No. 6686.—The following Resolution of the Government of India is republished :—

“ GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE AND AGRICULTURE.

No. ¹⁷/₃₃.

Extract from the Proceedings of the Government of India in the Department of Revenue and Agriculture (Horse-Breeding and Agricultural Stock),—dated Simla, the 2nd August, 1894.

Annual Administration Report of the Civil Veterinary Department in India for the official year 1892-93.

RESOLUTION.

The Report submitted by Veterinary Lieutenant-Colonel Hallen for the official year 1892-93 is the first Report on the operations of the new Civil Veterinary Department, and as such represents a period of transition. The new Department provides superior posts for sixteen officers, all of which are now filled; but owing to the fact that the proposed furlough and pension rules which were submitted to the Secretary of State in August 1892 have not yet been authoritatively issued, the conditions of service in the new Department are undefined, and the administration of the Department cannot therefore be so effectively carried on as it will be when the position of the officers is more assured.

2. The Civil Veterinary Department may be regarded as a development of the old 'Horse-Breeding Department' which was maintained until about four and a half years ago under military control, and which dealt solely with the utilization of the stallions, about 300 in number, imported at imperial expense from Europe or Arabia. Experience having proved that the success of horse-breeding operations depended much upon the co-operation of civil officers as well as of leading landholders and native gentlemen with whom civil rather than military officers were brought into official contact, the measure was adopted of transferring the Imperial Horse-Breeding Department to the Department of Revenue and Agriculture. The step thus taken had the advantage, firstly, of facilitating the expansion of horse-breeding operations by encouraging the utilization of sires other than those which are imported at imperial expense, which for the purposes of this Resolution will be termed imperial stallions; secondly, of permitting the employment in other directions of veterinary officers hitherto restricted to duties connected with horse-breeding; thirdly, of forming at once the basis of a Civil Veterinary Department which should deal with cattle and cattle disease, the formation of which had from the time of Lord Mayo been urged both by the Government of India and successive Secretaries of State; and, fourthly, of placing the veterinary officers under the organized control of provincial authorities.

3. This brief sketch of the expansion of the Imperial Horse-Breeding Department into a department with wider functions will make it clear that the chief duty of the officers of the Department is not only to maintain imperial horse-breeding operations at the level which they had reached when the old Department was incorporated in the new, but to raise and improve them. A guarantee was in fact given to the Military Department that this responsibility should be distinctly upheld, and that in all matters connected with the purchase, management, and distribution of imperial stallions the authority of the Military Department should be unimpaired. The Inspector General is required to distinctly recognise the importance of horse-breeding in connection with military requirements by a division of his Administration Report into two parts, the first of which deals solely with operations connected with imperial stallions and with cognate duties devolving upon veterinary officers of the old Department before its incorporation. The Provincial officers have not in their reports observed the rule with sufficient uniformity, but will in future years be required to give it full effect.

The second part of the Inspector General's report deals with the expansion of horse-breeding operations, so far as they are independent of imperial stallions, with veterinary education, with cattle and cattle disease, and with the administrative and financial details of the Department as a whole. The arrangement of subjects in Part II requires improvement, but the question is one which can more conveniently be discussed in separate instructions to the Inspector General than in a review of the report under consideration. It is sufficient for the present to observe that adequate prominence has not been given to the subject of cattle disease.

4. With reference first to Part I of the Inspector General's report, which, as already indicated, is brought under the special review of the Military Department, the Government of India have reason to conclude from the summary presented by Veterinary Lieutenant-Colonel Hallen that the operations of the Department in connection with imperial stallions so far as they depended on the exertions of the provincial officers have been, to say the least, zealously maintained at the high standard of former years. The increase in the number of branded mares and in the demand for high class stallions is encouraging. The only subject for regret is the short supply of both horse and donkey stallions from England. Attention will be called in the proper quarters to this circumstance, as it is recognised that a failure to maintain the stallion power at the full level established must interfere greatly with the progress which the officers of the Department have done their best to secure.

Turning now to Part II of the report, the first subject to be noticed is the extension of horse-breeding by the agency of 'district stallions,' i.e., stallions other than those which are imperial. The subject was one to which strong attention was drawn in this Department Circular No. ¹⁸/₅₄ dated the 25th May 1892. It was then explained that the main object in view was by the employment of sires cheaper and smaller than the high class stallions imported by the Imperial Government to raise gradually the standard of the country-bred animal until a very much larger number of mares fit to be served by high class sires should be forthcoming. The progress made in this direction since the Department was formed is not very clearly shown, and should be more precisely indicated in future reports. It is mentioned, however, that 64 applications have been received for district stallions in the North-Western Provinces, and that 27 stallions have been established in the Punjab. The Government of India trust that within a short time the number of district stallions maintained at the cost of Provincial and Local funds, or of private landholders and gentlemen, will at least be equal to the number maintained by the Imperial Government, and, while thanking the Local Governments for the strong encouragement shown by them in response to the invitation of the Imperial Government to the promotion of district horse-breeding; take the present opportunity of urging the renewal of their efforts to extend the movement. Signs have not been wanting that the wealthier and more intelligent members of the agricultural community are beginning to take a personal interest in the subject, and that in many cases they will not be slow to respond for their own advantage to official encouragement.

5. The action taken by Veterinary Lieutenant-Colonel Hallen in the development of a breeding farm at Babugarh, where all operations connected with raising fodder are carried on by horse and pony power instead of by cattle power, has supplied an useful object lesson, whereby civil officers may attract the attention of native gentlemen to the subject. The system is one which in the hands of landed proprietors must prove an economical method of carrying on a large breeding farm, and has, indeed, for purposes of raising forage, been adopted as the cheapest plan in the stud farms of the Remount Department. The accounts of the Babugarh farm should be so kept as to supply more precise estimates of the relative cost of raising forage by cattle on the one hand, and by the horse power available in the stables of a breeding establishment on the other.

6. The next subjects to be dealt with are those of cattle-breeding and cattle disease. These, as already intimated, have not been sufficiently noticed in the report under review. The information at present available is, however, far too scanty to justify for the present any positive action of a general character in connection with either the one or the other. It cannot, for instance, as yet be asserted to what extent the cattle in any part of India can be improved by the distribution of sires on the lines adopted in connection with horse-breeding. At the same time it seems reasonable to presume that the transportation of bulls of the best breeds from one part of the country to another must have useful effect. Some evidence of the truth of this proposition has been obtained from the results secured at the Hissar breeding farm and in those Punjab districts to which bulls have been supplied from the Hissar farm. But it has yet to be proved whether the examples thus afforded are based upon a sufficiently complete knowledge of cattle-breeding in India, and it has therefore been determined as a first step to obtain full information of the character and qualities of the various breeds in different parts of the country. Properly organized enquiries have accordingly been set on foot under the orders of the Government of India by the Inspector General's Department as to the relative qualities and value of the more important breeds which are to be found in each Province.

7. A similar policy has been carried out in connection with cattle disease. It has now been acknowledged by the Government of every Province in India that the European methods of preventing or coping with cattle disease, which must, to be effectual, involve the slaughter of cattle, are inapplicable to this country. The main hope of repressing diseases of destructive character seems to be in the discovery of appropriate vaccines, though much good can be also done by segregation of diseased animals. Great doubts have, however, been expressed by experts whether the types of many of the diseases which prevail in India are identical with those which have been determined in Europe. The Government of India have therefore, on the one hand, directed a close and careful enquiry into the character of diseases which occur in each Province, and, on the other, have taken measures for the bacteriological investigation of the more important of them under the direction of a qualified European expert. The locality first chosen for bacteriological investigations, Poona, was unfortunately found to be unsuited in climate for the purpose, and, pending the transfer of the laboratory to a more favourable position, the officer, Dr. Lingard, whose services had been procured as a bacteriologist, devoted his time to the investigation of a destructive disease known as surra, peculiar to the moister tropical regions. His researches have thrown considerable light on the causes and symptoms of the disease, and have indicated the direction in which its cure may be effected.

8. While the measures described in the preceding paragraph have been taken, the Government of India have encouraged as far as possible the promotion of education in veterinary knowledge. Before the formation of the Department, two veterinary educational institutions existed,—one at Bombay, which had been supported largely by local contributions, the other at Lahore, where a school had been demanded by the requirements of the Military Department for trained veterinary assistants. The policy now established is that the Bombay institution, where the course is in English, should be recognized as a college at which the highest class veterinary diploma can be obtained; that the Lahore institution should be maintained at a somewhat higher level than other provincial schools, Bombay excepted, in order to meet military requirements; that elsewhere education of a subordinate character should be made available. When, as time goes on, more precise information has been obtained regarding cattle diseases, and when the possibility of providing effective vaccines has been established, each province will, it may be hoped, be equipped with a staff of veterinary assistants and inspectors through whose agency some effectual measures may be carried out for the prevention or cure of the diseases which now cause such wholesale destruction of agricultural wealth. In future reports by the Inspector General the progress which has been made in the directions indicated in this and the two foregoing paragraphs should be clearly and fully described.

9. In conclusion, the Government of India convey their thanks to the officers of the Department who, under the somewhat trying circumstances alluded to in the first paragraph, have carried on with zeal and loyalty the work of the new Department under the Inspector General, and especially to Veterinary Major G. J. R. Rayment, Veterinary Captains J. Mills, J. A. Nunn, J. W. A. Morgan, W. D. Gunn, Veterinary Lieutenants H. T. Pease and G. H. Evans.

It is with much regret that the Government of India have to record the retirement in May 1894 of Veterinary Lieutenant-Colonel J. H. B. Hallen, C.I.E., who, after serving the Government of this country in various capacities for a period of 44 years, consented in 1889, at the age of 60 years, to undertake the organization of the Civil Veterinary Department. It is due to his untiring patience and tact and to his constant zeal that the Department is now fully equipped with veterinary officers, and has been placed in a position to fulfil the important duties which lie before it. The Governor General in Council wishes to record his sense of the valuable assistance which in this as in other directions Veterinary Lieutenant-Colonel Hallen has rendered to the material interests of the country in which he has so long laboured.

ORDER.—Ordered, that a copy of this Resolution be forwarded to the Local Governments and Administrations noted in the margin for information and guidance and favour of communication to the Department of Agriculture and Civil Veterinary officers of the Province.
