kingdom. I confess, I thought the decision of the judges against the eligibility of my sheep to enter into competition, was of very questionable propriety. The terms of the premium offered, were simply for the best short wool sheep; admitting for a moment that there might be a doubt upon the question, and which I think few will deny, the balance was certainly thrown into the least liberal scale upon the occasion. I am sorry to see the premium offered in class nine, for the sheep at the Oxford meeting, is worded exactly in the same equivocal terms as at Smithfield. It is impossible to know, especially after the Smithfield decision, how far any cross-bred sheep will be admissible. I trust some explanation will be given in due time, as it is really necessary, that whatever are the intentions of the society, they should be distinctly known.

Seeing an invitation at the close of the table of premiums, to enter into sweepstakes, I engage to enter for the best shearing short wool ram, presuming that my cross-bred sheep are admissible; and I am ready also, to enter into sweepstakes for the best Devon bull, and the best boar.—I am, sir, your obedient, humble servant.

WESTERN.
