Simla, the 11th September 1896.

The following correspondence with Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, relating to the proposal to take power from the Legislature to raise from eight to ten crores of rupees the limit up to which the paper currency reserve may be invested in Government Securities, is published for general information, in continuation of the correspondence published with the Notification in this Department No. 1636-A,* dated the 10th April 1896.

* Republished at pages 365 to 373 of Part I of the Bombay Government Gazette dated 16th April 1896.

No. 131, dated 2nd June 1896.

From—The Government of India,

To—The Secretary of State for India.

We have the honour to forward the papers entered in the annexed schedule relating to a proposal to amend Section 19 of the Indian Paper Currency Act so as to raise from eight to ten crores of rupees the amount of the paper currency reserve which may be invested in Government securities.

2. The maximum limit of the invested reserve was raised in 1890 from six to eight crores of rupees by Act XV of 1890, which was passed in accordance with the sanction given in Lord Cross' Despatch No. 107, Financial, dated the 12th June 1890. Acting on the sanctions conveyed in Lord Cross' Financial Despatches Nos. 235 and 206, dated respectively the 6th November 1890 and 29th October 1891, we increased the investment first to seven crores and subsequently to the full amount of eight crores of rupees. The completion of the additional investment was reported in our Despatch No. 65, Financial, dated the 23rd March 1892.

3. Since that time the circulation of currency notes has considerably increased. The following table gives the figures of the circulation for all India from 1887-88 to 1895-96 :

For the reasons explained in paragraph 3 of the letters from our Financial Secretary dated the 7th November 1895, we do not consider it quite safe to assume that the currency notes held by the Government Reserve Treasuries and by the Presidency Banks at their head offices form part of the circulation which can be counted on as permanent; and we decided to exclude those notes from the figures used for the present discussion. Excluding them, the following table shows for the year 1889-90 and subsequent years the net circulation, that is to say, the amount of notes which remain in the hands of the public :

[In lakhs of rupees.]

4. It will be seen that in 1889-90 the net circulation amounted to only about 13 or 13½ crores, while during the three years ending 1895-96 the minimum net circulation has been well above 18 crores. The net circulation has now attained a level more than 50 per cent. higher than in the year 1889-90; and we are of opinion that it will be quite safe to raise the limit of the investment to ten crores. The statistics of circulation might indeed justify an even greater increase in the investment, but we do not desire to go to the full limit of safety. An investment of the reserve to the extent of ten crores would represent less than 50 per cent. of the present average circulation. The proposed increase would therefore appear to leave a fully sufficient margin to secure the immediate convertibility of the note even during a commercial crisis.

5. We consulted the Presidency Banks and the Chambers of Commerce in this country on the subject. The replies show that none of these bodies calls in question the proposal to make this increase in the investment on the ground that it would diminish the security for the convertibility of the currency note; the mercantile and banking opinion is practically unanimous that in increasing the investment by two crores there is no risk whatever so far as the convertibility of the note is concerned. Since the proposal was circulated for the opinion of the Banks and Chambers of Commerce, additional evidence of the security with which the proposed increase could be made has been forthcoming. Since August last—the latest month for which figures were given in the letters of the 7th November 1895—the total gross circulation (shown in the first table of paragraph 3 of this despatch) has gone down from 31½ crores to 28 crores. But notwithstanding this reduction in the gross circulation, the net circulation (shown in the second table) which is the balance which remains in the hands of the public and which can be depended upon to a large extent to remain in their hands, has increased by a small amount. When we consulted the Banks and Chambers of Commerce, we based our proposals entirely upon the statistics of the net circulation. The evidence, therefore, afforded by this diminution of the gross circulation entirely unaccompanied by any diminution in the net circulation, adds considerable strength to our argument.

6. If any objection had been raised to the proposed increase of the investment on the ground of its affecting the public assurance of the convertibility of the currency, we would be inclined to drop the proposal whether we agreed with the argument or not. We would hold that the question being one of the public credit of a Government Department, should be judged by the opinions of the Banking and Commercial public. But the only objection that has been raised to the proposal is that we might by throwing upon the market two crores of rupees to some extent endanger our currency policy, that is, the policy which was initiated by the closure of the mints in 1893. It is argued that the result of the measure we propose being to add two crores to the circulation of silver coin, it must necessarily be inconsistent with the policy of raising the value of the rupee by restricting the quantity of rupees in circulation. This was one of the declared objects of the currency policy of 1893, to which we firmly adhere. We would not be prepared for the sake of a more or less inconsiderable present economy to take any measure which would have a substantial effect in materially retarding the attainment of the end sought by the measures of 1893; but we do not consider that the effect of the measure we now propose upon the exchange value of the rupee would be so considerable as to interfere effectively with the operation of the policy of 1893 or to warrant our foregoing the saving of six or seven lakhs which will accrue from the increase of the investment.

7. Moreover, we have some doubt whether in discussing the question of investment of our currency reserve we are at liberty to look at considerations of the kind discussed unless the harmful effects of the measure are so clear as to be beyond the possibility of doubt. We believe that strong objection would be taken to our manipulating the currency reserve with the intention of producing any effect upon the exchange value of the rupee. For the same reason we are inclined to doubt whether, when a measure affecting the currency reserve is proposed from the point of view of paper currency reserve, pure and simple, we ought to allow ourselves to be influenced by the possible effect which a measure, desirable from a currency reserve point of view, may have upon the exchange value of the rupee.

8. We therefore ask Your Lordship's permission to introduce a Bill to give effect to the proposal during the next Calcutta Legislative Session, if on consideration it then appears desirable in view of public opinion to do so. We would postpone all action until that season, in order that the measure may be fully discussed by the representatives of commercial interests. The manner in which we should effect the increase would, with Your Lordship's approval, be to allot to the Head Commissioner of Paper Currency two crores worth of new debt at the average rate of subscription to an early, probably the first, public loan of sufficient magnitude issued after the passing of the Act raising the limit.

No. 129, Financial, dated 6th August 1896.

From—The RIGHT HONOURABLE LORD GEORGE HAMILTON, Secretary of State for India;

To—His Excellency the Right Honourable Governor General of India in Council.

I have considered in Council Your Excellency's letter dated the 2nd of June, No. 131, proposing to introduce into the Legislative Council, at the next Session in Calcutta, a Bill to amend the 19th section of the Paper Currency Act, in such a manner as to raise from eight to ten crores of rupees the amount of the reserve which may be invested in Government securities.

2. I consider that the increase in the average circulation of the paper currency is sufficient to justify the proposed step, and I therefore assent to the course proposed by Your Excellency.

3. I am of opinion that, in such a measure, the best course is to deal with the paper currency on its own merits, and not to allow the question of the proper reserve to be dependent on the possible effect which the addition of two crores of rupees to the supply in the market may have on the exchange value of the coin.
